Extract of a letter from Lieutenant Commandant McIntosh to Commodore David Porter, communicated to the Secretary of the Navy, dated "Allenton, Thompson's Island, August 8, 1824."

Copy of a letter from Commodore David Porter to the Secretary of the Navy, dated "Washington, August 9, 1824."

Copy of a letter from Commodore David Porter to the Secretary of the Navy, dated "Washington, August 10, 1824."

Extract of a letter from Lieutenant Commandant Jas. M. McIntosh to Commodore David Porter, communicated to the Secretary of Navy, dated "Allenton, Thompson's Island, August 25, 1824."

For the contents of all which, reference is here made to the said documents, as printed by the authority of Congress.

Message from the President of the United States, December 28th, 1824, transmitting, (in compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 27th instant,) information relating to the visit of the naval officer of the United States, commanding in the West Indies, to the town of Foxardo, Porto Rico, in November last.

Vide message, printed by authority of the House of Representatives, 28th December, 1824.

Copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Navy to Com. David Porter, dated—

NAVY DEPARTMENT, April 9, 1823.

SIR: The enclosed copies, from the Spanish minister, Joaquin de Anduagua, exhibit very strong complaints against Captain Stephen Cassin, commander of the United States ship Peacock, which will render his return to the United States necessary, unless he can meet the accusations by denial, or evidence, so as to enable the Secretary of State to reply promptly to the Spanish minister upon the several grounds of complaint.

You will, therefore, communicate the enclosed to Captain Cassin, and either order him home, or return to me, as early as may be practicable, the evidence necessary to repel the charges.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your most obedient servant,

(Signed) SMITH THOMPSON.

Com. DAVID PORTER, commanding United States Naval Force, West Indies and Gulf of Mexico.

NOTE.—The copies referred to in the foregoing letter consist, 1st, of a letter from Mr. Anduagua, dated New York, March 7, 1823, making the most vehement complaints against Captain Cassin, of the Peacock, for the capture of the Spanish schooner Carmen, alias Galliga the Third, and charging Captain Cassin with the most outrageous and unjustifiable violence and misconduct towards the Spanish schooner and her crew; 2d, of the declaration, under oath, of the Spanish captain and mate, and the protest of the captain and crew, setting forth the facts complained of by Mr. Anduagua.

For the particulars, reference is here made to the original of the said letter from the Secretary of the Navy to Commodore Porter, and the documents therein referred to; all of which are hereto annexed.

[Translation.]

Declaration of the captain and mate of the Carmen.

At New Orleans, the 30th of January, 1823, presented themselves in this consulate of Spain, Don Jacinto Correa and Don Ramon de Echevavria, the former captain, and the latter mate of the Spanish schooner called Carmen, alias Gallega Third, which, on her voyage from the port of Sisal to that of Havana, was captured on the coast of that island, off the port of Cabanos, by the United States corvette-of-war Peacock, and the schooner Louisiana, also of war, of the United States, and the vessel brought to this port; and the declarants, with the rest of the crew of the same vessel, were carried to Pensacola, where they were presented as pirates, and treated in the manner which they have expressed in the protest which they have exhibited, and of which a copy is annexed; and having made oath to God and the cross, in faith of which they promised to speak the truth, they declared that besides the facts of which they have made mention in their said protest, they witnessed the capture of other Spanish vessels, whilst they were prisoners on board the said corvette, in the following manner: On the night of the 29th–30th, September last, they saw the boats of the said corvette go off armed, the launch with a 9 to 12-pounder carronade, and all armed with pistols and cutlasses, and with marines and sailors, and by morning they returned on board without the declarants having seen any prize. On the following night the armed boats again went away, during which time they heard no noise, but after daylight they heard great guns on shore, or in the river Puereos, and afterwards they saw brought from said river, in the course of that day, five barges, which they brought with a red flag hoisted under the American, and they saw taken from on board some of those vessels (they were two schooners) about a hundred bags of coffee, which they brought on board the corvette, and another schooner marked with the No. 66 in the sail and side of the bow; she was brought alongside, and they took from her wood and ropes, of which was all her cargo, and after they had despoiled her of her sails and running rigging, with some useful rope and an old fowling piece, they afterwards took the mainmast and carried it on board the corvette. The other schooner appeared entirely loaded with part of the cargo over the covered hatches with ropes, in the form which the coasting vessels of that island commonly call hogsheads of sugar; the other two vessels also loaded and marked or numbered, but they did not approach sufficiently for the declarants to be able to distinguish the numbers, or to form a judgment of the nature of the cargo which they carried. Besides the above-mentioned five vessels, they seemed to set another, which was stranded, on fire, as they heard, on their departure from the said river of Puereos. They also saw them take on board the corvette, house furniture, birds of various kinds, such as turkeys, geese, pigeons, parrots, &c., and they heard two sailors, who spoke Spanish, say that they had gone on shore, and the people had abandoned their houses and everything; the three vessels which the declarants had an opportunity of seeing near, had not any armament, at least they were certain they had no artillery; and they add that they made no mention of these captures in their said protest, as being taken and unjustly prosecuted as pirates; they judged that they should confine themselves solely to their case and to nothing else. Thus they have declared under the solemnity of the oath which they have made, protesting it to be the truth, and that it does not proceed from malice, and they sign it in my presence, on the said day, month, and year.

JACINTO CORREA.
RAMON DE ECHEVAVRIA.

Before me: ANTONIO ARGOTE VILALOBEZ.
A true copy.

[Translation.]

Protest of the captain, officers, and crew of the Carmen.

In the city of Pensacola, on the 27th of the month of November, 1822, before me, Don José E. Caro, notary public of the Territory of Florida, and county of Escambia, appeared in my office Don Jacinto Correa, captain of the schooner called the Carmen, alias Gallega the Third, about half-past eleven of the said day, and requested that he might note his protest, to verify its formality in due form, in its proper time, and in evidence thereof he signed it with me, the said notary, which I attest.

JACINTO CORREA.

Before me:
JOSE E. CARRO.

Recorde i in book A, folio 2, date as above, one dash.

PROTEST.

In the city of Pensacola, on the 29th of the month of November, in the year 1822, before me, Don José Estevan Caro, notary public of this city and Territory of Florida, and county of Escambia, duly authorized and received, appeared Don Jacinto Correa, captain and master of the Spanish schooner named the Carmen, alias Gallega the Third, whom I certify and know, by his having presented himself to me in the morning of the 27th of the current month and year, about half-past eleven of the said day, and requested to note the protest, which he now makes in due form, and in virtue thereof says: That he sailed from the port of Havana on the 4th of August of the current year, under the protection of his Catholic Majesty's schooner brig packet the Mexico, and verified his entry in the port of San Juan de Ulloa, on the fifteenth of the same month of August, with a cargo of candles and cloths, and sailed from that port for that of Campeachy on the 23d of the same, his arrival in which he verified on the 1st day of September of the current year, and sailed for that of Sisal on the 10th of said month of September, where he arrived on the 12th, taking, in the said port, the cargo destined for said vessel by means of Messrs. Quijano, Guzman & Sons; said cargo consisting of the produce of that province, such as sole leather, hung beef, dried venison, bags of quenique, cotton wick, barrels of tallow, casks of the same, hides, tierces of garlic, tierces of dry fish, and hats; and he verified his sailing on the 19th of said month, pursuing his voyage, without anything new, until the 27th, when, about half-past eleven, he saw land, and, at twelve, found that it was the Pan de Guaigabon; and during the whole day nothing new occurred. At sunset he sat the said Pan at southeast by compass, without any fresh occurrence, and went on with steady winds; at daybreak he was in view of the Cottages, and set them within a short distance at south-southeaast. At said hour he saw a sail upon the bow, and in a short time it came upon his stern, wherefore he suspected it to be an enemy, trying to do what it eventually effected, by spreading all possible sail, and in a short time fired a gun shotted, and at the same time displayed the Spanish war flag, discovering that the chase was a corvette, which had fired, and was pursuing in chase, continuing the firing. At this time he saw another sail ahead, and a little afterwards it fired a gun, and displayed the American flag; and he discovered, at the same time, that it was a schooner, and with a light wind from south-southeast approached him with sails and oars, and fired at him another gun, by which means, being between two fires, he found himself under the absolute necessity of lying to.

In a few minutes a boat from the corvette came on board of him, with a suitable crew, armed with cutlasses, and some three or four officers, to whom, demanding the vessel's papers, he immediately exhibited them—namely, the royal patent, the roll d'equipage, the ship's journal, the entry of the cargo, which he had on board, sealed, as usual, and which they then took away and kept in their possession, along with the other papers which he had exhibited, and at the same instant they ordered the hatches to be opened, which was very particularly opposed, and upon this, the second commander of the said corvette Peacock, (which he soon understood was her name,) threatened him by telling him that he would divide his head from his body if he opposed what he had ordered, and what else they should determine; in this case he proposed to protest at the same time, but he was not permitted, nor was his entreaty attended to; not even to inform him of the name of the corvette, or of her commander.

They then caused him to embark in the boat with the steward and the cook, leaving the hatches open, as decided owners of the vessel and cargo, although the pilot and the rest of the crew remained on board; proceeding to the examinations which they judged necessary in the manner which best suited them.

He considered by the return of the boat, which had brought him to the schooner already mentioned, that it was no longer under his authority; they carried to the corvette the pilot and the rest of the crew, and part of the provisions, having previously caused the pilot to deliver to one of the officers who had come from the corvette Peacock the public correspondence of the province of Yucatan, from whence he proceeded, the nautical instruments, and other letters and papers of the greatest value—not here making mention of the clothes and money, which, from forgetfulness and the precipitation of embarking, and being conducted on board the corvette Peacock, he left forgotten on board the said vessel, making in the whole about $373, of which sum no account has been made by the officer of the troops of that vessel, except of thirty-nine dollars, and which he will declare at a more fit opportunity, under due oath.

Being a prisoner, with all the rest of his crew in the corvette Peacock, he begged the commander of the said corvette, in the name of the whole crew, to carry them to Havana, which was not permitted, nor his solicitude attended to; he himself, as well as the crew, experiencing from that time rigors not seen in the law of nations, having manacles put upon him, as also upon his crew, being treated and looked upon as guilty of the greatest crime in the world, during the five days that they remained in that vessel. After the five days mentioned, he was conducted with the crew to the schooner Louisiana, and the commander was impressed in his mind with the idea that three individuals of the crew were English, and that by compulsion they might be made to speak the English language, whilst they did not understand one word of such language, and under this suspicion, he threatened them with the yard arm, from whence he made signs that he would hang them if they did not comply with his proposition. On that day there was a new pillage with regard to him and the crew, when each one opened his trunk on board the corvette Peacock, yet they appropriated nothing to themselves; but from the schooner Louisiana the said trunks came into their power in Pensacola, in the camp where the United States troops reside; and they were carried prisoners under the guard of said vessel Louisiana, on the 16th of October of the current year; and his trunk, as well as those of the rest, were brought to said encampment where they were prisoners, and were delivered to them empty; observing that the cabin boy, named José Silvestre, of an Indian nation, taken on board at Sisal, remained on board the corvette Peacock; and $27 which were delivered to the second in command, and thirty-nine which the officer of the troops declared he had met with on board of his vessel; and in the schooner Louisiana, forty-seven dollars and seven reals, of which sums, as yet, he had taken no notice; declaring, in the same manner, that when the corvette Peacock fired the three cannons, she raised the Spanish flag of war, and they were taken under the same; and as soon as he was a prisoner she hoisted the war flag of the United States, and while a prisoner in said encampment with the rest of the crew of his vessel, whither they were conducted in the custody of said vessel, the Louisiana, and a beginning was made to their justification against the crime of piracy charged against them. The said captain and the pilot, Don Ramon Echevavria, and the passenger, Don Juan Ferreria, were set at liberty on bail, on the 27th day of the current month and year, still leaving the rest of the crew captives in said encampment, adding that the Spanish inhabitants of this city, condoling with the said situation in which they were, had covered their nakedness; and forasmuch as at no time could there be attributed to him any blame in a similar occurrence, nor was he chargeable with it in any way or manner; he protests once, twice, and thrice, and as often as the law permits him, against said vessels Louisiana and Peacock, for all the damages, losses, and deteriorations which, by the capture, may or might originate to the said Carmen, alias Gallega the Third; and for proof, presents as witnesses, the pilot, Don Ramon Echevavria; the boatswain, Manuel Agaio, and the sailors, Vicente Arias, Manuel Lopez, Jose Chanzino, and the passenger, Don Ferreria, whose oath I took in the same act; and having read to them the present protest, which the said captain was resolved to verify, they declared unanimously and together, that as far as the said captain had explained was true; the captain, boatswain, pilot and crew signing it: in faith of which, I, the said notary, sign and seal, with the seal of my office, in Pensacola, the proper day, month and year, which I attest.

JACINTO CORREA.
RAMAN DE ECHEVAVRIA.
MANUEL AGACIO.
JUAN MARTIN FERRERIA.
VINCENTE ARIAS.
MANUEL LOPEZ.
JOSE CHANNE.

Before me:

JOSE E. CARO, Notary Public. [SEAL.]

By George Walton, Governor of the Territory of Florida, and county of Escambia:

I do hereby certify, that Joseph E. Caro, Esquire, whose name is subscribed to the within instrument of protest, was, at the time of signing the same, and is now, the regularly appointed notary public for the Territory and county aforesaid, and that full faith and credit are to be given to all his acts and doings in that capacity.

Given under my hand and private seal, (there being no seal of office,) at Pensacola, in the Territory aforesaid, this 29th day of November, 1822, and of the independence of the United States the forty-sixth.

(Signed) GEORGE WALTON,
Secretary and Acting Governor of the Territory of Florida.

Recorded in book A, folios 2, 3, 4, and 5, of the book intended for that purpose.

JOSE E. CARO, Notary Public.

PENSACOLA, date as above.

A true copy of the protest which they have presented to me, and I return to the interested.

(Signed) ANTONIO ARGOTE VILLALOBOS.

NEW ORLEANS, February 3, 1823.

A true copy.

[Translation.]

Don Joaquin de Anduaga to the Secretary of State.

NEW YORK, March 7, 1823.

SIR: I have the honor to send you enclosed, copies of the protest made in Pensacola, by Don Jacinto Correa, captain of the Spanish schooner called the Carmen, alias Galliga the Third, and of a judicial declaration made by the same, before the consul of Spain in New Orleans.

In both documents are set forth the capture of the said schooner, by the United States ship-of-war Peacock, and the oppression and robbery committed by her crew; all which has been confirmed to me by the Captain General of the Havana, and by the consul of Spain at New Orleans. As the circumstances of these crimes are expressed in the enclosed documents, I avoid repeating them in this note, and shall rest content with calling your attention to three of the principal, which are: the Peacock having made the capture with the Spanish flag; the violation of the public correspondence between two provinces of his Catholic Majesty; and the malicious contrivance of Captain Cassin, in sending the crew of the Carmen to Pensacola, and the vessel to New Orleans, that there might be no one to defend her there. Such violations of all public law, and such refined perfidy, are so evident and odious, that I think it unnecessary to insist upon them, since it would be doing an injury to the sense and justice of this government. Notwithstanding the insidious precaution of Captain Cassin, scarcely had the courts of Pensacola and New Orleans examined the case, when the former declared the crew innocent and set them at liberty, and the other ordered the restitution of the vessel, which saves me the trouble of proving the illegality of the capture: and it only remains with me to request, that the President would be pleased to order satisfaction to the owners of the schooner Carmen, for the losses and damages which they have sustained, and that the money and effects of which they have been plundered, be restored to the crew. This is what it concerns me to ask in favor of said individuals; but the just satisfaction of my government, the assurance in future of due respect to the Spanish flag, and the lives and property of Spanish citizens, impose upon me the obligation of speaking to you with that frankness which ought to subsist between two friendly powers, and whose interest it is to maintain the greatest harmony.

The injuries done by this country to his Catholic Majesty and to his subjects are not confined to expeditions of individuals for the conquest of his provinces, to hostilities under the insurgent flag, to building armed ships for the enemies of Spain, to furnish these men with munitions of war, &c., but they have gone to attack publicly the vessels of Spain by ships-of-war of the United States, and to trample upon Spanish citizens by American officers; the excess being carried to such a pitch that his Catholic Majesty's territory is violated, and if a speedy check be not put to it the Spanish commerce must be in dread of the ships-of-war of a nation which is said to be friendly, as it would be of another with which it was in a complete state of rupture.

The violations of neutrality and of friendship between two nations, committed by individuals, always give room to the offended power to believe that they have taken place without the knowledge, and against the will, of the government of the aggressors, and that it will grant a competent satisfaction; but when this is not only refused, and not even private citizens but the ships and officers of that government give the insult, and commit hostilities with its approbation, since it neither punishes them nor prevents them from continuing their aggressions, the illusion must cease. And, alarmed for the intentions of said government, the imperious obligation which it is under of protecting its subjects, lays it under the necessity of demanding a frank explanation of them, and indispensable provisions for the putting a stop to the scandal of acts which, continued, could only be followed by consequences which his Catholic Majesty has a lively desire of avoiding; it being his most sincere wish to preserve inviolate the friendship which he professes towards this republic.

Vain have been my repeated remonstrances to obtain satisfaction for the insults offered to my government and fellow citizens by the American officers; and if in the courts of the United States the Spaniards have found justice, the government has not only refused my petitions, but has not even given an answer to the greater part of my notes. The very sentences of the courts prove the justice of my complaints against the said officers. And when it is seen that this government, in spite of these complaints, and the opinion of the most eminent and just judges of this republic, refuses to his Catholic Majesty the satisfaction which is his due, does not answer the representations of his minister, and continues its protection and favor to the officers accused, the suspicion is allowed that its friendly sentiments towards Spain have undergone an alteration. This doubt will be extremely painful to his Catholic Majesty, wherefore I spend more time in requesting you to be pleased to clear it up; and this can be done in no other way than by giving to his Majesty the satisfaction which he has demanded for so great injuries, with the punishment of the officers who have committed them, especially of Captain Cassin, and giving the most peremptory orders that they be not repeated.

The multiplied proofs of friendship which his Majesty has given to this republic, the sacrifices which he has made in its favor, and the utility which results to both nations in the continuance of a good understanding between both, are to me a sure guarantee that the President, deigning to take into consideration the important contents of this note, will be pleased to order such an answer to it as will at once dissipate the disagreeable impressions which the acts of the American officers have made, and assure his Catholic Majesty that his desires for the continuance of the strictest friendship with this republic will be fulfilled.

I repeat my devotion to you, sir, and pray you to accept the assurance of my high consideration.

(Signed) JOAQUIN DE ANDUAGA.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, August 1, 1825.

I have compared the above copy with my original translation, and find it correct. I also know of no answer having been given to it.

GEORGE C. IRONSIDE, Clerk, and Translator of Foreign Languages.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, April 9, 1823.

SIR: The enclosed copies from the Spanish minister, Joaquin de Anduaga, exhibit very strong complaints against Capt. Stephen Cassin, Commander of the U. S. ship Peacock, which will render his return to the United States necessary, unless he can meet the accusations by denial or evidence, so as to enable the Secretary of State to reply, promptly, to the Spanish minister upon the several grounds of complaint.

You will therefore communicate the enclosed to Captain Cassin, and either order him home, or return to me, as early as may be practicable, the evidence necessary to repel the charges.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your most obedient servant,

SMITH THOMPSON.

Com. DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. Naval Force, West Indies and Gulf of Mexico.

A.

To James Barron, Esq., captain in the navy of the United States:

Certain charges of misconduct having been alleged against David Porter, Esq., a captain in the navy of the United States, and others, a general court-martial, to consist of Capt. James Barron, President, Captains Thomas Tingey, James Biddle, Charles G. Ridgely, Robert T. Spence, John Downes, John D. Henley, Jesse D. Elliott, James Renshaw, Thomas Brown, Cha's C. B. Thompson, Alex'r S. Wadsworth, and George W. Rodgers, members, or any five, or more of them, is hereby authorized and ordered to assemble at the United States Navy yard, in Washington, on Thursday, the seventh day of July next, for the trial of the said Captain David Porter, and others, for the offences with which they do severally stand charged; which charges, together with the testimony in their support, will be laid before the court by the judge advocate.

Richard S. Coxe, Esq., is hereby appointed judge advocate to the court hereby ordered to assemble; and if he should decline acting, the said court will appoint such other suitable gentleman, learned in the law, to discharge the duties of judge advocate to the said court, as they or a majority of them may, in their wisdom, deem fit and proper.

In faith of which I have hereunto signed my name and affixed the seal of the Navy Department of the United States, this twenty-third day of June, in the year of our Lord one [L. S.] thousand eight hundred and twenty-five, and of the independence of the United States the forty-ninth.

SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

B.

MR. PRESIDENT: Thus called upon to declare my exceptions, if any I have, to any of those members of the general court-martial here assembled, who are to exercise a judicative function in my case, and to have a voice in pronouncing my guilt or innocence, I do, without hesitation, renounce every such exception. Even if it were so, that any member of this court should, unknown to me, be affected by any prejudice or bias unfavorable to an impartial judgment on my case, I rely too implicitly on the known character of my brethren in arms to think of scrutinizing the motives of any. Their own breasts are sufficiently informed, by justice and honor, of the proper course to be pursued in such case.

But, sir, I do find myself very reluctantly impelled, not more by a sense of the justice due to myself than by a regard for the honor of the service, and for the wholesome safeguards of military jurisprudence, to interpose, at this precise stage of the business, some fundamental objections to so much of the essential material of the court as consists in the functions of the judge advocate. The grounds of my exceptions to the gentleman named as judge advocate in the order for convening this court, detract nothing from the great learning and abilities for which he is so well known, nor from the general integrity and fairness of his character. That a juror, summoned on a criminal trial, before a court of ordinary judicature, or a member of a court-martial, may be challenged, either peremptorily or for cause, without the least disparagement of his personal or professional character, is too well established to require a contrary inference to be disclaimed on any occasion.

My exceptions go, first, to his legal competency and authority to assume and exercise the functions assigned him by the Secretary of the Navy; and, secondly, if he should be found duly appointed, to the temper and bias of his mind in relation to this particular case.

1. Then, I ask, does he claim to be judge advocate ex-officio, or merely to officiate as such, under a temporary delegation of authority, for this particular occasion? If the first, let his commission be produced, and the question on this point is at once settled. A judge advocate is an officer of such importance in every military establishment, whether of the land or naval service, the due administration of his office so vitally affects the most inestimable rights of the officers and men attached to the service, as makes it altogether inconceivable how his appointment should emanate from any less authority, or be manifested by any less solemn act than that of any other officer, civil or military, under the government. This brings us directly to the authority of the President of the United States, executed in the solemn form of a regular commission. Under the Constitution and laws of the United States it cannot be pretended that the Secretary of the Navy, or any authority less than that of the supreme Executive, can make such an appointment. If, however, it be no judge advocate, ex-officio, who presents himself, but merely one with a temporary delegation of authority to act as such on this special occasion, then I ask who is competent to such delegation of authority, and from whom does it actually proceed in this instance?

No express provision appears to have been made in the naval, as there has been in the military, establishment for the appointment, either of regular judge advocate, or of persons specially deputed to act as such. Yet the existence of the office, and the practical exercise of its functions, in both descriptions of persons, are recognized in the rules and regulations for the government of the navy, which speak of "the judge advocate" as distinguished from the "person officiating as such;" thus impliedly admitting an authority somewhere, to appoint to the office, or to delegate its functions in either mode.

I do not, therefore, question the propriety of assigning the functions of judge advocate, as well in naval as in military courts-martial, to any person, either regularly appointed to the office, or specially deputed to officiate as such in a particular trial. Then the only question is, how, and by whom may a person be so deputed to act in the place of an official judge advocate to a naval court-martial? The laws of the United States being silent on the question, it follows that, wherever the power may reside, it is in its nature strictly incidental; and, as such, can be claimed only by that officer, or that tribunal, to whose fundamental constitution and inherent powers it bears the nearest affinity and the strongest analogy. Upon these principles I maintain that it is altogether foreign to the general constitution and powers of the Navy Department, and bears no affinity or analogy to the ordinary functions assigned to the head of that Department; but, on the contrary, that it is perfectly consistent and in strict analogy with the peculiar constitution and powers of the court-martial itself; and devolves, among other incidental and resulting powers, upon that tribunal as the appropriate depository of every authority necessary to the orderly progress and the due authentication of its proceedings.

Such is the invariable practice of naval courts-martial in England; and it is sustained by the most authoritative precedents in our own service. I refer to one precedent now in my mind, namely, the court of inquiry on Captain Hull, and, I doubt not, many others extant. The appointment of its own clerk (an office distinctly appertaining to the functions of judge advocate) may indeed be assumed as an universal incident to the constitution of every deliberative body and judicial tribunal, unless vested by express enactment in some other department. If, then, the deputation of a person to officiate as judge advocate in this case proceed from the sole authority of the Secretary of the Navy (as I understand is the fact), I except to its competency, and maintain that it should be supplied by an appointment from this court.

2. But if the learned gentleman named by the Secretary of the Navy should be found on examination to be duly authorized, in any way, to officiate as judge advocate, I except to him as being actuated by a manifest bias of prejudice and interest to labor for my conviction, and to exert the uttermost of his ingenuity, skill and learning, to fix upon me all, or the greater part of the charges exhibited against me. Before I state more particularly the facts upon which this exception proceeds, I beg leave to advert very cursorily to the qualifications and functions of a judge advocate, as defined by the concurring authority of all the most approved writers on military jurisprudence.* According to these authorities, he is the primum mobile, as it has been termed, of the court; upon him the court depends for an impartial and candid exposition of the law, and should expect to lean upon his advice with entire confidence. Not only is the absence of every sort and degree of prejudice or bias against the prisoner indispensably required of him, but absolute impartiality is the least favorable state of mind requisite to fulfill the humane behests of the law by which his relative duties towards the prisoner are defined; for it is expected that he will rather incline to the side of the prisoner, and, upon all doubtful questions, decide in his favor; that, as the recorder of the evidence and of the court's proceeding, he be studious to collect and record every circumstance that may weigh in favor of the prisoner; nay, in many instances, that he act as his counsel. This last office I happen to be so fortunately situated as to be able to dispense with. But cases may possibly arise when it might be indispensable to the cause of justice and humanity; and I am now contending upon this, as upon every other question involved in my approaching trial, for principles which, apart from their practical operation upon my particular interests, are important to the dearest interests of the service; for principles in the subversion or contempt of which no officer or man in the service can hold any security for life or honor inviolate.

Then the judge advocate, as acting this essential and prominent part in the constitution and in the deliberations of a court-martial, is unquestionably as fair a subject of challenge, whether peremptory or for cause, as any other member of the court. The reason and necessity of the thing are the same; the law cannot be different.

As to the cause of challenge, I might well maintain, upon the most respectable authority, that I am not bound to assign any; but that I am entitled to a peremptory challenge.† I shall proceed, however, to assign my reasons openly and candidly; with this preliminary illustration of the principles by which the sufficiency of "challenges to the favor" is usually determined, namely, that circumstances which raise a suspicion, very far short of any direct proof of bias or partiality, are deemed sufficient cause, either against a juror in a criminal trial, or against a member of a court-martial, a strict analogy between the two being preserved in military jurisprudence.‡

When the functions and relative duties of a judge advocate are considered, it is not to be imagined that any lower standard can be applied to the qualification of dispassionate, disinterested and impartial

* 1 McArthur (4th ed., London), 279, 291, 441, app. No. 26 Judge Bathurst's opinion; Adye (7th ed., London), 113, 115, 118; Macomb, 166, 167, 169, 170-1.

† Adye, 120-3.

‡ Id., 175.

judgment in him; if, indeed, the absolute freedom of his mind from every interfering bias and passion be not subject to a still severer test.

The facts upon which my present exceptions are grounded furnish superabundant matter for the application of these wholesome and necessary rules. I have direct and certain information that the gentleman now claiming to officiate as judge advocate, has written and published at least one anonymous piece, distinctly asserting the truth of one of the specifications now exhibited against me, and so has pledged his credit, in a way utterly incompatible with requisite impartiality, to fix a charge upon me which, from its nature, may result in a question of veracity between himself and me. I am further informed, though not upon such direct and certain authority as in the other instance, but from sources pregnant of probability and truth, that he has employed himself in writing, and has quite or nearly ready prepared for the press, a pamphlet professing to be a full answer to my published defence against the principal charge now to be tried, and laboring to establish, by facts and reasonings, the conclusion of my guilt.

Of these facts I doubt not of being able to produce the most satisfactory evidence, if the voluntary and candid avowal of the gentleman himself should not dispense with it.

Then I would ask, what is left for him, on this occasion, but to redeem his public pledge, and to vindicate his own preconceived, divulged and fixed opinion of my guilt? And how is this to be reconciled with any of the legitimate functions of a judge advocate?

THURSDAY, July 7, 1825.

C.

Charges and specifications exhibited against David Porter, Esq., a captain in the navy of the United States.

CHARGE FIRST.

Disobedience of orders, and conduct unbecoming an officer.

Specification. For that he, the said David Porter, being in command of the naval forces of the U. States, in the West India seas, Gulf of Mexico, &c., did, on or about the fourteenth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-four, with a part of said naval forces, land on the Island of Porto Rico, in the dominions of his Catholic Majesty, the King of Spain, then and still in amity and at peace with the United States, in a forcible and hostile manner, and in military array, and did, then and there, commit divers acts of hostility against the subjects and property of the said King of Spain, in contravention of the Constitution of the United States, and of the laws of nations, and in violation of the instructions from the Government of the United States to him, the said David Porter.

CHARGE SECOND.

Insubordinate conduct, and conduct unbecoming an officer.

Specification first. For that he, the said David Porter, did write and transmit to the President of the United States, a letter of an insubordinate and disrespectful character, to wit, on the seventeenth day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-five; and did also write, and transmit to the Secretary of the Navy, at sundry times hereinafter particularly mentioned, various letters of an insubordinate and disrespectful character, viz: on the thirtieth day of January, the sixteenth day of March, the thirteenth day of April, and the fourteenth day of June, all in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-five, thereby violating the respect due from every officer in the navy to the head of the Department, impairing the discipline of the service, and setting a most dangerous and pernicious example.

Specification second. For that he, the said David Porter, after a court of inquiry had been convened and directed to investigate and make report of the facts in relation to the matters embraced in the specification of the first charge, and after such court had terminated its inquiries, and had transmitted its report to the Secretary of the Navy, and before the Executive had published or authorized the publication of the proceedings of said court, did publish, or cause to be published, a pamphlet purporting to contain the proceedings of the said court of inquiry.

Specification third. For that he, the said David Porter, in the publication made, as mentioned in the last preceding specification, did give an incorrect statement of the proceedings of the said court of inquiry.

Specification fourth. For that he, the said David Porter, did, in the publication referred to in the said two last preceding specifications, insert various remarks, statements and insinuations, not warranted by the facts, highly disrespectful to the Secretary of the Navy, and to the said court of inquiry.

Specification fifth. For that he, the said David Porter, did, in the same publication referred to in the said last preceding specification, without any authority or permission for that purpose, make public official communications to the government, and official correspondence with the government; and has, on other occasions, between the first of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-four, and the fifteenth day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-five, without authority or permission therefor, made public orders and instructions from the government, and official correspondence with the government.

D.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 8, 1825.

SIR: Your letter of the 7th instant, stating that it is the desire of the court, now convened at the United States Navy yard, Washington, to remove to the Marine barracks, has been received. I accede, with pleasure, to the wish expressed by the court, and you are hereby authorized to have the future sessions of the court held at the Marine barracks.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your most obedient servant,

SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Capt. JAMES BARRON, President General Court-Martial. Present.

E.

[Original charges enclosed in the Secretary of the Navy's letter, dated June 22, 1825.]

Charges and specifications exhibited against David Porter, Esq., a captain in the navy of the United States.

CHARGE FIRST.

Disobedience of orders, and conduct unbecoming an officer.

Specification. For that he, the said David Porter, being in command of the naval forces of the United States in the West India seas, Gulf of Mexico, &c., did, on or about the fourteenth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-four, with a part of said naval forces, land on the Island of Porto Rico, in the dominions of his Catholic Majesty, the King of Spain, then and still in amity and at peace with the United States, in a forcible and hostile manner, and in military array, and did, then and there, commit divers acts of hostility against the subjects and property of the said King of Spain, in contravention of the Constitution of the United States, and of the laws of nations, and in violation of the instructions from the Government of the United States, to him, the said David Porter.

CHARGE SECOND.

Insubordinate conduct, and conduct unbecoming an officer.

Specification first. For that he, the said David Porter, did write and transmit to the President of the United States, a letter of an insubordinate and disrespectful character, to-wit, on the seventeenth day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-five; and did also write, and transmit to the Secretary of the Navy, at sundry times hereinafter particularly mentioned, various letters of an insubordinate and disrespectful character, viz: on the thirtieth day of January, the sixteenth day of March, the thirtieth day of April, and the fourteenth day of June, all in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-five, thereby violating the respect due from every officer in the navy to the head of the Department, impairing the discipline of the service, and setting a most dangerous and pernicious example.

Specification second. For that he, the said David Porter, after a court of inquiry had been convened and directed to investigate and make report of the facts in relation to the matters embraced in the specification of the first charge, and after such court had terminated its inquiries, and had transmitted its report to the Secretary of the Navy, and before the Executive had published or authorized the publication of the proceedings of said court, did publish, or caused to be published, a pamphlet purporting to contain the proceedings of the said court of inquiry.

Specification third. For that he, the said David Porter, in the publication made, as mentioned in the last preceding specification, did give an incorrect statement of the proceedings of the said court of inquiry.

Specification fourth. For that he, the said David Porter, did, in the publication referred to in the two last preceding specifications, insert various remarks, statements, and insinuations, not warranted by the facts, highly disrespectful to the Secretary of the Navy, and to the said court of inquiry.

Specification fifth. For that he, the said David Porter, did, in the same publication referred to in the said last preceding specification, without any authority or permission for that purpose, make public official communications to the government, and official correspondence with the government; and has, on other occasions, between the 1st of October, 1824, and the 15th June, 1825, without authority or permission therefor, made public orders and instructions from the government, and official correspondence with the government.

F.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, June 22, 1825.

SIR: I enclose to you the charges and specifications, upon which you will be tried, before a court-martial, which will be convened on the seventh day of July next, at the Navy yard, Washington, and of which Captain James Barron has been appointed president.

At the time and place mentioned, you will report yourself to the court for trial upon said charges. In the meantime you will be under no restraint in preparing for your defence.

On the receipt of this letter, you will consider yourself under arrest. It is not deemed necessary to call upon you to surrender your sword, nor to assign limits to you.

I am, respectfully, &c.,

SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Captain DAVID PORTER, United States Navy. Present.

G.

Mr. President: Before I can be called upon, either to plead or to except to any charges and specifications, it is necessary that it be definitely ascertained what are the charges and specifications which I am expected to answer; and, strange as it may appear at this stage of the prosecution, nothing is more uncertain.

On the 22d day of June last, I received, enclosed in a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, ordering my arrest, and notifying me of my trial, a paper purporting to contain the original charges and specifications exhibited against me. It is true, the paper was signed by no one, and bore not upon its face any form of authentication whatever; nor did it name or refer to any prosecutor, informer, or judge advocate. Still the official source from which it proceeded, and the strictly official form and nature of the communication that accompanied it, and indentified its character, left me no doubt, and I presume now admit no doubt, of the authenticity of the paper, as an exhibition of the original charges and specifications against me; which, as such, were definitive and conclusive, and altogether unalterable, in form or substance, but upon the proviso, and under the circumstances provided in the 38th article of the rules and regulations for the government of the navy of the United States.

When I was arraigned before this court yesterday, a paper was produced and read by the judge advocate, purporting and professing to be nothing more than a copy of the original charges and specifications; meaning, as I presumed, of the same exhibited against me at the time, and in the manner before mentioned. But what was my surprise, on a comparison of the two papers, to find a very material variance in the first specification of the second charge. The "various letters of an insubordinate and disrespectful character," which I am therein charged with having written to the Secretary of the Navy, are no otherwise distinguished or identified, than by a naked reference to the dates; neither their tenor nor their substance and effect is set out, and so I have no sort of notice what letters are designated as of that character, but this naked reference to dates. Then the dates are of the essence of the accusation. I have been cited here to answer, and have come prepared to answer for those designated letters and no others. Let the dates be changed, and the substance of the charge is changed, in so far as I am called upon to answer for other "letters of an insubordinate and disrespectful character." Now, sir, the copy of the original charges and specifications, produced by the judge advocate, on my arraignment yesterday, specifies and complains, in the first specification of the second charge, of such a letter as dated on the thirteenth day of April, in the year 1825; whereas, no such letter is anywhere specified or referred to in the aforesaid original exhibition of charges and specifications. This variance is manifest, upon a comparison of the copy produced by the judge advocate, with the original, which I now here produce for the inspection of the court, with the original letter that accompanied it.

Universal military usage, and the imperative provisions of the aforesaid 38th article of the rules and regulations for the government of the navy, decide that I can be put to answer nothing beyond the tenor of the charges and specifications originally exhibited against me. But, in this particular instance, I waive the objection, requiring only that the prosecutor do now decide or declare his election, to abide the one or the other specification of the letters complained of, or to adopt both if he pleases. At any rate, let the form and extent of the charges and specifications be now definitely arranged and conclusively settled.

This point being settled, I shall pray the leave of the court to enter my plea of not guilty to all and singular the charges and specifications, under a protest against their sufficiency: and reserving to myself the right, in the progress of the trial, and in due time, of excepting to the said charges and specifications, as designating no offence known to any law enacted for the government of the navy, as vague and indefinite, and altogether insufficient to put me upon my trial, for the matters therein charged, or supposed to be charged. That these points may be submitted in a way to admit of the maturest deliberation, I have concluded, if it be the pleasure of the court, to suffer the trial to proceed, for the present, under the general issue, and to submit my exceptions to the charges and specifications, or such of them as I shall conclude to be exceptionable, at a more convenient day.

Friday, July 8, 1825.

H.

General instructions.

Having been appointed to the command of the squadron, fitted out under an act of Congress of the 20th of December last, to cruise in the West India seas and Gulf of Mexico, for the purpose of repressing piracy and affording effectual protection to the citizens and commerce of the United States, and to the command of all of the United States ships and vessels of war in the West Indies, fitted out for the aforesaid objects, and for the suppression of the slave trade, it becomes my duty (in order that a perfect understanding may be had by those under my command, of the extent of the authorities to be exercised by them in case of separation, or in case of being detached on special service) to point out briefly to them the conduct to be pursued under particular circumstances, and in doing so, shall confine myself to existing laws and the instructions of the honorable Secretary of the Navy, and it is hoped, that in no case those orders will be exceeded, without my sanction first being obtained.

First, then, with regard to piracy. On this subject there have been three several acts: that of March 3, 1819; of May 15, 1820, and that of the 20th of December last, authorizing the additional force of schooners, &c., &c.

The second section of the act of March 3, 1819, authorizes to "subdue, seize, take, and send into any port of the United States, any armed vessel or boat, or any vessel or boat, the crew whereof shall be armed, and which shall have attempted or committed any piratical aggression, search, restraint, depredation, or seizure upon any vessel of the United States, or of the citizens thereof, or upon any other vessels.

From the generality of this latter description of vessels, it would seem to embrace those of every nation or country upon which any piratical aggressions may have been committed. Admitting the act might be extended thus far, it does not appear to be the general object of the law; and it was thought by the President most advisable at one time, not to give it a like indiscriminate practical construction as to all vessels.

The great object, as pointed out in the first section of the act, was to protect the merchant vessels of the United States from piratical aggressions. This will, therefore, be considered a particular and special duty; if, however, there should be discovered depredations on other vessels, committed under such gross and aggravated circumstances as to leave little doubt of their piratical character, it will be a duty then to capture and bring in the aggressors. It is thought most advisable thus to distinguish in these instructions, because, among other considerations it will be seen that, under the second section of the act, authority is only given to retake vessels of the United States or its citizens, which may have been unlawfully captured on the high seas; no positive authority is given by it to retake the vessels of any foreign nation or country.

It will also be perceived, that under the second section of the act, authority is only given to "subdue, seize, and take" such vessels or boats, &c., &c., as shall have attempted or committed some piratical aggression. Whatever well grounded suspicions may be entertained that a vessel may have been fitted out, and is intended to be employed in such depredations, the act does not authorize her molestation, unless there is satisfactory evidence that she has either attempted, or actually committed, some piratical aggression, on some merchant vessel of the United States or her crew; or upon some other vessel under the special circumstances above mentioned.

This, by this act, must be considered an important and leading regulation, as it will be a strong and almost controlling circumstance, (considering we are at peace with all the world,) in making up a judgment whether it would be safe and justifiable to treat them as pirates.

Whenever, therefore, boats or vessels shall be found, the crews whereof have committed any actual violence, outrage, or depredation, upon any vessels of the United States, or citizens thereof, or any other vessel as above mentioned, it is to be sufficient to authorize their being "subdued, seized, and taken," and unless it should satisfactorily appear that they were acting under some lawful authority, and not piratically, they are to be sent in for adjudication.

The act of May 15th, 1820, continues in force the act of March 3d, 1819; and makes further provision for punishing the crime of piracy. The third section of this act, declared as pirates "any persons who shall, upon the high seas, or in any open roadstead, or in any haven, basin, or bay, or in any river where the sea ebbs and flows, commit the crime of robbery in, or upon any ship or vessel, or upon any of the ship's company of any ship or vessel, or the lading thereof: such person shall be adjudged to be a pirate," and the penalty death, on conviction before the circuit court of the United States.

The fourth and fifth sections make it piracy for any citizen of the United States to be engaged in the slave trade, and the penalty, on conviction before the Circuit Court of the United States, death. This act is more extended than the former, in its definition of the act of piracy, but in no part (except in continuing in force the former law) authorizes capture by the armed vessels of the United States. The high and delicate power therefore vested in the President by the act of March 3d, which authorizes and requests him to employ so many of the public armed vessels, as in his judgment, the service may require, with suitable instructions to the commanders thereof, in protecting the merchant vessels of the United States, and their crews, from piratical aggressions and depredations, has been resorted to and exercised, for the purpose of more clearly defining the duties to be performed.

The trust reposed in me, is one of a peculiarly delicate character, for while it is made my duty to protect our commerce against all unlawful interruptions, and to guard the rights both of person and property of the citizens of the United States, whenever it shall become necessary, it is enjoined on me not to encroach on the rights of others: and whatever discussion or collision I may have with any foreign power, in relation to such rights, I am bound to conduct it with as much moderation and forbearance as is consistent with the honor of my country, and the just claims of its citizens.

The system of piracy, from whatever cause it may have originated, is of considerable extent, and from the sparse population of the Spanish islands, which cannot enforce the authority of the government, establishments have been made by parties of those banditti in the uninhabited parts, to which they carry their plunder, and retreat in time of danger. It cannot be presumed, that the government of any island will afford any protection or countenance to such robbers. It may, on the contrary, confidently be believed that all governments, and particularly those most exposed, will afford all means in their power, for their suppression

Pirates are considered by the laws of nations, the enemies of the human race. It is the duty of all nations to put them down, and none who respect their own character, or interest, will refuse to do it, much less afford them an asylum and protection.

The nation that makes the greatest exertions to suppress such banditti, has the greatest merit. In making such exertions, it has a right to the aid of every other power to the extent of its means, and to the enjoyment under its sanction, of all its rights, in the pursuit of the object.

In the case of belligerents, when the army of one party enters the territory of a neutral power, the army of the other has a right to follow it there. In the case of pirates, the right of the armed force of one power to follow them into the territory of another, is more complete. In regard to pirates, there is no neutral party; they being the enemies of the human race, all nations are parties against them, and may be considered as allies. The object and intention of our government is to respect the feelings as well as the rights of others, both in substance and in form, in all the measures which may be adopted, to accomplish the end in view. Should, therefore, the crews of any vessels seen engaged in any acts of piracy, or which there is just cause to suspect of being of that character, retreat into the ports, harbors, or unsettled parts of the islands, they may be pursued into such ports, harbors, and unsettled parts of the country, for the purpose of aiding the local authorities or people, as the case may be, to seize and bring the offenders to justice; previous notice being given that this is the sole object. When a government exists and is felt, the local authorities must, in all instances, be respected, and every act must be in aid of, and in co-operation with them; it being the exclusive purpose of the Government of the United States to suppress piracy, an object in which all nations are equally interested, and in the accomplishment of which, the Spanish authorities and people will, it is presumed, cordially co-operate with us.

If, in the pursuit of pirates found at sea, they shall retreat into the unsettled parts of the islands or foreign territory, liberty is given to pursue them so long only as there is reasonable prospect of being able to apprehend them; and in no case are we at liberty to pursue and apprehend any one after having been forbidden so to do by competent authority of the local government; and if any such pirate should be apprehended on land, they are to be delivered over to the proper authorities to be dealt with according to law, and all the evidence that can be furnished is to be given in proof of the offence alleged against them. Should the local authorities refuse to receive and prosecute such persons so apprehended, on reasonable evidence being furnished them of their guilt, they are then to be kept safely and securely until information on the subject can be communicated to me.

Great complaints have been made to the government of the interruption and injury to our commerce by privateers fitted out from Spanish ports. Great discretion is required in giving to our vessels the necessary protection against their aggressors, without infringing on the rights of the belligerents. We know not how far they have been authorized and instructed to intercept our trade with Mexico and the Colombian republic; but according to the well-settled rule of the laws of nations, the United States will not consider any portion of the coast upon the Gulf of Mexico as legally blockaded, except where a naval force is stationed sufficient to carry into effect the blockading order or decree: and our government does not recognize the right or authority of Spain to interdict or interrupt our commerce with any portion of the coast included within the Colombian republic and Mexican government, not actually blockaded by a competent force.

Hence it is but reasonable to infer, that to arrest our vessels employed in lawful trade, from the fangs of the numerous privateers which have lately been fitted out from Porto Rico, and to "subdue, seize, take, and send into any port" those depredators on our commerce, would be right and proper; but in doing this, great discretion and prudence must be exercised, and the fact must be clearly ascertained that they come within the provisions of the second section of the act of March 3d, 1819.

By recent decisions of our courts, and officers competent to judge, and by the wording of the fifth section of the act of March 3d, 1819, it would appear that piracy may be committed by vessels legally authorized to cruise, and engaged in mercantile pursuits; and that the persons alone committing the act are responsible for the same. I allude particularly to the Panchita, sent in by the Grampus, some of the crew of which were imprisoned, to be tried for piracy, and the vessel liberated, by the decision of the judge: and to the Nympha Catalina, sent in by the Spark, for an act of piracy on a former voyage. The vessel and cargo, immediately on her arrival in the United States, were restored to the owners, part of her crew liberated, and those who committed the act only, confined for trial. I might cite other cases to justify the opinion I entertain, as to the course proper to be pursued, to effect the object of our expedition with the least possible injury to those not implicated in the crime, but these will suffice.

In the first case cited, the decision of the judge justified the conduct of the capturing officer, and in the other case, the law would seem equally to authorize her being "subdued, seized, taken," &c.

The language of the fifth section of the law, as above cited, is as follows: "And be it further enacted, that if any person whatsoever shall, on the high seas, commit the crime of piracy, as defined by the laws of nations, and such offenders shall afterwards be found and be brought into the United States, any such offender or offenders shall, on conviction thereof before the circuit court of the United States for the district into which he or they may be brought, or in which he or they shall be found, be punished with death."

But it does not appear to me to be necessary, in order to the attainment of justice, that the innocent should suffer for the guilty. If the ship is not answerable for the acts of the crew, there can be no necessity or propriety in sending in the ship for adjudication, because, by so doing, injury is brought on the owners, the innocent party; and to us they look for indemnity, who have no other appeal than to the liberality of our country.

But piracy must be punished, and we are bound by the second section of the act of March 3d, 1819, to "subdue, seize, and take" all vessels which commit it; and after we have done so, and it is found that the vessel committing the act is a legally authorized cruiser, the most that it would seem proper to do on the occasion, would be to take from on board her the persons committing the act, and to send them to the United States for trial.

For the same principle that would justify their capture on land will apply with equal propriety to their seizure on board ships on the ocean, and perhaps if any competent authority should be near at hand, it would be equally proper to deliver them up to it with proofs of their guilt, on a pledge that they shall be brought to trial; but on a refusal to give such pledge, they must be reported to me with as little delay as possible.

The next subject to which attention is to be directed, is the suppression of the slave trade; and it is expected that the utmost vigilance shall be exercised, in order that this inhuman practice may be put down. By the act of the 20th of April, 1818, it is made unlawful to import or bring, in any manner whatsoever, into the United States, or the Territory thereof, from any foreign place, any person of color, with intent to hold, sell, or dispose of such person as a slave, or to be held to service.

By this act it is also made unlawful for any citizen of the United States, or other person, to build, equip, load, fit, or otherwise prepare, any ship or vessel, in any port or place within the jurisdiction of the United States, or to cause any ship or vessel to sail from any port or place whatsoever, within the jurisdiction of the United States, for the purpose of procuring and transporting any such slaves to any port or place whatever: and any ship or vessel employed in such importation of slaves, or so built or fitted out, or prepared, is liable to be seized and forfeited.

And by act the 3d of Merch, 1819, the President is authorized to employ any of the armed vessels of the United States to cruise in such places as he may think proper, where he may judge attempts may be made to carry on the slave trade by citizens of the United States, or residents thereof, in contravention of the acts of Congress prohibiting the same, and to instruct such armed vessels to seize, take, and bring into any port of the United States, to be proceeded against according to law, all ships or vessels of the United States, wheresoever found, or which may be intended for the purpose of taking on board, or of transporting, or may have transported any person of color, in violation of any provisions of the act of the 20th of April, 1818, above referred to, or in violation of any other act or acts prohibiting the traffic in slaves.

From the generality of the provisions of the slave acts, authority is given to take and bring into port all vessels of the United States which may have been in any manner employed, or intended to be employed, in the slave trade, or any other vessel which may be employed in the importation of slaves into the United States.

It will be observed that the first provision applies only to vessels of the United States, the second applied to vessels of every nation. The rest of the laws go to explain the manner of disposing of the slaves and persons taken in the trade; prescribe the punishment to the offenders, and the bounty to the captors.

It will be sufficient, therefore, that the capture should be made under the foregoing circumstances, and that reference should be had to me for instructions as to the disposal of the vessels, slaves and offenders, and to the laws for a final decision.

There is one thing that must be particularly observed: it is not to be considered in these general instructions for the suppression of the slave trade, that authority is given at any place out of the waters of the United States, to search, capture, or in any manner whatever to interrupt vessels under any other than the American flag.

As regards the recapture of vessels which may be found in the hands of the pirates, and not belonging to the United States: although there are no laws which authorize our rescuing them from the fangs of those monsters; and, although the President has given no positive instructions on this head; still, as humanity obviously calls on us to exercise the power, having the means in our hands; as it is a duty implied by instructions subsequently given me by the measures adopted for the suppression of piracy, and as it is enjoined on me by the government to harmonize and co-operate with the forces of any other power engaged in the same pursuit with ourselves, thereby showing a common interest, I will take on myself to supply the omission, (as it certainly is one,) by authorizing the act whenever it may become necessary.

All vessels, therefore, of any nation whatever, found in the possession of pirates, may be taken from them as though they belonged to the United States, and as though their recapture was provided for by the laws for the suppression of piracy, and by the most positive instructions of the government.

These instructions, although swelled to an unusual length, are rendered as concise as the subject would admit of, to enable me to inform you fully as to the views of the government. We have a very delicate duty to perform—and with full confidence in the discretion of those I have the honor to command, I hope it may be fulfilled to the satisfaction of our country, to our own honor, and to the honor and general interests of the navy.

In time of actual warfare between nations, there can be no difficulty in discriminating between right and wrong; but the service on which we are engaged, requires the exercise of our soundest judgment, and in proportion to the difficulty of discriminating will be the merit of doing what is proper.

The eyes of the world are on us, and while we must not fail in energy, we must not want in circumspection.

D. PORTER.

U. S. Ship John Adams, Norfolk, January 28, 1824.

I.

The counsel of Commodore Porter suggests that the second charge, and what purport to be the five specifications of the facts and circumstances intended to be proved in support of such charge, are altogether insufficient to put the accused to answer, or to give this court jurisdiction to try any matter therein alleged.

The following objections to the same are deemed unanswerable and fatal:

1. The principal charge itself describes no offence, within the terms of any of the naval articles of war, by which all the military crimes and punishments, affecting officers of the navy, are enumerated and defined, and is altogether vague and uncertain as to the nature and degree of the offence intended to be charged.

2. The specifications are not conceived in terms, any more appropriate or precise, to constitute any offence known to the naval code, established by such articles.

3. Even if any such offence could be inferred, either substantially, from the charge itself, or from the charge and specifications, collectively, still the specifications are altogether vague, indefinite, and uncertain, as to the facts, circumstances and criminal intents, to be adduced and proved in support of the principal charge.

4. The specifications do not follow and support, but are a departure from the gravamen of the principal charge: and (if conceived in terms tending to any sensible and legal conclusion) constitute separate and distinct charges, not necessarily comprehended in the terms of the principal charge.

If the learned judge advocate should conceive that this charge, and the several specifications of the same, are susceptible of being justified and supported, the counsel of Commodore Porter would very respectfully ask for an opportunity to corroborate his objections by authority, and to reply to any reasons that may be advanced, on the part of the prosecution, in answer to such objections.

July 13, 1825.

L.

Navy Department, July 19, 1825.

Sir: In compliance with your wish, I have requested, of the Attorney General of the United States, an answer to the questions proposed in your letter of the 18th instant.

I now enclose to you a copy of my letter to him, and of his answer.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

SAML. L. SOUTHARD.

Richard S. Coxe, Esq., Judge Advocate, General Court-Martial.

M.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 18 1825.

SIR: I have this evening received from the court-martial, now sitting at the Marine barracks, Washington, a letter of which the enclosed is a copy. It proposes certain questions, on which your opinion is desired. I have, therefore, to beg the favor of you, to furnish me, at as early an hour as your convenience will permit, an answer to the questions proposed, that I may transmit it to the court.

Should any papers or documents be required, in preparing an answer, I will endeavor to procure, and furnish them, without delay.

I have the honor to be, with very great respect, sir, your obedient servant,

(Signed) SAML. L. SOUTHARD.

Honorable WM. WIRT, Attorney General United States.

N.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES, July 19, 1825.

SIR: I am just honored with your letter of last night, enclosing one from Mr. Coxe, the judge advocate of the court-martial now sitting on the trial of Commodore Porter, expressive of the wish of that tribunal, that you would take the opinion of the Attorney General on two questions of law, which have been presented for their decision in the course of the discharge of their judicial duties. I beg leave to observe, that the Attorney General has no authority to give an official opinion, except in the cases especially provided by law, "whose duty it shall be," says the law, "to give his advice and opinion upon questions of law, when required by the President of the United States, or when requested by the heads of any of the Departments, touching any matters that may concern their "Departments." The construction of this provision has been, that whensoever the President, or any head of a Department, has an official duty to perform, he has a right to call for the opinion of the Attorney General, on any question of law, for the purpose of assisting him in the discharge of that duty. This has been the construction on which I have acted since I have been in office, and with the entire approbation of the President and heads of Departments. Indeed, on any other construction, the duties of the Attorney General would be wholly impracticable.

Now, I apprehend that the court-martial, in this case, having been organized, and the charges laid before them, the head of the Navy Department has no duties to perform in giving their judicial decisions. And since it is only in relation to his own duties that the Secretary can call for the opinion of the Attorney General, or that the Attorney General has any authority to give an opinion, it follows that I must, on this, as I have been constrained to do on several former occasions, beg to be excused from doing what I think unauthorized, and therefore wrong.

I have the honor to remain, sir, with very great respect, &c.,

(Signed) WM. WIRT.

To the Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Navy Department.

O.

MR. PRESIDENT: Since the course which has been taken with the objections of my counsel to the terms of the second charge and its specifications is likely to produce delay, and, instead of simplifying, as was intended, rather to perplex and embarrass the procedure of the court, I have determined to withdraw these objections, in so far as they present any preliminary question to be discussed and decided upon the face of the charge and specifications themselves, independent of any examination of the evidence to be adduced in support of them.

I have decided on this course, with the less hesitation, in consideration of being distinctly advised, by my counsel, that all these objections are equally available, under the general issue of "not guilty," as in any other form; unless that which turns upon the defect of sufficient minuteness and precision in the specifications of time, place, manner and circumstances of the acts imputed to me, may be an exception. It is not that the latter objection, or the rule which it supposes to have been violated, is by any means to be regarded as frivolous or captious, or as unessential to the great principles of substantial justice, by which the salutary forms of procedure in such cases have been prescribed. On the contrary, I am made experimentally sensible, in this very instance, of the value of the rule, and of the practical mischief and injustice resulting from the palpable breach of it, apparent on the face of my pending accusation; for I solemnly declare, that after the minutest recollection, and the most mature reflection, upon all the passages of my professional life, which, by any possibility, may be the subject of this complaint; and after all that has been said in the recent discussion, I remain at this moment, utterly perplexed and puzzled, even to conjecture what are the particular facts and circumstances of my imputed guilt, that are pointed at, and intended to be adduced against me, under several of the most important of these five specifications: I am unable to do more than to form a probable, though vague conjecture.

Yet, so long as I am assured that I am not to be entrapped, by taking issue upon the charge, to be held to a conclusive admission of its validity, or of the legal sufficiency of the facts to be given in evidence under it, as describing or constituting any offence for which I am amenable to martial law, I must be content to forego, (if such be the necessary consequence of pleading to issue) every advantage from the defect of reasonable certainty and minuteness, in the specifications; and to encounter every disadvantage of ignorance, from the want of fair and regular notice of the circumstances wherein my offence is supposed to consist.

Since it appears that I am not entitled to reply to any of these topics in the discussion of a preliminary point, and since it is most unexpectedly intimated that doubts on the subject exist with the court; and as I feel that justice to myself requires that I should have any opportunity of controverting whatever may have been advanced to affect either my honor or the mere law of my case; I have taken the only course left open to me, which is to waive the objections as matter of separate and preliminary discussion; and to reserve them, or such of them as may be available for my general defence.

I do therefore, Mr. President, offer myself ready to go on with the trial of this second charge, and its specifications, upon the general issue, before tendered under protest; reserving for my general defence, all such exceptions of law or fact, as shall be admissible and available in that defence.

I beg leave further to suggest, that it is essential to my defence, that I should be more precisely and minutely informed of the propositions of fact or law, advanced against me, than I can be from a cursory reading of the long and elaborate argument of the judge advocate; many parts of which, were but distinctly heard and comprehended, in the course of that reading. I therefore request to be favored with a copy of that document, as a part of the proceedings of the court, or such access to it as may be equivalent. I do not anticipate that there can be objection to this request, since the reasonableness of it is apparent. Although the nature of my objections was distinctly intimated on the second day of this court's session; and were specifically drawn out and stated in writing as early as Wednesday, the 13th instant; and though the reasons and authorities at large were distinctly read in open court, on Friday, the 15th; yet, it seems, that because from some accident, which I extremely regret, as it must have infinitely enhanced the labors of the judge advocate, the fair transcript of the argument in support of the objections was not put into his hands till ten or eleven o'clock on Sunday, the 17th, he was compelled to defer the preparation of his argument till he was in full possession of the written transcript of that which he was to answer. If a gentleman, possessing the acuteness and quickness of perception, the learning and ingenuity thus strongly manifested in the composition of an argument, so full of learned research, and various illustration, and so elaborate, and so diffuse, which occupied no longer time than from ten or eleven on Sunday morning, till it was time to meet the court next morning; if a gentleman so gifted, labored under so much disadvantage from the absence of the paper he was to answer, you may judge, Mr. President, how necessary it is for me to be possessed in extenso, of the argument by which many important points of my defence are so strongly affected.

A.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, August 11, 1825.

SIR: In pursuance of the application of the general court-martial, of which you are president, and for the better accommodation of all concerned, permission is hereby granted to the court to adjourn for the remainder of its sessions, to that central, and commodious building, on First street, and the corner of Maryland avenue, formerly occupied by the Congress of the United States.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your most obedient servant, SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Capt. JAMES BARRON, President General Court-Martial.

B.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, August 12, 1825.

SIR: I have received and submitted to the Executive, your letter of yesterday's date, in which you say: "I transmit a paper handed me by Commodore Porter, since the adjournment of the court this day, purporting, as I understood from him, to be a continuation of his defence. He stated, also, that the residue would be transmitted as soon as practicable." You also apprise me that this paper has not received the sanction of the court.

The Executive is solicitous to possess all the lights, which can be useful, in forming a decision upon the case of Commodore Porter, and especially desires to be aided by everything legally urged in his defence. But it would be obviously improper for the Executive to receive and consider any paper not transmitted to him by the court itself, as forming a part of its proceedings.

I am, therefore, directed to return the paper to you, that you may submit it to the court, with the time and manner in which it was handed to you, that the court may pass its own judgment upon it, by receiving and transmitting it, as the defence which the accused did make, if the court think proper so to do.

This has been adopted as the proper mode of obtaining a decision on the paper as a part of the record, and that Captain Porter may have all the benefit of it in his defence that is possible.

The length of the document, and the time which might necessarily be consumed in reducing it to writing, present motives for this indulgence, with the most perfect respect for the court, and without questioning the propriety of the decisions which it has heretofore made in relation to the defence.

I return to you the record and papers, that you may place them again in possession of the court.

I am, respectfully, &c.,

SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

RICHARD S. COXE, Esq., Judge Advocate of the General Court-Martial.

(No. 1)

One thousand dollars reward.

The store of the subscribers was forcibly entered on the night of the 24th inst., and the following articles taken therefrom:

A <> 18.—1 case 4-4 bird's-eye handkerchiefs, containing 25 pieces, each piece 20 handkerchiefs of different patterns.

W 63 and 64.—2 cases damask figured handkerchiefs, contain 25 pieces each, are 50 pieces.

P 181–187.—4 cases India sewing silks, each case 50 lbs., say 13 lbs. of black and 37 lbs. assorted colors, put up in Spanish style—200 lbs.

S G P.—2 trunks Madras handkerchiefs, 60 pieces each—120 pieces.

S G P.—2 half trunks Madras handkerchiefs, 30 pieces each—60 pieces.

H A S ◇ 21.—1 case 4-4 cross-barred handkerchiefs, 20 handkerchiefs in each piece, containing 25 pieces.

A ◇ 15.—1 case damask figured handkerchiefs, 25 pieces.

K.— 1 case bird's-eye handkerchiefs, 25 pieces.

J L ◇ 11.—1 case 7-4 crape shawls, containing 37 pieces.

2 half boxes cigars, "Cabanas."

The above reward will be given for the apprehension and conviction of the thief or thieves, and one-fourth part of the goods recovered.

CABOT, BAILEY & CO.

St. Thomas, October 25, 1824.

(No. 2.)

Sir: I this morning received a letter from Mr. J. J. Atkinson, of Ponce, Porto Rico, who states, that while on board the Mary Ann, of Baltimore, J. Dukehart, master, from this place, bound for Ponce, the crew of said brig mutinied, and in the fray the papers of the vessel were lost overboard. He also mentioned, that the crew of the brig Cadmus, of Kennebunk, had also mutinied in the port of Ponce. The mutineers are confined in the jail of Ponce, but the authorities of the island have informed the captains that they would be kept till the vessels were ready for sea only.

It will be necessary for either you or Captain Sloat to proceed, if possible, to Ponce, and give the Mary Ann a document with which she can proceed to Baltimore, as the shippers refused to ship till she is regularly documented.

I remain, with great respect, your obedient servant, WM. FURNISS.

St. Thomas, February 1, 1825.

To Charles T. Platt, Esq., Commandant U. S. Schooner Beagle, St. Thomas.

(No. 3.)

U. S. Schooner Beagle, Harbor St. Thomas, February 10, 1825.

Sir: Having this day returned from a visit to Ponce, a village in the Island of Porto Rico, somewhat similar, and not far distant from Foxardo, under circumstances so widely different from those of my former visit to that island, I do therefore beg leave to lay before you the circumstances that induced me to visit it, and more particulary the reception that I met with, although no part of my uniform was different from that which I wore at Foxardo, nor had I in any respect improved in my address. I mention this with feelings of pure American pride, as prejudices much to my injury, particularly with such as I am not personally acquainted with, may have grown out of the Spanish account of my piratical appearance at Foxardo.

On the 2d day of this month, I received from Mr. Furniss, commercial agent at St. Thomas, a letter, stating that the crews of two American merchant vessels had mutinied, and that those vessels were then at anchor in the harbor of Ponce, and in want of the assistance of some one of the United States vessels of war; and furthermore, that the master of a vessel then at St. Thomas, was desirous of obtaining convoy to the same place. Under such circumstances, I could not hesitate for a moment in fully complying with the request. Consequently, as soon as was practicable, I got under way, and two days after anchored in the harbor of Ponce, at which place as at Foxardo I visited the shore in person. No indignation nor indignities were offered to my person, or the flag the Beagle bore; but on landing was invited to a public house, refreshments were offered me, and in a very short time I arranged all things relating to the merchantmen, to the entire satisfaction of their respective masters. As soon as was practicable, the captain of the fort, accompanied with numbers of the most respectable citizens, made their appearance, when to my no small gratification, they saluted me in the most cordial and friendly manner. He, the captain, did not ask or demand my commission. He beheld nothing in my features that indicated that cowardly and hell-like visage of a pirate, nor did he discover anything other than that deportment which I have honestly inherited. In evidence of which I need only to observe that I was waited upon and requested to exchange salutes with the fort, which was complied with. A carriage was prepared, as well as one of the most genteel dwellings, for my sole use during my stay. It was not my intention to have remained longer than was absolutely necessary to accomplish the object of my visit, but from the urgent and numberless invitations, pressing me to remain and accept of a dinner already ordered for myself and officers, (a refusal of which would have carried with it a conviction of the truth of my uncouth manners, which had been so elegantly polished by the Foxardians,) I was induced to accept the invitation, and on the day following partook of a splendid dinner, (the alcalde at the head of the table,) with not less than thirty-five of the first and most respectable citizens and planters in that vicinity. After the cloth was removed many complimentary toasts were given, which in turn were reciprocated by the officers of the Beagle and myself. At nine in the evening I withdrew and returned on board the Beagle, after having spent five hours, during which time the most cordial degree of friendship prevailed throughout the company. The next morning I left the port, having previously established private signals with the captain of the fort, that our respective forces might co-operate in the suppression of piracy.

I have the honor to be, respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHARLES T. PLATT, Lt. Com. Beagle.

Com. David Porter.

(No. 4.)

NAVY DEPARTMENT, February 1, 1826.

Commodore David Porter, commanding U. S. naval forces in the West Indies. Present:

SIR: You have been appointed to the command of a squadron fitted out under an act of Congress of the 20th of December last, to cruise in the West India seas and Gulf of Mexico, for the purpose of suppressing piracy, and affording protection to the citizens and commerce of the United States. Your attention will also be extended to the suppression of the slave trade, according to the provisions of the several acts of Congress on that subject; copies of which, and of the instructions heretofore given to our naval commanders thereon, are herewith sent to you. While it is your duty to protect our commerce against all unlawful interruption, and to guard the rights, both of person and property, of the citizens of the United States, wherever it shall become necessary, you will observe the utmost caution not to encroach upon the rights of others; and should you at any time be brought into discussion or collision with any foreign power in relation to such rights, it will be expedient and proper that the same should be conducted with as much moderation and forbearance as is consistent with the honor of your country and the just claims of its citizens.

Should you, in your cruise, fall in with any foreign naval force, engaged in the suppression of piracy, it is desirable that harmony and a good understanding should be cultivated between you; and you will do everything on your part, that accords with the honor of the American flag, to promote this object.

So soon as the vessels at Norfolk shall be ready for sea you will proceed to the West Indies, by such route as you shall judge best for the purpose of effecting the object of your cruise. You will establish at Thompson's Island, usually called Key West, a depot, and land the ordnance and marines, to protect the stores and provisions; if, however, you shall find any important objection to this place, and a more suitable and convenient one can be found, you are at liberty to select it as a depot. You will announce your arrival and object to the authorities, civil and military, of the Island of Cuba, and endeavor to obtain, as far as shall be practicable, their co-operation; or at least their favorable and friendly support, giving them the most unequivocal assurance that your sole object is the destruction of pirates.

The system of piracy which has grown up in the West Indies has obviously arisen from the war between Spain and the new governments, her late provinces in this hemisphere, and from the limited force in the islands, and their sparse population, many portions of each being entirely uninhabited and desolate, to which the active authority of the government does not extend. It is understood that establishments have been made by parties of these banditti in those uninhabited parts, to which they carry their plunder, and retreat in time of danger. It cannot be presumed that the government of any island will afford any protection or countenance to such robbers. It may, on the contrary, confidently be believed that all governments, and particularly those most exposed, will afford all means in their power for their suppression. Pirates are considered by the law of nations, the enemies of the human race. It is the duty of all nations to put them down; and none who respect their own character and interest will refuse to do it, much less afford them an asylum and protection. The nation that makes the greatest exertions to suppress such banditti has the greatest merit. In making such exertions, it has a right to the aid of every other power, to the extent of its means, and to the enjoyment, under its sanction, of all its rights in the pursuit of the object. In the case of belligerents, where the army of one party enters the territory of a neutral power, the army of the other has a right to follow it there. In the case of pirates, the right of the armed force of one power, to follow them into the territory of another, is more complete. In regard to pirates, there is no neutral party; they being the enemies of the human race, all nations are parties against them, and may be considered as allies. The object and intention of our government is to respect the feelings as well as the rights of others, both in substance and in form, in all the measures which may be adopted to accomplish the end in view. Should, therefore, the crews of any vessels which you have seen engaged in acts of piracy, or which you have just cause to suspect of being of that character, retreat into the ports, harbors, or settled parts of the islands, you may enter, in pursuit of them, such ports, harbors or settled parts of the country, for the purpose of aiding the local authorities, or people, as the case may be, to seize and bring the offenders to justice, previously giving notice that this is your sole object. Where a government exists, and is felt, you will in all instances respect the local authorities, and only act in aid of and co-operation with them, it being the exclusive purpose of the Government of the United States to suppress piracy—an object in which all nations are equally interested; and in the accomplishment of which, the Spanish authorities and people will, it is presumed, cordially co-operate with you. If, in the pursuit of pirates found at sea, they shall retreat into the unsettled parts of the islands, or foreign territory, you are at liberty to pursue them, so long only as there is reasonable prospect of being able to apprehend them; and in no case are you at liberty to pursue and apprehend any one, after having been forbidden so to do by competent authority of the local government; and should you, on such pursuit, apprehend any pirates upon land, you will deliver them over to the proper authority, to be dealt with according to law, and you will furnish such evidence as shall be in your power, to prove the offence alleged against them. Should the local authorities refuse to receive and prosecute such persons so apprehended, on your furnishing them with reasonable evidence of their guilt, you will then keep them safely and securely on board some of the vessels under your command, and report, without delay, to this Department, the particular circumstances of such cases.

Great complaints are made of the interruption and injury to our commerce, by privateers fitted out from Spanish ports. You will endeavor to obtain from the Spanish authorities a list of the vessels so commissioned, and ascertain how far they have been instructed to intercept our trade with Mexico and the Colombian republic; impressing upon them that, according to the well settled rule of the law of nations, the United States will not consider any portion of coast upon the Gulf of Mexico as legally blockaded, except where a naval force is stationed sufficient to carry into effect the blockading order or decree; and this government does not recognize the right or authority of Spain to interdict or interrupt our commerce with any portion of the coast included within the the Colombian republic or Mexican government, not actually blockaded by a competent force.

All the United States ships and vessels of war in the West Indies, of which a list is herewith enclosed, are placed under your command; and you will distribute them to such stations as shall appear to you best calculated to afford complete protection to our commerce, in which you will embrace the object of protecting the convoy of specie from Vera Cruz and the Mexican coast generally, to the United States; keep one vessel, at least, upon this service, to be at or near Vera Cruz during the healthy season of the year, and to be relieved as occasion shall require, both for convoy of trade, and to bring specie to the United States—confining the transportation to the United States only.

You will be particularly watchful to preserve the health of the officers and crews under your command, and to guard in every possible manner against the unhealthiness of the climate; not permitting any intercourse with the shore where the yellow fever prevails, except in cases of absolute necessity.

Wishing you good health and a successful cruise,

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

(Signed) SMITH THOMPSON.

I certify the foregoing to be a true copy from the original on file in this Department.

CHAS. HAY, Chief Clerk.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 6, 1825.

(No. 5.)

Captain Porter has the honor respectfully to state to the President of the United States, that, agreeably to the suggestion of the President, he, on the 16th of last month, addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Navy, requesting an investigation of his conduct, in relation to the affair of Foxardo and the charges of Mr. Randal, as early as was consistent with the public interests; and on the same day he received what purported to be the Secretary's reply, informing him the Executive had determined that a court should be formed, to examine into the occurrences, as soon as circumstances will permit.

Captain P. consequently waited with patience until the 13th of this month, when, not being able to learn that any steps were taken towards the accomplishment of the Executive will, he again addressed the Secretary in the most urgent but respectful manner, to cause his conduct to be investigated, and allow him, if innocent, to relieve himself from the truly unpleasant situation in which the order for his recall has placed him.

No notice has yet been taken of this request, and Captain P., despairing of justice from any other quarter, begs and entreats that the President of the United States will cause it to be rendered to him.

WASHINGTON, April 17, 1825.

I certify the foregoing to be a true copy from the original on file in this Department.

CHAS. HAY, Chief Clerk.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 6, 1825.

(No. 5.)

U. S. SHIP JOHN ADAMS, Passage Island, November 15, 1824.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that on my arrival at St. Thomas, I was informed that Lieut. Commandant Platt, of the United States schooner Beagle, who had visited Foxardo, a town on the east coast of Porto Rico, about two miles from the sea, for the purpose of making inquiries respecting a quantity of dry goods, supposed to have been deposited there by pirates, was, after being recognized as an American officer, by the proper authorities there, imprisoned and shamefully treated.

Indignant at the outrages which have so repeatedly been heaped upon us by the authorities of Porto Rico, I proceeded to this place, where I left the ship, and taking with me the schooners Grampus and Beagle, and the boats of the John Adams, with Captain Dallas and part of his officers, seamen and marines, proceeded to the port of Foxardo, where, finding preparations were making to fire on us from the battery on shore, I sent a party of seamen and marines to spike the guns, which was done in a few minutes, as the Spaniards fled on the landing of the party. I then landed with two hundred men and marched to the town, spiking on the way the guns of a small battery, placed for the defence of a pass on the road, and reached the town in about thirty minutes after landing. I found them prepared for defence, as they received information from St. Thomas of my intentions of visiting the place. I halted about pistol shot from their forces, drawn up on the outskirts of the town, and sent in a flag requiring the alcalde or governor, with the captain of the port, the principal offenders, to come to me to make atonement for the outrage, giving them one hour to deliberate. They appeared accordingly, and after begging pardon (in the presence of all the officers) of the officer who had been insulted, and expressing great penitence, I permitted them to return to the town, on their promising to respect all American officers who may visit them hereafter. We then returned to the vessels and left the harbor after being at anchor three hours.

As we were getting under way, a number of persons appeared on the beach bearing a white flag, and having with them some bullocks and a number of horses, apparently laden—no doubt a present from the authorities of the place, which they informed me they should send me.

There is no doubt that our persons and our flag will be more respected hereafter than they have been by the authorities of Porto Rico.

Every officer and man on the occasion conducted themselves in a manner to meet my entire approbation.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. PORTER.

The Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

I certify the foregoing to be a true copy from the original on file in this Department.

CHAS. HAY.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 6, 1825.

This paper admitted to have been received by the Department on December 4, 1824.

(No. 6.)

U. S. Ship John Adams, Thompson's Island, January 30, 1825.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your orders of the 27th ult., informing me of your receipt of mine, of the 15th of November, relating what you have been pleased to term "the extraordinary transactions at Foxardo," and recalling me from my command for a full investigation of my conduct in that affair.

Agreeably to your orders, I shall leave this place for Washington, "without unnecessary delay," and have taken measures to obtain all the testimony necessary, and such written evidence as I suppose useful; and on my arrival in the United States shall hold myself ready to justify my conduct in every particular, not only by the laws of nations and of nature, and by highly approved precedent, but, if necessary, by the orders of the Secretary of the Navy.

To use the emphatic language of Mr. Adams, "by all the laws of neutrality and war, as well as of prudence and humanity," I was warranted in chastising and intimidating the authorities of a place who had not only become the allies and protectors of outlaws and pirates, but our active enemies, by the imprisonment and forcible detention of an American officer while in the performance of his duties. "There will need," continues Mr. Adams, "no citation from printed treatises on international law to prove the correctness of this principle. It is engraved in adamant on the common sense of mankind; no writer upon the laws of nations ever pretended to contradict it; none of any reputation or authority ever omitted to insert it."

I am willing, sir, to submit my conduct in this affair to the strictest investigation, and if I cannot justify it, I shall cheerfully submit to the severest punishment that can be inflicted; but if it shall appear that the motives which influenced me were founded in patriotism, that the necessity for my conduct really existed, and that "my vindication is written in every page of the law of nations, as well as the first law of nature—self defence," I shall then hope that atonement will be made for the forcible withdrawal, for an alleged offence, from my command, by restoring me to my former station, and allowing me to retire from it in a manner more honorable to myself and my country, and less injurious to my feelings and character.

This, sir, will be an act of justice that I hope will not be denied me.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

(Signed) DAVID PORTER.

Hon. Samuel L. Southard, Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

I certify the foregoing to be a true copy from the original on file in this Department.

CHARLES HAY, Chief Clerk.

Navy Department, July 6, 1825.

(No. 6.)

U. S. Schooner Beagle, St. Thomas, November 11, 1824.

Sir: At ten in the morning of the 26th of October last, I received intelligence that the American consul's store had been forcibly entered on the preceding night, and robbed of goods to the amount of five thousand dollars. With this report, the American consul requested me, provided it would prove consistent with my duties, to sail in quest of those whom it was supposed had clandestinely left the harbor the night preceding, in a small boat, and generally believed by those acquainted in St. Thomas, to have proceeded to the port of Foxardo, on the east end of Porto Rico. I directly gave the necessary orders to prepare for sea; having received a good pilot on board, I was enabled, by noon, to proceed in quest of the marauders.

Standing along the south side of Crabb Island, discovered a sloop in Settlement Bay; boarded her and received information of a piratical sloop-rigged boat to leeward, that had been for some time past infesting the coast. This information induced me to alter my course and steer for the west end of Crabb Island. At 10 A. M. discovered a sloop beating to windward, and the small sloop-rigged boat standing from the land. At 10.50, fired a shot to bring the sloop to; at 10.55, fired again; she hove about and stood for the land. Spoke the sloop ———, from St. Croix, bound to St. Thomas; made all sail for the sloop boat, which run into ——— Bay, and her crew abandoned her. At 11.15, came to, and took possession of the deserted boat. At 11.45, made sail and stood for the S. E. end of Porto Rico; at sunset came to in the harbor of Port Foxardo.

On the morning of the 27th, a creole visited me from shore, who bore an invitation from the commandant to me to visit him. At 7 A. M., in company with Lieut. Ritchie, the pilot and the consul's clerk, I landed. For our better success we appeared in the characters of citizens. On my reaching the shore, the register of my vessel was demanded. I explained the object of my visit, and the policy of my appearing in disguise. This, however, proved of no avail; I was not allowed to proceed to Foxardo. Supposing that the person who made these demands had no authority to detain me, I, in company with Lieut. Ritchie, proceeded to the port of Foxardo, and explained in the most satisfactory manner, to the captain of the port, the object of my visit, and produced a private letter from Mr. Cabot, American consul, to a merchant in that place, in relation to the service in which we were engaged.

Having observed the necessary forms and ceremonies with regard to the captain of the port, we then waited upon the alcalde, and further acquainted him with our mission, &c., who proffered us every assistance; having made a few inquiries in some of the retail stores, which had an immediate tendency to bring to light any who may have been engaged in this traffic, we received a positive order to repair to the alcalde's house, where we were also received by the captain of the port, who damned us as pirates, and requested of me, register, papers, &c., &c. I stated I possessed no register; I carried no papers, other than my commission, and that of my officers; we were seized as culprits, and conveyed to prison. To satisfy them of my real character, of which they pretended they had no positive proof, I consented, though repugnant to my feelings, to have my commission sent me. After its production they declared it a forgery, and again remanded us to prison, declaring he would not release us until he had heard from St. Johns. I then demanded to know what was further required; the reply was, "your appointment as lieutenant commandant of that vessel is what you must produce."

I at first hesitated, and would not comply; but not wishing on my part to commit any action which might have a tendency to disturb the harmony existing between our respective governments, I produced my appointment as lieutenant commandant. A council of officers was called with other citizens of the place, who, after having heaped upon us the most shameful outrages, permitted us to depart on board.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

(Signed) CHAS. T. PLATT, Lieut. Commandant U. S. Schooner Beagle.

To Com. D. PORTER, U. S. Navy.

I certify the foregoing to be a true copy from the files of this Department.

CHAS. HAY, Chief Clerk.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 6, 1825.

(No. 7.)

WASHINGTON, March 16, 1825.

SIR: It is now sixteen days since I had the honor to report to you my arrival here, in obedience to your orders, of 27th December, and I have anxiously since awaited your further instructions.

I am aware, sir, of the interruptions the recent changes in government, and other circumstances, have occasioned to the transaction of public business; and however irksome and uncertain may be my present situation, and, whatever anxiety I may feel on the occasion, it is not my wish to press on the Department my own affiairs in preference to those of more importance; I cannot, however, help requesting that there may be as little delay in the investigation of my conduct, both as regards the affair at Foxardo, and the statements of Mr. Randall and Mountain, as is consistent with the public interests.

The state of ignorance and uncertainty in which I have been kept, as to the intentions of the government, and the desire of vindicating myself to the government and the public, and relieving myself from a species of suspension and supposed condemnation, must be my apology for now troubling you.

Officers continue to make me their reports, and to request of me orders. Not knowing whether the Department still consider me in command of the West Indies squadron, I have been at a loss how to act; will you be pleased to instruct me on the subject?

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

D. PORTER.

HON. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

I certify the foregoing to be a true copy from the original on file in this Department.

CHAS. HAY, Chief Clerk.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 6, 1825.

(No. 7.)

ST. THOMAS, November 12, 1824.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you, that the store of Cabot, Bailey & Co., was broken open on the night of the 24th ultimo, and property to a considerable amount stolen; and having strong reasons to believe that the robbery was committed by a gang of thieves, who harbor in the Island of Porto Rico, I communicated the same to Captain Platt, of the United States schooner Beagle, and he very promptly offered to go there in pursuit of them, and started for Foxardo on the morning of the 25th, with a pilot, which I furnished him, and a young man from the counting house, with a description of the goods, and a letter of introduction to Mr. Juan Campos, from one of the most respectable houses in this place, and well known in that quarter. The manner in which Captain Platt was received and treated has, no doubt, been communicated to you by him.

I beg leave to enclose a letter from Messrs. Bergeest & Whlhorn, confirming the facts of the late robberies in this island, having in most instances been traced to the quarter of Porto Rico, where Captain Platt went.

I have the honor to be, sir, with great respect, your most obedient servant, (Signed) STEPHEN CABOT, United States Consular Agent.

To Commodore DAVID PORTER.

I certify the foregoing to be a true copy from the files of this Department.

CHAS. HAY, Chief Clerk.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 6, 1825.

(No. 8.)

WASHINGTON, April 13, 1825.

SIR: I hope it will not be considered obtrusive in me to remind you of the extremely unpleasant situation in which your orders of the 27th December have placed me.

You will recollect, no doubt, that they required me to repair to this place without unnecessary delay, to explain my conduct in relation to the Foxardo affair; from this positive injunction, they deprive me of the opportunity, without taking on myself great responsibility, of obtaining by personal application the written testimony necessary in the case; not knowing the causes which influenced you in urging my recall so speedily, and not wishing to have unnecessary delay ascribed to any wish on my part, the day of my arrival here (the 1st of March,) I reported to you my attendance on your further orders. No notice being paid to this report, after an interview had with the President, I again addressed you at his suggestion, on the 16th of the same month, and on the same day I received your letter apprising me that by the determination of the Executive, a court of inquiry would be formed, to examine into the occurrences at Foxardo, as well as the charges of Mr. Randall, so soon as circumstances will permit.

Since that time, I have waited patiently your convenience, regardless of the anxiety and importunity of my friends, not wishing to press my business on you to the exclusion of matters which might now appear to you of more importance to the public interest than the investigation of my conduct in the Foxardo affair, or the charges against myself and others as contained in Mr. Randall's statements. I must beg leave to observe to you, however, that the manner of my recall proves that, at the time your order of the 27th December was issued, the investigation of the affair which caused it was considered of great national importance, and a note subsequently received from Mr. Monroe not only confirms this belief, but proves that he still thought so after he had gone out of office. I must also beg leave to observe, that whatever opinion may be entertained now, the punishment to me is none the less on account of the change, if any change has taken place. The affair of Foxardo was the occasion of my recall—the affair of Foxardo was the occasion of my being displaced from my command—it is that affair which now keeps me suspended from the exercise of my official functions—it was that which caused you to pronounce censure on me, to punish and degrade me, before any complaint against me, before trial, and before I was called on for explanation.

If, sir, opinion is changed; if, by information since received from other quarters, you have been induced to believe that the public interests do not require so much haste in the investigation as you at first supposed, it would seem but just that my own anxieties and the anxieties of those whose peace of mind I regard, and good opinion I highly respect, should be relieved by some intimation of your intentions with regard to me; that there should be, in fact, some relaxation in the severity of the course adopted toward me.

It is with reluctance that I trouble you with any complaint whatever; but I feel that I should neither do my duty to myself, to what I owe to others, and indeed to the service to which I belong, if by a longer silence I gave reason to believe that I acquiesced in a course of conduct toward me, which, when a full investigation takes place, and all the facts are known, few, I think, will acknowledge is founded on justice.

The Executive, it appears, has decided that a court of inquiry shall be ordered to investigate my conduct. Why then deprive me of the opportunity of making my explanation, by delaying the execution of the Executive will? Upwards of six weeks have elapsed since I reported my arrival here, and as yet I only know the determination of the Executive.

The time when, the place where, and by whom the investigation is to be made, are unknown to me; no definite period is fixed on for the holding of the court, and I therefore most respectfully ask what is your determination with respect to me? that I may know what course of conduct it would be proper for me to pursue.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant, D. PORTER.

Honorable SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

I certify that the foregoing is a true copy from the original on file in this Department.

CHAS. HAY, Chief Clerk.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 6, 1825.

(No. 8.)

SIR: At the request of our friend, Mr. Stephen Cabot, we beg leave to state to you some facts relative to the robbery lately committed in this island.

Our own store, and, amongst others, those of our neighbors, Messrs. Ellis, Gibson & Co., John Kettle, Esq., Robert Alexander, Esq., Saubot, Zobert & Co., were forcibly broken open, property to a very large amount stolen, and a considerable part of the goods traced to Nagaubo, near Foxardo; in consequence of which, and the circumstance that about ten days previous to the robbery committed in the store of Messrs. Cabot, Bailey & Co., a gang of desperate thieves made their escape from the prison at the city of Puerto Rico; as also every search had been made here on shore, as well as in the harbor, and nothing discovered, except that the goods stolen had been carried off by the sea side, induced us to recommend to those gentlemen sending down a person to Foxardo, as being probably the means of tracing the robbers.

Desirous of assisting our friends Messrs. Cabot, Bailey & Co. in this object, we gave one of their clerks, and whom we undertood was to go down in the U. S. schooner Beagle, a letter of recommendation to our friend, Mr. Juan Campos, in Foxardo, who had, on former occasions of the same nature, been the means of discovering the property and perpetrators, in the case of Messrs. Ellis, Gibson & Co., and our own.

We have the honor to be, with sentiments of the highest regard, sir,

Your obedient humble servants,

BERGEEST & WHLHORN.

ST. THOMAS, November 11, 1824.

To Commodore DAVID PORTER.

I certify the foregoing to be a true copy from the files of this Department.

CHAS. HAY, Chief Clerk.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 6, 1825.

(No. 9.)

MERIDIAN HILL, June 14, 1825.

SIR: I have received your letter of yesterday's date, acknowledging the receipt of a pamphlet published by me, respecting the proceedings of the court of inquiry, and transactions at Foxardo; and expressing your surprise that I should have considered it proper, while my case and the report of the court of inquiry were still under consideration of the Executive, to make a publication relating thereto; and especially a publication in so many respects deficient and inaccurate.

I beg leave to state to you, that the publication alluded to was put to press, and nearly ready for distribution, before I received any intimation from you of an opinion on the part of the Executive that further proceedings in the case were deemed necessary; an intimation which occasioned to me great surprise, and it was only the hope of removing from the mind of the Executive an idea of this necessity which induced me to circulate it, after being so notified, as you will perceive by the note accompanying the pamphlet sent you a few days after your notification; a notification which, pardon me, sir, I did believe was intended for the sole purpose of stopping my publication, as I could find no other motive for it, nor have I yet been able to find any other, as I am to this day not arrested, as I was informed by you I should be in a few days.

If, by an intimation of the deficiencies and inaccuracies which my pamphlet contains, it is intended to convey the idea of a willful misrepresentation on my part, I beg you to point out in what it consists. The record of the proceedings as published is copied from the record of the judge advocate, and the documents, whether rejected or otherwise, for or against me, so far as I could possess myself of them, accompany the publication; and I certainly have not omitted any against me, that were admitted by the court as testimony; to the contrary, I have inserted one of that character which was rejected by the court as unauthentic, to wit, the Porto Rico publication. There are one or two trifling typographical errors, the most important of which is the word clothes instead of colors, in the testimony of Mr. Platt, page 15, and I think an omission to italicise the words "fearful odds," in page 37, which surely cannot be the inaccuracies and deficiencies alluded to, as the first error is calculated to operate against myself, and the other, if it really exists, is of no importance. There is also an unimportant letter from you to the court, transmitting the rejected documents, which by a note in page 31, and the report of the court, which, by a remark in page 32, I acknowledge not to be in my possession.

The first was refused to me by the judge advocate; the latter I am still ignorant of, but the publication of both I now respectfully invite.

The anonymous publication in yesterday's Journal, of the same date of your letter, taken in connection with the language of it, leaves no doubt of the source whence it originated; I, consequently, considering my relationship to the Department, feel restrained from making suitable comments thereon; it is, therefore, only left for me to express the hope that the promised period for rectifying the errors and supplying the deficiencies which are said to exist in the pamphlet, may soon arrive; and until it does, I hereby voluntarily pledge my "sacred honor" that none will appear in it, except those I have indicated, so far as I could, by every effort on my part, obtain a knowledge of the proceedings of the court, and I have no doubt I have obtained them correctly.

If it is intended to intimate that the reasonings contained in my defence are fallacious, and present an improper view of the subject, I can only say that they are the expressions of my honest, unaided opinions and convictions, and that I should have delivered them before the court, had I been allowed the opportunity of doing so. They are before the public; the public will judge of their value, and I now more than ever feel the necessity of appealing to its decision.

I am not impatient of it, and wait the convenience of the Department, in whatever measures it may think proper to adopt towards me.

I take the liberty to remind you that I am still ignorant of the opinion of the court of inquiry on the charges of Messrs. Randall and Mountain, and to request that it may be laid before the public, that it may be able to judge whether I am innocent or guilty of them. If the court have pronounced me innocent, I am entitled to all the benefits of their opinion; if I am guilty, I am unworthy of holding my commission, and should wish no longer to disgrace it.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant, D. PORTER.

Hon. SAML. L. SOUTHARD.

I certify the foregoing to be a true copy from the original in this Department.

CHAS. HAY, Chief Clerk.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 6, 1825.

(No. 10.)

WASHINGTON, May 2, 1825.

SIR: The accompanying pamphlet, which was put to press shortly after the proceedings of the court of inquiry on the Foxardo affair, contains all the explanations I shall ever be able to make, in justification of my conduct.

I never had, at any time, any doubts of the propriety of the course I pursued, nor have I now; and it will be the source of great regret to me, if, after a perusal of the pamphlet, further proceedings in the case should be thought necessary.

If it be thought that I have erred in judgment, the purity of my intentions, I presume, cannot be doubted.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

I certify the foregoing to be a true copy from the original on file in this Department.

CHAS. HAY, Chief Clerk.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 6, 1825.

(No. 11.)

The pamphlet referred to in the second specification, is inserted after No. 43.

(No. 12.)

Captain Porter having examined the proposed interrogatories of Mr. Monroe, on the part of the judge advocate, is, after mature reflection, and with the best advice in his power to obtain, utterly at a loss to conceive by what authority the proposed commission to examine Mr. Monroe in the manner proposed, has been claimed by the judge advocate; or how any evidence to be taken under it, can be admitted in the place of the testimony of the witness, in person, before the court; or what legitimate relation or bearing the evidence which the said interrogatories import an intention to produce, can have to any matter involved in the present trial.

Having repeatedly called upon the judge advocate for some precise specification of the circumstances wherein the supposed guilt implied by the accusation, under the head of the second charge, consists, and of the gist or point of the accusation to which the proposed evidence applies, he forbears any further attempt to penetrate the mysterious and studied silence, by which all reasonable information on this point is concealed. He therefore, simply proposes the following interrogatories on his part; being all that, under present circumstances, he can conjecture to be at all pertinent to any fact of which the judge advocate's interrogatories indicate an intention to make inquiry and proof. But he does so under a solemn protest against the legality, the justice, and the fairness, upon any principle of law, equity, or candor, of the whole proceedings, and distinctly reserving to himself, when the execution of this pretended commission shall be produced, every proper exception to the regularity or competency of such commission, and of the execution of the same; and to the pertinency and admissibility of any evidence to be offered under it; if to him it shall seem necessary or proper to interpose such exceptions.

(No. 13.)

For the original record of the proceedings of the court of inquiry, see page 133.

(No. 14.)

MERIDIAN HILL, June 15, 1825.

SIR: In consequence of an anonymous publication which appeared in your paper of the 14th, and dated the 13th, respecting my pamphlet containing the proceedings in the Foxardo affair, &c., I have to request you to publish the accompanying correspondence.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant, D. PORTER.

Mr. PETER FORCE.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, May 28, 1825.

SIR: The court of inquiry, lately assembled at the Navy yard, Washington, has closed its examination into the matters submitted to it, and made report to the Department.

I am instructed by the Executive to inform you that it has been found necessary that further proceedings should be had in relation to the transactions at Foxardo, and that, in the course of a few days, charges will be preferred, you will be arrested, and a court-martial summoned for your trial.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

SAML. L. SOUTHARD.

Capt. DAVID PORTER, U. S. Navy.

WASHINGTON, May 30, 1825.

SIR: Late on Saturday night (the 28th) I received from your messenger your communication of that date, informing me that the court of inquiry had closed its examination into the matters submitted to it, and made report to the Department; also, apprising me of the intentions of the Executive with regard to me.

Ignorant, as I am, of the report of the court, I can form no idea of the nature of the charges intended to be preferred against me, the motives of the Executive, or the object of the notification. I have the honor, therefore, to ask of you the necessary information to enable me to prepare for my defence.

With great respect, your very obedient servant, D. PORTER.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

WASHINGTON, June 2, 1825.

SIR: The accompanying pamphlet, which was put to press shortly after the termination of the proceedings of the court of inquiry on the Foxardo affair, contains all the explanations I shall ever be able to make in justification of my conduct.

I never had, at any time, any doubts of the propriety of the course I pursued—nor have I now; and it will be the source of great regret to me, if, after a perusal of the pamphlet, further proceedings in the case should be thought necessary.

If it be thought that I have erred in judgment, the purity of my intentions, I presume, cannot be doubted.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant, D. PORTER.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, June 13.

SIR: Your letter, transmitting a pamphlet respecting the proceedings of the court of inquiry, and the transactions at Foxardo, &c., was received, and the copy, endorsed for the President, immediately delivered to him.

It is the cause of surprise that you should have considered it proper, while your case and the report of the court of inquiry were still under the consideration of the Executive, to make a publication relating thereto, and especially a publication in so many respects deficient and inaccurate.

I am, respectfully, &c.,

SAML. L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, U. S. Navy.

MERIDIAN HILL, June 14, 1825.

SIR: I have received your letter of yesterday's date, acknowledging the receipt of a pamphlet published by me, respecting the proceedings of the court of inquiry, and transactions at Foxardo, &c., and expressing your surprise that I should have considered it proper, while my case and the report of the court of inquiry were still under consideration of the Executive, to make a publication relating thereto, and especially a publication in so many respects "deficient and inaccurate."

I beg leave to state to you that the publication alluded to was put to press and nearly ready for distribution before I received any intimation from you of an opinion on the part of the Executive that further proceedings in the case were deemed necessary; an intimation which occasioned to me great surprise, and it was only with the hope of removing from the mind of the Executive an idea of this necessity, which induced me to circulate it after being so notified, as you will perceive by the note accompanying the pamphlet sent you a few days after your notification; which, pardon me, sir, I did believe was intended for the sole purpose of stopping my publication, as I could find no other motive for it, nor have I yet been able to find any other, as I am to this day not arrested, as I was informed by you I should be.

If, by an intimation of the deficiencies and inaccuracies which my pamphlet contains, it is intended to convey the idea of a willful misrepresentation on my part, I beg you to point out in what it consists.

The record of the proceedings, as published, is copied from the record of the judge advocate; and the documents, whether rejected or otherwise, for or against me, so far as I could possess myself of them, accompanying the publication; and I certainly have not omitted any against me that were admitted by the court as testimony; to the contrary, I have inserted one of that character which was rejected by the court as unauthentic, to wit, the Porto Rico government publication.

There are one or two trifling typographical errors, the most important of which is the word clothes instead of colors, in the testimony of Mr. Platt, page 15, and I think an omission to italicise the words "fearful odds," in page 37, which surely cannot be the inaccuracies and deficiencies alluded to, as the first error is calculated to operate against myself, and the other, if it really exists, is of no importance. There is also an unimportant letter from you to the court, transmitting the rejected documents, which by a note in page 31, and the report of the court, which by a remark in page 32, I acknowledge not to be in my possession. The first was refused to me by the judge advocate. The latter I am still ignorant of; but the publication of both I now respectfully invite.

The anonymous production in yesterday's Journal, of the same date of your letter, taken in connection with the language of it, leaves no doubt of the source whence it originated. I, consequently, considering my relationship to the Department, feel restrained from making suitable comments thereon. It is, therefore, only left for me to express the hope that the promised period for rectifying the errors and supplying the deficiencies which are said to exist in the pamphlet may soon arrive; and until it does, I hereby voluntarily pledge my "sacred honor" that none will appear in it, except those I have indicated, so far as I could, by every effort on my part, obtain a knowledge of the proceedings of the court, and I have no doubt I have obtained them correctly.

If it is intended to intimate that the reasons contained in my defence are fallacious, and present an improper view of the subject, I can only say they are the expressions of my honest, unaided opinion and convictions, and that I should have delivered them before the court, had I been allowed the opportunity of doing so. They are before the public; the public will judge of their value; and I now more than ever feel the necessity of appealing to its decision. I am not impatient of it, and wait the convenience of the Department in whatever measures it may think proper to adopt towards me.

I take the liberty to remind you that I am still ignorant of the opinion of the court of inquiry on the charges of Messrs. Randall and Mountain, and to request that it may be laid before the public, that it may be able to judge whether I am innocent or guilty of them.

If the court has pronounced me innocent, I am entitled to all the benefits of their opinion; if I am guilty, I am unworthy of holding my commission, and should wish no longer to disgrace it.

I have the honor to be, your very obedient servant,

D. PORTER.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

(No. 15.)

Variances, &c.

Pamphlet, p. 11, 7th line—"Into the matters aforesaid," original matter. 21st line—"And (it) is also empowered;" original, it omitted.

P. 13, 3d paragraph—in pamphlet—"Captain David Porter also appeared, and being asked whether he had any objection to offer against either of the members of the court, replied that he had no specific objection to individuals, but he objected to the materials of which the court was composed; and stated further that he had some remarks to make on the subject, as well as on the precept; that he did not think the court was legally formed. The oath," &c.

The original record reads:

"Captain David Porter also appeared, and being asked whether he had any objection to offer against either of the members of the court, replied that he had no specific objection to urge, but that he had some remarks which he wished to submit to the consideration of the court after it was organized, and previous to its proceeding to make the investigation for which it was convened. Whereupon the oath," &c.

P. 15, line 27—after the word breakfast, "about an hour after I finished my breakfast" I received, &c.; the words between inverted commas omitted. Line 38—clothes instead of colors.

P. 16, 10th line from bottom—cofined instead of confined.

P. 17, end of third line, my omitted.

P. 20, 7th line from bottom, after the word court, the paper was, omitted in pamphlet.

P. 22, 3d line of the proceedings of Thursday, receiving instead of perusing. 2d line of last paragraph, (marked F,) not in original.

P. 23, first line, after paper, "it was accordingly read, annexed to the record, and marked F," omitted. 17th line from bottom, after the word which, the words "holds the highest commission which" omitted in pamphlet.

P. 26, 8th line from the bottom of the text, the word some omitted before resistance.

P. 27, 9th line, the first word then not in original. 2d paragraph, were instead of being, and the sentence made to end at men, instead of going on through the paragraph.

P. 29, 18th line from bottom, the word up not in original.

P. 30, 2d paragraph, half-past ten instead of two.

P. 31, the sentence "The judge advocate informed the court that he should probably be in possession of more testimony to submit to-morrow, but had none to lay before the court at this time," omitted before the adjournment till 12 o'clock to-morrow, and the two sentences after that adjournment not in original.

In the proceedings of Saturday, 1st paragraph, the original reads "Present: all the members of the court, the judge advocate, and Captain Porter." 2d paragraph, the communication from the Secretary of the Navy, marked (G), not inserted in the pamphlet.

P. 32, the third paragraph not in the original. A note attached on the original record, at the end of the first paragraph, omitted. The 2d, 3d, 4th, and 5th paragraphs all vary from the original, and the report of the court is entirely omitted.

The communication from the Secretary of the Navy, not introduced into the original record, but annexed to the subsequent proceeding; and the word proposed, at the end of the 4th paragraph, instead of prepared.

In the documents, given in evidence, the original record gives:

No. 1. Letter from Captain Porter to Secretary of Navy, of November 15, 1824.

No. 2. Same to same, January 1, 1825.

No. 3. Stephen Cabot to Commodore Porter, November 12, 1824.

No. 4. Bergeest and Ulhorn to same, November 11, 1824.

No. 5. Charles T. Platt to same, November 11, 1824.

No. 6. Secretary of Navy to same, February 1, 1823.

In the pamphlet, pp. 43, &c., the papers 3, 4, 5, are transposed; No. 6 wholly omitted, and one inserted as No. 6, which never was submitted to the court in that investigation.

Page 34, 5th line from bottom, were instead of was.

Page 36, commencement of 6th paragraph, the words "I beg leave to state further that" omitted. Same paragraph, 3d line, after court, the original reads "and I should now waive all objections," &c. Same paragraph, 3d line from bottom, the word as not in the record.

Page 37, 3d line, the word formed omitted in the pamphlet, before regulated. 9th line of 2d paragraph, the design instead of designed. 9th and 8th lines from bottom of paper B, "considering the fearful odds I have to contend against," italicised in the original.

Page 71, 3d and 4th lines of 3d paragraph, to any subject instead of to the subject.

Page 42, 11th line of 2d paragraph, a power instead of its power.

(No. 16.)

In the case of Captain David Porter, now before the general court-martial at the Marine barracks at Washington, it is hereby agreed, by and between the judge advocate and the said Captain D. Porter, that the following statement of facts is true, and that the attendance of witnesses to prove the same is dispensed with on each side:

Captain Porter did, on the 28th day of May, 1824, write a letter to the Secretary of the Navy, a true copy of which is hereunto annexed, and did dispatch the same from the place where it purports to have been written, by Lieutenant Legare, of the United States schooner Wild Cat, to deliver the same to the Secretary of the Navy.

It is agreed, also, that Lieutenant Legare sailed in the United States schooner Wild Cat, from Matanzas, for Washington, on the 29th day of May, 1824, with the said letter of the 28th, and that Captain Porter sailed from the same place, Matanzas, on the 15th day of June following.

Lieutenant Legare did arrive at the city of Washington, and did deliver the same to the Secretary of the Navy, at his house, in the city of Washington, on the evening of June 24th, 1824.

Captain Porter arrived in the city of Washington, in the Sea Gull, some time on the same 24th day of June, some hours previous to the arrival of Lieutenant Legare, having passed him in the river, on his way up. The arrival of Captain Porter was announced to the Secretary of the Navy, one or two hours before the arrival of Lieutenant Legare, and the delivery of the said letter at the house of the Secretary, who thereupon expressed great surprise at receiving the intelligence, and stated it to have been wholly unexpected by him.

(No. 17.)

The Secretary of the Navy requests Messrs. Gales and Seaton to inform him from whom they received t' e correspondence which was published in the "Daily National Intelligencer," of the 30th of March last, purporting to be correspondence between the Secretary of the Navy and Commodore David Porter.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, April 15, 1825.

(No. 18.)

The Secretary of the Navy presents his respects to Messrs. Gales and Seaton, and informs them that his object in writing the note to which theirs of the 16th is an answer, was to discover whether the correspondence referred to was communicated by an officer of the navy, and if so, by what officer.

The Secretary of the Navy believes that it was improper in any officer, under the circumstances of the case, to communicate that correspondence to the public. He would, therefore, be gratified to learn who the officer is, if Messrs. Gales and Seaton feel perfectly at liberty to give the information. He wishes not, however, to create the slightest difficulty between them and their correspondent, or to obtain from them what it would be in the least improper for them to communicate.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, April 18, 1825.

(No. 19.)

Copies of letters from Gales and Seaton to the Secretary of the Navy.

Gales and Seaton have the pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of the note of the Hon. Secretary of the Navy, requesting them "to inform him from whom they received the correspondence which was published in the Daily National Intelligencer, of the 30th of March last, purporting to be a correspondence between the Secretary of the Navy and Commodore D. Porter." G. and S. have the honor to state, in reply to this note, that the copy of the correspondence was received from an officer of the navy. If it be not genuine, or be incorrect, the name of the communicator will be instantly disclosed to the Secretary of the Navy.

OFFICE OF THE NATIONAL INTELLIGENCER, April 16, 1825.

OFFICE OF THE NATIONAL INTELLIGENCER, April 19, 1825.

Gales and Seaton present their respects to the Hon. Secretary of the Navy, acknowledging the receipt of his note of the date of yesterday. In seeking for their readers, from sources accessible to them, information of an authentic nature concerning a matter already spread before the public by official documents, they were not aware that they should for themselves, or for the gentleman who kindly furnished the copies of the papers referred to, incur the disapprobation of the Department.

The authenticity of those papers not being questioned, and the name of the officer being desired, it would appear, only to disapprove of his conduct, the editors being unwilling to compromit any one for a service rendered to them, if not the public, take leave most respectfully to decline a compliance with the request of the Hon. Secretary, assuring him at the same time, with great sincerity, that there is not an officer in this government to whose known wishes it would give them greater pleasure at any time to accede.

P. S.—It can hardly be necessary to state that, in coming to the conclusion above stated, G. and S. have not held any consultation with their correspondent who furnished the papers in question.

(No. 20.)

Commodore Porter.

We have been informed that, though in point of fact we were not in error in our note appended to remarks taken from the Cincinnati Gazette, and inserted in ours of the 28th instant, yet, notwithstanding that, Commodore Porter no longer holds command of the West India squadron. We have, therefore, with a view of it being correct and preventing wrong impressions, sought, and obtained, copies of the correspondence on the subject of the recall of Commodore Porter, which we can see no impropriety in publishing at this time, as the letters have no bearing on the merits of the question to be hereafter decided, as to the correctness or incorrectness of his conduct in the Foxardo affair.

It has been publicly and officially announced by the late President of the United States, to Congress, that Commodore Porter has, in consequence of that affair, been recalled, and it is proper that the nation should know the true position of the case. The Executive, no doubt, conceived itself to be right in recalling him, and from the confident tone of the commodore's reply, there can be as little doubt that he thinks himself right in what he has done. If he can justify himself no evil can result to him from what has taken place; if he cannot, he can have no objection in submitting to the punishment he has volunteered to suffer.

The "instructions" to the commodore have been communicated to Congress by the Navy Department, and the public can form an opinion how far he can sustain himself by them. It remains to be seen how far he can justify himself by the "laws of nature and of nations," and by highly approved precedent.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, December 27, 1825.

SIR: Your letter of the 15th of November last, relating to the extraordinary transactions at Foxardo, in the Island of Porto Rico, on the — of that month, has been received and considered.

It is not intended, at this time, to pronounce an opinion on the propriety of those transactions on your part, but their importance demands for them a full investigation, and you will proceed without unnecessary delay to this place, to furnish such explanations as may be required, of everything connected with their cause, origin, progress, and termination. For that purpose, you will bring with you those officers whose testimony is necessary, particularly Lieut. Platt, and such written evidence as you may suppose useful.

You will return in such convenient vessel as may be best spared from the squadron, and on your leaving the station, you will deliver the command to Captain Warrington, with all such papers, instructions, and information as may be useful to enable him in the most effectual manner to accomplish all the objects for which the vessels now under your command were placed there.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Com. DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. Naval Forces, West Indies, Gulf of Mexico, &c.

U. S. SHIP JOHN ADAMS, Thompson's Island, January 30, 1825.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your orders of the 27th ultimo, informing me of your reception of mine of the 15th of November, relating to what you have been pleased to term "the extraordinary transactions at Foxardo," and recalling me from my command for a full investigation of my conduct in that affair.

Agreeably to your orders, I shall leave this place for Washington "without unnecessary delay," and have taken measures to obtain all the testimony necessary, and such written evidence as I suppose useful, and on my arrival in the United States shall hold myself ready to justify my conduct in every particular, not only by the laws of nations and of nature, and by highly approved precedent, but, if necessary, by the orders of the Secretary of the Navy.

To use the emphatic language of Mr. Adams, "by all the laws of neutrality and war, as well as of prudence and humanity," I was warranted in chastising and intimidating the authorities of a place who had not only become the allies and protectors of outlaws and pirates, but our active enemies, by the imprisonment and forcible detention of an American officer while in the performance of his duties. "There will need," continues Mr. Adams, "no citation from printed treatises on international law to prove the correctness of this principle. It is engraved in adamant on the common sense of mankind. No writer upon the law of nations ever pretended to contradict it; none of any reputation or authority ever omitted to insert it."

I am willing, sir, to submit my conduct in this affair to the strictest investigation, and, if I cannot fully justify it, I shall cheerfully submit to the severest punishment that can be inflicted. But, if it shall appear that the motives which influenced me were founded in patriotism, that the necessity for my conduct really existed, and that "my vindication is written in every page of the law of nations, as well as the first law of nature, self defence," I shall then hope that atonement will be made for this forcible withdrawal, for an alleged offence, from my command, by restoring to me my former station, and allowing me to retire from it in a manner more honorable to myself and country, and less injurious to my feelings and character.

This, sir, will be an act of justice that I hope will not be denied to me.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

D. PORTER.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

Extract of a letter from Com. Porter to the Hon. Secretary of the Navy, dated—

WASHINGTON, March 16, 1825.

Officers continue to make to me their reports and to request of me orders. Not knowing whether the Department still consider me in command of the West India squadron, I have been at a loss how to act. Will you be pleased to instruct me on the subject?

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

D. PORTER.

Hon. SAML. L. SOUTHARD.

Extract of a letter from Hon. Samuel L. Southard to Commodore Porter, dated—

NAVY DEPARTMENT, March 16, 1825.

It was the intention of the Department, in ordering Captain Warrington to the West Indies, to relieve you from the command of the squadron there.

I am, respectfully, &c.,

SAM'L L SOUTHARD.

Com. DAVID PORTER, U. S. Navy. Present.

(No. 21.)

GEORGETOWN, May 21, 1825.

SIR: After mature reflection, I regret that it is out of my power to comply with the request made on your behalf, for a part of the record of the proceedings of the court of inquiry, in relation to the Foxardo affair, which your clerk accidentally omitted to copy. So long as you participated in the proceedings of the court, and the investigation remained uncompleted, I considered myself as authorized to communicate to you the proceedings of the court. The investigation is, however, now completed—the record has been transmitted to the Department, and is beyond my control. My impression is that I am not at liberty to communicate my private notes of the proceedings of the court under these circumstances, particularly for the purpose of being copied, without the knowledge and consent of the government. I presume, however, that on an application to the Department, a more correct transcript of the proceedings of the court will be furnished you than it is in my power to afford.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant, RICH'D S. COXE.

Commodore PORTER.

(No. 22.)

It is admitted that Mr. Simpson, representing himself as acting for Captain Porter, called on me at my house, and requested to be furnished with a certain part of the evidence given before the court of inquiry, alleging that a chasm existed, and showing me a memorandum in the handwriting of Captain Porter, by which it appeared that the chasm existed in the testimony of Captain Dallas, which is now published in the pamphlet, beginning at p. 25, and ending, according to my recollection, at the end of the first paragraph on p. 27. Doubting the propriety at that time of furnishing my private notes, after consulting the members of the court of inquiry, I sent the letter of the 21st of May, as my answer to this application. On the same day on which it was sent, Lieutenant Farragut came into the room where the court of inquiry was engaged in the second subject of investigation, and mentioned to me that Commodore Porter wished to have the letter from the Secretary of the Navy to the court, referred to in the proceedings of the court, of Saturday, May 7th. I replied to him that the original was annexed to the record, and transmitted to the Department, nearly a fortnight since, and that I had no copy; it was therefore impossible for me to comply with the application; I handed to Mr. Farragut, at the time of this conversation, (whether before or after I cannot positively say, but I think immediately after) the letter which was then written, and was I believe lying on the table sealed when he came in.

The foregoing paper was handed to Captain Porter by the judge advocate, July 25th, and returned by him on the 26th.

(No. 22.)

WASHINGTON, July 27, 1825.

SIR: In answer to a question put to me yesterday by the court-martial, I declined giving the name of the person who was our authority for a certain paragraph contained in the Intelligencer of May 5th. My unwillingness to answer the question directly, proceeded not from a belief that the gentleman concerned would feel himself aggrieved by a disclosure of his name, but from a regard for a principle which I deem it important to observe, and a respect for which dictated my answer to a similar question propounded to me by the court the day preceding, in reference to another publication in the Intelligencer. It is due to the gentleman who communicated to us the statement embraced in the paragraph of May 5th, to acquaint you now with the fact, that having heard of my refusal to give up his name, he immediately addressed to me a note, desiring unequivocally that I should not be restrained by any considerations of delicacy towards him from giving his name to the court, as it was his intention, in marking his note of May 5th "private," only to withhold his name from the newspaper.

This statement is due to the frankness of the gentleman making the communication, and you will have the goodness to place it before the court, although I do not, by the permission which he gives, feel myself absolved from the obligation which regulated my answer yesterday.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant, W. W. SEATON.

RICHARD S. COXE, Esq., Judge Advocate Navy Court-Martial.

(No. 23.)

OAKHILL, July 25, 1825.

SIR: I have answered the several interrogatories on the part of the United States and of Commodore Porter, in the trial now pending before the court-martial at Washington, which answer I now enclose to you, with the documents received from you by the messenger. The answer has been sworn to before a magistrate of the county.

I am, sir, with respect, your very obedient servant, JAMES MONROE.

To RICH'D S. COXE, Esq., Judge Advocate.

(No. 24.)

Interrogatories to be propounded to the Hon. James Monroe, in the case of Captain David Porter, now in the course of trial before a general naval court-martial at the city of Washington.

Interrogatory first. Are the accompanying papers, numbered one and two, purporting to be from Captain David Porter to you, original letters received by you from him, and when were they respectively received?

Interrogatory second. Is the paper numbered 3, a copy of a letter written by you to said Captain David Porter in reply to his letter, No. 1, and was the same transmitted to him? Have you any, and what, reasons for believing that the same was received by him?

Interrogatory third. Has it been a usual or unusual thing for a captain in the navy of the United States to solicit, by letter, permission to pay his respects to you in person? If the latter, are you acquainted with the reasons or causes which induced such application on the present occasion? Be pleased to state such reasons fully, and in detail.

Interrogatory fourth. Is it true, as is stated in your letter, No. 3, that the orders which were given to Capt. Porter, relating to his command in the West Indies, and particularly the orders to Capt. Porter in October last to return to his station, and the order of December last recalling him, were given at your instance, and under your inspection; and have you any reasons for knowing or believing that this fact was known to Captain Porter?

Interrogatory fifth. Have you ever seen any reason to believe, or to disbelieve, that the Secretary of the Navy, in his official correspondence with Capt. Porter, indicated any hostility to Capt. Porter, or was influenced by any feeling of unkindness? State fully such facts and circumstances, within your knowledge, as are calculated to illustrate this question.

RICHARD S. COXE, Judge Advocate.

1. Please to say whether, in the latter part of June, or the beginning of July, 1824, (or about that time,) you sent a message by Com. Chauncey to me, to say that I must not visit you until after I had seen the Secretary of the Navy, then absent; and until you had received some explanation as to the cause of my return from the West Indies?

2. Were you not induced so to interdict personal communication with me in consequence of having received the impression that I had left the West India station without having apprised the Navy Department of there being a necessity for it?

3. Was the letter from the Secretary of the Navy to me, of October 21, 1824, (a certified copy whereof is annexed,) containing a peremptory order for me to proceed to the West Indies, in the John Adams, contrary to my express and known wish and entreaty, and explaining the reasons for giving such order, written or dictated by yourself, in form or substance; if not, was it shown to you, and by whom, before it was dispatched to me? Please state, particularly, by whom the original draft of this letter was prepared.

4. Was not the impression you had received of my having departed from the strict line of my duty, in quitting the West India station, the operative inducement, or did it weigh anything with you, in either writing or causing to be written, or sanctioning after being written, such peremptory order to go out in the John Adams, instead of waiting a few weeks for the Constellation, as I had requested?

5. Was it not represented to you, and have you not expressed yourself as having received the impression, that I had only vented, upon the authorities and people of Foxardo, my own angry feelings and personal pique at having been ordered out in the John Adams in the manner I was, or something to that effect? Or, was any such imputation addressed by anybody to you, or uttered in your presence, and by whom?

6. In consequence of the interdict to my personal intercourse with you, as above suggested in my first interrogatory, did I not forbear to call on you, even on the 4th of July, and continually, until afterwards repeatedly invited to do so, by special messages from you?

7. When and where, and upon whose application, did you communicate and deliver to the Secretary of the Navy the said letters of the 10th and 12th of March last, annexed to the judge advocate's interrogatories? If they were so delivered, on a written application, please annex it to your answer; if upon a personal one, please to say from whom, and when and where?

8. Was that correspondence so communicated with an intention that it should be deposited among the archives of the Navy Department, and when was it so deposited?

9. Do you know that, at the time I wrote you the said letter of the 26th October, 1824, mentioned in yours of the 12th of March last, I had been made acquainted with the fact of your having either originally drafted, or dictated, or directly approved the said letter from the Secretary of the Navy of the 21st of the same month?

Signed under the protest, filed and reserved. D. PORTER.

WASHINGTON, July 22, 1825.

(No. 25.)

Answers of James Monroe to the interrogatories propounded to him in the case of Commodore Porter, in the trial now depending before a general court-martial, at the city of Washington.

1. To the first interrogatory, on the part of the United States, I answer, that the letter or paper numbered one is, according to my recollection, a correct copy of a letter from Commodore Porter to me. I return the paper with a note to this effect on it.

The letter numbered two is an original letter from Commodore Porter to me. They were both received about the time of their respective dates.

2. Answer to the second: the paper numbered three is a copy of my letter to him, of the 12th of March last; and, as I believe, a correct one.

3. Answer to the third: it was not usual for a captain, or any officer in the navy or army, to solicit an interview with me by letter. They always called when they had business; and generally on their arrival in town or departure from it; and I always received them without form, when I happened to be free from other engagements.

The interview in the instance stated was asked, as I presume, in consequence of my having recalled him from the command in the West Indies, on account of the attack made by him on Foxardo, in the Island of Porto Rico. That recall implied a doubt of the propriety of his conduct in making the attack, which had never been removed by any intimation from me, either by inviting him to see me, or otherwise. His return occurring so short a time before I left office, I deemed it improper to take any step in regard to the attack while I remained in office. I thought it more just and candid towards Commodore Porter, to leave the affair to be acted on by my successor, especially as the measure, in connection with others relating to him, might be thought to involve in some degree the propriety of my own conduct.

4. Answer to the fourth: the orders relating to the command of Commodore Porter in the West Indies, from the commencement to its termination, including, of course, that of October last, directing him to return to his station, and that of December, recalling him from it, were given at my instance, and under my immediate inspection. The command was deemed a very important one, requiring great discretion in its execution. The object was the suppression of piracy; but, in stationing a naval force there, I knew that it would attract the attention not of Spain alone, on whom it more immediately bore, but of the new governments, our neighbors, to the south, and in certain respects of several of the powers of Europe, who were neutral in the contest between the belligerent parties. The question whether free ships should make free goods, the extent of contraband of war, the transportation of specie, and other questions of the kind, necessarily occurred, when that force was detached to that station for the special object designated. They had been frequently under the consideration of the administration before, and were brought more pointedly before it on that occasion. My impression is (for I have not a copy of the instructions then given) that they were drawn with great care, and dictated by a desire rather to err (if error should be committed) on the side of moderation, than to risk a variance with any of the parties concerned. These questions were to be settled by treaties, and especially with the new governments, and which required time. My intention was, that the commander of the squadron, and all acting under him, should take nothing on themselves, but confine themselves to the duty specially enjoined on them, and obey strictly their orders.

When informed, in June last, that Commodore Porter had left his station and returned to the United States, I asked the Secretary of the Navy by what authority he had done it—had leave been given him? The reply was, none had been. I then asked, "Did his original instructions authorize him to come home when he thought fit?" I do not recollect the precise answer, or that any such was given to me; but my impression was that they did not. The Secretary had made arrangements for his departure from town, on a visit to his family, and I saw no reason why he should delay it on account of the arrival of Commodore Porter. Nothing material, more, that I recollect, passed between us. I did not see him again before his departure. I reflected much on the subject, and decided, on the next morning, the course which I should pursue in regard to Commodore Porter. I arose early, and sent for Commodore Rodgers, and was informed that he had gone to Norfolk; I then sent for Commodore Chauncey, and, after expressing my deep regret that Commodore Porter should have left his station without leave, which was the only question I made in the case, I told him that the subject merited inquiry, and that, as the Secretary had left town, I could not see him until the Secretary returned, nor until I should, on further and more mature consideration, decide what course should be taken in this case. I requested him to see Commodore Porter without delay, and to prevent his calling on me in the interim; but to do it in the most delicate manner that he could; for, having high respect for his services and merit, and a personal regard for him, I wished to take no step which should wound his feelings, which I should not be compelled to do from a high sense of duty to my country, and an earnest desire to support the credit of the navy. An interview between Commodore Chauncey and Commodore Porter took place, whereby an interview between Commodore Porter and me was prevented.

In conversation with Commodore Rodgers, after his return, and with Commodore Chauncey, who made friendly explanations in regard to Commodore Porter's conduct and views, and in consideration also of his having been wounded in the late war, and an intimation that he then suffered from the wound, I thought myself justifiable, especially as I had given a decisive proof of the sentiments which I entertained of his return from his station without leave, to pass the affair over without further notice, and of which I requested them to inform him. He accordingly called afterwards, and was received with kindness. My desire was, that he should return soon to his command; but I do not recollect that anything was said to that effect by me. I presumed that what had already passed would be a sufficient proof of that desire. His remaining, however, so long in the country, gave me concern, especially as we were repeatedly advised that piracy had revived, and was doing much injury to our commerce. I, however, delayed noticing it for some time, under feelings of the kind stated, and in expectation, also, which I continually indulged, that he would soon depart. I at length requested the Secretary to instruct him to resume his station without delay, and to do it in the John Adams, which the Secretary did. To this, I recollect that the commodore gave a reply which was deemed highly objectionable, and respecting which I had great doubt as to the part, regarding the office I then held, which I ought to take. On great consideration, however, I decided to order him immediately to his post, with intention, that being there, and in rule, to decide afterwards what it would be proper to do in the affair. In taking this course, I yielded to feelings that were favorable to him, and in the hope that his conduct at his station, and towards the government, would be such as to permit the whole affair to be adjusted, or rather to be passed over without injury to the service.

According to my recollection, I drew a sketch of the order in question, or so much of it as to give a distinct idea of what I intended; and certain I am that I saw the letter, that of the twenty-first of October last, before it was sent.

The decision was soon taken, after the affair of Foxardo, to recall Commodore Porter, that, being present, he might explain the circumstances and reason of his conduct. I saw the order and approved it. I do not know that Commodore Porter was acquainted with the fact, further than in speaking of the subject to friends, afterwards, I frequently mentioned it, and that I intended to include that with the other orders, and particularly the order of October preceding, in the letter which I wrote to him, after I retired from office, in reply to his already noticed.

5. I never saw any proof of unkind feelings in the Secretary of the Navy towards Commodore Porter, nor have I any reason to believe that he ever acted under the influence of such. I saw, on the contrary, proof of a different disposition in more instances than one. Having, from the considerations above stated, been very attentive to the conduct of this squadron from the beginning, and indeed to the others in other seas, and prescribed the measures to be taken and orders to be given, after due consideration and consultation with those on whom I had a right to call, I was anxious that my own responsibility, in its full extent, should be known in every instance, and especially to those concerned, before I left office; and it was on that principle that I expressed myself so fully to that effect in my letter to Commodore Porter, in March last. It was on that principle that I deemed it proper to deposit in the Department, before I left town, the evidence of that correspondence, consisting, according to my recollection, of his letter to me and a copy of my reply.

1st. To the first interrogatory proposed on the part of Commodore Porter, I answer, that I did authorize Commodore Chauncey to see him, and to prevent his calling on me at the time stated, and for the reasons that are particularly and fully explained in my answer to the 4th interrogatory on the part of the United States.

2d. I took the step for the reasons stated in my reply to the 4th interrogatory, above referred to.

3d. To this interrogatory an answer has also been already given in reply to the 4th interrogatory on the part of the United States.

4th. To this interrogatory an answer has likewise been given in reply to the 4th, referred to above. I have thought it better to give a full and connected explanation of the measures taken in the instances in question, and of the considerations on which I acted, in reply to one interrogatory, which embraced several, than in detail, in reply to each.

5th. When the account of the attack on Foxardo was received, much remark was made on it, and, with others, that of the kind suggested. I am inclined to think that I made it myself; but, in that case, to some friends of Commodore Porter, and rather in a confidential way than otherwise, though certainly under no injunction to that effect. I probably mentioned it to others, in the same spirit, and particularly to the members of the administration, or to some of them. The answers already given to the other interrogatories, and particularly to the 4th, on the part of the United States, and the documents referred to in them, will explain the cause to which such an idea is to be attributed, which, however, was merely incidental and casual. I do not recollect receiving any letter suggesting that idea, nor do I believe that I did, though it is possible that I might.

6th. To this interrogatory an answer has already been given.

7th. To this, also, an answer has been given.

8th. The correspondence was deposited in the Navy Department, as a document relating to my public conduct in an occurrence interesting to others, as well as to the public, to be used only for public purposes, should such present themselves, to make the use thereof proper and necessary. I readily admit that Commodore Porter did not ask the interview for any purpose other than that stated in his reply to my letter; but still I thought it more consistent with the part I had acted in that affair, and with what I owed to him, as well as to others, to decline the interview, to state to him the part I had acted in the concerns in question, and to deposit the evidence thereof, for the purpose stated, in the Department, while I was at Washington.

9th. I had never seen Commodore Porter, after the date of his letter to me of October 26th, nor made to him any communication by letter, and therefore do not know that he was apprised of the particular interest which I had taken, and of the part I had acted, in regard to the letter from the Secretary of the Navy to him, of October last, referred to in this interrogatory. The subject being delicate, and interesting in many views, I never spoke of it but in a guarded manner, unless to friends, and among them some whom I knew to be his friends also, and with a view to produce a good effect in relation to the interests and parties above referred to.

JAMES MONROE.

Virginia, Loudon County, sct.:

This day, James Monroe personally appeared before me, John Bayly, a magistrate of the said county, and made oath that the facts stated in his several answers contained in this sheet marked (3), and two other sheets, one of which is marked (1) and the other (2), are true, to the best of his knowledge and belief.

Given under my hand and seal this 25th day of July, in the year 1825.

J. BAYLY. [L. S.]

No. 1. (No. 26.)

Captain Porter presents his respects to Mr. Monroe, and asks (if agreeable) when he may have the honor to pay his respects to him?

This request would have been made at an early period but for the recent changes in the government, which have no doubt fully occupied the Executive, and but for the hope entertained by Captain Porter that, ere this, he would have been afforded an opportunity of explaining his conduct, and be able to present himself to Mr. Monroe, free from censure. The desire of paying his respects and taking his leave of his late chief magistrate, and, as he has had reason to believe, friend, has overcome all other considerations.

MARCH 10, 1825.

I certify the foregoing to be a true copy from the original in this department.

CHAS. HAYS, Chief Clerk.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 6, 1825.

[This is the letter referred to in my answer to the first interrogatory on the part of the United States.]

JAMES MONROE.

(No. 27.)

WASHINGTON, March 12, 1825.

SIR: I received your note of the 10th in the spirit in which it was written, that of kind feeling for one under whom you have acted for the last eight years, and who has now retired to private life. I should most willingly meet you, and receive the explanations which you are disposed to give, but for reasons which I will frankly communicate to you.

All the orders which were given you, relative to your command in the West Indies, were given by the Secretary of the Navy, at my instance, and under my inspection. They were dictated by a sense of duty to my country, and with no unkind feelings towards you. Your letter of the 26th of October, 1824, to me, from New Castle, was received shortly after its date, and to which I deemed it improper to give any reply. It has become the duty of my successor to examine and decide on that important subject, in all its parts, in the manner which shall appear to him most proper. In this stage, although retired to private life, I do not think that I ought to interfere, or to receive any explanations relative to transactions in which our country is interested, over which another has control, and in which I have no concern.

Holding in high estimation your gallantry and patriotism,

I beg you to be assured of my good wishes for your welfare, and that of your family,

(Signed) JAMES MONROE.

(No. 28.)

MERIDIAN HILL, March 12, 1825.

RESPECTED SIR: I have received your highly esteemed letter of this day, and feel much gratified at the friendly sentiments and assurances it expresses. I can only beg leave to assure you that you will carry with you, in your retirement, the best wishes of a grateful and affectionate heart.

I regret to observe that you are under wrong impressions as to the object of my note. Nothing was further from my wishes or intentions than to make any explanations, or touch on any subject of an unpleasant nature to you. I should have made the request to see you at an earlier period, but for the most scrupulous delicacy, not wishing it for an instant to be believed by any one that I sought protection, or to give the slightest grounds for such belief. I feel confident of the correctness of my conduct throughout, and am satisfied that the Executive will approve it, when I shall have an opportunity of explaining.

My visit to you was intended as one of pure personal respect, and unconnected with any considerations of a selfish nature, only so far as my feelings were concerned; I was not certain whether it would be acceptable, and, desirous of guarding against anything disagreeable to you, I thought it advisable to address you a note.

The circumstances which caused me to address you from New Castle I regret most sincerely, and I do assure you that it would give me more pleasure to learn that I was in error, than to believe that my impressions at the time of writing were correct. The serious charge brought against me, and the consequence of it, I did not think I merited. The very circumstance of claiming your protection, was of itself an evidence that I did not think you actuated by any unfriendly feelings towards me; but I did think you were under wrong impressions, which caused me to enclose you the copy of a letter which I was charged with having neglected to write.

I hope at some future period I shall have an opportunity to assure you, in person, of the high respect and consideration with which I have ever held your exalted character and virtues.

With sentiments of the utmost respect, your obedient servant,

D. PORTER.

MR. MONROE.

I certify the foregoing to be true copies from the original on file in this Department.

CHAS. HAY, Chief Clerk.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 6, 1825.

(No. 29.)

NAVY DEPARTMENT, October 21, 1824.

SIR: Your letter dated the 19th inst. has created surprise. Looking to the good of the service, every attention has been shown to you which your station required, and which could be dictated by a just estimation of your public service.

The command which was given to you, at your earnest request, on the 1st of February, 1823, was a highly important one. Your conduct in discharge of its duties, satisfactory to the President. The interval since you left that station has been interesting, and it is understood that piracy has revived, and is making extensive ravages on our commerce.

Communications have been made to you, to apprise you fully of this fact. The presence, there, of an officer of rank and experience is, of course, necessary. The size of the vessel in which he sails is matter of small moment, and must depend upon circumstances. You are aware of the intention to send the Constellation to that station as soon as she can conveniently be prepared.

Your return to this place without permission, or apprising the Department of a necessity for it, was unexpected; but no complaint has heretofore been made of your remaining here, because it was believed that your health was not perfectly good, and your shoulder lame and painful.

But this obstactle has been removed; and had you earlier apprised the Department that you considered this place within the limits of your station, that the command has ceased to be pleasant to you, and that you were apprehensive of the climate, you would have been relieved, and a successor appointed. But having failed to give this information, and the presence of a commander on the station being now indispensable, you will proceed to it.

When it is convenient to the Department, your wish to be relieved shall be gratified. Upon a reperusal of your orders, you will find that no intimation is given that Thompson's Island alone is to be considered as the station and that you are to remain stationary there, nor that you are to lead in person every expedition fitted out from it.

I purposely abstain from comment upon certain matters in your letter. You will hereafter hear from the Department on this subject.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Com. DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. Naval Forces, West Indies, &c. Present.

I certify the foregoing is a true copy from the original on file in this Department.

CHAS. HAY, Chief Clerk.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 6, 1825.

(No. 30.)

NAVY DEPARTMENT, August 19, 1823.

SIR: In the last paragraph of your letter, dated the 1st inst., by the United States schooner Ferret, you mention that circumstances will, towards the fall, render your return to the United States for a short period necessary; you will please to avail yourself of the time most suitable for this purpose, and return to the United States in the manner most convenient to yourself and least prejudicial to the interests of the service.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) SMITH THOMPSON.

Com. DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. Naval Forces, West Indies, &c.

I certify the above to be a true copy from the records of this Department.

CHAS. HAY, Chief Clerk.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 29, 1825.

(No. 31.)

NAVY DEPARTMENT, September 29, 1824.

MY DEAR SIR: This letter will be handed to you by Commodore Rodgers. The object of his visit to Thompson's Island will be fully communicated to you by him. The various, and in many points contradictory reports respecting the condition of the station, the uncertainty whether you still live, the deepest anxiety for your safety, the desire to furnish speedy relief, and acquire full information respecting the health of the station, and its fitness as a rendezvous during the sickly season, and the fear that, debilitated as you are, you could not secure that information for us, have prompted the wish that Commodore Rodgers should undertake the expedition, and have induced him cheerfully and voluntarily to enter on its performance.

He will find united in it the sacred offices of private friendship and public duty. A report that your health is restored, will give to me individually, and to the nation at large, most sincere gratification.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Capt. DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. Naval Forces, West Indies, Gulf of Mexico.

I do certify the above to be a true copy from the records of this Department.

CHAS. HAY, Chief Clerk.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 28, 1825.

(No. 32.)

Extract of a letter from the Hon. Secretary of the Navy, dated—

SEPTEMBER, 30, 1823.

The uncertainty and anxiety which prevail as to your own health, and the health of the squadron, and a desire to furnish the best assistance and procure information which may be a safe guide on all future occasions, are the inducements to this measure.

The orders of Commodore Rodgers will be communicated to you on his arrival, and you will render all the aid which your health will permit, in accomplishing the object of his visit. It is intended that you shall remain in command of the station or return home, as your health may require and your inclination prompt. Commodore Rodgers will return immediately after he shall have accomplished the object of his visit.

(No. 33.)

Copy of a letter from Com. Isaac Chauncey, acting for the Secretary of the Navy, to Com. Porter, dated October 28, 1823.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, October 28, 1823.

SIR: Your letter of the 27th instant has been received. On your recovery from a dangerous illness, produced by great exposure and much suffering, you will be pleased, sir, to accept my sincere congratulations.

In conducting the movements of the squadron entrusted to your charge, you have displayed that intelligence, promptitude and vigor which effectually arrested the depredations of the freebooters, have afforded security to our trade, and justly entitled you to the unqualified approbation of this Department and to the thanks of your country.

The conduct of the officers and men under your command has been such as might have been expected from the example of their chief; and you will be pleased, sir, to assure them of the consideration in which their services are held, and the high sense entertained of their devotion to a most arduous and dangerous service.

The want of medical aid, of which you so justly complain, will claim the early and special attention of this Department.

If the state of your health will permit, you will take upon yourself the general superintending direction of the equipment of the vessels of your squadron, now at this yard and at Norfolk. Let their commanders report to you their wants, that you may make them known to the Board of Navy Commissioners, who will cause every requisite supply to be furnished.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,
For the Secretary of the Navy,
(Signed) I. CHAUNCEY.

DAVID PORTER, Esq., commanding a Squadron of Ships and Vessels stationed in the West Indies and Gulf of Mexico.

I certify the above to be a true copy from the records of this Department.
CHAS. HAY, Chief Clerk.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 29, 1825.

(No. 34.)

Extract of a letter from Commodore Porter to the honorable Secretary of the Navy, dated—

NOVEMBER 19, 1823.

Should the gradual withdrawal of the small vessels take place, I beg leave to suggest that a frigate, in addition to the two sloops of war now attached to the squadron, is due to the character of our service, to the respectability of our flag in that quarter of the world, and would, by the convenience she would afford to our open boats in the pursuit of pirates, offer the most certain means of keeping them in check.

(No. 35.)

Extract of a letter of instructions from the honorable Secretary of the Navy, dated—

DECEMBER, 1823.

It is the intention of the Department to increase the force under your command as soon as it can be effected. To this end, the frigate Congress will, after her arrival in the United States, be ordered to join you: and, in the course of the spring, one or more sloops of war will be added to those already with you.

(No. 36.)

NAVY DEPARTMENT, May 17, 1824.

SIR: Congress has not, until within a few days, passed an appropriation law for the current year. This will account to you for one or two of the drafts of Purser Thornton not having been honored, and for the delay in preparing the vessel to join you. It was impossible, without funds, to fit out the Hornet or the Porpoise, and to prepare a larger vessel. There will be now as much activity as possible, but it is feared one cannot be prepared in time to reach you before the sickly season commences. It shall however be done if possible.

Upon a call by resolution, the proceedings of the court-martial which tried Lieutenant Kennon have been sent to Congress, and they will be published in a few days.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,
(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Com. DAVID PORTER, Thompson's Island.

(No. 37.)

SEA GULL, Matanzas, May 28, 1824.

SIR: I regret to be under the necessity of informing you that the fever has made its appearance on the island, and that the inability of the acting surgeon's mate in charge of the medical department there to attend to his duty from sickness, renders his return to the north necessary. I have sent another to take his place, but this leaves us deplorably off for medical men.

I purpose removing the principal part of the forces to the north, about the middle of next month, as the only means of guarding against the consequences of a deficiency of surgeons.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

(Signed) D. PORTER.

Honorable SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

I certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original on file in this Department.

CHAS. HAY, Chief Clerk.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 6, 1825.

(No. 38.)

NAVY DEPARTMENT, May 31, 1824.

SIR: Your letter of the 4th of May has been received. The Decoy will be prepared to return to you as speedily as possible. No provision has been made for the repairs of the Grayhound, and it is probable that she will be laid up or sold. When any vessels are ordered home for repairs, they must be reported to the Department, that orders may be issued for the purpose.

The amount of force at this time, on the station, is less than was intended; but the delay in passing the appropriation law has rendered it impossible to send to you either the Hornet or the Porpoise. They will both be dispatched now, as soon as they can be prepared. This delay is the more to be regretted, as the Hornet must either encounter the rainy season, or not go to the coast of Africa, as was originally designed. You have now under your command the John Adams, Hornet, Spark, Porpoise, Shark, Sea Gull, Decoy, and seven small schooners, in all fourteen vessels, exclusive of the barges. I did intend to send a larger vessel than any of them, but the amount of the appropriation and the time it was made, will probably put it out of my power. It shall still, however, be done, if it can be accomplished. I regret the state of your medical aid; you have now eleven medical officers attached to the station; and within ten months past, there have been under your command no less than five surgeons and seventeen surgeons' mates, many of them acting as surgeons and fitted for the office. With such numbers your medical assistance ought not to have been so reduced as you state it to be at present. Neither these nor other officers must be permitted to leave the station for light excuses; if they are, it will be impossible for the Department to keep the station supplied. All that can be done with the numbers for which provision is made by law, will be done. In the meantime, those with you must be retained, unless absolute necessity compels them to leave you.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Com. DAVID PORTER, West Indies.

(No. 39.)

WASHINGTON, June 25, 1824.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that I arrived here yesterday in the Sea Gull, from the coast of Cuba, in nine days, and shall be prepared to return to the West Indies so soon as the season will render it safe to do so, and my health, which requires a respite from the effects of a tropical climate, will admit.

My former communications have apprised you of my intention of removing most of the vessels under my command to the north during the sickly season. Orders have been given by me on the subject, and every arrangement made to give as much protection to our commerce, as the force remaining on the station will admit.

I had purposed sailing from New York, and visiting, in my way out, as heretofore, the windward islands, so soon as I can get a sufficient force together, and leaving a small detachment in the neighborhood of St. Thomas, for the protection of our commerce there, where it was asked for by our merchants when I last visited that place.

The John Adams, it is probable, will require heaving out on her return, which will be in a week or two, which will leave me with only one sloop-of-war.

As the health of Captain Wilkinson required his return, I have left Lieut. Oellers in command at Thompson's Island, with full instructions as to the duties to be performed there; and I have left all necessary orders also for the commanders of such vessels as may arrive during my absence.

The island promises to be healthy this season. I have left about sixty officers and men there, but I am sorry to say I had only a surgeon's mate to leave to attend them during the sickly season.

I have during this season greatly improved the comfort and condition of the island, and thereby lessened that repugnance to remaining there which formerly existed among both officers and men.

I shall proceed to New York in a few days, to hasten the dispatch of the stores for the squadron and island which are preparing there, and which are much required.

If there are any instructions from the Department affecting my various duties, I shall be happy to be furnished with them as early as possible.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

(Signed) DAVID PORTER.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

I certify that the foregoing is a true copy from the original on file in this Department.

CHAS. HAY, Chief Clerk.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 6, 1825.

(No. 40.)

NAVY DEPARTMENT, June 29, 1824.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit to you herewith copies of letters bearing date the 23d of April, 15th, 17th, 24th, and two of the 31st May, 1824, addressed to you at Thompson's Island, which it is presumed you have not received, and to which I beg leave to call your attention.

Should I find, upon further examination, any more which possibly may not have been transmitted in time to reach you, copies shall be immediately furnished.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) CHARLES HAY, for the Secretary of the Navy.

Commodore D. PORTER, commanding West India Squadron. Present.

I certify that the foregoing is a true copy from the original on file in this Department.

CHAS. HAY, Chief Clerk.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 6, 1825.

(No. 41.)

Copy of a letter from Commodore David Porter to the Hon. Secretary of the Navy, dated—

WASHINGTON, August 11, 1824.

SIR: Understanding it to be the intention of the government to give me a ship suited to my rank in the service, I have ordered the John Adams to proceed to the West Indies, and thence to the Gulf of Mexico, for the protection of our commerce, where her services are much wanted. Should a frigate be selected, I beg leave to state that it will be most agreeable to me that there should be no commander appointed to her, as I should wish the particular and personal command to be vested in myself alone.

I also beg leave to observe that a flag or fleet captain to the squadron may be dispensed with, if I can be allowed to select an intelligent lieutenant to relieve me from many of the details of the squadron; for the present the services of Captain Finch are necessary to me, but I shall not want him long, and it is his wish to retire from the situation so soon as I can otherwise provide myself.

I shall be glad to be apprised as early as possible of the ship intended for me, that I may give my personal attention to our outfits.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

(Signed) D. PORTER.

(No. 42.)

Extract of a letter from Charles Hay, Esq., to Captain D. Porter, dated—

GEORGETOWN, D. C., September 11, 1824.

I have heard from the Secretary, who has ordered the Constellation to be fitted for you, and authorized me to tell you so. But as she is not officially ordered to you as yet, I would not interfere with her. However, of this you are the best judge. Your letters about money have been received, and will be submitted to the Secretary on his return; in the meantime, Thornton can supply you with what is necessary. The Secretary is very anxious that you should be out again, with as little delay as possible, and will, no doubt, facilitate your preparatory operations.

Your friend and obedient servant,

(Signed) CHAS. HAY.

Captain D. PORTER, Chester, Pennsylvania.

(No. 43.)

NAVY DEPARTMENT, October 14, 1824.

SIR: It is deemed expedient by the Executive that you proceed as speedily as possible to your station, in the John Adams, that by your presence there the most efficient protection may be afforded to our commerce, and you may be ready to meet any contingencies which occur.

The Constellation will be fitted for sea, and sent to you as speedily as possible.

I enclose, by the order of the President, an extract of a letter lately received from the Island of Cuba; you will consider it confidential, and to be used for your information, so far as you may find it useful.

With the Constellation, directions will be sent for you to proceed to the Island of Hayti, there to acomplish certain objects which will be particularly explained to you, and instructions given.

I enclose a circular letter on the subject of acting appointments, to which I urge your particular attention. No subject has been found to create greater difficulties than acting appointments, and permission to officers to perform duties above the grades in which they are known to the Department.

I also enclose certain directions for the survey of Pensacola, Tampa Bay, Key West, and the Dry Tortugas.

I have also directed to report to you, for the purpose of aiding in the survey, Master Commandant ——— ———, Lieutenant J. W. Sherbourne, Midshipman Lewis M. Goldsborough, and Joseph Bowman. Should you deem the services of any other officers necessary for this purpose, you will inform me of it. You will direct the vessel to be used for this purpose. The Florida will be detained for a few weeks, to make a survey of Charleston harbor, after which, she will be ordered to proceed forthwith to join your command.

I am, respectfully,
(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Com. DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. Squadron, West Indies, &c., Washington.

I certify that the foregoing is a true copy from the original on file in this Department.
CHAS. HAY, Chief Clerk.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 6, 1825.

AN EXPOSITION OF THE FACTS AND CIRCUMSTANCES WHICH JUSTIFIED THE EXPEDITION TO FOXARDO, AND THE CONSEQUENCES THEREOF; TOGETHER WITH THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE COURT OF INQUIRY THEREON.

WASHINGTON, March 1, 1825.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you, that, in obedience to your orders, I have come to this place, and I now await your further directions.

With the greatest respect, your obedient servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

WASHINGTON, March 2, 1825.

SIR: Having this day seen in print several letters from Mr. Thomas Randall and Mr. John Mountain, communicated through the State Department to Congress, and highly injurious to the character of myself and other officers belonging to the West India squadron, I have to request that an inquiry may be instituted, to ascertain how far facts will justify their statements and remarks, and the injurious remarks they have elicited on the floor of Congress.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

WASHINGTON, March 8, 1825.

SIR: The officers named in the enclosed list will be necessary, as witnesses, to enable me to repel, in a suitable manner, the foul charges of Mr. Thomas Randall and Mr. John Mountain, and the injurious insinuations and assertions on the floor of Congress, against myself and the officers under my command.

Understanding that vessels having some of them on board are about sailing, I beg that they may be detained, provided it can be done without injury to the public service.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Captains.—Stephen Cassin, Alex. Dallas, Wm. B. Finch, L. Kearney, T. H. Stevens.

Lieutenants.—C. W. Skinner, J. T. Newton, F. A. Gregory, Silas Duncan, J. P. Zantzinger, ——— Bell, C. Boardman, R. Vorhees, C. R. Stribling, D. G. Farragut, J. G. Baughan, F. A. Thornton, purser.

WASHINGTON, March 16, 1824.

SIR: It is now sixteen days since I had the honor to report to you my arrival here, in obedience to your order of the 27th December, and I have anxiously since awaited your further instructions.

I am aware, sir, of the interruptions the recent changes in government and other circumstances have occasioned to the transactions of public business, and however irksome and uncertain may be my present situation, and whatever anxiety I may feel on the occasion, it is not my wish to press on the Department my own affairs, in preference to those of greater importance. I cannot, however, help requesting that there may be as little delay in the investigation of my conduct, both as regards the affair of Foxardo, and the statements of Mr. Randall and Mr. Mountain, as is consistent with the public interests.

The state of ignorance and uncertainty in which I have been kept, as to the intentions of the government, and the desire of vindicating myself to the government and the public, and relieving myself from a species of suspension and supposed condemnation, must be my apology for now troubling you.

Officers continue to make to me their reports, and to request of me orders. Not knowing whether the Department still considers me in command of the West India squadron, I have been at a loss how to act. Will you be pleased to instruct me on the subject?

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, March 16, 1825.

SIR: It has become my duty to apprise you of the determination of the Executive, that a court of inquiry will be formed, as soon as circumstances will permit, to examine into the occurrence at Foxardo, which was the occasion of your recall, and also to comply with the request contained in your letter of the 8th instant.

It was the intention of the Department, in ordering Captain Warrington to the West Indies, to relieve you from the command of the squadron there.

I am, respectfully, &c.,
(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, U. S. Navy, present.

WASHINGTON, April 13, 1825.

SIR: I hope it will not be considered obtrusive in me to remind you of the extremely unpleasant situation in which your orders of the 27th of December have placed me. You will recollect, no doubt, that they required me to repair to this place, without unnecessary delay, to explain my conduct in relation to the Foxardo affair. From this positive injunction, they deprived me of the opportunity, without taking on myself great responsibility, of obtaining, by personal application, the written testimony necessary in the case; not knowing the cause which influenced you in urging my recall so speedily, and not wishing to have unnecessary delay ascribed to any wish on my part, the day of my arrival here, (the 1st of March) I reported to you my attendance on your further orders. No notice being paid to this report, after an interview had with the President, I again addressed you at his suggestion, on the 16th of the same month, and on the same day I received your letter, apprising me that, by the determination of the Executive, a court of inquiry would be formed to examine into the occurrence at Foxardo, as well as the charges of Mr. Randall, so soon as circumstances will permit.

Since that time I have waited patiently your convenience, regardless of the anxiety and importunity of my friends, not wishing to press my business on you to the exclusion of matters which might now appear to you of more importance to the public interest than the investigation of my conduct in the Foxardo affair, or the charges against myself and others, as contained in Mr. Randall's statements. I must beg leave to observe to you, however, that the manner of my recall proves that, at the time your order of the 27th December was issued, the investigation of the affair which caused it was considered of great national importance, and a note subsequently received from Mr. Monroe not only confirms this belief, but proves that he still thought so, after he had gone out of office. I must also beg leave to observe that, whatever opinion may be entertained now, the punishment to me is none the less on acconnt of the change, if any change has taken place. The affair of Foxardo was the occasion of my recal—the affair of Foxardo was the occasion of my being displaced from my command—it is that affair which now keeps me suspended from the exercise of my official functions—it was that which caused you to pronounce censure on me, to punish and degrade me, before any complaint against me, before trial, and before I was called on for an explanation.

If, sir, opinion is changed; if, by information since received from other quarters, you have been induced to believe that the public interests do not require so much haste in the investigation as you at first supposed, it would seem but just that my own anxieties, and the anxieties of those whose peace of mind I regard, and good opinion I highly respect, should be relieved by some intimation of your intentions with regard to me—that there should be, in fact, some relaxation in the severity of the course adopted towards me.

It is with reluctance that I trouble you with any complaint whatever; but I feel that I should neither do my duty to myself, to what I owe to others, and indeed to the service to which I belong, if, by a longer silence, I gave reason to believe that I acquiesced in a course of conduct towards me, which, when a full investigation takes place, and all the facts are known, few, I think, will acknowledge it founded on justice.

The Executive, it appears, has decided that a court of inquiry shall be ordered to investigate my conduct. Why then deprive me of the opportunity of making my explanation, by delaying the execution of the Executive will? Upwards of six weeks have elapsed since I reported my arrival here, and, as yet, I only know the determination of the Executive.

The time when, the place where, and by whom the investigation is to be made, are unknown to me. No definite period is fixed on for the holding of the court, and I therefore most respectfully ask, what is your determination with respect to me? that I may know what course of conduct it would be proper for me to pursue.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, April 20, 1825.

SIR: Enclosed you will receive a copy of the precept which has been issued for a court to make the inquiry, instituted by the Executive, into your conduct at Foxardo. You will perceive that the same court is also directed to make the inquiry which has been granted at your own request.

In your letter of the 13th instant, which has been received, it created some surprise to find the declaration, that the "positive injunction" in the letter from the Department of the 27th December, 1824, to "proceed, without unnecessary delay, to this place," "deprived you of the opportunity, without taking on yourself great responsibility, of obtaining, by personal application, the written testimony necessary in the case." By referring to that letter, you will find that you are expressly charged to "bring with you those officers whose testimony is necessary, particularly Lieut. Platt; and such written evidence as you may suppose useful" for the "full investigation" which it was declared the importance of the transaction demanded.*

No change has taken place in the views of the Executive, either as to the necessity or character of the investigation, and any delay which has occurred in proceeding with it must be attributed to other causes.

In relation to that part of your letter, in which you say, "the affair at Foxardo was the occasion of my recall; the affair at Foxardo was the occasion of my being displaced from my command; it is that affair which now keeps me suspended from the exercise of my official functions," it is proper to remark, that although that affair was the immediate cause of your recall, yet you are not ignorant that it was the purpose of the Department to recall you from that command, for other reasons, as soon as it was found convenient to substitute a competent officer in your place,† a purpose only prevented by this transaction, which intervened previously to its execution.

No other notice of the style and manner of your letter is deemed necessary, at this time, than to remind you of the relation which subsists between you and the Department.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your most obedient servant,

(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Com. DAVID PORTER, U. S. Navy. Present.

A.

To Isaac Chauncey, Esq., captain in the navy of the United States:

It having been made to appear to the President of the United States that, on or about the fourteenth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-four, David Porter, Esq., a captain in the navy of the United States, then in command of the naval forces of the United States in the West Indies and Gulf of Mexico, did, with a part of the military force under his command, forcibly land upon the Island of Porto Rico, a part of the dominions of his Catholic Majesty the King of Spain, then and still at peace and in amity with the Government of the United States, and did then and there commit acts of hostility within the territories, and against the subjects, of the said King of Spain:

The President of the United States has deemed an inquiry into the conduct of the said David Porter on that occasion, as well as into the causes which led to the same, to be necessary and proper.

And, whereas, certain representations have been made to the Government of the United States in regard to the employment of the naval forces of the United States in the West Indies and Gulf of Mexico, setting forth in substance that, in the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty-four, the said naval forces were not employed in the suppression of piracy in the most effective manner, but were employed in the transportation of specie and of other objects of inferior moment, to the neglect of the public interests; and the said David Porter considering his conduct and character as the commander of said forces to be thereby implicated, has requested of this Department that inquiry be made into the truth of said representations:

The President of the United States, in consideration of the premises, has charged me to convene a court of inquiry for the purpose of examining into the matter aforesaid. You are therefore hereby ordered to proceed to the Navy yard at the city of Washington, on or before the second day of May next, to act as a member of the said court, and to officiate as the president thereof.

Orders are also transmitted to Captain William M. Crane and Captain George C. Reed to appear at the time and place aforesaid, and Richard S. Coxe, Esquire, is also appointed judge advocate, and will report himself to you in that capacity at the time and place aforesaid.

And the said court is hereby required to convene and organize at the said Navy yard at Washington, on the said second day of May, and is authorized and directed to summon before it such persons as may be deemed necessary to give information touching the matters aforesaid; and it is also empowered, authorized and directed, diligently and strictly to inquire into the said matters, to make a statement of the facts in relation to the same as they shall appear to the court, and particularly to examine into and report the causes which led to the conduct of the said David Porter at the Island of Porto Rico, before mentioned, and to ascertain and report whether the naval forces of the United States were employed in the most effective manner in the suppression of piracy, or in objects of inferior moment to the neglect of the public interests; all of which you will transmit to this Department, to be submitted to the President of the United States for his consideration.

---

* Those acquainted with the geography of the West Indies, need not be informed that it requires more time to go from Thompson's Island, where the Secretary's orders found me, to St. Thomas, where Lieut. Platt was, and where the documents were to be obtained, than to come from Thompson's Island to the United States. The public, therefore, will be able to judge whether I should have been justified by the Secretary's orders in obtaining, by personal application, the written testimony necessary in the case. D. P.

† On the 19th of October, 1824, while at Washington, before going to the West Indies, I requested, for various reasons, among others ill health, and apprehension of a West India climate, that the Secretary would order me to be relieved from the command of the squadron. The Secretary, in his reply to this application of the 21st, informs me that if I had made my application earlier I should have been relieved, and a successor appointed, but having failed to do so, and the presence of a commander on the station being indispensable, I was ordered to proceed. "When it is convenient to the Department," (says the Secretary,) "your wish to be relieved shall be gratified." It is to this intimation the Secretary alludes, when he reminds me of the purpose of the Department to recall me. D. P.

And for your so doing, this shall be to you and to all concerned a sufficient warrant.

Given under my hand, and the seal of the Navy Department of the United States, at the city of Washington, this nineteenth day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-five, and of the independence of the United States the forty-ninth.

(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD. [L. S.]

Minutes of the proceedings of a court of inquiry directed to investigate the conduct of David Porter, Esquire, a captain in the navy of the United States, convened at the Navy yard at the city of Washington, this second day of May, in the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty-five, in obedience to the precept of the honorable the Secretary of the Navy, bearing date the 19th day of April, 1825—which is hereunto annexed and marked (A.)

Captain Isaac Chauncey, appointed in and by the said precept as president of said court, and Captains William M. Craine and George C. Reed, members thereof, and Richard S. Coxe, judge advocate, appeared.

Captain David Porter also appeared, and being asked whether he had any objection to offer against either of the members of the court, replied that he had no specific objection to individuals, but he objected to the materials of which the court was composed: and stated further, that he had some remarks to make on the subject, as well as on the precept; that he did not think the court was legally formed. The oath prescribed by law in such case was administered by the judge advocate to the president and members of the court—and the president administered to the judge advocate the oath required by law to be taken by him.

Captain Porter then submitted, and read to the court, a paper containing certain remarks upon the precept by the authority of which the court had been convened, which was annexed to the record, and marked (B.) The room being cleared, the court proceeded maturely to deliberate on the same; after some time it was opened, and the judge advocate informed Captain Porter that he had been instructed to read to him a letter which had been addressed by the judge advocate, by the directions of the court, to the Secretary of the Navy, by which he would be apprised of the course which the court had taken with regard to the paper submitted by him—which letter was read, annexed, and marked (C.)

The court then adjourned till to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

TUESDAY, May 3.

The court met pursuant to adjournment of yesterday. Present: as before.

The judge advocate submitted and read to the court a communication from the honorable the Secretary of the Navy, in answer to the letter yesterday addressed to him, which was annexed to the record and marked (D.)

The judge advocate then submitted and read to the court certified copies from the Navy Department, of certain papers, annexed to the record and marked (Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6.)

Charles T. Platt, a lieutenant in the navy of the United States, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says:

On the 24th October last, as I believe, about 7 o'clock in the morning, I received a communication from Messrs. Cabot, Baily & Co., commercial agents at St. Thomas, informing me that their store had been forcibly entered the preceding night, and robbed of goods to the amount of not less than five thousand dollars. I commanded the Beagle, then at St. Thomas. With this communication I received also a request from Messrs. Cabot & Baily, to assist in recovering the goods. I went on shore and called on them, and there learned from merchants who had been previously robbed at the same place, that they had good reason for supposing that these goods had been taken to Foxardo, or in that neighborhood. I lost no time in getting my vessel ready for sea; took with me a pilot furnished from the shore, and a clerk of Messrs. Cabot & Baily, with a description of the goods that had been stolen. On the evening of the 26th, about 6 o'clock, I anchored with my colors flying in the harbor of Foxardo. It was then so late that the pilot did not think it prudent to go on shore, or was not capable of showing me the way. Early the next morning, (the 27th) a boat came alongside with a message from the captain of the port, who said he would be happy to see me on shore. I inquired whether he was acquainted with the character of the vessel, to which he replied yes: lest he might be mistaken, I directed him to inform the captain of the port it was the United States schooner Beagle, and that I should be on shore as soon as possible. At about half-past six I landed; I was there met by a parcel of ruffians, I could hardly tell what they were. One of them informed me that I could not proceed up to the village. I inquired of him who he was, whether an officer or not; he gave me no satisfaction whatever, but merely repeated that I could not proceed up to the town. I then proceeded on without any interruption whatever; having been advised so to do by some citizens who were there, who informed me these people had no authority to stop me.

Having entered the village, I first went to the captain of the port, having been informed by a gentleman, a citizen of the place, that this was proper. I informed the captain of the port of the object of my visit, and my reasons for appearing in citizen's dress, and after producing the letter addressed to Mr. Campos, he appeared perfectly satisfied with my character, and directed me to call upon the alcalde and inform him. I called on the alcalde, and explained to him my object, and again produced the letter to Mr. Campos. He was perfectly satisfied with my character, and appeared very much pleased that I had taken the precaution to come on shore in citizen's dress. He then stated that he had no doubt he should be able to obtain the goods before night, or ascertain where they were. This conversation was entirely between ourselves, the interpreter only being present—every one else being out of hearing. He said the recovery of the goods would probably be attended with expense. I replied, that if it was necessary to offer a reward for the recovery of the goods, I was authorized to offer one, not to exceed one thousand dollars. I then proposed going round to the different stores, where it was possible these goods might have been deposited, with the police, and examine the goods and see if they corresponded with the samples and descriptions we had. It was supposed that the goods which had been stolen were the only goods of that description in the country. He told me to let that matter rest—to let him manage the affair. He observed, that as I had very properly taken the precaution to come on shore in citizen's clothes, he thought it advisable to let it rest entirely with him; that if I accompanied him it might excite some suspicion. I accordingly went to a public house and took my breakfast. I received a message from the alcalde, requesting me to call at his office. I was then under the impression that he had made some discoveries in respect to the goods that I was in search of. I went over to his office directly; Lieut. Ritchie and the pilot were with me, to see what the result was. I inquired, on my arrival at the office of the alcalde, whether he had sent for me, and for what purpose. To this the captain of the port replied, in the most provoking and insulting manner, that he had sent for me for the purpose of demanding my register. I informed them that I had previously offered to show my commission, my uniform, and my clothes; that I had no register; that a man-of-war carried none. He then told me, that if I did not produce my register at once, he would imprison me. I then requested permission to go on board my vessel, with any officer they might choose to send with me, and that I would satisfy them of the character of my vessel and of myself. I then stated to them, that the insult which I had received from them was of that nature that it could not be overlooked on my part, and that I should make a formal report of it to Commodore Porter; and lest they might deny that they had arrested and imprisoned me, that I should proceed directly on board my vessel and leave the port. I left the office with the design of returning to my vessel, when I was pursued by soldiers, who took me by the collar, arrested, and brought me back. I then considered myself as a prisoner. After detaining me about an hour under charge of the sentry, with Mr. Ritchie and the pilot, they consented to let me send Mr. Bedford, the clerk who had been sent down by Messrs. Cabot & Bailey, on board the vessel for my commission. I sent him on board, and directed him to bring my commission and uniform, though they did not require the latter. Mr. Bedford returned with them. I put on my uniform and showed them my commission, observing that it was a thing which had never been required of me before. After perhaps fifteen minutes' deliberation on the subject, they pronounced the commission a forgery, and me a damned pirate, and ordered me to be confined in the jail. They called it the King's house, and not knowing what that meant, I thought they were about taking me to the most genteel house in the place. So soon as I approached near enough to discover that it was a guard-house, well calculated to produce the yellow fever or plague, I objected to being confined there, and said I would not be, unless they compelled it by force of arms. In about ten minutes they returned me to the quarters from which they had taken me, and placed me under charge of a sentry.

After my return, I directed the interpreter to inquire what their object was—whether they meant to detain me, or what they wanted. The answer was, they would detain me until they heard from St. John's, as I had produced nothing to satisfy them of my character. I informed them, that what I had already shown them was all that it would be in my power to show them after hearing from St. John's. They informed me I had shown nothing to satisfy them that I was ever ordered to that vessel as a lieutenant commandant. I then requested permission to send on board for my orders; it was granted. I sent on board and got them. After producing my orders, they called a council, detained me till about fifteen minutes before sundown, confined. I was then set at liberty, and ordered to go on board my vessel, which I did, laughed and hissed at by every blackguard in the street. In this way I left the village, went on board my vessel, and got under way.

On the 12th of November, I was standing out of the harbor of St. Thomas, and discovered the John Adams with her broad pendant flying, standing into the harbor. As soon as the commodore came to anchor, I went on board, and reported myself to him, and mentioned the circumstances that had led to my visit to Foxardo, and the treatment I met with there. The commodore replied that a written report was necessary. I informed him it should be done directly; that not expecting him so soon, was the cause why it had not already been made out. The commodore further informed me, that if the circumstances of the case would justify my going there as I did, that he would visit Foxardo, and obtain redress for the insult offered to my person, and to the flag of the United States. I referred the commodore to Mr. Cabot and Mr. Furniss, both commercial agents at that place, who would inform him that robberies of the same kind had been before committed, and the goods stolen traced to Foxardo, or the neighborhood. The commodore directed me to go on shore and request Mr. Cabot to come on board, and at the same time get a pilot. I saw Mr. Cabot, who immediately came on board with me. In the morning the pilot came on board the Beagle, and I immediately got under way, and stood out to the Adams, then under way by order of the commodore. I went on board the commodore and delivered my written report. I was then ordered to go ahead, with the pilot on board the Beagle, and make the best of my way to Foxardo. The wind, however, was light, and we were obliged to lie to, off and on during the night. The next morning at daylight I was hailed, and ordered to proceed again ahead. At about 7 o'clock a boat was sent on board from the commodore for the pilot, and I was directed to proceed on again to the south. At eight, signals were made to follow the motions of the commodore, who was standing in to the land. At nine, we came to anchor under the lee of Passage Island, where we remained until twelve at night, when the Grampus, the Beagle, the barges of the Adams, with as many of the officers and men as could be spared from the vessels, got under way, and proceeded towards the harbor of Foxardo. At 8 o'clock in the morning of the 14th we came to anchor, with the Grampus and Beagle, in the harbor of Foxardo. The barges were officered and manned, and about landing. At this time one of them had been sent to attack a fort on an eminence at the beach. Commodore Porter, at the same time, sent by Lieutenant Stribling a flag of truce to the alcalde of the place. At half-past eight we commenced marching up from the landing to the village, which was about a mile and a half distant. We walked it in about fifteen or twenty minutes. After we arrived within about forty rods of the village, in a few minutes we discovered a field-piece ahead, with a number of men with muskets. Commodore Porter ordered us to halt. About fifteen minutes after we discovered a white flag, which was accompanied by Lieutenant Stribling, the alcalde, the captain of the port, and the interpreter. They professed, when they met the commodore, not to know the object of his visit. The commodore informed them they ought to have known that from the tenor of his note—asked them if they had not confined me after knowing that I was an American officer, and why they had done so. The alcalde admitted he had confined me after knowing I was an American officer, but said that he was not to blame, as he had been forced to do so by others. The commodore informed him that he had nothing to do with any other person; that he was the alcalde and chief magistrate of the place, and that he held him responsible for the insult offered to me, and to the flag—that, as he had the power of confining, he certainly had the power of releasing me. The commodore then informed there was no necessity for any altercation—that the time he had allowed had nearly expired—that there was about five or seven minutes remaining—that he required of them a suitable apology, such a one as should be dictated, the refusal of which would compel him to resort to force of arms, which should terminate in the final destruction of the village. They acceded to this, and apologized, in the manner the commodore dictated, to the satisfaction of all present. This being done, we proceeded down to the beach. Refreshments were brought down, and we returned to the vessels and got under weigh.

I neglected mentioning the spiking two nine-pounders which guarded the passage by which we marched up. I do not know that they were loaded. There was a battery on the beach, on the eminence, with two cannon. I saw the Spaniards by them with matches; they were training them upon the vessels. The battery was attacked by a barge, and the Spaniards ran without firing. The other barges landed at almost the same time on the beach, within half a mile of the battery. They did not fire at us at all.

The court then adjourned till half-past ten to-morrow morning.

WEDNESDAY, May 4.

The court met pursuant to the adjournment of yesterday. Present: as before.

The court resumed the examination of Lieutenant Platt:

Question. Was the store of Messrs. Cabot and Baily in the town or Island of St. Thomas?

Answer. The store of Messrs. Cabot & Baily was in the city of St. Thomas, the dock in the rear of the store.

Ques. Were those gentlemen at the time resident merchants at St. Thomas?

Ans. Yes. Those gentlemen were American citizens, residing at St. Thomas.

Ques. Did any communication pass between yourself and the authorities of St. Thomas, in relation to the alleged robbery?

Ans. No. I had no communication with the authorities at St. Thomas. I understood from Mr. Cabot, and subsequently from the governor, that some had passed between them.

Ques. Did you carry any letter or other document from the Governor or other officer of St. Thomas, or any force furnished from that island?

Ans. No. I carried no paper from any official person at St. Thomas, but a private letter from one of the most respectable merchants there, addressed to Mr. Campos, one of the most respectable merchants at Foxardo.

Ques. What orders had you received from Commodore Porter, which you considered as authorizing the steps you took?

Ans. I had received orders to protect our commerce in every manner which was consistent with the rules of the service. I understood myself as authorized to go on shore at Foxardo, and inform the police of the robbery that had been committed, which was the object I had in view.

Ques. Did the messenger from the captain of the port, or the captain of the port himself, intimate, in your first conversation with them, that they knew the vessel then in port to be an American man-of-war?

Ans. Yes. The captain of the port, in my first interview with him, appeared perfectly satisfied of the fact, and took down the name of the vessel, and the names of myself and officers, and our force.

Ques. In your first interview with the captain of the port, or the alcalde, did you request them to act in the recovery of the property of which you were in search, or did you propose to search for and take the property yourself?

Ans. I requested them to act, to search for the goods, not intending to act myself at all. I afterwards proposed going myself with the police, which they objected to as unnecessary.

Ques. Did Commodore Porter know anything of the transaction at Foxardo, previous to your communication to him?

Ans. No. He did not.

Ques. Do you know whether any communications were made to the authorities at Porto Rico, either by yourself or Commodore Porter, prior the landing of the force at Foxardo?

Ans. I know of none.

Ques. In what boat or vessel did Lieut. Stribling go to Foxardo, and what length of time elapsed between his going with the flag of truce and the landing on the beach?

Ans. Lieut. Stribling went down to Foxardo in the Grampus, and landed about the same time that the men did.

Ques. Where did he receive his instructions from the commodore—at Foxardo, or before your arrival there?

Ans. I do not know.

Ques. How many officers and men were landed? How were they armed? What orders were given by the commodore to the landing party, or to those who remained behind?

Ans. I believe that about two hundred officers and men were landed. I do not know what orders were given to those who remained. I was ordered to land with as many men as I could conveniently, without crowding, carry in the boats. The men were armed with muskets, boarding pikes, cutlasses, and pistols. I heard no other orders given than that, after we landed, we were directed by the commodore to fall into line and march up.

Ques. Had any answer been received to the communication made through Lieut. Stribling before the landing of the men and the spiking of the guns in the battery on the beach, and the two nine-pounders between the beach and the town?

Ans. None that I knew of.

Ques. What is the distance between Foxardo and St. Johns?

Ans. I think about forty miles.

Ques. Did the interpreter appear to be an intelligent man, well acquainted with the Spanish and English languages? And do you understand Spanish sufficiently well to know whether he interpreted correctly?

Ans. The interpreter appeared perfectly acquainted with both languages. I understood some things that were said, and my pilot, who understood both languages, told me that he interpreted correctly.

The examination of the witness in chief having been closed, Captain Porter was asked whether he had any questions to propose to the witness; to which he replied that, before proceeding to take any steps in his defence, he had some remarks to submit to the court, which he read and submitted to the court, annexed to the record, and marked (E.)

The room was then cleared, and after some time was opened, when the judge advocate informed Capt. Porter that the court had maturely deliberated upon the paper submitted by him—that after full consideration, the court is of opinion that the matter of the communication, as well as the language in which it is couched, is in several particulars so highly objectionable that, could the court have anticipated its character and contents, it would not have been suffered to be read. The court considered it as highly disrespectful, both to the Secretary of the Navy, and to the court itself. This court cannot submit to hear from any officer animadversions on the conduct, and accusations against the head of the Department, wholly foreign to the investigation in which it is engaged; nor can it, without forfeiting its own self-respect, listen to language so offensive to itself. The court is willing to believe that this objectionable character may be attributed to the hasty manner in which the paper appears to have been drawn up; and that Capt. Porter, on consideration, will himself feel disposed as well to perceive, as to rectify the grounds of objection.

In order, however, to prevent a recurrence of such unpleasant circumstances, the court has ordered, that in future no communication be received unless in writing, and the paper must previously be submitted to the judge advocate for the consideration of the court.

The judge advocate further informed Captain Porter, that the court had likewise directed him to state that when the question was asked him, on the opening of the court, whether he had any objections to make to any member of the court, he was understood to say, distinctly, that he had none; but that he wished to submit to the court "some remarks on the precept by which the court was convened, and the materials of which it was constituted." It was then suggested to him that, as the court had not yet been organized, it could at that time hear nothing from him; but that the proper period would be after the members had been sworn in. This suggestion was made by the judge advocate, and apparently acquiesced in by Captain Porter.

Immediately after the organization of the court, Captain Porter read and submitted to the court the paper which has been annexed to and constitutes part of the record. Conceiving that it contained not a challenge to the court, or a specific exception to any member of the court, but objections applying exclusively to the precept under which it had been convened; and that these objections, if presented to the government, might possibly induce some change in the precept, with which the court had no authority to interfere; feeling, also, that the exceptions which had been urged involved the competency of the major part of the members of the court, a question on which delicacy forbade them to express an opinion when it had not been presented distinctly to their decision, the court determined to pursue the course which was adopted, and of which Captain Porter was immediately apprised.

If, however, Captain Porter did design to raise a question for the decision of the court, as to the legality of the precept under which it is acting, the court has no hesitation in saying that it entertains no doubt upon the subject. Had any doubt existed, the court would have put it in a way to be satisfactorily decided, before proceeding to act under it.

The court is aware that it possesses no power to compel Captain Porter to take any part in this investigation; but it is equally satisfied that his acts can in no degree interfere with the duty of the court to proceed in the investigation, which it has been charged to make by the competent authority.

The court then adjourned till ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

THURSDAY, May 5.

The court met pursuant to the adjournment of yesterday. Present: as before.

Captain Porter stated to the court that on receiving the record it appeared to him that an omission had been made, which he was desirous of having supplied, in stating the proceedings of the first day. He submitted to the court his statement of the remarks which he made before the oath was administered to the members. The court being of opinion that Captain Porter was entitled to have his statement inserted in the record, as containing his view of what transpired, directed it to be inserted. It is in the words following, viz:

"Captain Porter being asked whether he had any objection to offer against either of the members of the court, replied that he had no specific objection to individuals, but he objected to the materials of which the court was composed; and stated further, that he had some remarks to make on the subject as well as on the precept; that he did not think the court was legally formed."

Captain Porter then submitted to the judge advocate, for the consideration of the court, a paper (marked F.) The court was cleared, and after some time was opened. The judge advocate informed Captain Porter that he was instructed by the court to say that the paper had been maturely considered—that it is deemed objectionable from the style of animadversion upon what has transpired, and of instruction as to the future conduct of the court. The court, therefore, will permit Captain Porter to withdraw it. Should he, however, wish it to be inserted on the record in its present shape, it shall be done, accompanied by such remarks as the court conceives it due to themselves to make.

Captain Porter declined to withdraw the paper, and the judge advocate informed him as follows:

The court feels constrained to make some remarks upon the animadversions which Captain Porter has thought himself entitled to pass upon its conduct. The court did understand Captain Porter to waive or decline challenging any of the members of the court, but at the same time to intimate, as an objection which he conceived existed against the organization of the court, that two of the members were his juniors in rank. The court did not, at any time, suppose that this objection had any foundation, either in the letter or spirit of the law. The law is silent on the subject. The only qualification required is that the members of the court should be commissioned officers. The "materials, then, of which this court is constituted," are conceived to be wholly free from any legal objection. Nor is there anything in the spirit of the law which the court has been able to perceive leading to a different conclusion. Every member of this court holds the same commission with Captain Porter; all are captains; one his senior, two his juniors in date of commission. The court, however, is clearly and unhesitatingly of opinion that no law would be violated, either in its letter or spirit, by the appointment of any three commissioned officers to constitute a court of inquiry into the conduct of any officer. Courtesy, and a regard to the feelings of the officer whose actions are to be investigated, will, it is presumed, in all cases prevent the government from selecting officers of a very inferior grade to sit upon an inquiry into the conduct of an officer of elevated rank. But this principle can scarcely be carried to an extent which would apply to a court, every individual of which is known to the American navy. At all events, this is an objection which the court conceived, and still conceives, can be properly decided only by the Executive. This court can in no manner interfere with such a question. In this instance, likewise, it appeared to the court to be so connected with other comments upon the precept as to present itself before the court rather as an animadversion upon the conduct of the Executive in thus organizing the court, than as a challenge formally presenting the question for its decision. Captain Porter seems himself to have so viewed it, for he assigns his reasons for making this court the organ of his communications with the Department.

The court thinks proper further to remark that the single object for which it has been constituted is to inquire into the official conduct of Captain Porter, and to report to the Department the facts which may be proved. The court possesses no power to adjudge Captain Porter innocent or guilty; it has no authority to impose punishment. The duties imposed are enjoined by the competent authority. The interference of Captain Porter in pursuing this investigation, however desirable it may be, as calculated more fully to elicit the truth, is in no manner necessary. The court is competent of itself to perform the duty imposed upon it, and will now proceed to execute that task.

Captain Porter was then asked whether he had any questions to propose to Lieutenant Platt. He declined putting any, and observed he should now take his leave of the court.

REMARK.—However desirable it might have been to myself and others that the investigation asked for by me should proceed; however honorable the result might be to myself and the officers under my command, and however necessary it may be for the reputation of the navy and the nation, I could not consent to defend myself before the court against any charge whatever, until its legality had been decided by competent authority—until I could appear before it on terms of perfect equality with my accusers; until I could be allowed to protect myself in the way which might appear to me most proper, without submitting my defence to the inspection of the judge advocate, who had no right to decide in my case, or to the control of the court, who would thereby have exercised a power not founded on law or justice, and without the risk of undeserved reproof.

For the members who composed the court, individually, no one could have a higher respect than myself, and if a majority senior to me could not be had without injury to the service, I should have been content. But this has not been made apparent, and I owed it to the service as well as myself, that no doubt should remain as to the legality of the principle that the court would have established, that commissioned officers of any class are a sufficient court for the trial of any officer, their rank depending on courtesy alone. The framers of laws rarely permit justice to depend on courtesy, and I doubt the exception in this case. Too much courtesy might permit the guilty to escape; too little, the innocent to suffer. Justice dispensed on this principle is never certain, and seldom satisfactory. In this instance I may with propriety, considering all circumstances, complain that courtesy has not been sufficiently extended; a practical illustration of the effects of which I have had in the censure the court thought itself justifiable in passing on me. But independent of my objections as stated above, on the ground of legality, equality, and the rules of the court, I object to the precept itself, which does not grant me what I asked. If the Secretary of the Navy had thought my request an improper one, he should have refused it; but after he had informed me he would comply with it, he should have granted it to its full extent.

The same principle that induced me to go to Foxardo for the protection of the persons of the officers under my command, induced me to ask for an inquiry to enable me to protect their characters. They acted in both cases in conformity with my orders, and were entitled to my protection, so far as I could protect them. If in both cases I have failed in my object, I have the satisfaction of knowing that the failure is not attributable to any omission on my part.

If the court pursues the investigation, I feel no apprehension for the result, whether I defend myself or not; and if the case should be dismissed by the Department in consequence of my refusal, it will be a sufficient justification of my conduct against the imputation of Messrs. Randall and Mountain, and of members on the floor of Congress, but it will be no acquittal of the officers under my command, against whom similar charges by the same persons have been made.

But however desirable a decision in the case may be, I cannot, either on my own account, or on account of others, purchase the good report of the court at the expense of self-respect and esteem.

I take this occasion to express my surprise that the court should have conceived the idea that I wished to submit the question of its competency to the Secretary of the Navy, as no such wish is expressed by me.

I wished my objections to the precept submitted to the Secretary, and so expressed myself; the question of competency I submitted to the court itself. I beg leave to refer the reader to paper B, wherein he will find I express myself as follows:

"That the court is formed agreeably to the letter of the law I cannot deny; nor could I were it formed of any of the subordinate classes I have mentioned. But whether it is formed according to its spirit and intention, and on principles of strict justice, is the question I beg leave to submit to you."

If the court, from any scruples whatever, declined deciding the question thus presented to it, it appears to me the most proper course would have been to submit it to the decision of the Attorney General of the United States. But it was the duty of the court to decide whether it was or was not competent; the decision as to its belief on the subject, on oath, was all that was required by me, and the question could have been decided by the court as readily, and as well, before as it was after the instructions of the Secretary had been received; that it did not decide in the first instance, is sufficient evidence that doubts then existed as to its legality.

"The single object for which it (the court) has been constituted," has nothing to do with the merits of the question of legality; and although the limitation of its powers, as defined in the precept, might have been of itself a sufficient reason for my not defending myself before it, it is not a sufficient apology for the course it has pursued toward me. The court was not authorized to offer an opinion in the case; the opinion of the President, to whom the subject is to be submitted, cannot be formed without having all the facts before him; and his opinion, I feel confident, will not be governed by any act of the court.

Under all circumstances then, I had nothing to lose, or apprehend, by my withdrawal from the court, and I certainly saved a very useless sacrifice of my feelings, as (except in its deportment towards me while before it,) it could do me neither good or harm. A court more powerless, and yet more calculated to alarm the accused, was perhaps never formed.

The charge, first to be investigated, was exhibited against me by the Secretary of the Navy; the Secretary of the Navy selected my judges, two of whom were junior to me. The judge advocate, who is the primum mobile of all military courts, received his appointment from the Secretary, and is his warm friend and protégé. Under these circumstances, it may readily be imagined I had everything to apprehend, and nothing to hope for, while before the court; and to defend myself under the conditions imposed on me, would have been worse than useless. All that was left for me was to retire from the court, and to lay a statement of the case before the highest tribunal on earth. In doing so I mean no disrespect to the government, to the head of the Department to which I belong, or to the court; I merely exercise a right which is secured to every American citizen; a right which I do not conceive that I forfeited when I became a public servant.

I feel that I have been oppressed, and the privilege of complaining is not denied to the meanest slave.

D. P.

Alexander J. Dallas, a master and commander in the navy of the United States, being produced as a witness and sworn, according to law, deposes and says: I was a master commandant, in command of the John Adams, bearing Commodore Porter's broad pendant. We arrived some time in November, I do not distinctly remember the date, off the town of St. Thomas, in the Island of St. Thomas. On our arrival there, some time I think in the afternoon of the same day, Lieutenant Platt, in company with Mr. Cabot, came on board the John Adams, and made a report to the commodore of some ill-treatment which Lieutenant Platt had received at Foxardo. In consequence of this report, I understood from the commodore that it was his intention to visit Foxardo, and endeavor to obtain an apology from the authorities there for their conduct. On the following morning I was directed to get the John Adams under way, and proceed to Foxardo. In consequence of the lightness of the winds, and the pilot being of opinion that the draft of water of the John Adams was too great to permit her to be taken near the town, I was directed to anchor her under one of the Passage Islands, to get out all my boats, and prepare a hundred and odd men with the officers. After all these preparations were made, the day had so far advanced that we could not have arrived there before night. In consequence of which the commodore directed that we should be ready by one or two in the morning to go on board the schooner Grampus, she and the Beagle being in company. We did so, and the Grampus took our boats in tow. We then proceeded to Foxardo, where we arrived about nine or ten the next morning. On anchoring, we observed on a hill, near the beach, a small battery, in which there appeared to be a number of men, and who it was supposed intended to make a resistance to our anchoring. An order was given by the commodore, that a boat and her crew should dislodge the men from that battery. The boats were then all manned, and we landed. The commodore then directed Lieutenant Crabb, with a portion of the marines, to advance and take a position on the road by which we were to march up to the town. Lieutenant Stribling was then dispatched with a flag and a letter to the authorities of Foxardo. After having formed the men, we were directed to follow on by the road, leaving a guard of marines to protect the boats, under the command of Lieutenant Barton. We then marched to within about twenty or thirty yards of where the marines, under the command of Lieutenant Crabb, were. The commodore directed two guns, which we met with on the road, to be spiked. We remained there until Lieutenant Stribling returned with two officers, who were understood to be the alcalde and the captain of the port. A conversation then took place between the commodore and the alcalde, through the medium of an interpreter; the result of which was an apology to Lieutenant Platt for the ill-treatment he had received on his previous visit. The commodore asked the officers generally if they were satisfied with the apology. Finding they were so, he directed our return. He received, however, an invitation to go himself into the town. He went as far as led us by all the force that was collected—a field piece and sixty or seventy men with arms. After this we returned to the beach, where some rum and refreshments were given to the men. We embarked in the boats, went on board the Grampus, and sailed for the John Adams.

Question. Had you received any information on board the John Adams of Mr. Platt's treatment at Foxardo, previous to his making the report of the transaction to the commodore?

Answer. The account Mr. Platt gave was, I believe, the first we had of the affair.

Ques. Was any communication made to the authorities of Porto Rico, previously to your entering the harbor of Foxardo?

Ans. None that I know of.

Ques. Did Captain Porter consult with any of his officers as to the expedition he projected, or did any of them express any opinion to him on the subject?

Ans. He did not consult with any of them. From the intimacy that subsisted between Commodore Porter and myself, I believe I made some remarks to him as to the consequences that might probably result from it; and I think he replied that his instructions would bear him out in the course he intended to pursue on the occasion. This was a voluntary suggestion by me, not called for by his expressing any wish to consult me.

Ques. What orders did you receive from Captain Porter, previous to or at the time of your landing?

Ans. The only orders that I received were those which I have mentioned, and that I should take care the men were not out of the way, and that they committed no excesses.

Ques. How were the men armed? Were the guns loaded?

Ans. They were armed with muskets, bayonets, cutlasses, pistols, and boarding pikes. The guns were loaded on the beach before we marched up.

Ques. Was any flag or communication sent to the shore before you landed?

Ans. None. Lieut. Stribling landed with us. The boat sent to spike the guns on the hill went previously to our landing.

Ques. Did you advance toward Foxardo before the return of the flag sent by Lieut. Stribling, or did you remain on the beach till his return?

Ans. We advanced before the return of the flag.

Ques. Were the guns spiked before the return of the flag?

Ans. Yes. None were spiked after.

Ques. What orders were given by Commodore Porter to the officers remaining on board the vessels?

Ans. I do not know.

Ques. Were the Grampus and Beagle anchored in such a situation as to enable them to cover the landing?

Ans. The Beagle certainly was; I think the Grampus also.

Ques. Was any opposition offered to your landing, or to your advance to the town?

Ans. None. The impression was, that the force on the hill would, had they been able, have fired on the vessels; but there was no opposition to our landing.

Ques. What time would it have required to communicate from your anchorage with St. John's?

Ans. The distance, I should presume, is about 40 or 50 miles.

Ques. Is not St. John's the seat of government of Porto Rico?

Ans. Yes. The governor of the island resides there.

Horatio N. Crabb, a lieutenant in the marine corps of the United States, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says:

I was commanding officer of marines on board the John Adams, in November last. I landed at Foxardo in the same boat with Lieut. Stribling, and on getting on the beach, an officer informed me that Commodore Porter, who had previously landed, wished to see me. My command was distributed in different boats. On reaching the place on the beach where the commodore was, I was directed by him to form my guard, look for the road to the town, proceed, and take up a favorable position; and at the same time received very particular instructions not to suffer my men to commit any outrages upon the property of the inhabitants along the road, nor to commit any act of hostility myself, unless I met with resistance, or was opposed on my march towards the town. After receiving these instructions, I commenced my march towards the town with from twenty-four to twenty-eight men, armed with muskets. When about half way between the beach and the town, I discovered several persons approaching me, following me with a white flag. I could not at the time distinguish who they were, and continued my march. After a short time, I discovered that the bearer was Lieutenant Stribling, on his way from the beach to the town. I halted till he came up; as he passed me I observed to him that I would escort him into the place. He answered, very well. After proceeding a short distance further, he was met by a number of persons from the town, bearing a white flag also. I was at that time from twenty to thirty yards behind him. Immediately on his reaching the spot where these persons were standing, I observed that Lieutenant Stribling was surrounded by a number of armed men. After some conversation with them, of which I knew nothing, he sent a message to me requesting me not to advance any further. I accordingly halted the men and rested them upon their arms. I was at this time from about 250 to 300 yards from the town, perhaps less; and observed that there was a number of armed men drawn up, as I presumed, to prevent my troops from entering the place. They amounted, perhaps, to about three times as many men as I had, and had a field piece which I presumed was a six-pounder. There was also a number of men mounted on horseback, who were armed with swords. They were at the entrance of the town. I remained in the position I had taken up until the commodore came up with a body of seamen. He halted them some distance in rear of my division, and came himself up to the ground I occupied, and directed me to wheel my men into a position which would face the Spaniards. I did so, and again rested them upon their arms. In the course of perhaps fifteen minutes, Lieutenant Stribling was observed returning, accompanied by the governor of the place and a small number of the inhabitants. I was then directed by Commodore Porter to place my men in a situation that would occupy both sides of the road, and suffer none but those in attendance on the flag to pass me. After this he retired to where the officers were assembled, some distance in the rear of the marines, and there received the governor or alcalde. I know nothing of what occurred there, being at too great a distance to hear. In a short time I observed the governor with Commodore Porter and a number of the officers approaching me. The commodore gave me orders, as he passed, to put the marines in motion and follow him into the town, which I did. After passing the armed Spaniards, I halted upon the outskirts of the place. The commodore observed to me that he had been invited into the place by the governor, and also the men, to take some refreshment after the march; but said, at the same time, that he did not wish to bring all the men in, as he apprehended that some excesses might be committed which would put an end to the peaceable settlement of the business. He, however, told the governor, through the interpreter, that if refreshments were sent to the beach they should be paid for. After that they parted, as I thought on friendly terms, we left the town and returned to the boats. I brought up the rear with the marines, a number of the inhabitants accompanying us down. Refreshments were sent and distributed to the men. We then embarked and returned to the vessels. Commodore Porter, with the marines and the alcalde, entered the outskirts of the place, but none proceeded further.

The court adjourned till to-morrow morning at half-past ten o'clock.

FRIDAY, May 6.

The court met pursuant to the adjournment of yesterday. Present: as before, with the exception of Captain Porter, who was not present.

Lieutenant Platt was again called:

Question. How far is the place, where the John Adams was left at anchor, from Foxardo?

Answer. About twenty-two miles.

Ques. At what hour did you leave the John Adams, and at what hour did you arrive at Foxardo?

Ans. We left the John Adams at midnight, and arrived at half-past seven or half-past eight.

Ques. To what nation does the Island of St. Thomas belong?

Ans. It is a Danish island.

Ques. When you left the John Adams, at what time did you calculate to reach Foxardo?

Ans. The intention of the commodore was to reach Foxardo at sunrise, as he informed me. We were detained by light winds and a calm.

Ques. Were the two nine-pounders taken and spiked by the marines, or by the sailors who came up afterwards? Describe as near as you can their position.

Ans. I was ordered by the commodore to spike them. I informed him I had nothing to spike them with, and Mr. Pendergrast was then ordered to do it. The marines had passed them. They were placed in the road on a causeway, where the road was straight for about one hundred rods, and commanded that part of it. There were no Spaniards there at that time. They had abandoned them, but they had been manned on my first visit to the place. The guns on the hill were, I understood, long eighteen-pounders.

Ques. Were both the Grampus and Beagle anchored in a position to cover the landing?

Ans. The Grampus was anchored off the battery, the Beagle in a situation to cover the landing.

The court adjourned till 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The judge advocate informed the court that he should probably be in possession of more testimony to submit to-morrow.

The court adjourned till to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

SATURDAY, May 7.

The court met pursuant to the adjournment of yesterday. Present: all the members of the court, and the judge advocate.

The judge advocate informed the court that he had received a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, to be submitted to the court; which was read, annexed to the record, and marked.* The accompanying documents were also read, the court reserving all questions as to their competency and credit for future deliberation and decision.

After reading the papers, the court was cleared, and the court proceeded to deliberate upon the papers submitted to it, and after having maturely considered the same, the court was opened, and the judge advocate stated that the court is of opinion that the deposition of Lieut. Barton, dated February 6th, 1825, be annexed to the record, which is accordingly done, and the paper is marked (H.)

In regard to the other documents, the court is of opinion that many of them are not sufficiently authenticated to authorize their reception, without an express and sufficient waiver of all exceptions entered on the record.† That some of them appear to be of a confidential character, and their contents such as ,without affecting this case, ought not to be exposed to the public eye without necessity: and that collectively, they present no facts or views calculated to elucidate the subject submitted to the court. The court, therefore, direct the judge advocate to return them to the Navy Department as irrelevant.

The court adjourned till half-past ten o'clock on Monday morning.

On Monday the court agreed upon their report, and transmitted it to the Department.

MONDAY MORNING, May 9, 1825.

The court met pursuant to the adjournment of Saturday. Present: all the members of the court, the judge advocate, and Captain Porter.

The judge advocate stated to the court that he had no further testimony to submit to the court in reference to the subject into which it was directed to make an investigation; and the other branch of inquiry having been granted at his solicitation.

The court was cleared, and proceeded to deliberate upon the course to be pursued, and after some time the court was opened, and the judge advocate stated that the court had determined to proceed in the business which had already been investigated, and to report to the Department the facts which have been formed in relation to it.

The record of the proceedings of the court having been read, the court was cleared for the purpose of deliberating upon the report to be made to the Department.

(The report here comes in, of which I have no knowledge.)

After the report had been agreed to and signed, the court directed it to be transmitted to the Department, accompanied with a letter, informing the Secretary of the Navy that all the business which was before the court is completed. This being done, the court adjourned till to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

To Captain Isaac Chauncey, president of the court of inquiry now sitting at the Navy yard, Washington:

I have received the letter of the judge advocate, transmitting the proceedings of the court in relation to the landing of a part of the naval forces under the command of Captain David Porter, in the Island of Porto Rico, in November last.

I am also apprised that Captain Porter had entered his protest against the competency of the court, and declined taking further part in its proceedings, and that it has nothing before it.

Circumstances before it, connected with the inquiry into the manner in which naval forces of the United States, under the command of Captain David Porter, were employed in the suppression of piracy, render it expedient that that inquiry should not be defeated, because the officer who requested it does not think proper to pursue it before this court. You are therefore hereby directed to proceed in the inquiry indicated in the precept, according to its terms, notwithstanding the objections taken by Captain Porter. You will inquire into the manner in which the squadron under the command of Captain Porter has been employed during the period of his command, and report to this Department the facts, and whether the said forces have been employed in the suppression of piracy in the most effective manner in which they could be employed, in conformity with the orders and instructions from this Department; or whether they have been engaged in objects of inferior moment, to the injury of the public service.

All which you will transmit to this Department, to be submitted to the President of the United States for his consideration.

Herewith you will receive a list of the witnesses to whom orders have been given to report themselves to the court, and such documents as appear to be connected with the subject of inquiry shall be transmitted as soon as they can be proposed.

---

* Not in my possession. D. P.

† It was the cause of extreme surprise to me, as it was to every bystander, and as I have no doubt it is to the reader, that such a condition for the admission of the documents on the record should have come from the court. If the documents were proper testimony, they ought to have been admitted without any conditions, and if they were not testimony, they ought to have been rejected. As to the character of the documents, whether confidential or otherwise, that was an affair for me to consider, and not for the court. It was one which the court had nothing to do with. The reader having the documents before him, can judge of the propriety of the other point of the objection, to wit: "that collectively they present no facts or views calculated to elucidate the subject submitted to the court."

Should it appear, in the progress of the investigation, that other testimony within the control of the Department will be required, it shall be furnished with as little delay as practicable.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Navy Department of the United States, at the city of [SEAL.] Washington, this tenth day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-five, and of the independence of the United States the forty-ninth.

(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

B.

GENTLEMEN OF THE COURT: Before you proceed to investigate the subject submitted to you, allow me to make a few remarks on the character of the precept which authorizes your forming yourselves into a court, and the nature of the duties which it imposes on you.

As regards the first charge against me, submitted to your investigation, I have nothing at present to say; the Secretary of the Navy having preferred it against me, he has a perfect right to couch it in whatever language may appear to him most proper to obtain the end he has in view. The mere statement of the charge, however forcible the terms, is no proof of my guilt, and it remains for me to oppose to it the proofs I have in my possession, sufficient, I trust, to show that my conduct in landing in a hostile manner on the shores of Porto Rico, was not only justifiable, but praiseworthy.

It is, however, a duty I especially owe to myself, and to others under my command, to notice the manner in which the second subject is submitted to your investigation, to wit, the carrying of specie, &c. You wil lperceive that it is admitted in the precept that the investigation of this subject is ordered at my particular request; and this being the case, it would seem but just that the request should be complied with, according to its terms. My request, as contained in my letter to the Secretary of the Navy of the 2d of March, is in the following words:

"Having this day seen in a print several letters from Mr. Thomas Randall and Mr. John Mountain, communicated through the State Department to Congress, and highly injurious to the character of myself and other officers belonging to the West India squadron, I have to request that an inquiry may be instituted to ascertain how far facts will justify their statements and remarks, and the injurious remarks they have elicited on the floor of Congress."

You will perceive, by a perusal of the precept, that your attention is not directed to the inquiry asked for by me: you find nothing said of the particular documents referred to, or the persons named in my application: you are not directed to inquire how far facts will justify their statements and remarks, and the injurious remarks they have elicited on the floor of Congress. You are, in fact, not directed to extend the inquiry so as to ascertain how far others, as well as myself, were implicated in transactions which, if true, were highly disreputable to all concerned; but you are simply required to ascertain whether the naval force in the West Indies and Gulf of Mexico were employed to the best advantage; whether it was not employed in the transportation of specie, and in other objects of inferior moment, to the neglect of the public interests. I beg you to compare the charge, as it stands in the precept, with my request, and say if you can find the slightest resemblance between them. I am not very particular as to the manner in which this charge has been worded; but as some of the vessels under my command have been "employed in the transportation of specie and (perhaps) in other objects of inferior moment," all of which, I trust, my orders from the Secretary of the Navy made necessary, your decision in the negative or affirmative can, therefore, have no bearing on the innocence or guilt of myself and those under my command.

The question, had it been submitted to you as was intended by me, would have been simply this: has Captain Porter and the officers of the West India squadron basely neglected their duty, and sacrificed the public interests, as charged by Messrs. Randall and Mountain; and do they deserve the strictures which have been passed on them on the floor of Congress?

The question, as it now stands in the precept, may require you to investigate the propriety of the orders issued from the Navy Department, but its decision can have no bearing on the conduct of those who acted in obedience to them. My motive in asking for this inquiry was for the sole purpose of justifying myself, and others under my command, against the charges of Messrs. Randall and Mountain, and the illiberal remarks they gave rise to. I had no wish to pry into the conduct or motives of the Secretary of the Navy, or to implicate him by any investigation touching his official conduct. I have never doubted the propriety of the orders he gave me, nor do I doubt it now; but as the question submitted to you stands, the result must necessarily be a decision as to their propriety; a decision I have never asked for, and with which I have nothing to do. To me it matters little whether the orders I acted under were in conformity with the laws for the suppression of piracy or not; it is only necessary for my justification to show that I acted in strict obedience to the orders I received. Let those who issued them, if there is anything wrong in them, answer for the rest.

Messrs. Randall and Mountain are understood to have said that myself, and others under my command, have neglected the duties which were confided to us, to the discredit of the navy and the nation, to the injury of the property and to the sacrifice of the lives of the citizens of the United States, for the sole purpose of benefiting ourselves by the transportation of specie. If what those gentlemen say of us is true, we are not only unworthy of holding commissions in the navy, but are deserving the severest punishment a court-martial can sentence us to receive: and if we are not guilty, we should not only be pronounced innocent, but our slanderers and calumniators should be exposed to the world as men unworthy of confidence.

It becomes, then, a question of character between them and us. If they prove their charges, they deserve well of their country for exposing us, and we must sink, and deservedly; if we acquit ourselves of them, they will no longer be worthy of consideration.

The question, then, should have been submitted to you in all its bearings, in strict conformity with the language of the request which produced the order for the inquiry, and had this been done you would have been able to have come to a satisfactory conclusion; but confining yourself to the subject as presented to you in the precept before you, there can be no decision touching the points at issue between Messrs. Randall and Mountain, and myself and officers.

I have taken the liberty to make these remarks at this early period, with the hope that you would, by applying to the Secretary of the Navy, obtain a revision or modification of the precept, so as to enable you to reach the object which induced me to ask the inquiry, or at least that such measures might be taken as may seem to you expedient to enable you to effect the purpose which caused me to make the application for an investigation of the truth of the charges.

I beg the court to be persuaded that these remarks and this request originate in no wish to embarras or throw difficulties in the way of the inquiry, but from a sincere desire that the accusers may have every opportunity of proving their charges, and the accused the advantage of rebutting them; that truth may be made known and justice obtained—the only end and object, it is presumed, of the investigation.

It was not my intention to make, under any circumstances whatever, objections to any member whom the Secretary of the Navy might think proper to order on this court, and even now I should waive all objections, was my conduct alone the subject of inquiry; but since the Secretary has chosen, by the same precept, to submit to you charges against me originating with himself, and the investigation of the conduct of myself and others, as asked for by me, it is a duty I owe to others to guard, by every means in my power, against a decision injurious to them.

It has not escaped your observation that there are two members of this court junior to me. This, however, at first sight, may not by many be considered a reasonable ground of objection, as the act for the better government of the navy only requires three commissioned officers and a judge advocate to constitute a court of inquiry; but I think it must be apparent that the intention of the framers of the law was that with the exception of the difference of the numbers which compose them, courts of inquiry should be regulated and governed on the same principles as courts-martial.

A court-martial may consist of from five to thirteen members; but it is required that not more than one-half of the members, if it can be avoided, shall be junior to the officer tried. This rule, no doubt, was intended to prevent the interested feelings of the junior members from operating to the prejudice of the officer to be tried; and the same rule should in justice govern courts of inquiry. Courts of inquiry having the same power to summon witnesses, administer oaths, and punish contempt, it was evidently the design that they should be similarly constituted. By every rule and principle of justice, the accused should be tried by disinterested jurors, or at least a majority of them. Will it be contended that, because the law requires three commissioned officers to constitute a court of inquiry, that three commissioned officers from any of the subordinate classes would be a sufficient court to investigate and report on the conduct of the commander of a squadron? Lieutenants, pursers, chaplains, surgeons, and surgeons' mates, are commissioned officers; but surely it will not be asserted that a sufficient court for the investigation of my conduct could be formed of these classes. It was, therefore, evidently designed that only such commissioned officers as may legally sit on a court-martial can sit on a court of inquiry, and that courts of inquiry should not only be similar in their organization, but also formed of the same materials as courts-martial. With this view of the subject, I feel that I should not do my duty to others, considering the fearful odds I have to contend against, if I did not submit to the court whether, with a majority junior to myself, it can legally proceed to investigate my conduct. That the court is formed agreeably to the letter of the law, I cannot deny, nor could I, were it formed of any of the subordinate classes I have mentioned. But whether it was formed according to its spirit and intention, and on principles of strict justice, is the question I beg leave to submit to you.

C.

NAVY YARD, Washington, May 2, 1825.

SIR: I am instructed by the court of inquiry, convened to investigate the conduct of Captain David Porter, to inform you that the court was this day organized, in pursuance of the precept of the case, and that after the members were duly sworn, Captain Porter read to the court a certain paper herewith transmitted for your consideration. You will perceive that an exception is taken to the court itself, as not composed of competent members. This objection applies to a majority of the court, and they consequently feel a delicacy in determining a question involving their own competency. The court, therefore, has deemed it correct to submit the questions thus raised to your determination, and to adjourn the court for the purpose of obtaining your opinion before proceeding in the investigation.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

(Signed) RICHARD S. COXE, Judge Advocate.

The Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

D.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, May 3, 1825.

SIR: Your letter of yesterday's date, communicating the paper submitted to the court by Captain D. Porter, has been received.

If it was the intention of Captain Porter to present a challenge, or offer a specific legal exception to any member, the proper tribunal for its decision was the court itself—the proper time was, before the members were sworn. If, as is presumed, he designed to complain of the manner in which the court was composed, as unjust or illegal, he ought, before the meeting of the court, to have applied to the Department, which alone possessed the power of affording a remedy. A copy of the precept, stating the names of the officers who were to compose the court, and the objects of inquiry, was furnished to him on the 20th day of April last.

As, however, you have "deemed it correct to submit the question raised" by Captain Porter to "my determination," it is proper to add that the opinion of the Department, as to the legality of constituting the court, with three captains of the same rank with Captain Porter, one being senior and two junior to himself, was necessarily expressed in the very act which created and convened the court. And no argument is discovered in the paper submitted, calculated to change that opinion.

As it is not supposed that the court possesses the power to decide on the form of the precept, the objects for which it should have been convened, or those into which it would be proper to inquire, the reason and design of the comment which is made on the form and words of the precept is not distinctly perceived, and may be totally misapprehended.

If its form seemed incorrect to Captain Porter, or not calculated to meet the objects which he had in asking for an inquiry, the Department, which alone possessed the power to alter the form of the precept, and change the scope of the investigation, ought to have been addressed on the subject.

The President of the United States having thought proper to order an investigation into the transactions at Foxardo, it was the duty of the Department so to frame the precept as to meet that object; and it is believed that the court will find no difficulty in comprehending what is directed on that point.

The inquiry relating to some other parts of the conduct of Captain Porter, while commanding the squadron in the West Indies, was granted at his request, and was intended to be so general as to permit him the utmost latitude in proving what had been his conduct on any particular point which he might select, and showing that he was free from all just cause of accusation, by whomsoever made. If the words be not sufficiently broad to permit such an investigation, they would heretofore have been promptly extended, at his request, and no difficulty will now be made, should he request it, in so directing the court as to accomplish his object. The defect on this point, if one exist, is not perceived. It was not the intention of the Department, at the suggestion or solicitation of Captain Porter, to direct the court to inquire into the conduct of other officers, of whose actions the Department saw no cause to complain; who had not asked for any inquiry; and for whom it was not perceived that he had any authority to demand it; much less was it the intention of the Department, on an inquiry asked by him, to submit to the court the legality or the propriety of the orders given to him. Nor is it believed that the precept can bear any such construction. With this view of the matters contained in the papers submitted, the Department has only to direct that the court, constituted as it is, proceed to make the inquiry directed by the precept.

I am, respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

RICHARD S. COXE, Esq., Judge Advocate of the Naval Court of Inquiry, at the Navy Yard, Washington.

E.

GENTLEMEN OF THE COURT: Before proceeding to the examination of any witnesses in my defence, I must beg leave to enter my protest against the decision of the Secretary of the Navy, as regards the legality of the formation of the court. A question of law and justice, on which the court, either from incompetency or delicacy, are unwilling to come to a decision, should not be decided on by the officer with whom the illegality and injustice complained of is supposed to have originated. A question of the importance of the one submitted to you, I was impressed with a belief at the time of presenting it, would be, and am still of the opinion should be, submitted to the Attorney General of the United States, if the court from any cause was unwilling to take the responsibility on itself. And in order that I may not be supposed to have given my assent to any circumstance which, by any tribunal hereafter, may be supposed to vitiate the legality of your proceedings, I must beg leave to decline taking any part whatever in this investigation until the question I have submitted to you is decided on by competent authority: a question, not originating in any captious disposition on my part to create difficulties, as it would appear from the quotations in the Secretary's letter is supposed to be the case, but from a sincere desire that every proceeding in the case should be conducted according to the strictest principles of law and justice.

If an error, as is intimated, was committed in point of form, in the time taken to state my objection, the court will no doubt recollect that the error did not originate with me. I apprised the members assembled, before its formation, of my intention, and adopted the time suggested to me by the judge advocate. But even if an error had been committed by me, merely in point of form, is it just, considering all circumstances, that the party opposed to me should avail itself of this error to my disadvantage, when no intimation whatever of the error was made to me at any time, either by the court or its law adviser. That I did not apply to the Department before the meeting of the court, to remedy the evil complained of, scarcely needs an explanation; if it does, you have it now in the decision of the Secretary.

I feel it due to myself, in making this protest, to place on the record my reply to the intimation that the precept would have been changed on my application before the meeting of the court. You have already been made acquainted with the language used in my application for the investigation sought for by me; it is therefore unnecessary to repeat it. The Secretary, in what purports to be his reply, dated on the 16th of March, states as follows:

"It has become my duty to apprise you of the determination of the Executive, that a court of inquiry will be formed, as soon as circumstances will permit, to examine into the occurrence at Foxardo, which was the occasion of your recall, and also to comply with the request contained in your letter of the 8th inst."

I must observe that I understood the Secretary to mean, by the letter of the 8th, my letter of the 2d, as I never made any request of him in my letter of that date, relating to any subject submitted to you. Confiding in the assurance of his reply, I was greatly surprised at the wording of the precept, and I must leave you to decide whether, after it had been issued, the court was not the proper medium through which I was bound to communicate with the Secretary. I will further remark that, in the letter accompanying the precept, the Secretary, from some objections to the style of my letter, thought proper to remind me of the relation which subsists between me and the Department; and not willing that offence should in future be taken when none was intended, or to incur a similar reproof, when none was deserved,

I thought it safest on my own account that all my communications should, in future, be made to you, and through you.

NOTE.—The words italicised and marked, were made by the court as disrespectful.

D. P.

F.

WASHINGTON, May 5, 1825.

GENTLEMEN OF THE COURT: Having carefully perused the paper commented on by the court, on account of which it has thought proper to pass censure, and not being able to detect in it a single expression which bears the construction the court has thought proper to place on it, I cannot consent, by any alteration on my part, to admit that by it any disrespect was intended, by me, either to the court or to the head of the Navy Department; and it is the cause of great surprise to me that the court should have entertained such an opinion.

The court having thought proper to underscore, as disrespectful, the word incompetency, as used by me in relation to it, I beg to state distinctly that the word was not used in regard to intellectual incompetency, and in no other sense could it be offensive; but with respect to its legal incompetency, (in the opposite sense in which the court itself applied the word competency) which was supposed to be admitted when the subject was referred to the Secretary for his decision. Delicacy I did not conceive to be the only motive for the course taken by the court, as I did not believe it a sufficient and satisfactory one; being under the impression that it was the duty of every officer to perform the service confided to him, however delicate, provided it be legal.

The declining to make a decision on my first application, and referring the subject to the Secretary of the Navy, was, as I supposed, an admission of the incompetency of the court to decide, or a voluntary relinquishment of its right, if it possessed it,—a right which I am of opinion the court cannot again resume, after the opinion of the Secretary is at its request made known. If the court had the right to decide in the first instance, no delicacy should have prevented its decision; but, relinquishing its right, I am under the impression it cannot resume it to decide now as to its legality, and I cannot acquiesce either in a power to decide, the propriety of the decision it has come to, or the rule it has established with regerd to the course it has thought proper to adopt toward me. If I am not permitted to appear before the court on terms of perfect equality with my accusers, whoever they may be, and to defend myself in the way which may appear to me the most proper, (always observing due respect to the court and the Secretary,) I must in justice to myself decline suffering any defence which may be liable to be weakened by an interposition on the part of this or of any other tribunal.

With this remark, I beg leave to adhere to the determination expressed in the paper on which the court has animadverted with so much, and, I think, with such undeserved severity.

I have the honor to return to the court a copy of the paper commented on, underscored, and marked by it as objectionable; together with a copy as it was submitted by me to the court.

I have the honor to be, with sentiments of the highest respect,

The court's very obedient servant,

D. PORTER.

The President and Members of the Court of Inquiry, now in session.

DOCUMENTS.

No. 1.

U. S. SHIP JOHN ADAMS, Passage Island, November 15, 1824.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that, on my arrival at St. Thomas, I was informed that Lieutenant Commandant Platt, of the United States schooner Beagle, who had visited Foxardo, a town on the east coast of Porto Rico, about two miles from the sea, for the purpose of making inquiries respecting a quantity of dry goods, supposed to have been deposited there by pirates, was, after being recognized as an American officer by the proper authorities, there imprisoned and shamefully treated.

Indignant at the outrages which have been so repeatedly heaped on us by the authorities of Porto Rico, I proceeded to this place, where I left the ship, and taking with me the schooners Grampus and Beagle, and the boats of the John Adams, with Captain Dallas and part of his officers, seamen, and marines, proceeded to the port of Foxardo, where, finding preparations were making to fire on us from the battery on shore, I sent a party of seamen and marines to spike the guns, which was done in a few minutes, as the Spaniards fled on the landing of the party. I then landed with two hundred men, and marched to the town, spiking on the way the guns of a small battery, placed for the defence of a pass on the road, and reached the town in about thirty minutes after landing. I found them prepared for defence, as they had received intimation from St. Thomas of my intention of visiting the place. I halted about pistol shot from their forces drawn up on the outskirts of the town, and sent in a flag, requiring the alcalde or governor, with the captain of the port, the principal offenders, to come to me to make atonement for the outrage, giving them one hour to deliberate. They appeard accordingly, and after begging pardon (in the presence of all the officers) of the officer who had been insulted, and expressing great penitence, I permitted them to return to the town, on their promising to respect all American officers who may visit them hereafter.

We then returned to the vessels and left the harbor, after being at anchor three hours. As we were getting under way, a number of persons appeared on the beach, bearing a white flag, and having with them some bullocks and a number of horses, apparently laden, no doubt a present from the authorities of the place, which they informed me they should send me.

There is no doubt that our persons and our flag will be more respected, hereafter, than they have been by the authorities of Porto Rico.

Every officer and man, on this occasion, conducted themselves in a manner to meet my entire approbation.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. SECRETARY of the Navy.

No. 2.

U. S. SHIP JOHN ADAMS, Thompson's Island, January 1, 1825.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit to you copies of the statements made to me, which induced me to take the step I did, as regards the Spanish authorities at Foxardo.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

No. 3.

U. S. SCHOONER BEAGLE, St. Thomas, November 11, 1824.

SIR: At 10 in the morning of the 26th of October last, I received intelligence that the American consul's store had been forcibly entered on the preceding night, and robbed of goods to the amount of $5,000. With this report, the American consul requested me, provided it would prove consistent with my duties, to sail in quest of those who it was supposed had clandestinely left the harbor, the night preceding, in a small boat, and generally believed by those acquainted in St. Thomas to have proceeded to the port of Foxardo, on the east end of Porto Rico.

I directly gave the necessary orders to prepare for sea. Having received a good pilot on board, I was enabled by noon to proceed in quest of the marauders. Standing along the south side of Crabb Island, discovered a sloop in Settlement Bay, boarded her, and received information of a piratical sloop-rigged boat to the leeward, and had been for some time past infesting the coast. This information induced me to alter my course, and steer for the west end of Crabb Island. At 10 A. M. discovered a sloop beating to windward, and the small, sloop-rigged boat standing from the land. At 10 o'clock 50 min. fired a shot to bring the sloop to; at 10 o'clock 55 min. fired again; she hove about and stood for the land; spoke the sloop—from St. Croix, bound to St. Thomas—made all sail for the sloop boat, which run into —— Bay, and her crew abandoned her. At 11 o'clock 15 min. came to, and took possession of the deserted boat; at 11 o'clock 45 min. made sail and stood for the southeast end of Porto Rico, and at sunset came to in the harbor of Foxardo.

On the morning of the 27th, a creole visited me from shore, who bore an invitation from the commandant to me to visit him. At 7 A. M., in company with Lieut. Ritchie, the pilot, and the consul's clerk, I landed. For our better success, we appeared in the character of citizens. On my reaching the shore, the register of my vessel was demanded; I explained the object of my visit and the policy of appearing in disguise; this, however, proved of no avail; I was not allowed to proceed to Foxardo. Supposing that the person who made these demands had no authority to detain me, I, in company with Lieut. Ritchie, proceeded to the port of Foxardo, and explained, in the most satisfactory manner to the captain of the port, the object of my visit, and produced a private letter from Mr. Cabot, American consul, to a merchant in that place, in relation to the service in which we were engaged. Having observed the necessary forms and ceremonies with regard to the captain of the port, we then waited upon the alcalde, and further acquainted him with our mission, &c., who proffered us every assistance. Having made a few inquiries in some of the retail stores which had an immediate tendency to bring to light any who may have been engaged in this traffic, we received a positive order to repair to the alcalde's house, where we were also received by the captain of the port, who damned us as pirates, and requested of me my register, papers, &c. I stated I possessed no register; I carried no papers, other than my commission, and that of my officers. We were seized as culprits and conveyed to prison. To satisfy them of my real character, of which they pretended they had no positive proof, I consented, though repugnant to my feelings, to have my commission sent me; after its production, they declared it a forgery, and again remanded us to prison, declaring he would not release us until he had heard from St. John's. I then demanded to know what was further required; the reply was, "your appointment as lieutenant commandant of that vessel is what you must produce." I at first hesitated, and would not comply; but not wishing on my part to commit any action which might have a tendency to disturb the harmony existing between the respective governments, I produced my appointment as lieutenant commandant. A council of officers was called with other citizens of the place, who, after having heaped upon us the most shameful outrages, permitted us to depart on board.

I have the honor to be, respectfully, your obedient servant,

(Signed) CHARLES T. PLATT, Lieutenant Commandant U. S. Schooner Beagle.

To Commodore DAVID PORTER, U. S. N.

No. 4.

ST. THOMAS, November 12, 1824.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that the store of Cabot, Baily & Co. was broken open on the night of the 24th ult, and property to a considerable amount stolen; and having strong reasons to believe that the robbery was committed by a gang of thieves who harbor in the Island of Porto Rico, I communicated the same to Captain Platt, of the U. S. schooner Beagle, who very promptly offered to go there in pursuit of them, and started for Foxardo on the morning of the 25th, with a pilot which I furnished him, and a young man from the counting house, with a description of the goods, and a letter of introduction to Mr. Juan Campos from one of the most respectable houses in this place, and well known in that quarter. The manner in which Captain Platt was received and treated has no doubt been communicated to you by him.

I beg leave to enclose a letter from Messrs. Bergeest & Uhlhorn, confirming the facts of the late robberies in this island having, in most instances, been traced to the quarter of Porto Rico where Captain Platt went.

I have the honor to be, sir, your most obedient servant,

STEPHEN CABOT, U. S. V. Consular Agent,

To Commodore DAVID PORTER.

No. 5.

SIR: At the request of our friend, Mr. Stephen Cabot, we beg leave to state to you some facts relative to the robberies lately committed in the island.

Our own store, and, amongst others, those of our neighbors, Messrs. Ellis, Gibson & Co., Jno. Kettell, Esq., Robert Alexander, Esq., Saubot, Joubert & Co., were forcibly broken open, property to a very large amount stolen, and a considerable part of the goods traced to Naguabo, near Foxardo; in consequence of which, and the circumstance that about ten days previous to the robbery committed in the store of Messrs. Cabot, Baily & Co., a gang of desperate thieves made their escape from the prison at the city of Puerto Rico, as also that every search had been made here on shore, as well as in the harbor, and nothing discovered, except that the goods stolen had been carried off by the sea-side, induced us to recommend to those gentlemen sending down a person to Foxardo, as being probably the means of tracing the robbers.

Desirous of assisting our friends, Messrs. Cabot, Baily & Co., in this object, we gave one of their clerks, and who, we understood, was to go down in the U. S. schooner Beagle, a letter of recommendation to our friend, Mr. Juan Campos, in Foxardo, who had on former occasions of the same nature been the means of discovering the property and perpetrators, namely, in the case of Messrs. Ellis, Gibson & Co. and our own.

We have the honor to be, with sentiments of the highest regard, sir,

Your obedient, humble servants,

BERGEEST & UHLHORN.

To Commodore DAVID PORTER.

ST. THOMAS, November 11, 1824.

No. 6.

NAVY DEPATMENT, December 27, 1824.

SIR: Your letter of the 15th November last, relating to the extraordinary transactions at Foxardo, in the Island of Porto Rico, on the — of that month, has been received and considered. It is not intended, at this time, to pronounce an opinion on the propriety of those transactions on your part, but their importance demands for them a full investigation; and you will proceed, without unnecessary delay, to this place, to furnish such explanations as may be required, of everything connected with their cause, origin, progress and termination. For that purpose you will bring with you those officers whose testimony is necessary, particularly Lieut. Platt, and such written evidence as you may suppose useful.

You will return in such convenient vessel as may be best spared from the squadron, and on your leaving the station you will deliver the command to Captain Warrington, with all such papers, instructions and information as may be useful to enable him, in the most effectual manner, to accomplish all the objects for which the vessels now under your command were placed there.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. Naval Forces, West Indies, Gulf of Mexico, &c.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, December 29, 1824.

SIR: I have thought proper to relieve Captain Porter. You will proceed in the Constellation, if ready, if not ready, in the Shark, with all dispatch to Thompson's Island, and if Captain Porter be not there, to such place as you may be induced to believe you will be most likely to find him. If, on your passage to Thompson's Island, you receive information where he is, you are at liberty to change your route, the object being to find him as early as possible

You will deliver the letter directed to him, and, on his leaving the station, receive from him the command of the squadron, with such papers and instructions as he may furnish. You have enclosed copy of the original orders to Captain Porter, dated 1st Feb., 1823, with extracts from others. You will take them for your guide, and follow their directions. It is confidently expected that you will exhibit zeal, caution, and perseverance, in discharge of your duties.

I am, very respectfully,
(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Capt. LEWIS WARRINGTON, Norfolk, Va.

U. S. SHIP JOHN ADAMS, Thompson's Island, January 30, 1825.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your orders of the 17th ult., informing me of your reception of mine of the 15th of Nov. relating to what you have been pleased to term "the extraordinary transactions at Foxardo," and recalling me from my command for a full investigation of my conduct in that affair. Agreeably to your orders, I shall leave this place for Washington "without unnecessary delay," and have taken measures to obtain all the testimony necessary, and such written evidence as I suppose useful; and on my arrival in the United States, shall hold myself ready to justify my conduct in every particular, not only by the laws of nations and of nature, and by highly approved precedent, but, if necessary, by the orders of the Secretary of the Navy.

To use the emphatic language of Mr. Adams, "by all the laws of neutrality and war, as well as of prudence and humanity," I was warranted in chastising and intimidating the authorities of a place who had not only become the allies and protectors of outlaws and pirates, but our active enemies, by the imprisonment and forcible detention of an American officer, while in the performance of his duties. "There will need," continues Mr. Adams, "no citation from printed treatises on international law to prove the correctness of this principle. It is engraved in adamant on the common sense of mankind. No writer upon the laws of nations ever pretended to contradict it; none of any reputation or authority ever omitted to insert it." I am willing, sir, to submit my conduct in this affair to the strictest investigation, and if I cannot fully justify it, I shall cheerfully submit to the severest punishment that can be inflicted; but if it shall appear that the motives which influenced me were founded in patriotism, that the necessity for my conduct really existed, and that "my vindication is written in every page of the law of nations, as well as the first law of nature, self-defence," I shall then hope that atonement will be made for this forcible withdrawal, for an alleged offence, from my command, by restoring me to my former station, and allowing me to retire from it in a manner more honorable to myself and my country, and less injurious to my feelings and character.

This, sir, will be an act of justice that I hope will not be denied to me.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

WASHINGTON, March 1, 1825.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that, in obedience to your orders, I have come to this place, and I now await your further directions.

With great respect, your obedient servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

MARINE BARRACKS, Allenton, Thompson's Island, February 6, 1825.

I, Thomas B. Barton, first lieutenant of marines, in the service of the United States, and commanding the marines on this station, do make the following statement of facts in relation to the proceedings of Commodore David Porter, commander-in-chief of the naval forces of the United States in the West Indies, &c., at Foxardo, in the Island of Porto Rico, in the month of November, 1824:

The United States schooner Grampus, bearing the broad pendant of Commodore Porter, with the U. S. schooner Beagle in company, arrived in the harbor of Foxardo on the 14th of November, 1824, about 8 o'clock, A. M. I was a passenger in the Grampus. Both vessels entered the harbor with the U. S. ensign displayed. We had scarcely let go our anchor, which was done directly opposite a two-gun battery on the summit of a hill, elevated perhaps eighty feet above the level of the ocean, when I perceived twenty or more men in the battery, loading and training the guns in the direction of the Grampus. I soon after received orders through Lieut. Sloat, commandant of the schooner, to be in readiness to command the marine guard attached to her, fourteen in number, and to proceed in the launch, the largest boat of the Grampus, with Lieut. Pendergrast, her first lieutenant. The latter officer received the following orders in substance from Commodore Porter, in my presence: To proceed in the direction of the two-gun battery, directly opposite, and land the men under his command at as little hazard as possible; to take the battery, spike the guns, and destroy the ammunition; and then pursue the direction of the main body, under the command of the commodore in person. Lieutenant Pendergrast was particularly ordered not to fire a gun, unless he met with resistance; and not to permit the men to commit any depredation upon persons or property. We then pulled off from the Grampus, in a direction for the battery, and perceiving that they were training their guns, one to bear on the Grampus, and one on our launch, we made the best of our way to effect a landing in the rear of the fort, which we succeeded in doing in so short a space of time that they could not bring the gun to bear on us, which they were using every exertion to do.

Having succeeded in landing in rear of the battery, we mounted the hill with muskets, pistols and cutlasses, and discovered the works to be that moment deserted by the Spaniards. We took quiet possession, and found two long eighteen-pounders, one of them charged with a cartridge of powder, a round shot, and a cannister filled with grape shot, musket balls and spikes, the gun primed, and a lighted match placed near it. The other gun was partly charged, but was deserted before the loading of her was completed. Agreeably to orders, we spiked the guns with files; and finding one or two charges of powder, and a cannister with grape, musket balls and spikes, alongside one of the guns, the ammunition was destroyed. After having secured the battery conformably to orders, we re-embarked in our launch, and proceeded in the direction of the main body, which had landed near the road leading to the town of Foxardo. After we reached the landing, I was ordered by Commodore Porter to remain with a guard under my command, to protect the boats during his absence with the main body; and I was particularly ordered to permit no man on my guard, upon any consideration, to commit depredations upon the inhabitants or their property; which order was obeyed.

(Signed) THOS. B. BARTON, Lieutenant commanding Marines.

Sworn before me this 7th of February, 1825.

(Signed) JNO. R. MIFFLIN,
Justice of the Peace in and for the county of Monroe, Territory of Florida.

An act to continue in force "An act to protect the commerce of the United States, and punish the crime of piracy," and also to make further provision for punishing the crime of piracy.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That, if any person shall, upon the high seas, or in any open roadstead, or in any haven, basin or bay, or in any river where the sea ebbs and flows, commit the crime of robbery, in or upon any ship or vessel, or upon any of the ship's company of any ship or vessel, or the lading thereof, such person shall be adjudged to be a pirate; and being thereof convicted before the circuit court of the United States for the district into which he shall be brought, or in which he shall be found, shall suffer death. And if any person engaged in any piratical cruise or enterprise, or being of the crew or ship's company of any piratical ship or vessel, shall land from such ship or vessel, and on shore shall commit robbery, such person shall be adjudged a pirate, and on conviction thereof before the circuit court of the United States for the district into which he shall be brought, or in which he shall be found, shall suffer death. Provided, That nothing in this section contained shall be construed to deprive any particular State of its jurisdiction over such offences, when committed within the body of a county, or authorize the courts of the United States to try any such offenders, after conviction or acquittance for the same offence in a State court.

H. CLAY, Speaker of the House of Representatives.
JOHN GAILLARD, President of the Senate pro tempore.

WASHINGTON, May 15, 1820.
Approved: JAMES MONROE.

DEFENCE.

Having been displaced from my command, by order of the Secretary of the Navy, to furnish such explanations as may be required of everything connected with the cause, origin. progress, and termination, of my "transactions" at Foxardo, I must refer to the letters of Lieut. Platt, Mr. S. Cabot, and Mr. Bergeest, for the origin; to my letter to the Governor of Foxardo, and my official report to the Secretary of the Navy, for the progress and termination; and to the following explanation for the cause:

I rest my justification on the laws of nations and of nature, highly approved precedents, and the orders of the Secretary of the Navy.

I shall show, in the order I have placed them, how far I am justified on each of those grounds, and trust that I shall not only fully acquit myself of any charge of wickedness, wantonness, rashness, or indiscretion, but prove that I should have failed in my duty to my country had I not punished, by intimidation or otherwise, the people and government of Foxardo.

It is not, nor can it be, denied, that pirates are considered, by the laws of nations, the enemies of the human race; and this being the case, it is the duty of all nations to put them down. In the case of pirates, then, there are no neutrals; it being the duty of all nations to put them down, all nations are allies against them. In the case of belligerents, where the army of one party enters the territory of a neutral power, the army of the other has a right to follow it there; and the right is strengthened if the pursuing army follow its enemy into the territory of an ally. This is the doctrine contained in my instructions.

Spain, and the dependencies of Spain, are as much bound as any others in the alliance for the suppression of piracy; and if she fails in her obligation, she is responsible for the omission, and must necessarily suffer the inconveniences resulting from the endeavors of others to put down the system, among which are the destruction of fishermen's houses and boats on the coasts of the islands frequented by pirates, the seizure of suspicious vessels and persons, and the alarm and damage done in fresh pursuit.

Of these she has no right to complain, if she makes no effort of her own to put down piracy, and heretofore never has complained, even when considerable efforts of her own have been made. If then, as the ally of Spain, we have a right to land on her shores; and having a right to land there, have a right also to all her "countenance and support;" what follows if the right is denied to us? If, so far from giving us countenance and support, piracy is aided and abetted, an asylum is offered to pirates, and those who land in pursuit are seized and imprisoned, does not the nation, city, town, or people, who thus make common cause with pirates, lose all respect for their own character, forfeit all the respect of others, abandon the advantage of the common alliance, and become, not only the allies of pirates, but our open and active enemies, and justify us treating them as such? As enemies, then, we have the certain and undoubted right to land, pursue, chastise, and intimidate them; and the principle is the same, whether they are the inhabitants of a fishing hut, of a town, a city, a province, or a nation. The magnitude of the object makes no change in the principle; and what is justifiable in one case, is justifiable in the other: territorial immunity is as much invaded and violated by the burning of a hut, as by desolating a province. The punishment in either case, must, of course, depend on circumstances, and the means of him who has it in charge to suppress piracy.

The people and authorities of Foxardo, by the imprisonment of an American officer in pursuit of pirates, lost all respect for their own character, by becoming, not only the allies of pirates, but our open enemies, and of course, were not only not entitled to any respect from me, but laid themselves liable to chastisement, in the event of my means justifying the enterprise which the first law of nature, self-preservation, loudly called on me to undertake, for fear their example should become contagious, and much inconvenience and bloodshed should be the consequence.

The officers under my command have often been employed on duty similar to that of Lieut. Platt, by my order: the orders given by me to them have, in every instance, been in strict conformity with those of the Secretary of the Navy; and they have the same right to my protection in their execution, as I conceive I have to that of the Secretary of the Navy. Without the assurance of this right, where is the officer, let me ask, who would be willing to execute the orders of his superior?

Acting on this principle, which is in accordance with common sense and justice, I undertook the enterprise to chastise and intimidate the authorities of a town, who had forfeited their character as allies to us by becoming the allies of pirates, and our open enemies; as much to prevent a repetition of the offence they had committed, as to assure those under my command that they should receive every countenance, support and protection from me, in the performance of their lawful duties, and by that means encourage them to make laudable efforts to effect the objects for which the expedition to suppress piracy was fitted out. The manner of my performing this duty, I trust, needs no apology; it was done in a way best calculated to prevent an effusion of blood, and to secure the innocent inhabitants from injury; the object was effected in a manner not only to satisfy the officers and men under my command that redress under such injuries was certain, but the people of Foxardo also, and others similarly situated, that numbers and distance were no security to them.

The spiking of their guns was a matter of necessity. Had I not done so, there can be no doubt that some of us would have shared the fate of Lieutenant Cocke, who was killed from the batteries of St. John's, the capital of the same island in which Foxardo is situated, at a time when the character of the expedition and its object were both known to its chief, for which outrage no redress has yet been obtained, and which the strength of the place, and the weakness of the force under my command, prevented my seeking, forcibly, at the time it was committed.

It is almost useless to quote from writers on international law to support the principles I have stated to have guided me in my conduct in relation to the affair of Foxardo; but, having said that I have acted in conformity to the laws of nations, it may be expected that I should by good authority support my assertion.

Vattel is an author frequently quoted, and his authority may be deemed a sufficient guide for one who has all his life been engaged in other pursuits than the study of international law, and has been more frequently placed in emergencies where he has been under the necessity of resorting to the resources of his own mind than afforded the opportunity of referring to books as his guide.

By a reference to book third, chapter six, section ninety-four, of Vattel, it is stated that "every associate of my enemy is indeed himself my enemy; it matters little whether any one makes war on me directly and in his own name, or under the auspices of another; whatever rights war gives me against my principal enemy, the like it gives me against all his associates." On this principle, then, the authorities and people of Foxardo became my enemies by associating with my enemies; and whatever right war gave me against the pirates, it gave me against Foxardo; and having this right, I should have been perfectly justifiable in making good my threat to burn the town if it had not been ransomed by suitable concessions, and a promise on the part of the authorities to pursue in future a different course from the one that caused my visit there.

As the allies of Spain against the common enemy, we had a right to its countenance and support, to the extent of its means, in pursuit of pirates; we had a right, as allies, to cross the territorial boundaries of Spain to pursue them, and in doing so there was no cause for offence on the part of Spain; the object being lawful and usual, resistance, therefore, to the exercise of this right, became an offence on the part of Spain, and an injury to us of which we have a right to complain and to obtain redress.

Vattel, book second, chapter second, section nineteenth, says: "Nothing is more opposite to the duties of humanity, nor more contrary to the society which should be cultivated by nations, than offences or actions which give a just displeasure to others; every nation, therefore, should avoid giving any real offence; I say real, for, should he who manifests a displeasure at our behavior, when we are only using our rights, or fulfilling our duties, he is to blame, not we."

According to Vattel, not only Foxardo, not only Porto Rico, but Spain herself, is answerable for the conduct of her subjects; and, if she fails to restrain their mischievous and base attempts, lays herself liable to the same punishment as those who did the injury, and it is the duty of all nations to unite in treating her as the common enemy of mankind. For years past we have been suffering under the injuries we have received from the people and authorities of Porto Rico, and no redress has been obtained from the mother country;—more perhaps from inability to restrain and control her colonies, than from any want of will on her part to do us justice. Porto Rico, must, therefore, be considered in a measure independent of Spain, so far that Spain cannot, or will not, prevent a repetition of the injuries which have been the subject of complaint from us. We therefore have a right to use the means we have of obtaining redress, or of inflicting punishment on her for injuries, atonement for which is withheld from us; and it is the duty of all nations to unite with us to treat the people of Porto Rico as the enemies of the human race. Vattal, book 2d, ch. 6th, sec. 78: "In short, there is another case, where the nation in general is guilty of the base attempt of its members. This is when, by its manners or the maxims of its government, it accustoms and authorizes its citizens to plunder and use ill foreigners indifferently, or to make inroads into the neighboring countries, &c. Thus the nation of the Usbecks is guilty of all the robberies committed by the individuals of which it is composed. The princes, whose subjects are robbed and massacred, and whose lands are infested by these robbers, may justly punish the entire nation. What do I say?—all nations have a right to enter into a league against such a people, to repress them, and to treat them as the common enemies of the human race."

A nation or people, then, known to be of a base and mischievous character, who have been in the frequent habit of making injurious attempts, such as the Barbary powers, and the people and authorities of Porto Rico, and who, by policy, manners, or maxims of government, encourages, accustoms, and authorizes its citizens to depredate on the property of others, not only justifies reprisal, but authorizes the nations injured by them to provide for their own security by punishing the offender; by inflicting a punishment on him calculated to deter him from like attempts, and deterring others. It has a right to use every honest attempt to prevent evil to itself, even by anticipating the machinations of the people or power engaged in opposition to its interests, and put him out of the condition to injure it.

The following quotation is so full on the subject, that I deem it unnecessary to offer anything more in justification and in support of the principles adopted by myself, except to show that what a nation may do, may be done, and has often been done, by individuals, acting on the presumed wishes of the government to which they belong.

Vattel, book 2d, chap. 4th, sec. 56: "It is safest to prevent the evil when it can be done. A nation has a right to resist an injurious attempt, and to make use of force and every honest means against the power that is actually engaged in opposition to it, and even to anticipate its machinations, always observing not to attack it upon vague and uncertain suspicions, in order to avoid exposing itself to become an unjust aggressor. When the evil is done, the same right of security authorizes the offended to endeavor to obtain a complete reparation, and, if necessary, to employ force for that purpose."

"In short, the offended has a right to provide for his security for the future, and to punish the offender by inflicting on him a pain capable of deterring him afterwards from the like attempts, and of intimidating those who shall be tempted to imitate him. He may even, if necessary, put the aggressor out of the condition to injure him. He makes use of his right in all these measures, when guided by reason; and, if any evil results from it to him who lays him under the necessity of acting thus, he can accuse none but his own injustice."

"If, then, there is anywhere a nation of a restless and mischievous disposition, always ready to injure others, to traverse their designs, and to raise domestic troubles, it is not to be doubted that all have a right to join, in order to repress, chastise, and put it ever after out of its power to injure them."

In book 3d, chap. 15th, sec. 228, Vattel lays it down as a general principle, "That there are occasions when the subject may reasonably suppose the sovereign's will, and act in consequence of his tacit commands." It was this principle that authorized and justified Commodore Dale to commence hostilities against the Tripolitans, in 1801, when it was believed that war was intended by them; neither Commodore Dale nor Captain Sterret, the officer who made the first capture, were censured, but, to the contrary, were highly applauded; and the latter received the thanks of Congress, and a sword, although, at the time, war had not been declared against Tripoli. It was this principle that authorized and justified Commodore Rodgers in blockading the port of Tunis, and forcing the Bey to terms, and afterwards drawing his ships up before the batteries of Tangier, and threatening hostilities to the Emperor of Morocco, in the year 1805. It also authorized and justified Commodore Decatur in threatening hostilities to the Bey of Tunis and the Bashaw of Tripoli, in the year 1815, and forcing them to restore large amounts of money, taken from our citizens. Neither of these officers were censured for conduct which they believed to be in accordance with the wishes of the nation, although the United States had not declared war against those powers.

It is this principle that authorizes and justifies the officers commanding troops on our distant frontiers to commence hostilities against the Indian tribes, without declaration of war on the part of the nation. They act, in all cases, on its presumed wishes, and we know of no instance of censure.

It was this principle that authorized and justified General Jackson, without orders, to take possession of Fort St. Marks, and afterwards Pensacola, and to issue orders for the destruction of the Negro fort, on the Suwannee. The interest of our country, the safety of its citizens, the repose of our frontier, required that he should do so. He acted on the supposed will of the nation; and, so far from being censured, he has been rewarded with the support of the government, and the applause of his country. In not one of the cases cited, it is believed, had the officers any instructions whatever that authorized the act.

In the case of General Jackson, it is expressly stated by Mr. Adams, in his correspondence with Mr. Forsyth, that the occupation of these places in Florida, by General Jackson, "was not by any order received by him from the government to that effect, nor with any view of wresting the province from the possession of Spain, nor in any spirit of hostility to the Spanish government; that it arose from incidents which arose in the prosecution of the war against the Indians; from the imminent danger in which the Fort of St. Mark was of being seized by the Indians themselves; and from the manifestations of hostility to the United States by the Commandant of St. Mark, and the Governor of Pensacola, the proofs of which were made known to General Jackson, and impelled him, from the necessity of self-defence, to the step of which the Spanish government complains."

I shall now proceed to point out the resemblance between General Jackson's case and mine; and doubt not but it will be agreed that the magnitude of the scale of his operation, and the comparative insignificance of mine, do not change the principle; for, should this be the case, I am tenfold criminal in the numerous fishing huts I have destroyed on the coasts of Cuba. For, to say that I am justified in destroying fishing huts for harboring pirates, but not to threaten the destruction of a town for the same offence, while General Jackson, for the same reason, is justified in possessing himself of a province, is preposterous. I have shown before, that the same reasons that justify acting in the one case would jutify acting in the other. That the destruction of the numerous fishing establishments, and the breaking them up, almost entirely, on the coast of Cuba, when suspected of giving shelter to the common enemy, has never been considered a violation of territory, I have proofs, in the acknowledgment of the captain general, a very short time before leaving the West Indies, to account for the transactions at Foxardo; he expresses himself as follows:

"I regret, very sensibly, that you are about to retire from the command of the United States forces in these seas; not only from the able manner in which you have discharged the important duties which have been confided to you, but from the just considerations with which you have always respected the territorial rights of the Island of Cuba. Permit me, sir, to offer my acknowledgments, and to avail myself of this occasion to confirm the assurances of my high consideration and esteem."

I have before shown, that the authorities and people of Foxardo should, in justice, not only be considered as the allies of the pirates, but as our open enemies, did a decision on their conduct rest only on the imprisonment of Lieut. Platt, after his object and character were both made known; but there are proofs in the letter of Mr. Bergeest that on two former occasions, in the case of Messrs. Ellis, Gibson & Co., and that of Messrs. Bergeest & Uhlhorn, the goods were traced to Foxardo, recovered, and the perpetrators detected. Foxardo could therefore be considered only as a piratical rendezvous, and I should have been perfectly justifiable in treating it as such by its total destruction. But not wishing to proceed to such extremities, if atonement for the past and security for the future could be obtained by milder means; and as the enterprise was undertaken, as my whole conduct shows, in no hostility to the Spanish government, nor with a desire to punish the innocent, who must have necessarily suffered by the destruction of the town, I tried amicable, before I resorted to forcible means to obtain the satisfaction which the violence and insult offered to my country, in the person of one of its officers, loudly demanded. "By all the laws of neutrality and war, as well as of prudence and humanity," I was warranted in chastising and intimidating the authorities and people of Foxardo; I was warranted in taking measures to prevent injury to me, and those under my command—seeing that injury was intended—by spiking their guns; and which, as appears by Lieut. Barton's testimony, was not done, or even ordered to be done, until the batteries were manned, and the guns trained on our vessels, (all bearing the American flag,) with evident design of hostility. I was warranted, in fact, in anticipating my enemy.

"There will need (continues Mr. Adams) no citations from printed treatises on international law to prove the correctness of this principle. It is engraven in adamant on the common sense of mankind; no writer upon the law of nations ever pretended to contradict it—none of any reputation or authority ever omitted to insert it."

The manly vindication of General Jackson, in the following quotation, and from the same pen, would alone, in the absence of all instructions, and all other guides and lights on the subject, have satisfied me of the propriety of my conduct:

"He (General Jackson) took possession therefore of Pensacola, and of the Fort Barrancas, as he had done of St. Mark, not in a spirit of hostility to Spain, but as a necessary measure of self-defence, giving notice that they should be restored, whenever Spain should place commanders and a force there, able and willing to fulfill the engagements of Spain towards the United States, of restraining, by force, the Florida Indians from hostilities against their citizens. The President of the United States, to give a signal manifestation of his confidence in the disposition of the King of Spain to perform, with good faith, this indispensable engagement, and to demonstrate to the world that neither the desire of conquest, nor hostility to Spain, had any interest in the councils of the United States, has directed the unconditional restoration to any Spanish officer, duly authorized to receive them, of Pensacola and Barrancas, and that of St. Mark to any Spanish force adequate for its defence against the attack of the savages. But the President will neither inflict punishment nor pass a censure upon General Jackson for that conduct, the motives for which were founded in the purest patriotism, of the necessity for which, he had the most immediate and effectual means of forming a judgment, and the vindication of which is written in every page of the law of nations, as well as in the first law of nature, self-defence. He thinks it, on the contrary, due to the justice which the United States have a right to claim from Spain, and you are accordingly instructed to demand of the Spanish government, that inquiry shall be instituted into the conduct of Don José Masat, Governor of Pensacola, and of Don Francisco C. Luengo, commandant at St. Marks, and a suitable punishment inflicted upon them, for having, in defiance and violation of the engagements of Spain with the United States, aided and assisted these hordes of savages in those very hostilities against the United States which it was their official duty to restrain. This inquiry is due to the characters of those officers themselves, and to the honor of the Spanish government."

"The obligation of Spain to restrain, by force, the Indians of Florida from hostilities against the United States and their citizens, is explicit, is positive, is unqualified. The fact that for a series of years they have received shelter, assistance, supplies, and protection, in the practice of such hostilities, from the Spanish commanders in Florida, is clear and unequivocal. If, as the commanders, both at Pensacola and St. Marks, have alleged, this has been the result of their weakness rather than their will; if they have assisted the Indians against the United States, to avert their hostilities from the province which they had not sufficient force to defend against them, it may serve, in some measure, to exculpate individually those officers; but it must carry demonstration irresistible to the Spanish government, that the right of the United States can as little compound with impotence as with perfidy, and that Spain must immediately make her election either to place a force in Florida adequate to the protection of her engagements, or cede to the United States a province, of which she retains nothing but the nominal possession, but which is, in fact, a direlict open to the occupancy of every enemy, civilized or savage, of the United States, and serving no other earthly purpose than as a post of annoyance to them."

I might here let the matter rest, and it may appear futile in me to give any other reasons or authority for my conduct than those I have cited, but I have still more cogent reasons than any I have yet stated: I acted not only on the supposed wishes of the government and nation at large, loudly and repeatedly expressed, but on orders intended to have met the case, and no doubt would have met it precisely, if it could have even been imagined that so great an outrage could have been committed by the authorities of any place, professing friendship to the United States, as were committed on the person of Mr. Platt. "It cannot be presumed (say my instructions) that the government of any island will afford any protection or countenance to such robbers. It may, on the contrary, confidently be believed that all governments, and particularly those most exposed, will afford all means in their power for their suppression." Yet the government and people of Foxardo did not only afford "protection and countenance" to pirates, and, so far from affording "all means in their power for their suppression," did, to cap the climax of their atrocity, seize, imprison, and insult an American officer, while in the execution of his lawful duties, and while acting in strict conformity with the orders of the government, thus losing all respect for their own character, and forfeiting the respect of others, by identifying themselves and interests with freebooters and outlaws, and making common cause with the enemies of the human race against the civilized world.

If it is asked where I find the wishes and opinions of the nation and the government so often and so loudly expressed as to justify my operations at Foxardo, I answer, in the messages and communications of the Executive to Congress at various times, the acts of Congres for the suppression of piracy, reports of committees and speeches of members of Congress; in the petitions of the mercantile part of the community to Congress and to the Executive, in the public prints, and in the general sentiment of the body of the people.

I could give numerous extracts from the various authorities cited, but their publicity renders it unnecessary that I should do so; I shall, therefore, merely refer to the President's message, and communications of the Secretaries of State and Navy, the acts declaring war against pirates, and making appropriations for their suppression, the reports of the chairmen of committees to whom the subject was referred. It is unnecessary to cite the various petitions and memorials of merchants in our sea ports, the numerous speeches of members of Congress on the occasion, and it would be almost as impossible to enumerate the various newspaper publications on the subject, as it would be to collect the sentiments uttered by our citizens. All unite in deprecating the abominable system, and calling aloud for punishment, not only on the wretches immediately concerned in it, but on their aiders, abettors, and accessories.

The Constitution of the United States prescribes no form for promulgating a declaration of war. The publication of the act for the suppression of piracy was alone sufficient to make known to the world that war had been formally declared by the United States against pirates. A squadron was equipped for the purpose of pursuing them, with the command of which I was honored, and I sailed with the prayers and best wishes of mankind in general. My orders, although drawn up with great care, and which laid down certain general principles as my guide, in my operations against pirates and intercourse with foreign nations, omit to define to me what is piracy. It became, therefore, necessary for me to refer to such authorities as were within my reach at sea for a definition of the term. Although the 10th article of the 8th section of the Constitution empowers Congress to define piracy, the laws of the United States, except in those for the suppression of the slave trade, and the acts of March 3d, 1819, and May 15th, 1820,* are silent on the subject. It became, therefore, necessary to seek for a definition in other authorities, among writers on international law, to which the act of March 3d refers. "Pirates," according to Spilman, "are common sea rovers, without any fixed place of residence; who acknowledge no sovereign and no law, and support themselves by pillage and depredations at sea." This definition is sufficiently clear and precise with regard to pirates who rove the ocean, have no fixed residence, and who acknowledge no sovereign and no law; but it does not describe the pirates whom it was made my duty to seek and encounter.

The following extract from the orders of the Secretary of the Navy endeavors to describe the origin, nature, and character of the system of piracy which I was sent to suppress, differing essentially from Spilman's definition, but still omitting to define what is piracy:

"The system of piracy which has grown up in the West Indies has obviously arisen from the war between Spain and the new governments, her late provinces in this hemisphere, and from the limited force in the islands, and their sparse population, many portions of each being entirely uninhabited and desolate, to which the active authority of the government does not extend. It is understood that establishments have been made by parties of these banditti in those uninhabited parts, to which they carry their plunder and retreat in time of danger."

The stat. 11 and 12, W. III, c. 7, (made perpetual by stat. 6, Geo. I, c. 19,) enacts that "all persons who set forth any pirates, or be assisting to those committing piracy, or that conceal such pirates, or receive any vessels or goods piratically taken, shall be deemed accessory to the piracy, and suffer as principals."

By stat. 8, Geo. I, c. 24, (made perpetual by stat. 2, Geo. II, c. 28,) "the trading with known pirates, or furnishing them with stores and ammunition, or fitting out any vessel for that purpose, or in anywise consulting, combining, confederating, or corresponding with them, shall be deemed piracy."

These authorities are a sufficient definition of the system of piracy as it really exists on the coasts of Porto Rico and of Cuba, and very justly and properly hold the accessories equally guilty with the principal. The authorities of Foxardo were accessories only, so far as we know, but, as such, the laws for suppression of piracy authorize hostilities against them, and the authorities quoted provide a punishment equal to the one inflicted on the principal.

"The crime of piracy, or robbery and depredation on the high seas," (according to Jacobs,) "is an offence against the universal laws of society, (a pirate, therefore, being, according to Coke, hosti humani generis, 3 Inst., 113.) As therefore he has renounced all the benefits of society and government, and has reduced himself afresh to the savage state of nature, by declaring war against all mankind, all mankind must declare war against him; so that every community has a right, by the rule of self-defence, to inflict that punishment upon him which every individual would, in a state of nature, have been otherwise entitled to do for any invasion of his person or personal property."

I have before asserted that it could not be denied that pirates were considered by the laws of nations the enemies of the human race, and that all mankind were allies against them; and the assertion is founded on the above authority, as well as on the orders and instructions under which I have acted, and which have also the laws of nations for their support.

It appears from the authority last quoted that every pirate reduces himself to a state of nature, and defies all laws, and may be punished by any community in the same manner as any individual reduced to a state of nature would have a right to punish him who invaded him or his personal property; or in other words, to punish piracy at discretion, without any regard to law. To show that this, and this alone, is the true meaning of the author, I offer the following quotation from the Lex Mecatoria, 184: "A piracy is attempted on the ocean; if the pirates are overcome, the takers may immediately inflict a punishment by hanging them up at the main yard end, though this is understood when no legal judgment may be obtained; hence, if a ship on a voyage to any part of America or the plantations there, on the discovery of those ports, is attacked by a pirate, but in the attempt the pirate is overcome, the pirates may be forthwith executed without any solemnity of condemnation by the marine law."

I have now shown that the laws of nations and of nature justified my landing at Foxardo, to obtain indemnity for the past and security for the future. I have shown that the approved conduct of those who committed acts of hostility without any declaration of war on the part of the United States, or orders from the government, justified hostilities on my part, even if there had been no declaration of war, or orders to give a sanction to my proceedings. That war having been formally declared and promulgated, and the laws making the accessory equally guilty and punishable with the principal, I should have failed in my duty, having the means, if I had not brought the authorities and the people of Foxardo to punishment, as accessories to the pirates who had taken refuge and received protection there.

* The 3d section of the act of May 15th, 1820, makes the landing and robbery on shore, by the crew of any piratical vessel, an act of piracy, and punishable, as such, with death. See appendix.

I have also shown that as pirates, and of course the accessories of pirates, set at defiance all law, so are they not entitled to its benefits, and "they may be forthwith executed without any solemnity of condemnation by the marine law;" and consequently that I should have been justifiable in using the severest measures that could have been adopted, in punishing the authorities and people of Foxardo. But for the severity of the measures adopted by me, I refer to facts, and shall not say one word in defence of them.

I might stop here with a perfect confidence of an acquittal from the charge of rashness and indiscretion, in the violation of the territorial jurisdiction and immunities of Spain, or of any disposition to offer to that government any indignity or insult; but as, without asking of me explanation, and without complaint from Spain, or from any other quarter, it has been thought proper to anticipate even the resolution and wishes of Mr. Archer, already distinguished for his active hostility towards me in the trial of Lieut. Kennon, by ordering me from my station, to explain the transactions at Foxardo, which it has pleased the Secretary of the Navy to term "extraordinary;" and as I am placed before the world as a condemned and degraded officer, it is a duty I owe to myself, as well as to the service to which I belong, and it may be useful to others to know that in all this "transaction" I was acting in as strict conformity with the letter and spirit of my instructions, as the nature of the case would admit of; that it was provided for as near as could be imagined by the government, and that I have in no instance departed from my instructions, so far as I could by repeated perusal understand them. I have perceived no obscurity in them and I complain of none. I believe I understand them, and the intentions of those who drew them up; and without national or natural law or precedent, I feel a confidence that the responsibility of my conduct at Foxardo, if improper, rests upon these who issued the orders, and not on me who executed them. I do not wish it understood, however, that I dispute the propriety of the orders; to the contrary, I fully concur in the doctrine laid down in them. They are framed on the laws of nations, were drawn up by one well versed in them, and were intended to supply the want of a knowledge of international law on my part. I not only subscribed to that part which authorizes my landing and pursuing pirates on the territory of a foreign power, and denounces those nations so lost to a sense of respect for their own character and interest, and the respect of others, as to refuse to put down piracy, much less to afford them an asylum and a protection; but I subscribed to the yet stronger measures which have been recently recommended by the Executive—nothing short of authority to land, pursue, and hold the authorities of places answerable for the pirates who issue from and resort there—to make them answerable by reprisals on the property of the inhabitants, and to blockade the ports of the islands. Nothing short of these measures can put down the disgraceful system. I also coincide in opinion with the President, that neither the government of Spain, nor the governments of either of the islands, (Porto Rico and Cuba,) can with propriety complain of a resort to either of those measures, or all of them, should they be resorted to, as the United States interpose their aid for the accomplishment of an object, which is of equal importance to Spain and her islands, as well as to us. To the contrary, it should be expected that they will faithfully co-operate in such measures as may be necessary for the accomplishment of this very important object. Whatever measures, however, may be resorted to by the United States, the first thing necessary to secure success, is to protect, countenance, and support the officer employed to execute them; and in any measures which he may adopt requiring energy of action, he ought not to be discouraged and degraded by punishment before complaint, or removed from his command without being allowed the opportunity of explaining his reasons for his conduct. Without such assurance, no officer in his senses would willingly undertake the delicate duties which I have been performing; and if compelled, would, from his apprehensions of sharing my fate, scarcely meet the expectations of the Government and people of the United States. The discouraging circumstance of my removal for the offence of landing on Porto Rico, and punishing the accessories of pirates, the authorities of Foxardo, may have a much more important effect in retarding the suppression of piracy than is at present apprehended. So long as the governors and people of the small towns of Porto Rico and Cuba are satisfied that they may imprison us with impunity, and that punishment certainly follows any attempt on our part to obtain redress and security to our persons, so long the suppression of piracy is impossible; and he who on those terms is willing to undertake it, loses sight of his own respectability, and of the respectability of his nation and flag.

I have satisfactorily shown that, by the laws of nations, I had a right to land on the shores of Porto Rico, in pursuit of my enemy. I have shown that, against the enemy, in pursuit of whom I was authorized to land, war had been formally declared by my country. I have shown that the allies, aiders, abettors, &c., of this enemy were, by the laws of nations, and of England, and by mercantile laws, also my enemies, and liable to the same punishment as their principals. I have in fact, shown that, by the laws of nations alone, I was perfectly justified in landing and chastising, even to hanging, the authorities of Foxardo. I have further shown that, without even the formality of a declaration of war, and without even being ordered by their government, but merely on their own will and sense of right, other officers, under similar circumstances, have invaded foreign territory, and committed acts of war, and their motives being good, their conduct was approved of, on their own representation of it. I have now to show that, besides national and civil law, open declaration of war and precedent, to support me, I have orders to pass the territorial boundary of a foreign nation, in pursuit of pirates, or those whom I have just cause to suspect of being such, to seize and bring them to justice; and, in the event of the local authorities refusing to prosecute such persons, I am then ordered to take them from such territory, on board the vessels under my command. The orders are full and explicit, and, in the absence of other justifying circumstances, I should be willing to rest the defence of my conduct on them alone. The following are the orders, alluded to, dated Feb. 1st, 1823:

[Extract.]

SIR: You have been appointed to the command of a squadron, fitted out under an act of Congress, of the 20th of December last, to cruise in the West India seas, and Gulf of Mexico, for the purpose of repressing piracy, and affording effectual protection to the citizens and commerce of the United States. Your attention will also be extended to the suppression of the slave trade, according to the provisions of the several acts of Congress on that subject; copies of which, and the instructions heretofore given to our naval commanders thereon, are herewith sent to you. While it is your duty to protect our commerce against all unlawful interruptions, and to guard the rights both of person and property of the citizens of the United States, wherever it shall become necessary, you will observe the utmost caution not to encroach upon the rights of others; and should you, at any time, be brought into discussion or collision with any foreign power, in relation to such rights, it will be expedient and proper that the same should be conducted with as much moderation and forbearance as is consistent with the honor of your country, and the just claims of its citizens.

Should you, in your cruise, fall in with any foreign naval force engaged in the suppression of piracy, it is desirable that harmony and a good understanding should be cultivated between you; and you will do everything on your part, that accords with the honor of the American flag, to promote this object.

So soon as the vessels at Norfolk shall be ready for sea, you will proceed to the West Indies by such route as you shall judge best, for the purpose of effecting the object of your cruise. You will establish at Thompson's Island, usually called Key West, a depot, and land the ordnance and marines, to protect the stores and provisions. If, however, you shall find any important objection to this place, and a more suitable and convenient one can be found, you are at liberty to select it as a depot.

You will announce your arrival and object to the authorities, civil and military, of the Island of Cuba, and endeavor to obtain, as far as shall be practicable, their co-operation, or at least their favorable and friendly support, giving them the most unequivocal assurance that your sole object is the destruction of pirates.

The system of piracy which has grown up in the West Indies has obviously arisen from the war between Spain and the new governments, her late provinces in this hemisphere, and from the limited force in the islands, and their sparse population, many portions of each being entirely uninhabited and desolate, to which the active authority of the government does not extend. It is understood that establishments have been made by parties of these banditti in those uninhabited parts, to which they carry their plunder, and retreat in time of danger. It cannot be presumed that the government of any island will afford any protection or countenance to such robbers. It may, on the contrary, confidently be believed that all governments, and particularly those most exposed, will afford all means in their power for their suppression. Pirates are considered by the laws of nations the enemies of the human race. It is the duty of all nations to put them down; and none who respect their own character or interest will refuse to do it, much less afford them an asylum and protection. The nation that makes the greatest exertions to suppress such banditti has the greatest merit. In making such exertions, it has a right to the aid of every other power to the extent of its means, and to the enjoyment, under its sanction, of all its rights in the pursuit of the object. In the case of belligerents, where the army of one party enters the territory of a neutral power, the army of the other has a right to follow it there.

In the case of pirates, the right of the armed force of one power, to follow them into the territory of another, is more complete. In regard to pirates, there is no neutral party; they being the enemies of the human race, all nations are parties against them, and may be considered as allies. The object and intention of our government is to respect the feelings as well as the rights of others, both in substance and in form, in all the measures which may be adopted to accomplish the end in view. Should, therefore, the crews of any vessels which you have seen engaged in acts of piracy, or which you have just cause to suspect of being of that character, retreat into the ports, harbors, or settled parts of the islands, you may enter, in pursuit of them, such ports, harbors, and settled parts of the country, for the purpose of aiding the local authorities or people, as the case may be, to seize and bring the offenders to justice, previously giving notice that this is your sole object. Where a government exists and is felt, you will, in all instances, respect the local authorities, and only act in aid of, and co-operation with them; it being the exclusive purpose of the Government of the United States to suppress piracy, an object in which all nations are equally interested; and, in the accomplishment of which, the Spanish authorities and people will, it is presumed, cordially co-operate with you. If, in the pursuit of pirates found at sea, they shall retreat into the unsettled parts of the islands or foreign territory, you are at liberty to pursue them so long only as there is a reasonable prospect of being able to apprehend them, and in no case are you at liberty to pursue and apprehend any one after having been forbidden so to do by competent authority of the local government. And should you, on such pursuit, apprehend any pirates upon land, you will deliver them over to the proper authority, to be dealt with according to law, and you will furnish such evidence as shall be in your power, to prove the offence alleged against them. Should the local authorities refuse to receive and prosecute such persons, so apprehended, on your furnishing them with reasonable evidence of their guilt, you will then keep them safely and securely on board some of the vessels under your command, and report, without delay, to this Department, the particular circumstances of such cases.

I think, after an attentive perusal of the foregoing orders and instructions, no one will accuse me of having gone beyond the authority given to me, by intimidating the authorities and inhabitants of a town which, from being the rendezvous of pirates and robbers, and from the course taken by the people and authorities to defeat the object of those sent in search of them, truly deserve the name of piratical.

I am ordered to protect not only the property but the persons of our citizens. Will it be denied that Lieut. Platt and the other officers under my command are American citizens, and entitled to my protection? And how could I have protected them had I overlooked the conduct of the Foxardians?

Difficulties were apprehended by the government in the performance of the duties confided to me, and in any collision with foreign powers, I am instructed to conduct myself with as much moderation and forbearance as is consistent with the honor of my country, and the just claims of its citizens.

The violence and insult offered to my country, in the person of Mr. Platt, it was made my duty to notice, and in the performance of this duty, I did conduct myself with the greatest moderation and forbearance: the guns of the battery were not spiked, until self-preservation made it necessary for me to spike them; and so soon as the apology of the authorities of Foxardo was received, and assurance of respect and protection for the future were given, I retired. No complaints of violence of proceeding have been offered against me by the Spaniards—a sure evidence that they had no cause of complaint, even if I had no testimony to offer in my favor; but as to the moderation of my conduct, and the precautions taken by me to preserve it in others, the testimony is ample.

In the former part of these remarks, I have touched on the other parts of my instructions; I deem it therefore unnecessary to make any further comments; they are before the reader, and he can judge whether I have transcended them or not, and whether I should not have failed in my duty, had I not pursued the course I did at Foxardo.

I have as yet said nothing as to my motives. The motives of General Jackson, it is said, were founded in the "purest patriotism;" and it is presumed, the motives of the other officers I have cited were equally pure, or their conduct would not have been approved; how their motives were ascertained, except from their conduct and assurance, I do not know. On my own part, I offer no assurances, but leave every one to judge of my motives by my conduct alone. Had my motives been bad or mischievous, I should have proceeded directly to hostilities, without giving notice to the authorities at Foxardo, and allowing them time to choose between the two alternatives offered them; and I should not have taken the precaution I did to guard the persons and property of the inhabitants of Porto Rico from injury. Had, in fact, my motives been bad, I should have insisted on severer terms than those I exacted; and I should not have retired immediately after the concessions and assurances were made, but should have remained there, to enjoy the intimidated, humble and degraded condition of the authorities and the people.

That my motives were disinterested, is certain from the circumstances of my confining myself to the single object of protection to the persons of our citizens. I had nothing personally to hope for or to gain by securing their safety; and I had certainly much to lose in making the attempt, for I placed my life at hazard.

If I have failed in justifying myself, I trust that the failure will be ascribed to the peculiarly delicate duties which have been confided to me, involving nice and intricate questions of national rights, and a zealous desire to act fully up to the wishes of the government, and not from a wish to act in opposition to its views, or to infringe on the territorial rights or immunities of others. Should there appear the slighest evidence of my having, for a moment, willfully disregarded what was due to my own country, and the respect due to the government of Spain, I shall submit with resignation and cheerfulness to the severest punishment that can be inflicted on me, if it even extends to depriving me of my commission, which I should then be unworthy of bearing.

For merely doing my duty, I have never asked nor expected any reward, beyond the approbation of my country; and if it should appear that I have, in this instance, done no more than my duty, I confidently hope and expect that I shall escape all punishment, beyond what I have already felt.

I have stated all the grounds, which, in my opinion, justified my undertaking the expedition to Foxardo. I acted on letters of an official character, already referred to, and statements which I had no doubt could be relied on. I acted on what I believed a fair construction of the laws of nations, the intention of those who framed my orders, and the public voice. I did not think it necessary to go through the formality of collecting evidence on oath, to justify me in the attempt I was about making to secure in future our officers from insult. Had I done so, my object would have been defeated in the time that would have elapsed, and the alarm that would have been excited by an inquiry which could not have been kept secret.

Promptness was necessary, and I felt satisfied that the letters which I already possessed were a sufficient justification for my proceedings.

The following documents, which have been rejected by the court, and which I do not now offer in vindication of my conduct, but in confirmation of the letters of Lieutenant Platt, Mr. Cabot, and Mr. Bergeest, are so full on the subject of the robberies and piratical depredations from Foxardo, and the piratical character of the authorities and people of that part of Porto Rico, that I deem it unnecessary to make any comment on them. The complicated system of villany they unfold is disgraceful to the nation to which they belong, and a continuation of it will be disgraceful to the rest of the world, and particularly to those nations most exposed to their depredations. The pirates of Cuba, of Algiers, Tunis, and Tripoli, offer no parallel.

REJECTED DOCUMENTS.

ST. THOMAS, February 16, 1825.

Captain David Porter, U. S. Navy:

SIR: Agreeably to your request, we have collected and put into the hands of Lieutenant Commandant Platt, all the testimony regarding the various depredations which have been committed upon this place by the inhabitants of Foxardo and its vicinity, which the present unsettled state of this place will permit from the unfortunate fire. We will now repeat what our Mr. Cabot had the honor of verbally acquainting you, that our store was broken open and robbed of a considerable amount of valuable property, on the night of the 24th October last, all of which belonged to the citizens of the United States. Being fully convinced who the perpetrators of this act were, and the course our goods had taken, from the well known character of the inhabitants of Foxardo, and the facilities believed to be rendered by the government of that place, we requested Lieutenant Commandant Platt to aid us in the recovery, which he very generously consented to. The circumstances of his reception and treatment at that place you will receive from Lieutenant Platt. We would now add, that about ten days since we received information which may be relied upon, that John Compis, of that place, a man whose wealth gives him consequence, and even the then alcalde of the place, from interested motives, or otherwise, forbore to put in force any claim against him, was the actual receiver of our goods, and that he, at the time Lieutenant Platt was there, had them in possession. It will be recollected that this said Compis is the man to whom our clerk was introduced by Messrs. Bergeest and Uhlhorn, of this place, and who has been the agent of most, if not all the houses in this place, who have been robbed, to obtain justice for them, and he has written us for a power of attorney to act in our place. Three or four days since we received a message from a man in power in that place, whose name is suppressed, but who, we believe, is the present alcalde of Foxardo, (the alcalde in office at the time of your visit is removed,) offering to obtain the value of the goods stolen if we would relinquish to him one-half of the amount recovered. This we have consented to, and have no doubt but it will be accomplished.

We request you not to give any greater publicity to this letter, and the documents you will receive, than is actually necessary; for the lives of the parties would be endangered.

We have the honor to be, sir, with respect, your most obedient servants, (Signed) CABOT, BAILEY & CO.

Personally appeared before me, John G. Bailey, of the firm of Cabot, Bailey & Co., who solemnly swore to the truth of the contents of the foregoing letter.

JOHN D. SLOAT, Lieutenant Commandant United States Navy.

ISLAND OF ST. THOMAS, February 18, 1825.

St. Thomas, February 17, 1825.

Dear Sir: Enclosed I hand sundry documents, obtained at the request of Lieutenant Platt; and should I hear of anything that I consider of service in this business, I shall procure a deposition and forward the same.

I waited on the governor and the judge, in company with Captain Sloat, to obtain extracts from records in the governor's office, as well as any court proceedings taken in the trial of the pirates, which might fix the thing in Foxardo, but we were informed there was none. But if you think it of utility, (and I have no doubt but strong proof can be obtained from said trial, as to the character of the inhabitants of Foxardo,) you can obtain any document you may require, provided the demand is made to this government through the Danish minister, residing in the United States.

In the piratical business, which was discovered here, a Foxardo boat made the principal figure; which boat and her crew are now here under arrest. Piracies continue frequent on the east and south coast of Porto Rico, committed by open boats and a small schooner. One sloop loaded by my house, has been captured, and the captain and crew have not since been heard of. She left this on the 7th ult., for Ponce, and on the 10th, the telegraph at Ponce signalized a sloop captured in sight. She was seen a few days after drifting near Cape Rox—masts cut away, and no one on board of her; since which, one was captured from this, off Guayama, bound to Ponce; and report says, that a brig is to windward of "Dead Man's Chest," a prize to them. The Shark will ascertain the truth of this last report. She left this yesterday morning.

Our town was half burned to the ground on the 13th instant; and we may thank Captain Sloat and his crew for the preservation of the balance, although not much is said about it in the papers. The fire took in the centre of the town, and burned to the west end.

With a tender of my services here, if required,

I remain, with respect, your most obedient servant,

(Signed) W. FURNISS.

To Commodore David Porter, Washington.

St. Thomas, February 16, 1825.

W. P. Furniss, Esq.:

Sir: It was on the evening of the 4th, or morning of the 5th May last, my store was broken open, and goods to the amount of $1,200, along with my iron chest, containing about $300, in gold, besides a number of valuable papers, were carried off. A person by the name of Pedro Cabrero, a Spaniard, offered his services to secure the parties, who he said had gone to Porto Rico; and he was fortunate enough in securing the most of my papers, which he brought back, along with a few pieces of handkerchiefs. He got them in Foxardo, or close to it: the chest they had broken in pieces, and the papers were found near to it. The handkerchiefs were identified by a sample which Mr. Cabrero carried with him. Some people who were supposed to have been accessory, were taken up and lodged in jail, in the city of Porto Rico, but what was ultimately done with them I have not since learned.

I am, sir, your most obedient servant,

(Signed) ROBERT ALEXANDER.

P. S.—Enclosed you have a letter from Mr. Cabrero, addressed to me.

Mr. Robert Alexander, of St. Thomas, merchant, being duly sworn upon the Holy Evangelists of Almighty God, doth solemnly depose and say, that the contents of the foregoing letter, by him written, are just and true.

ROBERT ALEXANDER.

St. Thomas, February 17, 1825.

I, John D. Sloat, commander of the United States schooner Grampus, do hereby certify that the foregoing deposition was this day duly sworn to, and subscribed in my presence.

Given under my hand at St. Thomas, this seventeenth day of February, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-five.

(Signed) J. D. SLOAT.

Metr Alesandro heman, da do el Plie go al jenera. Y me manda a desir que me presente yno he Podi do ber i i carlo Por ayame en ermo Pero sinenbar Go eldia Primeers del entrante Pienso ni Por loque tendra. V labor da de man dar me loque hubiere reunido entre los ynteresados con el Portador Jabor que quedare re conosido.

S. S. S. S. que S. B.

(Signed) PEDRO CABRERA.

Saint Thomas.

By request of Lieutenant Commandant Charles T. Platt, of the United States schooner Beagle, J. S. Cabot, acting for Nathan Levy, vice consul of the United States for this island, did call and cause to come before me J. F. C. Bergeest, of the firm of Bergeest and Uhlhorn, of this island, who did solemnly declare that, on the night of the 12th January, 1823, their store was broken into and robbed of merchandise and their iron chest, containing money and all valuable papers, at no less amount than $100,000.

The perpetrators of this act were, about a month afterwards, discovered in the neighborhood of Foxardo, where the goods were sold, but they have never been able to recover any proportion of them. Their papers were found on their wharf, on the 28th February ensuing. He also gave as his opinion, that Naguabo, near Foxardo, has for a length of time been the receptacle of stolen goods; and it is beyond a doubt that all the robberies which for some years have been committed in this island, particularly that upon the store of Cabot, Bailey & Co., was by the inhabitants of Foxardo, or its neighborhood, and to which place the goods were carried.

In testimony of the verity of the foregoing, he has annexed his signature.

J. F. C. BERGEEST, Partner of Bergeest & Uhlhorn.

I, Stephen Cabot, do identify the same under my official seal and signature, this seventeenth day of February, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-five.

STEPHEN CABOT,
Per his Attorney, JNO. G. BAILEY.

ST. THOMAS, February 17, 1825.

Mr. A. Saubot, and Mr. Jean Joubert, of the house of Saubot, Joubert & Co., of St. Thomas, merchants, being severally duly sworn upon the Holy Evangelists of Almighty God, do, and each of them doth solemnly depose and say that, on or about the night of the twenty-fifth day of March last past, their store in St. Thomas was broken into by some person or persons unknown to them, and robbed of divers articles; and that among those articles was their iron chest, in which they usually kept their papers and money; that, afterwards, the bills of exchange and other papers which were in their iron chest at that time were received by them from Foxardo; that these papers were said to have been thrown into the house of Lieut. Col. Don Julian Villodas, commissioned by the government of Porto Rico to make investigation and inquiry, at Foxardo and the neighborhood, respecting robberies committed at St. Thomas, the plunder of which was said to be carried there. And these deponents further solemnly swear that several double Louis d'or, which were also in their iron chest belonging to them, and carried away at the time of the robbery aforesaid, were afterwards received at St. Thomas, to their certain knowledge, from the coast and neighborhood of Foxardo; and that they verily believe the whole of the property of which they were at that time robbed was carried to Foxardo, or its vicinity.

(Signed) AUG'T SAUBOT.
J. JOUBERT.

I, John D. Sloat, commander of the United States schooner Grampus, do hereby certify that the foregoing deposition was this day duly sworn to and subscribed in my presence.

Given under my hand at St. Thomas, this seventeenth day of February, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-five.

(Signed) JOHN D. SLOAT.

ST. THOMAS, February 17, 1825.

Mr. Robert Browne, a partner in the house of Messrs. Ellis, Gibson & Co., of St. Thomas, merchants, being duly sworn upon the Holy Evangelists of Almighty God, doth solemnly depose and say that, on or about the night of the eighth day of January, 1824, their store was broken into, and robbed of divers articles of goods and merchandise, which were traced to Foxardo, Naguaba and Caguas, on the eastern coast of Porto Rico; that the goods and robbers were sent to the city of St. Johns, where the goods were identified by Mr. Gibson, another partner in the same house, who was there at the time—this deponent having written to him respecting them; that the robbers broke out of jail in the city, and that some were afterwards retaken; that a suit is still going on for the recovery of the aforesaid stolen goods, valued at about three thousand five hundred dollars, the costs of which are upwards of eleven hundred dollars, against the purchasers of those goods, who are responsible people in Foxardo, Naguaba and Caguas—but as yet without the recovery of any part thereof. And this deponent further solemnly deposes and says, that he is convinced, from the information received by his house, that the late robberies in this place have been committed by some of the same gang, and the goods secreted along the coast about Foxardo, Naguaba, Caguas, &c., &c.

ROBERT BROWNE.

I, John D. Sloat, commander of the United States schooner Grampus, do hereby certify that the foregoing deposition was this day duly sworn to and subscribed in my presence.

Given under my hand, at St. Thomas, this seventeenth day of February, eighteen hundred and twenty-five.

(Signed) JOHN D. SLOAT.

ST. THOMAS, February 15, 1825.

Messrs. Cabot, Bailey & Co.:

GENTLEMEN: In consequence of your Mr. Bailey having applied to us for the particulars we have elucidated regarding the robbery of our store, on or about the eighth January, 1824, we beg leave to refer you to the enclosed letters:

Nos. 1 and 2, dated Paynas, January 23, 1824; No. 3, dated Foxardo, March 27, 1824; No. 4, dated Foxardo, February 9, 1824.

You can make what use you please of the above letters, only the writer's name must be kept a profound secret. The suit against the receivers and purchasers of the stolen property is still going on in the city of Porto Rico, where the goods seized on the coast have been identified by our Mr. Gibson, now absent on the main.

We are, gentlemen, yours, respectfully,
(Signed) ELLIS, GIBSON & CO.

Personally appeared before me, Stephen Cabot, acting for Nathan Levy, vice consul of the United States for this island, Robert Browne, of the firm of Ellis, Gibson & Co., who acknowledged his signature to the annexed letter, and declared that the letters attached are the originals received by the firm.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto affixed my official seal and signature, this seventeenth day of February, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-five.

STEPHEN CABOT,
Per his Attorney, JNO. G. BAILEY.

No. 1.

[Translation.]

Mr. ———— to Mr. John O'Kelly.

CAGUAS, January 23, 1824.

MY FRIENDS: In consequence of your favor of the twelfth current, relative to the robbery of our friend Gibson, committed on his store at St. Thomas, I have, from the moment of my receiving it, used the most efficacious means to discover some clue by which I might be enabled to find out, with certainty, the thieves or receivers of the plundered property; and I have obtained from credible persons, positive information of the place where there is a considerable of the effects, and indications of the direction which has been given to the rest; in this understanding, and not to risk the judicial proceedings in suspicious hands, I resolved that you should, in the name of Gibson, request of the captain general a commission, that should exactly include Lieutenant Colonel Dr. Julian Villoda, the bearer hereof, and with whom you shall be understood at the time which I shall direct therefor.

The same Villodas shall move some causes that the commission be decreed as soon as possible, and come to join me in this town, to go afterwards to Foxardo. The accompanying memorial will serve you to make a fair copy, and present it to the captain general, which being decreed accordingly, shall be delivered to the same Villodas. I charge you particularly, to take measures to conceal my name in this business, because it is proper for my interests and the preservation of my relations.

Your most obedient servant.

P. S.—I have punctually notified our friend of the steps which I have taken, and of the commission sought by your means, that he may understand the whole colon.

CAGUAS, January 23, 1824.

William Gibson, Esq.:

DEAR SIR: Your favoured of the 12th instant, I have duly received, by which I am extremely sorry to find your store was robbed in the night of the 8th. In consequence of said letter, I have made my utmost efforts to discover the thieves. I have luckily succeeded in a great measure, by which reason I proceeded to obtain, from the governor, a commission on a friend et a person of confidence, considering this the only step that may be prudently adopted to make the recovery; to the purpose, I have on this date wrote to our friend, T. O'Kelly, a letter, of which the enclosed coppy will fully informed you. The principal robber, Manuel Lamparo, (a negro,) was in gaol at Naguabo, in the 20th instant, who was very badly wounded by the people that praised him. I have no doubt h' is now dead. I his declaration; he said he was the only person that robbed your store, Mr. Soussron's, et others; but would not complicate no other, or either say where goods were; however, I hope, within a few days, to have the pleasure of noticing yoy the capture et recovery of robbers et gods.

I might have saved you the expenses of a mission by acting myself, but I assure you this is a very desagreeable et trascendental bussiness in this island, on which account I have acted accordingly as you may perceived in the inclosed coppy.

The commissioner is a colonel of the expedicionary army of Spanish Main, to whom I shall have to pay, et will therefore draw on you accordingly as it may be necessary.

Be please send me by the first opportunity the articles contained in the enclosed list, directed to D. Juan Torres to the care of D. Jorre Turull by one of the wessells trading to the city.

Meanwhile remain, dear sir, your ob't h. s't.

No. 3.

[Translation.]

Mr. ———— to Mr. William Gibson.

FOXARDO, March 27, 1824.

MY DEAR FRIEND: I take up the pen to give you an account, and inform you circumstantially of the researches which have been made concerning the robbery which was committed in your store on the night of the —— day of January last.

From the judicial proceedings had for that purpose, it appears clearly and legally and justly proved who were the robbers; to what point they conducted the whole of the robbery to its distribution among them; what portions were introduced by the coasts within the jurisdiction of this town, and what by those of Naguabo; who were the assistants in the carrying, landing, and concealing, and who the purchasers. Among these last the very persons have been denounced.

Those who committed the robbery even in that island: John and Birian, negroes, a Catalonian named Pan, an Englishman named Duato, another named James, and Manuel Lamparo, black. The whole of the robbery was committed at the Island Pines, in a boat which it is doubtful whether it were Antonio Gamboa's, or that of an Italian Yorgi. In that island the robbers distributed the plunder, dividing it into equal parts, having introduced it into this island by the ports of Naguabo and those of this district.

The purchasers of the plundered effects were in Naguabo, Dr. Itto Pachot, Dr. Francisco Pacheco, and Dr. Jose Estebaty Fout; and in this district, Dr. Juan Gufao, all those who had open shops of merchandize y chandlery. Pachot, Pacheco and Gafao, have themselves announced the effects which they purchased, specifying them article by article, what each article cost, and at what they sold them.

With respect to the purchasers who did not themselves announce, the acknowledged goods have been stopped with them; and as to those who have announced them, as they are subject to acknowledged responsibility, and having themselves announced them, their goods have not been stopped, as all united have to answer and pay the total value of the robbery, and the damages and costs occasioned in the investigation.

Also the goods belonging to the Englishmen, James and Duate, have been arrested, consisting of a small portion of land and a slave. And likewise of two inhabitants of Naguabo, named Ravelo and Garcia, which consist of another certain portion of land. Moreover one Guayro has arrested a sufficiently large quantity of the property of Antino Gamboa. This man, although he was not one of the gang who committed the robbery in your store, is one of those belonging to it, and has proved that he transported in the same Guayro, to the Island of St. Bartholomew, the robbers Birian, Juan, and the Catalan, Pan, to place them in safety.

The robber, Manuel Lamparo, has declared that in that island he has belonging to him, in the possession of his wife or concubine, named Paulina, two slaves, and the boat which he sails. This Paulina is the mother of six children of Lamparo's, of which I inform you, that you may secure the negroes, boat and other goods, which are known to be Lamparo's.

Of the effects plundered, there have only been recovered one ordinary cloak, two Levitas frock coats, one shirt and undress of Irish linen, and six Irish fowling pieces, and a pair of pistols.

The effects confessed by the same purchasers are the following:

D. Itto Pachot, 2 pieces cloth, 2 pieces Irish linens, 1 piece Brittannias; D. Francisco Pacheco, 2½ pieces of cloth, 1 piece rouen, 1 piece coleta; D. Juan Gufao, 2 pieces coleta, 2 pieces rouens, 3 pieces Irish linens, 2½ pieces of cloth, 3 pieces handkerchiefs, 5 Levitas frock coats, 1 coat, 1 pair of pistols; D. Jose Esteva and Foute, who has not confessed, but justified to the evidence, 2 pieces cloth, 5 pieces Irish linens.

Hence you will infer how little they have confessed; but the law condemns them to answer for what is wanting, and to suffer some infamous punishment, in which they will probably have indulgence as far as they have confessed.

From these investigations there are confined in the prisons of Humacas, Naguabo, and the city of Porto Rico, Antonio Ravelo, Antonio Barbosa, Dr. Francisco Garcia, Dr. Jose Garcia, Santiago Damaso, Dr. Esteban Tons, Tiburcio Castillo, Antonio Castillo, Magdalena Castillo, James and Manuel Lamparo. These two last are robbers, the rest are fugitives.

There remains, then, nothing else in the business, but to pursue some other legal forms, by which everything proper may be done to discover all the robbers, purchasers of the stolen property, and how far they have co-operated in the crime. The said formalities being concluded, the person commissioned will take the voluminous writing made, the few effects seized, and the accused, and will place the whole in the hands of his excellency, the captain general, who will pass the process to jurist, that he may consult on the decree which ought to be made according to law; and it is very natural for you to appear as the actor, not only to demand what has been found and purchased, but also to establish the importance of the property stolen, with the costs besides, all which the purchasers have to pay who have confessed, and those who have not confessed what they have, twenty times the amount of the property stolen. That this may be concluded with the speed which you ought to desire, it will be proper for you to come in person as soon as possible, to give your personal presence to the affair, to come to the city in company with the commissioner, and before the affair is presented to the captain general, to submit it to an advocate, to give it beforehand the proper forms.

My friend, the commissioner, has had the most fortunate issue that could have been expected. You can calculate on the recovery of the value of the stolen property. I am delighted in having been the agent in this business. The commissioner charged with the summary information, is worthy, very worthy, of our acknowledgment, because of the probity, efficacy and honor with which his proceedings have been marked; he has added a prudence as well as artful cunning to come at a complete discovery of the whole.

I am, &c.

P. S.—Of this same date and according to letter of advice, I have drawn on you, in favor of Dr. Ramon de Alustiza, for the sum of $250, which sum I shall deliver to the commissioner on account of his trouble.

(No. 4.)

[Translation.]

Mr. —— —— to Mr. John O'Kelly:

FOXARDO, February 9, 1824.

MY ESTEEMED FRIEND: You could scarcely suppose the progress which to this date our investigations have made by means of the commission which I mentioned to you in my last, and to what effect your favor in favor of D. Julian O'Kelly was used. At this moment the authors of the robbery are known to be James and Manuel Lamparo; they are prisoners in the capital, with the greatest injunc ions on our part for their security, and the other accomplices have embarked, and we do not lose the hope of taking them soon, according to information that they must return. Some remnants and pieces have been recovered, and others, that have passed to second and third possessors, must be made good by the mala fide purchasers against whom the commission is proceeding. This impulse, from the recommendation of the government and from the desire of serving you particularly, loses no vigilance nor a moment in your service, yet we have still much to discover because most of the effects are already dispersed.

Under date of the 23d of January, I wrote to you from Caguas; and, for the more complete termination of the business, it is absolutely indispensable that what I then mentioned should be attended to, not forgetting to furnish me, as I told you, for the expenses which are incurred, and of which I have already paid a part, an account of which I shall produce in proper time

In virtue of the offer made by you in the newspaper to him who should discover the robbery, I have not hesitated to make it to the commissioner in particular, justly thinking that you must approve it; for, although it ought not to be offered as a stimulous, it ought justly to be given him as an indemnification for his extraordinary efforts—efforts which alone could have brought the business to the state in which it is. I hope, therefore, that you will answer me circumstantially, and as soon as possible, upon each of the points of this and my former.

The enclosed will serve you to direct it with safety to its title, because it extremely concerns me. If with the bearer you can send me two matresses for a bedstead, I will acknowledge it, or on another occasion secure it.

U. S. SCHOONER GRAMPUS, St. Thomas, February 4, 1825.

SIR: I heard, with great regret, that you have been recalled from the command of the West India squadron, on account of the Foxardo affair; since which, I have every day been more and more satisfied of the propriety and necessity of treating these people in that way. There is not the least doubt but the authorities of that place were concerned with, or, at any rate, under the complete influence of, Compus, a rich and influential merchant, who, we have since ascertained to a certainty, had the goods of Cabot, Bailey & Co., at the time of Captain Platt's visit there, and that he was, no doubt, the cause of his and Mr. Ritchie's being confined, to prevent their getting information, and to induce them, with the young man sent from St. Thomas in the Beagle, to leave the place as soon as released. The new commandant of Foxardo has recently sent a person to St. Thomas, to negotiate with Cabot, Bailey & Co. for the recovery of the property, and has entered into a written agreement with them to prosecute this man, and to be at all the trouble and expense, for one-half of what he gets. He says he can prove, beyond the possibility of doubt, that this man had the goods; this, of course, must be kept secret at present. Bailey has entered into this agreement by the advice of the government of St. Thomas; and, after he obtains as much of the property as he can, the governor is to demand of the government of Porto Rico the remainder of the property, and the punishment of Compus. These, and many other circumstances about these people, have come to my knowledge, that may perhaps be serviceable to you in the investigation that is said to be intended about the affair; and I assure you it will give me much pleasure to throw any light on the subject in my power.

Very respectfully, I am, sir, your obedient, humble servant,
(Signed) JOHN D. SLOAT.

To Commodore DAVID PORTER, U. S. Navy.

[Extract.]

U. S. SCHOONER GRAMPUS, St. Thomas, March 12, 1825.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose you the deposition of the master and owner of the sloop Neptune, of this place. I have taken and forwarded it, thinking it may be serviceable to you in the investigation of the Foxardo affair, as it shows the character of the people of that vicinity. Since you were here, they have robbed and captured several small vessels belonging to this place, and fitted out one or two of them as pirates. Having obtained this intelligence, I procured two small sloops, such as are used in this trade, manned them, with the intention to examine all the small harbors of Crab Island, and the coast of Porto Rico, where the Grampus could not enter; and, as a decoy, my plan succeeded, and in Boca del Inferno Lieut. Pendergrast was so fortunate as to fall in with one of them, who gave chase to him. On coming near, however, he became suspicious, and tacked. Mr. Pendergrast then fired on him, which he immediately returned, and kept up the action for forty-five minutes, when he ran on shore, and they all jumped overboard, and swam to shore. They were nearly all killed or wounded; ten of those who escaped were taken by the soldiers, five or six of whom are wounded—amongst them the famous piratical chief, Cofrecine, who has long been the terror of the coast. The sloop I have taken is the new sloop belonging to the man that piloted us to Foxardo, and was on the stocks when we were there. He had just got her ready for sea, and had taken her a few miles from that place to take in a cargo, when she was taken from him. By the next opportunity I will send you his deposition.

With respects to Mrs. Porter, I am, sir, your obedient servant,
(Signed) JOHN D. SLOAT.

To Commodorge DAVID PORTER, U. S. Navy, Washington.

P. S.—Since writing the above, I have met with Captain Low, and have taken his declaration, which is enclosed.

Salvador Pastorise, of St. Thomas, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says, that on or about the thirty-first day of January last, he sailed from St. Thomas in command of the sloop Neptune, of which he was owner, with a large cargo of provisions and dry goods, bound to Las Platillas, in the Island of Porto Rico, where he arrived in safety, and obtained a permit to dischage the cargo at Hobos, a small port within twenty-five or thirty miles of Foxardo. That going into Hobos, he was boarded inside of the harbor by a small piratical boat, containing eight or ten men, who continued firing into him from the time they were in musket shot until he was out of their reach with his small boat, which he got out and escaped in with his people, not, however, until he received a shot in the back of his head. That these pirates were not content with the capture of his sloop, but after putting four men on board of her, the rest of them pursued him and his people in their boat, with the intention, as this deponent believes, of putting them to death if they were overtaken. And this deponent further says, that he knows the persons of four, and the names of two of those pirates, which are Rovelto Cofusci, a creole of Porto Rico, and Pedro Salovi, an Italian, but married and settled in Porto Rico, about ten miles from Foxardo, and that the other two are creoles of Porto Rico. That he has not since seen his sloop, which he is informed and believes to be fitted out as a pirate, and cruising as such about coasts of Porto Rico, &c.

(Signed) S. PASTORISE.

I, John D. Sloat, commander of the U. S. schooner Grampus, do hereby certify that the foregoing deposition was this day duly sworn to and subscribed in my presence.

Given under my hand at St. Thomas, the s xth day of March, 1825.

(Signed) JOHN D. SLOAT.

John Low, of St. Thomas, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says, that on or about the eighteenth day of February last he sailed from Foxardo, in Porto Rico, in the sloop Anne, of St. Thomas, of which he was master and owner, for Cape Rapalma, a small port within an hour's sail of Foxardo, for the purpose of getting a cargo, at which place he came to anchor, and at midnight of the twentieth, was there boarded and captured by a small piratical row-boat with eight men, the leader of whom robbed him of about twenty dollars from his pockets, and then obliged him and his people to jump overboard; they all fortunately reached the shore, where they remained until an opportunity offered for St. Thomas. On this deponent's arrival at St. Thomas, he reported the affair to the government, and on the first of this month sailed in this schooner in pursuit of his vessel, which had been fitted out and was cruising as a pirate, and was on board the sloop under the command of Lieutenant Pendegrast of this vessel, when his sloop was identified by him and recaptured from the pirates by that officer and his command, and on her arrival at this place delivered to him as the rightful owner.

(Signed) JOHN LOW.

On board the U. S. Schooner Grampus, St. Thomas, March 13, 1825.

I, John D. Sloat, commander U. S. schooner Grampus, do hereby certify that the foregoing deposition was this day duly sworn to and subscribed in my presence.

Given under my hand, on board the U. S. schooner Grampus, at St. Thomas, this thirteenth day of March, 1825.

(Signed) JOHN D. SLOAT.

ST. THOMAS, March 6.

DEAR SIR: Without doubt ere this you have my respects per Beagle, containing an account of the fire which took place on the 12th ult. We then supposed it was occasioned by accident; since which the frequent attempts to fire the remaining half has led a large part of the community to suppose that it was the work of an incendiary. The fact is, that this place and the neighborhood has, for a length of time, been frequented by pirates; and there exists, no doubt, but the frequent attempts (seven in number since the 12th), which have lately been made, have originated with the gang, part of which are lodged in the fort of this place.

On the 12th ult., during the fire, and when it was supposed it was gaining on the upper town, the pirates in the fort cheered, and appeared to be pleased that the success had been so great in the accomplishment of their views.

Business is completely at a stand, and will, I fear, continue so, till a more efficient force is sent on this station. The government of this island is without force. The prisoners now in the fort are nearly equal to the garrison; and although the governor is using every exertion for the preservation of the remains of the town, and is inclined to execute the pirates now in confinement, still the laws are not sufficiently strong to warrant him in so doing.

The gang on the coast of Porto Rico must now exceed eighty, and they have several small vessels in which they cruise.

The commander of the Grampus does all in his power, but the force is not sufficient; and if our government does not send out a larger force on this station, I fear that the flourishing trade from our country to this will be done up.

The inhabitants of this island are in a state of continual alarm. We are not only on the alert against fire, but fear that these desperadoes will attempt, during the flames, to assassinate the inhabitants. If you can influence the Secretary of the Navy to send us a further force on this station, you will confer a great favor on all the resident Americans.

In making known this communication, have the goodness to keep the name of the writer a secret, as the government use every means in their power to keep the true state of things from coming to the ears of the public, supposing it will be detrimental to the trade of the place.

With respect, I remain your most obedient servant.

To Commodore DAVID PORTER, Washington.

U. S. SCHOONER GRAMPUS, St. Thomas, December 12, 1824.

SIR: In pursuance of your orders of the the 15th November, 1824, I have the honor to report, that I visited Antigua and St. Christophers. I delivered your message to Governor Maxwell, who appeared to be very much gratified to hear from you. With regard to the prisoners there, I found, on inquiry, that in a fracas, two sailors on board an American brig, had beaten and wounded, with a knife, the cook, so that he died in about thirty-six hours after. An inquest was held, and, from the declaration of the dying man, and the testimony of another black man, gave a verdict of willful murder; since which time, (about seven months) these men have been confined. Finding the crime to have been committed within the jurisdiction of the English government, I did not believe it would be cognizable in our courts; and, as there could not be obtained any other testimony than that given before the inquest, which I did not believe would be received in our courts, even if the men could be tried, and as also it would subject the United States to a heavy expense for their maintenance, &c., ever since their confinement, I did not think proper to take them. They will now shortly be tried. Governor Maxwell was willing to give them up, but the chief justice thought they could not properly do so, and if they did, that the culprits would escape from our courts, for want of jurisdiction and testimony.

I enclose you the official account from Porto Rico of our expedition to that island. Several gentlemen I have seen from there informed me that it created a great sensation, and that Le Torres threatens to retaliate on the first American officer he can catch, by making him walk barefooted to Fajardo. The captain of the port and the military commandant have been broke and confined. The alcalde made his escape, and is now in this place. As I have no inclination to march barefooted to Fajardo, I cannot go to Porto Rico for water. I shall therefore be obliged to purchase it at this place, or go down to St. Domingo, which I think I shall do before long, as I intend to visit the Mona passage in a few days. We have nothing new on this station worthy of communication. Since you left, we have had so much blowing and rainy weather that I find my old suit of sails going so fast, that I feel it my duty to inform you that I shall not be able to make them hold out more than two or three months, at farthest, when, if I am not relieved, or receive orders to return home, I shall be obliged to incur a very heavy expense to get a new suit of sails at this place, to keep my vessel in a proper state of safety and efficiency. I beg, therefore, I may receive your instructions before that time, how to act. It is very easy to get orders to me by way of New York, by enclosing them under cover to Cabot, Bailey & Co., St. Thomas, and send them to J. Balestier & Co., No. 81 Pine street, New York. They will be sure to come by the first vessel. As the two houses are connected in business, he knows of every opportunity.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,
(Signed) JOHN D. SLOAT.

To Commodore DAVID PORTER, Commander-in-Chief of the Naval Forces of the U. S. in the West Indies and Gulf of Mexico.

WASHINGTON, May 6, 1825.

* SIR: I have the honor to transmit to you a number of original letters and depositions respecting transactions at Foxardo, and the piratical character of the place.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. SAM'L L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

I shall now give a copy of my letter to the Captain General of Porto Rico, written, as will be perceived by the date, on my first arrival in the West Indies, and before the death of Lieut. Cocke, apprising him of the object of my visit, and calling on him for co-operation. I shall then give a correct copy of my letter to the governor of Foxardo, and a translation from the Gaceta del Gobierno de Puerto Rico, which bears evidence of being the production, and published by the authority of the captain general of that island.

After a perusal of the documents accompanying this defence, and being acquainted with the iniquitous conduct of the inhabitants of Porto Rico; after the neglect of the captain general to furnish that aid and assistance for the suppression of piracy which it was his duty to have afforded; after a knowledge of the object that took Lieut. Platt to Foxardo, and the only object that took me there, and after redress, and the only redress obtainable, had been obtained, who will dare to say that the lives and property of our fellow-citizens are safe in any part of the Island of Puerto Rico, while it remains under the government of a man so distinguished for his hostility to our country, and for his mischievous character, as Don Miguel de Torres, the undoubted author of the inflammatory production above mentioned? The Island of Porto Rico can be considered in no other light than as an island of pirates, of which he is their chief; and every nation who regards her own interests and the safety of her citizens, should unite in putting them down by blockade, reprisal, or, if necessary, by conquest.

If Don Miguel de Torres was of a virtuous and pacific disposition he would have taken the only proper means of obtaining redress, either through his own government or by a direct appeal to arms; but as he has thought proper to give way to his wild and uncontrollable feelings, and thereby exciting the malignant and mischievous propensities of those under his orders, placing, by his publications, the lives and property of the citizens of the United States in Porto Rico at hazard, he has lost sight of what was due to his own government, to humanity, to his character of a respectable chief, and forfeited his claim on this country for reparation, if any was due.

---

* The above letter accompanied the documents rejected by the court.

U. S. Ship Peacock, March 4, 1823.

To his excellency, the Governor of Porto Rico.

Your Excellency: I have the honor to inform you that, in pursuance of orders from my government, I have taken command of all the United States naval forces in these seas, for the protection of the commerce of the United States against all unlawful interruptions; to guard the rights, both of property and person, of our citizens, whenever it shall become necessary, and for the suppression of piracy and the slave trade.

As great complaints have been made of the interruption and injury to our commerce by privateers fitted out from Spanish ports, I must beg your excellency to furnish me a descriptive list of vessels legally commissioned to cruise from Porto Rico, with a set of the blank forms of their papers, that I may know how and when to respect them, if I should meet with any of them.

I must also beg your excellency to inform me how far they have been instructed to interrupt our trade with Mexico and the Colombian republic, and whatever instructions or authorities they may have affecting our commerce generally.

As the suppression of piracy, the principal motive for my visit to these seas, is an object that concerns all nations, (all being parties against them, and may be considered allies,) I confidently look to all for co-operation whenever it may be necessary, or at least their favorable and friendly support, and to none more than those most exposed to their depredations. I, therefore, look with confidence to your excellency for the aid of such means as may be in your power for their suppression; and, in the absence of means, I beg to assure your excellency that, whatever course may be pursued by me to destroy these enemies of the human race, it will have no other aim; and I shall observe the utmost caution not to encroach on the rights, or willingly offend the feelings of others, either in substance or in form, in all the measures which may be adopted to accomplish the end in view.

It will afford me sincere pleasure, should I be so fortunate as to fulfill the expectations of my government, and at the same time preserve harmony and a good understanding with those with whom I may be so unfortunate as to come in collision or discussion in relation thereto. Indeed, it will add much to my happiness if it can be avoided altogether.

That such is my sincere wish, and that the objects set forth by me are the only ones which brought me to these seas, I beg leave to assure your excellency in the most positive and unequivocal terms.

With the highest respect, I have the honor to be,

Your excellency's very obedient, humble servant,

(Signed) D. PORTER.

U. S. Ship John Adams, November 12, 1824.

Sir: It has been officially reported to me that an officer under my command, who visited the town of Foxardo, of which you are the chief, in search of robbers and freebooters, who, with a large amount of American property, were supposed to have taken shelter there, and bringing with him sufficient testimonials as to his object and character, was, after they were all made known to you, arrested by your order by armed men, and shamefully insulted and abused in your presence by the captain of the port, after which he was sent, by your orders, to prison, and when released therefrom was further insulted and abused by the inhabitants of the town. His object in visiting Foxardo has by these means been defeated, and for these offences no atonement or explanation has yet been made.

The object of my visit is to obtain both, and I leave it entirely to your choice, whether to come with the captain of the port and the other offenders to me, for the purpose of satisfying me as to the part you have all had in this shameful transaction, or to await my visit at your town. Should you decline coming to me, I shall take with me an armed force competent to punish the aggressors, and if any resistance is made, the total destruction of Foxardo will be the certain and immediate consequence.

If atonement for the injury is promptly made, the innocent of the offences will escape all punishment; but atonement must and will be had, and, if it is withheld from me, they will be involved in the general chastisement.

I shall hold the town and vessels in the harbor answerable for any detention or ill treatment of the officers who bear this letter.

I allow you one hour to decide on the course you will pursue, at the expiration of which time, if you do not present yourself to me, I shall march to Foxardo.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your very obedient servant,

(Signed) D. PORTER.

To the Alcalde of Foxardo.

Shameful aggression by Captain Porter, of the United States frigate John Adams, in violation of the rights of nations.

Porto Rico, November 23, 1824.

On the 14th of the present month, the commander of the United States frigate John Adams, displaying the flag of a nation with which we are at peace, and with which there was no appearance of our having declared war, anchored in the port of Fajardo with two schooners, landed a number of armed troops, and placing himself at their head, under specious pretexts, threatened destruction to the town, and to the lives of its inhabitants, who had no other bulwark but their own courage, and no other authority in their front but that of an alcalde and of a militia officer of the district. He carried his inconsiderate enterprise so far, (taking advantage of the surprise of the moment and of the state of peace in which we are with the nation whose flag waved over him,) as to spike the artillery, re-embarking when the people began to collect, by which he avoided the punishment which was his due. If his precipitate embarkation, and the weakness of the alcalde, (whom we cannot positively pronounce culpable, on account of our not being yet acquainted with all the circumstances,) saved Captain Porter from the indignation of a people most atrociously insulted, and, for the present, from the punishment which the laws of society impose. The thinking world will judge of the criminality in both cases of the aforesaid Porter, as a public man, commanding the naval forces of a civilized nation, and as a private individual, according to the result of the facts we are about to relate.

Under date of the 30th of October, the alcalde of the aforementioned town of Fajardo, gave notice that at 8 o'clock on the evening of the 26th, the American war schooner Beagle, Captain J. Platt, had arrived at that port, having on board Mr. George Beafon, clerk in the house of Cabot and Bailey, in the Island of St. Thomas, with orders and recommendations from Mr. John Campus, of that place, in search of some goods said to have been stolen from the said house, on the night of the 24th–25th of March.

The captain of the port, (to whom, as well as to the other military authorities, vigilance was recommended on account of the number of vessels which, according to advices received, had been fitted out in the United States, under the flags of what are called the insurgent States,) had his suspicions of the brig, and requested the assistance of the alcalde to examine her papers; when finding them regular, he gave the schooner liberty to proceed on her voyage the same day.

Under the date of the 14th, he says, that at seven o'clock of that day, information was received of two American schooners with launches in tow, having passed the Isle of Palominos, which is in front of the port; that from these launches, bearing the American flag, one hundred and fifty armed men landed, and with a drum beating, marched to the town, where the people of the neighborhood had already begun to assemble, armed with whatever they could lay their hands on, and resolved, as good Spaniards, to sell dear the ground they occupied, when they observed a white flag borne in front, and having been commanded to halt, he went out and met an officer, who brought the alcalde a letter in English, a literal translation of which follows:

U. S. Frigate John Adams, November 12, 1824.

Sir: I have been officially informed, that an officer under my orders who visited the town of Fajardo, of which you are chief, in search of, which with a great quantity of American property were supposed to be secreted there, and carrying with him sufficient testimonials of his object and character, was, after he had made all known to you, sir, arrested through your orders, by armed men, and shamefully insulted and abused in your presence, by the captain of the port; and that, after he was sent away by your orders, and set at liberty, he was insulted and abused afresh, by the inhabitants of the town.

His object in visiting Fajardo has been frustrated through these means, and for these offences has been made neither expiation or explanation.

The object of my visit is to obtain both, and I leave it entirely to your choice, either to come with the captain of the port and the other offenders where I am, to give me satisfaction for the part which you have all had in this shameful affair, or to expect my visit in your town. If you, sir, decline to come to me, I shall take with me an armed force competent to chastise the transgressors; and if any resistance be made, the total destruction of Fajardo shall be the certain and immediate consequence.

If atonement for the injury is promptly made, those innocent of the offence shall escape all punishment; but there must and shall be an atonement, and if I am impeded, they shall be involved in the general punishment.

I shall hold the town and the vessels in port, if the officers who is sent with this letter be detained or ill treated.

I grant you, sir, an hour to decide on the subject, at the expiration of which period, if you do not present yourself in person before me, I shall march to Fajardo.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

(Signed) D. N. PORTER,

Commander of the Naval Forces of the United States on the Coast of Africa and Florida, in the Antilles and the Gulf of Mexico.

To the Alcalde of Fajardo.

The alcalde says that, to avoid the consequences with which he saw the town was threatened, he resolved to go and speak to Commodore Porter, with whom he held a conference in the most friendly manner, and, after having removed all difficulties, retired. After this he supposes they spiked the four pieces of artillery at the port.

Various persons who were present say, that Commodore Porter and the alcalde having interchanged invitations to partake of refreshments, the former accepted the invitation of the latter, passing to the town: but that when he arrived where the people of the neighborhood were collected, who had a cannon ready with a lighted match, and when he saw their boldness and resolution, he excused himself under various pretences and retired immediately.

It is inferred from the contents of Commodore Porter's letter, that he made his threat with the intention of taking command of the town, before disembarking; but he must now know the people of Porto Rico well enough to be convinced that even the small time he allowed them, might have cost him dear, and that only by abusing good faith and confidence in the friendly relations of the flag he bore, could he have succeeded in entering upon the territory without paying for it with the life of as many as were bold enough to make the attempt, and so was he in person at the head of his troops till they were commanded to halt at the entrance of the town.

The arrogant tone of Captain Porter, in his threat to the miserable alcalde of a defenceless town of a friendly nation, demanding satisfaction for an offence which is denied to have been committed, and satisfaction for which, even if certain, should have been exacted only from the sovereign, with arms in hand, is sufficient proof that his conduct has been a crime against the laws of nations and of honor.

If Captain Porter has acted as an officer of the navy of the United States, not only has he offended the Spanish nation, by violating its territory and committing hostilities and outrages, when it was reposing in the confidence that he brought peace with him, but he has committed an offence against all the recognized nations of the civilized world, and even against his own, by usurping sovereignty to which it only appertains, to change a state of peace to one of war.

It will be enough to tell Commodore Porter the laws which ought to be observed in respect to the rights of nations. "If a private person," says Vattel, "wishes to prosecute his rights in opposition to the subject of a foreign power, he can apply to the sovereign of his adversary, or to the magistrate who exercises the public authority, and if he does not obtain justice he ought to apply to his own sovereign, who is bound to protect him."

"To take up arms," says the same author, "it is necessary, first, that we have just cause of complaint; secondly, that we have been denied reasonable satisfaction." And, in another place, he says, "To enter, with an army, into a neighboring country, which we have not threatened, and without having tried to obtain an equitable reparation for the wrongs we think we have received, will be to introduce a method fatal to humanity, and to destroy the foundation of the tranquillity and security of nations. If public indignation, and the agreement of civilized people, had not prescribed this mode of procedure, it would be necessary to remain always armed, and to be in the same state of preparation in full peace as in open war." Compare, for a moment, this doctrine with the contents of the letter of the American captain, and with his conduct, and you will see immediately the criminality which his proceedings involve.

Among the causes which the author from whom we have taken these doctrines, gives, as those which will justify a nation in having recourse to arms, is a just motive of complaint, of which reasonable satisfaction has been refused.

Independent of the want of authority in Captain Porter to make use of arms given him for other purposes, the cause of complaint rests in an injury which supposes to have been done to an officer under his command. According to another author, an injury to a person can be done in three ways, "either by denying him that which is his due; by depriving him of that which he lawfully holds; or by doing him an evil which there is no right to do unto him."

None of these three circumstances is observed in the case which Commodore Porter brings forward—and all three concur in his perfidious aggression. When the captain of the port of Fajardo wished to assure himself of the lawfulness of the proceedings of the schooner Beagle he used a very legal right, and to the exercise of which occasion was given by the nature of the vessel, by the character of the crews with which the enemy's vessels are manned, and by the advices, mentioned above, which had been received. But, applying this to Commodore Porter, we find him deny the governor of the island the indisputable right he has to administer justice; we find him usurp the exercise of this authority in a case of private property, depriving the people of the tranquillity they enjoyed, and his Majesty of the use of his arms, and committing hostilities without any authority.

To threaten the whole population of a little town with destruction if it did not give him a satisfaction which he has not obtained, and could not have obtained in the manner he solicited, whatever may have been the conduct of the alcalde of Fajardo, is to gainsay the opinion we had formed of Captain Porter, who we supposed to possess those noble, humane, and generous sentiments which are proper to a gentleman. But to abuse the good faith of the treaties under which we live, to employ force against weakness, and then to retire without accomplishing his object, and without fulfilling his duties as a commander, when he saw a force was collected to oppose him, is to act directly contrary to those sentiments.

If he believed that satisfaction was due to the officer under his orders, it was not to be obtained but through the competent authority, that is the captain general of the island, and not the alcalde of a town, which, on the other hand, charges him with being the aggressor. Whatever has been done or said by the alcalde will be considered as the personal proceedings of a weak man overpowered by force, and can in no way be any satisfaction to Captain Porter or his aggrieved officer. If they desire a satisfaction purely personal, as officers of honor, they ought to know that there are other ways of obtaining it. We will not be those who shall decide as to the true qualities of the conduct observed by Commodore Porter. We leave it to the whole world to compare it with what is painted by one of the authors of which we have already spoken.

"Those who have recourse to arms without necessity, are the plagues of the human family—they are the barbarous enemies of society, and rebels against the laws of nature, or rather against the common Father of men."

They are obnoxious to the penalties and the treatment the Genevans imposed on the Savoyards, when they assailed them in 1602; "because a nation attacked after this manner (in an informal and unlawful war,) by enemies, is not obliged to observe towards them those laws which are prescribed in laws declared in form, and can treat them as banditti."

If the alcalde had only known his duty, or been desirous of fulfilling it, although he could not prevent the landing of Captain Porter with an armed force, if he had delayed to reply to the letter, and done nothing else, this gentleman would have received a suitable answer in a few hours. The alcalde of Naguabo, who saw the two schooners anchor at Fajardo, and the brig at the cape, had already collected his people, and given the necessary information to the commandant of the department, who immediately took up the line of march for the point which was threatened. The neighboring inhabitants with the commandant, would, we feel confident, have renewed the scene of January 23d, 1817, when, having at their head, the captain of grenadiers, Don Antonio Planells y Bardaxi, they resisted two insurgent corsairs, which after having tried in vain to capture an English schooner, that had taken refuge in the port, made a landing which cost them the loss of thirty men, and of a great quantity of arms and ammunition, and forced them to give up a practice which they had taken up under the American flag, and a boat and three men which they had captured.

If the loyal and valiant inhabitants of Fajardo, have lost a second occasion of covering themselves with glory, as worthy Porto Ricons, as in the affair which we have just related, and which may be seen in the Gazette of February 1, 1817, let them console themselves. The governor will take care to put at their head an officer who will discharge his duty, if occasion should occur, as did Planells, to avoid another surprise, and that the aggressors, (who have been witnesses of the valor and decision with which the word of attack is expected,) notwithstanding that, from the shortness of the time, but few of the people can collect together, may not return to repeat with impunity such scandalous attempts, which will be repelled with the boldness, the valor, and the fidelity which characterize that honorable neighborhood.

It will not escape the notice of the reader, that my visit to Foxardo, not only had the effect which I anticipated—that of securing better treatment from the authorities of Porto Rico to the officers engaged in the suppression of piracy; but, from accounts recently received from the officer I left to perform this duty, it appears an earnest co-operation on the part of the government of the island has also been produced by it: I allude to the communications of Lieutenant Sloat, which have lately been received at the Navy Departmnnt, accompanied by a circular from the captain general of the island, calling on the subordinate authorities to render every assistance in their power. This conduct, contrasted with their former treatment of us, proves the effect of my visit to have been most salutary.

Official.

UNITED STATES SCHOONER GRAMPUS, St. Thomas, March 12, 1825.

SIR: I have the honor to report for the information of the Department, that having learned that several vessels had been robbed by pirates near Foxardo, and that two sloops of this place, and one of Santa Cruz, had been taken by them, and two of them were equipped and cruising as pirates, I obtained two small sloops at this place, free of expense, by the very cordial co-operation of his excellency, Governor Von Scholten, of St. Thomas, who promptly ordered the necessary documents to be issued, and imposed a temporary embargo, to prevent the transmission of intelligence to the pirates, which sloops I manned and armed under the command of Lieutenants Pendergrast and Wilson, for the purpose of examining all the small harbors of Crab Island, and the south coast of Porto Rico. We sailed on the first of March, and examined every place as far to the westward as Ponce, without success, although we got frequent information of them; we anchored at Ponce on the evening of the third, and took our men and officers on board; the next morning at 10 o'clock, a sloop was seen off the harbor, beating to the eastward, which was very confidently supposed to be one of those fitted out by the pirates. I again got one of the sloops, and manned her under the command of Lieutenant Pendergrast, accompanied by Acting Lieutenant Magruder, Doctor Biddle, and Midshipman Stone, with twenty-three men, who sailed in pursuit the next day at 3 o'clock. They had the good fortune to fall in with her in the harbor of "Boca del Inferno," which is very large, and has many hiding places, where an action commenced, which lasted forty-five minutes, when the pirates ran their sloop on shore, and jumped overboard: two of them were found killed, and ten of those which escaped to the shore were taken by the Spanish soldiers, five or six of whom were wounded, and amongst them, the famous piratical chief, Cofrecinas, who has long been the terror of the coast, and the rallying point of the pirates in this vicinity. As near as we can ascertain, he had fifteen or sixteen men on board, and was armed with one four-pounder, and muskets, pistols, cutlasses, and knives for his men. The sloop was got off, and arrived safe, with our tender, at this place, last evening; and I am happy to add, that none of our people received any injury, and all have returned in good health notwithstanding their exposure to the sun and rain, for eleven days, without the possibility of getting below. I have much pleasure in stating to you, that I received every assistance from the authorities of Ponce, whilst there, and that they showed every desire to promote the success of the expedition. I have the honor to enclose you a copy of a letter sent by them to Lieutenant Pendergrast, thanking him, the other officers and men, for the service rendered the country, in the capture of the pirate.

The success of the enterprise, against skillful and cunning adversaries, is the best proof I can offer you of the good conduct of the officers and men engaged in it, and renders superfluous any eulogium from me.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN D. SLOAT.

HON. SAM. L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

To Lieutenant Pendergrast, the officers and crew of the sloop Dolphin, now in the service of the United States of America:

The alcade of Ponce, Don Jose Torrens, and the military commandant, Col. Don Thomas Renovals, request me to say to you that, in the name of the governor of this island, and of the Spanish nation, they present you their thanks for the important service you have rendered them, in capturing the piratical vessel commanded by the noted Cofrecinas.

They have written to the chief authority an account of your gallant and successful expedition, and hope your future exertions may meet with equal success.

In them you will always find friends and brother officers in an honorable cause, and all the assistance they may have in their power.

They request you to accept the refreshments now sent off, and regret that your short stay deprives them of the pleasure of showing you more particular attention.

They are also happy to say that Captain Manuel Marcann has also been successful in securing some of the pirates who swam to the shore after you captured their vessels.

Wishing you success, health, &c., I am, gentlemen, your friend and servant,

JAMES J. ATKINSON.

PONCE, March 6, 1825.

U. S. SCHOONER GRAMPUS, St. Thomas, March 19, 1825.

SIR: On the 12th of this month, I had the honor to report the capture of a piratical vessel, on the south side of Porto Rico, by an expedition fitted out from this vessel, and her safe arrival at this place; also my having given her over to the governor to be returned to her former owner, an inhabitant of St. Thomas. I subsequently learned that the pirates who swam on shore had been taken and sent to the city of St. Johns, the seat of government of Porto Rico, at which place I called to offer our testimony against them. Enclosure No. 1, is my letter to the captain general; No. 2, his reply, which I have forwarded for the information of the Department. Our testimony was not required, as they have confessed sufficient to convict them.

The capture of this vessel, I find, is considered of much more importance, by the governments of Porto Rico, St. Croix, and St. Thomas, than I had any idea of, as the leader, "Cofrecinas," has for years been the terror of this vicinity; and his career has been marked by the most horrible murders and piracies, and for some time a large reward has been offered by the government of Porto Rico for his head. Although wounded when he got on shore, he would not surrender until he received the contents of a blunderbuss, which shattered his left arm, and he was brought to the ground with the but of it. I have seen him in prison, and he declares that he has not robbed any American vessel for the last eighteen months, only, however, for the want of an opportunity. Several persons on shore, heretofore considered respectable, have been arrested as accomplices of this gang. Six of them were brought to St. Johns, and committed to prison whilst I was there. The captain general has promised me that these desperadoes shall have summary justice—that he will not wait for the civil court, but will order a court-martial immediately to try them.

I have great pleasure in stating to you that the captain general appeared to have every disposition to prevent all piracies from the coast of Porto Rico, and to co-operate with me by all the means in his power; and for which purpose he gave me a circular letter to all civil and military officers on the coast, requiring them to give me every assistance and information in their power, whenever the Grampus or her boats may make their appearance on the coast, or in any of the harbors of the island; a copy of which is enclosed, No. 3.

I have also the honor to enclose you a note from me to Governor Van Scholten of St. Thomas, (No. 4,) requesting him to give the necessary orders to receive the sloop, and to have her restored to her original owner, and his reply, No. 5. Also, a letter from James J. Atkinson, Esq., in behalf of the alcalde and military commandant of Ponce, No. 6.

When I left St. Johns, the fiscal was taking the declaration of Cofrecinas, and the captain general promised me a copy of it; but having a large convoy to take to sea on Sunday, (to-morrow,) from this place, I could not wait for it. It will be sent to me in a few days, when I shall send it to you for the information of the government, as I have no doubt it will throw much light on the subject of piracies.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

JOHN D. SLOAT.

To the Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

No. 1.

U. S. SCHOONER GRAMPUS, St. Johns, Porto Rico, March 14, 1825.

SIR: I have the honor to inform your excellency that I have arrived in this harbor, with the United States schooner Grampus under my command. The object of my visit at this time is to inform your excellency that a small sloop, a tender to this vessel, met with a piratical sloop in the harbor of "Boca del Inferno," under the command of the famous piratical chief Cofrecinas, on the fifth day of the present month, and after a desperate resistance drove her on shore. The pirates that were not killed jumped overboard and got on shore, where ten of them, I understand, have been taken by the troops in that vicinity and sent to this place. Should your excellency consider the testimony of the officers of the Grampus at all necessary in bringing those enemies of mankind to justice, it will be cheerfully afforded. The sloop I took to St. Thomas, and gave her to her former owner.

I have the honor to be, with the greatest respect, your excellency's most obedient serv't,

JOHN D. SLOAT.

To his excellency J. D. MIGUEL DE LA TORRE, Captain General of the Island of Porto Rico.

No. 2.

[Translation.]

GOVERNMENT AND CAPTAIN GENERALSHIP OF THE ISLAND OF PORTO RICO.

I have received the official letter which you were pleased to direct to me, under date of 14th ult., informing me of the object of your visit to this port, and offering, if necessary, the declarations of your officers and crew, (who fought with so much bravery against the pirates in the Boca del Inferno,) in case they should be found necessary for the conviction of those criminals, in the process instituted against them by this captain generalship. I return you my most grateful thanks, as well for this offer as for the effectual assistance you have rendered in the pursuit and capture of these wicked wretches, of which good services I was already informed by the military commandant and other authorities of Ponce. Be pleased to accept the tender of my acknowledgments, and also to be the organ of communicating them to the officers and crew of the schooner under your command, for their co-operation, which confers so much honor on the navy of the United States; and, as regards their declaration, (considering that the pirates do not deny the principal fact, and that they have already convicted themselves,) I do not think it necessary to put them to the inconvenience you were pleased to offer, and which goodness would have been accepted, had it been found necessary. This captain generalship, in tendering to you its acknowledgments, flatters itself that you will be pleased to continue your good services in the pursuit of this scourge of humanity, that, in case there should still be any remaining, they may be brought to suffer the condign punishment which their captured comrades will not fail to receive. To effect this, the most energetic orders have been issued, that all the authorities of the coasts should hold themselves unanimously in readiness to co-operate with you in the most efficacious manner for the attainment of this result.

Accept, Señor Commandant, the assurance of my respect, and of the consideration with which I pray God to preserve you many years.

MIGUEL DE LA TORRES.

PUERTO RICO, March 17, 1825.

To the COMMANDER of the United States Schooner Grampus, in the Bay.

No. 3.

[Translation.]

The captain of the United States American schooner Grampus, (Lieut. John D. Sloat,) goes in pursuit of pirates; for which purpose he will visit all the ports, harbors, roads, and anchorages, which he may find convenient. In consequence, you will give him all the necessary aid and notice for discovering them; and in case of meeting with them, the authorities of the coast, both civil and military, will join themselves unanimously with the said commandant, to pursue them by land, while he does the same by sea; and in case any of those wicked wretches should seek refuge in the territory of any part of the island, they would pursue them briskly, until they have possessed themselves of their persons. The government expects, from the known zeal of the authorities referred to, that they will display the greatest activity, efficacy, and energy, in this important service, assuring each, in particular, of the lively interest which it feels for the total extermination of such vile rabble, the disgrace of humanity. Those who shall distinguish themselves in the opinion of the government, will be reported to his Majesty, giving to each one justice, according to his merits. God guard you many years.

MIGUEL DE LA TORRES.

PUERTO RICO, March 16, 1825.

To the Military Commandants, and of the Quarters, Royal Alcaldes, and other Civil and Military Authorities and Functionaries of the Coasts of this Island.

No. 4.

UNITED STATES SCHOONER GRAMPUS, St. Thomas, March 12, 1825, 8 A. M.

SIR: Having been informed by the captain of a vessel that arrived in this port, that the piratical vessel which the Danish man-of-war and myself had for some time been in search of, was in the vicinity of Crab Island, and had captured and plundered several small vessels belonging to this place, and no Danish man-of-war being at the moment in port, I did not hesitate to request of your excellency permission for the three Danish sloops (whose captains had volunteered their services) to assist me in pursuit of her. Your excellency immediately granted the request, on the sole condition that I should pledge myself, as an officer and gentleman, that the vessels should not be used for any other purpose than searching for pirates. I can assure your excellency that they have been used by me for no other. The sloop which arrived this morning is the last of the three which were under the command of Lieut. Pendergrast, who was so fortunate as to fall in with, and capture, the piratical vessel we have been so long in search of, commanded by the famous chief Cofrecina, who is badly wounded; the most of his crew were killed or wounded, and the survivors are all, I believe, now prisoners in Porto Rico, where the government afforded every assistance to the expedition whilst on that coast, and in capturing those that swam on shore. I herewith return your excellency the documents placed by you in my hands, to be used by the sloops engaged in the expedition. I cannot forbear to recommend to your excellency Capt. Perrelty, master and owner of the Danish sloop Dolphin, who rendered great assistance by his knowledge of the coast, and his good conduct during the cruise, and whom I beg leave to recommend to your particular notice. I have great pleasure in restoring to the rightful owner the sloop captured from the pirates, and request your excellency to give the necessary orders to have her delivered to him. I also enclose several sets of Danish papers taken on board the piratical vessel.

I have the honor to be, with great consideration and respect,

Your excellency's most obedient servant,

JOHN D. SLOAT.

To his excellency GOV. VAN SCHOLTEN, of St. Thomas, St. Johns, &c., &c.

No. 5.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE, St. Thomas, March 12, 1825.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of this inst., and am extremely happy at the successful result of the expedition.

I shall take a pleasure to lay your communication before my government, and beg you will be assured how much the community and I feel obligated to you for the assistance you on every occasion so readily afford this island.

I have the honor to remain, sir, your most obedient servant,

P. SCHOLTEN.

To Lieut. Commandant SLOAT, commanding the U. S. Schooner Grampus.

No. 6.

PONCE, March 12, 1825.

To Captain J. D. Sloat, United States Navy:

DEAR SIR: I have the pleasure of communicating to you the agreeable information, (at the request of Col. Renovales) that the chief of the pirate you saw passing in front of this port, and in pursuit of whom you dispatched the expedition under the command of Lieut. Pendergrast, has been captured, with twelve of his associates, on shore, near Guyama, all desperately, if not mortally wounded, particularly the leader, Cofrecinas, who landed, wounded, and then fought Captain Marcanos until he had three bullets and two sabre wounds. He cannot survive.

The commandant and alcalde present you their sincere and warm thanks for the service and aid you have rendered this place in capturing this pirate, and wish to be remembered to yourself, Lieut. Pendergrast, and the other officers of your expedition. They wish soon again to see you, and hope you will remain in port long enough for them to show you some particular attention.

Many of Cofrecinas' confederates on shore are arrested: five from here sent to St. Johns.

Your friend and servant,

JAMES J. ATKINSON.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 271. [1ST SESSION.

LETTER FROM COMMODORE DAVID PORTER RELATIVE TO CHARGES OF THOMAS RANDALL AND JOHN MOUNTAIN AGAINST THE OFFICERS OF THE WEST INDIA SQUADRON.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE DECEMBER 27, 1825.

The VICE-PRESIDENT communicated the following letter, which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

To the Vice-President of the United States and President of the Senate:

SIR: During the last session of Congress several communications from Thomas Randall and John Mountain, highly injurious to the character of myself, and other officers of the West India squadron, were transmitted by the then Secretary of State to the Senate, and gave rise to a debate, wherein many severe reflections were made on the conduct of navy officers in general, but more particularly on that of the officers employed for the suppression of piracy. In consequence of these communications, and the remarks they gave rise to, immediately on my arrival in the United States I applied for an investigation of the conduct of myself and others implicated by them. The consequence was, an investigation of the whole of the proceedings of the West India squadron, from the time of my taking command, up to the time of my recall. All of which has been printed, by order of the President, and was, as I am informed, a short time since in the office of the honorable Secretary of the Navy, ready to be distributed whenever Congress shall have made a call for the same.

In consequence of which, I some time since requested the Hon. Mr. Lloyd to offer a resolution, calling on the Navy Department for the proceedings in the case to be laid before the Senate, which he did me the favor to comply with, and a call was accordingly made; but, as he has since informed me that he does not contemplate taking any further steps in the affair, I take the liberty of briefly stating to you my object in wishing the call for the proceedings, which I beg you to communicate to the Senate for its consideration.

The documents communicated by the State Department, together with the remarks which they gave rise to, have been spread before the public, and on many minds have left an impression highly injurious to the character of the navy in general; and this impression has been strengthened by the repetition of the charges in the public prints by Mr. Randall, since the proceedings in the case were had, with the additional assertion that I had shrunk from the inquiry, and deprived the court of the opportunity of bringing out all the facts in the case, by which his charges would have been sustained, and my guilt would have been manifest. It is, therefore, due to myself, it is due to every officer under my command, it is due to the whole navy, and, indeed, the whole nation, that the result of this inquiry should be laid before the Senate, that erroneous impressions, injurious to our characters, may thereby be removed from the minds of those who, by the statements of Randall and Mountain, have been led to entertain them, and that those who entertained different opinions, and were induced to interpose themselves between us and the injury which it is believed was intended by our accusers, may be assured that their confidence has not been placed on objects unworthy of engaging it.

I beg, sir, that this subject may be brought to the consideration of the Senate at as early a period as possible, in order that it may determine, whether sufficient rigor has been observed in the inquiry; that if it has not, other proceedings may be asked for, and if they prove satisfactory, as I feel a confidence they will, that an opinion may be expressed to that effect, thereby relieving us from the charges and censures that remain on the files, and stand on record against us, to the prejudice of our own characters, and the character, and consequently of the interests, of the corps to which I belong.

This request is made with feelings of the highest respect for the members of the Senate, individually and collectively; and I hope sincerely that there may be found nothing wrong or unreasonable in my desire to obtain that approbation which myself and others have sought with so much assiduity, during the time we were employed in the suppression of piracy—a service holding forth no reward for its faithful performance—no hope to cheer us through all our privations and sufferings, but the approbation of our country.

I have the honor to be, with the highest respect, your very obedient servant,

D. PORTER.

WASHINGTON, December 25, 1825.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 272. [1ST SESSION.

LETTER OF THOMAS RANDALL, RELATIVE TO A COMMUNICATION OF COMMODORE DAVID PORTER TO THE SENATE, CHARGING HIM WITH IMPUTATIONS AGAINST HIMSELF AND OFFICERS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 3, 1826.

To the Vice-President of the United States and President of the Senate:

WASHINGTON, December 29, 1825.

SIR: In the papers of yesterday I read, with some surprise, a letter from Commodore David Porter, addressed to you, for the purpose of being communicated to the Senate, in which he invokes the aid of that body to relieve him from the charges and censures which, he alleges, have grown out of my reports to the Executive, in relation to the suppression of piracy in the West Indies. As the nature and character of those reports must be well known to the Senate, by whose order they were published at its last session, it is not my intention in this letter to enter into a formal justification of them. Nor does it become me to question the regularity or propriety of the course pursued by Commodore Porter, in thus transferring to the Senate an inquiry which has already been investigated by a court, and upon which he has provoked a controversy before the public. But, as he avowedly seeks from the Senate a vote of approbation on his conduct, and of censure upon mine, and the Senate has been pleased to act upon his application, I humbly conceive it to be my undoubted right to be heard in answer, and to show that neither the one nor the other would be merited.

To enable the Senate to judge of the merits of the controversy between us, I take the liberty of enclosing a copy of the printed publication to which Commodore Porter has alluded, and which I respectfully request may be referred, together with this letter, to the same committee to which was referred Commodore Porter's letter, and be printed.

Although that publication was made before the report of the court of inquiry was published, I have yet seen nothing in that report which materially conflicts either with the statements made in my original letters to the Executive, or in the printed paper enclosed, and such, doubtless, is the opinion of Commodore Porter, or he would have rested satisfied with the justification it would otherwise have afforded him, and thus relieved the Senate from an inquiry as unprofitable as, in my opinion, it is alien from its legitimate duties.

I am free, however, to confess that, as far as opinions, in the absence of evidence, can prevail, the sentence of that court will be found to be favorable to Commodore Porter; and had that officer rested satisfied with such an acquittal, I should not have undertaken to question its sufficiency. Knowing that my character was not at issue upon the guilt or innocence of Commodore Porter, and seeing that the court, so far from questioning the statements made by me, expressly rely upon them, and bear testimony to my fairness, I should, but for the injurious conduct of the accused towards me, have left him to enjoy the delusions of an imaginary triumph over me. But I have too much self-respect and regard for my reputation to suffer Commodore Porter to derive from my silence, before the Senate, any countenance to his unwarrantable imputations, and to sustain his character at the expense of mine.

I have to request, then, that the Senate will be pleased to examine as well my original reports as the publication enclosed, and compare them with the evidence adduced before the court of inquiry, and it will be seen that not one material allegation made by me is contradicted by the evidence. It will be seen that the court itself complains "that the absence of many of the officers engaged in the squadron, the want of official statements of their several operations, and the withdrawing of Commodore Porter from any participation in the investigation, have rendered it impracticable to detail, with as much particularity as could be wished, the daily movements of the various vessels." And it will also be seen that, while the most abundant testimony, and the most voluminous documents exist, in relation to a period anterior to that embraced in my reports, and while the court dilates with the utmost minuteness of detail, and with the most imposing emphasis, upon the operations of the squadron during that period, there is almost a total absence of primary evidence and documents, and of detail by the court, in relation to the only period wherein the conduct of the commander of the squadron was questioned. I care not, then, that, in the absence of evidence, the court has pronounced an opinion different from mine, and favorable to the accused. The Senate has all the information possessed by the court, and can judge between us. They will find it abundantly proved, as asserted by me, that but two of the smallest and most inefficient vessels were left by Commodore Porter, in the month of June, near the coasts of Cuba, to protect our commerce against the pirates during the disastrous period of the summer and autumn of 1824, while all the rest of the squadron in those seas were actively engaged in the transportation of specie; and they will then be enabled to estimate the correctness of that most extraordinary opinion, sanctioned by the court, that, "in the then state of things, that force was as competent to effect the object as a larger one would have been."

But I am not limited to this view of the case. I am authorized, on the most certain information, to assert that Commodore Porter himself exhibited to the court his letter-book, which, in the opinion of members of the court, furnished abundant evidence of the truth of all the charges which had been made against him, and proved that his leading object, in the employment of the squadron, was to promote his private interests; and that the court, although satisfied of this, declined to make use of the evidence thus furnished by the accused, on the ground that the letter-book having been placed in its possession for a special and different object, it was not authorized to make use of it for another purpose.

I trust the Senate will find a sufficient justification for this exposition in the facts of the case and in the treatment I have received from Commodore Porter. For reports made by me to the Executive of the United States, in obedience to my instructions, written in the spirit of candor and truth, and published by the order of the Senate, without any agency of mine, I have been subjected to the most unmerited imputations. First, I am challenged by Commodore Porter to appear before a naval court and substantiate my statements. When I appear before that court, as a witness, he stands aloof in moody silence, and does not question a statement made by me, and it was only after I had withdrawn from the court, at its own suggestion, that, as I now find by the minutes of the court, an insidious attempt is made to question the truth of a most immaterial fact contained in my reports. Before a court, engaged on a different inquiry, and with which I had nothing to do, injurious remarks are, in my absence, applied to me, entirely irrelevant to the matter before the court. And, before the publication of the opinion of the court of inquiry, those injurious remarks are published by Commodore Porter, and I am challenged to appear before the tribunal of public opinion. I do appear, and publish my defence, in the paper enclosed, but my Proteus adversary there again eludes me, declines to answer me before the public, to whose bar he had appealed from the laws of his country, and says that he will rest his justification on the opinion of the court of inquiry. That opinion has now been published, and yet this restless and indefatigable adversary swerves from his resolve, and compels me now to meet him in the Senate of the United States, where he invites a renewal of the controversy. I shall not decline the invitation. Satisfied of the propriety of my conduct, and of the truth of every allegation made by me, I shall not fail to defend the one and reiterate the other in whatever presence they may be questioned.

Before concluding, I have to remark upon a part of Commodore Porter's letter to the Senate, which requires a special notice. The part to which I allude is the following: "The documents communicated to the State Department, together with the remarks which they gave rise to, have been spread before the public, and, on many minds, have left an impression highly injurious to the character of the navy in general; and this impression is strengthened by the repetition of the charges in the public prints, by Mr. Randall, since the proceedings in the case were had," &c. Now, so far from this being the fact, it will be seen by reference to the enclosed paper, (the one in question,) that one of the avowed objects of that publication was to remove any such impression; that I charge Commodore Porter with artifice and unfairness in making use of that suggestion, and expressly disclaim the intention of reflecting on any other officer than the commander of the squadron; and yet Commodore Porter refers to that very paper as containing an imputation, which imputation the paper expressly ridicules and denies. The Senate will see, in the reiteration of this charge against me, the continued operation of that motive in the mind of Commodore Porter to which I ascribed it, and be able to judge whether a suggestion so palpably groundless ought to be ascribed simply to misapprehension. But I again repel the charge. I never have been unfriendly to the navy, and much less to the officers to be affected by such a charge. I have the honor to number most, if not all, the officers composing the commanders of the vessels of that squadron amongst my acquaintances and friends. I have met and associated with many of them since the publications in question, and have perceived no abatement of their regard and confidence, either in their words or actions. On the contrary, I have been expressly assured by them that they did not consider my reports as reflecting on them; and I have too much confidence in the honor and sincerity of the officers of the navy to believe for a moment (although a signal example may be found of such depravity) that they could be capable of professing friendship while their hearts harbored hatred and suspicion.

Renewing, most respectfully, my request that this letter, and the enclosed paper, may receive the same reference and disposition which were accorded to the letter of Commodore Porter, which gave rise to them, I beg leave to assure you, sir, and the honorable body over which you preside, of my most respectful consideration.

THOMAS RANDALL.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 273. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE EXPENSE AND MODE OF EMPLOYING A SLOOP-OF-WAR IN EXPLORING THE NORTHWEST COAST OF AMERICA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 4, 1826.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, December 30, 1825.

SIR: The Secretary of the Navy has had the honor to receive the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 16th inst., inquiring, "whether the sloop-of-war Boston, about to be commissioned, or some other of the sloops-of-war now in commission, might not be employed in exploring the northwest coast of America, its rivers and inlets, between the parallels of latitude 42 and 49 north, without detriment to the naval service of the United States; and, whether the expense incurred in such service would exceed the ordinary expenses of such vessels while cruising; and, also, whether it would be practicable to transport more cannon, and more of the munitions of war, in such vessel, than would be necessary for the use of the vessel."

This resolution contains three subjects of inquiry: 1st. Whether the Boston, or any of the sloops-of-war now in commission, may be employed in exploring the northwest coast of America, between the latitudes mentioned, without detriment to the naval service.

2d. Whether the expense attending such employment would exceed the ordinary expenses of the vessel while cruising.

3d. Whether it could transport more cannon, and munitions of war, than would be necessary for its own use.

Upon the first point, reference is respectfully made to the report, dated the 2d inst., accompanying the message of the President at the commencement of the session, which states the views entertained by this Department of the proper disposition of the naval force for the ensuing year. The squadrons in the West Indies, Mediterranean and Pacific cannot well be diminished, consistently with a sufficient protection of our commerce and salutary regard for the public interest. A less force than is now employed, on any of our stations, would not be able to accomplish the purposes for which it is maintained. It has, indeed, been proposed to augment the force in the Pacific, by the Boston, or some other sloop-of-war; and the opinion is respectfully expressed, that it would be least detrimental to the public service to leave the arrangement of the vessel undisturbed, and authorize another sloop-of-war to be prepared for that service.

Should this opinion be deemed correct, and Congress determine to send a vessel to the mouth of Columbia river, another of the ten sloops-of-war may be launched, and ready for sea, before the end of the session. In that case, an addition to the estimates will be required, sufficient to fit it for sea and support it for the year; say the sum of thirty-seven thousand nine hundred and thirty-five dollars and seventy-five cents.

If Congress differ from the opinion expressed, and resolve that the force now actually on the several stations need not be increased, either the Boston or the Cyane may be engaged on the proposed survey, after they have executed special service on which they have been already ordered. In that case, the Boston may be ready to sail by the first of April, and the Cyane by the first of June, and no addition to the appropriations will be required.

Upon the second point: it is stated that the expenses of a vessel, so employed, may, in some degree, exceed its ordinary expenses while on our usual cruising grounds. It cannot carry provisions and stores for the whole year, and the cost of procuring what is wanted may be greater there than elsewhere. The difference, however, cannot be such as to require an alteration of the estimates, if any of the vessels now in commission be employed. This statement concerns only the ordinary support of the vessel, and does not embrace the purchase of instruments and apparatus, nor the pay and support of scientific men who may be engaged to aid in the survey; the extent of that expense is not understood to be included in the inquiry. It would, probably, require an addition of from eight to ten thousand dollars, to the amount stated in the estimates.

On the third point: the Boston would be able to carry, in her hold, eight or ten guns, with the necessary ammunition, in addition to her stores and armament.

Although not called for by the resolution, the consideration is respectfully suggested, that the Boston will draw from sixteen to seventeen feet of water, and that rivers and inlets, worthy of examination, may be found within the latitudes mentioned, which would not admit a vessel of such a draft; and that, should this prove to be the case, an examination of them can be made only by the boats, the vessel, during the time, lying in the open sea. Such an operation would prove dilatory, expensive, and, in some instances, perhaps, dangerous; while the work itself would not be executed in a satisfactory manner. These evils may be, in a great degree, avoided, by adding to the sloop-of-war a schooner of lighter draft of water. The annual expense of such a schooner, exclusively of the commissioned and warrant officers, is about sixteen thousand five hundred dollars.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

The Hon. the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 274. [1ST SESSION.

NAVAL REGISTER FOR 1826.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 9, 1826.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, January 5, 1826.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit to you, for the use of the members of the Senate, fifty copies of the Naval Register for the year 1826, prepared in obedience to a resolution of Congress, passed on the 13th day of December, 1815, and am, sir,

Very respectfully, &c.,

SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Hon. JOHN C. CALHOUN, President of the Senate of the United States.

Naval register for 1826.

CAPTAINS.

Names.	Date of commission.	Birth place.	Duty.
John Rodgers	March 5, 1799	Maryland	Commanding Med. squadron.
James Barron	May 22, 1799	Virginia	Navy yard, Gosport.
Wm. Bainbridge	May 20, 1800	New Jersey	President, Navy Board.
Thomas Tingey	November 23, 1804	England	Navy yard, Washington.
Charles Stewart	April 22, 1806	Pennsylvania	Waiting orders.
Isaac Hull	April 23, 1806	Connecticut	Commanding Pacific squadron.
Isaac Chauncey	April 24, 1806	Connecticut	Navy yard, Brooklyn, N. Y.
David Porter	July 2, 1812	Massachusetts	Washington.
Jacob Jones	March 3, 1813	Delaware	Navy Board.
Charles Morris	March 5, 1813	Connecticut	Special service.
Arthur Sinclair	July 24, 1813	Virginia	Commanding Norfolk station.
Lewis Warrington	November 22, 1814	Virginia	Commanding W. I. squadron.
Wm. M. Crane	November 24, 1814	New Jersey	Navy yard, Charlestown.
James T. Leonard	February 4, 1815	New York	Whitehall, Lake Champlain.
James Biddle	February 28, 1815	Pennsylvania	Navy yard, Philadelphia.
Chas. G. Ridgely	February 28, 1815	Maryland	Navy yard, Portsmouth, N. H.
Robert Trail Spence	February 28, 1815	New Hampshire	Commanding Baltimore station.
Daniel T. Patterson	February 28, 1815	New York	Frigate Constitution.
Melancthon T. Woolsey	April 27, 1816	New York	Frigate Constellation.
John O. Creighton	April 27, 1816	West Indies	Leave of absence.
John Downes	March 5, 1817	Massachusetts	Leave of absence.
John D. Henley	March 5, 1817	Virginia	Leave of absence.
Jesse D. Elliott	March 27, 1818	Maryland	Ship Cyane.
Robert Henley	March 3, 1825	Virginia	Waiting orders.
Stephen Cassin	March 3, 1825	Pennsylvania	Washington, D. C.
James Renshaw	March 3, 1825	Pennsylvania	Waiting orders.
Thomas Brown	March 3, 1825	Delaware	Waiting orders.
Chas. C. B. Thompson	March 3, 1825	Virginia	Waiting orders.
A. S. Wadsworth	March 3, 1825	Maine	Inspector ordnance and ammunition.
Geo. W. Rodgers	March 3, 1825	Maryland	Waiting orders.
George C. Reed	March 3, 1825	Pennsylvania	Mediterranean.
Henry E. Ballard	March 3, 1825	Maryland	Waiting orders.
Captains—32.

MASTERS COMMANDANT.

David Deacon	December 10, 1814	New Jersey	Sloop Erie, Mediterranean.
Louis Alexis	December 10, 1814	France	Furlough.
Sidney Smith	February 28, 1815	New York	Leave of absence.
Samuel Woodhouse	April 27, 1816	Pennsylvania	Sloop Hornet, W. I.
William Carter	April 27, 1816	North Carolina	Not on duty.
Joseph J. Nicholson	March 5, 1817	Maryland	Corvette John Adams.
Wolcott Chauncey	March 5, 1817	Connecticut	Furlough.
Edmund P. Kennedy	March 5, 1817	Maryland	Receiving ship, Norfolk.
Alexander James Dallas	March 5, 1817	Pennsylvania	Navy yard, Philadelphia.
John B. Nicholson	March 5, 1817	Virginia	Sloop Ontario, Mediterranean.
Beekman V. Hoffman	March 5, 1817	New York	Receiving ship Fulton, N. Y.
Jesse Wilkinson	April 18, 1818	Virginia	Rendezvous, Norfolk.
George Budd	March 28, 1820	Maryland	Erie, Pennsylvania.
T. Ap Catesby Jones	March 28, 1820	Virginia	Sloop Peacock, Pacific.
John Porter	March 28, 1820	Maryland	Leave of absence.
William B. Finch	March 28, 1820	South Carolina	New York rendezvous.
William B. Shubrick	March 28, 1820	South Carolina	Navy yard, New York.
Benjamin W. Booth	March 28, 1820	Virginia	Navy yard, Washington.
Alexander Claxton	March 28, 1820	Pennsylvania	Rendezvous, Baltimore.
Charles W. Morgan	April 15, 1820	Virginia	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Lawrence Kearny	March 3, 1825	New Jersey	Navy yard, Charleston.
Foxhall A. Parker	March 3, 1825	Virginia	Leave of absence.
Edward R. M'Call	March 3, 1825	South Carolina	Receiving ship, Philadelphia.
Daniel Turner	March 3, 1825	Rhode Island	Rendezvous, Boston.
David Connor	March 3, 1825	Pennsylvania	Rendezvous, Philadelphia.
John Gallagher	March 3, 1825	Pennsylvania	Navy yard, Norfolk.
Thomas Holdup Stevens	March 3, 1825	South Carolina	Leave of absence.
Masters Commandant—27.

LIEUTENANTS.

Francis J. Mitchell	February 18, 1809	Virginia	Not on duty.
Raymond H. Perry	March 5, 1813	Rhode Island	Leave of absence.
Henry D. Newcomb	July 24, 1813	New Hampshire	Commanding schooner Porpoise.
James P. Oellers	July 24, 1813	Pennsylvania	Receiving ship, Norfolk.
William M. Hunter	July 24, 1813	Pennsylvania	Leave of absence.
John D. Sloat	July 24, 1813	New York	Leave of absence.
M. C. Perry	July 24, 1813	Rhode Island	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.

Note.—Officers on leave of absence have generally returned from long cruises, and are subject to immediate orders. Several of them are sick.

Naval register for 1826—LIEUTENANTS—Continued.

Names.	Date of commission.	Birth place.	Duty.
Charles W. Skinner	July 24, 1813	Maine	Leave of absence.
Samuel W. Adams	July 24, 1813	New Hampshire	Sackett's Harbor.
Frederick W. Smith	July 24, 1813	New Jersey	Leave of absence.
Otho Norris	July 24, 1813	Maryland	Commanding schooner Shark.
John T. Newton	July 24, 1813	Virginia	Commanding brig Spark.
Joseph Smith	July 24, 1813	Massachusetts	Furlough.
Lawrence Rousseau	July 24, 1813	Louisiana	New Orleans.
Geo. W. Storer	July 24, 1813	New Hampshire	Navy yard, Portsmouth, N. H.
Joseph Cassin	July 24, 1813	Pennsylvania	Commanding schooner Grampus.
Robert M. Rose	July 24, 1813	Virginia	Navy yard, Norfolk.
Beverley Kennon	July 24, 1813	Virginia	Frigate United States.
Edward R. Shubrick	October 9, 1813	South Carolina	Leave of absence.
Chas. A. Budd	June 18, 1814	Pennsylvania	Receiving ship, Norfolk.
Francis H. Gregory	June 28, 1814	Connecticut	Brandywine frigate.
John H. Clack	December 9, 1814	Virginia	Leave of absence.
Philip F. Voorhees	December 9, 1814	New Jersey	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Benjamin Cooper	December 9, 1814	New Jersey	Leave of absence.
Wm. L. Gordon	December 9, 1814	Virginia	Navy yard, New York.
Silas Duncan	December 9, 1814	New Jersey	Waiting orders.
James Ramage	December 9, 1814	Pennsylvania	Leave of absence.
David Geisinger	December 9, 1814	Maryland	Receiving ship, Philadelphia.
Robert F. Stockton	December 9, 1814	New Jersey	Leave of absence.
Thos. S. Cunningham	December 9, 1814	England	Barrataria.
Isaac McKeever	December 9, 1814	Pennsylvania	Leave of absence.
John P. Zantzinger	December 9, 1814	Pennsylvania	Leave of absence.
Charles E. Crowley	December 9, 1814	South Carolina	Schooner Shark.
Wm. D. Salter	December 9, 1814	New York	Leave of absence.
Charles S. M'Cauley	December 9, 1814	Pennsylvania	Receiving ship, Charlestown.
John H. Bell	December 9, 1814	North Carolina	Sloop Erie, Mediterranean.
Thomas M. Newell	December 9, 1814	Georgia	Furlough.
Elie A. F. Vallette	December 9, 1814	Virginia	Frigate Constitution, Mediterranean.
Wm. A. Spencer	December 9, 1814	New York	Ship Cyane.
Thomas T. Webb	December 9, 1814	Virginia	Receiving ship, Norfolk.
John Percival	December 9, 1814	Massachusetts	Schooner Dolphin, Pacific ocean.
John H. Aulick	December 9, 1814	Virginia	Furlough.
Wm. V. Taylor	December 9, 1814	Rhode Island	Sloop Ontario.
Mirvin P. Mix	December 9, 1814	Connecticut	Leave of absence.
Bladen Dulany	December 9, 1814	Virginia	Frigate Brandywine.
James McGowan	December 9, 1814	Virginia	West India squadron.
Silas H. Stringham	December 9, 1814	New York	Receiving ship, New York.
Wm. A. C. Farragut	December 9, 1814	Louisiana	Leave of absence.
Geo. G. M'Culloh	December 9, 1814	Pennsylvania	Mediterranean.
Stephen Champlin	December 9, 1814	Rhode Island	Leave of absence.
Isaac Mayo	February 4, 1815	Maryland	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Wm. K. Latimer	February 4, 1815	Maryland	Frigate Constellation.
Wm. Mervine	February 4, 1815	Pennsylvania	Leave of absence.
Thomas Crabb	February 4, 1815	Maryland	Navy yard, Washington.
Edward G. Babbit	May 1, 1815	Massachusetts	Leave of absence.
Thomas Paine, jr.	December 1, 1815	Rhode Island	Furlough.
James Armstrong	April 27, 1816	Kentucky	Frigate United States, P. O.
Joseph Smoot	April 27, 1816	Maryland	Frigate United States, P. O.
Robert B. Randolph	April 27, 1816	Virginia	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Samuel L. Breese	April 27, 1816	New York	Leave of absence.
John Evans	April 27, 1816	New Jersey	Sloop Erie, Mediterranean.
Benjamin Page, jr.	April 27, 1816	England	Leave of absence.
John T. Ritchie	April 27, 1816	Maryland	Leave of absence.
John A. Wish	April 27, 1816	South Carolina	Leave of absence.
John Gwinn	April 27, 1816	Maryland	Navy yard, Charlestown.
Thomas W. Wymann	April 27, 1816	Massachusetts	Frigate Constitution, Med.
James L. Morris	April 27, 1816	New York	Furlough.
Andrew Fitzhugh	April 27, 1816	Virginia	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
John K. Carter	April 27, 1816	New York	Leave of absence.
Joseph Cross	April 27, 1816	Maryland	Furlough.
A. S. Ten Eick	April 27, 1816	New York	Receiving ship, New York.
Thos. S. Hamersley	April 27, 1816	Virginia	Leave of absence.
John White	April 27, 1816	Massachusetts	Charlestown, Massachusetts.
Wm. M. Robins	April 27, 1816	Maryland	Leave of absence.
Hiram Paulding	April 27, 1816	New York	Frigate United States, P. O.
John D. Williamson	April 27, 1816	New Jersey	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Uriah P. Levy	March 5, 1817	Pennsylvania	United States ship Cyane.
Enoch H. Johns	March 5, 1817	Maryland	Furlough.
Charles Boarman	March 5, 1817	Maryland	Furlough.
French Forrest	March 5, 1817	Maryland	Leave of absence.

Naval register for 1826—LIEUTENANTS—Continued.

Names.	Date of commission.	Birth place.	Duty.
Edgar Freeman	March 5, 1817	New Jersey	Leave of absence.
Wm. E. McKenney	March 5, 1817	New York	Sloop Ontario, Mediterranean.
Wm. J. Belt	March 5, 1817	Maryland	Sloop Hornet,
Charles H. Caldwell	March 5, 1817	Massachusetts	Frigate Constellation.
Wm. Jamesson	March 5, 1817	Virginia	Brig Spark.
Wm. Boerum	March 5, 1817	New York	Leave of absence.
Chas. L. Williamson	March 5, 1817	New Jersey	Schooner Grampus.
Charles Gauntt	March 5, 1817	New Jersey	Philadelphia navy yard.
Wm. W. Ramsey	March 5, 1817	Virginia	Sloop Peacock, Pacific ocean.
Ralph Voorhies	March 5, 1817	New Jersey	Frigate Brandywine.
Alexander Eskridge	March 5, 1817	Virginia	Sloop Hornet.
Ebenezer Ridgeway	March 5, 1817	Massachusetts	Leave of absence.
Thomas A. Conover	March 5, 1817	New Jersey	Leave of absence.
Arch'd S. Campbell	March 5, 1817	Virginia	West India squadron.
Wm. Taylor	March 5, 1817	Virginia	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
John C. Long	March 5, 1817	New Hampshire	Sloop Peacock, Pacific ocean.
John H. Graham	March 5, 1817	Vermont	Rendezvous, New York.
Henry Henry	March 5, 1817	Maryland	Leave of absence.
Samuel W. Downing	March 5, 1817	New Jersey	Frigate Constitution.
William Pottenger	March 5, 1817	Maryland	Decoy.
Henry W. Ogden	March 5, 1817	New Jersey	Schooner Porpoise.
John H. Lee	March 5, 1817	Virginia	Rendezvous, Norfolk.
James M. McIntosh	April 1, 1818	Georgia	Leave of absence.
Josiah Tatnall	April 1, 1818	Georgia	Frigate Constitution, Med.
Wm. T. Temple	April 1, 1818	Virginia	Leave of absence.
George M'Cauley	April 1, 1818	Pennsylvania	Leave of absence.
Hugh N. Page	April 1, 1818	Virginia	Peacock.
John A. Cook	April 1, 1818	District of Columbia	United States schooner Porpoise.
William Inman	April 1, 1818	New York	Leave of absence.
Joel Abbott	April 1, 1818	Massachusetts	Furlough.
Lewis E. Simonds	April 1, 1818	Massachusetts	Pacific squadron.
John M. Dale	April 1, 1818	Pennsylvania	John Adams.
Harrison H. Cocke	April 1, 1818	Virginia	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Wm. J. M'Cluney	April 1, 1818	Pennsylvania	Frigate Constellation.
Ephraim D. Whitlock	April 1, 1818	New Jersey	Suspended.
James Goodrum	April 1, 1818	Virginia	Leave of absence.
John B. Montgomery	April 1, 1818	New Jersey	Sloop Erie, Mediterranean.
Horace B. Sawyer	April 1, 1818	Vermont	Leave of absence.
C. B. Stribling	April 1, 1818	South Carolina	Leave of absence.
James E. Legare	April 1, 1818	South Carolina	Waiting orders.
Joshua R. Sands	April 1, 1818	New York	Leave of absence.
Allen Griffen	April 1, 1818	Maryland	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
John J. Young	March 28, 1820	New York	Sloop Hornet.
Charles H. Bell	March 28, 1820	New York	Waiting orders.
Abram Bigelow	March 28, 1820	Massachusetts	Leave of absence.
Zach. W. Nixon	March 28, 1820	Massachusetts	Not on duty.
Henry C. Newton	March 28, 1820	Virginia	Suspended.
Frank Ellery	March 28, 1820	Rhode Island	Cyane.
Frederick Varnum	March 28, 1820	Massachusetts	Leave of absence.
Joseph R. Jarvis	March 28, 1820	Massachusetts	Frigate Constellation, West Indies.
Thomas W. Freelon	March 28, 1820	New York	Frigate Brandywine.
Pardon M. Whipple	March 28, 1820	New York	West India squadron.
James Williams	March 28, 1820	Maryland	Peacock.
Samuel W. Le Compte	March 28, 1820	Maryland	Mediterranean squadron.
Charles T. Platt	March 28, 1820	New York	Leave of absence.
Wm. M. Armstrong	March 3, 1821	Kentucky	Frigate Constitution.
Wm. F. Shields	March 3, 1821	Georgia	Mediterranean squadron.
Garret J. Pendergrast	March 3, 1821	Kentucky	Leave of absence.
Wm. C. Nicholson	March 3, 1821	Maryland	Frigate United States, P. O.
James B. Cooper	April 22, 1822	New Jersey	Navy yard, Philadelphia.
Daniel H. Mackay	January 13, 1825	New York	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
E. W. Carpender	January 13, 1825	New York	Sloop Erie, Mediterranean.
John L. Saunders	January 13, 1825	Virginia	West India squadron.
Joseph B. Hull, jr	January 13, 1825	Connecticut	Frigate Constellation.
Jott Stone Paine	January 13, 1825	Maine	West India squadron.
John E. Prentiss	January 13, 1825	Massachusetts	West India squadron.
Joseph Moorehead	January 13, 1825	Ohio	Hornet.
Samuel B. Phelps	January 13, 1825	Connecticut	Cyane.
Wm. T. Rogers	January 13, 1825	New York	Furlough.
Thomas Pettigru	January 13, 1825	South Carolina	Erie, Mediterranean.
Augustus Cutts	January 13, 1825	Maine	Cyane.
John S. Chauncey	January 13, 1825	New York	Ontario, Mediterranean.
Irvine Shubrick	January 13, 1825	South Carolina	Brandywine.

Naval register for 1826—LIEUTENANTS—Continued.

Names.	Date of commission.	Birth place.	Duty.
Charles Ellery	January 13, 1825	Rhode Island	Leave of absence.
Thomas R. Gerry	January 13, 1825	Massachusetts	Furlough.
John Kelly	January 13, 1825	Pennsylvania	Furlough.
Hugh Dulany	January 13, 1825	South Carolina	Leave of absence.
Edmund Byrne	January 13, 1825	Pennsylvania	Leave of absence.
Edward L. Johnson	January 13, 1825	Rhode Island	Leave of absence.
Wm. H. Gardner	January 13, 1825	Maryland	Leave of absence.
David G. Farragut	January 13, 1825	Tennessee	Brandywine.
R. S. Pinkney	January 13, 1825	South Carolina	Leave of absence.
Stephen B. Wilson	January 13, 1825	New York	West India squadron.
E. C. Rutledge	January 13, 1825	North Carolina	Cyane.
Wm. S. Harris	January 13, 1825	Kentucky	Leave of absence.
Thomas Dornin	January 13, 1825	New York	Leave of absence.
John P. Tuttle	January 13, 1825	Connecticut	Leave of absence.
R. B. Cunningham	January 13, 1825	Virginia	Leave of absence.
James Glynn	January 13, 1825	Virginia	Leave of absence.
Joseph Myers	January 13, 1825	North Carolina	Mediterranean squadron.
W. C. Wetmore	January 13, 1825	New York	West India squadron.
Wm. B. Nicholson	January 13, 1825	Maryland	Receiving ship, New York.
Thomas R. Gedney	January 13, 1825	South Carolina	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
John Bubier	January 13, 1825	Massachusetts	Frigate United States, P. O.
Victor M. Randolph	January 13, 1825	Virginia	Leave of absence.
Joseph Cutts, jr	January 13, 1825	Maine	West India squadron.
Jacob Crowninshield	January 13, 1825	Massachusetts	Leave of absence.
Frederick Engle	January 13, 1825	Pennsylvania	Leave of absence.
Thomas S. Browne	January 13, 1825	Connecticut	Leave of absence.
A. J. D. Browne	January 13, 1825	Connecticut	Charlestown, Massachusetts.
Jesse Smith	January 13, 1825	Massachusetts	Furlough.
John H. Smith	January 13, 1825	New York	Leave of absence.
Francis Sanderson	January 13, 1825	Maryland	Navy yard, New York.
John Rudd	January 13, 1825	Rhode Island	Leave of absence.
Robert Riche	January 13, 1825	Pennsylvania	Receiving ship, Philadelphia.
David R. Stewart	January 13, 1825	Maryland	Leave of absence.
Wm. W. McKean	January 13, 1825	Pennsylvania	Philadelphia Navy yard.
Benjamin Tallmadge, jr.	January 13, 1825	Connecticut	Constitution.
Franklin Buchanan	January 13, 1825	Maryland	Leave of absence.
Hubbard H. Hobbs	January 13, 1825	Virginia	Leave of absence.
Samuel Mercer	January 13, 1825	Maryland	Leave of absence.
Charles Lowndes	January 13, 1825	South Carolina	Leave of absence.
Louis M. Goldsborough	January 13, 1825	District of Columbia	Leave of absence.
George N. Hollins	January 13, 1825	Maryland	Grampus.
Duncan N. Ingraham	January 13, 1825	South Carolina	Charleston, South Carolina.
John Marston, jr	January 13, 1825	Massachusetts	Brandywine.
Henry Bruce	January 13, 1825	Massachusetts	Leave of absence.
Wm. D. Newman	January 13, 1825	New York	West India squadron.
Henry A. Adams	January 13, 1825	Pennsylvania	West India squadron.
Alex'r B. Pinkham	January 13, 1825	Massachusetts	West India squadron.
Wm. H. Homer	January 13, 1825	Massachusetts	Frigate United States, P. O.
James D. Knight	January 13, 1825	South Carolina	Furlough.
John Mattison	January 13, 1825	New Jersey	West India squadron.
William S. Walker	January 13, 1825	New Hampshire	Navy yard, Charlestown.
Alexander Slidell	January 13, 1825	New York	Mediterranean squadron.
James G. Boughan	January 13, 1825	Virginia	Constellation.
George F. Pearson	January 13, 1825	New Hampshire	Schooner Porpoise.
Lieutenants—209.

SURGEONS.

Edward Cutbush	June 24, 1799	Pennsylvania	Navy hospital, Washington.
Samuel R. Marshall	January 16, 1800	Pennsylvania	Navy hospital, New York.
Lewis Heermann	November 27, 1804	Germany	Navy hospital, New Orleans.
Jonathan Cowdery	November 27, 1804	Massachusetts	Norfolk station.
Robert L. Thorn	March 3, 1809	New York	West India squadron.
Wm. P. C. Barton	April 28, 1809	Pennsylvania	Navy yard, Philadelphia.
George Logan	April 14, 1810	South Carolina	Charleston, South Carolina—unwell.
Robert S. Kearney	July 28, 1810	Ireland	Washington city—unwell.
Thomas Harris	July 6, 1812	Pennsylvania	Navy hospital, Philadelphia.
William Turk	July 24, 1813	New York	Leave of absence.
Hyde Ray	July 24, 1813	Maryland	Waiting orders.
Walter W. Buchanan	July 24, 1813	New Jersey	Furlough.
Gerard Dayers	July 24, 1813	Flanders	Rendezvous, Boston.
Benjamin P. Kissam	July 24, 1813	New York	Leave of absence.
John A. Kearney	July 24, 1813	Ireland	Navy yard, Charlestown.
Bailey Washington	July 24, 1813	Virginia	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Charles B. Hamilton	April 15, 1814	Virginia	Marine barracks, H. Q.

Naval register for 1826—SURGEONS—Continued.

Names.	Date of commission.	Birth place.	Station.
William Swift	April 15, 1814	Massachusetts	Rendezvous, New York.
Thomas B. Salter	May 22, 1815	New Jersey	Pensacola.
Peter Christie	April 27, 1816	New Jersey	Constellation.
Samuel Jackson	March 27, 1818	New York	Constitution.
Andrew B. Cooke	March 27, 1818	New York	Navy yard, Brooklyn, New York.
John H. Gordon	March 27, 1818	Pennsylvania	Rendezvous, Philadelphia.
Leonard Osborne	March 27, 1818	Maryland	Ontario.
Thomas Williamson	March 27, 1818	Maryland	Hospital, Gosport, Virginia.
Geo. S. Sproston	March 27, 1818	Maryland	Baltimore rendezvous.
Elnathan Judson	March 27, 1818	Massachusetts	Navy hospital, Washington.
Benajah Ticknor	July 10, 1824	Vermont	Leave of absence.
Mordecai Morgan	July 10, 1824	Pennsylvania	Leave of absence.
Thomas J. Boyd	July 10, 1824	Delaware	John Adams.
John W. Peaco	July 10, 1824	Maryland	At Mesurado.
William Birchmore	July 10, 1824	England	Brandywine.
James Cornick	May 2, 1825	Virginia	Leave of absence.
Charles Chase	May 3, 1825	Maine	Portsmouth, New York.
William D. Babbit	May 4, 1825	Massachusetts	Cyane.
David S. Edwards	May 5, 1825	Connecticut	Navy hospital, New York.
Isaac Hulse	May 6, 1825	New York	Hornet.
Alex'r M. Montgomery	May 7, 1825	New Jersey	Receiving ship, New York.
John S. Wily	May 9, 1825	Maryland	Mediterranean squadron.
Surgeons—39.

SURGEONS' MATES.

William Belt	September 23, 1811	Maryland	Sloop Peacock, Pacific ocean.
Benjamin A. Wells	December 10, 1814	Maryland	Sloop Peacock, Pacific ocean.
James Norris	December 10, 1814	New Hampshire	Leave of absence.
Thomas V. Wicsenthal	December 10, 1814	Maryland	Baltimore station.
James R. Boyce	April 27, 1816	Virginia	Navy hospital, Gosport, Virginia.
Richard Stevens	December 28, 1818	New York	Leave of absence.
John Fitzhugh, jr.	December 28, 1818	Maryland	Frigate United States, P. O.
Wm. Williamson	March 28, 1820	New Jersey	Frigate Constellation.
George Terrill	March 28, 1820	Virginia	Navy hospital, Philadelphia.
Edmund L. Dubarry	May 26, 1824	Pennsylvania	Leave of absence.
Stephen Rapalje	May 26, 1824	New York	Shark.
John Haslett	May 26, 1824	South Carolina	Spark.
Henry W. Bassett	May 26, 1824	Maryland	Cyane.
Benjamin R. Tinslar	May 26, 1824	New York	United States, Pacific ocean.
Waters Smith	May 26, 1824	Florida	Constitution.
Cornelius Moore	May 26, 1824	New York	Cyane.
Thomas J. Bradner	May 26, 1824	New York	United States, Pacific ocean.
Benjamin F. Bache	July 9, 1824	Pennsylvania	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Charles B. Jaudon	July 12, 1824	Pennsylvania	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Robert P. Macomber	July 13, 1824	Rhode Island	Porpoise.
De Witt Birch	July 14, 1824	New York	Constitution.
Augustus A. Adee	July 15, 1824	New York	John Adams.
John R. Chandler	November 14, 1824	District of Columbia	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Thomas Dillard	November 15, 1824	Virginia	Grampus.
Augustin P. Beers	November 16, 1824	New York	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Richard Kennon	November 17, 1824	Virginia	Navy hospital, Gosport.
John H. Imlay	November 16, 1824	New Jersey	Philadelphia rendezvous.
Wm. A. Browning	January 24, 1825	Mississippi	Leave of absence.
James M. Greene	April 20, 1825	Pennsylvania	Barrataria.
Gideon White, jr.	May 2, 1825	Maryland	West India squadron.
William Plumstead	May 13, 1825	Pennsylvania	Brandywine.
George W. Codwise	May 14, 1825	New York	Constellation.
John Francis Brooke	May 16, 1825	Virginia	Brandywine.
Charles Wayne	August 29, 1825	Pennsylvania	Constellation.
Surgeons' Mates—34.

PURSERS.

Isaac Garretson	April 25, 1812	Pennsylvania	Baltimore station.
Clement S. Hunt	April 25, 1812	Maryland	Newport, R. I., acting Navy agent.
Gwinn Harris	April 25, 1812	Maryland	Leave of absence.
John H. Carr	April 25, 1812	England	Philadelphia station.
Nathaniel Lyde	April 25, 1812	Massachusetts	Portsmouth, New Hampshire.
Samuel Hambleton	April 25, 1812	Maryland	Leave of absence.
Robert C. Ludlow	April 25, 1812	New Nork	Navy yard, Charlestown.
John B. Timberlake	April 25, 1812	Virginia	Frigate Constitution, Mediterranean.
Thomas I. Chew	April 25, 1812	Massachusetts	New York station.
Thomas Shields	April 25, 1812	Delaware	Not on duty.
Lewis Deblois	April 25, 1812	Massachusetts	Not on duty.
Francis A. Thornton	April 25, 1812	Virginia	Frigate Constellation.

Naval register for 1826—PURSERS—Continued.

Names.	Date of commission.	Birth place.	Station.
James M. Halsey	April 25, 1812	New York	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Edward Fitzgerald	April 25, 1812	Pennsylvania	Waiting orders.
Alexander P. Darragh	April 25, 1812	Delaware	Navy yard, Gosport.
William S. Rogers	February 26, 1813	Rhode Island	Charlestown station.
Samuel P. Todd	March 1, 1813	Pennsylvania	Navy yard, Philadelphia.
George Beale	July 24, 1813	Virginia	United States, Pacific ocean.
James H. Clark	July 24, 1813	New York	Navy yard, New York.
Joseph Wilson	July 24, 1813	Massachusetts	Waiting orders.
Joseph B. Wilkinson	March 26, 1814	Kentucky	New Orleans.
William Sinclair	March 26, 1814	Massachusetts	Charleston, S. C., acting Navy agent.
John N. Todd	March 1, 1815	Pennsylvania	Waiting orders.
Timothy Winn	May 17, 1815	Massachusetts	Navy yard, Washington.
William M. Sands	May 20, 1815	New York	Sackett's Harbor.
Joseph H. Terry	June 6, 1815	New York	Cyane.
Thomas Breeze	July 8, 1815	Rhode Island	Waiting orders.
Gardner Thomas	July 12, 1815	Massachusetts	Leave of absence.
Ashton Y. Humphreys	July 22, 1815	Pennsylvania	Peacock, Pacific ocean.
John De Bree	December 29, 1817	New Jersey	Receiving ship, Norfolk.
Charles O. Handy	December 29, 1817	Rhode Island	Leave of absence.
Silas Butler	December 29, 1817	New York	Receiving ship, New York.
Edward N. Cox	March 28, 1820	New York	Brandywine.
Nathaniel H. Perry	March 28, 1820	Rhode Island	Erie, Mediterranean.
John N. Hambleton	May 26, 1824	Maryland	John Adams.
Joseph Watson	May 26, 1824	Massachusetts	Leave of absence.
Wm. McMurtrie	May 26, 1824	Pennsylvania	Ontario, Mediterranean.
Garret R. Barry	January 15, 1824	Pennsylvania	Grampus, West Indies.
William P. Zantzinger	August 2, 1824	Pennsylvania	Spark, West Indies.
Daniel McF. Thornton	December 30, 1824	Virginia	Shark, West Indies.
Josiah Colston	May 28, 1825	Maryland	Porpoise.
Robert Pottenger	July 16, 1825	Maryland	Hornet.
Pursers—42.

CHAPLAINS.

John Cook	May 19, 1812	England	Not on duty.
Nathaniel Andrews	August 16, 1816	England	Leave of absence.
James Brooks	December 28, 1818	Virginia	New York.
James Everett	December 28, 1818	Massachusetts	Navy yard, Charlestown.
Addison Searle	April 27, 1820	New Hampshire	Leave of absence.
Burgess Allison	March 3, 1823	New Jersey	Navy yard, Washington.
Cave Jones	May 26, 1824	New York	Navy yard, Brooklyn, New York.
John M'Carty	March 3, 1825	New York	Constitution.
John W. Grier	March 3, 1825	Pennsylvania	Waiting orders.
John Addison	March 3, 1825	Maryland	Waiting orders.
Chaplains—10.

MIDSHIPMEN PASSED FOR PROMOTION.*

1820.
John M. Sullivan	March 1, 1813	New York	New York station.
1825.
James T. Gerry	December 20, 1815	Massachusetts	Furlough.
David H. Porter	August 4, 1814	Pennsylvania	John Adams.
Wm. H. Campbell	May 30, 1816	Maryland	Leave of absence.
James P. Wilson	January 1, 1817	Maryland	Leave of absence.
James E. Calhoun	May 30, 1816	South Carolina	Leave of absence.
Henry D. Scott	May 30, 1816	Maryland	Leave of absence.
Charles Wilkes, jr.	January 1, 1818	New York	Leave of absence.
Elisha Peck	March 4, 1817	Connecticut	Brandywine.
John R. Coxe, jr.	July 4, 1817	Pennsylvania	Waiting orders.
A. H. Hopkinson	Septemb'r 25, 1817	Pennsylvania	Waiting orders.
Thomas J. Manning	January 1, 1817	New Jersey	Porpoise.
William Foster	February 4, 1814	New Jersey	Shark.
William L. Howard	January 10, 1815	New Jersey	Cyane.
William P. Piercy	March 15, 1815	Pennsylvania	Navy yard, Washington.
Midshipmen passed for promotion—15.

MIDSHIPMEN.

A.
George Adams	January 1, 1818	Delaware	Grampus.
Henry J. Auchmuty	May 10, 1820	Rhode Island	Cyane.
Isaac H. Abbott	May 10, 1820	Maine	Leave of absence.
James W. Abbott	May 1, 1822	Michigan	Constellation.

* There are several midshipmen whose warrants bear date previous to 1st January, 1818, who have not had an opportunity to be examined, and who will be placed in this list according to their respective merits as soon as an examination can be afforded to them. The order in which the names now stand will therefore probably be changed.

Naval register for 1826—MIDSHIPMEN—Continued.

Names.	Date of commission.	Birth place.	Duty.
Robert W. Alden	May 1, 1822	New Hampshire	Grampus.
Joseph Arnold	March 4, 1823	Georgia	Constitution.
Charles M. Armstrong	March 4, 1823	New Jersey	Constitution.
Gurden C. Ashton	December 9, 1823	Virginia	Frigate Constellation.
Mark T. Anderson	January 1, 1825	Tennessee	Pensacola.
William H. Alexander	March 1, 1825	Pennsylvania	Frigate Constellation.
B.
Samuel Barron	January 1, 1812	Virginia	Frigate Brandywine.
Russell Baldwin	May 17, 1813	New York	Leave of absence.
Timothy G. Benham	November 30, 1814	Connecticut	Leave of absence.
Joseph Bowman	July 8, 1815	Pennsylvania	Furlough.
Archibald R. Bogardus	December 26, 1815	New York	Furlough.
Oscar Bullus	January 1, 1817	District of Columbia	New York station.
Abram I. Bennett	July 4, 1817	Delaware	Leave of absence.
George S. Blake	January 1, 1818	Massachusetts	Navy yard, Charlestown.
Joshua Barney	January 1, 1818	Maryland	Furlough.
Theodorus Bailey, jr.	January 1, 1818	New York	Shark.
Joseph R. Blake	January 1, 1818	District of Columbia	Peacock.
Thomas McK. Buchanan	November 3, 1818	Maryland	Leave of absence.
Edward B. Boutwell	March 3, 1819	Virginia	Ontario.
Joseph R. Brown	July 10, 1819	Pennsylvania	New York station.
John E. Bispham	December 13, 1819	Pennsylvania	United States.
S. M. Breckenridge	December 15, 1819	Kentucky	John Adams.
Edward O. Blanchard	May 10, 1820	Mississippi	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
John C. Bunner	May 1, 1822	New York	Mediterranean squadron.
Patrick F. Bradlee	September 1, 1822	Massachusetts	United States.
John L. Ball	December 4, 1822	Virginia	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
George Briard	March 4, 1823	New Hampshire	West India squadron.
Robert L. Browning	March 4, 1823	Kentucky	West India squadron.
Henry H. Bell	August 4, 1823	North Carolina	Sloop Erie, Mediterranean.
Edward Boyd	August 19, 1823	New York	Sloop Erie, Mediterranean.
Junius Boyle	August 27, 1823	Maryland	United States.
John R. Bryan	October 4, 1823	Georgia	Peacock.
Owen Burns	December 1, 1824	North Carolina	Navy yard, Norfolk.
George M. Bache	January 1, 1825	Pennsylvania	Brandywine.
Thomas Ballue	January 1, 1825	Tennessee	West India squadron.
Joshua J Boyd	January 1, 1825	Michigan	Corvette Cyane.
Solomon D. Betton	January 1, 1825	Georgia	Brandywine.
Francis Bartlett	March 1, 1825	Massachusetts	Portsmouth, New Hampshire.
Simon B. Bissell	March 1, 1825	Vermont	Portsmouth, New Hampshire.
John M. Berrien	March 1, 1825	Georgia	West India squadron.
Thomas W. Brent	March 1, 1825	District of Columbia	Brandywine.
James Bradford	June 16, 1825	Louisiana	Waiting orders.
C.
Joseph S. Cornwell	January 1, 1812	New York	West India squadron.
Joseph S. Cannon	February 26, 1814	Delaware	Waiting orders.
Charles B. Childs	January 28, 1815	New York	Leave of absence.
John Addison Carr	July 4, 1817	Maryland	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Samuel B. Cocke	January 1, 1818	Virginia	West India squadron.
John Cassin	November 3, 1818	Pennsylvania	Erie.
John Colhoun	January 25, 1821	Pennsylvania	United States.
Thomas T. Craven	May 1, 1822	District of Columbia	United States.
C. W. Chauncey	May 1, 1822	New York	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
William C. Carrington	February 6, 1823	North Carolina	Leave of absence.
Horatio N. Cady	March 4, 1823	New Hampshire	Constellation.
Philander F. Canedy	March 4, 1823	Vermont	Cyane.
Walter C. Cutts	March 4, 1823	Maine	United States.
Jerome Callan	March 4, 1823	Pennsylvania	Cyane.
Frederick Chatard	November 16, 1824	Maryland	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Charles Crillon	December 1, 1824	Pennsylvania
John B. Cutting, jr.	January 1, 1825	Virginia	Brandywine.
John C. Carter	January 1, 1825	Kentucky	Spark.
James S. Cosby	January 1, 1825	Louisiana	New Orleans.
Alfred Cutler	January 1, 1825	Indiana	Navy yard, Norfolk.
Henry A. Chambers	January 1, 1825	North Carolina	Hornet.
Richard S. Coxe	March 1, 1825	New Jersey	Porpoise.
John W. Cox, jr.	March 1, 1825	Ohio	Receiving ship, Philadelphia.
D.
Samuel F. Dupont	December 29, 1815	New Jersey	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Albert E. Downes	January 1, 1818	Massachusetts	United States, Pacific ocean.
Fitz Allen Deas	July 4, 1821	South Carolina	John Adams.
Nathaniel W. Duke	May 1, 1822	Kentucky	Erie.

Naval register for 1826—MIDSHIPMEN—Continued.

Names.	Date of commission.	Birth place.	Duty.
Thomas Dimmock	March 4, 1823	Massachusetts	Leave of absence.
John A. Davis	March 4, 1823	North Carolina	Brandywine.
John Doyle	June 17, 1823	Maine	Spark.
Charles H. Davis	August 12, 1823	Massachusetts	United States.
Charles H. Duryee	August 19, 1823	New York	Erie.
Ezra T. Doughty	May 3, 1824	New York	Brandywine.
Joseph O. Devezin	October 16, 1824	Louisiana	Constellation.
James F. Duncan	November 12, 1825	Pennsylvania	Cyane.
John C. Davidson	November 22, 1825	District of Columbia	Cyane.
E.
Henry Etting	January 1, 1818	Maryland	Leave of absence.
Henry Eagle, jr	January 1, 1818	New York	Erie.
Francis B. Ellison	May 28, 1819	New York	Porpoise.
William B. Everett	February 1, 1823	Maryland	Furlough.
Alexander H. Edwards	March 4, 1823	Michigan	Constitution.
Thos. Octs. L. Elwyn	September 24, 1825	New Hampshire
F.
Lewis C. F. Fatio	March 8, 1822	Pennsylvania	Leave of absence.
Andrew H. Foot	December 4, 1822	Connecticut	Peacock.
Ebenezer Farrand	March 4, 1823	New York	Leave of absence.
Arch'd B. Fairfax	August 4, 1823	Virginia	Leave of absence.
Robert Fitzhugh	January 1, 1825	New York	Cyane.
Timothy B. Field	March 1, 1825	Connecticut	Charlestown Navy yard.
G.
William Green	January 1, 1818	Virginia	Leave of absence.
Alex r G. Gordon	January 1, 1818	District of Columbia	Erie.
William M. Glendy	January 1, 1818	Virginia	Sloop Boston.
Charles W. Gay	October 27, 1818	Massachusetts	Brandywine.
John Graham	February 27, 1819	Kentucky	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Sylvanus Godon	March 4, 1819	Pennsylvania	Navy yard, Philadelphia.
Farnifold Green	May 1, 1822	North Carolina	Leave of absence.
Alex'r Gibson	July 4, 1822	Virginia	Constellation.
John J. Glasson	February 1, 1823	New York	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Guert Gansevoort	March 4, 1823	New York	Constitution.
Israel S. Griffin	March 4, 1823	Maryland	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
William F. Grymes	March 4, 1823	Virginia	Navy yard, New York.
Helmuth J. Gaedicke	August 19, 1823	West Indies	Porpoise.
James B. Glentworth	August 19, 1823	Pennsylvania	Leave of absence.
John R. Goldsborough	November 16, 1824	District of Columbia	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
John Graham	January 1, 1825	Connecticut	John Adams.
Arch'd M. Green	March 1, 1825	Virginia	Grampus.
H.
Levy M. Harby	June 18, 1812	South Carolina	Leave of absence.
William L. Hudson	January 1, 1816	New York	Furlough.
Lucius C. Heylen	January 1, 1817	Pennsylvania	Furlough.
Stern Humphreys	January 1, 1818	New York	Leave of absence.
Andrew A. Harwood	January 1, 1818	Pennsylvania	Constitution.
Charles E. Hawkins	March 4, 1818	New York	Navy yard, New York.
John Hamilton	July 4, 1818	New York	Sloop Boston.
James T. Homans	December 3, 1819	Massachusetts	Leave of absence.
Cary H. Hansford	May 10, 1820	Virginia	Brandywine.
Paul H. Hayne	May 10, 1820	South Carolina	Brandywine.
Jefferson Hansford	December 4, 1821	Virginia	Peacock.
Thomas J. Harris	May 1, 1822	Pennsylvania	Peacock.
William W. Hunter	May 1, 1822	Louisiana	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
John W. Hunt, jr	May 1, 1822	Kentucky	Furlough.
Samuel F. Hazard	January 1, 1823	Rhode Island	Peacock.
Edward Hoban	February 1, 1823	District of Columbia	Constitution.
Neil McHowison	February 1, 1823	Virginia	Peacock, Pacific ocean.
E. H. Hubbard	March 4, 1823	Maine	Constellation.
John E. Holt	March 4, 1823	Virginia	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Charles P. C. Harrison	June 4, 1823	West Indies	Spark.
William C. Homes	August 25, 1823	Massachusetts	Peacock.
William E. Hunt	October 28, 1823	New Jersey	United States.
Henry Hoff	October 28, 1823	South Carolina	Brandywine.
Horatio M. Houston	May 12, 1824	Pennsylvania	North Carolina 74.
George M. Hooe	October 21, 1824	Virginia	North Carolina 74.
Charles G. Hunter	November 16, 1824	New Jersey	North Carolina 74.
William A. Howard	January 1, 1825	Maine	Charlestown Navy yard.
John S. Hart	January 1, 1825	Kentucky	Sloop Boston.
Robert B. Hitchcock	January 1, 1825	Connecticut	Shark.

Naval register for 1826—MIDSHIPMEN—Continued.

Names.	Date of commission.	Birth place.	Duty.
George Hurst	January 1, 1825	Pennsylvania	Philadelphia Navy yard.
Pleasant M. Huie	January 1, 1825	North Carolina	Hornet.
Mark Hale	March 1, 1825	Vermont	Navy yard, Charlestown.
Timothy A. Huntt	March 1, 1825	Connecticut	Navy yard, Charlestown.
William F. Hooe	August 1, 1825	Virginia	Hornet.
Robert Monroe Harrison	November 9, 1825	Sweden	Porpoise.
I.
George Izard, jr	January 1, 1818	Pennsylvania	Leave of absence.
Jonathan Ingersoll	March 4, 1823	Connecticut	Brandywine.
Harry Ingersoll	February 28, 1824	Pennsylvania	Brandywine.
William F. Irving	January 1, 1825	New York	Brandywine.
Andrew M. Irwin	March 1, 1825	Pennsylvania	Brandywine.
J.
Richard A. Jones	June 18, 1812	Delaware	Leave of absence.
Joshua H. Justin	November 30, 1814	Rhode Island	Leave of absence.
Robert W. Jones	January 1, 1818	New York	New York station.
Zachariah F. Johnston	January 1, 1818	Maryland	Leave of absence.
Charles H. Jackson	March 4, 1818	Georgia	Grampus.
Kinsey Johns	January 1, 1823	Maryland	Brandywine.
Robert Jones	March 4, 1823	Louisiana	Cyane.
John T. Jenkins	March 4, 1823	New York	Constitution.
Stephen Johnston	June 28, 1823	Ohio	Constellation.
Joseph W. Jarvis	January 1, 1825	North Carolina	Hornet.
William J. Jenkins	March 1, 1825	Pennsylvania	Cyane.
K.
William H. Kennon	January 1, 1817	Virginia	United States.
Stephen P. Kingston	January 1, 1817	Pennsylvania	Receiving ship, Philadelphia.
C. H. A. H. Kennedy	February 10, 1819	Virginia	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Augustus H. Kilty	July 4, 1821	Maryland	West India squadron.
Francis Key	May 15, 1823	District of Columbia	John Adams.
Lewis G. Keith	July 1, 1825	Virginia	Porpoise.
L.
Thomas J. Leib	September 1, 1811	Pennsylvania	Philadelphia.
Arthur Lewis	January 1, 1817	Virginia	Peacock, Pacific ocean.
Andrew K. Long	January 1, 1818	Maryland	Constellation.
John H. Little	January 1, 1818	Maryland	Leave of absence.
William F. Lynch	January 26, 1819	Virginia	Brandywine.
James L. Lardner	May 10, 1820	Pennsylvania	Brandywine.
Edward S. Lewis	May 10, 1820	Connecticut	Cyane.
Samuel Lockwood	July 12, 1820	Connecticut	Constellation.
Sidney Smith Lee	December 30, 1820	Virginia	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
N. C. Lawrence	May 1, 1822	New York	United States.
William Leggett	December 4, 1822	Illinois	New York station.
James B. Lardner	December 4, 1822	Pennsylvania	West India squadron.
William B. Lyne	March 4, 1823	North Carolina	Constellation.
Robert J. Livingston	April 15, 1824	New York
Joshua W. Larkin	December 1, 1824	New Hampshire	Constellation.
Joseph Lanman	January 1, 1825	Connecticut	New York station.
William Lindsay	January 1, 1825	Alabama
William P. Livingston	March 1, 1825	New York
Samuel Phillips Lee	November 22, 1825	Virginia
M.
Humphrey A. H. Morris	January 1, 1817	England	Cyane.
George A. Magruder	January 1, 1817	Virginia	Waiting orders.
John Marshall	January 1, 1818	Virginia	Navy yard, Norfolk.
Alexander M. Mull	January 1, 1818	Maryland	Mediterranean squadron.
Charles V. Morris	January 1, 1818	New York	Shark.
Henry W. Morris	August 21, 1819	New York	Constitution.
John Manning	May 10, 1820	North Carolina	Peacock.
Richard D. Millen	May 10, 1820	Georgia	Constitution.
Richard R. McMullen	May 10, 1820	New York	Constellation.
John W. Mooers	May 10, 1820	New York	Cyane.
Richard H. Morris	May 10, 1820	Vermont	Constitution.
John H. Marshall	May 10, 1820	Virginia	Constitution.
Francis Mallory	May 1, 1822	Virginia	Furlough.
Alexander H. Mitchell	March 4, 1823	Tennessee	Hornet.
Charles H. McBlair	March 4, 1823	Maryland	United States.
William M. A. Moore	August 19, 1823	Virginia	United States.
Samuel Evans Munn	August 27, 1823	New York	Ontario.
Albert McDaniel	August 27, 1823	District of Columbia	United States.
Murray Mason	November 14, 1823	District of Columbia	Ontario.

Naval register for 1826—MIDSHIPMEN—Continued.

Names.	Date of commission.	Birth place.	Duty.
John H. Maulsby	April 21, 1824	Maryland	Constellation.
John Stoney Missroom	June 27, 1824	South Carolina	Constellation.
A. H. Marbury	July 14, 1824	District of Columbia	Constellation.
William McBlair	November 16, 1824	Maryland	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Henry Mifflin	December 1, 1824	Pennsylvania	Brandywine.
Augustus Marrast	January 1, 1825	Alabama	West India squadron.
Edwin W. Moore	January 1, 1825	Virginia	Hornet.
John K. Mitchell	February 1, 1825	Florida	West India squadron.
Matthew F. Maury	February 1, 1825	Tennessee	Brandywine.
Henry Moore	March 1, 1825	Maine	Portsmouth, New Hampshire.
James W. Marshal	March 1, 1825	Kentucky	Brandywine.
Henry Kip Mower	March 1, 1825	New York	Constitution.
Horatio G. Myers	November 25, 1825
N.
Robert H. Nichols	September 1, 1811	New York	Receiving ship, New York.
John S. Nichols	June 6, 1815	Virginia.	Waiting orders.
Joseph M. Nicholson	August 30, 1816	Maryland.	Leave of absence.
Frederick A. Neville	May 10, 1820	Ohio.	Porpoise.
Lloyd B. Newell	May 10, 1820	Georgia.	Constitution.
William H. Noland	December 13, 1823	Virginia.	Ontario.
James Noble	May 27, 1824	Kentucky.	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Jefferson Nailor	January 1, 1825	Mississippi.	West India squadron.
O.
William S. Ogden	July 26, 1820	New York	Brandywine.
Gabriel A. O'Brien	January 1, 1825	Pennsylvania	Cyane.
Lewis Ogden	March 1, 1825	New York	Brandywine.
P.
John W. Palmer	November 30, 1814	Connecticut	Waiting orders.
John Pope	May 30, 1816	Maine	Constitution.
Levin M. Powell	March 1, 1817	Virginia	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Reuben R. Pinkham	January 1, 1818	Massachusetts.	Furlough.
William Pearson	January 1, 1818	New Jersey	Waiting orders.
Hugh Y. Purviance	November 3, 1818	Maryland	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Henry Pinckney	November 3, 1818	Maryland	United States.
Alexander F. Porter	March 19, 1819	Delaware	New York station.
James M. Prevost	November 12, 1819	New York	Waiting orders.
Amasa Paine, jr	May 1, 1822	Vermont	Constitution.
C. W. Pickering	May 1, 1822	New Hampshire	Leave of absence.
Lawrence Pennington	November 22, 1822	Pennsylvania	United States.
William D. Porter	January 1, 1823	Massachusetts	Brandywine.
James S. Palmer	January 1, 1825	New Jersey	New York.
Charles H. Poor	March 1, 1825	Massachusetts	John Adams.
George A. Prentiss	March 1, 1825	New Hampshire	Portsmouth, New Hampshire.
Richard L. Page	March 1, 1825	Virginia	Brandywine.
William Peter	April 12, 1825	District of Columbia	Peacock.
R.
Samuel Renshaw	July 4, 1805	Pennsylvania	Rendezvous, Philadelphia.
Edmund M. Russel	June 18, 1812	Massachusetts	United States.
John G. Rodgers	July 4, 1817	Maryland	Constellation.
John M. Rinker	January 1, 1818	Pennsylvania	Philadelphia.
Cadwalader Ringgold	March 4, 1819	Maryland	Leave of absence.
Hillary H. Rhodes	May 10, 1820	District of Columbia	Waiting orders.
Robert G. Robb	September 6, 1821	Virginia	Constitution.
Daniel L. Randolph	May 1, 1822	Rhode Island	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Quinton Ratcliffe	February 1, 1823	Virginia	Peacock.
Frederick Rogers	March 4, 1823	Maryland	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
William Rowan	March 4, 1823	Ohio	Leave of absence.
H. E. V. Robinson	March 4, 1823	Missouri	West India squadron.
James H. Rowan	August 19, 1823	New York	Cyane.
Horatio N. Russell	January 1, 1825	Massachusetts
Charles S. Renshaw	January 1, 1825	Pennsylvania	John Adams.
John A. Russ	March 1, 1825	Maine	Charlestown Navy yard.
William Radford	March 1, 1825	Missouri	Brandywine.
Charles K. Ruffin	October 24, 1825	Ohio	Navy yard, New York.
S.
John Swartwout	November 9, 1813	New York	Waiting orders.
Jonathan W. Sherburne	November 30, 1814	New Hampshire	Surveying Florida coast.
William Seton	July 4, 1817	New Hampshire	Waiting orders.
Thomas O. Selfridge	January 1, 1818	Massachusetts	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Albert G. Slaughter	November 3, 1818	Virginia	Constellation.
Isaac S. Sterett	March 24, 1819	Maryland	North Carolina 74.

Naval register for 1826—Midshipmen—Continued.

Names.	Date of commission.	Birth place.	Duty.
Thompson D. Shaw	May 10, 1820	Pennsylvania	Philadelphia.
Samuel Swartwout	May 10, 1820	New York	New York station.
Thomas Sands	May 10, 1820	Maryland	Furlough.
Joseph Stallings	May 10, 1820	Maryland	West India squadron.
Samuel W. Stockton	December 1, 1821	New Jersey	United States.
Sanford A. Street	March 4, 1822	New York	Ontario, Mediterranean.
David M. Stokes	May 1, 1822	North Carolina	Navy yard, Norfolk.
Francis Stone	May 1, 1822	New Jersey	West India squadron.
Edward Schermerhorn	May 1, 1822	New York	United States.
William J. Slidell	January 1, 1823	New York	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Philip A. Stockton	February 1, 1823	New Jersey	Constitution.
Arthur Sinclair, jr	March 4, 1823	Virginia	Leave of absence.
William Smith	March 4, 1823	Kentucky	West India squadron.
Henry Skinner, jr	March 4, 1823	Pennsylvania	Spark.
Grey Skipwith	March 4, 1823	Tennessee	New York.
Augustus R. Strong	June 20, 1823	Ohio	United States.
Lloyd L. Spilman	August 19, 1823	Virginia	Peacock.
Jonathan W. Swift	August 25, 1823	Massachusetts	Leave of absence.
Cary W. Selden	November 16, 1824	Virginia	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
James Southard	November 16, 1824	New Jersey	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
James B. Sullivan	December 1, 1824	Massachusetts
John C. Sharp	January 1, 1825	Virginia	Cyane.
Benjamin S. Slye	March 1, 1825	District of Columbia	Leave of absence.
N. G. C. Slaughter	March 1, 1825	Kentucky	Constellation.
James F. Schenck	July 1, 1825	Ohio	Hornet.
T.
William B. G. Taylor	February 13, 1815	North Carolina	Furlough.
Alexander Thompson	October 26, 1815	New York	New York station.
John Leeds Thomas	January 1, 1818	Maryland	Furlough.
Griffen Tompkins	July 11, 1818	New York	Norfolk station.
Elias C. Taylor	January 1, 1819	New Jersey	Waiting orders.
Robert D. Thorburn	March 30, 1820	Virginia	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Charles C. Turner	May 10, 1820	Virginia	Constitution.
Edward G. Tilton	May 1, 1822	Delaware	New York station.
Henry K. Thatcher	March 4, 1823	Maine	United States, Pacific ocean.
Benjamin J. Totten	March 4, 1823	Ohio	Mediterranean squadron.
John W. Turk	March 4, 1823	New York	Constellation.
Peter Turner	March 4, 1823	Rhode Island	Cyane.
Charles A. Thompson	August 27, 1823	Maryland	United States, Pacific ocean.
Bushrod W. Turner	October 21, 1824	Virginia	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Alfred Taylor	January 1, 1825	Virginia	New York station.
Paul H. Trapier	January 1, 1825	South Carolina	Mediterranean squadron.
William D. B. Trotter	January 1, 1825	Kentucky	Constellation.
Henry Tooley	January 1, 1825	Mississippi	West India squadron.
U.
George P. Upshur	April 23, 1818	Virginia	United States, Pacific ocean.
Richard R. Usher	March 4, 1823	New York	Furlough.
V.
James K. Vallette	June 1, 1815	Pennsylvania	West India squadron.
G. J. Van Brunt	January 1, 1818	New Jersey	West India squadron.
Alexander Van Dyke	May 10, 1820	Tennessee	Sloop Boston.
H. H. Van Rensselaer	May 10, 1820	New York	Pacific squadron.
Edward M. Vail	December 1, 1821	District of Columbia	Leave of absence.
Pedro Carriera Valdes	June 16, 1823	Chili	United States, Pacific ocean.
W.
Wm. S. J. Washington	February 5, 1812	Virginia	Receiving ship Alert.
Clement S. Whittington	June 18, 1812	Maryland	Waiting orders.
William G. Woolsey	January 1, 1817	Pennsylvania	New York station.
Dudley Walker	May 8, 1818	Massachusetts	Rendezvous, Charlestown.
John W. West	November 3, 1818	Pennsylvania	Leave of absence.
William C. Whittle	May 10, 1820	Virginia	Hornet.
Hampton Westcott	May 10, 1820	New Jersey	Sloop Erie, Mediterranean.
George J. Willard	May 1, 1822	Ohio	West India squadron.
James M. Watson	February 1, 1823	Virginia	Peacock.
James H. Ward	March 4, 1823	Connecticut	Constitution, Mediterranean.
Gabriel G. Williamson	June 2, 1824	Virginia	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
T. M. Washington	October 21, 1824	Maryland	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Charles E. Wadsworth	December 1, 1824	District of Columbia	Shark.
Dudley G. Woodbridge	January 1, 1825	Massachusetts	Sloop Boston.
William J. Wiswall	January 1, 1825	New York
Thomas S. Wayne	January 1, 1825	Georgia	West India squadron.

Naval register for 1826—MIDSHIPMEN—Continued.

Names.	Date of commission.	Birth place.	Duty.
Edward Worthington	March 1, 1825	Kentucky	Norfolk station.
John T. Wallace	March 1, 1825	Indiana	Constellation.
George B. Wingerd	March 1, 1825	District of Columbia
John Weems	March 1, 1825	District of Columbia	Grampus.
John Wm. Willis	May 1, 1825	Virginia	Brandywine.
John C. Winans	July 1, 1825	Ohio	Porpoise.
Bezaleel Wells, jr.	July 1, 1825	Ohio
Alexander W. Wilson	November 22, 1825	Virginia	Porpoise.
William W. Whetcroft		Maryland	New York.
Y.
Thomas H. Yeatman	May 1, 1822	Ohio	Navy yard, Norfolk.
John Young	March 4, 1823	Pennsylvania	Leave of absence.
Alexander K. Yancey	April 1, 1825	Virginia	Store ship, Decoy.
SAILING MASTERS.
William Knight	October 2, 1799	Pennsylvania	Navy yard, Philadelphia.
Edward Barry	February 28, 1809	Ireland	Navy yard, Washington.
Jonathan D. Ferris	February 28, 1809	New York	New Orleans.
Lewis B. Page	March 9, 1809	Virginia	Navy yard, Gosport.
Salvadore Catalano	August 9, 1809	Sicily	Navy yard, Washington.
Augustus Ford	March 28, 1810	South Carolina	Sackett's Harbor.
Daniel Jones	May 8, 1812	England	Steam frigate, Fulton.
Biscoe S. Doxey	June 24, 1812	Maryland	Baltimore station.
Abram B. Bloodgood	June 25, 1812	New York	New York station.
Robert Knox	July 20, 1812	Massachusetts	Navy yard, Charlestown.
James B. Potts	July 24, 1812	England	Navy yard, Gosport.
William Vaughan	August 22, 1812	Pennsylvania	Sackett's Harbor.
Marmaduke Dove	August 29, 1812	Maryland	Navy yard, Washington.
Daniel Dobbins	September 16, 1812	Pennsylvania	Waiting orders.
Cornelius Bennett	December 9, 1812	Massachusetts	Newport, Rhode Island.
Charles F. Waldo	March 10, 1813	Massachusetts	Navy yard, Charlestown.
John Clough	July 3, 1813	Massachusetts	Receiving ship, New York.
F. H. Ellison	July 3, 1813	England	Navy yard, Brooklyn, New York.
Francis Mallaby	July 3, 1813	New York	Furlough.
Nathaniel Stoodly	August 14, 1813	New Hampshire	Navy yard, Portsmouth, N. H.
Thomas Rutter	November 9, 1813	Maryland	Furlough.
Joseph Lindsay	March 17, 1814	Massachusetts	Furlough.
William T. Malbone	April 4, 1814	Rhode Island	Receiving ship, Norfolk.
Samuel C. Hixon	April 30, 1814	Massachusetts	Sloop Boston.
D. S. Stellwagen	May 14, 1814	Pennsylvania	Philadelphia.
James Ferguson	May 27, 1814	New York	Cyane.
Robert S. Tatem	July 21, 1814	Pennsylvania	Navy yard, Gosport.
Philip S. Meyer	November 18, 1814	New York	Furlough.
Joseph Williston	November 26, 1814	Massachusetts	Leave of absence.
Richard Dealy	December 6, 1814	Ireland	Furlough.
William Miller	January 28, 1815	Scotland	Philadelphia.
Nahum Warren	February 6, 1815	New Hampshire	Leave of absence.
Henry Worthington	May 2, 1815	Maryland	New York station.
John Carlton	July 4, 1815	Massachusetts	United States, Pacific ocean.
A. Cunningham	November 15, 1815	South Carolina	Norfolk station.
John Robinson	November 27, 1815	Massachusetts	Boston station.
James Tewksbury	December 14, 1824	Massachusetts	Erie, Pennsylvania.
Peter Carson	November 1, 1816	Pennsylvania	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
John Quin	November 1, 1816	Pennsylvania	Furlough.
A. W. Macomb	July 25, 1818	New York	Furlough.
S. J. Dusenberry	June 2, 1821	New York	Ohio 74, New York.
N. A. Prentiss	January 22, 1823	Massachusetts	Navy yard, Portsmouth, N. H.
Jacob Mull	August 5, 1825	Maryland	Frigate Constellation,
Sailing masters—43.
BOATSWAINS.
Edward Linscott	March 29, 1809	Massachusetts	Navy yard, Gosport.
David Eaton	August 8, 1811	Pennsylvania	Navy yard, Washington.
Thomas R. Smith	November 5, 1814	New York	New York station.
John Woods	July 8, 1815	New Jersey	Navy yard, Philadelphia.
James Banks	July 21, 1817	New York	New York station.
Eli Dill	June 25, 1818		Leave of absence.
James Evans	January 1, 1819	Pennsylvania	United States, Pacific ocean.
William Smith	January 1, 1819	Massachusetts	Corvette Cyane.
Simon Jordan	October 9, 1819	Maine	Navy yard, Brooklyn, New York.
John Smith	December 7, 1819	Maryland	Sloop Ontario.
James Thayer	April 1, 1822	New York	Grampus.
David Wesley	June 8, 1822		John Adams.
John Ball	October 14, 1824		Constitution.
Boatswains—13.

Naval register for 1826—Continued.

GUNNERS.

Names.	Date of commission.	Birth place.	Duty.
George Marshall	July 15, 1809	Greece	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
George Jackson	February 2, 1810	North Carolina	New Orleans.
Stephen Jones	May 6, 1813	New York	Steam frigate, Fulton.
Thomas Barry	July 2, 1814	Pennsylvania	Navy yard, Washington.
James Bogman	December 14, 1815	Rhode Island	Navy yard, Gosport.
John Lord	June 17, 1817	Massachusetts	Constitution.
John Blight	May 3, 1821	New York	Navy yard, Brooklyn.
Samuel Hebberd	January 23, 1822		Erie, Mediterranean.
Walter Cochran	June 8, 1822	Ireland	Hornet.
Thomas Stanley	August 16, 1823	England	West India squadron.
Joseph Andrews	November 24, 1823		Cyane.
Asa Curtis	March 1, 1825		Navy yard, Charleston.
Gunners—12.

CARPENTERS.

Richard Thomas	January 22, 1814		Constitution.
Zaccheus R. Fuller	April 12, 1815	Massachusetts	Boston station.
John Snider	January 1, 1818	Pennsylvania	John Adams.
Nehemiah Parker	January 27, 1827	Massachusetts	Charlestown navy yard.
William E. Sheffield	April 8, 1820	Connecticut	New York station.
John Justice	December 12, 1820	New Jersey	Erie station.
Samuel Phillips	May 24, 1821	New Jersey	Leave of absence.
Thomas Armstrong	June 17, 1822	Pennsylvania	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
John Fisher	March 20, 1823	Virginia	Waiting orders.
Isaac White—acting	November 29, 1825		Frigate Constellation.
Carpenters—10.

SAILMAKERS.

Charles Cassell	September 27, 1813	Genoa	Navy yard, Washington.
William Baldwin	May 21, 1817	North Carolina	Waiting orders.
Henry Van Voorhees	August 11, 1819		Sloop Peacock, Pacific ocean.
Benj'n B. Burchstead	April 5, 1821	Massachusetts	Waiting orders.
Isaac Hall	April 1, 1822	Maryland	North Carolina 74, Mediterranean.
Nathan S. Angell	June 1, 1822	Connecticut	Navy yard, Gosport.
James R. Childs	June 8, 1822	Maryland	Sloop Hornet.
Nathaniel B. Peed	October 22, 1823	Virginia	Frigate United States.
Amos Lewis	January 3, 1825	Massachusetts	Frigate Constellation.
Sailmakers—9.

MARINE CORPS.

Names.	Date of— Commission.	Brevet rank.	Birth place.	Station.
Arch'd Henderson, Lt. Col. Com't	October 17, 1820.		Virginia.	Head-quarters.

CAPTAINS.

R. Smith, Lt. Colonel by brevet.	March 13, 1812.	March 3, 1825.	Maryland	Commanding at New York.
R. D. Wainwright, Major by brevet	September 29, 1812.	March 3, 1823.	South Carolina	Commanding at Charlestown.
Wm. Anderson, Major by brevet.	June 18, 1814.	March 3, 1825.	Pennsylvania	Commanding at Norfolk.
Samuel Miller, Major by brevet.	June 18, 1814.	August 24, 1814.	Massachusetts	Commanding at Philadelphia.
John M. Gamble, Major by brevet	June 18, 1814.	April 19, 1816.	New Jersey	Commanding at Portsmouth.
Samuel E. Watson	March 28, 1820.		Virginia	Navy yard, Washington.
William H. Freeman	July 17, 1821.		Connecticut	New York.
Joseph L. Kuhn, Paymaster	June 28, 1823.		Maryland	Head-quarters.
Charles R. Broom	March 7, 1824.		Delaware	North Carolina, Mediterranean.
Captains—9.

FIRST LIEUTENANTS.

Levi Twiggs, Captain by brevet.	June 18, 1814.	March 3, 1825.	Georgia	Frigate Constellation.
John Harris, Captain by brevet.	June 18, 1814.	March 3, 1825.	Pennsylvania	Charlestown, Massachusetts.
Thomas A. Linton	April 18, 1817.		Virginia	Gosport, Virginia.
Richard T. Auchmuty	April 18, 1817.		Rhode Island	On furlough.
James Edelin	April 18, 1817.		Maryland	Frigate United States.
P. G. Howle, Adjutant and Ins.	April 18, 1817.		Virginia	Head-quarters.
Elijah J. Weed, Quartermaster	March 3, 1819.		Pennsylvania
Joseph C. Hall	March 3, 1819.		Maryland
William W. Dulany	June 19, 1819.		District of Columbia	Mediterranean.
Thomas S. English	August 11, 1819.		Massachusetts	Frigate Brandywine.
Thomas B. Barton	October 17, 1820.		Pennsylvania	On recruiting service.
George W. Walker	March 3, 1821.		District of Columbia	New York.

Naval register for 1826—First Lieutenants—Continued.

Names.	Date of—		Birth place.	Station.
	Commission.	Brevet rank.
Charles Grymes	July 20, 1821.		Virginia	Gosport, Virginia.
George D. Brewerton	September 17, 1821.		New York	Portsmouth.
Ward Marston	October 30, 1821.		Massachusetts	Charlestown.
Charles C. Tupper	January 21, 1822.		Indiana	On furlough.
Augustus A. Nicholson	May 27, 1822.		South Carolina	Sloop Erie.
James M'Cawley	October 6, 1822.		Pennsylvania	Philadelphia.
Benjamin Macomber	April 2, 1823.		Rhode Island	Corvette Cyane.
Abraham N. Brevoort	September 26, 1823.		New York	North Carolina 74.
Samuel S. Coejeman	March 8, 1824.		New Jersey	Sloop Peacock.
Andrew Ross	October 1, 1824.		Louisiana	New York.
William A. Bloodgood	December 1, 1824.		New York	Corvette John Adams.
First Lieutenants—23.

SECOND LIEUTENANTS.

Names.	Date of commission.	Birth place.	Station.
Richard Douglass*	May 7, 1822.	Pennsylvania	Sloop Hornet.
Job G. Williams	May 7, 1822.	Massachusetts	Philadelphia.
Charles F. Spering	May 7, 1822.	Pennsylvania	Sloop Ontario.
Alvin Edson	May 7, 1822.	Vermont	Charlestown, Massachusetts.
Horatio N. Crabb	May 7, 1822.	Pennsylvania	Navy yard, Washington.
Henry B. Tyler	March 3, 1823.	Virginia	North Carolina 74.
Joseph L. C. Hardy	March 3, 1823.	New York	New York.
George F. Lindsay	April 1, 1823.	Virginia	Portsmouth, New Hampshire.
William A. Randolph	July 30, 1823.	South Carolina	Brandywine.
Landon N. Carter	May 26, 1824.	Virginia	Constellation.
John G. Reynolds	May 26, 1824.	New Jersey	Charlestown, Massachusetts.
Henry W. Fowler	May 26, 1824.	New York	Head-quarters.
William T. Bourne	August 5, 1824.	Massachusetts	Gosport, Virginia.
James D. Burnham	July 1, 1825.	New York	Head-quarters.
Frederick Thomas	July 1, 1825.	Vermont	Head-quarters.
Francis C. Hall	July 5, 1825.	Maryland	Philadelphia.
Constantine Smith	August 27, 1825.	Ireland	Head-quarters.
Second Lieutenants—17.

NAVY AGENTS.

Names.	When appointed.	Expiration of commission.	Birth place.	Residence.
Enoch G. Parrott	April 21, 1821.	April 23, 1825.	New Hampshire	Portsmouth, New Hampshire.
Amos Binney	January 17, 1812.	February 15, 1825.	Massachusetts	Boston.
Clement S. Hunt	Acting.		Maryland	Newport, Rhode Island.
James K. Paulding	January 8, 1824.	January 8, 1828.	New York	New York.
George Harrison	November 21, 1799.	March 3, 1829.	Pennsylvania	Philadelphia.
James Riddle	July 14, 1812.	March 3, 1829.	Delaware	New Castle, Delaware.
James Beatty	May 7, 1810.	March 3, 1829.	Maryland	Baltimore.
John Randall	March 1, 1810.	March 3, 1829.	Maryland	Annapolis.
Miles King	March 27, 1816.	March 3, 1829.	Virginia	Norfolk, Virginia.
William Sinclair	Acting.		Massachusetts	Charleston, South Carolina.
John P. Henry	March 3, 1819.	March 3, 1829.	Georgia	Savannah, Georgia.
Nathaniel Cox	January 3, 1825.	January 3, 1829.		New Orleans.
Samuel R. Overton	May 26, 1825.			Pensacola.
Michael Hogan			Ireland	Valparaiso.
Richard M'Call			Pennsylvania	Gibraltar.
Baring, Brothers & Co.			England	London.

NAVAL STOREKEEPERS.

Names.	When appointed.	Birth place.	Residence.	Salary.
John P. Decatur	October 21, 1823.	Maryland	Portsmouth, New Hampshire	$1,500
George Bates	December 1, 1818.	Massachusetts	Charlestown, Massachusetts	1,700
Tunis Craven	October 13, 1823.	New Jersey	Brooklyn, New York	1,700
Robert Kennedy		Pennsylvania	Philadelphia	1,200
David Brearley	April 1, 1823.	New Jersey	Washington	1,700
Gabriel Galt	November 14, 1822.	Virginia	Gosport, Virginia	1,700
Samuel T. Anderson	February 10, 1818.	Maryland	New Orleans	1,700

* Entitled to promotion from April 26, 1825.

Naval register for 1826—Continued.

NAVAL CONSTRUCTORS.

Names.	When appointed.	Birth place,	Residence.	Salary.
John Floyd		Massachusetts	Portsmouth, New Hampshire	$2,000
Josiah Barker			Charlestown, Massachusetts	2,000
Samuel Hart			Brooklyn, New York	2,000
Samuel Humphreys			Philadelphia	2,300
William Doughty		Pennsylvania	Washington	2,300
Francis Grice	May 7, 1817		Gosport, Virginia	2,000
Evan Bowles, appointed (May 5, 1821) agent for the preservation of timber in Louisiana, suitable for naval purposes				300

VESSELS OF WAR OF THE UNITED STATES NAVY.

Name.	Rate.	Where built.	Where employed.
SHIPS OF THE LINE.
Independence	74	Boston	In ordinary at Boston.
Washington	74	Portsmouth, New Hampshire	In ordinary at New York.
Franklin	74	Philadelphia	In ordinary at New York.
Columbus	74	Washington	In ordinary at Boston.
Ohio	74	New York	In ordinary at New York.
North Carolina	74	Philadelphia	Mediterranean.
Delaware	74	Norfolk, Virginia	In ordinary at Norfolk.
Ships of the line—7.
FRIGATES—FIRST CLASS.
Constitution	44	Boston	Mediterranean.
United States	44	Philadelphia	Pacific.
Guerriere	44	Philadelphia	In ordinary at Norfolk.
Java	44	Baltimore	In ordinary at Boston.
Potomac	44	Washington	In ordinary at Washington.
Brandywine	44	Washington	Mediterranean.
Frigates—first class—6.
FRIGATES—SECOND CLASS.
Congress	36	Portsmouth	Repairing at Washington.
Constellation	36	Baltimore	West Indies, Gulf of Mexico, &c.
Macedonian	36	Captured in 1812	Repairing at Norfolk.
Fulton (steam)	30	New York
Frigates—second class—4.
CORVETTES.
John Adams	24	Charleston, South Carolina	West Indies, &c.
Cyane	24	Captured in 1815	Mediterranean.
Corvettes—2.
SLOOPS-OF-WAR.
Hornet	18	Baltimore	West Indies, &c.
Erie	18	Baltimore	Mediterranean.
Ontario	18	Baltimore	Mediterranean.
Peacock	18	New York	Pacific.
Sloops-of-war—4.
OTHER VESSELS.
Spark, brig	12		West Indies, &c.
Dolphin, schooner	12	Philadelphia	Pacific.
Grampus, schooner	12	Washington	West Indies.
Porpoise, schooner	12	Portsmouth, New Hampshire	Coast of Labrador.
Shark, schooner	12	Washington	West Indies and coast of Africa.
Fox, schooner	3	Purchased in 1823	West Indies.
Alert, store ship		Captured in 1812	Receiving vessel, Norfolk.
Decoy, store ship	3	Purchased in 1823	Store ship, West India squadron.
Sea Gull, galliot		Purchased in 1823	Receiving vessel, Philadelphia.
Other vessels—9.

RECAPITULATION.

Rank.	Number in service.	Pay per month.	Rations per day.
Captains	32	$100	8
Captains of a vessel above twenty and under thirty-two guns	.....	75	6
Masters commandant	27	60	5
Lieutenants commanding	.....	50	4
Lieutenants	209	40	3
Surgeons	39	50	2
Pursers	42	40	2
Chaplains	10	40	2
Sailing masters	43	40	2
Surgeons' mates	35	30	2
Schoolmasters	.....	25	2
Captains' clerks	.....	25	1
Boatswains	13	20	2
Gunners	12	20	2
Carpenters	10	20	2
Sailmakers	9	20	2
Masters' mates	.....	20	1
Midshipmen	376	19	1
Boatswains' mates	.....	19	1
Carpenters' mates	.....	19	1
Coxswains	.....	18	1
Quarter gunners	.....	18	1
Quartermasters	.....	18	1
Masters-at-arms	.....	18	1
Armorers	.....	18	1
Stewards	.....	18	1
Coopers	.....	18	1
Cooks	.....	18	1
MARINE CORPS.
Lieutenant colonel commandant	1	75	6
Captains	9	40	3
First lieutenants	24	30	3
Second lieutenants	16	25	2

Whenever any officer shall be employed in the command of a squadron on separate service, the allowance of rations shall be double during the continuance of such command, and no longer.

The commandant of the marine corps receives, in addition to his pay, eight dollars per month each, for the forage of three horses. The adjutant quartermaster and paymaster, thirty dollars per month extra.

VESSELS OF THE UNITED STATES NAVY.

	In commission.	In ordinary.	Building at—	Ships of the line.	Frigates.	Sloops-of-war.
Ships of the line	1	6	Portsmouth, N. H.	1	1
Frigates of the first class	3	3	Charlestown, Ms	2	.....	2
Frigates of the second class	1	3	Brooklyn, N. Y.	.....	2	1
Corvettes	2	.....	Philadelphia	1	1
Sloops-of-war	5	.....	Washington	.....	.....
Schooners, &c.	7	2	Gosport, Virginia	1	.....
Total	19	14	.....	5	4	3

NOTE.—The name of Lieut. Wm. Lowe, of Massachusetts, omitted in the register of last year, should appear next to that of Stephen Champlin, among the lieutenants of 9th December, 1814.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 275. [1ST SESSION.

EXPRESSIVE OF THE SENSE OF CONGRESS OF THE GALLANT CONDUCT OF LIEUTENANT SILAS DUNCAN, OF THE NAVY, IN THE ENGAGEMENT ON LAKE CHAMPLAIN IN 1814.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 18, 1826.

Mr. HOLCOMBE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Silas Duncan, reported:

That they have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to state to the House the following facts:

At the third session of the thirteenth Congress, joint resolutions passed both houses of Congress, and were approved of by the President, "expressive of the sense of Congress of the gallant conduct of Capt. Thomas McDonough, the officers, seamen, and marines, and infantry, serving as marines, on board the United States squadron on Lake Champlain," and presenting to them the thanks of Congress, with a request to the President of the United States that he would cause gold and silver medals to be struck, and presented to the officers mentioned in said resolutions, and a sword to each of the midshipmen and sailing masters who so gallantly distinguished themselves in the memorable conflict of the 11th of September, 1814, on that lake.

The committee would further state, that Lieutenant Duncan was attached to the naval force on Lake Champlain, by an order from the Navy Department, dated in April, 1814, at the time the squadron was fitting out at Vergennes; that, in the first instance, he was attached to the sloop President, commanded by Captain Cassin, and was subsequently ordered to take charge of the Preble, when the squadron commenced dropping down into the lake; that from the Preble he was ordered to the Ticonderoga, of seventeen guns, one of the new vessels commanded by Captain Cassin, and from that vessel to the command of one of the new galleys, with two heavy guns and fifty men; that on the fourth of September, he was directed to join the Saratoga, the flag-ship of Capt. McDonough, as an acting lieutenant, in which situation he remained until he was ordered to superintend the operations of the light vessels of the squadron, under the following circumstances: On the morning of the sixth of September, the British forces, under the command of Governor Provost, were reported to be in the vicinity of the bay, in their advance on Plattsburgh, and the light vessels in question were ordered to take a position off the mouth of Dead creek, for the purpose of attacking the enemy and impeding his progress. In the execution of this design, the enemy was exposed to so destructive and well directed a fire, at short grape and cannister distance, as to be compelled to retreat and change his position. During the course of this gallant action, Lieutenant Duncan, being under the necessity of passing from vessel to vessel, and who thereby drew upon himself the attention of the enemy and his heaviest fire, was severely wounded, having the top of his shoulder carried away by a cannon ball, which shattered and laid bare the shoulder joint, and confined him to the hospital, with little hopes of recovery, for sixteen months afterwards, and thus deprived him of an opportunity of participating in the glorious and decisive engagement which soon followed.

From the above facts, which are fully attested by satisfactory documents, the committee have not hesitated to consider the memorial of Lieutenant Duncan, (praying that the provisions of the joint resolution of Congress, already referred to, be extended to him,) as perfectly just and reasonable—and, moreover, as highly creditable to his feelings as an officer and a gentleman.

The committee therefore recommend the adoption of the resolution.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 276. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE APPLICATION OF CAPTAIN SAMUEL ANGUS TO BE RESTORED TO HIS RANK IN THE NAVY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 20, 1826.

Mr. STORRS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of Samuel Angus, late a post captain in the navy of the United States, reported:

That the memorialist was dismissed from the navy by order of the President of the United States, on the first day of June, 1824; he prays that Congress would reinstate him in his original rank, as a captain in the navy. The papers accompanying this report show the causes which rendered it necessary, in the opinion of the Executive Department, from a regard for discipline and sense of public duty, to separate the memorialist from the naval service of the country. The committee are of the opinion that, after this exercise of the power of the Executive, the facts presented by the memorial and documents do not present a proper case for the interposition of the legislative power of Congress.

It is stated in the memorial that the petitioner has been badly wounded in the public service; but the committee have not considered the propriety of recommending to the House, on his behalf, any provision on that account, as the prayer of the memorial is exclusively confined to his restoration to his original rank in the navy. The committee recommend to the House the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petitioner have leave to withdraw his petition.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled:

GENTLEMEN: This is to respectfully show that your memorialist was discharged (after 24 or 25 years' service) from the navy of the United States, in June, 1824, by the Secretary of the Navy, (see letter No. 1,) without a trial or sentence of a court-martial. Your memorialist waited on Mr. Monroe, late President of the United States, in February, 1825, and had a conversation with him, in which President Monroe informed your petitioner that the Executive had no hostility to him, and that he would reinstate Captain Angus in his rank as captain of the navy, previous to his leaving his office, and pledged his word of honor to the said Samuel Angus that he should hear from him before he left the presidency, and receive his reinstatement; but, through the great hurry of business on leaving his office, he assured me he had forgot it. In the spring of 1825, I waited on President Adams, stated to him my case, and told him Mr. Monroe's promises. Mr. Adams told me to go to the Navy Office, and see if President Monroe had left any directions respecting me; if he had, to inform Mr. Adams; if not, my best way was to see Col. Monroe, and that his wishes should be President Adams' government. I then went to the Navy Office, the chief clerk of which informed me that Mr. Monroe had left no directions respecting me. I then went to Col. Monroe's farm, in Loudon county, Virginia, and saw Mr. Monroe, who gave me a letter to J. Q. Adams, President of the United States, the purport of which, he informed, was recommending my immediate reinstatement. I waited upon President Adams, and delivered him the letter. Mr. Adams told me the purport was the same as Mr. Monroe had said; said I might return to New York, my place of residence, and I should hear from him in a few days, as the Secretary of the Navy was not then in Washington. The paper No. 2 is his decision. After having spent the best part of my days in the service of my country, been in many engagements, and have been badly wounded, your memorialist requests your honorable body to reinstate him in his original rank as captain of the navy of the United States. And your memorialist, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

SAMUEL ANGUS.

NEW UTRECHT, L. I., December 13, 1825.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, January 16, 1826.

SIR: In answer to your letter of the 22d ultimo, in which you enclose the paper addressed by Samuel Angus, late a captain in the United States navy, to the Senate and House of Representatives, and "request the information in this Department relative to the causes of his dismission from the service, as a captain in the navy," I have the honor to transmit, herewith, copies of several letters which contain the information asked for.

There are on file several letters and representations asking his restoration to the service; but they are not sent to you, not being embraced within the inquiry which you make relative to the causes of his dismission.

I have the honor to be, &c., SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Hon. HENRY R. STORRS, Chairman Naval Committee, House of Representatives.

NEW YORK, November 12, 1823.

SIR: I wrote you some time since, asking the command of the Philadelphia Navy yard, but have received no answer. Would you be pleased to order me to that command, or to the command of the Washington seventy-four, which is now without a post captain.

I remain, sir, your most obedient servant,

SAMUEL ANGUS, Captain United States Navy.

Hon. Mr. SOUTHARD.

BROOKLYN, L. I., New York, September 4, 1823.

SIR: The Philadelphia station and that at Sackett's Harbor are both vacant. If I should be allowed a choice, I would prefer the Philadelphia Navy yard. If not, would you be pleased to order me to the command on Lake Ontario.

I am, respectfully, sir, your most obedient servant,

SAMUEL ANGUS, Captain United States Navy.

To the Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

NEW YORK, September 13, 1823.

SIR: Having understood that you are acting Secretary of the Navy, induces me to address these lines to you. I have been some time an applicant for a frigate or a seventy-four, but have not been appointed. Hearing that the Philadelphia station wants a captain, and also that Sackett's Harbor is vacant, induces me to make an application for either of those stations. If I could have a preference, I would prefer Philadelphia; if not, will you order me to the command on Lake Ontario?

I am, sir, respectfully, your obedient servant,

SAMUEL ANGUS.

Com. RODGERS, Acting Secretary of the Navy.

NEW YORK, September 24, 1823.

SIR: Having understood that you were appointed Secretary of the Navy, I addressed a letter to you at Washington on the 4th September, but have since found you did not take your seat until about the middle of this month, induces me to send you a copy of my letter of the 4th instant, hoping you may comply with my wishes.

I remain, sir, your most obedient servant,

SAMUEL ANGUS.

To the Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, November 15, 1823.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 12th instant, I have to observe that it is not considered necessary that the Washington seventy-four should at this time have a commander of the rank of captain. No officer will, for a short time, be ordered as commander to the Philadelphia station; and, besides, it may be proper to apprise you that one or more applications for it have been made by captains senior in rank to yourself.

I am, respectfully, &c.,

SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Capt. SAMUEL ANGUS, United States Navy, New York.

NEW YORK, December 8, 1823.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 15th November, and note its contents. I feel anxious to obtain a command that will entitle me to my full pay, finding by the list that every captain junior and senior to myself are receiving $100 and eight rations, while I am only allowed $75 and six rations per month, for what reason I know not, being ready and willing at all times to serve my country.

I remain, respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

SAMUEL ANGUS.

Hon. S. L. SOUTHARD.

BROOKLYN, L. I., April 13, 1824.

MR. SOUTHARD: I have wrote you several times for the command of a navy yard, or the Washington seventy-four. If you want to know my name, you will see it at the bottom of the letter. My grandfather and father were Scotchmen, and I was born in Philadelphia. I wish you to answer me directly whether you will give me the command without any further palaver; if you don't, I will appeal to your master, the President of the United States, and my superior.

SAMUEL ANGUS.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, May 19, 1824.

SIR: I have received the enclosed letter, which purports to have been written by Captain Samuel Angus. The contents are such as to demand an inquiry into the fact whether he wrote it.

You will send for Captain Angus, and, in the presence of one or more officers, show him the letter, and inquire whether he wrote it. His answer you will return to me with the letter, at as early a day as you conveniently can.

I am, respectfully, &c., SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Captain SAMUEL EVANS, Commanding Naval Officer, New York.

U. S. NAVY YARD, New York, May 24, 1824.

SIR: Agreeably to your instructions of the 19th instant, I sent for Captain Samuel Angus, and this morning showed him the letter you enclosed me, dated Brooklyn, L. I., April 13, 1824, and signed Samuel Angus, and asked him, in the presence of Captain George W. Rodgers, whether he wrote it. His answer was, that he would not admit that he wrote it; that he had written to Mr. Southard, requesting command of a navy yard, or the Washington 74, and received no answer, but that he would not commit himself by admitting that he wrote this letter.

Captain Jones came in about this time, and in his presence Captain A. also said that he would not admit that he wrote the letter. I have the honor to return the letter enclosed to me, and also a letter from Captain George W. Rodgers to you on the subject.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, SAMUEL EVANS.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

NAVY YARD, New York, May 24, 1824.

SIR: I was present when Captain Evans, commanding the U. S. Navy yard, New York, showed Captain Angus a letter, dated Brooklyn, Long Island, April 13, 1824, signed Samuel Angus; and on asking him if the letter was written by him, (Samuel Angus,) he replied that he should not say whether it was written by him or not; he would not criminate himself; that he had written to Mr. Southard several times for the command of a navy yard, or the Washington 74, and had received no answer, and will not say that he admits writing the letter dated April 13, 1824.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE W. RODGERS.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, June 1, 1824.

SIR: Your letter to the Secretary of the Navy, dated April 13, 1824, and which was shown to you by Captain Evans, in the presence of Master Commandant Rodgers and Captain Jones, on the 24th May, has been laid before the President of the United States, and I am instructed by him to inform you that a regard for discipline, and a sense of duty to the service in which you are engaged, require that you should be separated from it.

It is believed that the records of the Department furnish no instance of conduct in any officer manifesting so total a forgetfulness of what was due to the Department and to himself. The President has therefore thought proper to dismiss you from the naval service of the United States, and you will from this time consider yourself dismissed, and no longer holding the rank or enjoying the privileges of a captain in the navy.

Respectfully, &c.,

SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

SAMUEL ANGUS, Esq., late Captain U. S. Navy, New York.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, April 27, 1825.

SIR: I enclose, by direction of the President of the United States, a copy of his decision on your case.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

SAML. L. SOUTHARD.

SAMUEL ANGUS, Esq., late Captain U. S. Navy, New York.

WASHINGTON, April 25, 1825.

I have considered the memorial of Samuel Angus, late captain in the navy of the United States, dated New York, November 30, 1824, addressed to the President of the United States, and praying to be reinstated in his original rank, or for pecuniary relief; and I have examined the documents and correspondence relating thereto; from all which it appears that the said Samuel Angus was, on the 1st of June, 1824, dismissed from the naval service of the United States, by order of the President of the United States.

Under these circumstances, I consider the legal authority of the President of the United States not competent to reinstate the memorialist in his original rank; but upon evidence, duly authenticated, that he has a just claim to a pension, as having been disabled in the line of duty, that relief should be granted him, to take effect from the time of his dismission.

The Secretary of the Navy will furnish the memorialist with a copy of this decision.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 277. [1ST SESSION.

ON AN APPLICATION TO MAKE ARMORERS IN THE NAVY WARRANT OFFICERS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 20, 1826.

Mr. HOLCOMBE, from the Committe on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial and petition of sundry blacksmiths of the city of Washington, praying that armorers in the navy be raised to the rank and grade of warrant officers, and be entitled to the same pay, rations and emoluments as carpenters, gunners and sailmakers in the service, reported:

That they have had the same under consideration, and, in answer to a letter of inquiry addressed to the Navy Department, have been informed that its armorers have the same grade and pay as was established for them in the first organization of the navy, and which have been continued to them to the present time without variation, and that no benefit is perceived which would result to the service from the change suggested.

The committee, therefore, recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 278. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE APPLICATION OF CAPTAIN ISAAC PHILLIPS TO BE RESTORED TO HIS RANK IN THE NAVY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 21, 1826.

Mr. STORRS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of Isaac Phillips, formerly a post captain in the navy of the United States, respectfully reported:

That the memorialist was appointed a captain in the navy on the 3d day of July, 1798, and ordered to the command of the sloop-of-war Baltimore, then employed on the American coast; and, during her cruise, while convoying several American merchantmen to the Havana, she fell in with a British squadron near that port, under the command of Commodore Loring, by whose orders she was boarded by a British lieutenant and a party of men, who mustered her crew and took away a number of her seamen. On the return of the memorialist to the United States, he was, by an order addressed to him by the then Secretary of the Navy Department, on the 10th January 1799, dismissed from the naval service for alleged misconduct on that occasion. He now prays to be restored to his rank of post captain in the navy, and states that his dismission was not sanctioned by the Executive Department, and that the letter of the Secretary of the Navy was written without the authority or knowledge of the President; that the circumstances under which he was placed, when his command of the said sloop-of-war was violated, were such, for the reasons alleged by him, that his dismission was not justified by any misconduct on his part; and that the Executive Department possessed no power to separate him from the naval service without a trial by a court-martial.

The committee are of opinion that it would be wholly unsafe to act upon the suggestion that the order referred to was issued without authority: and that, if the subject of relief to the memorialist was even properly addressed to the legislative power of Congress, yet the lapse of time since this order was issued, his acquiescence until this period, and the consequent injurious, if not unjust disturbance of rank, which might be produced in the naval service, present insuperable objections to any examination of the circumstances which, in the opinion of the President, required that exercise of Executive authority in the case of the memorialist.

The committee, therefore, recommend to the House the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petitioner have leave to withdraw his petition.

MEMORIAL.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

The memorial of Isaac Phillips respectfully represents: That your memorialist was appointed a captain in the United States navy on the 3d of July, 1798, and ordered to the command of the ship-of-war Baltimore, with instructions to repair to Hampton Roads and place himself under the command of Captain Thomas Truxton.

Your memorialist further states: That, at the time he left Baltimore, for Hampton Roads, in pursuance with his instructions, he had not received his commission, but was assured that it should be sent after him there; but, after delaying his sailing as long as it was practicable, to receive it, Captain Truxton, who had been apprised of his situation, represented to your memorialist that his commission would protect both ships, and by avoiding a separation, no danger was to be apprehended; and being informed of the perilous situation of a fleet of merchantmen, which, in company with Captain Truxton, they were to take under convoy from Havana to the United States, your memorialist was necessarily, though reluctantly, compelled to sail without his commission. During his cruise off Charleston, when your memorialist was ordered by Captain Truxton, he fell in with the frigate Constitution, under the command of Captain Nicholson, who ordered your memorialist to accompany him, to convoy a fleet of merchant vessels from Charleston to Havana; but owing to an accident which befel the Constitution, Captain Nicholson bore away for the United States, and left your memorialist in this unprecedented situation of being in command of a national ship without a commission, or any other sufficient document to prove his character to convoy a valuable fleet of merchant vessels to a foreign port. Thus situated, had your memorialist been actuated by any other feelings than a devotion to the interests of the service in which he was engaged, he would have left the fleet to its fate, and have returned to Hampton Roads in obedience to the orders of Captain Truxton. But a sense of duty prevailed over a more safe and cautious conduct, and he continued with the fleet to its destination, and afforded it all the aid his limited force would permit.

Your memorialist further states: That, when near the port of Havana, he fell in with a British squadron, under the command of Commodore Loring, and that, owing to a transaction which there happened, for which your memorialist was not answerable, after his return to the United States he was unceremoniously dismissed from the navy service, and, as your memorialist conceives, unjustly, illegally, and without competent authority; the particulars of which, with the evidence, are fully detailed in a printed document herewith submitted, and to which, for further and more particular information, he begs leave to refer, as occasion may require.

Your memorialist further states: That, until he was dismissed from the service, he was not aware that any cause of complaint existed against him in relation to any part of his conduct; and that, immediately upon the receipt of his letter of dismission, he applied, through the Secretary of the Navy, to the President for a court-martial, which, in the name of the President, was peremptorily refused him.

Your memorialist further states: That, at the time of his dismissal, he had no reason to suspect but that he was dismissed by the order of the President, in the due exercise of his authority, as was at that time alleged, in answer to the demand of your memorialist for a trial; and he was, therefore, led to suppose he had no redress for the injustice that had been done him, unless it was to appeal to the public, which, however it might have gratified his feelings, would not have redressed his wrongs. In this situation your memorialist remained until about five years since, when accident made him acquainted with the facts that are detailed in the printed document before mentioned, and since which time he has been diligently engaged in collecting such evidence, relating to his case, as could be obtained, in order to lay the same before the government, and to claim a restoration to his rank, or such other redress as the laws and usages of the country might allow him.

Your memorialist further states: That no more time has elapsed, since he was made acquainted with the facts herewith disclosed, than has been absolutely necessary to collect the testimony upon which his claim rests; and that, as soon as it was practicable, he applied to the President, through the Secretary of the Navy, to be restored to his rank; but the President has decided that he had not legal authority to grant such application.

Your memorialist further represents and contends: That he committed no act, while in the service, that ought, by the laws and usages of the United States, to subject him to punishment, or even censure; and that he was dismissed from the service without legal and competent authority, in violation of the law and Constitution, without the benefit of a trial by a court-martial, and even without the authority or consent of the President of the United States.

Your memorialist, therefore, prays your honorable body to take his case into consideration, and to cause him to be restored to his rank in the navy of the United States, and to grant him such other and further relief as justice demands.

Respectfully, ISAAC PHILLIPS.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 279. [1ST SESSION.

EXAMINATION OF THE HARBORS OF CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA, AND ST. MARY'S, GEORGIA, WITH THE VIEW OF ESTABLISHING A NAVY YARD.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 23, 1826.

A.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, January 19, 1826.

SIR: In answer to a resolution of the Senate of the 17th instant, that the Secretary of the Navy "be directed to communicate to this House the report of the officers employed under the act 'authorizing an examination of the harbor of Charleston, in South Carolina, and St. Mary's, in Georgia, for the purpose of ascertaining the expediency of establishing a navy yard at either of those places,' together with such charts, surveys or documents, connected with the subject, as may be in his possession," I have the honor to send a copy of the report made by Master Commandant Kearney, with the papers which accompanied it; also sundry original papers on the subject, submitted to the Department by the Hon. R. Y. Hayne.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

To the PRESIDENT of the Senate of the United States.

B.

NEW YORK, December 16, 1825.

SIR: I have the honor herewith to enclose my report in relation to the survey and examination of Charleston and St. Mary's bar, being in compliance with orders from you, appointing me superintendent of that service.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

LAWRENCE KEARNY, Master Commandant U. S. Navy.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

C.

Report to accompany a chart of Charleston bar, in South Carolina, surveyed by order of the honorable Samuel L. Southard, Secretary of the Navy.

The following are the points upon which information is required, and to which replies are herewith furnished, viz:

1. Depth of water upon the bar at the lowest and highest spring tides, and at common tides.
2. Whether the depth of water upon the bar is affected by any, and what winds, to what extent, and in what manner.
3. The strength of the current upon the bar, and to a safe anchorage within it.
4. Width of the channel upon the bar, width of the bar, and nature of the bottom; with what winds large vessels can cross the bar, bound inwards and outwards.

5. The prevailing winds at different seasons of the year.
6. The extent of safe anchorage for vessels of the largest size which can cross the bar.
7. The convenience of such anchorage for receiving supplies from the shore.
8. Facilities for obtaining good fresh water.
9. What supplies of stores and provisions can be obtained for a fleet, from the surrounding country, and to what extent at short notice.
10. Whether the harbor has good positions for a dock or navy yard.
11. How near the present shore of such position does a channel run of the same depth as the water on the bar, at high spring tides.
12. Has it good fresh water in its vicinity, and in what quantities.
13. General health of the position and quality of the soil.
14. Facilities of wharfing to the channel.
15. Whether the worm is destructive in the harbor.

Answer to question first. The depth of water on Charleston bar, at the lowest spring tides, is eleven feet at low water, and at the highest spring tides, nineteen and a half to twenty feet, high water. At common tides, at low water, there is a depth of twelve feet, and at high water, sixteen and a half to seventeen feet. A medium tide may be fairly considered to afford a depth, at low water, of twelve feet, and at high water, seventeen feet.

Paper marked No. 1, attached hereto, will afford information on this subject from experienced pilots of this harbor.

Answer to question second. The depth of water on Charleston bar is much affected by winds. Those from northeast and southeast cause it to flow from one to two feet over its ordinary depth, and those from the northwest and southwest decrease it in the extent according to the force and duration of them.

Paper marked No. 1 also affords information on the subject.

Answer to question third. The strength of current on the bar is irregular, being governed in a great degree by the winds; uninfluenced by wind, its velocity at half tide is two miles per hour, and to a safe anchorage within the bar; about two and a half when in the channel way.

Answer to question fourth. The width of the channel on the bar is 300 yards. The width of the bar is three-quarters of a mile. The bottom is hard gray sand. The best winds to cross the bar, bound inwards, are those from northeast to southeast. The best winds, bound outwards, are those from northwest to southwest.

Answer to question fifth. The prevailing winds in winter are from the northwest to northeast, and in summer from southeast to southwest.

Answer to question sixth. The first anchorage is in the Drop, or Four Fathom Hole, the light-house bearing from west to west-by-north about one mile and three-quarters distance, and is about half a mile square in extent. This anchorage is open to the winds from the northeast and southeast, but owing to the shoal of the bar, the sea is not very heavy. The holding ground is good. Rebellion Roads, off Sullivan's Island, is a commodious and safe anchorage, half a mile in extent one way, and one and a half the other, and good holding ground, susceptible of being well protected by batteries.

Answer to question seventh. From the upper part of Rebellion Roads to the city is three miles, and the facilities of obtaining supplies from the shore easy.

Answer to question eighth. Good fresh water can be obtained from a number of tanks, which are employed in the harbor. They will either supply good spring or cistern water, as may be wished, delivered on board anywhere within the bar.

Answer to question ninth. The surrounding country affords but few articles for the supply of a fleet in the way of provisions; rice may be considered the only article for an immediate extensive demand; other articles in small quantities can be obtained in the city to supply the wants of single ships; naval stores, of various kinds, can be obtained conveniently.

Paper marked No. 2, affords information on this subject.

Answer to questions ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen. Several positions present themselves for a dock or navy yard, viz: Shute's Folly, a small island of marsh in front of the city; 2d, Lamprie's Point, mouth of Wando river; 3d, Strobel's mill-seat on Cumming's Point, on the Ashley river; 4th, the old Navy yard, about four miles from town, now Cochran's farm; 5th, Hampsted, mouth of Town creek; 6th, Marsh's Island, mouth of Town creek; 7th, a lot of land above Gadsden's wharf, on Cooper river; 8th, Mey's wharf, within the limits of the city; 9th, Marsh's wharf, also within the limits of the city. A description of the above places is given in papers No. 3 and 4, and No. 5 describes the health of each, except the two last-mentioned places, Mey's and Marsh's wharves, and the lot of land above Gadsden's wharf, all of which are as perfectly healthy as any part of the city. Some of the above positions being subject to country fever, although advantageously situated for the establishment of a navy yard, are, consequently, not recommended.

Shute's Folly.—The island of marsh in front of the city, at the mouth of Cooper river, is conveniently situated; great expense, however, must be laid out, in raising, on this low alluvial foundation, a sufficient height to build on, free from the effect of tides, the highest of which flows entirely over the island. It will, therefore, be necessary to raise it four feet higher than its present greatest elevation. The channel of Cooper's river washes the western side of this site; and in some places an equal depth with that on the bar, at high spring tides, is found within thirty feet of low water mark. A basin could be easily formed in this island, for the security and preservation of timber; and the mud removed in making the basin will contribute to filling in and raising the foundation for the establishment. Fresh water must be collected in cisterns, or supplied from tanks, which supply the shipping generally. It is said to be healthy. Wharfing to the channel is easy.

2d. Lamprier's Point, at the mouth of Wando river, is reported unhealthy, as is specified in paper No. 5; but otherwise possesses great advantages. Distance to the edge of the channel, or eighteen feet water, is one hundred and seventy-three yards.

3d. Strobel's mill-seat, on Ashley river, possesses advantages in point of situation as a harbor, beyond others mentioned; but wharfing, out of the channel, is a great objection to it, the distance being four hundred and sixty yards, to reach the depth of water required, and the mud-flat is soft, making it doubtful whether a foundation could be made sufficiently permanent for building upon it a necessary distance from the shore. The health of this place, as by annexed report, seems doubtful.

4th. The old Navy yard is, undoubtedly, subject to the ague and fever, and is not therefore recommended.

5th. Extremity of the lines at Hampstead, mouth of Town creek. This place has health and good water, but is difficult of wharfing out of the channel, the distance being greater than at Strobel's mill. It likewise lies open to the southeast gales.

6th. Island of Marsh, at the mouth of Town creek. This island is conveniently situated, being contiguous to the upper part of the city, out of the way of shipping in the river. It is healthy, with bold water on the side next to Town creek. What may be said of the advantages of Shute's Folly, applies to this place, being equally low. It is easily defended, being near the northeast end of the lines of the city. This place is open to the sea breeze, and is believed to be healthy. Town creek is bold along this island, and affording a good anchorage in six and seven fathoms water for a squadron. Good fresh water is procured in the vicinity.

7. A lot of land above Gadsden's wharf. This is an extensive mud-flat, and requires wharfing out, in the same manner as at Strobel's mills, before mentioned. It is healthy and in the vicinity of good water.

8. May's wharf, at the foot of Pinckney street. This wharf was used during the late war, for the navy; it is healthy and convenient, and for building a sloop-of-war, or one or two small vessels, is sufficiently capacious. A description of it is given in paper No. 4; for immediate purposes this wharf has much to recommend it. Possessing good brick stores, and giving sufficient room for fitting out any number of vessels which it is probable may put in that harbor at any one time.

9. Marsh's wharf. This wharf is also very convenient, and it is believed to have the best foundation of any in the city, having formerly being the property of General Gadsden. Much expense and labor have been bestowed on it, to make the foundation firm and good, before it became the property of Mr. Marsh. It is well situated as regards health and convenience.

Paper marked No. 4 refers to it.

These are all the sites which have either presented themselves, in my examination, or have been recommended by others. In reply to the 15th question, whether the worm is destructive in the harbor, &c., &c., it may be said they are, but not more so than in other harbors on the coast.

To preserve health, to afford convenience for either fitting or building vessels, and to lessen the expense of a naval establishment in the harbor of Charleston, the two sites marked Nos. 8 and 9 are recommended, viz: May's and Marsh's wharves.

An establishment at either of the sites in the city, will afford both convenience for furnishing supplies, and also some security, which, under the peculiar situation of the country, at certain seasons of the year, is a paramount advantage.

In respect to the sites for a naval establishment, and other matters in relation to the harbor of Charleston, I have annexed hereto letters from gentlemen, who have very politely afforded me information, the result of their long acquaintance with the country; and I beg leave, respectfully, to submit to your inspection, as embracing, perhaps, fuller information than the time of my examination permitted me to acquire, the annexed letters and reports from Thomas Bennett, Esq., chairman of a committee of citizens, convened for the purpose of forwarding the views of establishing a Navy yard; also a joint letter from Dr. Joseph Johnson, president United States Branch Bank, and Mr. John Stoney, and Mr. John Robertson, merchants, the latter Navy agent for a number of years. As to the health of the places named, I beg leave to refer you to Dr. Logan's report, paper No. 5, who is an old practitioner, and now naval hospital surgeon; which report is corroborated by other respectable physicians of that place, with whom I have conversed.

In submitting these documents, in relation to the survey of Charleston bar, I beg to offer the following general observations, as to the fitness of the port for a rendezvous for our light cruisers in the West Indies, and seas contiguous.

The result of my examination of that place, from January to July, 1825, herewith furnished, exhibits difficulties which preclude a recommendation of the place for a naval establishment of much extent; but, for a limited one, commensurate with the depth of the channel over the bar, the importance of its location, in regard to its proximity to the West Indies, and the great facilities it affords cruisers in that quarter, as a rendezvous in the winter season, being considered, it presents many advantages claiming attention.

Charleston lies nearer the range of our West India trade than any other port south of the Chesapeake, capable of affording equal protection in war, aad repairs or supplies in case of distress. The Gulf stream facilitates your passage, and carries you within a few hours' sail of the port.

Cruisers returning for supplies will afford protection to convoys, as far as danger from pirates is apprehended.

Sailing again from Charleston, you can avail yourself of the variable winds that prevail, as far south as the Bahamas; by keeping to the eastward, as much as is necessary to gain the longitude of the passages into the West Indies, a short passage can be made; and it is practically known that a vessel can reach her cruising ground, about east end of Cuba or islands further to windward, in less time from that port than any part of the Floridas, or ports in the Bay of Mexico, which lie west, directly to leeward. Sailing up the south side of Cuba is found very tedious, and almost impracticable for small vessels, during the seasons the trade winds blow hard. The Gulf passage is preferred, and it will therefore be evident that a vessel must take a very circuitous route to gain the windward islands from these places; from Charleston her course is direct. This is a matter of great consequence to our small class of vessels, which have not the capacity to take on board large supplies of stores, and it is therefore desirable they should lose as little time as possible in going and returning to their stations.

Charleston bar admits vessels of the rate of eighteen guns, and the depth of water, on an average, may be fairly estimated at twelve feet at low water, and sixteen and a half feet at high water to seventeen feet; common tides, and at ordinary spring tides, eighteen feet; high spring tides, twenty feet. A mean of the tides will, therefore, give seventeen feet at high water. Sloops-of-war can, by means in their power of altering their trim, frequently get into Charleston with safety.

The greatest difficulty occurs in getting again to sea, as a free wind is necessary, which lowers the tide on the bar, as may be seen by referring to the report of the pilots, herewith furnished.

This difficulty is, however, somewhat obviated by the use of steamboats, which frequently tow vessels out of that harbor with great ease and safety, in calms or head winds.

Charleston bar, being composed of sand, and acted upon by gales and strong currents, is ascertained to change, in the course of time, the position of the channels; therefore, they may be found to disagree with the chart in a few years. In consideration of this change, it is suggested that, instead of the present beacon, a movable beacon be placed in front of the light-house, to be so shifted, from time to time, as to obviate the difficulty which arises in having the two objects out of range, as they now are, much to the inconvenience and danger of strangers to the coast who may attempt, without a pilot, to go in.

Suitable fortifications on Sullivan's Island and Fort Johnson reef, near Pelican bank, aided by one steam frigate, would render Charleston as secure as any point on our coast.

Directions for entering the port of Charleston.

Bring the light-house to bear northwest by west, and stand for it until you see the buoys on the bar, three in number; the outside, or southernmost buoy on the south breakers, leave to the left hand, or southward of you, about a cable's length distant; the other two buoys, on the north breakers, leave on your right hand, or to the northward of you, about half a cable's length.

After crossing the bar, bound up, steer north three-fourths west along the north breakers, which will carry you up to Sullivan's Island.

These directions will answer for vessels drawing twelve feet and under, but, over that draft, the bar should not be attempted without a pilot.

The latitude of the southeast angle of Fort Moultrie, on Sullivan's Island, is 32 degrees 46 seconds 27 minutes north, longitude not ascertained.

LAWRENCE KEARNY, Master Commandant United States Navy.

In obedience to your order of the 18th of April last, requiring an examination of St. Mary's bar, I have the honor to report: That upon a strict and careful set of soundings, taken in July and August, the general depth of water on St. Mary's bar, at low tide, was twelve feet six inches; that the depth is somewhat greater than at the time it was surveyed by Lieut. Ramage, a copy of whose report is herewith transmitted.

The difference, I conceive, arises from the effect of the prevailing winds, at the periods at which the soundings were taken; the one being in the middle of winter when the prevailing winds are blowing from the land, and the other in the summer, when they generally blow on shore.

The average depth of St. Mary's bar may be estimated at twelve feet, the same as at Charleston, taking the season through.

The following distances were actually measured at low water, viz: From thirteen feet within the bar to thirteen feet without, measured one hundred and fifty yards.

The distance from the north to the south shoals, measured three hundred yards.

The sands on the bar are much the same as on Charleston bar, subject to shift by the effect of heavy gales; but how far they have been affected since the survey of Lieut. Ramage is not clearly ascertained, as the chart of that period was not fully completed at that point, in consequence of the inclemency of the weather not permitting the taking of a sufficient number of lines of soundings, to delineate every part and feature of the bar.

Additional lines of soundings have been added, but, as before mentioned, the difference of the season of the year may produce some variance in the depth, with those before taken.

The rise and fall of tide at this bar, as well as at Charleston bar, may, upon an average, be estimated at six feet.

The directions for entering this bar, and for anchoring in the harbor, &c., in the report of Lieut. Ramage, are found to be strictly correct.

A considerable enlargement of the sandy shoals, forming the northeast side of the harbor, has taken place since the survey of Lieut. Ramage, which may eventually have a tendency to confine the water in such a narrow passage as to wash away and make a deeper channel over the main bar.

The harbors within the bar, called Cumberland and Amelia, are safe and commodious.

The convenience of this port, as a naval rendezvous for West India cruisers, is about the same as Charleston, in regard to the facilities of reaching it in the winter season.

The difficulty which arises in proceeding to a further distance north, to arrive at Charleston, is equalled by the difficulty of proceeding to a greater distance west, to arrive at St. Mary's, during the continuance of the westwardly gales, which frequently blow in the winter season very heavy from the coast.

LAWRENCE KEARNY, Master Commandant United States Navy.

D.

NEW YORK, December 31, 1825.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that acting Lieutenant Jonathan W. Sherburne has so far completed the chart of Charleston bar as to present it as a reference, connected with my report I had the honor to send in on the 16th inst.

It has been determined since my report, (by calculating upon the survey of St. Mary's bar, in 1822 and in 1825,) that the shoal at the north side of the channel advances to the southward, as at Charleston bar.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant, LAWRENCE KEARNY.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

E.

Extract from the report on the survey of the coast of Florida, made by James Ramage, United States navy.

These observations commenced at St. Mary's river, dividing Georgia from Florida, and continue with the line of the seacoast until they terminate at the Tortugas Islands.

Cumberland harbor, which lies at the entrance of St. Mary's river, is bounded on the north by Cumberland Island, on the south by Amelia and Tyger Islands, on the west by Georgia and the river St. Mary's, and on the east by a line of shoals, extending from the point of Cumberland Island in a southern direction, about five and a half miles, to the bar. It is spacious and perfectly secure, having good anchorage and a sufficient depth of water. The entrance over the bar is narrow, but not difficult, as is also the channel formed by the above line of shoals, and those extending from the shore to Amelia Island.

Connected with the Cumberland harbor is a smaller one, formed by Amelia and Tiger Islands, having sufficient depth of water for any vessels that can cross the bar, and affording the most perfect shelter from all winds.

The greatest depth of water found on the bar at St. Mary's, during three months' observation, was eighteen and a half feet; the least, eleven feet; but the ordinary rise and fall, when not acted on by tempestuous weather, or other causes, may fairly be estimated at seventeen and a half for high water, and eleven and a half for low, and generally about fifteen feet at half tide.

Directions for crossing St. Mary's bar, and sailing into Cumberland and Amelia harbors.

Bring the light-house on Cumberland Island to bear northwest one-half west and steer directly for it; the soundings will gradually shoal, from seven fathoms to five, then very close to the bar; continue the above course, which will cross the bar in mid-channel, between the north and south breakers. When over the bar, where a boat buoy is now placed, immediately steer northwest by north one-half north by compass, to clear a shoal, called the Middles, about two and a half miles distant, and extending from the shore of Amelia Island to within a short distance of the eastern side of the channel. There is a buoy on the spit of this shoal, which must be left on the larboard hand. The channel between the bar, on this buoy, is very narrow, and the deepest water close to the breakers on the east side; the soundings in the middle are from seventeen to twenty-three feet, at low water, deepening nearer to the breakers, and decreasing towards the shore. After passing the bank of the Middle, steer northwest by north one-half west for the north end of Amelia Island; the channel becomes wider, and the water gradually deeper. When up with the point of Amelia, if bound to Cumberland harbor, steer northwest by west until the light-house bears northeast distant from Cumberland Island one mile; then anchor in five fathoms mud and sand, with good holding ground. If bound to Amelia harbor, keep Amelia Point close on board, to avoid an extensive shoal which makes off from Tyger Island; and, by the lead, continue to steer along the shore of Amelia until up with the town of Fernandina; then anchor in mid-channel in six and a half fathoms water, and excellent holding ground. If bound to the town of St. Mary's from Cumberland harbor, from which the entrance to the river is plainly discoverable, steer for it, avoiding a spit which extends from the lower point of Jolly river, and enter the river St. Mary's about mid-channel; continue thus to ascend it until near the town, when, to avoid an extensive shoal making from the larboard shore, two-thirds across, it is necessary to keep close to the marsh on the starboard side. A vessel drawing eighteen feet water can navigate the river St. Mary's as high as the town.

There is a small channel of entrance to Cumberland harbor, called the Swash channel, in which there is from five to seven feet, at low water; it runs near to Cumberland Island, but so frequently varies in its direction and depth, from the effects of winds, that it should never be attempted but in extreme cases.

The latitude of the light-house on Cumberland Island is thirty degrees forty-five minutes forty-seven seconds, north. The longitude could not be accurately determined for want of time keepers. The observed variation of the magnetic needle, was six seconds fifty-eight hundredths, east; the daily variation, twenty-five seconds.

The tides at St. Mary's, when not acted on by temporary and local causes, are very regular. It is high water on the bar, on the full and change of the moon, at seven minutes forty seconds; in Cumberland harbor, at eight minutes forty-five seconds, and the average rise and fall is estimated to be six and a half feet.

The east and northeast winds, being those which mostly prevail in the winter months, and sometimes blow with great violence, create the highest tides, by forcing a large column of water upon the coast. The winds from northwest have a contrary effect; but, although they sometimes blow with violence, they do not last long, generally shifting to the northeast and east. During the spring and summer months the land and sea breezes prevail, occasionally interrupted by an easterly gale which lasts four or five days.

Remarks relative to the defence of St. Mary's.

When it is considered that St. Mary's is the only safe harbor, possessing the greatest depth of water at its entrance, on the eastern frontier of the United States south of the Chesapeake Bay, it becomes an important point on the line of maritime defences: and, whether we consider it as affording protection to our military and commercial marine in time of war, or security to the southern section of our country, the results are manifestly in favor of its being well defended. As an exterior line of defence, having these objects in view, a fort, constructed on the south point of Cumberland Island, and another opposite, on the north point of Amelia, would be the most favorable positions, the distance between them being 4,807 yards; therefore both would completely command the channel, through which all vessels must pass to reach Cumberland harbor.

A small steam battery would be a most efficient auxiliary force, if constructed to navigate the extensive line of inland navigation, to which it would not only afford protection, but, in case the works of St. Mary's were threatened by a large force, it would prevent the enemy from crossing the bar with his heavy vessels, which might be effected by lightening them of their armament, and afterwards receiving it on board when over the bar, a measure which the forts alone could not prevent.

It is very much to be regretted that the lighthouse on Cumberland Island has been located there; it now serves only as a light, but had it been placed in the proper position, on Amelia Island, it would have answered the double purpose of a light and beacon, to direct the mariner in his course across the bar. Under existing circumstances, a beacon, erected on Amelia Island, would be very serviceable in sailing to and over the bar, inside of which a boat buoy is now placed; but as it is liable to be occasionally removed, either by gales of wind, or for repairs, the necessity of a beacon is very apparent.

The climate of St. Mary's is nearly similar to that of the whole of Florida, almost continual spring. The mean temperature in the month of December was 60.54 of Fahrenheit's thermometer; in January 53.49; and in February, 49.48. The greatest thermometrical elevation during the above period was 78.76, and the lowest depression 21.40. The range of the thermometer during the summer months is from 82 to 87, and the mean annual heat may be estimated at 72.

The soil in the vicinity of St. Mary's river, near to the sea, is chiefly sandy. Large tracts of alluvion, or marsh, border on the rivers; but as no attempts have hitherto been made to reclaim them, it is problematical whether they are capable of being rendered arable. The sand hills, or, as they are called, hammock lands, produce the long staple cotton, of a good quality, which is at present the principal article of agriculture. Some attempts have been made to raise the sugar cane on the banks of the river, which so far succeeded as to produce the cane, but I am not informed that sugar was produced from it.

The district of St. Mary's furnishes abundant supplies of the finest kinds of timber, namely, live oak, hickory, pine, cypress, ash, maple, and locust. The general face of the country presents a sterile and barren appearance, apparently incapable of ever supporting a dense population, without forced upon it from causes having their origin in its geographical and political position.

The river St. Mary's is remarkably destitute of finny inhabitants. It has its source (according to a recent survey made by order of the State of Georgia) in the Okefinoka swamp, from whence it pursues a meandering course four hundred and twenty miles, until it empties itself into the sea between Cumberland and Amelia Islands. It is navigable for vessels of one hundred and fifty tons sixty miles from its entrance.

Should the works I have already proposed be erected for the defence of St. Mary's, a great security would be afforded, in time of war, to the State of Georgia and Territory of Florida, a safe retreat to our public and private armed vessels engaged in the West India seas, and an important line of inland navigation protected, extending from the river St. John's in Florida, to Charleston in South Carolina, a distance of nearly two hundred miles.

No. 1.

Replies of Michael Dulaney, a branch pilot, to questions in relation to Charleston bar.

CHARESTON SHIP BAR.

Question. What is the depth of water at high tide, at the lowest spring tide, on an average, in moderate weather?

Answer. Eighteen feet, at high water.

Ques. And what at the highest springs?

Ans. From twenty to twenty-one feet, but have known twenty-two feet at high water.

Ques. What depth at low water, common tides (average)?

Ans. From twelve to twelve and a half feet at low water.

Ques. What at high water, common tides—say, at an average, and moderate weather?

Ans. From sixteen and a half to seventeen and a half feet at high tide.

Ques. What difference in the depth of water on a bar is made by a stiff breeze from the eastward?

Ans. From one and a half to two feet, if the wind has been blowing twenty-four or thirty hours.

Ques. What difference is there with a stiff breeze off shore, say from the northward and westward?

Ans. The wind from north to northwest does not materially affect the tide, but from south-southwest to north-northwest would lessen the tides from two to three feet.

Ques. What are the rise and fall of common tides, moderate weather?

Ans. Six feet.

Ques. What are the rise and fall of spring tides, moderate weather?

Ans. From seven to eight feet, and sometimes eight and a half feet.

Ques. What are the best winds to cross the bar, with a heavy draft of water?

Ans. The winds from north to south-southeast would be best to go into port, and to go out, from north round by the west to south, are the best.

Ques. What winds affect the flowing of the tides to the greatest advantage?

Ans. From northeast to southeast.

Ques. With what draft of water can you prudently attempt to cross the bar, at common tides, and at what time of the tide would you enter the bar?

Ans. From sixteen and a half to seventeen feet at smooth water, high tide; either going in or out, one hour before high water.

Ques. With what draft would you attempt it at spring tides; and what is the greatest draft you would venture in with under the most favorable circumstances of winds and tides?

Ans. At spring tides and smooth water would attempt to bring in seventeen and a half or eighteen feet.

Ques. What is the greatest draft of water you can carry out with convenience and safety, upon an average tide, say between the neaps and springs?

Ans. From fifteen and a half to sixteen and a half feet, with the greatest safety, when the sea is smooth.

MICHAEL DULANEY, a Branch Pilot for the Bar and Harbor of Charleston.

Replies made by John Mullings, a branch pilot, to questions in relation to Charleston bar.

CHARLESTON SHIP BAR.

First question. What is the depth of water at high tide, and lowest spring tides (on an average) in moderate weather?

Answer. Seventeen feet and a half.

Second question. And what at the highest springs?

Ans. From nineteen to twenty feet.

Third question. What depth at low water common tides (average).

Ans. Twelve feet.

Fourth question. What at high water, common tides, say on an average, and moderate weather?

Ans. Eighteen feet.

Fifth question. What difference in the depth of water on the bar is made by a stiff breeze from the eastward?

Ans. From a foot and a half to two feet.

Sixth question. What difference is there with a stiff breeze off shore, say from the northward and westward?

Ans. The north wind lowers the tide none; the west wind from one to two feet, according to the strength of the breeze.

Seventh question. What are the rise and fall of common tides, moderate weather?

Ans. Six feet water.

Eighth question. What are the rise and fall of spring tides, moderate weather?

Ans. From seven to eight feet.

Ninth question. What are the best winds to cross the bar, with a heavy draft of water?

Ans. From northeast to southeast.

Tenth question. What winds affect the flowing of the tides to the greatest advantage?

Ans. From north to east.

Eleventh question. With what draft of water can you prudently attempt to cross the bar at common tides, and at what time of the tide would you enter the bar?

Ans. Seven teen feet, at five hours flood.

Twelfth question. With what draft would you attempt it at spring tides, and what is the greatest draft you would venture in with under the most favorable circumstances of winds and tides?

Ans. Eighteen feet.

Thirteenth question. What is the greatest draft of water you can carry out with convenience and safety upon an average tide, say between the neaps and springs?

Ans. Sixteen and a half feet.

JOHN MULLINGS, Branch Pilot for the Bar and Harbor of Charleston.

No. 2.

Report of John Robertson, Esq., late Navy agent at Charleston.

PORT OF CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA.

Question first. The depth of water upon Charleston bar, at the lowest and the highest spring tides, and at common tides?

Answer. The lowest tides are from June to August; spring tides, the highest, are in April, May, September and October; common tides from November to March. Water on the bar, lowest 17 feet; highest spring tides, 21 feet; common tides, 18 feet.

Question second. Whether the depth of water upon the bar is affected by any, and what winds? to what extent, and in what manner?

Ans. The tides are affected by southerly and westerly winds, which prevail from June till September, and are called neap tides. The northerly winds prevail from November to March. The northeast winds raise the tides, and the southwest and west reduce the most. At times, the tides rise only three and a half to four, and, at other times, with a northeast to southeast wind, to eight feet. Mr. Michael Delaney, one of the oldest pilots, states he can carry out a merchant ship drawing seventeen or seventeen and a half feet, and a man-of-war of eighteen feet, and that there would be more safety for the latter in crossing the bar, arising from their superior sailing.

Question third. The strength of the current on the bar, and to a safe anchorage within it?

Ans. The strength of the flood upon the bar is about two knots; when the wind is southeast to southwest and northeast, one and a half knots. The ebb runs with the usual winds three to three and a half; and if there is a fresh in the river, about four knots. A safe anchorage within the bar may be had, the light bearing west by south in three and a half and four fathoms. Ships-of-war generally anchor in the Roads, opposite Sullivan's Island, in seven to nine feet, (probably fathoms.)

Question fourth. Width of the channel upon the bar? Fifth Width of the bar? Sixth. And nature of the bottom? Seventh. With what winds large vessels can cross the bar, inwards and outwards?

Ans. Width of the channel upon the bar from north to south, one-quarter of a mile. Fifth. Width of the bar east and west, about a mile; the shoal part about three hundred yards. Sixth. Bottom sand and mud. Seventh. Vessels cross the bar inwards, with the winds from north to south; and outward from north to west.

Question eighth. The prevailing winds at different seasons of the year?

Ans. The prevailing winds from June to September, are southeast to west; from September to January, north to east; from January to May, northeast and southwest.

Question ninth. The extent of safe anchorage for large vessels, after crossing the bar, may be from Cumming's Point, opposite Sullivan's Island, all the way to the city, an extent of six miles and upwards.

Question tenth. The convenience of such anchorage for receiving supplies from the shore?

Ans. The convenience of such anchorage for receiving supplies is easy, unless a gale of wind should happen, which is seldom. Packet boats and steamboats can always be had, should vessels of war not choose to use their own boats and men.

Question eleventh. The facilities for obtaining good fresh water?

Ans. Good fresh water is supplied by tanks with forcing pumps from good wells. There are large cisterns upon the wharves which afford a good supply, if preferred.

Question twelfth. What supplies of provisions and stores for a fleet could be obtained from the surrounding country, and to what extent, at short notice?

Ans. The planters of this State cultivate rice and cotton, and do not turn their attention to salting pork and beef; nor growing any great quantity of wheat for grinding and putting up flour, preferring to depend upon the north for supplies of salted provision, butter, lard, flour, &c. In the event of a fleet calling at this port for supplies, it is admitted only a small quantity could be had, except fresh beef, pork, salted beef, salted pork, bread, flour, and whiskey, &c. If it was known that the smaller sized vessels of war would resort to this for supplies, merchants would always keep on hand such articles as may be required in every line of business. The United States might have a depot of salted beef, pork, butter, and such articles as would keep in this climate, and purchase the smaller as occasion required.

Question thirteenth. Whether the harbor has good positions for a dock or navy yard?

Ans. It has several good positions. A navy yard might be established upon a scale suited to the depth of water upon the bar at spring tides, at different places.

First. Opposite to the city, upon the same island whereon Castle Pinckney is erected; to the north of the castle is a body of marsh, which, at a considerable expense, might be excavated and deepened for a dock; the mud and sand taken out would, in part, raise a dam or bank to erect the necessary buildings upon, aided with palmetto logs and stone. There are plenty of shells on banks in the rivers, which, with coarse lime, a strong work could be erected; a cistern could be built to contain all the rain water that might fall upon the buildings. The castle has a cistern to supply a soldiery. The channel runs within fifty yards of the marsh. A rough sketch has been made of a dock. The advantage of a depot adjoining the castle would be that the seamen and workmen could, at all times, be kept at their post, and prevented from getting intoxicated at houses in the city. This situation would require a strong embankment to resist a rise of waters during a hurricane.

Second. Three miles above the city, on the eastern side of Cooper river, is Lempriere's Point, where there is a basin, surrounded nearly by high land, the diameter of which is 150 yards; this could be excavated and deepened so as to admit vessels, at spring tides, of ten feet, to enter from the river. Wells could be sunk to supply all the good water that might be wanted. This site could be fenced in and the men prevented from visiting the city. The health, at all seasons, is said to be good, as the proprietor lives there all the year. August, September and October are the sickly months.

Third. The site where the John Adams was built is four miles by land from the city, upon a bold creek of five fathoms. The situation is low, and water bad; all who have lived there the year round never escape the fall fevers; the men cannot be prevented from coming to town at night.

Fourth. Between Gadsden's wharf and wharves to the south is a body of marsh land, belonging to the estate of the late Col. Henry Laurence; this is for sale. It would require to be dammed in, and a wharf of palmetto logs erected, in the manner all have been done on Cooper river, at a considerable expense.

Fifth. There is a bold creek (Town) above Gadsden's wharf, that is twenty feet deep at low water, and runs near the land called Hempstead. A wharf could be run from the high land, a distance of 450 yards. The water, with which the tanks supply the shipping, is from this quarter. This site may be a mile and a half from the centre of the city, and, to be improved, would require a considerable sum.

Sixth. There are shipwrights, who offer their wharves for sale, and would require improvements.

Seventh. There is a tide water saw-mill upon the margin of Ashley river, upper end of Tradd street. There is a considerable parcel of land formed with mud and sawdust. A wharf has been run out with palmetto logs, and filled in part; there is ten feet at low water: this mill and site may be purchased.

The river is five or seven feet deep, and is upon the western side of the city, and secure from northeast and southeast winds, in hurricane seasons: this situation is capable of extensive improvements; cisterns must be built to contain rain water that may fall on the buildings. There are not any wells of good water, easy of access, on this river. All pine lumber, and some other kinds, comes into this river, fresh from the country, for the mills on both sides of the city. There is also another situation, a quarter of a mile above, on a creek, which would require deepening to come near the land.

Eighth. A wharf, with two brick stores, tiled and slated, may be purchase[1], or leased, from Mr. F. C. May, adjoining the ship yards, on Cooper river, the same that was occupied during the war by the Navy Department, and since for a time.

This could be fenced in upon two sides, and would answer as heretofore, upon a small scale. By adding a head to the present wharf, a sloop-of-war could haul on each side, land stores, careen and refit; there may be eighteen feet at the head of the wharf; bottom soft mud.

This is the most eligible situation in the city for a temporary establishment, all the mechanics being near at hand. A cistern could be made, at a small expense, to supply vessels in part.

Question fourteenth. How near does the channel run to the shore?

Ans. To Castle Pinckney, about 40 or 50 yards; to one wharf on Cooper river, 30 to 40 yards; to Lempriere's Point, 30 to 40 yards; any vessel that can cross the bars can lay at anchor at those distances from the shore, in 4½ to 5 and 7.

Question fifteenth. General health and quality of the soil?

Ans. There are only three months considered sickly in this State—August, September, and October. Soil, in some places, mud and sand. High land generally sandy.

Question sixteenth. Wharfing to the channel?

Ans. Palmetto logs resist worms, and are in general use in building wharves, and may be had in abundance. Stone may be had from the north to fill up, or build and shingle. Ballast from merchant ships for the like purpose.

Question seventeenth. Whether the worm is destructive in the harbor?

Ans. The worms cut from April to November, and a new bottom has been destroyed by them in six weeks, so as to require new plank.

Question eighteenth. Price of provisions of every kind?

Ans. The prices of provisions vary, according to seasons, and a variety of occurrences; and to fix a stationary rate is not practicable in any city of the United States.

Question nineteenth. The facilities of obtaining timber?

Ans. The facility of obtaining pine timber, cypress, and white oak, is easy; it is cut on Edisto river, and rafted to the city: live oak is cut on the island, and upon the main land, and is sent to the city in small vessels constructed for the purpose.

Question twentieth. Number of mechanics to be obtained, and laborers; also, the daily wages of each?

Ans. There are shipwrights, white and colored, 120; black and whitesmiths, 130; gunsmiths, 15; block and pump makers, 25; boat-builders, 16; ship-joiners, 10; brassfounders and coppersmiths, 10; sailmakers, 32; riggers, 20; painters, 60; coopers, 60; turners, 16; tin-workers and plumbers, 20; millwrights, 16; wheelwrights, 34; cabinet-makers, 60; coachmakers, 40; house-carpenters, 200; tanners, 40; bakers, 60; butchers, 100; saw-mills, impelled by water and steam, 8; iron foundries, 2; ropewalks, 2; ship-chandlers, 6. There are also a number of other tradesmen, whose occupation is essential in the community. The wages of white workmen is $2 per day; black, or colored, $1; and colored laborers can be hired at ten or twelve dollars per month. The general average of wages is $1.12½ per day, and is cheaper than in Boston.

JNO. ROBERTSON.

CHARLESTON, May 18, 1825.

No. 3.

CHARLESTON, August 5, 1825.

DEAR SIR: The polite acceptance of the offer made you, to contribute our personal services and information in aid of the important investigation you are commissioned to make, touching the expediency of establishing a national Navy yard at Charleston, with the specified points of inquiry subsequently received, were early submitted to the consideration of the committee. A desire to impart full and minute information, the difficulty of procuring a simultaneous action on subjects eliciting the opinions of several, and your indulgence limiting the suspension of this reply to our own convenience, we respectfully offer as apologies for the time permitted to elapse since your communication was received.

To the several inquiries whether there are good positions in this harbor? Their proximity to a depth of water equal to that on the bar? The facility for obtaining fresh water? And the general health of such positions? the committee have instructed me to make the subjoined replication.

There are several, well adapted to the uses of the government. The best, in some respects, are already occupied for commercial uses, and can now be procured only at a cost which it is probable would constitute a serious objection. Those which remain may be procured and improved for a trifling amount, and do unquestionably offer some advantages of which the first are not susceptible.

On the Cooper river, and within the corporate limits of Charleston, is a lot, the property of the heirs of the late Henry Laurence, very capacious and contiguous to springs of fresh water. The health of this spot may be estimated by the health of the city; it consists of shoal and high marsh lands, occasionally covered by the tides. The depth of water is 20 to 25 feet, where the improvements will be made, leaving an extensive dock in the rear. The distance from the high land to the channel is 1,100 feet.

The next lot of land above Gasden's wharf, for a description, admits of reference to the first; possesses the same advantages and disadvantages, is without the corporate limits of the city, and is supposed to be generally healthy, even to foreigners.

At the eastern extremity of the Charleston line another has been noticed, but its inaccessible location renders it ineligible, though presenting the advantages of health and good water.

The ship yard on Town creek, occupied by the late Paul Pritchard, and by him selected for building the frigate John Adams, is three miles from the city. The high land is contiguous to the channel, and affords an adequate depth of water. This situation is sickly in the fall of the year; and good fresh water can be procured only by cisterns, or transportation in tanks.

Hobcaro, the property of William Pritchard, is a bluff on the eastern side of Cooper river, 2½ miles from the city, at the base of which is an adequate depth of water for any naval purposes. The health of this position is equivocal; it is the received opinion that fall fevers occur sometimes here. Fresh water is abundant, and very good. There are one or more positions contiguous to this spot, and very highly esteemed by practical men for their adaptation to the uses contemplated. Prince's Point, and a piece of land, the property of W. Smith, jr., may merit your inspection.

Schute's Folly, the island of marsh land, opposite the city, on which Castle Pinckney is located, affords two or more admirable positions; a light cost, in a national view, would render this place the very best site for such an establishment. The health of this place has often been tested, and may, with no impropriety, be compared with Sullivan's Island. Its insular situation will advance and facilitate the establishment and maintenance of subordination and discipline; while it places without the reach of depredation the materials and stores requisite for naval uses. Fresh water may be obtained in tanks, or received into cisterns. The channel on both sides of the island affords an adequate depth of water for any vessel that can pass the bar.

These are all the positions on the Cooper river, and one of its confluent streams, that the committee think would answer. Your attention will now be directed to the Ashley. The first, on Mr. Duncan's mill establishment, is on the edge of the river; at his wharf a depth of 18 feet water will be found, and any required depth by a small projection of the work towards the channel. A good road has been made to cross the marsh 700 or 800 feet in length to this point; it would be requisite to augment the space now occupied as a lumber yard, by filling above the high tides the contiguous marsh lands. Fresh water must be procured for this position through the intervention of tanks or cisterns. This situation is considered healthy. In ascending the river a few hundred yards, another situation is offered, holding a high place in public estimation: Mr. Martin Stroble's steam-mill lots, and the lots of Messrs. Hurtz, Brisbane and Hadeston, to the west. An extensive shoal of 7 or 800 feet is here interposed between the high land and the channel of the river. This situation is healthy, affords good fresh water, is covered from equinoctial gales, and the very best for obtaining the requisite supplies of materials, fuel, &c. The two latter places are within the corporate limits of the city.

From this position to, or near the Grove, the residence of the late William Lowndes, a margin of marsh land of 1,500 to 2,000 feet skirts at the river; at the Grove the river again washes the high land, affording a site easily improved, yielding a supply of good water, but not so accessible as either of those first mentioned, and supposed to be sickly in the fall of the year.

These are all the positions near or within the city, which the committee think adapted to the contemplated work. It is apprehended that objections may arise to the extent of shoal and marsh land, which must be necessarily embraced in the completion of a navy yard. Such objections will disappear when the original cost, the facility of improvement, and the great advantages they offer are considered. The lands thus circumstanced are usually procured at a small cost, and the materials for filling and raising them cheap and abundant.

Individual enterprise, even under prospects of equivocal benefit, evinces the correctness of this opinion; nor are the advantages they present to be disregarded. It is indispensable to every such establishment, in this climate, to have the command of a commensurate dock for depositing and preserving the timber and other materials required for the building and repair of vessels. In such they are kept without injury from the worm, for many years, and obtain a durability proportioned to their continuance in the salt water; the saline particles percolating and displacing the natural moisture or sap. The expediency and propriety of such an appendage cannot be too earnestly urged.

Experience favors the general impression that the worm is not so destructive in this harbor as in lower latitudes. Small vessels, navigating the rivers and creeks near Charleston, require to be careened two or three times in the year, but, as they are protected only by the pitch, and perpetually exposed to have it removed by the shell banks and shoals, on which they frequently lie at low water, this extraordinary case will not surpise. The materials for building and repairs are perfectly protected by the docks, previously the subject of remark; vessels of war on a southern station are usually shielded by copper.

The material uniformly employed in constructing the wharves of Charleston is the cabbage or palmetto tree. The strength and durability of this wood, when skillfully united, and its capacity to resist the worm considered, places it high in estimation. In the employment of this, but a small sum is requisite for the completion of an extensive work. Pine wood, mud, sand and stones furnish the filling, and abundantly supplied.

There would be no difficulty in procuring an adequate supply of provisions for vessels of war. The quantity would keep pace with the emergency, and increase as rapidly as the public wants should indicate. During the last war, when our northern supplies were intercepted, an abundance of wholesome flour, and of cattle and hogs, were furnished to the troops on various southern stations from this place. Independently of the resources of this State, Tennessee, Kentucky, North Carolina, and Georgia would contribute, on any new emergency, to answer every possible demand. These States were resorted to when our usual resources had failed, but the facility, in a time of peace, of procuring provisions from the northern States would remove every doubt of a deficiency.

Thus far, we have replied, specifically, to the interrogatories you were pleased to make to the committee; and, under the general privilege of furnishing any other information, we take the liberty to subjoin the following remarks:

The bar has been, and is still, regarded a potent obstacle to the establishment of extensive naval operations at this place. We are fully aware of the reasoning on this subject, and the minute practical information you have procured by a laborious investigation. It is a matter, however, so vitally important to the prosperity of Charleston, that we would lean confidently on your indulgent attention for the suggestions here offered. Mr. Michael Delany, a man of respectability and great experience in his pursuit as a pilot, declares, with confidence, that a vessel of war drawing 18 feet water, and a merchant ship of 17 feet, can cross the bar: the superior sailing of the former rendering it more safe than for the latter. Within the knowledge of the committee, two merchant ships did go out a few days since, one of them drawing 16½ feet, and the other 17 feet, on an ordinary tide. There is, however, not one of higher authority than your own to attest these facts. If, however, a conclusion hostile to our desires results from the impression that the depth of water is insufficient, and the bar dangerous, we do conceive that the removal of the impediment is not only within the power but the province of the national government. In seeking the remedy, it is expedient to recur to the originating cause of the defect. One of the early acts of the corporate authorities of Charleston was to fix the rates of pilotage. By these, vessels draw-21 feet are recognized, and could not have obtained a place there had any obstruction existed to their passing in safety. If, then, (and the fact may be further illustrated by reference to other official documents,) there was 22 or 23 feet water on the bar, the difference which now appears is calculated to excite alarm, and interest all those whose duty it may be to trace the cause and arrest an evil which threatens to annihilate the commerce of Charleston. This cause, the committee think, will be found in the receding points of Sullivan's and James' Islands. It is the opinion of several old and observing gentlemen, that, at the period when General Moultrie so gallantly defended the Palmetto fort, the proximate points of those islands were from six to seven hundred yards nearer than at present. As this outlet widens, the bar necessarily becomes shallower.

By the dispersion of the confluent streams of Ashley and Cooper rivers over this augmented space, the currents lose their effective and direct action, are divided, and minor channels are formed, and the deeper gradually closed.

Should the government carry into effect a favorite and long contemplated measure of defence, that of constructing a permanent fort at the eastern extremity of the shoal or bank leading from the present site of Fort Johnson to Sullivan's Island, and uniting it to James' Island by a sea wall, and protecting Fort Moultrie by a similar wall projected from the west end of Sullivan's Island, in process of time the bar would afford a greater depth of water, the city obtain the defence it has long required, and the port of Charleston, in its increasing commerce and the advantages it would present to the naval service, amply refund the sums thus applied. It is confidently believed by the committee that Gen. Bernard recommended this position as the best in the harbor for a fort. It will not certainly be regarded immaterial to the general government to have a secure and always accessible point of rendezvous between the capes of the Chesapeake and the Florida. During a period of war it is indispensable. There is certainly not one on this great extent of coast more convenient, or improvable at a less cost.

The number of mechanics at Charleston vary from twelve to fifteen hundred; of these one hundred and twenty are ship carpenters, particularly devoted to that branch of business. This number may be augmented in a short time to answer every possible call. Our young men have hitherto been prevented from engaging in a pursuit unhappily rendered unproductive, and in which there rarely occurs an opportunity for the display of skill or exercise of talents.

Since the adoption of the Constitution, and consequent surrender of the imposts to the general government by this State, this branch has declined; for, with the exception of a vessel of war contributed by this State, or perhaps a few gun boats and revenue cutters ordered by the general government, and some slight repairs to vessels on southern stations, the patronage of the general government has been withheld. It will not then be looked for that we should at once compete with the northern cities, into which the national favors have flowed with a perpetual and exhilarating stream, eliciting, improving, and rewarding exertion.

Amongst the mechanics of Charleston are many ship-joiners and blacksmiths, emulous to vindicate their just claims to merit and a portion of the public favor. Our bakers are confessedly equal to any in the Union for their promptitude in executing orders, and the excellence and durability of their bread. If to these we add the low rates at which ordinary laborers may be employed, it will not surprise when we assert that a vessel of war can be built and fitted for sea, under all the disadvantages we labor, for as little money as in any other city in the Union.

The number of seamen, it is reasonable to infer, will have a just ratio to the commerce of a sea port, but we indulge the opinion that it will rather exceed than fall short of that proportion at Charleston. From Cape Henry to the mouths of the Mississippi, an extensive coast is presented, on many parts of which are the allurements to water excursions, which primarily promote that knowledge and those dispositions which constitute the sailor.

From such, in a time of emergency, (and the case has already occurred) influenced by patriotism or interest, a considerable number have embarked, and with adequate skill, to be highly useful either as mariners or seamen; to such there is no point of rendezvous superior on this extent of coast to Charleston.

Our Marine hospital has acquired a reputation which places it deservedly high in that class of public institutions. For, notwithstanding an insufficient allotment of funds under the acts of Congress relating to this subject, the city council of Charleston, influenced by a commendable regard to this valuable class of citizens, have exhibited the means of securing to them the best attendance and medical skill of which such an establishment was susceptible. It is now so well organized and conducted that, for the number of patients, as many pass from it cured or relieved as from any other perhaps in the world, while a complaint is rarely or never heard.

We are sensible, sir, of the trespass committed on your time and attention; but the deep importance of the subject, and the great interest we represent, will, it is hoped, furnish satisfactory apology.

With the highest respect and regard, your obedient servant,

THOS. BENNETT,

Chairman Committee of Citizens interested in the establishment of a Navy Yard at Charleston.

P. S.—I have been directed to add that vessels can now, with the aid of steamboats, cross the bar, without regard to the direction of the wind, during the day; and, with the aid of another light, could pass at night with equal safety and facility.

Capt. LAWRENCE KEARNEY.

No. 4.

Letter from Joseph Johnson and John Stoney, in relation to the port of Charleston affording suitable sites for a Navy yard.

CHARLESTON, January 3, 1825.

DEAR SIR: You have paid us the compliment to ask information respecting the sites for a Navy yard, in the vicinity of Charleston. We cheerfully afford such as we possess, but can only suggest some of the relative advantages and disadvantages of each. Your better judgment must decide.

We suppose it an object of some importance that such an establishment should be as near to the city as would be consistent with health, for the convenience of portage and transportation, and for mutual support in case of invasion.

The first that we propose is that well known as Strobel's steam saw-mill, and the land running from it westwardly, to the channel of Ashley river. This is the situation resorted to for safety, by vessels, during our severe N. E. and S. E. gales. It is safe from both town and country fever, if the workmen will confine themselves to that neighborhood during its prevalence; and affords, we believe, a sufficiency of good drinking water. It is the most convenient that can be chosen for procuring all necessary supplies of yellow pine timber and plank, and for preserving these and other timber and spars. It is feared that the wharf, required to reach a sufficient depth of water for large vessels, would be expensive, both in its construction and repairs. It is said that, although there is an extensive flat on this shore, the channel makes a bend near to this particular situation; on this point you must examine for yourself, or obtain correct information from Mr. Beach.

At the northeastern extremity of the lines, in Hampstead, about one and a half miles from the city, is a high and healthy situation, with a good landing and excellent water. This has been recommended, provided the adjoining marsh land be purchased to the channel of Town creek. Here it would be necessary to build a short wharf, and connect it with the high land by a causeway and bridge; the distance about one-fourth of a mile. The depth of water would be abundant, and the whole establishment sheltered.

Castle Pinckney, and the island on which it stands, is likewise recommended for our purpose. Its insular situation, proximity to the city, protection from the castle, facility of transportation by water, fine depth of water, and probable health of the residents, go far to recommend it. On the other hand, the marsh is all very low, and overflowed by every spring tide; the southeastern portion, in particular, is exposed to gales. No fresh drinking water is to be had, except from rain collected in cisterns. The northern extremity is a shell bank, with a fine landing, on which a stone, or other wharf, and permanent buildings, may be easily erected at a very moderate expense. Vessels, even of the largest size, would be pretty secure from gales, either lashed to this wharf, or at anchor near it. The distance from the castle to this extremity is three-fourths of a mile.

The old ship yard where the John Adams was built has some advantages, but is supposed to be too distant for convenience of transportation, and, by some, is believed to be exposed to country fever.

The situations at Hobcaw, have the same advantages and disadvantages as the preceding, the latter in a greater degree; and some danger may be apprehended from an enemy in time of war.

The anchorage, everywhere, is very good, and the annoyance from worms, although common in the summer months, not worse than in other southern ports.

We are, very respectfully, your very humble servants,

JOS. JOHNSON.
JOHN STONEY.

Letter from Charles P. May, offering his wharf as a suitable place for a Navy yard.

CHARLESTON, August 11, 1825.

DEAR SIR: By your desire, I address you these few lines at your departure for the north, to give you the dimensions and other particulars of the wharf property which will be disposed of to the United States, if wanted; a part of which was formerly occupied in this place by the Navy Department as a navy yard.

Both wharves have complete stores on them, of brick, and tiled roofs. Of the south wharf, formerly where the navy yard was kept, you have herewith a plan, according to which, the dimensions are thus:

The wharf, 282 feet long, from Concord street east, to the channel of Cooper river; it may be carried out further, if required. The front of the same is 87 feet; width of wharf, 43 feet; dock on south side, 30 feet; and on north, 14 or 15 feet; length of the docks, about 220 feet. To the west of Concord street (50 feet wide) there is a lot with two large brick stores; the lot measures 87 feet by about 80 feet. For this said property, as was mentioned on a former occasion to Captain Sinclair, thirty thousand dollars will be taken.

Adjoining the said property, to the north, is my father's wharf and stores, of the following dimensions (description):

Front, about 112 feet, and extends from the east of Concord street, (as the other wharf) to the channel of Cooper river, within about 20 feet as far as the other, say the south wharf; width of the wharf, 46 feet. On the south side, is a dock of 35 feet wide, and on the north, 32 feet.

To the west of Concord street, (as the other property) there are three brick stores, on a lot of about the same dimensions as the other, and on the wharf there are, besides, two wooden stores, tiled roofs.

Between the two wharves, there is a street, as you see marked in the plan (Pinckney street), 33 feet wide, which adds to the dock room. From the said plan, you have the appearance of both properties. For the latter, my father will be willing to take thirty-five thousand dollars.

I have given you all the information I can; you know its situation as to the good order in which the premises are, as well as the security and safety thereof, and other particulars. Meanwhile excuse my haste.

I am, very respectfully, CHAS. G. MAY.

To Captain KEARNEY.

P. S.—I have to beg you will inform me, should there be any disposition on the part of the United States to purchase.

I will be ready to furnish any further information respecting the said property, if required, or whenever addressed on the subject.

Letter from James Marsh, offering his wharf as a suitable site for a Navy yard.

CHARLESTON, August 12, 1825.

SIR: I am not positive in my recollection whether, in the letter addressed to you by the standing committee, respecting the local sites and situations in the harbor of Charleston most suitable for a naval establishment or ship yard, the sites of Lamprier's Point, or Marsh's ship yard, at what was formerly Gadsden's wharf, were mentioned as suitable situations. If they were not mentioned in that letter of general information, I beg leave to draw those two last situations to your recollection. Lamprier's, or Prince's Point, I know you have particularly examined, and is on the opposite side of the town.

My ship yard, at the wharf, (formerly Gadsden's,) is situated in the upper part of the city of Charleston, and is an old established and firm place, the situation perfectly healthy, and handy to the saw-mills. The lumber, plank, &c., &c., are all brought from the mills by carts, and dropped at the yard gate, handy to the city for any and every use that may be required.

There are four fathoms water at the head of the wharf and at the sides. I heave out and repair ships. There is a good building yard and launching slip, which I have used for a ship yard these last eighteen years, and have built a great many vessels in that time.

There is a new dwelling-house on the premises, with double piazzas on the front, (which is to the south,) and the two ends built on a stone foundation, and of the best materials, with cellar kitchen underneath, and store rooms, pantries, and dressing rooms, counting-house room, and all the necessary requisites, all of which are finished in the best manner. It is suitable for the residence of a private family, or persons attending the ship yard. It is of very little use for me to describe the place to you, as you have a knowledge of it already. But should my ship yard be deemed by government a proper and suitable situation for a naval ship yard for Charleston, and as it can be occupied and made use of immediately, without any expense to government, I would be disposed to sell it for the use of the government, (when I would not do it to an individual.) My price for the whole premises, including the house and wharf, workshops and workshed, would be twenty-five thousand dollars, which is considered a very reasonable price for that property.

N. B.—I omitted to mention there is a very fine brick cistern on the premises, containing thirty-five to forty hogsheads of rain water for the use of the house and ship yard. From the upper piazza is a fine view for an observatory, commanding a view of the whole harbor and sea, vessels running down to the bar, or passing our harbor.

I wish you to lay this letter, with your other information, before the Hon. Secretary of the Navy, or other department of government that you may be connected with in your official and private capacity.

I am, sir, with much respect, your humble servant,

JAMES MARSH.

LAWRENCE KEARNEY, Esq.

No. 5.

Report of Dr. George Logan in relation to the health of the several positions in the harbor of Charleston, proposed as suitable for a Navy yard.

CHARLESTON, S. C., April 27, 1825.

SIR: The subject of the healthiness of the several places near this city, which have been examined and pronounced suitable sites for a Navy yard, has received all that attention which its interest and importance require. In compliance with your desire, I submit an opinion, the result of my diligent inquiries.

1. Lamprier's Point, (Prince's ferry place.) This is distant about three miles northeast from Charleston, on a bluff commanding the entrance of Wando river. Many circumstances concur to render this an eligible situation; but although generally healthy, the inhabitants are not exempt from occasional attacks of ague and fever, especially those who are much exposed after a wet summer. The drinking water is excellent.

2. Shute's Folly, the mud island on which Castle Pinckney has been built, distant about one mile east from Charleston. This is not liable to the foregoing objection, there being here no noxious or miasmatic exhalations, or other causes of endemical fevers. It is, however, much exposed to the violence of storms and inroads of the sea, and produces no wholesome water, either for drinking or culinary purposes.

3. Strobel's mill-seat, Cummen's Point. This place is perfectly healthy at all seasons, the drinking water excellent, and the distance from the immediate vicinity has been known to be exempt from yellow fever, when that disease prevails in Charleston.

4. The late Navy yard, formerly Captain Cochran's farm, distance about four miles from Charleston. The drinking water is good, but the situation is liable to the same objections noticed in our view of Lamprier's Point.

5. The entrance of Town creek, Hampstead. This, in point of salubrity, equals Strobel's mill-seat. The drinking water is good.

6. Marsh Island, Woodlands. This is liable to some of the inconveniences mentioned in our description of Shute's Folly. The situation is healthy.

I am, sir, yours, respectfully,

GEORGE LOGAN, Naval Hospital Surgeon.

LAWRENCE KEARNEY, Esq., Master Commandant U. S. Navy.

F.

WASHINGTON, January 16, 1826.

SIR: I take the liberty of sending you some papers containing additional information on the subject of the expediency of establishing a Navy yard at Charleston, S. C., of which you may make any use you think proper.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant, ROBERT Y. HAYNE.

The Hon. SECRETARY of the Navy.

No. 1.

Answers of John Strohecker.—The bar at Charleston.

Question first. I answer, from the information of the oldest sea captains and pilots of this port, that the largest ships trading to Charleston draw from sixteen to seventeen feet of water; that they go out with safety, and easily; that Charleston is a port of as easy and safe access as any port in the United States, and more so than many. From Cape Roman to Martin's Industry, there is a gradual, unvaried slope in approaching the bar.

Question second. From information of pilots and the oldest sea captains of the port, it appears that the John Adams, built and equipped here, drawing seventeen feet eleven inches water, was piloted out, and in perfect safety; that the American ships-of-war Hornet, Wasp, (a sloop-of-war commanded by Captain Jones,) Enterprise, and many others, during and since the late war, have visited Charleston, and never experienced any delay in going out or in; that the Indian, Driver, Zebra, Cherub, and other British sloops-of-war, with many heavy British brigs-of-war, have visited Charleston, and never met with delay at the bar, or in being furnished with supplies. The Margaret and Hindostan, ships built in Charleston, drawing seventeen feet water, traded always to this port; that, during the late winter, the British ships John and Mary, and Royalist, drawing seventeen feet six inches, were loaded with rice and mahogany in this port.

I beg leave here to state that, in my opinion, the bar of Charleston can be deepened at a small expense, and without risk, and that it ought to be done by the United States, in connection with their fortifications about to be erected in this port: if necessary, I will give my idea how it can be effected.

The situation of Charleston as to supplies.

Question third. Charleston is situated in a country abounding in grain and cattle, and supplied in those articles by the States of North Carolina, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama and Georgia, especially by their cattle, hogs, sheep, flour, &c., which come to it for sale—flour often selling as cheap, and always nearly so, as in the northern ports, and whose market affords, every day throughout the year, vegetables of the best kinds, with beef, pork, veal, mutton, venison, fish and poultry, as cheap, generally, as in the northern cities; in proof of which I refer to the public institutions being now supplied with beef, veal, pork and mutton, at four and three-quarter cents per pound. As for water, there is a spring near the city, accessible at all times to boats and water craft, sufficient to supply any navy, and keeps well at sea. I, therefore, say, a city so situated can afford supplies for any fleet, and that Charleston certainly affords more facilities, better and cheaper supplies to vessels-of-war, than any port between the capes of Virginia and Florida.

I would refer to the statements of Captain Pratt, and others, now in my possession.*

Health of Charleston.

Question fourth. Vessels coming into Charleston during the summer season, free from epidemic, will, with little or ordinary care of keeping the seamen from dissipating habits, a precaution necessary in every port, and not more so in Charleston than in any other in the United States, enjoy as good heath as in any city of the Union. On the score of health there can be no substantial objection. Our winters are healthier than any northern city; and in seasons when no yellow fever occurs, no city on earth enjoys more health. The yellow fever prevailed in 1807; from this to 1817, the city was free from it; in 1819 it appeared, and in 1824. It is probable that, in process of time, its occurrence will be rare, from the vigilance of the police, and the improvement of the city. New York and Philadelphia have the epidemic yellow fever almost, if not as frequently, as what we have; and what is worse, in these cities, it affects all the inhabitants indiscriminately; whereas, here it is partial, and confined to strangers. (See Doctor Simons and others' statements.)

Question fifth. During the season when the yellow fever prevails, Hailestur's Green, Mazyckborough, and Cannonsborough, are all free from its ravages. In the summer of 1824, upwards of fifty persons, all strangers to our climate, were employed in repairing steamboats at the west end of Beaufair street, near Mr. Strobel's steam-mill, not one of whom took the fever. A German vessel, with her crew, during 1824, lay in Cooper river, opposite the city; not one of her crew was taken sick. Numberless instances might be cited. It will, therefore, appear that ordinary care on board of the vessels in the harbor, and if the Navy yard or depot was established on Ashley river, near Beaufair street, the men would be in no danger from the yellow fever. The crews of our vessels of war, stationed here during the last war, were as healthy as in any port in the Union. (See doctor Simons and others' statements.)

Advantages of Charleston as a naval depot.

Question sixth. Charleston is better situated than any port between the capes of Virginia and Florida; and all nautical men agree that it is preferable, in every point of view, to Key West, for a rendezvous for the squadron appointed to suppress piracy in the West Indies. Captains Pratt, Butler, Fuller, Alexander, and others—men who have, for years, traded to the West Indies, are unanimous on this subject.

Question seventh. The facilities of Charleston for a Navy yard are not surpassed by any port in the Union, and, in some respects, superior to many. Timber, of all kinds for ship building, is to be had in abundance in the neighborhood of the city, such as live oak, red cedar, pine—all of the best quality. Mechanics may at all times be had, and a competition among them will take place. I beg leave to refer to an annexed statement of the number and price of labor. Cordage and canvass can be procured at the prices stated in the estimate of a sloop-of-war, at which prices the ship chandlers offered to furnish them; and one of them offered to engage to furnish sufficient for ten sloops-of-war during the course of a year. Vessels are daily rigged, and, from the information of captains and merchants, nearly as cheap, and in some instances cheaper. Hemp, the growth of this State, was formerly exported, and by experiment proven to be stronger than the imported.

Vessels repaired at Charleston.

Question eighth. Vessels of war, American and foreign, have been repaired in Charleston, and with satisfaction to captains and agents. Several ship-carpenters have examined the estimate of a sloop-of-war built at Charlestown, Massachusetts, and do say a similar one can be built here for the same, or rather less sum. There are several ship-carpenters of considerable capital, and for workmanship excelled by none—witness several vessels built here during the last war. They are willing to contract to build such a vessel, but as all vessels of the United States navy are now built by the day's work, (as found by experience to be the best mode,) several of them are willing to act as foremen, and hire their workmen to the United States at reasonable wages.

Sites for a Navy yard.

Question ninth. There are several situations suitable for a Navy yard, and afford all the facilities, in the opinion of sea captains and others, requisite for it; especially, one at the west end of Beaufair street, on Ashley river, near Martin Strobel's steam mill. The situation is healthy in the sickliest season, (see answer to fifth question,) and I have remarked that, for twenty-eight years past, the strangers who resided in that part of the city escaped the yellow fever. I might cite numerous instances of mechanics and others. This situation is, likewise, protected from our autumnal and easterly gales; for, should the United States establish a Navy yard, and place it on Cooper river, it would be liable to be destroyed by a gale, such as 1804. If this should occur, it is natural to conclude the United States would withdraw it, and, perhaps, never order another to be erected. I am supported in the above opinion by every sea-faring man whose opinion was requested. Portage to it is cheap and easy. The timber market is on the spot, and the saw-mills in the neighborhood; some improvements of brick are likewise on the spot.

* It is my opinion that the States of North Carolina, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama and Georgia are greatly interested in the establishment of a Navy yard at Charleston, for much of their produce is brought to the Charleston markets for sale—especially their hogs, cattle, sheep, flour, bacon, &c.

Advantages of Charleston.

Question tenth. The advantages of a Navy yard at Charleston, S. C., to the United States, would be a more efficient aid to a speedy suppression of piracy in the West Indies, as vessels of war would be sooner on most of the cruising grounds. Vessels generally reach the Havana in eighty or ninety hours from Charleston, with efficient crews, and, on their return, would be, with expedition, refitted for another cruise, with a crew refreshed and recruited, and in good spirits; whilst from Key West, or any of the half-dry spots in the neighborhood, if there refitted, the crews are emaciated and dispirited by disease, and wants which are not to be had. I refer to seamen, who know what difficulties occur with a dispirited crew; and here, I beg leave to remark, that on all those islands no good water can be procured, nor ever will. The case is this: after digging a well, if I may call scraping away a few feet of sand, you may get the first hogshead, to appearance, good, but the next is worse, and so on, until it becomes at last brackish, and of no use for shipping; besides, it will not keep at sea. A volume might be filled with inconveniences and loss incurred by retaining the rendezvous at one of those islands.

There is another and very important reason in favor of Charleston over every southern city, which is the strength of its population, in being always able to protect a naval station in peace or war; whilst in every other southern port it would be necessary to have a regular force to protect it; and if, in time of war, the population of the city is not sufficient to protect it, is there another city in the southern States so ably supported by a population who can be collected from its own and neighboring upper parts of the State?—from which I would deduce this: that it would be wise in government to attend to the port of Charleston; first, by establishing a Navy yard here for building sloops-of-war, and other small vessels; and next, to inquire if the bar can be deepened. If so, that it would be the interest of the United States to establish one for large vessels. Anchorage, in and outside of the bar of Charleston, is excellent, and not exceeded by any port in the Union. The British sloop-of-war Driver rode out the gale of 1804, off the bar; and during the Revolution, a 64 gun ship lay off at anchor for near a twelvemonth; and so, during the late war, the enemy remained at anchor off the bar. The good anchorage of the harbor of Charleston is notorious among seamen.

Captain Pratt states, he had a ship called the St. Andrew, built in Charleston, of three hundred and twenty tons, copper fastened—was completely fitted out under his own inspection, in 1804, everything being of the best quality, and all procured at this place, at a time when materials were higher than at present, and the cost did not exceed $22,000. Her cordage was of South Carolina hemp, and proved to be stronger than the imported.

Charleston will, ere long, be supplied with iron of a superior quality from the back part of this State and North Carolina. During the late war we received much of our bar iron from there, and she supplied Charleston with cannon ball, &c., as cheap as the northern cities.

A Navy yard at Charleston would give the United States command of a number of mechanics accustomed to the climate, and they could, in case of emergency, be employed on the neighboring [islands] in cutting timber for the Navy yards at the north.

JOHN STROHECKER.

No. 2.

CHARLESTON, April 21, 1824.

SIR: I yesterday received your favor of the 12th, and immediately instituted the inquiry you proposed. It is with pleasure that I communicate the following results:

Price of labor for—	Per day.
White ship-carpenters	$2 00
White blacksmiths	1 25
White block and pump makers	1 25
White ship-joiners	2 00
White riggers	1 50
White painters	1 00
White turners	1 00
White coopers	1 00
8)	$11 00
Average	$1 37½
Negro carpenters	$1 00
Negro blacksmiths	75
Negro blockmakers	87½
Negro joiners	75
Negro riggers	1 00
Negro painters	75
Negro turners	75
Negro coopers	75
8)	$6 62½
Average	$0 82¾

Recapitulation.

	Per day.
Average price of white laborers	$1 37½
Average price of black laborers	82¾
	2)$2 20¼
Average hire of white and black mechanics	$1 10

Remarks.

First. Many of the ship-carpenters have worked, and some of the whites have acted as foremen in Navy yards at the north, where ships of war were built, and assisted in building them.

Second. Most of the mechanics, if hired by the month, may be had cheaper, especially black mechanics. I know that black ship-carpenters can be hired by the month at $20; blacksmiths, $15 to $20 per month; painters and others, cheaper; porters and others, not mechanics, $10 to $12 per month.

Third. A very large proportion of the work about a vessel of war may be done by the blacks, and the average thereby probably reduced to $1 per day.

Fourth. The above information was obtained without exposing the average price of labor in other places.

In addition to the above, it may be worthy of remark, that a commissioner was nominated by our legislature, in their last session, to inquire and report if any, and what, improvements may be made in our harbor, with the view of a naval depot being established here. This suggestion originated with Mr. Mills, but has been materially altered, in consequence of a recent survey. At low water we found fourteen feet of water in the middle channel, or swash, which would give twenty feet at ordinary tides, and probably twenty-two feet at spring tides. This channel is fully half a mile wide, diminishing, of course, in depth on both sides. It is now better, and much more direct and easy of entrance, than the ship channel ever was, and this change has taken place within a few years, occasioned by an accidental circumstance. A large ship, an East Indiaman, a prize, was chased in during the late war, and lost in the old north channel; her hulk obstructed the current, and now a pilot boat can scarcely pass through it. In consequence, as we believe, of this, the middle channel has improved, and Sullivan's Island has washed away very much. The island channel is still very inconsiderable, may be easily obstructed by a hulk, and by which the valuable public and private property there may be preserved from the encroachments of the sea, Fort Moultrie preserved, and the harbor rendered capable of receiving large ships of war. The coast, from Cape Roman to Martin's Industry, off Port Royal harbor, is uncommonly fine, being a gradual slope of one fathom to a —— until they reach four fathoms, beyond which none should approach without a pilot. I enclose a rough sketch, that I may be the better understood.

Yours, with much esteem and respect,

JOS. JOHNSON.

Hon. ROBERT Y. HAYNE.

No. 3.

CHARLESTON, September 20, 1825.

SIR: Your interrogatory, respecting the naval facilities of Charleston, has been submitted to me to answer, viz:

Question. Have you not seen and examined a statement of the cost of materials and building of a sloop-of-war at the Navy yard at Charlestown, Massachusetts; and could not a similar vessel be built in Charleston, South Carolina, for the same or a less sum?

Answer. I answer that I have formerly seen such an estimate, amounting to $46,516.25 for the hull spars and boats, of a sloop-of-war, to rate eighteen and mount twenty-two guns. Since which, I have seen the same amount confirmed in a communication, from a committee on naval affairs, to the honorable, the Secretary of the Navy, under date of January 7th, 1823, (and entitled, "No. 3—Estimate of the cost of building a sloop-of-war of the first class;") and I candidly think that similar vessels can be built in Charleston, South Carolina, on equally good terms.

To the second part of the interrogatory, "Are there not ship-carpenters in Charleston with considerable capital, and excellent workmen, who are willing to contract to build such vessels on these terms?" I answer: That I am a ship-carpenter, and sufficient master of my business to build a sloop-of-war and spar her, and that I have it in my power to give any instructions and directions that might be wanted, either to the blockmaker, sailmaker or rigger, as to size and quantity of any article in their departments. As to my capital, I will only say, my taxes amount to between two and three hundred dollars yearly. As to my character, I leave that for others to estimate; but I may speak of the characters of others of my profession; there are other and worthy ship-carpenters in Charleston, competent to build a sloop-of-war. As to myself and son, we should be much pleased and highly gratified to be encouraged by government, and permitted to build a sloop-of-war for them, on the same terms and price as that mentioned by the Massachusetts estimate; and if we should not make anything by it, yet it would be the means of renewing our spirits and giving encouragement to our mechanics.

As relates to the site for a Navy yard, I would offer my own, situated on what was formerly Gadsden's wharf, as one of the most firm and eligible spots in Charleston for that purpose, having been for nineteen years used as a ship yard, and where I have built many vessels. At the head of the wharf there are four fathoms of water, and at the sides I heave out and repair vessels. The wharf is in good order; there is an elegant dwelling-house on it, with double piazzas, (a fine view of the harbor and the bar, and a very considerable horizon of the sea in sight,) suitable for any officer who might be appointed to the station, and all finished in the best manner, with a brick cistern containing thirty to forty hhds. rain water. The yard is in a situation to lay down a sloop-of-war without any expense whatever; with launching slip, worksheds, &c., &c., and with the additional advantage of two saw-mills, one on each side, to the north and south, and within less than a quarter of a mile of the yard, and with good springs and pumps of fresh water in the vicinity, where the shipping that came to Charleston formerly used to water. I would dispose of the whole to government on reasonable terms, to be occupied as a public establishment for naval purposes; but will not sell it to an individual.

I am, with much respect, your obedient servant, JAMES MARSH.

The Hon. R. Y. HAYNE.

No. 4.

NOVEMBER 12, 1825.

DEAR SIR: I regret that it was not in my power to comply with your request until this moment; upon looking over the books of the medical society I find the accounts as follows:

In 1808, no case of yellow fever; in 1809, a few cases of yellow fever; in 1810, one case of yellow fever; in 1811, no case of yellow fever; in 1812, no case of yellow fever; in 1813, no case of yellow fever; in 1814, no case of yellow fever.

Other years returned by the board of health.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOMAS G. PRIOSLEAU, President Medical Society.

JOSEPH JOHNSON, M. D.

BOARD OF HEALTH, CHARLESTON, November 5, 1825.

The following number of deaths in each year, is correct, taken from the books of record, kept by me, and now in possession of this board:

Year.	Total No. of Deaths.		Yellow Fever.
1815	863		None.
1816	367		None.
1817	1249		270.
1818	995		None.
1819	1092		176.
1820	827	Important cases	11.
1821	921		None.
1822	925		None.
1823	814		None.
1824	1059		236.
1825 to 1st November	697	From the West Indies	3.

JAMES A. MILLER, Clerk.

No. 5.

COUNCIL CHAMBER, October 25, 1825.

I do hereby certify that the public institutions of this city have been supplied with beef, under an annual contract with the city council, at the prices following, viz:

In 1814, at $6.50 per cwt.; in 1815, at $7 per cwt.; in 1816, at $8.50 per cwt.; in 1817, at $7 per cwt.; in 1818, at $8.50 per cwt.; in 1819, at $8 per cwt.; in 1820, at $7 per cwt.; in 1821, at $7 per cwt.; in 1822, at $6 per cwt.; in 1823, at $5.25 per cwt.; in 1824, at $4.75 per cwt.

WILLIAM ROACH, Clerk of Council.

No. 6.

Practical facilities of Charleston for naval purposes.

The situation of this city, deprived, as it has been so long, and continues to be, of the expenditure within itself of any portion of the immense national revenue collected in it and transported elsewhere, has justly excited complaint among our citizens—has wounded the honest pride of our mechanics, and caused among all who study the public good an anxiety to devise means of redressing the evil. South Carolina bears the same relation to the Union that Ireland does to Great Britain. The government takes from us all they can get, and do not spend a cent among us. The very solidity of our bank currency is a misfortune. Because we have the honesty to pay our notes in specie, they are caught up with avidity in other States, to pay debts to the nation which returns, like a carrier hawk, to re-demand the specie; so that the firm basis of our credit is a positive injury to our commercial facilities.

In this state of things, having a right, (for whatever can be proved to be just, because thereby invested with right, in a government constituted for the good of the whole,)—having a right, we repeat, to whatever share of public patronage we may fairly deserve, more especially if it be foolishly lavished elsewhere, we shall proceed to explain the really practical benefits to which the port of Charleston may be made subservient for naval purposes, and about which no sensible men will differ.

Charleston is much nearer Porto Rico and to three-fourths of the Island of Cuba, (the piratical ground,) than Key West, which is at present the rendezvous of the American flotilla.

Key West, or as it is called by the Spaniards, "Cayo Huesso," is about 75 miles north by east from Havana, and in about latitude 24 degrees 30 minutes, north; longitude 82 degrees west. Its contiguity to the north coast of Cuba has given it some advantages as a rendezvous for our vessels of war in the West Indies, as they can readily fit out an expedition, and arrive at any point between Cape Antonio and Matanzas in a very short time after information is given of any acts of piracy being committed along that section of the coast.

But as Key West affords neither good water nor refreshments of any kind, and is also unhealthy, it is not necessary, in any way, to our vessels cruising further to windward; and to prove the inconvenience of this place as a rendezvous for such as may be required about the Island of Porto Rico and the eastern part of Cuba, we will make a comparative statement between the advantages and facilities that station affords, and those afforded to the vessels returning to some port on the southern coast, where supplies can be obtained at all times sufficient for the description of vessels which can, by their draft of water, enter the harbor.

Vessels of small size are unable to carry provisions and water for a great length of time. The frequent necessity then of re-supplying themselves with these articles, will oblige them to return to Key West often. It is not uncommon for vessels to be four or five weeks in beating to windward from the west end of Cuba to gain the east end, or Cape Maize, as it is called; and it would, therefore, be attended with great inconvenience, that, after reaching the weathermost part of their cruising ground, say 700 miles from where they set out, they should be under the necessity, for want of provisions, to abandon the advantage gained by so much loss of time and perseverance, and return to leeward again for new supplies.

How much better that the vessel should have her time in going down before the wind lengthened, as it would afford her opportunities of visiting every part of the coast or neighboring islands at pleasure. This may be done by the vessel; instead of commencing her cruise at Key West (to leeward of every island in the West Indies), commencing it at Charleston, whence she can make either of the windward passages into the West Indies at pleasure, and in much less time than from Key West, owing to the relative situation of the two places, in point of the winds and currents which prevail so much in favor of the latter, and which cannot escape the notice of any one who has navigated the two tracks.

It is proper to remark, that vessels beating to windward often strain their hulls and rigging very much. It is also a fact, that they have not so good an opportunity of surprising and taking pirates, for they advance so gradually that information of their approach is easily conveyed ahead, either by telegraph or otherwise.

A vessel bound on a cruise off the east end of Cuba, or to Porto Rico, must sail either by way of Cape Antonio, and beat up the south side of Cuba, or through the old Bahama Straits, or by the Hole-in-the-Wall, through the Providence channel, or else round the Mattanilla reef, north of the Little Bahama bank. By either of these routes she has to work directly to windward, and although the distance through the Bahama Straits seems shortest, yet it is the most dangerous and most tedious.

The following statement is made from a reference to the chart, which shows the degrees of latitude and longitude which, in the several routes before stated, must be sailed before you can reach the east end of Cuba, after leaving Key West, and also the degrees after leaving Charleston, to gain one of the windward passages, say Mayaguana:

From Key West to Cape Maize, by way of Cape Antonio, lat. 4 deg. 16 min., lon. 13 deg. 50 min.; from Key West, by way of the gulf, round Mattanilla reef, passing north as far as lat. 29 deg., lat. 11 deg., lon. 8 deg. 54 min., Old Bahama Straits.

NOTE.—Frequent calms oblige your anchoring, as well as the danger of running, in dark nights, among the numerous shoals and reefs, lat. 4 deg. lon. 8 deg.

From Charleston, S. C., to Mayaguana Island, one of the passages into the West Indies which enables you to bring either the west end of St. Domingo, or the east end of Cuba, as you may please, lat. 10 deg. 14 min., lon. 5 deg. 34 min.

Thus it appears that a vessel will have to sail but 10 deg. 14 min. of latitude and 5 deg. 34 min. of longitude, to place herself in a favorable position to make any point of cruising ground about the eastern part of Cuba.

Vessels returning from their cruise, touching at Havana or Matanzas for convoy, and carrying them through the gulf past the Bahamas, are again within two days' sail of Charleston, when, if in want of provisions, they can leave the convoy and put in for it, or stand again to the southeast for the weather passages, to pursue their duties as before, as they will derive the benefit of the variable winds to enable them to get to the eastward again, after passing the Bahamas.

After a sea voyage, men require fresh meats and vegetables, good water, etc., and some relaxation from the toils of the sea. Key West affords none of these.

We hope the above considerations will have their due weight. They have not been submitted without the best reflection and the soundest authority. If they be true, as it is believed, they leave to the government a very obvious course, which is to substitute Charleston as a naval rendezvous in the place of Key West.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 280. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM OF NATHANIEL BOSTICK, A SOLDIER OF FORT BOWYER, FOR PRIZE MONEY, ON THE CAPTURE OF A SLOOP-OF-WAR BELONGING TO THE BRITISH NAVY, IN THE WAR OF 1812-'15.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 23, 1826.

Mr. STORRS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Nathaniel Bostick, reported:

That the petitioner claims that he is entitled to receive a share of prize money, as one of the captors of the sloop-of-war Hermes, during the late war with Great Britain, and he prays that Congress would make some legislative provision to enable him to receive the same. The letter of the Third Auditor of the Treasury Department, herewith submitted, shows that, under the act of Congress of the 5th of March, 1816, the petitioner, on establishing his right to such prize money, as one of the captors of the said vessel, according to the regulations of that Department, can receive the same without any legislative provision on his behalf. The committee, therefore, recommend to the House the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petitioner have leave to withdraw his petition.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Third Auditor's Office, January 17, 1826.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 16th inst., enclosing the petition of Nathaniel Bostwick, for his share of the prize money in the case of the sloop-of-war Hermes, captured during the late war, by the garrison of Fort Bowyer, asking me to state why legislative aid was necessary prior to its payment, and to furnish you with any information on the subject in my power. In reply, I have to state that the whole amount ascertained to be due to the captors, under the act of Congress of the 5th of March, 1816, was, by the acting Secretary of War, in May, 1817, placed in the hands of Micajah Crupper, then an officer of the army, to proceed to the section of country where the troops were then stationed, to make the payments to them individually. This was done; but a number of the soldiers had been discharged and left the place, and consequently were not paid. The petitioner, it is presumed, was one of them. The officer, on settlement, failed to account for the balance in his hands; and, consequently, when application was made at this office in behalf of the petitioner, payment could not be made for want of funds, the appropriation having been exhausted. Since then, however, a small amount has been recovered, from the person to whom the money was originally advanced, and the present claim can be discharged on the production of the necessary evidence, without legislative interference; but there are other claims which may make it necessary to appropriate, in anticipation of future recoveries, a small amount, say five hundred dollars.

With great respect, your obedient servant, PETER HAGNER, Auditor.

The Hon. H. R. STORRS, Chairman, &c., &c., House of Representatives.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 281. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE CLAIM OF MRS. SUSAN DECATUR, WIDOW OF COMMODORE STEPHEN DECATUR, FOR PRIZE MONEY, FOR THE CAPTURE AND DESTRUCTION OF THE FRIGATE PHILADELPHIA, AT ALGIERS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 24, 1826.

Mr. HOLCOMBE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial and petition of Susan Decatur, widow and sole representative of Stephen Decatur, Esquire, late a captain in the navy of the United States, in behalf of herself and of the officers and crew of the United States ketch Intrepid, reported:

That, on the night of the 16th of February, 1804, the late Stephen Decatur, then a lieutenant in the navy of the United States, entered the harbor of Tripoli, in a small ketch called the Intrepid, boarded, captured, and destroyed the Tripolitan frigate, late the United States frigate, Philadelphia, and retreated from the presence of his astonished and panic-stricken enemy, unpursued, and without the loss of a single man.

The official details of this splendid achievement, the committee believe, are so familiar, both to the House and to the nation, that they consider it unnecessary at this time to particularize them. There are, however, some facts connected with it, which, in the lapse of twenty-two years, have doubtless been obliterated from the recollection of many, but which are so illustrative of its extraordinary gallantry and results, that the committee beg leave, very briefly, to call the attention of the House to them.

The Philadelphia, a frigate of fifty guns, was moored in the harbor of Tripoli, within pistol-shot distance of the whole of the Tripolitan marine, mounting altogether upwards of a hundred cannon, and within the immediate protection of the following formidable batteries: Fort English, Fort America, and other batteries, mounting 50 cannon; Fort Way, the Molehead, and other batteries, mounting 65 cannon; making an aggregate of one hundred and fifteen pieces of heavy artillery. Besides this force, there were encamped at the time, in the city and its vicinity, twenty thousand soldiers, and, attached to the fleet and in the harbor, upwards of a thousand seamen. The frigate, also, was ready for sea, and fully prepared for an obstinate defence. But in despite of this most formidable, and to ordinary minds appalling force, Lieutenant Decatur, at the head of seventy American seamen, taken without selection from his own ship, (for the whole fleet had volunteered for the service,) with a fearlessness and skill which are above all commendation, entered the harbor of Tripoli, attacked, boarded, and carried his enemy, with the same coolness and celerity as if she had been anchored in an open roadstead, and undefended by a single piece of artillery.

Heroism among seamen is a virtue of neither rare nor unexpected occurrence. The annals of every maritime nation, on the contrary, abound with details of bold adventure and gallant actions. And the history of our own marine, brief, but glorious as it is, represents an unbroken series of heroic enterprises, resulting for the most part in signal victories. But the committee, without attempting to institute a comparison between this and any other action, (which the very nature of our naval victories, they are proud to say, precludes the possibility,) or attempting to disparage in the remotest degree the merits of others, would observe, that the destruction of the Philadelphia, when all the circumstances associated with it are taken into consideration, is, at least, unsurpassed by any nautical achievement—an achievement equally admirable for the chivalry of its conception, and the brilliant and decisive manner of its execution.

The destruction of the Philadelphia, the committee would further observe, was not more glorious to our arms, than advantageous to us in all our subsequent negotiations with the Barbary powers. An exploit so novel and extraordinary could not fail to impress vividly the fears, as well as the imagination and memory of the Mahometan. And so permanent and peculiar has this impression been, that during the late infraction of the Algerine treaty, the name and presence of the destroyer of the Philadelphia, with a small squadron of frigates, effected more in a single hour than Lord Exmouth, at the head of a formidable fleet, and after two bloody victories, was ever able to accomplish.

For this signal service, (of incalculable benefit to us, as far as the treasury alone is concerned) the gallant commander and crew of the Intrepid have, as yet, received from their country nothing in the form of remuneration, further than what is embraced by the following resolution, passed by Congress, November 27, 1804:

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the President of the United States be requested to present, in the name of Congress, to Captain Stephen Decatur, a sword, and to each of the officers and crew of the United States ketch Intrepid two months' pay, as a testimony of the high sense entertained by Congress of the gallantry, good conduct, and services of Captain Decatur, the officers, and crew of said ketch in attacking, in the harbor of Tripoli, and destroying, a Tripolitan frigate of 44 guns.

Lieutenant Decatur probably accepted the sword voted him; but the officers, it is understood, with feelings becoming officers, unanimously declined the bounty of Congress.

If the policy of the government be to stimulate and encourage the gallantry and good conduct of its marine by suitable rewards, the present case, in the opinion of the committee, presents the strongest appeal to the justice and generosity of Congress. For "if skill and gallantry, (to use the language of the able and eloquent memorial submitted to the committee, and to which the House is referred for such further facts and illustrations of the accompanying bill as may be required,) if enterprise and heroism, are ever entitled to commendation and reward, where have they been more signally exhibited? If to have maintained the honor of the country, and added splendor to the standard, create claims upon a nation, where have any of a higher character been presented?"

The committee, although aware of the full force of this appeal, and furthermore, that, by usage and precedent, (independently of the extraordinary merit of the achievement,) the memorialists are justly entitled to a liberal remuneration from Congress, yet they would avail themselves of this opportunity to disavow, distinctly, the principle, that the captors of the public ships of the enemy have any right, expressed or understood, for such remuneration, further than what has been established by law.

The love of country, it is believed, and the desire for distinction, will always prove a sufficient stimulus to gallant and patriotic men to do their duty, and even to transcend it, whenever opportunities may offer. A liberal and enlightened government, however, will always make a distinction between ordinary services (such as occur in the common line of duty) and those perilous enterprises which are conceived, planned, and executed by volunteers alone, of which the present is an illustrious example. And inasmuch as Congress in every case (with this sole exception) has awarded some substantial pecuniary donation, in the shape of a reward, for the ships of the enemy captured and destroyed at sea, the committee cannot perceive upon what principle it can be withheld in this, one of the earliest, and certainly not the least important, of our naval victories.

Before closing their report, the committee would respectfully call the attention of the House to a brief recapitulation of some of the important public benefits which, in their opinion, have resulted from the capture and destruction of the Philadelphia.

It enlisted public opinion in favor of the navy, which, until that moment, had been cold and indifferent, if not hostile to it.

It stimulated powerfully that spirit of enterprise and love of glory so natural to our seamen, which have since been so signally displayed in repeated triumphs upon the favorite element of the enemy, during the late war.

It relieved us (in connection with those desperate conflicts upon the same theatre, in all of which Lieutenant Decatur was pre-eminently distinguished) from the thraldom and ignominy of a tributary peace; by impressing, not Tripoli alone, but the whole of the Barbary States, with a sense of our prowess and enterprise, which has continued vivid and unimpaired to the present moment; and which has served effectually to protect our flag and commerce from insult and violation throughout the long interval of peace which has succeeded.

And finally, it contributed largely to our stock of national glory, which, in the language of a distinguished modern statesman, is above all price, and, to young and popular governments, the richest of all acquisitions.

With such views, and after a full and dispassionate examination of the memorial and petition submitted to them, the committee report the accompanying bill.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, in Congress assembled:

The memorial and petition of Susan Decatur, widow and sole representative of Stephen Decatur, Esq., deceased, late a captain in the navy of the United States, in behalf of herself and of the officers and crew of the United States ketch Intrepid.

Your memorialist and petitioner most respectfully shows unto your honorable bodies that, on the night of the 16th of February, 1804, the late Captain Stephen Decatur, then a lieutenant in the navy of the United States, the volunteer commander of a volunteer crew, on board a small ketch, entered the harbor of Tripoli, boarded, captured and destroyed a frigate of the largest class, belonging to the enemy, and succeeded in effecting his retreat from this perilous enterprise without the loss of a single man. For this gallant and most distinguished achievement, planned and executed with consummate courage and skill, redounding equally to the national glory and advantage, your petitioner most respectfully solicits that Congress would be pleased to award that compensation which has been so liberally bestowed in other cases.

The grounds upon which this application rests are numerous and weighty. On ordinary occasions it might wear the appearance of vain-glorious boasting for the petitioners to Congress to descant upon the value of those services for which they ask a remuneration. No such imputation can exist on the present occasion. Your memorialist, in recapitulating some of the circumstances which accompanied, and some of the benefits that resulted from this exploit, is but performing a sacred duty, hallowed by every feeling which can attract, regard, or awaken sympathy. She confidently trusts, therefore, that such a recapitulation will be received with pardon if not with favor, and that she may be indulged in a feeble effort to bring before the recollection of the representatives of the nation circumstances which length of time may have obliterated from the minds of many, and in detailing some facts which have, perhaps, never been fully presented to more than a few.

This hazardous and important enterprise was originally conceived and planned by the same individual who executed it. Young and ardent, devoted to the cause of his country, ambitious of distinction, zealous for the reputation of the navy, Lieutenant Decatur proposed a plan, for the capture of the Philadelphia, to his commanding officer, and volunteered his services in carrying it into execution. Nothing but the vehemence with which he pressed his suit, a perfect confidence in his judgment, skill and courage, and a just estimate of the vast importance of the end to be attained, could have extorted from the prudent caution of Commodore Preble his sanction to this daring enterprise. Accompanied with about seventy volunteers, after encountering numerous obstacles, all which were surmounted or avoided with consummate dexterity and promptitude, the frigate, fully manned, equipped, and prepared for action, was boarded and carried. Full and undisputed possession was obtained. Peremptory orders had, however, been given to destroy the vessel, and the gallant victors were precluded from an attempt to bring her out of the harbor, which might, in all probability, have been accomplished. It only remained to obey these directions, and to retreat from the scene of action. Surrounded by an exasperated but disheartened enemy, this was performed, and the laurels which had been won shone greener and brighter, not having cost the life of one of the gallant adventurers. No alloy mingled with the feelings of exultation which this successful enterprise excited.

In searching the history of the brilliant achievements of our navy, where will one be found superior, if equal, in the exhibition of all those characteristics which command our admiration? If skill and gallantry, if enterprise and heroism, are ever entitled to commendation or reward, where have they been more signally exhibited? If to have maintained the honor of the country, and added splendor to her standard, create claims upon a nation, when were any of higher character presented?

On the other hand, it may, without the apprehension of being justly charged with exaggeration, be asserted that it has rarely occurred that any one achievement has been productive of results so advantageous to a nation. At the period when this enterprise was projected, the American force in the Mediterranean was not numerically superior to that of the enemy. They had been animated by their success in capturing one of the finest frigates in our service, with its gallant commander and crew. By this unfortunate accident their force had been augmented in the same ratio in which ours was diminished. The capture of the Philadelphia was justly deemed by Commodore Preble absolutely necessary to favor his intended operations.

Our commerce in the Mediterranean was in a great measure exposed to the depredations of these freebooters; and capture was not only attended by the utter loss of property, but succeeded by the hopeless and cruel slavery imposed upon the unfortunate prisoners. Captain Bainbridge and his associates had been languishing in captivity, and the Bey of Tripoli, elated with his good fortune, haughtily demanded, as his conditions of peace, a full indemnity for all the expenses of the war, and the exorbitant sum of $200,000 as a ransom for the prisoners in his hands. So powerful was the sympathy excited in favor of these meritorious sufferers, whom fortune had thrown into this hopeless state, that no sacrifice would not willingly have been endured for their rescue, save that which might involve a compromise of the national honor. On the capture of the Philadelphia, followed up by the bombardment of their town, an operation which could not have been attemped until the former had been accomplished, the tone of haughty exultation which the barbarians had held subsided, and they willingly and speedily submitted to the fair and equitable terms which we proposed. A regular exchange of prisoners was agreed upon, and the sum of $60,000 paid to Tripoli for the surplus in their hands. In a pecuniary point of view alone, who can fully estimate the value of this exploit? As leading to the relief of our gallant countrymen from galling slavery, who can overrate it?

Nor is this all. Alarmed at the exhibition of daring and adventurous courage which had been manifested, they negotiated for peace, in the spirit of peace; and since that period, the recollection of the name and exploit of Decatur and his associates has preserved, throughout the Mediterranean, our flag from violation, our commerce from outrage, and our citizens from an odious slavery. The United States has thenceforward been relieved from the humiliating conditions imposed as the terms of peace upon every other maritime country; and the American name commands, to this day, more respect and deference than the proudest navies of Europe can enforce. The beneficial effects of this brilliant achievement were again apparent when the small squadron, under the same leader, compelled the government of Algiers to submit to terms which the enormous force and bloody operations of Lord Exmouth's fleet failed to extort.

To Decatur and his companions is the nation indebted for all these advantages. To this period may it exultingly recur for one of its proudest trophies. To it may our now distinguished navy look, as that in which its character became established, and its merits known both to friends and foes. Then were exhibited the early indications of those features which, since expanded and strengthened, have distinguished the American naval character in more recent exploits.

For all these services, little more than an honorary compensation has ever been awarded; and that little has not been paid. The gallant crew declined to receive the two months' pay which Congress had decreed them. On other occasions, and, without the slightest disposition to disparage them, may it not be said, in every respect for inferior services, Congress has granted some substantial tokens of its approbation and regard. This, among the first and brightest, has remained almost unnoticed.

It is not, however, simply as a gratuity that this claim is now preferred. The frigate had been carried, was in the undisputed possession of the captors, who, in obedience to peremptory orders, relinquished every attempt to bring her out of port, and consigned her reluctantly to the flames, with the full conviction on their part, sanctioned by the authority of the commander-in-chief, that this measure, directed by considerations of a public nature, would neither invalidate nor in any degree diminish the claim sanctioned by law, to compensation to the full value of the vessel and her equipments.

Various reasons have existed to prevent this claim from being preferred at an earlier period. The lofty spirit which projected and achieved the exploit felt reluctant to remind his country of services which it had forgotten, or to estimate them higher than it had rated them. He was averse to urge a claim for services which he thought his country, if it duly appreciated them, would spontaneously remunerate. During the recent war with England, when he saw other actions rewarded, and other services of a similar character compensated, he was aware that all the pecuniary resources of the nation were required for present purposes; and he disdained to ask, from the almost exhausted treasury, that which could not with propriety be diverted from immediate objects. With these feelings he postponed, till a more suitable period, preferring the present claim. And he has bequeathed to your petitioner the duty of presenting to your honorable bodies this application, as his representative and that of his associates.

Your memorialist would respectfully submit to your honorable bodies the written opinions of two professional gentlemen of the District, (Mr. Jones and Mr. Coxe,) upon the legal question to which she has referred in a preceding part of this memorial.

SUSAN DECATUR.

DECEMBER 19, 1825.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 282. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE SUBJECT OF THE COURT-MARTIAL, COURT OF INQUIRY, AND CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO THE COURSE OF COMMODORE DAVID PORTER IN SUPPRESSING PIRACY IN THE WEST INDIES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 24, 1826.

Mr. HAYNE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred a letter from Captain David Porter, of the United States navy, requesting an investigation of charges contained in communications from Thomas Randall and John Mountain; and to whom was also referred a letter from Thomas Randall, on the same subject, together with a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, covering the proceedings of the court of inquiry and court-martial in relation to Captain Porter, reported:

That they have had these several communications under consideration, and find nothing in the character of the transactions to which they relate that requires the interference of this House.

It appears that the case of Captain Porter has been submitted to the proper tribunals; and the committee do not feel themselves warranted in forming any opinion unfavorable to their decisions, or indulging any impression that their proceedings require revision. The committee consider it due alike to the preservation of a proper discipline, and to the reputation of our officers, that appeals should not be encouraged from the decisions of the military courts. Under this view of the subject, and seeing no satisfactory reason for interposing the authority of the House in matters which have been fully settled by the competent authorities, the committee ask leave to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

IN SENATE, January 23, 1826.

On motion by Mr. DICKERSON,

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs, on the letters from Captain D. Porter and Thomas Randall, and the communication from the Secretary of the Navy, with the proceedings of the court of inquiry and court-martial in relation to Captain Porter; and,

On motion by Mr. DICKERSON,

Resolved, That the report be recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs, with instructions to amend the same by striking out the following: "It appears that the case of Captain Porter has been submitted to the proper tribunals, and the committee do not feel themselves warranted in forming any opinion unfavorable to their decision, or indulging any impression that their proceedings require revision. The committee consider it due alike to the preservation of a proper discipline, and to the reputation of our officers, that appeals should not be encouraged from the decisions of the military courts. Under this view of the subject, and seeing no satisfactory reason for interposing the authority of the House in matters which have been finally settled by the competent authorities, the committee ask leave to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject."

IN SENATE, January 24, 1826.

Mr. HAYNE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was recommitted the letters from Captain D. Porter and T. Randall, and the communication from the Secretary of the Navy, with the proceedings of the court of inquiry and court-martial in relation to Captain Porter, reported:

That they have had these several communications under consideration, and find nothing in the character of the transactions to which they relate that requires the interference of this House. The committee ask leave to be discharged from the further consideration of the subjects. The report was read, and in concurrence therewith,

Resolved, That the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 283. [1ST SESSION.

PROCEEDINGS OF COURTS-MARTIAL, CORRESPONDENCE, ETC., RELATING TO THE CONDUCT OF COMMODORE CHARLES STEWART, ON THE PACIFIC STATION, AND OF THAT OF LIEUTENANTS JOSHUA R. SANDS AND WILLIAM M. HUNTER.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 25, 1826.

WASHINGTON, January 24, 1826.

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

In compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 12th of December last, I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of the Navy, with the documents and proceedings of the naval courts-martial in the cases of Captain Charles Stewart, and of Lieutenants Joshua R. Sands and William M. Hunter.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, January 20, 1826.

SIR: In answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 12th December last, "that the President of the United States be requested to communicate to this House (if not incompatible with the public interest) the documents and proceedings of the naval court-martial in the case of Captain Charles Stewart; also the documents and proceedings of the naval courts-martial in the cases of Lieutenants Joshua R. Sands and William M. Hunter," I have the honor to transmit to you, herewith, copies of the documents and proceedings specified in the said resolution.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

PRESIDENT of the United States.

PHILADELPHIA, October 24, 1824.

SIR: Understanding, from the Hon. Secretary of State, that several complaints have been exhibited to the Executive government against me by the authorities and others in South America, touching my conduct while in command of the naval forces in the Pacific, may I ask the favor that you will please to cause copies of such complaints to be transmitted to me, if not inconsistent with the regulations and course of the Department.

I have the honor to remain, very respectfully, sir, your most obedient servant,

(Signed) C. STEWART.

To the Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, November 16, 1824.

SIR: You have been already apprised that the government of Peru has made complaints against a part of your official conduct, while in the command of the squadron in the Pacific ocean, and that these complaints have been seconded by public rumor, and confirmed by the agent of our government in that country. I have, also, to inform you that other complaints have been made, though in a less imposing form.

Under these circumstances, an official investigation is considered necessary; and you would have earlier received this written notice of it, if you had not been expected in this place, and if it had not been thought that you would yourself have demanded it.

It is intended that the investigation be made before the court-martial lately ordered to assemble in New York; and, that you may be immediately apprised of the points which are believed to require examination, I enclose a paper containing them, in the form of charges. Some of these will probably be erased, and others somewhat varied; but you will, in a few days, receive them in due form.

The witnesses who will be called to substantiate the charges are principally the officers of the Franklin, Dolphin, and Peruano. Should the means of your defence be within the control of this Department, they shall be promptly afforded to you; and, I assure you, while the investigation will be rendered particular, full, and rigid, a strong hope and anxious desire will be felt that your defence may ensure to you such an acquittal as will comport with your own high character and the honor of the service.

I have not sent to you copies of any of the communications requested by your letter of the 24th October last, because they are very long, and comprise a variety of other matters; because it is not believed that any of them will be used as competent evidence on the trial; and because the enclosed paper will furnish you with all the charges which they contain. Should a change take place in the views of the Department on the subject, or should you still desire copies of any particular ones, they shall be furnished as speedily as possible.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your most obedient servant,

SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Capt. CHARLES STEWART, U. S. Navy, New York.

NEW YORK, November 25, 1824.

SIR: I have had the honor to receive your letter, dated the 16th instant, with its enclosure, the heads of complaints exhibited against me, in the form of charges and specifications.

I receive with thanks this first intimation on this subject, in reply to my letter, addressed to you on the 24th ultimo. It was not desirable to me to augment the trouble of the Department, or intended as such, by my application of the 24th of last month for copies of the dispatches in extenso; extracts of the allegations, with the dates, and the periods of their receipt, appeared to me as important, prior to my forming any decision on the propriety or impropriety of asking a court for their investigation, or in any way interfering with the course or views of the government.

These complaints, (some of which are of two or three years' standing,) alleged to have been committed in very distant seas, calling for witnesses still there, and documentary evidence existing only in that country and under the control of a foreign government and people, appears to me to require much more time to procure, for my defence, than the period of the session of the court-martial now assembled will afford for the purpose. I have deemed it proper thus to lay before you these views of the subject, in hopes that the suggestions cannot but appear to you in the same light; and, as the object of all parties concerned can be no other than truth and justice, that you will perceive the propriety of suspending the further proceedings in this case until I can be enabled to proceed to Washington, on the termination of my duty here as a witness on the present trials.

It was my intention to have presented myself there, agreeably to your expectation; but, being under the necessity of coming to this place the day after I had the pleasure of seeing you in Philadelphia, for the purpose of meeting my family on their return from Boston, I was so long delayed by their detention there, and the expectation of the immediate investigation of Lieut. Weaver's case, in which I was a witness, that I found it useless, in point of time, to proceed, after I got as far as Philadelphia.

In hopes I shall receive your determination as soon as possible,

I have the honor to remain, very respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) CHARLES STEWART.

The Hon. SAM'L L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, November 29, 1824.

SIR: Your letter, dated the 25th instant, has been received. It is very much to be regretted that any circumstance should prevent an immediate decision in your case. It is of great importance to the public interest that it be as little delayed as possible; but the reason which you assign for a postponement is such as cannot be disregarded. You will, therefore, understand that your request is granted, and your trial will not take place before the court-martial now sitting, but as speedily thereafter as the evidence can be procured; and it will be expected of you to use all possible diligence in the preparation. Any documents within the control of the Department, necessary for your defence, will be promptly afforded, upon your application.

You will, from the receipt of this letter, consider yourself as suspended from duty until your trial has taken place; but no particular limits are assigned to you, other than those of the Union, as it is supposed you will require entire liberty in the preparation of the evidence for your trial.

Some alteration will probably be made in the charges against you, of which you will, in a short time, be apprised.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Capt. CHARLES STEWART, U. S. Navy, New York.

To James Barron, Esq., captain in the navy of the United States:

Certain charges of misconduct having been alleged against Charles Stewart, Esq., captain in the navy of the United States, and others, a general court-martial, to consist of Captain James Barron, president; Captains Wm. M. Crane, Robert T. Spence, John D. Henley, Jesse D. Elliott, Stephen Cassin, James Renshaw, Thomas Brown, Charles C. B. Thompson, Alex. S. Wadsworth, George W. Rodgers, and George C. Read, members, or any five or more of them, is hereby authorized and ordered to assemble at the city of Washington, in the building on First street east and the corner of Maryland avenue, formerly occupied by the Congress of the United States, on Thursday, the eighteenth day of August, for the trial of the said Captain Charles Stewart and others, for the offences with which they do severally stand charged; which charges, together with the testimony in their support, will be laid before the court by the judge advocate.

Richard S. Coxe, Esq., is appointed judge advocate to the court hereby ordered to assemble; and if he should decline acting, the said court will appoint such other suitable gentleman, learned in the law, to discharge the duties of judge advocate to the said court, as they, or a majority of them, may, in their wisdom, deem fit and proper.

In faith of which, I have hereunto signed my name and affixed the seal of the Navy Department of the United States, this seventeenth day of August, in the year of our Lord one [SEAL.] thousand eight hundred and twenty-five, and of the independence of the United States the fiftieth.

(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Charges and specifications against Charles Stewart, Esq., a captain in the navy of the United States.

CHARGE FIRST.—UNOFFICER-LIKE CONDUCT.

Specification first. In aiding and assisting, during the months of May, June and July, in the year 1822, an American ship called the Canton, an American ship called the Pearl, an English brig called the Sarah, and a French ship called the Telegraph, and other vessels, in carrying on an illicit and contraband trade with certain ports in Peru called the Intermedios; aiding and assisting said vessels in violating the laws and decrees of the existing government of Peru; and in transporting and landing arms, military stores and other contraband articles; and in protecting the said vessels from the consequences of such illegal traffic, by employing or threatening to employ the naval forces of the United States in their defence.

Specification second. In sailing with the United States ship the Franklin, then under the command of the said Charles Stewart, in the months of June and July, 1822, to the said ports called the Intermedios, for the purpose of aiding in private and illicit traffic, and with a view to the private emolument of the said Charles Stewart.

Specification third. In employing, on or about the eleventh day of July, 1822, the naval force of the United States under his command in preventing the commander of the Peruvian brig Balgrano from enforcing the laws and instructions of his government, by taking, and sending in for adjudication, an American ship called the Canton, detected in carrying on an illicit trade to the injury of said government; and in being concerned in the pecuniary profits of said illicit voyages and transactions of the aforesaid ship, the Canton.

Specification fourth. In transporting or causing to be transported on board the United States schooner, the Dolphin, on or about the sixth day of May, 1822, one Eliphalet Smith, with goods and merchandise for sale on private account, and permitting said Smith to carry his own private goods and merchandise, and samples of goods not designed for the use of the said schooner Dolphin, on board the said schooner, under the protection of the flag of the United States, to certain ports, viz.: Arica, Quilca, and others of the Intermedios, and to employ a national vessel of the United States as a place for the said Smith to sell and display for sale such his goods, when such traffic was in itself illegal and contraband, and such conduct tended to the disgrace of the navy of the United States.

Specification fifth. In employing in the month of August, 1822, and at other periods in that year, the schooners Peruvian and Waterwitch, then in the service of the United States, in traffic and carrying merchandise on private account.

Specification sixth. In lending aid and countenance to the violators of the revenue laws of the government of Peru, at various times between the arrival of the ship Franklin in the Pacific in the month of February, 1822, and her departure from thence in 1824, by permitting and aiding sundry persons in carrying off from the shore coin, bullion, plata pina, and other articles, contrary to the laws of said government, without the permission, authority or knowledge of the custom house officers and local authorities, and to deposit the said articles so smuggled on board the public vessels of the United States, then under the command of the said Charles Stewart.

Specification seventh. In permitting, at various times within the periods mentioned in the foregoing specification, specie, bullion, plata pina and other articles, designed to be transported from Peru in violation of the laws of that country, clandestinely, at night, to be brought on board the public vessels of the United States, then under his command, and in transporting said articles in the boats of the said public vessels, at sea, and out of the control and reach of the authorities on shore, to certain vessels bound to distant ports, after such vessels had undergone the examination of the custom house officers; such transportation being without the authority, permission or knowledge of said officers, but designed as a fraud upon and an invasion of the laws of the government of Peru.

Specification eighth. In assisting at the times mentioned in the last preceding specification, with the armed force under his command, in defending and protecting persons and property, engaged in smuggling, from arrest and detention by the lawful authorities of the government of Peru.

Specification ninth. In affording, at various times during the period mentioned in the last preceding specification, protection and aid of an extraordinary and illegal kind to the Canton and other vessels in the business of which he the said Charles Stewart and Eliphalet Smith were interested, to the neglect of other vessels engaged in a lawful commerce, to which he was in duty bound to afford protection, but in the profits of which they had no participation.

Specification tenth. In purchasing from the said ship the Canton, at Valparaiso, in the month of April, 1822, among other articles 90 bolts of canvas, 25½ casks of wine, 335 lbs. copper nails, paints, oils, &c., ostensibly for the use of the Franklin, when such articles were not necessary for said vessel, and in fact were not employed or consumed in her, and when the said ship the Franklin had been amply provided with such of the said articles as were necessary for her use.

Specification eleventh. In employing or causing to be employed on various occasions, at Valparaiso and elsewhere in the ports of the Pacific, during the year 1822, carpenters and other persons attached to the Franklin, and receiving pay from the United States, in working on board the Canton, Wasp, and other private vessels, without any proper or adequate reason, and without any compensation to the individuals thus employed.

Specification twelfth. In receiving on board the Franklin one Captain Eliphalet Smith, and permitting him to remain there for nearly a year, engaged in private traffic, and employing the naval forces of the United States in subservience to the views of said Smith.

Specification thirteenth. In employing the said Eliphalet Smith to carry dispatches, board vessels, and perform other duties which ought to have been executed by the officers in the service of the government, for the purpose of affording him, the said Smith, facilities in the prosecution of his private concerns.

Specification fourteenth. In permitting the cargo or part of the cargo of the Canton, some time in August, 1822, to be shipped on board the Peruviana, then in tow of the Franklin, and ostensibly a public vessel; and in receiving or permitting to be received and carried on board the Franklin the supercargo of the Canton, and samples of the goods thus put on board the Peruviana, for the purpose of furthering the sale of the said cargo.

Specification fifteenth. In receiving and permitting to remain on board the Franklin, for a long period of time in the year 1822, one Captain John O'Sullivan, the commander, and one Ward, supercargo, of the Canton, for the purpose of aiding them in their private traffic; thus making the national vessels and flag subservient to individual interests.

Specification sixteenth. In taking on board and carrying in the Franklin from Valparaiso to Quilca, in or about the month of March, 1823, horses, with their equipments, for the use of General Canterac, or some other royalist general, thus furnishing aid and assistance to the one party in a military contest, in violation of the duties of a neutral officer.

Specification seventeenth. In employing the crews of the public vessels of the United States, and articles paid for by the government, for the use of said public vessels, in building and equipping three small schooners which were not required for the public service, and which did not and do not belong to the government.

Specification eighteenth. In permitting or causing to be made by the crew of the Franklin and other public vessels, out of the materials which had been purchased for the service of the government, sails, &c., for the use of the private ship the Canton, in the month of August or September, 1822.

Specification nineteenth. In permitting or causing the Dolphin, a vessel of the United States, to carry from Callao to Guayaquil, in or about the month of September, 1822, money, sails, &c., for the purpose of placing them on board the Canton.

Specification twentieth. In permitting William A. Weaver, then a lieutenant in the navy of the United States, and borne on the books of the said ship Franklin, to absent himself from said vessel and from his duties on board, during the entire cruise of said ship, from the month of September, 1821, until the arrival of the Franklin within the United States, in the month of August, 1824, without any necessity or excuse of a public nature.

Specification twenty-first. In approving the muster rolls of the Franklin, wherein it was made to appear that the said William A. Weaver was actually on board said ship, and performing the duties of a lieutenant on board, from the commencement of said cruise up to December 31, 1823; whereas he, the said Charles Stewart, well knew the said Weaver to be absent from said vessel, engaged in his own private concerns, during the whole of said period.

Specification twenty-second. In directing and causing the purser of said ship, the Franklin, to transmit to the Navy Department false and erroneous transcripts from the muster rolls of said ship; by such false and erroneous transcripts representing to the Navy Department that he, the said William A. Weaver, was absent from the said vessel in charge of stores at Callao, when in fact no such entry was ever made in the original muster roll, and when he, the said Charles Stewart, well knew that he, the said Weaver, was not at Callao, and also that there were no public stores at Callao of which he could be in charge.

Specification twenty-third. In causing the purser of the said ship, the Franklin, to enter on the muster roll of said vessel, on or about the 16th of November, 1824, that he, the said William A. Weaver, was absent from said ship without leave from the first of August, 1822; whereas he, the said Charles Stewart, had approved the muster roll of said vessel, by which it was made to appear that the said Weaver was actually on board up to December 31, 1823.

Specification twenty-fourth. In permitting the purser of the said ship, the Franklin, at the port of Arica, in June, 1822, to send on shore for sale large quantities of clothing and other articles brought out in the said ship for the use of the officers, by which means, when those articles were required, it became impossible for the officers to procure them from the purser.

Specification twenty-fifth. In sending or causing to be sent at various times in 1822 and 1823, on board the Canton, a large number of musket cartridges and other military stores belonging to the government, which said articles were entered on the books of the Franklin as expended in that vessel in the regular course of public service.

Specification twenty-sixth. In sending or causing or permiting to be sent on board the said ship, the Canton, on or about the 26th day of July, 1822, several articles from the carpenter's department, of which no entry was made on the books of the Franklin.

Specification twenty-seventh. In causing or permiting to be used a large number of hoops and other materials belonging to the government, and the crew of the Franklin and other vessels under his command to be occupied in making kegs to hold specie, &c., deposited on board said vessels, and not accounting to the government for the money charged to and received from the owners of said specie, &c., on account of said kegs.

Specification twenty-eighth. In sending or causing or permiting to be sent on board the Canton, for the use of said private vessel, on or about the 26th of October, 1822, sails, canvas and other articles belonging to the government.

Specification twenty-ninth. In permitting to be taken from the public stores, in the month of September, 1822, in April and November, 1823, and in January, 1824, and at divers other times, saws, copper nails, iron nails, iron spikes, iron and ammunition, and given or sold on private account, without rendering a faithful and true account thereof to the government.

CHARGE SECOND—DISOBEDIENCE OF ORDERS.

Specification first. For that in express violation of his instructions from the honorable the Secretary of the Navy, dated the 8th day of September, 1821, he, the said Charles Stewart, in the year 1822, then commanding the United States ship Franklin, did aid and assist an American ship called the Canton, an American ship called the Pearl, an English brig called the Sarah, and a French ship called the Telegraph, in carrying on an illicit and contraband trade with certain ports in Peru called the Intermedios; aiding and assisting said vessels in violating the laws and decrees of the government of Peru, and in transporting and landing arms, military stores and other contraband articles; and in protecting the said vessels from the consequences of such illegal conduct, by employing or threatening to employ the naval forces of the United States in their defence.

Specification second. In employing, on or about the 11th day of July, 1822, the naval forces of the United States under his command in preventing the commander of the Peruvian brig Belgrano from enforcing the laws and instructions of his government for taking and sending in for adjudication an American vessel called the Canton, detected in carrying on an illicit trade to the injury of said government.

Specification third. In transporting or causing to be transported, on board the United States schooner Dolphin, on or about the 6th May, 1822, one Eliphalet Smith, with goods and merchandise for sale on private account, and permitting Smith to carry such, his own private goods and merchandise not designed for the use of the said schooner, on board the said schooner, under the protection and flag of the United States, to certain ports forbidden by the laws of the country.

Specification fourth. In lending aid and countenance to the violators of the revenue laws of the government of Peru, by permitting and aiding sundry persons, at various times between the arrival of the Franklin in the Pacific in the year 1821, and her departure from thence in 1824, to carry off from the shore specie, bullion, plata pina, and other articles, contrary to the laws of said government, without the permission, authority or knowledge of the custom house officers and local authorities; and to deposit said articles so smuggled from the shore on board the public vessels of the United States then under the command of him, the said Charles Stewart.

Specification fifth. In assisting with the naval forces of the United States, then under the command of him, the said Charles Stewart, in defending and protecting persons and property, engaged in smuggling, from arrest and detention by the lawful authorities of the government of Peru at the times mentioned in the last preceding specification.

Specification sixth. In permitting to be received, and in receiving on board the said ship, the Franklin, and other vessels under his command, at various times within the periods aforesaid, within the jurisdiction of the said government of Peru, certain persons, who by the laws of the said government were obnoxious to capture and punishment—spies and officers in the royalist army, and in protecting said persons from seizure and punishment, contrary to the express instructions given to the said Charles Stewart by his government, and in contravention of his duties as the commander in the service of a neutral nation. In particular, in receiving, or permitting to be received and protected as aforesaid, an individual by the name of Madrice, an officer in the royalist army, and a spy in Lima, and the director or late director of the mint.

Specification seventh. In unlawfully, and in violation of his duties as a neutral, carrying from Callao to the before-mentioned ports, called the Intermedios, sometime between the 1st of May and the 15th of July, 1822, intelligence of a contemplated military expedition, prepared by the patriot government of Peru, against said Intermedios, and thereby exposing the same to defeat and destruction.

CHARGE THIRD—NEGLECT OF DUTY.

Specification first. In permitting and authorizing William A. Weaver, a lieutenant in the navy of the United States, attached to the Franklin, and borne on the books of that vessel, to absent himself from said ship and from his duties on board during the entire cruise of said ship, from the month of September, 1821, till her arrival within the United States, in the summer of 1824, without any necessity or reason of a public nature.

Specification second. For that, whereas, Horace B. Sawyer, a lieutenant in the navy of the United States, did, on the 24th day of July, 1822, and on the 28th of August, in the same year, exhibit to said Charles Stewart, his commanding officer, charges and specifications of the most serious character against David Conner, a lieutenant in the navy, then under the command of the said Charles Stewart, and did refer to several witnesses as able to sustain said charges; he, the said Charles Stewart, did omit and neglect to notice said charges, or to cause their truth to be investigated, to the great injury of the naval service of the United States.

Specification third. In not having his men regularly and properly exercised at quarters, and in not having his guns in a proper state for action, as he was bound to have done, during the cruise of said Franklin, from the month of September, 1821, to the summer of 1824.

CHARGE FOURTH—OPPRESSION AND CRUELTY.

Specification. In confining Joshua R. Sands, a lieutenant in the navy of the United States, and under the immediate command of the said Charles Stewart, in an unusual and unnecessary manner on board the Franklin, from the 9th October, 1823, until the 13th of April, 1824, without taking any measures to bring the said Sands to trial for any alleged misconduct, and in continuing said oppressive and cruel conduct subsequent to the said 13th of April, to the manifest and great injury of the health of said Sands.

(Signed) RICHARD S. COXE, Judge Advocate.

Minutes of the proceedings of a general court-martial, convened at the city of Washington, in the building on First street east and the corner of the Maryland avenue, this eighteenth day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-five, by virtue of a precept from the honorable the Secretary of the Navy, bearing date the seventeenth day of August, instant, hereunto annexed and marked A.

Present: Captain James Barron, president, Captains William M. Crane, Robert T. Spence, John D. Henley, Jesse D. Elliott, Stephen Cassin, James Renshaw, Thomas Brown, Charles C. B. Thompson, Alexander S. Wadsworth, George W. Rodgers, and George C. Read, members; and Richard S. Coxe, judge advocate.

Captain Charles Stewart appeared in court to answer to the charges exhibited against him. Being asked whether he had any objections to make against either of the members of the court, he replied that he had none.

The oath prescribed by law in such case was then administered to the president and each of the members of the court by the judge advocate; and the oath required to be taken by the judge advocate was then administered to him by the president. The charges and specifications were then read by the judge advocate, annexed to the record and marked B. The accused pleaded not guilty to the same. The accused then presented an application to the court, to be heard and assisted by counsel; as also permission to employ a stenographer, and such other person as may be necessary for his assistance, and mentioned Joseph Hopkinson and Robert D. Taylor, Esquires, as the counsel whose professional aid he required. The court being cleared, proceeded to deliberate upon the application of the accused, and being reopened, it was announced that the court had agreed to accede to this request, and to allow the gentlemen named as counsel to appear in that character under the restrictions customary in the practice of courts-martial. These restrictions the court understands to be, that all propositions, motions, and communications be made to the court in writing, by handing the same to the judge advocate; that all questions proposed on behalf of the accused be propounded in writing, through the judge advocate. The court likewise accedes to the wish of Captain Stewart, to have a stenographer in the court for the purpose of taking notes of the proceedings and of the evidence, with the understanding that these notes are taken for the use of the accused alone, in aiding him on the present trial.

William M. Hunter, a lieutenant in the navy of the United States, being produced by the judge advocate, and having been duly sworn according to law, and by him examined, deposes and says: I was the first lieutenant on board the Franklin during her late cruise from September, 1821, till her return to the United States in August, 1824, with the exception of some few months, when I was ashore, sick; I was on board in the months of May, June and July, in the year 1822; I know the American ship, the Canton, bound, as I heard, from New York to Valparaiso; we fell in with her at St. Juan Fernandez; she was lying to off that island when we arrived there; we were at anchor at St. Juan Fernandez three or four days; she continued lying to off that island; from St. Juan Fernandez we proceeded to Valparaiso; the Canton sailed about the same time; we arrived at Valparaiso together, in February, 1822, and sailed from that port early in May following; the Canton was in Valparaiso during that period; we proceeded from Valparaiso to Arica; the Canton accompanied us; (Arica is one of the Intermedios;) we remained at Arica I think nearly a month, and thence proceeded to Quilca (another of the Intermedios), the Canton in company; I do not recollect how long we continued at Quilca; we proceeded down towards Callao, but did not enter that port together; the Canton parted company with us the evening before we went into Callao; Captain O'Sullivan commanded the Canton, and was the principal supercargo; Mr. Ward the assistant supercargo; during the period in which the two vessels were together, those officers of the Canton were in the habits of intimacy with the officers of the Franklin; I have no knowledge of any arms, military stores, or other contraband articles being on board the Canton at the time of her arrival at Valparaiso; the ports called the Intermedios were in the possession of the royalists during the time that we were there, as before mentioned; during the time that we were at Arica the Canton was anchored between us and the shore, at the distance of perhaps more that half a mile; at Quilca also between us and the shore, at the distance of about a quarter of a mile; the cargo of the Canton was carried on shore at Arica and Quilca by her own boats; I do not know of what that cargo consisted; I do not know whether or not it was the same cargo she brought from the United States, or whether it was shipped at Valparaiso; I cannot recollect the time when we parted company with the Canton off Callao; the Peruvian brig, Belgrano, came into Quilca while we were lying there, while the Canton was lying there with us; the captain of the Belgrano, Prunier, came on board the Franklin and went into the cabin of the commodore; told the commodore he should take the Canton from under our guns, as the whole coast was under blockade; the commodore then told him if he made the attempt he should then act himself; not much more passed between them; he was on board several times afterwards, but I do not recollect his mentioning the subject again; I do not recollect that anything was said by Captain Prunier of the landing of arms by the Canton, or her carrying on any trade, or that any other reason was assigned for his intention to take possession of that vessel than the blockade of which I have spoken. I do not know who was the owner of the Canton or her cargo, nor do I, of my own knowledge, know who were interested in either, nor do I know, by any communication from Commodore Stewart, or by any other person in his presence, who were so interested; I was acting as first lieutenant of the Franklin in the month of August, 1822, at the period when the Peruviano and Waterwitch were in the neighborhood of the Franklin; these two vessels were built by our own carpenters, one at Arica, the other at Quilca, on our first voyage down; the frames and all the materials for building and equipping them were brought out in the Pearl, from Boston; an arrangement was made by Captain Stewart with the captain of the Pearl, by which the former was to have one of the schooners for building the others; the third was built at St. Juan Fernandez, and named the Robinson Crusoe; the Peruviano and Waterwitch, during the time they were in the service, were manned and officered from the Franklin. Lieutenant Henry at different times commanded both; Midshipman Wilkes had charge of the Waterwitch, to deliver the Waterwitch up to the owner or his agent, at which time the crew returned to the Franklin. The Waterwitch was launched some time in June, 1822, and the Peruviano in July or August of the same year; one or the other was under the command of Lieutenant Henry until a few days before we sailed from Callao, on our return to the United States, in 1824. They were used as dispatch boats. They went with letters on various occasions to Guayaquil, Panama, Valparaiso and Callao, and carried Lieutenant Mayo to Panama. The Peruviano had on board a part of the cargo of the Canton, which was taken out of that vessel the evening before we entered Callao. The Peruviano was not then rigged, but was in tow of the Franklin; she was carried into the harbor of Callao, then in possession of the patriots. I do not know of my own knowledge what the goods were. The Peruviano was rigged and fitted out in the harbor of Callao, and sailed from there under the command of Lieutenant Henry. I cannot say whether the part of the cargo of the Canton was landed at Callao or carried from thence in the schooner. I know of no other instance of either of these vessels, while commanded by officers or manned from the crew of the Franklin, having private property on board. After parting company with the Canton off Callao, we fell in with her again at Quilca, in the latter part of the year 1822. We laid there together, I cannot say how long, and sailed together. She was bound to Europe, we to Valparaiso; we parted company I think the fifth or sixth day after Captain O'Sullivan returned in the Canton. Mr. Ward was appointed commodore's secretary. He had joined the Franklin when we parted company with the Canton off Callao the first time. He was rated on the books of the Franklin, immediately after joining the ship, as second master. He remained with us till our return to the United States. At Valparaiso, when we first went out, there was some wine purchased, which was brought on board from the Canton; it was claret wine in hogsheads; there were, I think, more than twenty, but I cannot say how many; other articles were purchased from Mr. Hogan, the United States agent on shore. They were nails, canvas and paints. I cannot say, of my own knowledge, where they were procured. When the Franklin sailed from New York, she was well equipped and prepared for the cruise. She was not in want of canvas on our arrival at Valparaiso. The nails were purchased with the idea of building a dispatch boat before we knew of the frames. There was no immediate use for any of those articles on board the Franklin, at the time of the purchase. They were in part used on board the Franklin. The Constellation received thirty bolts of canvas, and there were thirty-six bolts loaned to the Canton, for the purpose of making sails for her. The sails for the Canton were made on board the Franklin, by the crew of the Franklin, on our first passage down from Valparaiso to Callao. The Dolphin received them from the Franklin at Callao, and took them to Guayaquil. Part of the other articles were consumed on board the Franklin; part were brought to the United States; part of the nails and paints were so consumed, and the residue of the canvas. The wine was used, part as wine and part as vinegar. The Peruviano, while she had the goods on board received from the Canton, in the harbor of Callao, was anchored near the Franklin. During this time Mr. Ward did not, to my knowledge, continue to act as the supercargo of the Canton, nor had he anything to do with the goods. The Peruviano, when towed in, was a mere hull of a vessel, not perfectly decked, and without masts. When rigged she assumed the appearance and was understood to be a public vessel. During the times we were in the harbors of Quilca and Arica with the Canton, that vessel wore the flag and pendant common to American merchant vessels. Inquiry was made by Captain Prunier of Commodore Stewart, whether the Canton was or was not a public vessel, or in the employ of the government. The answer given was, that she was a merchant vessel. We saw the Pearl, the Sarah, and the Telegraph on the coast of Peru; neither of them sailed in company with us. The Pearl was in sight during our passage from Valparaiso, as far as Arica. I believe she had applied for convoy, but was refused. The Canton was along with us, and she and the Pearl were together the evening before we arrived at Arica, but at no other time. The Canton did not, to my knowledge, during that voyage, lay to, or shorten sail for the Pearl. Convoy was refused to the Pearl because she had arms on board. They were not landed at Arica. She sailed from that port to the northwest coast. No arms or other articles were, to my knowledge, shipped from the Pearl to the Canton. On our passage from Valparaiso to Arica, there was a brig in sight, which afterwards proved to be the Sarah. The Pearl and Sarah were fallen in with about half way down the coast. The frames that I have spoken of were purchased at Valparaiso and in part delivered at Arica. The greater part we took on board at Valparaiso, as much as we could conveniently carry. I do not know that while in the port of Arica either the Pearl or Sarah was engaged in landing their cargoes, or in any commerce with the shore. I do not know that any arms or cannon were landed from the Pearl at Arica. Carpenters and other men, mechanics and laboring men, were permitted to be employed on board the Canton, Wasp, and other vessels, without distinction of nations—never when their services were wanted on board the public vessels. I believe they were in almost every instance paid by the owners or captains of the vessels on board which they worked. It was not possible to procure mechanics or laboring men from the shore, and for that reason it was permitted. It was a permission to the persons thus occupied, not an order, and of course no complaints were made by them. It was a usual thing in the service. I know Captain Eliphalet Smith. He came on board the Franklin while we were at Valparaiso the first time. He was a passenger in the cabin with the commodore. He remained until after leaving Callao. We went down to Quilca. He was landed, I think, some time in October. I understood he was an American merchant, doing business out there. He was engaged as a merchant during that period. I do not know of what vessels he was the owner, or in which he was interested in that sea at that time. While lying in port, he was at times on board, at times on shore. I do not know whether he was engaged in carrying on any business on his own account or on behalf of any of the officers or crew of the Franklin, nor whether he had any goods or samples of goods on board the Franklin. He had not an unusual quantity of baggage for a mere passenger; nor did he, when he landed from or returned to the Franklin, carry or bring with him an unusual portion of baggage. I understood he was once sent in the Dolphin, by the commodore, to carry a dispatch, but I know of no other instance of the sort. He was not employed to board vessels, or to perform any other duties which it is usual to execute by the means or instrumentality of officers. William A. Weaver was borne on the books of the Franklin as a lieutenant during the cruise. He did not sail in her, nor was he on board after sailing from New York. We first saw him at Rio Janeiro; he was on board the merchant vessel the America. We saw him next at Valparaiso, on our first arrival there. We did not again see him during the cruise. He did not do duty as a lieutenant on board the Franklin, either at Rio or Valparaiso. There were no muskets, cartridges, or other military stores sent on board the Canton from the Franklin. I should have known it had they been sent. There were none from the carpenter's department sent on board, to my knowledge. At the time the first cutter was lost, a sail which had been borrowed from the Canton was lost, and an old condemned studding-sail given to Captain O'Sullivan in lieu of it. About the same time, the Canton returned to us in rigging, for the use of the Franklin, a loan which had been made to her previously of a hawser. There were hoops, purchased by the slush fund, private property, which were used in making kegs, &c., which were sold, and the fund credited with the price of them. There were two saws; one was loaned to Captain Smith, the other to Captain Adderton, of the brig Nancy, an American vessel, whose crew had mutinied and thrown his tools overboard: both were returned. As to any other articles being sold or given away, I know nothing. In November, 1823, and January, 1824, I was not on board the ship, being sick on shore. I have no knowledge of any plate, bullion, coin, or other articles being smuggled off to the ship. While the ship was lying at Quilca, on our first visit, the boats went off from the ship and returned after night with money. They went, I think, before night. There was a small cove at the place and a building called the custom house. Lieutenant Henry was one of the officers. Midshipman Pearson was also on board. We were lying about a mile and a half from the shore. About the same place (I cannot say whether on the same or a subsequent visit) the same circumstances again occurred, and I think the same officers. We sent money from the Franklin on board an American brig bound to the United States; sent on board her in the harbor of Callao. She had not gone to sea. Mr. Goldsborough was, I think, the officer. Part of this money (the principal part) came from the Dolphin, part from merchant ships in harbor, and part belonged to the brig herself. No part of it, to my knowledge, was public property. I know of no other instance of a similar kind. In going from Valparaiso down the coast, the commodore had his horses on board. They were taken on board at Valparaiso. Two of them were landed at Quilca. There were six in the whole, at different times, on board; five belonging to the commodore, and one to Captain Smith. The commodore told me he had given his horse, which was landed at Quilca, to a Mr. Cotera, a merchant of the place. I do not know that either of them were ever given to General Canterac, or any other royalist general, nor did I ever see either of them afterwards in the royalist army. The horse that was given by the commodore to Mr. Cotera was in return for a present made by Mr. Cotera to Mrs. Stewart. There was a person of the name of Madrid on board the Franklin. I thought Commodore Stewart knew him to be there. From the commodore's conversation with me a year after, he appeared to be in great distress in hearing of it, and I was induced to believe he never had known of it before. I saw a man who was said to be the director of the mint. He came on board for the purpose of depositing bullion, or something of the kind, which was not received. It was refused because it belonged to him as a Spaniard, one of the belligerents, and also on account of the size of the boxes. When we sailed from Callao for the Intermedios, it was for the purpose of convoying an American ship called the Chauncey. I do not know of any request, either of an official or unofficial kind, to the commodore to delay going down then. I think there was a military expedition which had sailed before us from Collao, bound to the Intermedios. Whether it arrived there before we did I cannot say. It had not arrived at the port we were at. That was the time that Madrid was on board. In January or February following we heard the report that the expedition was defeated. The patriot party was at that time in possession of Lima. During the voyage from the United States till our return, the crew of the Franklin was as frequently and as regularly exercised at quarters as I have ever seen on board a ship. The guns of the Franklin were, as I conceived, kept in a proper state for action. The gunner reported the fore-cabin guns to have the same cartridges in them which they had when we sailed from New York, but they were frequently drawn, examined, and found in good order. I left the Franklin about the first of October, 1823, and I returned about the first of March, during which time I was detained on shore by sickness. Lieutenant Sands was confined from the time I rejoined the ship until the time mentioned in the specification of the last charge. He remained confined until his return to the United States. During the latter part of the time he had the use of the gun deck t walk about. He was tried at Callao soon after the arrival of the United States—about April or May. The sentence of the court was never promulgated on board the Franklin. No alteration was made his confinement until some time after the sitting of that court, but on our passage home he was allowed to walk the gun deck. He was continued under arrest until after our arrival at New York. From the time I rejoined the Franklin until Mr. Sands was allowed to walk the gun deck, he was confined to his state-room. It was never reported to me that his health was affected. I believe the officers of the ship asked the commodore to enlarge him from his confinement. The commodore said he had offered him the privilege of the gun deck upon certain restrictions, which he would not agree to. The cause of his arrest and confinement was a quarrel with one of the officers.

Question. (By the court.) As first lieutenant of the ship, would you have known if any articles of stores had been sent on board the Canton from the Franklin?

Answer. I should; as one of the regulations of the ship required that it should be done upon an order signed either by the first lieutenant or the commanding officer.

Ques. How often were the men exercised at quarters?

Ans. Generally every day or so, one division or other, at sea. They were not often exercised in port.

Ques. Did you examine and sign the weekly expenditures of the ship's stores?

Ans. Yes. I examined the accounts weekly, and they were signed monthly in the books.

The court adjourned till 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

FRIDAY, August 19, 1825.

The court met pursuant to the adjournment of yesterday. Present: all the members of the court, the judge advocate and Captain Stewart. The minutes of the proceedings of yesterday were read, and the court resumed the examination of Lieutenant Hunter.

The carriage, carriage horses, and two riding horses belonging to the commodore, were landed at Callao, and left at Lima. They were all taken on board at Valparaiso, at the navy yard. Those left at Lima were never taken on board again. They were left there when we sailed.

Question. (By the court.) You say, sir, that Commodore Stewart offered to release Lieutenant Sands under certain restrictions; will you be pleased to state what these restrictions were?

Answer. I understood the commodore to say that if Lieutenant Sands would pledge himself not to quarrel with or molest any of the officers of the ship, he would allow him the liberty, and I understood him to say that Lieutenant Sands had refused it.

Henry Henry, a lieutenant in the navy of the United States, being produced by the judge advocate, and having been duly sworn according to law, deposes and says: I was on board the Franklin, as a lieutenant, a portion of the time that she was on her cruise in the Pacific. I was on board until the 22d June, 1822, when I was ordered to take command of the dispatch boat, the Waterwitch. (The orders read, annexed to the record and marked 1.) I rejoined the Franklin on the twenty-third of April, 1824, by virtue of the order of that date, (read, annexed and marked 2.) From the time I rejoined the Franklin, I remained on board, until her arrival in New York. Between the two dates I have specified, I was engaged as the commander either of the Waterwitch or the Peruviano The Canton was first fallen in with off the Island of St. Juan Fernandez. There was a private signal flying on one of the mast heads of the Canton when we first fell in with her. None of the officers appeared to know what vessel she was by her signal. I do not know whether the Canton was in New York when we left there. The Franklin went into the harbor of St. Juan Fernandez. The Canton remained under way. Before we went in, Captain O'Sullivan came on board, whether from his own ship or the Dolphin I do not recollect. We remained at the island two or three days; less I think than a week. The evening we got under way, I was the officer of the first watch. She was in sight when I took charge of the deck; the Franklin was lying to; during the watch, we filled away and I lost sight of the Canton. I do not recollect that Captain O'Sullivan was on board when we got under way, nor whether any signal was made to the Canton from the Franklin. The day we arrived off the harbor of Valparaiso, I saw the Canton in company with the Dolphin. The Dolphin got under way from St. Juan Fernandez a little after us; some little delay occurred, which was the cause of our laying to. I do not know where the Canton was ostensibly bound from or to, nor do I know what her cargo consisted of. I think we arrived at Valparaiso in February, 1822, and sailed from there in May following. During that time, the Canton remained in the port of Valparaiso. The captain of the Canton, O'Sullivan, and the officers of the Franklin, were in habits of intimacy. When we left Valparaiso the Canton accompanied us. We went to Arica, one of the ports of the Intermedios; the Canton continued in that port as long as we did, and sailed with us to Quilca. I do not know anything of any commerce or trade carried on by the Canton other than that she landed part of her cargo at Arica, and the remainder at Quilca. The ports of the Intermedios were in the possession of the royalists. I know nothing of the purchasing for the Franklin from the Canton of any articles in the harbor of Valparaiso. I remember that while at Valparaiso, canvas, wine, nails, and other articles were brought on board the Franklin, whether from the shore or the Canton I do not know. Previous to my taking command of the Peruviano, I stated to Commodore Stewart that there were some goods on board her, and asked him what I should do with them? He stated to me that they were there for safe keeping, and that I would deliver them over to the Canton as soon as I fell in with her. This was in the port of Callao, on or about the 26th September, 1822. There were eight or nine bales of dry goods, I presume. They were delivered to the Canton off the port of Quilca. I saw Captain O'Sullivan, and directed him to send for them, which was done. They were delivered, I think, some time in the month of October following. The Peruviano belonged to Commodore Stewart; she was officered and manned from the Franklin. She was not subjected to the payment of duties as a private vessel, but was treated as a public vessel, during the time that I commanded her. I sailed from Quilca on or about the 26th of July, 1822, in the Waterwitch, for the port of Guayaquil, under the orders of that date. (Read, annexed and marked 3.) I joined company with the Franklin somewhere about the 2d of September, in the harbor of Callao. Shortly after the Constellation sailed, while at Valparaiso, an American brig called the Pearl arrived in that harbor; I went on board her in company with Mr. Girold, a merchant of that place, at his instance. While on board I ascertained that they had the frames of three schooners, with all the materials necessary for building, equipping and sailing them. These, the captain of the Pearl informed me, were intended for the Sandwich Islands. I inquired whether he would sell any or all of them, to which he replied that he had not made up his mind, but his then impression was that he should prefer carrying them to the Sandwich Islands, for which place they were originally designed. I returned on board the Franklin. This was sometime after sundown. The next morning I informed Capt. Stewart of the circumstance. He then observed that one of these vessels would be very desirable for the purpose of facilitating the duties which were required of the squadron. The commodore directed me to inquire what would be taken for one of them. The captain of the Pearl told me it was impossible for him to say, as he had not made up his mind to sell them. After some conversation it was finally agreed that the commodore should build the three vessels; should deliver two of them at the Sandwich Islands, and pay five hundred dollars, and retain the third. In the course of a day or two, the agreement to the foregoing effect was concluded. The frames and materials, all or nearly the whole, were put on board the Franklin, and on our arrival at Arica the materials for one of them were landed on an island. She was built there and named the Waterwitch; she was immediataly put under my command; she was towed down to Quilca, astern of the Franklin; during the passage down, I superintended the finishing of her; on our arrival at Quilca, the frame of the Peruviano was landed; she was built and launched in the cove there; I also superintended the building of her until she was launched, which was a few days previous to my receiving the instructions under which, as before stated, I proceeded to Guayaquil. Some of the articles employed about these vessels were, as I understood, borrowed from the Franklin, which were afterwards purchased by Mr. Hogan, and returned to the ship. The Waterwitch had some muskets, pistols, and cutlasses taken from the Franklin. The Peruviano had a gunnade, I think a twelve-pounder, and a small swivel, which was presented to me by a friend, which I placed on the bows; she also had muskets, pistols, and cutlasses, and a small arm-chest. The articles I have spoken of on board the Waterwitch were, I think, left on board when she was transferred by me to Midshipman Wilkes when he succeeded me. The armament of the Peruviano was returned to the Franklin when I delivered that vessel to Mr. Nixon, to whom she was sold. I think I understood, from a conversation between Commodore Stewart and Commodore Hull, that the Peruviano was sold for $4,000 or $4,500. I understood that both the other schooners were delivered to the captain of the Pearl, or to persons authorized by him to receive them; I understood that Mr. Hogan returned the articles that I have mentioned as borrowed from the Franklin from the commodore's private account; I made the application to Mr. Hogan to charge them in this way, by direction of Commodore Stewart. The two schooners were built by the carpenters and crew of the Franklin. Previous to Commodore Stewart's ordering them to be built he called the carpenter's mate and stated to him that if he would build them quick and get them launched, he would, in addition to the pay he would allow him, make him a present of one hundred dollars. I understood that they were to be paid for their labor independently of their pay as attached to the ship, besides the hundred dollars; whether they did receive it, or from whom, I cannot say. I know nothing as to the purser sending clothing or other articles from his stores on shore. I never knew the officers of the Franklin, during the period that I was in her, to be unable to procure from the purser such articles as they stood in need of. I know nothing of any musket cartridges, or other military stores, being sent on board the Canton from the Franklin, nor of any articles of any other character belonging to the Franklin. I do not know of any trade in military stores, or contraband articles, being carried on by the Canton, Pearl, Sarah, or Telegraph, while in company with the Franklin. I was asked, by some one at Arica, whether either the Canton or the Pearl had landed arms. I replied that I did not know, and immediately went on board and repeated to Commodore Stewart what had passed. The commodore immediately directed Lieutenants Hunter and Hammersly to go on board the Pearl with some instructions in relation to the arms, but what I know not. At the time of the correspondence between Captain Prunier of the Belgrano and Commodore Stewart, in relation to the Canton, I was principally on shore and knew nothing of the circumstances. On our first arrival at Quilca, I went in charge of the boats of the Franklin on shore, for the purpose of taking off some specie, plata pina, &c., belonging to Captain Smith. In the morning, previous to the first night that I went after this money, I was requested, by Captain Smith, to accompany him to the Bay of Aranta, about three leagues to the southward of the port of Quilca. On my arrival there, I found a colonel in the royal army, who was doing duty in the custom house in the port of Quilca. He stated to me that that was the place where the mules would arrive with the specie. That evening I went up in company with Captain Smith. After waiting one hour or two, a caravan of about sixty or seventy mules arrived; they had the specie, plata pina, &c., with them. This was delivered to me by a sergeant doing duty in the custom house, and one whom I understood was particularly employed for the purpose of preventing smuggling. After I took it on board the boats I proceeded on board the Franklin. I went three times, twice to the Bay of Aranta, once to the northward of Quilca; each time the money was delivered to me by the sergeant. On each occasion it was taken on board the boats at night. I went also once with Captain O'Sullivan, while in the port of Arica; we went on shore after tea in the evening. I went up to the house of the governor or sub-delegate, who informed me there was some money coming down from the interior for Captain O'Sullivan. After waiting some two or three hours in his house, taking some refreshments, the money arrived; he went in person and directed it to be put on board a boat belonging to the Canton; this also was after night. I then went on board the Franklin. These were the only instances in which I had anything to do with carrying specie on board the Franklin. It was in each instance a voluntary act of my own, without any orders from the commodore. I was engaged on shore in the building or equipping the two schooners, and had nothing to do with the Franklin. The customary amount paid on the deposit of money on board our ships-of-war in that quarter was one per cent. and for freight two and a half. I do not know, what was paid on the particular occasions to which I have referred. I knew nothing of an individual named Madrid being on board the Franklin until it was mentioned to me some months after by Lieutenant Hammersley, as a circumstance that had taken place. I saw the director of the mint on board in company with an American gentleman who lived at the time in Callao, whose name I do not recollect; it was in the harbor of Callao. He merely came on board; was on the spar deck; did not go below, and remained but a short time. I did not understand that he was obnoxious to capture or punishment by the authorities on shore. It was about eleven o'clock in the morning that he was on board. There was no appearance of concealment or secrecy. He appeared to have no business of his own, but to be merely a companion of the gentleman with whom he was. I do not recollect to have ever seen him on board, except on that single occasion. On my return from Panama to Callao, some time in the month of March, 1823, I was directed by Commodore Stewart to remain there ten days, by the orders read (annexed to the record and marked 4). When the ten days had nearly expired, I received a letter from Judge Prevost (read, annexed to the record, and marked 5), enclosing one to him from the secretary of state and foreign relations of Peru (read, annexed, and marked 6). This note was handed to me by Captain Connor, of the Dolphin, to whom I replied that I did not feel authorized to disobey the orders I had received from Commodore Stewart, particularly as the terms required were so dishonorable to an American and a neutral officer (alluding to the requiring my pledge of honor). After some conversation on the subject with Captain Connor, he being the senior officer, it was determined I should remain, and he wrote an answer to Judge Prevost (of which a copy was read, annexed to the record, and marked 7). I believe he also had received a note from Mr. Prevost, of the same tenor with mine. I have no recollection of any military expedition sailing from Callao about the months of May, June or July, 1822. I think the first that occurred was the one in March, 1823. During the whole period of the cruise of the Franklin, from the first sailing of the ship until I quit her, when the weather would permit it, more or less of the divisions of the ship, and sometimes at general quarters, were exercised. So far as related to my own division, the guns were always in good order, and I never heard any complaint that the others were not. The schooners, while under my command, were particularly employed in carrying dispatches, and other public services connected with the squadron, and upon no other duties whatever. My instructions were sometimes in writing, sometimes verbal; on one occasion I carried Lieutenant Mayo from Valparaiso to Panama, some time in January, 1824. Commodore Stewart handed me a letter for Captain Connor; we were at Quilca; Captain Connor was at Callao. This letter, with the permission of the commodore, I read before it was sealed; it was an order for him to proceed immediately off the Island of Chiloe, for the purpose of intercepting the Spanish brig called Quintanilla, or any of the prizes that he might make and send in. According to the best of my recollection it applied to American vessels. Some few days after sailing from Quilca I fell in with the American schooner the Adonis, of Baltimore, from Callao, which vessel had been captured some ten or twelve days previous by the Quintanilla. I spoke her; sent an officer on board, who found a prize master on board belonging to the Quintanilla. The captain of the Adonis and the supercargo, and, I believe, a passenger, an American, by the name of Crosby, came on board my vessel; they informed me they had been captured some ten or twelve days previous, and robbed of about $2,000 worth of property. When I asked them for the papers, he informed me that a number of them had been destroyed by this pirate, as he termed him. Having satisfied myself as well as I could that the property was American, I requested Captain Gibbs, an American citizen, who was a passenger with me, and whose vessel was employed by Commodore Stewart, to take charge of the Adonis, and carry her into the port of Quilca, where I had left Commodore Stewart with the Franklin, and to deliver over the vessel to him, with the papers of the vessel. The Quintanilla was, as I understood, a regularly commissioned royalist vessel, but in consequence of her piratical conduct was esteemed a pirate. Captain Gibbs commanded the Amanda, a schooner from Baltimore; she was manned and armed from the Franklin, and was, I believe, sent off the Island of Chiloe on the same business, and had previously, as I understood, been in pursuit of the Quintanilla. The Amanda was under the command of Lieutenant Hammersly.

The court adjourned till ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

SATURDAY, August 20, 1825.

The court met pursuant to the adjournment of yesterday. Present: all the members of the court, the judge advocate, and Captain Stewart. The examination of lieutenant Henry Henry was resumed:

I have the log-book of the Peruviano, but that of the Waterwitch was left on board the vessel when she was transferred to Mr. Wilkes. On the 26th September, 1822, I resumed the command of the Peruviano, in the harbor of Callao; I was left there till the 8th of October, under orders from Commodore Stewart to wait upon the minister of state, to receive any communication he might have to make to the commodore, in reply to a communication from the latter. I sailed on the 8th October, having waited on the secretary, who had no communication to make. I sailed for Quilca, to rejoin the commodore, and arrived at Quilca on the 27th of that month, and rejoined him there. On the passage down I discovered the Franklin off the port of Molliendo; passed by Quilca, spoke him, received on board Lieut. Hammersly and Captain Smith, whom I landed at Molliendo, and proceeded to Quilca. I sailed from Quilca on the 5th November for Valparaiso, having remained in Quilca in the interim, laying alongside of the Franklin, waiting further orders. No specie, goods, or persons were received on board; I may, perhaps, on reflection, have carried specie, but I have no recollection whether I did or not. When I sailed I left the Franklin there. The object of my visit to Valparaiso was to get some provisions in readiness for the Franklin, and I carried a letter from Commodore Stewart to Mr. Hogan to that effect. I arrived at Valparaiso on the 29th November, not having touched at any place on the passage. On the 29th December the Franklin arrived. Understanding she was in sight I got my vessel under way, stood out to meet her and returned into harbor in company with her. I remained in Valparaiso until the 12th January. No goods, specie or passengers were taken on board in that port. About midnight of the 12th I got under way, under the instructions yesterday submitted to the court, for the purpose of carrying Lieutenant Mayo to Panama, with orders to touch at Callao. January 25th I arrived at Callao; on the following day I sailed for Panama. On the 17th February I anchored in the Bay of Panama, landed Lieutenant Mayo, the bearer of dispatches, who proceeded on his way immediately, having obtained a passport from Bolivar on a previous visit to Guayaquil in the Waterwitch. I took on board the necessary wood and water, and on the 22d February sailed for Callao, where I arrived on the 19th March following.

In compliance with my instructions, and by the orders of Lieutenant Conner, as mentioned yesterday, I remained until the 3d April. Understanding at Callao that the commodore was at Quilca, I sailed for that port, at which place I arrived on the 15th April, and there found the Franklin; it being a perfect calm, I left the vessel at the distance of about forty miles and proceeded in my boat on board the Franklin, then at Quilca. On the morning of the 17th the Peruviano got in, being towed in by the boats of the Franklin; the calm continuing, I remained at Quilca till the 24th April, waiting further orders. I think I there received on board Captain Parsons, of the American brig Thetis, and some specie, for Valparaiso, and sailed on the 24th, under the orders of the 22d (read, annexed and marked 7), for Valparaiso. On the 16th May I arrived at Valparaiso, and on my arrival found the letter of March 23d (read, annexed and marked 8), which had been left by the commodore while I was gone to Panama, and which I had of course not received earlier in consequence of my stopping at Quilca. On the 28th May I left Valparaiso, having taken on board neither passengers, goods nor specie, and arrived off the port of Molliendo, to the southward and eastward of Quilca. I stopped there, being carried in by the current; landed to inquire whether the Franklin was on the coast. On the 13th June I sailed from Molliendo for Callao, where I arrived on the 17th, and found the Franklin. I remained at that port until the 5th August, when I sailed for Valparaiso under orders of the 4th (read, annexed and marked 9). While at Callao I received on board Lieutenant Nixon of the navy, then on furlough, and then doing business as a merchant, and a Mr. Didier of Baltimore, supercargo of the American ship, the Arminices, of that port, together with some specie and plata pina belonging to them. On the 22d August arrived in the harbor of the Island of St. Juan Fernandez, for the purpose of procuring wood. On the 24th got under way for Valparaiso, in which port I anchored on the 27th. I had also on board at this time some plata pina, brought from Quilca, belonging to an English house, which, as I was about sailing, was put on board a French sloop-of-war in Valparaiso, and some belonging to an English . . . . put on board the British frigate, Aurora, at Callao. I remained there (Valparaiso) until December 13th, awaiting the Franklin, which vessel arrived on the 22d September, and after that time awaiting further orders. I landed at that place the gentlemen whom I have mentioned. They made a disposition of the specie; I think part of it to a German ship bound to India. It however was all taken out of my vessel. December 10th, the Franklin got under way. I was dining with Commodore Stewart on that day when he received information that the Quintanilla, the piratical vessel spoken of yesterday, had captured an English Indiaman, with a very considerable amount of specie, and Mr. Stewart, the American consul of Coquimbo. He, in consequence, got under way, and stated he would go to Coquimbo, and cruise off there until I joined him. He left me to receive some accounts, which were unsettled, relating to the Franklin, from Mr. Hogan, and then to proceed to Coquimbo. He sailed on the evening of the 10th. On the 13th I got under way, taking on board Mr. Girald, an American merchant. On the 14th, fell in with the Franklin off Coquimbo. Mr. Girald here left me and went on board the Franklin. On the 17th both vessels got under way. I stood out to sea with her, and immediately returned to the harbor of Coquimbo and anchored; continued there until the 29th, when I sailed for Valparaiso, having on board Mr. McCall, of Philadelphia, to whom I had given a passage. Arrived at Valparaiso the 4th January, 1824. I was there until verbal instructions were received from Commodore Stewart at Coquimbo. The purport of them was to remain at Valparaiso until the arrival of the mail from Buenos Ayres across the Cordilleras, by which he expected letters from the United States. There was, however, but one, which was for Lieutenant Ogden; and I received or heard of the proclamation of the King of Spain, announcing his restoration to unlimited power. We sailed January the 13th, and on the 22d arrived at Quilca, where I found the Franklin. On the 24th, got under way for Callao, with verbal instructions to take the letter to Captain Conner which was given in evidence yesterday. On the 26th, I recaptured the American schooner mentioned in my testimony yesterday. On the 30th, I arrived at Callao. On the 31st the Dolphin went to sea. On the 2d February I got under way, and, from an accident, had to return. Having repaired it, sailed the next evening for Quilca, where I had been directed by the Commodore to meet him, and arrived on the 17th February. I there found a letter which was delivered to me (read, annexed, and marked 10). I had on board, on my passage from Quilca to Callao, Captain Gibbs, of the American schooner the Amanda, and Captain Williams, of the American ship the Arab; the latter of whom returned with me to Quilca. In consequence of being short of water I anchored at Quilca, and endeavored to procure some from the Arab, but without success. The reasons for the commodore's order I heard. Mr. Girald came off from the shore, bringing me a dispatch from the vice-King for Commodore Stewart. He accompanied me afterwards to Valparaiso. He brought off some fruit, vegetables and specie belonging to himself. I understood from him that there had been some difficulty between Commodore Stewart and the government there, in consequence of his threatening to capture the Quintanilla. I sailed on the 18th February for Valparaiso. On the morning of March 6th, I arrived there and found the Franklin. On the 15th, the Franklin got under way, I believe, for Lima. On the 27th the frigate United States, Commodore Hull, arrived. On the 25th, the Dolphin had arrived, and, on the 26th, the Amanda, in charge of Lieut. Hammersly. I delivered to each of the officers the orders and communications left with me for them, referred to in the orders of March 15th (read, annexed, and marked 11). In consequence of my indisposition, and at my request, Commodore Hull placed his letters and dispatches on board the Dolphin and ordered her down. On the 4th May I got under way, in company with the United States, for Callao, and arrived at that place on the 12th. Being extremely unwell, I quit the Peruviano and went on board the Franklin, where I remained. She was afterwards sold to Mr. Nixon, to whom she was delivered as stated yesterday. I do not know myself of any instances in which convoy was refused to American vessels; I never did it myself with or without orders. The ports of the Intermedios are very insignificant places—the principal one is Arica. In consequence of the great distance from Arequipa to Arica, Quilca was made the port of entry, being much nearer. At Quilca there is a little cove; no port or harbor; the same at Molliendo, except for very small vessels. At Arica, vessels are obliged to anchor in the roadstead; and at the other places on the coast; neither of them are places of business or commerce, further than that of the vessels which go there to load their cargoes; there are no resident merchants there. Arequipa is a place of from 80,000 to 90,000 inhabitants, as I have understood. There was no town or house at the Bay of Aranta. There is but one house at the port of Quilca, occupied as a warehouse and by the custom house officers. I understood from the colonel, who pointed out the place where the specie was to be received, at Aranta, that he had received information of its having left a small town, (Legais, I think,) between Arequipa and the coast, and from the time it had left there he expected its arrival about the time he mentioned it would be there. At this place the English man-of-war brig Alacrity, on another occasion, took off a very large sum. There was no permit or other document from the custom house officers, that I know of, relating to this money. When it was taken on board the Franklin, Commodore Stewart was there to receive it, and I made no report to him on the subject. Commodore Stewart signed receipts for all moneys received on board on deposit, and bills of lading for all received on freight, and was considered as equally responsible in either case. That responsibility is, to deliver the amount of money for which he signs receipts or bills of lading. The responsibility rests with the officer who signs the receipt or bill of lading, and upon no one else. The money received for the deposit, or freight of specie, &c., on board the schooners, while under my command, was paid to me. Some time after I was thus in command, I recollect going to Commodore Stewart, on board the Franklin, and stating to him that I had at that time some money, thus received, and asking him what was to be done with it, not knowing what portion I was to pay over to him as commander-in-chief. He replied, you have taken all the responsibility, and are consequently entitled to all the emolument. He stated that the object for which that vessel was employed was not to make money; and, as nearly as I can recollect his expressions, added, she was to be employed wholly and exclusively for the public service, and for the vessels under his command. This transportation of specie, and the deposit on board public vessels-of-war, is absolutely indispensable. There was no security for it on shore, under either of the governments.

Examined on the part of Captain Stewart:

Question. During the period the Peruviano was in the service of the Government of the United States, was she in any other service or employment?

Answer. She was in no other.

Ques. What was her tonnage?

Ans. About forty tons, I think.

Ques. Was she provided with sweeps?

Ans. I had two.

Ques. Were you allowed any extra pay as her commander?

Ans. On my arrival in the United States, I had a conversation with the Secretary of the Navy on that subject, in which I signified to him that I thought myself entitled to the pay of a Lieutenant Commandant. He directed me to make out my account, which I did, and gave it to the Auditor; the extra pay claimed was $387.83; the Auditor, after a conversation with the Secretary, said that it was necessary that Commodore Stewart should certify the manner in which the vessel was employed. I transmitted the account to him for the purpose of obtaining the requisite certificate; without waiting for an answer I returned to Philadelphia, where I saw the commodore, and had a conversation relative to what had passed between the Secretary and myself. He put a certificate on the account, of which I have a copy (read, annexed and marked 12). I enclosed the account, with the certificate, to the Secretary, and received from him the answer (read, annexed and marked 13). I then transmitted all the orders I had received from Commodore Stewart, while in command, which I stated would give him full information of the duties which I had performed, and received from him the answer (read annexed and marked 14).

Ques. What was the value of the American schooner and her cargo recaptured by you? Did you ask or receive any salvage?

Ans. She was stated by the supercargo to be worth about $60,000. I neither asked nor received any salvage.

Ques. Do you believe a dispatch boat could have been hired to go from Valparaiso to Panama? and if so, what would have been the probable expense?

Ans. I suppose from $1,500 to $2,000. I do not know whether any could have been procured at the time. The commodore paid $1,200 per month, for the Amanda, and in general the time occupied would be from sixty to eighty days, taking the course which my orders required of me. The passage I had was an unusually quick one.

Ques. Was it a convenience and saving of expense to employ the Peruviano in the business of providing and preparing provisions for the Franklin?

Ans. It was a very considerable saving to the government.

Ques. Was the flag hoisted at the fore of the Canton, off St. Juan Fernandez, a private signal to any one on board the Franklin, whereby any information was understood to be conveyed, or was the flag the distinguishing flag of the Canton and the house to whom she belonged in New York?

Ans. I do not know.

Ques. Where was the Thetis at the time Captain Parsons went with you to Valparaiso?

Ans. I believe she had been captured by one of the patriot cruisers at Quilca, previous to my arrival there, and sent to Callao.

Ques. Do you know of any instance in which I refused a passage to a citizen of the United States, when any of the vessels under my command was proceeding from one port to another?

Ans. None.

Ques. Do you know of any instance in which foreigners, of any nation, asked such passage? if yea, state if in any and in what instances it was granted.

Ans. I do not know of any of my own knowledge.

Ques. What directions or instructions did you receive in relation to receiving specie, or bullion, on board your vessel?

Ans. The orders which Commodore Stewart gave me, both verbally and in writing, were to receive none but such as was neutral property, and to do no act which was likely to compromit our neutral character.

Ques. (By the court.) Were not the vessels-of-war of the different European nations, on the coast of Peru and Chili, employed in receiving on board and transporting specie and other valuables?

Ans. Yes; it was customary.

The court adjourned till ten o'clock on Monday morning.

MONDAY, August 22, 1825.

The court met pursuant to the adjournment of Saturday. Present: all the members of the court (with the exception of Captain Brown), the judge advocate, and Captain Stewart. A communication was received from Captain Brown, stating that he was prevented, by indisposition, from attending the court this day.

Peter Birch, a witness, (produced at this particular stage by consent,) being duly sworn, according to law, deposes and says:

Question. Were you the steward of the Franklin, under the command of Captain Stewart, during her late cruise in the Pacific?

Answer. I was.

Ques. Do you recollect that, at Callao, a man named Madrid came on board the Franklin? relate all you know of that transaction.

Ans. I do. Mrs. Stewart sent for me in the cabin; told me to take care of that man, (he was there at the time,) and give him to eat, and not to let him suffer for anything to eat or drink, because he was a poor man. I made him work, cleaning knives and candlesticks, and when we went to Quilca he requested two or three times, to go on shore; I told him the first boat that came to the ship, merchant boat, that I knew, that I would try to get him on shore. The next day a boat came on board from one of the merchant vessels. I went to Mrs. Stewart, and told her the man in the pantry wanted to go on shore. She told me to do what I could for him; to send him as I could. He had no clothes to put on but a pair of old trowsers; I gave him a jacket and trowsers of my own, and two or three of my old shirts. I then went on deck to try and get him in the boat. I knew he was kept secret from the commodore. I saw the commodore walking the decks, and then I told him he must go through the port. I never saw him again till I saw him on board the ship when we went to Callao, about a year after. When I saw him afterwards, he had on a coat with gold lace; no epaulettes. He came on board with the captain of the harbor; he never spoke to me, nor I to him. When he first came on board, it was, I think, in the evening, before dark. The vessel was under way. The commodore was on deck. I do not know how he came on board. He was kept the whole time in my pantry. The door was sometimes open, and sometimes shut. In going out of the commodore's cabin, a part of the inside of my pantry could be seen—part could not. Mrs. Stewart told me not to let any one know he was there, particularly the commodore. A great many of the officers and men knew he was there. I knew he went out of the port and got into a merchant boat. Nobody was with him but the captain of the port when he came on board afterwards. At that time Callao was in the possession of the royalists. To the best of my knowledge and belief, Commodore Stewart did not know of Madrid being on board while he was there. I never received from the commodore any directions in relation to him, nor did I ever state to any one that I did. I never saw him in the cabin after the first time when he had the letter which he read to Mrs. Stewart. About ten or twelve months after, at Valparaiso, Commodore Stewart sent for me; he asked me if I had ever had such a man in the pantry. I told him that Mrs. Stewart had directed me to keep him in the pantry; he jawed me, and asked why I did not manifest it to him. I told him what Mrs. Stewart had said—that plenty of the officers knew it, and I had no business to tell him. He threatened to send me ashore if I ever did such a thing again. I gave him the clothes of my own accord. He did his work pretty clean.

Ques. (By the accused.) When Commodore Stewart spoke to you about Madrid, was he not very angry, and did he not threaten to hang you at the yard-arm if you ever concealed any one on board again?

Ans. He said I deserved to be hung.

Thomas S. Hammersly, a lieutenant in the navy of the United States, a witness produced by the judge advocate, being duly sworn, according to law, deposes and says: I commenced the cruise on board the Franklin as the third lieutenant, in the absence of Mr. Weaver, and continued on board during the whole cruise, with the exception of three months that I was on a separate command. By some changes that occurred I became second lieutenant, and in the absence of Lieutenant Hunter acted as first. We fell in with the Canton at St. Juan Fernandez. We sailed from there together; soon after separated, and entered the port of Valparaiso together. I do not know what cargo she had, or whom she belonged to, or who were interested in her cargo, nor what was her ultimate port of destination. We arrived at Valparaiso, I think, in February, and sailed in May. I believe there were articles received on board the Franklin from the Canton; there was wine and canvas. I do not remember any others. I do not know how much of each. The Canton landed part of her cargo at Valparaiso. I do not know of what it consisted. After leaving Valparaiso, the Canton accompanied us to Arica. The Pearl was in sight generally during the passage, and we fell in with the Sarah on our way down. During the passage down the Franklin shortened sail, and was delayed for the Canton and Pearl both. When we sailed from Valparaiso I considered both vessels under convoy. Afterwards I received directions from Lieut. Mayo, when I relieved him, not to consider the Pearl as under convoy, or to consider her at all. This was the usual way of passing the orders to the officers of the deck. I recollect an instance during the passage in which the Canton shortened sail for some purpose. When she shortened sail the Pearl was astern; night came on, and when the Canton hove in sight the Franklin filled away again; both were in sight the next morning. The Canton and Pearl came to anchor together with us in the port of Arica. I cannot remember whether the Sarah did or did not; we fell in with her on the passage, and she was generally hovering about us. The Canton discharged part of her cargo at Arica. The Pearl, I understood, was bound to the northwest coast, and landed nothing. The Sarah, I also understood, had nothing in her. I do not know that anything was transhipped from the Pearl to the Canton at Arica. I visited her, by order of the commodore, in company with Lieutenant Hunter. The object was to ascertain whether she had landed any of those arms she had on board. I think there were four cases, bound to the northwest coast. The amount of arms on board agreed with her manifest, bill of lading, and invoice, which she had brought from the United States. We remained at Arica about three weeks; it is a good harbor for those seas, where the wind never blows. It is land-locked only on one side, to the southwest, by a small island, and to the eastward by the main land. The officers went on shore daily. No other vessels were in port excepting those which went in with us. A French ship, the Telegraph, came into the offing, but did not anchor. The patriot schooner, the Sacramento, of about seventy or eighty tons, and one gun on a pivot, also came in. I believe no other vessel went with us from there but the Canton and the Waterwitch, which we built there, and which we towed down to Quilca. I cannot say whether we waited for the Canton, or whether she was ready first; I do not know of anything that detained us at Arica for three weeks; I think it was perhaps the situation of the Waterwitch. The object of going to Quilca was, I presume, to convoy the Canton. Quilca was the better place for building the schooner. We remained at Quilca till some time in August; I think about three weeks or a month. The Canton remained at Quilca the whole time we were there; besides her, the Telegraph came in, and two patriot men-of-war, one of them the brig Belgrano, the other a schooner the name of which I do not recollect. The Belgrano carried about sixteen or eighteen guns, the schooner about twelve or fourteen. Both the Canton and Telegraph landed articles there; the Canton the whole of her cargo. The Telegraph had landed but a small part of her cargo when she was captured by one of the patriot men-of-war. When captured she was lying about three cables' length from the Franklin. The Canton was, perhaps, about the same distance. At Quilca we did on one occasion receive bread, beans and butter, but I cannot say whether it was at this time; I believe it was at another time. We went from Quilca to Calloa, the Canton in company. We parted company with the Canton off the Island of Lorenzo, just off the harbor of Callao, she being bound, as I understood, to Guayaquil. The Waterwitch left us at Quilca, under the command of Lieutenant Henry, for Guayaquil, and rejoined us at Callao. She sailed for Guayaquil a few days before the Canton. Mr. Ward came from the Canton on board the Franklin, off Callao. Captain Smith went on board the Franklin, from Quilca to Callao. Captain O'Sullivan commanded the Canton, and was never on board the Franklin, except as a visitor. The night we parted company with the Canton a part of her cargo was put on board the Peruviano, then in tow of the Franklin in an unfinished state, and carried by her into the harbor of Callao. I do not know of what it consisted, nor of how many bales. At Quilca we received on board a quantity of specie, which I understood was money of Capt. Smith, the proceeds of the cargo of the Canton, and some belonged to an Englishman named Long; it was brought on board in the boats of the Franklin, principally at night. Lieut. Henry had charge of the boats; there were more boats than one, and there were other officers; I know of instances of money being brought on board at Callao about the persons of individuals; I do not know whether it was in their pockets or otherwise; it was secreted about them somehow; it occurred frequently in the daytime; it may have been sometimes at night. The persons who brought money on board were Americans, in all cases that I know of. It was frequently the case that money was transported from the Franklin to ships bound to sea, which had been deposited for safe keeping on board us. In the case of the Cora, money was taken to her after she was under way going to sea; she was an American ship. This was at Callao; I believe there was but one boat, and Lieut. Goldsborough had charge of her; I think it was at night. I do not know what is the export duty on bullion, specie, &c.; I believe it was five per cent. Captain Smith joined the ship either at Arica or Quilca; I understood, at the time, he was concerned in the cargo of the Canton, but do not positively know it. We took him to Lima, to Quilca, and to Valparaiso; he was on board near a year. He frequently visited the shore, and I presume was engaged in his business as a merchant. I do not know of his carrying dispatches; he went in a boat with an officer to board the Telegraph, off Arica; my impression was he went from curiosity. There were no goods, or samples of goods, received on board the Franklin from the Canton. I was on board the Franklin when Captain Smith went on board the Dolphin; I do not know what he took with him. He went on board the Dolphin from the shore; that was at Valparaiso, on our first visit there. On our first visit at Callao, we remained there about two months. That place was in possession of the patriots. We received at Rio Janeiro the first information of its having been captured from the loyalists. I think we left Calloa the last day of September. During the time we were there, Captain Smith continued to make his home on board the Franklin. When he first came on board the Franklin he came from the shore, not from the Dolphin. We sailed from Callao for Quilca. A military expedition was fitting out from Callao while we were there, for the Intermedios. I think it sailed before us. I think the commodore waited some time at Callao after he was ready, in pursuance of a request that was made him from the authorites on shore, in consequence of the sailing of this expedition. It was on that occasion that Madrid was on board. I never saw the man myself. I do not know of any articles being sent on shore, from the purser's department, at Arica, in the summer of 1822; nor have I any knowledge of any musket cartridges, or other military stores going on board the Canton from the Franklin. From January, 1824, till April of the same year, I was on board and in command of the Amanda. We fell in with her between Molliendo and Quilca. The commodore hired her for the purpose of going in pursuit of the piratical vessel, the Qintanilla. We got some guns and ammunition from the American ship, the Arab; otherwise, she was armed and equipped, as well as manned, from the Franklin. My first cruise was from the place where we first fell in with her, perhaps from Quilca, up the coast as far as Arica. There I rejoined the Franklin at Quilca. Was again fitted out and sent off Chiloe in pursuit of her, after running down the coast about seven hundred miles. There was no other object in fitting out the Amanda. None other embraced in my orders, either verbal or written, than what I have mentioned. The first time we went from Valparaiso to Quilca, we took in two horses, and at Arica we took on board a third. These were all left at Callao. One was a pony, the other two the commodore's carriage horses. On our second cruise down the coast, we took on board also at Valparaiso three horses; we landed two of them at Quilca, the third was a riding horse of the commodore, which we left at Callao. Callao was then in possession of the patriots, and Quilca of the royalists. I do not know what became of the horses landed at Quilca. I never was in the royalist army after that. Convoy was given by the Franklin to the Canton, Chauncey and Dick, all American vessels. I do not recollect any others. I know of no instances in which it was refused. The captain of the Pearl complained to me that the commodore had refused him convoy. I do not recollect anything of the Brilliant. I saw Captain Adderton twice, once at Quilca. He commanded a brig, I think the Sarah Ann. The second time I saw him he commanded a ship. I do not know that he was ever refused convoy. I do not know that he ever applied for or received convoy. I remember the ship America; she sailed from New York about the time we did. We fell in with her at Rio Janeiro. We met her next at Valparaiso. She came off there while we were there. Lieutenant Weaver was on board the America at that time. I understood he carried out stores for the Franklin. Those stores were taken on board the Franklin at Callao. I believe the first time we were there we saw nothing of Mr. Weaver, after seing him at Valparaiso during the residue of the cruise.

Cross-examined on the part of the accused:

Question. At the time you have stated that the Canton shortened sail, had not the wind been very light all day, and the Canton ahead of the Franklin, and the Pearl out of sight astern? Did not the Canton in the evening shorten sail to drop astern into her station? Did not the wind freshen up strong and leave the Canton; and was not a signal made to the Canton to make sail and keep up?

Answer. The Canton was sometimes ahead of us. I think that at the time alluded to she was astern when she shortened sail. There was, I believe, a signal made for the Canton to keep up, and that the wind had freshened up before the signal was made.

Ques. Is there any protection for merchant vessels at any of the ports of the Intermedios, except that which the ships-of-war of the nations to which they belonged offered? Have you not seen British and French ships-of-war at those ports affording such protection, and receiving the proceeds of their cargoes in bullion on board?

Ans. There is no other protection. I have seen such protection afforded by British and French men-of-war, and have seen them receiving on board the proceeds of their cargoes in bullion.

Ques. Was there any protection afforded by the Franklin by force of arms, or in a threatening of force to any vessels at Quilca?

Ans. I was not present at the interview between Captain Prunier, of the Belgrano, and the commodore. I know of no other instance. We were never in company with any patriot men-of-war afterwards at any lawless port.

Ques. If the boats of the Franklin had not been sent for the specie and bullion taken on board at Quilca, would it not have been necessary to have got the Franklin under way to go for it?

Ans. They had no boats at all at that place, nothing but skins filled with wind; and it would have been very unsafe to trust specie in them the distance of several miles, which the boats went.

Ques. On what occasions, by whom, and what amount was brought on board the Franklin—the specie you have mentioned—about the persons of individuals? Was it done with the knowledge or permission of Commodore Stewart?

Ans. There were several persons on several occasions. One was, I believe, the captain of an American brig there, whose name was Captain Baldwin. I have no recollection of the other individuals. I do not know whether it was with the knowledge or permission of the commodore or not.

Ques. Were the moneys you have mentioned brought from the shore or from vessels, and had the duties been paid on the same or not?

Ans. That I cannot possibly say.

Ques. How and from whom did you understand that a request had been made by the authorities of Lima to delay the sailing of the Franklin?

Ans. I cannot say. It was a general subject of conversation among the officers, that such request had been made.

Ques Do you know of any information conveyed by Commodore Stewart, or any other person, with his knowledge or permission, of an expedition that had sailed or was to sail at any time from Callao for the Intermedios?

Ans. None that I know of. When we arrived at the Intermedios we found them apprised of the fact

Adjourned till ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

TUESDAY, August 23, 1825.

The court met pursuant to the adjournment of yesterday. Present: all the members of the court (excepting Captain Brown), the judge advocate, and Captain Stewart. Captain Brown still continued absent from indisposition. The minutes of the proceedings of yesterday were read. The examination of Lieutenant Hammersley was resumed:

Question. (By the judge advocate.) How many times was the crew of the Franklin exercised at general quarters during the cruise?

Answer. I do not recollect positively. I think oftener than three or four times, but cannot recollect. They were regularly exercised by divisions, when the weather would permit and not prevented by duty, as frequently as on any ship I ever was on board of.

Ques. Were the guns on the lower deck regularly exercised?

Ans. They were not as regularly exercised as the other guns while we were at the Intermedios; the sea rolled so much as to prevent it; and at other times the work going on on that deck, and the ship's duty, prevented it. The men belonging to that deck were frequently, however, exercised on the upper deck.

Ques. (By the court.) Were the guns of the Franklin at all times kept in a proper state for action?

Ans. The guns of my division always were. I had the command of several divisions at different times during the cruise. They were never deficient in anything.

Samuel B. Bannister, a witness produced by the judge advocate, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says:

I was on board the Franklin during her late cruise in the Pacific, in the capacity of sailmaker. The stores of that department were laid in at New York on the requisition of Captain Evans. The supply for the cruise was ample when we sailed. We took in more at Valparaiso, on our first arrival on the coast, about the latter part of March, 1822. We took on board ninety bolts of Russia canvas. They were procured from the merchant ship the Canton. There were twenty-four bolts of it used during the cruise for the Franklin. We brought home about nine yards of Russia canvas, eight pieces of raven's duck, and six pieces No. 1 American canvas. Thirty bolts of the canvas procured from the Canton went on board the Constellation, and thirty-six bolts were used for the sails of the Canton. The sails for the Canton were made in August, 1822, by the request of Lieutenant Hunter, by me, on board the Franklin. In August, I think, they were put on board the Dolphin to take them to the Canton. When purchased, this canvas was entered on the books of the Franklin and charged to her. It was procured by the requisition of Lieutenant Hunter. I had not, at the time called for, any further supplies for the sailmaker's department; none were required. There were some other articles used from my department for other vessels, all of which were returned,—some I allude to for the use of the schooners that were built out there.

Ques. (By the court.) How did you determine that the quantity of sailmakers' stores received at New York were sufficient for the cruise? Is there any established regulations on the subject, or does it depend on the judgment of the commander?

Ans. It depends entirely on the judgment of the commander. I received an order to make out an estimate for a three years' cruise, which I did according to the best of my judgment.

Ques. (By the same.) Did you call for any further supplies of stores at any time during the cruise?

Ans. Yes. There were ten bolts of English canvas that I called for at Valparaiso, in November, 1823, ten bolts of raven's duck in March, 1824, at the same place, twelve bolts of Russia canvas about the same time, at the same place; all after these were purchased from the Canton.

Ques. (By the same.) How was the canvas used for the Canton, accounted for on your books?

Ans. It was scratched off entirely, no requisition appeared for it; that for the Constellation was entered expended, on my books, for the use of that frigate.

Ques. (By the same.) Was it easy or difficult to procure canvas in the ports on the Pacific, if it had been wanting?

Ans. It was difficult.

Cross-examined on the part of the accused:

Ques. Did you receive any other stores belonging to the department of any other officer? what were they, and to whose department?

Ans. I received a quantity of nails and spikes belonging to the carpenter's department. I received them at Valparaiso, in lieu of some nails and spikes that had been used in building the Robinson Crusoe. The carpenter was at that time suspended, and, as I was going to get the canvas, I took an order from Lieut. Hunter for them. He requested me to go to the carpenter's yeoman to obtain a list of the articles that had been used in the Robinson Crusoe, that they might be replaced.

Ques. Did you not sign the requisition on Mr. Hogan for the canvas you say was procured from the Canton?

Ans. No.

Ques. Were you and your crew compensated for making the Canton's sails—and by whom?

Ans. We were paid eighty dollars by Captain O'Sullivan; it was not a full compensation for the work done; a fair price for the work done would have been about an hundred and fifty dollars. I made no charge, but left my compensation entirely to the generosity of Captain O'Sullivan. Captain Stewart did not interfere about it.

Ques. Were they copper or iron nails and spikes you received from the carpenter's department?

Ans. I do not recollect particularly, but think there were some copper and some iron.

Ebenezer Ridgeway, a lieutenant in the navy of the United States, being duly sworn according to law, and interrogated by the judge advocate, deposes and says: I was on board the Franklin during her late cruise, as fourth lieutenant. I know that a man of the name of Madrid came on board the Franklin at Callao, while we were getting under way. I do not know how he came on board. I saw him after he was on board, two or three days after. I do not know how he got on shore. The morning after our arrival at Quilca, a message came up from the cabin, by a servant, that the officer of the deck would permit this man to go on shore in a market boat. I informed the servant he might go, but did not see him. The request came in the name of Mrs. Stewart. I saw him afterwards at Callao, on board the Franklin, and also on shore on horseback. He was said to be a colonel by the officers of the ship. When I saw him he was dressed in the Spanish uniform. He came on board the Franklin in his uniform in a shore boat, on the second occasion. I did not at first recognize him as the same man who had been in the pantry, but after hearing who it was, I recognized him. At Quilca money was brought on board the Franklin at night. It was not my watch on deck. I did not see it when it was hoisted on board. I saw it afterwards. I know of no instances in which it was brought on board about the persons of individuals. There was some money brought on board at Arica, at night, in our whale boat, in charge of Lieut. Henry. I remember two horses taken on board at Valparaiso, and landed at Quilca. I do not know what became of them afterwards. I never saw either of them in the possession of Commodore Stewart or Captain Smith afterwards. I cannot recollect how frequently the crew of the Franklin was exercised at general quarters during the cruise; it was, I presume, from six to eight times. The guns were always kept in a state for action. When the Telegraph was boarded off Arica, I was on deck, not the officer of the deck; I think Captain Smith was in the boat, and the officer, a midshipman. I do not know who made the report when the boat returned.

Cross-examined on the part of the accused:

Ques. How long after the man went on shore at Quilca did you see him at Callao?

Ans. About eight months I presume—I only saw him on board once at Callao.

Ques. Were the guns frequently exercised by divisions?

Ans. Yes.

Ques. (By the court.) Did Commodore Stewart know Madrid or notice him when he came on board the second time?

Ans. Commodore Stewart saw him but did not appear to know him, bowed to him as he would to any other officer. No conversation occurred, and no stop was made as they passed each other. Spanish officers frequently came on board to visit the ship. There was another officer in company with him at the time. He went below—where he went I do not know. He afterwards came up, and again went down in the poop cabin, and Mrs. Stewart also went in.

Ques. (By the same.) You say money was brought on board the Franklin at night, but that you did not see it hoisted in; be pleased to state to the court when you did see it, and how you know it was received at night.

Ans. I saw it next day, and frequently after in the room where it was kept. I know the boats went away in the evening, it was understood after money, and this was said to be the money brought.

Ques. (By the judge advocate.) Do you know of any instances in which money was sent from the Franklin to vessels bound to sea and under way, or at sea and at night?

Ans. Yes. I think we sent money at Callao on board a vessel, the Cora, I believe. She was standing out to sea in the evening. I believe Mr. Goldsborough was the officer. I do not recollect any other instance.

Henry W. Ogden, a lieutenant in the navy of the United States, being duly sworn according to law, and being interrogated by the judge advocate, deposes and says: I was on board the Franklin during her late cruise in the Pacific; sailed as the seventh lieutenant on duty. I know of an instance of money being brought on board the Franklin at night in the middle watch, in, I believe, the second cutter, under Lieutenant Henry and Midshipman Goldsborough. In one instance the captain of the Cora brought specie on board; he had it concealed under his clothes; he told me he had it there, and that it was on government's account, by an arrangement between him and Mr. Fitzgerald, the purser. These are the only instances I recollect in which money was brought on board in that manner. I know of no instances in which money was carried on board ships bound to sea and under way. Two horses taken on board at Valparaiso were landed at Quilca; I do not know what became of them, further than that I saw one, which I took to be one of them, afterwards in the royalist army near General Canterac's tent. From the appearance of the horse, I thought it was the same horse we had brought down; through the medium of an interpreter, I asked a clerk of Canterac's if it was not the same. He replied that it was, and that the black horse, his companion, was feeding in the field. I did not see any other than the bay horse. The other horse we landed at Quilca was a black horse. This was several months after the horses were landed. It was about half way between Lima and Callao, in the royalist camp. When the horses were landed at Quilca, that place was in the possession of the royalists. General Canterac was not at Quilca —he was in the interior. I do not know of any intercourse between Commodore Stewart and General Canterac either before or after that event. I was on board during the whole period of the cruise, except in a few instances in which, for a few days at a time, I obtained leave of absence to go into the country. Mr. Sands was arrested, I think, on the 8th October, 1823, and his trial came on in the month of April following. He was confined to his state room, a small room; he was confined until about the middle of June, 1824, when he was given some permission which was construed into a permission to walk the main deck, of which he availed himself. After his original arrest, I believe on the following day, Mr. Sands had a quarrel with Lieutenant Hammersly, in consequence of which the close confinement was ordered. I know of no other difficulty between him and any other officer on board. I heard of one with Lieutenant Henry. It was upon charges growing out of the affair with Lieutenant Hammersly that Lieutenant Sands was tried in April. I know nothing of my own knowledge of the circumstances of the quarrel. An application was made on the part of nearly all the commissioned officers of the ship to Commodore Stewart to admit Mr. Sands to limits usual in such cases of arrest. This was in writing. It was made I think about the beginning of June, 1824, and was answered in writing. It was signed by me, because I saw Lieutenant Sands' situation was a very uncomfortable one. We were approaching a very boisterous latitude, where the floor of his room was very frequently covered with water. He complained very much of rheumatism in his face, and had a tooth extracted in consequence of it, and I thought it would benefit his health very much if he could be permitted to walk in the dry parts of the ship. On one occasion I went to his room, found the floor covered with water, perhaps two inches deep, he sitting with his feet up on a settee, and I thought if by any exertion of mine his situation could be ameliorated it became me to make it. The character of Mr. Sands as an officer and a gentleman stands very high. I know of none that stands higher in the navy. I consider it altogether unexceptionable. I do not know that Mr. Sands ever consulted me about any application by himself to Commodore Stewart to be enlarged from his confinement. He informed me that he had applied. He made an application to Commodore Stewart at Valparaiso, soon after his confinement, to go on shore, to leave the ship under arrest, and subject to Commodore Stewart's orders. Mr. Sands frequently complained of rheumatism in his jaw brought on by the dampness of his apartment; no complaint of general indisposition, further than a complaint of general debility. The proceedings and sentence of the court-martial, which sat in April, 1824, were never promulgated on board the Franklin previous to our arrival in New York. He was treated in the same manner after the court rose as before, until he was enlarged in June, 1824. I have no distinct recollection of the number of times that the crew of the Franklin was exercised at general quarters during the cruise. It was perhaps as many as four or five times. The men appeared pretty expert in performing their various duties in relation to the management of the guns. There was some confusion in the crew in understanding the various signals. I had generally to intimate to them the meaning of the different signals to the boarders, firemen, and sail trimmers. During the cruise I commanded all the divisions on the two gun-decks except one. The men on the lower deck were always exercised at division exercise on the main deck. Such were the orders I received. There is a difference in the exercise of the upper and lower decks of a seventy-four; in the latter, there is to be an exercise of the ports. The divisional exercise upon the two upper decks was frequent. I think the guns of the Franklin were always in a state for action; so far as the divisions I commanded I know them to have been so.

Question. (By a member of the court.) You say, sir, that the appearance of the horse you saw in the royal camp was the same as of one of those landed from the Franklin. Do you know, of your own knowledge, that he was one of the horses landed from the Franklin; or did you never see two horses so much alike, that one has often been taken for the other?

Answer. I have seen two horses very much alike. He was sufficiently alike to induce me to ask the question. From my own knowledge I do not know he was the same; that information I acquired from the person of whom I asked the question. I have seen two horses that have been taken the one for the other.

Question. (By a member.) Do you know of any instances of the neutral character of the squadron being violated? If so, relate them.

Ans. None that I know of.

Cross-examined by the accused:

Question. In whose possession was the bay horse you saw in the royal camp?

Answer. He was standing near the tent of Canterac, among a number, without any equipments on. I do not know in whose possession he was.

Ques. Was it a practice with the armies of both the royalists and patriots, to impress horses for the public service when an expedition was preparing?

Ans. It was the practice among the patriots. I have seen them take horses. I do not know as to the royalists.

Ques. Were any reasons offered to Captain Stewart for the liberation of Lieutenant Sands, more than those mentioned in the written application?

Ans. Not that I now of. I believe there was an application by Dr. Saltar also.

Ques. Did not Lieutenant Sands often, during his arrest, leave that arrest, and particularly go on an expedition in the Franklin's boats, in which you had a command, against the brig Quintanilla?

Ans. I do not know that he did. I never heard from him that he did. As to going on the cruise against the Quintanilla, I commanded the boats, and did not know he was on board. I heard him afterwards relate some circumstances which induced the belief that he was there; but he never said in my hearing that he actually was.

Ques. Was he, to your knowledge, at any time during his arrest placed on the sick report?

Ans. Not to my knowledge.

Ques. Was there any sentinel at his cabin, and did he not go and come during the whole time at his own discretion and responsibility?

Ans. There was no sentinel. He went and came at his own responsibility.

Ques. At the time the man named Madrid came on board the Franklin, at Callao, in uniform, were you the officer of the deck, and what passed on that occasion?

Ans. Midshipman Porter was officer of the deck at the time he came on board; but I was on deck and received him at the gangway. There was one with him who appeared to be a brother officer, and an interpreter. The interpreter pointing to one of them said, that is the man who went in the ship from Callao to Quilca, and he wishes to see Mrs. Stewart. I accordingly sent a messenger to Mrs. Stewart, that there was a gentleman on board who wished to see her. While these three persons were standing with me on the quarter deck, Commodore Stewart came out of the poop cabin, and spoke to them in a polite manner. I mentioned to him that that was the man who had gone in our ship from Callao to Quilca. He immediately left them, and went below without making any reply. I then left them myself and went below. Afterwards Mrs. Stewart passed me while I was on the gun deck. I told her that the person that was on the quarter deck wished to see her; she turned off and went into the poop cabin without speaking to them, as I saw.

Ques. Did you not ask Commodore Stewart if he knew who that man was, and what was his reply?

Ans. I do not recollect asking him. I told him who the interpreter told me he was; but I do not recollect any reply.

Ques. How long was this after you had taken him to Quilca?

Ans. About two years, I believe.

Ques. When the Baron de Mackan wished to tranship some money from the Clorinda, French frigate, to the Franklin, at Callao, did you wait on the baron on that subject? What were the commodore's directions on that occasion, and what was the baron's reply?

Ans. I do not recollect any message given me by Commodore Stewart. When, on the part of the Baron Mackan, I requested Commodore Stewart to receive the money on board the Franklin, the commodore replied, as well as I can remember, that he had no objection to receive it if it was neutral property. I told him the baron assured me he had every reason to believe it was neutral property, belonging to two merchants, Drewicke and Schatte, the one an American and the other a Prussian; but as it had been shipped by Felinci, a Spanish merchant, who held his receipt, and to whom only he considered himself responsible, he wished Commodore Stewart would receive it, and not deliver it until said receipt could be taken up.

Ques. Do you know of any instances when the signals were made to the boarders, firemen, or sail trimmers, that they did not come to the call of the signal?

Ans. I have known instances in which, as officer of the division, from the men not understanding the signals, I was obliged to tell them what was meant. This was about the middle of the cruise.

The court adjourned till ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

WEDNESDAY, August 24, 1825.

The court met pursuant to the adjournment of yesterday. Present: all the members of the court, the judge advocate and Captain Stewart. The proceedings of yesterday were read.

Lieutenant Ogden further examined on the part of the accused:

Question. On our passage from Valparaiso to Arica, with the Canton, did you receive any directions relative to the Pearl?

Answer. On the passage from Valparaiso to Arica I was officer of the deck one day. I reported to Commodore Stewart that the Pearl was nearly out of sight; he replied never mind the Pearl, the Canton is the only vessel that you have to look out for.

Ques. Did you at any time receive orders to look out for the Pearl, which induced you to suppose she was under convoy?

Ans. I never received any such orders.

Ques. Was the clerk of Canterac present at Quilca, and did he see the horses landed from the Franklin?

Ans. Not that I know of.

Ques. (By the judge advocate.) What orders were given in relation to the convoy of the Canton, and why did you conceive it your duty to report the Pearl to the commodore?

Ans. No orders that I recollect were given in reference to either the Canton or Pearl; both sailed with us, and I considered them as equally under convoy.

Isaac Mayo, a lieutenant in the navy of the United States, being duly sworn according to law, and interrogated by the judge advocate, deposes and says:

I was on board the Franklin during her late cruise in the Pacific as her second lieutenant. I joined her in that capacity at Valparaiso in May, 1822, and left her in January following, when I returned home by the way of Panama, carrying dispatches. I went out in the Dolphin, as far as Rio Janiero, there went on board the Franklin as a supernumerary, being sick. I knew nothing of the Canton until I saw her in the Pacific; had heard of her frequently during our cruise round. We separated from the Canton after leaving St. Juan Fernandez, but entered Valparaiso together. I do not recollect being ever on board the Canton at that place; I do not know what cargo she brought out with her, or what became of it. I went up to the neighborhood of Quilca, in consequence of the state of my health, and only returned a few days before we sailed. About the fourth or fifth day out from Valparaiso Commodore Stewart came on deck during my night watch; asked me if the Canton was in sight. I informed him she had been reported to me about five minutes before. The commodore wished to know in what direction she was; I discovered the ship, pointed her out, and satisfied him that she was in company and near. In the act of leaving the deck, the commodore directed me not to lose sight of her, as she had a valuable cargo of American property. This order I passed to Lieutenant Hammersley, when he relieved me. The commodore named some amount as what the Canton was worth, but I cannot recollect precisely what it was. No directions were given in reference to the Pearl or the Sarah, which were near the Canton, and continued near her, which induced me to suppose they were not considered as under convoy. I had received no instructions in relation to the Pearl, and communicated none. When we arrived at Arica we found none of the authorities of the country except the governor of the place. A Spanish general, Liera, arrived there a few days after. Cannot say whether any of the authorities with whom a foreign nation would hold political or civil intercourse. There were no American vessels at Arica when we arrived there, excepting the Canton and the Pearl, which accompanied us, and none arrived during our stay. The Canton landed part of her cargo at Arica. The cargo was principally landed by the means of balses, small leather boats. The boats of the Franklin did not, to my knowledge, assist. We went to Quilca in company with the Canton alone; I cannot remember what vessels were there. Quilca cannot properly be called a town; there are probably a dozen or more reed and mud houses.

Charles G. Ridgely, a captain in the navy of the United States, being duly sworn according to law, (a witness produced on behalf of the accused by consent, and being by him examined) deposes and says:

Question. Were you in the Pacific, in the command of the frigate Constellation, in 1822, while Captain Stewart was there in command of the Franklin?

Answer. I was.

Ques. Did you receive from Captain Stewart thirty bolts of canvas for the use of the Constellation, and did you understand whether it had been procured from the Canton?

Ans. I did receive thirty bolts by a requisition made by me on Commodore Stewart. I understood from Commodore Stewart that it came from the Canton.

Ques. Is it not the practice of American and other ships-of-war to give passage in their cabin to citizens as well as foreigners?

Ans. It is always the practice to take gentlemen without compensation. A British vessel, at my request, carried some American gentlemen round from Rio to the Pacific.

Ques. Is it the practice of American and other ships-of-war to take specie and bullion on board for transportation or safe keeping, and to receive a per centage therefor, being merchant property?

Ans. Yes.

Ques. Is it the practice of American and other ships-of-war to permit their mechanics and crew to work for other vessels, receiving compensation therefor; and also to furnish them with rigging and other materials they may be in need of, taking pay therefor, or having them returned?

Ans. Such was the practice while I was in those seas. On one occasion I remember furnishing an American captain with two dozen muskets for the purpose of protecting himself against patriot cruisers, on his giving me a receipt, promising to return them in the United States on his arrival.

Ques. Did you ever prevent a patriot force from going on board an American merchant vessel?

Ans. I prevented a patriot officer, said to be acting under the orders of Lord Cochrane, from going on board an American vessel lying in the port of Callao.

Ques. Did you inform Commodore Stewart of the loss of an American whale ship, on the coast of Pitac, which was seized by the authorities, and request him to send a vessel to her relief?

Ans. Yes; Pitac is a place about a degree to the south of Guayaquil, under the government of the patriots, having been conquered by San Martin; Guayaquil was under an independent government of its own.

Ques. (By the judge advocate.) What amount of specie had you on board the Constellation, belonging to Capatin E. Smith? when taken on board, where was it to be delivered?

Ans. I do not remember the amount, nor was there any positive agreement where it was to be delivered. It was subject to his order. I brought home near $200,000 which he had shipped, consigned to merchants in Boston.

Ques. (By the same.) Did he bring on board any other articles than specie?

Ans. Yes. He brought on board some chinchilla skins, unknown to me.

Ques. What became of them?

Ans. I reported them to the collector at New York. He wished to take them out at Valparaiso. I would not let him, as he had brought them on board unknown to me. I determined to bring them to the United States.

Ques. How did they come on board?

Ans. On my arrival at Molliendo in March, 1822, I wrote a letter to Captain Smith, then at Arequipa, telling him I had arrived at Molliendo, agreeably to his written request, to carry away his money belonging to American citizens. At the same time I mentioned and advised, if he had any goods on hand, to sacrifice them for whatever he could get, as I believed that Arequipa could not hold out much longer, and that he knew from sad experience that should he be in Arequipa when the patriots came in, he would again be plundered. I therefore recommeneed him to come on board with all his treasure. After waiting, by his request, several days, he sent me a dispatch that he would be in Molliendo by a given day, prepared to embark with everything he had. The distance from Arequipa to Molliendo is, I understand, from sixty to ninety miles—a sandy, barren soil, where no water or provisions of any sort can be procured for man or beast. I was therefore not astonished to see Captain Smith approach with a retinue of near two hundred mules. One-half are required to carry provisions and water. I, immediately on seeing him, about three or four o'clock in the afternoon, sent the boats on shore under the orders of my first lieutenant, Mr. Clark, to bring Captain Smith and all his things on board. Before anything was on board, it was, I presume, nine or ten o'clock. When the land breeze made, about one or two in the morning, I tripped anchor and went to sea The next day, about eleven or twelve o'clock, Lieutenant Clark asked me what was to be done with those boxes. I told him to stow them away with the rest of the money. He told me they did not contain money, but other articles; and then I first knew that these things had been brought on board, having before thought it was all money. I immediately called for Captain Smith, stated to him the impropriety of what he had done, and asked him why he had done so. He replied that in consequence of my letter he had sacrificed part of his cargo, goods on hand, and was compelled to take those chinchilla skins from the person who was to have paid him in cash, but who could not do it within the time limited for my stay. I told him as they were there, I would not permit him to land them, but should bring them to the United States. Had I known them to have been skins on the beach, I should not have received them. Perhaps, considering the state of things there, I might have been justifiable in receiving them. Another reason why in that instance it might have been done was that the patriots had taken Captain Smith's brig, the Macedonian, without any cause, which they afterwards restored to him and promised to make compensation for the use of her.

Ques. How much of Captain Smith's money did you put on board the Franklin?

Ans. I think there went from my ship to the Franklin about $120,000 of Captain Smith's money.

Ques. Was any money belonging to Captain Stewart brought home in the Constellation?

Ans. I sailed on the 7th May, 1822, from Valparaiso, for the United States. A day or two after I was at sea Lieutenant McCauley, second lieutenant of the Constellation, stated to me that he had on board $10,000, which was given him by Commodore Stewart to carry to the United States. I believe it was brought. I do not know to whom it was consigned or directed. I think Mr. McCauley said it was for his father.

Ques. You have said it was customary for American men-of-war in the Pacific to receive on board specie, &c., for deposit. Is it customary to have it brought on board secreted about the persons of individuals, or to send the boats of the men-of-war to bring it off at night?

Ans. I have never known it brought on board secreted about the persons of individuals. As an instance of its being brought on board at night, I refer to the bringing it at Molliendo, which I have mentioned. It is brought a considerable distance, and there is no security for it on shore. The Governor of Arequipa, on one occasion when Captain Smith had money coming down, requested me to land my marines to give protection to Smith's property as it approached the coast; that it was not in his power; which I of course refused.

Ques. (By a member of the court.) Did you receive any compensation for transporting the Chinchilla skins?

Ans. None whatever.

Ques. (By a member.) Do you not consider the practice of receiving money on board of our ships-of-war of essential service to American merchants in the Pacific?

Ans. Most assuredly.

Ques. When you took Captain Smith and his money on board your ship, could you have acted otherwise without subjecting yourself to censure?

Ans. I considered it my duty to take him, and his money, on board. Indeed, I invited him.

Ques. Were you frequently on board the Franklin? if so, please to say whether you did not consider her in excellent fighting condition, and calculated to reflect great credit on the naval service of our country.

Ans. I was frequently on board the Franklin at Valparaiso, and considered her in very superior order; this was the general opinion.

Ques. In getting money on board ship, is not the time regulated by the time of its getting to the shore from the interior? and could its arrival on board ship at a late hour properly subject the commander to a suspicion of smuggling?

Ans. It depends entirely on the time of its arrival, and the circumstance could not properly occasion any suspicion.

Ques. Are there custom houses on the coast, at points where it is usual to receive specie, &c., or do custom house officers attend to authorize its embarkation?

Ans. I never was on any part of that coast but Molliendo; there was only a temporary custom house. The custom house is generally at the seat of government, and officers sent down to the coast as occasion required.

Lieutenant Ogden, again called:

Question. (By the judge advocate.) Look at the paper shown you. Is that the application alluded to in your testimony yesterday, as made by the officers of the Franklin to Commodore Stewart, on behalf of Lieutenant Sands?

Ans. Yes. (Read, annexed to the record, and marked 14.)

Ques. Look at the paper shown you, and say whether that is a copy of the answer?

Ans. Yes. (Read, annexed, and marked 15.) That was the only answer received to the application.

Ques. Look at the paper shown you. Is that the reply to the communication of the commodore?

Ans. Yes. (Read, annexed, and marked 16.) This paper alludes to the previous one, and this paper was shown to, and agreed to, by all those who had signed the previous one, excepting those whose acquiescence is expressly negatived.

Ques. Look at the paper shown you, and is that the answer of Commodore Stewart to this second letter from the officers?

Ans. Yes. (Read, annexed, and marked 17.) That is a copy of the paper received by me.

Ques. Look at the paper shown you. Is that your reply to the commodore, and the annexed the answer received from him?

Ans. Yes. (Read, annexed, and marked 18 and 19.)

Other papers on the subject were then read, annexed, and marked 20, 21, and 22.

The court adjourned till ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

THURSDAY, August 25, 1825.

The court met pursuant to the adjournment yesterday. Present: all the members of the court, the judge advocate, and Captain Stewart. The minutes of the proceedings of yesterday were read.

Lieutenant Mayo being again called:

Question. What do you know in relation to a Spaniard, named Madrid, who was on board the Franklin?

Answer. A man named Madrid, as I have since understood, went in the Franklin from Callao to Quilca. I saw him on board; I do not know how he came on board, or went on shore, or whether the fact was or was not known to the commodore. I had seen him at Callao before he came on board. He was in conversation with Mrs. Stewart. It was a few days before we sailed. He appeard to be urging Mrs. Stewart to let him come on board. She appeared anxious not to do so; to get rid of him. He reminded her of some person, a lady, in Lima. Mrs. Stewart inquired of me whether I did not want a servant, and whether I would not take him in that capacity. This I declined, being already supplied; he was not dressed either as an officer or a gentleman; he was in the common clothes of the country; I do not know by what title she addressed him; I took no interest or part in the conversation, until I was spoken to. Mrs. Stewart represented him as a poor man, who wished to leave the country to join his family at the Intermedios. I do not know that any report was made to the commodore of these facts, or that the man was on board. As second lieutenant, I thought it my duty to mention, and did it at one time at the mess table, in the presence of Lieutenant Hunter. I knew he was acquainted with the fact. I remarked there was such a man on board, and it was as well it should be known who he was; no notice was taken of the communication, and I had reason to believe the fact was generally known on board the ship. I had a conversation with Mrs. Stewart on the subject, after he had left the ship, and stated to her what the consequences might have been, had I taken the man as my servant. I also stated what the consequences might be to Commodore Stewart. She stated that he then knew nothing of it, and expressed a hope he might never hear of it.

John Downes, a captain in the navy of the United States, being duly sworn according to law, and examined by consent, on behalf of the accused, deposes and says:

Question. Have you commanded an American ship-of-war on the Pacific, and when?

Answer. I commanded the frigate Macedonian in the Pacific, from 1818 to 1821.

Ques. Is it customary for our ships, as well as others, to give passage at their pleasure to persons going from one port to another, in the course of cruise?

Ans. Yes; provided they did not belong to either of the belligerents. My orders from the government were, not to take of either party; they were otherwise without restriction.

Ques. Is it customary for our ships, as well as others, to take bullion and specie on board, for deposit or transportation, and to receive a per centage therefor?

Ans. Yes.

Ques. Is it customary for our ships to permit their men to work for other vessels, American or foreign, receiving compensation therefor? also, to furnish American vessels with rigging or other materials they may stand in need of, taking compensation therefor? Have you done so?

Ans. It is customary to allow the hands to work as mentioned in the question; on one occasion I furnished aid to a vessel which required some articles; they could not be procured in the port at which she was, and she could not sail without them. I took a bill in payment on the owners, which I forwarded to the Navy Department. The vessel which I thus supplied was the brig Macedonian, Captain Eliphalet Smith. The articles furnished were standing rigging; cannot say how much. I considered it the duty of the commander of an American man-of-war to supply vessels in all seas, and on all occasions, with articles of indispensable necessity which cannot be procured from the shore.

Ques. Have you taken money or bullion on board your ship from the shore by your own boats? Was this done at night, and why?

Ans. I have taken it on board between sundown and dark. My reason was that it had arrived at that time at Molliendo from Arequipa; there was no place of security in which to deposit it on shore; it would have been in danger of being stolen on shore, and I therefore sent my boats to bring it off.

Lieut. Ogden again called by the judge advocate:

Question. Will you be good enough to state the circumstances under which you signed the papers read yesterday?

Answer. The first application to the commodore was suggested to me, I think, by Doctor Salter. My reasons were that I considered the situation of Mr. Sands as a very uncomfortable one; and as the object of his close confinement was stated by Commodore Stewart to be to preserve the peace and harmony of the ship, I thought that an application of that kind from us would convince Commodore Stewart that no unfriendly feelings existed on the part of the officers generally towards Lieut. Sands, and that it was not necessary, on our account, but as he construed our motives into disrespect and interference with our duty, I gave my consent to the second paper, as an explanation of our motives. As that also appeared to fail of its object, I was willing, rather than it should be thought that I designed to treat my commander with disrespect, to cancel the whole by withdrawing my name; not from any change of opinion as to the propriety of what I had done, or that the situation of Mr. Sands did not require such an exertion on the part of his friends.

Ques. Had Lieut. Sands been tried before a court-martial upon the charges of misconduct alleged against him by Commodore Stewart and Lieut. Hammersley, mentioned in the paper read yesterday, addressed by the commodore to the officers of the ward room?

Ans. He had been tried upon the charges of Lieut. Hammersley, and many of those which were mentioned in the communication of the commodore. I was a witness on his trial.

Ques. How long before his trial in April did the alleged violation of his arrest occur, when he accompanied the expedition against the Quintanilla?

Ans. It occurred some months before, I think in January previous. It appeared from Commodore Stewart's letter, however, that he did not know of it until after the trial.

Ques. Did you know the result of that court-martial when you signed the papers alluded to?

Ans. I did not then, nor do I now.

Ques. In the note from Commodore Stewart to you it appears he indicated a wish to have a conversation with you on the subject of Lieut. Sands; was such conversation had, and what was the result of it?

Ans. I did call on Commodore Stewart in consequence of that letter; the result of the conversation I had with him was, that he refused to grant Lieut. Sands any extension of his limits, unless he would comply unequivocally with the pledge he had required of him. There was no new offer made. Commodore Stewart requested, in the conversation with me, that Lieut. Sands should surrender his right of self-defence into his hands; that he, as the commanding officer, was alone entitled to judge in such a case.

Ques. (By the court.) Did Commodore Stewart require any pledge from Lieut. Hammersley, and what pledge did Lieut. Hammersley give?

Ans. I know of none; Commodore Stewart told me that he likewise considered Lieutenant Hammersley culpable, and that if he had had officers enough on board his ship, he would have arrested him also.

Cross-examined by the accused:

Question. Was not Lieutenant Sands, at the time of your statement, then and afterwards during our cruise, making full and free use of the upper gun deck, at his own discretion and responsibility?

Answer. He was allowed the use of the main deck by a construction which he gave to the letter of the commodore, read yesterday; after that he did walk the main deck, which he had not done before, for exercise. I know of no particular order on the subject.

Ques. (By the judge advocate.) After such enlargement of his limits did Lieut. Sands have any quarrel with Lieut. Hammersley or any other officer of the Franklin?

Ans. None that I know of.

Ques. (By the court.) Was Lieut. Sands strictly confined to his room with a sentinel placed over him?

Ans. There was no sentinel at his door; so far as I know he confined himself to his room as strictly as if there had been a sentinel.

Ques. (By the same.) Was Lieut. Sands permitted to go on the upper gun deck for his necessary occasions, and at his discretion, or was he first obliged to obtain leave, and was such his practice?

Ans. He was permitted to go at his discretion, and was not obliged to obtain leave, as far as I know.

Ques. (By the accused.) Was complaint made of Lieut. Hammersley to Commodore Stewart by Lieut. Sands or any other person?

Ans. Mr. Sands, in his letter to the commodore, stated Lieut. Hammersley to be the aggressor; no other complaint was made that I know of.

Joshua R. Sands, a lieutenant in the navy of the United States, being duly sworn according to law, and interrogated by the judge advocate, deposes and says:

I was ordered on the morning of the 8th of October, 1823, to confine myself to limits, by an order communicated to me by Lieut. John Harris, of the marines, from Commodore Stewart. I was ordered to confine myself to the ward room, with permission to go forward on the main deck to obey the calls of nature. On the following day, Lieut. Hammersley ordered me to confine myself to my state room. The order was given me to go, and Lieut. Harris was ordered to enforce it. I was informed by the officer of marines, who I requested to inform the commodore of the order of Lieut. Hammersley, that this order was sanctioned by him. Shortly after my confinement, perhaps an hour or two, I addressed a letter to the commodore on the subject, dated October 9th, 1823. My first letter was previous to my close confinement, but on the same day. To my letter of the 9th, after being ordered to my room, I received no reply; I addressed another on the following day, which was made the subject of a charge on which I was tried. Nothing occurred further for two or three days. A court of inquiry was ordered, composed of Lieutenants Hunter, Henry and Ridgeway, which met to investigate the subject. On the second or third day of their proceedings, I had occasion to complain that a fair record was not kept, and informed them that I should enter my protest against the proceedings. This protest was made and entered, followed by one from the judge advocate, Lieut. Grimes, of the marines. He stated he was compelled also to enter his protest. The court then did not meet for several days. The reason assigned was the indisposition of Lieut. Hunter. In the interval, at ten o'clock on the night of the 18th of October, 1823, Commodore Stewart addressed me the following letter, (marked —.) This was the night of the day that it was discovered or publicly made known that Madrid had been secreted in the pantry. I took the feelings of the commodore into consideration, and observed that under the circumstances I would write something soothing to the old man, or the commodore, and wrote him an answer, (marked —.) I conceived that I had in this letter given up as much as the commodore could in justice ask of me, or as I could in honor give. On the following day I was much disappointed at receiving the annexed communication from the commodore, not doubting that my letter to him would have been perfectly satisfactory to him. (Read, annexed, and marked —.) To this I wrote the following reply. (Read, annexed, and marked —.) To this I received a reply of the same date. (Read, annexed, and marked —.) This was followed by mine to the commodore of the 20th. (Read, annexed, and marked —.)

About the date of this last letter, through Lieutenants Grimes and Goldsborough, something like an offer was made to free me from all my difficulties, if I would agree to settle my differences with Lieutenant Hamersley—the commodore representing to them the good feelings he entertained towards me; that he considered me as an officer of promise, and that all that was necessary for me was to settle my differences with Lieutenant Hammersley. To this I paid no attention. I was informed, a number of days having intervened without any business being done before the court, that it would again assemble, as Lieut. Hunter was a good deal better. I prepared to appeal before it. I was then informed that Lieut. Henry had got suddenly unwell, and that the court would not meet on that account. A few hours after, I saw Lieut. Henry come on board, perfectly well, to all appearance. I directed my servant to make my respects to Lieut. Henry, and say I was happy to find he was so soon recovered from his sickness. He immediately came down into my room, and took a seat. I addressed him with remarking upon my unpleasant situation, my anxiety to proceed with the investigation, and asked him how it happened that he was so unwell in the morning, and, in a few hours, as well as I ever saw him in my life. He made some trifling excuses, of which I told him I doubted the truth. This was the only quarrel I ever had with him. The court of inquiry met the ensuing day, and finished their proceedings, and the result of which I have never heard.

A few days after, I was furnished with a copy of charges and specifications, with an order to observe the same limits to which I had been confined some time previous, with the privilege of going forward on the main deck to attend to the calls of nature. From that period, (which was in the latter part of October or beginning of November, 1823,) until April, 1824—I think about the 13th—I heard nothing more from Com. Stewart; but observed the limits, with but one exception. On the 13th April, I addressed a letter of Com. Stewart. I do not recollect receiving any answer to this communication. I was then informed by Mr. Tudor, acting judge advocate, that a court-martial would assemble, before which I appeared on the same day. The court proceeded to business. I objected to the judge advocate, which objections were sustained by the court, and he was set aside. About this stage of the proceedings of the court, Captain Isaac Hull received a letter, whereupon the court was cleared. On the opening of the court, I discovered that a member of the court, to whom I had likewise objected, had, as well as the judge advocate, resumed their seats.

I was remanded to my confinement, after appearing before the court, and addressed a letter to Com. Stewart on the subject, (read, annexed, and marked —,) to which I received the answer also read and annexed. At this time, I had appeared before the court and pleaded to the charges. After a few days, I again appeared before the court, again pleaded to the charges, and the investigation took place. After the trial was completed, we sailed for Valparaiso. On the 23d May ensuing, I addressed a letter to Com.

Stewart, (read, annexed, and marked —.) To this I received no reply. On the 4th June, I again addressed a letter to him. In the interim, a letter was addressed by the officers to the commodore, requesting an extension of my limits. Doctor Salter also addressed the commodore. The doctor informed me of the result of his communication, whether by letter or not I do not know. I addressed him a letter. On June 4th, after these circumstances, I again wrote to the commodore. (Read, annexed, and marked —.) Prior to this, I should have related that on the 10th May the commodore addressed me a letter, (read, annexed, and marked —,) covering the charges and specifications. On these charges I was tried by a court, after my arrival in the United States. At or about the time of the application of the officers for my enlargement, Lieut. Harris waited on me, and informed me that he had waited on Com. Stewart, to ascertain whether he was correct in his understanding of my orders and the limits assigned me.

In reply to my last letter to Com. Stewart, I received one from H. G. Ward, the commodore's secretary. About this time, an enlargement of my limits took place, so far that in going forward to obey the calls of nature, on the main deck, from the construction which Com. Stewart put upon this expression, it appeared that exercise was included, which I had never before understood. Under these circumstances, I availed myself of the main deck to take exercise, and remained under these circumstances until my arrival in the United States, having been nearly eleven months confined. I was on shore at Valparaiso on the 7th October, 1823, when I received an order from the commodore to come on board, to which order I replied by a note of the same day. I was under obligations of a personal nature to remain on shore; they grew out of the dispute with Lieutenant Hammersley. I remained on shore till morning, when I was informed by Lieutenant Harris that Commodore Stewart had directed him to bring me on board by force should it be necessary. Understanding from Lieutenant Harris that circumstances dispensed with my obligation to remain, I consented to go. He remained where he was, after receiving my promise to go on board, which I did immediately, and went to the limits that were assigned me by Lieutenant Harris when he came on board shortly after. This was on the 8th, and on the following day I wrote the first letter mentioned in my testimony.

Ques. (By the court.) Were you on the surgeon's sick report at any time during your arrest, and if so, for what period?

Ans. I was not on the surgeon's sick report, that I know of; I consulted him frequently, as I was much troubled with rheumatism and toothache. He was frequently in my room; spoke of my health, but no formal complaint was made by me.

Cross-examined by the accused:

Ques. Were you placed under the charge of a sentinel at any time during your arrest and suspension, and did you not have free ingress and egress to and from the gun decks?

Ans. No sentinel was placed over me. I had free egress and ingress to go forward to obey the calls of nature; nothing more, as I understood. In these walks I was in the constant habit of meeting Lieutenant Hammersley, and no difficulty occurred.

Ques. What has been Commodore Stewart's general temper and conduct to his officers and men? Has it been marked with cruelty and oppression?

Ans. No; on the contrary, as regards myself, I have no recollection of ever having received a censure or reprimand from him for two years previous, excepting that he once reprimanded me for swearing on duty.

Ques. State, if you please, what was the circumstance of a personal nature which induced you to disobey Commodore Stewart's order to go on board on the 7th October.

Ans. I had gone on shore for the purpose of fighting a duel with Lieutenant Hammersley; it had not been terminated, and I had stated to Lieutenants Ogden and Harris that I would not go on board ship until it was terminated. We had met once, the affair was undecided, and we were to have met again the following morning.

Adjourned till ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

FRIDAY, August 26.

The court met pursuant to the adjournment of yesterday. Present: all the members of the court, the judge advocate and Captain Stewart. The minutes of the proceedings of yesterday were read.

Lieutenant Sands again called:

Ques. (By the judge advocate.) Did you go on shore at Valparaiso on the 7th October, in consequence of a challenge from Lieutenant Hammersley, and when you parted did he promise to meet you again on the following morning?

Ans. I went on shore in consequence of a challenge received by me from him, and when we parted the understanding was that we were to meet again the following morning.

Ques. (By the accused.) You have stated that you kept your limits with but one exception: what occasion do you refer to?

Ans. I refer to my going in the boats on the expedition after the piratical vessel, the Quintanilla, which was the subject of the charge against me.

Louis M. Goldsborough, a lieutenant in the navy of the United States, a witness produced and duly sworn according to law, and interrogated by the judge advocate, deposes and says: I was on board the Franklin; the first year of the cruise I was a midshipman, the residue of the cruise I was an acting lieutenant; Commodore Stewart on one occasion at Callao, about eleven o'clock at night, came to me, I was then officer of the watch, and told me he wanted some money put on board the brig Cora, and ordered me to strike the money into the boat, the cutter alongside. He also ordered me to select a trusty midshipman to send with the money; the time occupied was about three-quarters of an hour, so that it was near twelve o'clock when it was completed. I had sent for a midshipman and he was rather long in coming; Mr. Hammersley had by this time relieved my watch; as the commodore had expressed a desire to get the money on board as quick as possible, I myself went with the boat; by the time I got alongside, the brig was lying to; I commenced putting the money on board of her; when I had partly completed discharging the money, a patriot armed boat came near and inquired what vessel it was, what she was doing; the captain asked me what he was to reply. I told him to exercise his own judgment; that so long as I had that money to put on board he should not be interfered with, but that I could not afford him protection any longer. The brig was hailed by the officer in the boat, and the captain's reply was, "Don't come on board." The officer said he was a patriot man-of-war boat, and had come off for the purpose of knowing the character of the vessel, and what she was doing. The captain of the brig replied, "I don't care who the hell you are, you shall not come on board my vessel." By this time the boat had drifted round to the same side of the brig where the boat of the Franklin was, and seeing the man in the boat did not make any further inquiry, but passed closely under the stern of the brig, and, as the moon was shining, he saw her name, and observed, "It is the Cora, of Baltimore: I'll soon fix you." He then pulled towards the shore. What he did afterwards I do not know. I completed putting the money on board, and left the brig. A day or two after Commodore Stewart sent for me in the poop cabin, and informed me that a complaint had been made by the patriot government, of our boats having interfered with one of their revenue boats; he asked me what had transpired, and I told him, to the best of my memory, what I have related to the court. The Cora was under way when I received the orders to carry the money on board her. Callao was then in possession of the patriots. I do not know where the Cora was bound; they stated to me that she was bound to the United States. I know of no other instance of putting money on board vessels at night, nor any in which it was sent to them after they had got under way. I know instances in which money has been brought on board at night, and also about the persons of individuals. While lying at Quilca, I think some time in the year 1823, I was sent out in one of the boats, just as the dark had set in, about twelve or fifteen miles up the coast. Lieut. Henry and Capt. Smith were both in the boat; we went into a small cove, where we found some mules laden with gold and silver, which was placed in our boat and carried on board the ship, where we arrived at about one or two o'clock in the morning. The caravan of mules had arrived before us at the place some short time. There were three of the people of the country there at the time. I did not get out of the boat; Capt. Smith and Mr. Henry got out. This is the only instance of the kind within my knowledge; I did not see the commodore on our arrival, and made no report myself on the subject; Capt. Smith appeared to have the management of it. I have several times seen individuals bring money on board concealed about their bodies. I cannot enumerate the occasions; it happened repeatedly, and I know such money was received by Mr. Hunter, the first lieutenant; on one occasion I was the officer of the deck, when two persons came on board with money round their body, under their pantaloons. They went into the poop cabin; Commodore Stewart was then there and saw the manner in which the money was concealed, and immediately ordered me to send them out of the ship, and he would not receive the money. I know of no instance in which Commodore Stewart knew that money was brought on board in this manner, in which he authorized it; I do not recollect whether these persons were people of the country or Americans; I think the former. It occurred at Callao, when in the possession of the patriots. I communicated to Lieutenant Sands a conversation which I had with Commodore Stewart on the subject of his confinement. Commodore Stewart observed to me one day, in the course of conversation, that he regretted having confined him, and spoke of him very flatteringly as a fine young man. This is what I stated to Mr. Sands. I do not recollect anything being said about the controversy with Lieutenant Hammersly. By the expression of Commodore Stewart, regretting having confined Mr. Sands, I mean he regretted the necessity of confining him. Commodore Stewart always treated me kindly, and I think his conduct towards his officers, in general, was unusually kind; he allowed them indulgences which were not customary.

Cross-examined on the part of the accused:

Ques. Had you any orders or directions from Commodore Stewart to afford protection to the Cora when you put the money on board?

Ans. No; my orders were to have the money put on board merely.

Ques. When examined by Commodore Stewart in the poop cabin on the subject of the Cora, was it not in the presence of a patriot officer?

Ans. I think it was in the presence of the officer who had brought the complaint. I do not think I remained in the cabin after having made my communication to the Commodore, and heard nothing of their conversation.

Ques. Were you the officer of the deck when four large boxes were brought on board the Franklin at Callao, said to contain gold, silver and jewelry? Did Captain Stewart turn them away?

Ans. I was. I think it occurred about the same time that the Cora sailed, though I will not be positive. A gentleman, by the name of George, calling himself an Italian, brought some large boxes alongside, and asked me to receive them on board; I sent down and informed the first lieutenant of the circumstance, who sent me up word to receive them. The man that brought them alongside told me that they contained plate. I commenced striking them on board. When I got two or three boxes on deck, Commodore Stewart came out of his cabin, and asked me what boxes those were; I told him that the man stated to me that they contained silver plate, and that I had Mr. Hunter's directions to receive them. He looked at the boxes; said they could not contain silver; they were too large. The man replied that they did, that he would assure him they contained nothing else. If I recollect right, he told the commodore he would give him two per cent. if he would receive them on board. The commodore told him he should do no such thing, and ordered them back in the boats, which was done, and they were sent away.

Alexander Hamilton Hopkinson, a midshipman in the navy of the United States, being duly sworn according to law, and interrogated by the judge advocate, deposes and says: I was a midshipman on board the Franklin during her late cruise in the Pacific. One evening at Quilca, the last time, I think, we were there, I went on shore in the gig with Midshipman Porter; we landed in a cove by the custom house, about eight o'clock; waited there until about eleven at night. An officer, or one that I was informed was an officer in the Spanish army, then told me the money was ready, and I sent the boat's crew up into the store—there commonly called the custom-house store—they brought the money down, and put it in the boat. We got on board the ship about half-past eleven o'clock at night. That is the only occasion on which I ever carried money on board at night. I believe it was plata pina, not dollars. I do not know to whom the orders were given; they were to Mr. Porter; I went as officer of the boat. The evening before we entered Callao the first time, I think on the last day of July, the ship being about eight miles from St. Lorenzo, I received orders from Mr. Hunter to go on board the Canton, and carry a number of goods which were on board her, and deposit them on board the Peruvian; to tell Mr. Cox to be very careful of them; to put them down in the cabin, as they were very likely to be injured. I went on board the Canton, got the goods—there were two boat loads of them, I think ten bales and two boxes—and put them on board the Peruvian; I then returned on board the Franklin, when Mr. Hunter directed me to go again on board the Canton and tell Mr. O'Sullivan Commodore Stewart wished to see him; to tell him to bring on board some blank bills of lading; I went and brought Captain O'Sullivan, who carried with him on board the Franklin a box marked private papers; about eleven o'clock I left the ship to carry Captain O'Sullivan again on board the Canton, with orders from Mr. Hunter to direct Mr. Ward to bring on board the book of samples of goods that were on board the Peruvian; Mr. Ward had a pasteboard box which he passed into the boat, also a writing desk; I took them to the Franklin with Mr. Ward; the Canton then filled away and stood off from the shore; we got into Callao next day. I never knew an instance of Mr. Smith being employed to board vessels, or perform the duty of officers on board the Franklin. The Peruvian, at the time the goods were thus placed on board her, was in tow astern of the Franklin; she had her standing rigging on; Mr. Coxe was on board with a number of carpenters. When we went for the money at Quilca, on our landing, the officer, who was called a captain, told us the money had not come down; he asked us into the colonel's quarters, where we remained until he informed us it had arrived and was ready.

John Redman Coxe, a midshipman in the navy of the United States, being duly sworn according to law, and interrogated by the judge advocate, deposes and says: I was on board the Franklin during her late cruise in the Pacific, in the capacity of a midshipman. I think sometime in June or July, 1822, I was placed in charge of the Peruvian at Quilca, and from there to Callao, and continued on board for some weeks at Callao. Off Callao there were a number of bales, perhaps eight or ten, and some boxes, received on board from Mr. Hopkinson, with orders from Mr. Hunter to take particular charge of them: to place them in the cabin, as they were very valuable. They remained on board during the whole time that I continued in charge of the vessel. I was relieved in charge of the vessel by Mr. Wilkes, and on my telling him there were certain goods on board the vessel which he was to take charge of, he replied, he did not know they were there; he did not see them, and would have nothing to do with them. I informed Mr. Hunter and Mr. Henry of it, and they said, very well. Mr. Henry took charge of the vessel in the course of a very short time, perhaps a few hours. One of the packages broke open one evening; I believe it contained silk stockings; it was a small box which I kept in the cabin, the others were all large. I, on one occasion, brought off at Quilca, in the night, a quantity of money; I had charge of the boat; I believe Mr. Henry was along; I think Mr. Marshal was one of the officers of a boat; I found Capt. Smith there on the beach, where the mules were; the night was dark; I think it was about six or eight miles to the southward of Quilca.

John Blight, a gunner in the navy of the United States, being duly sworn according to law, and interrogated by the judge advocate, deposes and says:

Question. Were you on board the Franklin during her late cruise in the Pacific, and in what capacity?

Answer. I was on board, as gunner.

Ques. Did you carefully and regularly inspect the guns of that vessel, and in what state were they kept?

Ans. It was done regularly and constantly; they were kept in a good state, everything that was required of them.

Ques. Had any of them, on your return to New York, the same loads which they carried out?

Ans. Yes; the three after guns on each side. They were regularly examined, and the powder returned to the magazine.

Ques. How frequently were the crew exercised at general quarters during the cruise?

Ans. I will not be positive—either two or three times: once at New York before we left there; once afterwards, I cannot say whether at sea or in port.

Ques. Were they frequently exercised by divisions?

Ans. Yes; very often, almost every day when the weather would permit.

Ques. During your cruise, were there any musket cartridges or other articles drawn from the Franklin and sent to the Canton?

Ans. Yes.

Ques. What were they, and on what occasions?

Ans. There were 300 musket cartridges sent at one time; on the 26th July, 1822, there were seventy sent at Quilca; on the 1st December, in the same year, one hundred priming tubes at Quilca, six priming wires and one bit, six pounds of match rope; there were also some feet and hand iron shackles sent on board.

Ques. How were these articles entered on your books?

Ans. They were not entered as expended, nor as sent to the Canton.

Ques. Were they ever returned or replaced?

Ans. No.

Ques. Upon whose requisition were they drawn?

Ans. They were drawn by a verbal requisition from the first lieutenant, Mr. Hunter.

Ques. (By the court.) Who directed you not to enter them as expended?

Ans. Mr. Hunter. The cartridges of the Canton were too large for her muskets, and these were sent with the expectation they would be replaced by some from the Canton.

Ques. Was this order from Mr. Hunter on the first occasion when they were sent or the second?

Ans. I went to him on Saturday, when I was to make my returns, on both occasions, and this was what he told me.

Cross-examined by the accused.

Ques. Were all the articles from your department, sent to the Peruviano and Waterwitch, returned to you on these vessels being put out of service?

Ans. They were; all the armament and ammunition was returned. I gave a receipt for it to Lieut. Henry.

Charles Wilkes, jr., a midshipman in the service of the United States, being duly sworn according to law and interrogated by the judge advocate, deposes and says:

I was on board the Franklin, during part of her late cruise in the Pacific, as midshipman. I was on board one of the schooners, the Waterwitch, in June, 1822, and continued on board until March following. From October, 1822, I was in command of her. I was ordered to the Peruvian for about three or four hours at Callao. I received a written order from Mr. Henry, who commanded the Waterwitch, to go on board the Peruvian and relieve Mr. Coxe. I went on board about ten o'clock, and was put in command of the Waterwitch by a verbal order from Mr. Henry. I refused to take charge of some goods said to be on board the Peruvian. I had a conversation with Mr. Henry on the subject of the goods the preceding day, in which I stated my unwillingness to take any charge of those goods. The Peruvian was not at that time quite ready for sea. The Waterwitch during the time that I was attached to her was employed in carrying letters and dispatches, and waiting for them. I took some bullion from Coquimbo to Valparaiso. This was the only occasion on board the schooner in which I was engaged in the transportation of specie. I was on board when she went to Guayaquil. We left Quilca for Guayaquil on the 26th of July, 1822, and arrived there on the 5th of August. The object was, I believe, to carry dispatches. I delivered one to Bolivar—no other. No one was on board not belonging to the squadron. She was then under the command of Lieutenant Henry. The Waterwitch arrived at Guayaquil two days before the Canton, where that vessel took in a cargo of cocoa.

Edward Fitzgerald, a purser in the navy of the United States, being duly sworn according to law and interrogated by the judge advocate, deposes and says:

I was purser on board the Franklin during her late cruise in the Pacific.

The court adjourned till to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

SATURDAY, August 27.

The court met pursuant to the adjournment of yesterday. Present: all the members of the court (except Captain Henley), the judge advocate and Captain Stewart. A communication was received from Captain Henley, stating that he was compelled by indisposition to absent himself from the court to-day.

James Biddle, a captain in the navy of the United States, being duly sworn according to law and interrogated on the part of the accused, deposes and says:

Question. Did you at any time, and when, command a ship-of-war of the United States in the Pacific?

Answer. I commanded the Ontario in the Pacific in the year 1818.

Ques. Is it the practice of our ships-of-war, as well as those of other nations, to give passage from one port to another, in the course of the cruise, to such persons, not belligerents, as they think proper?

Ans. Yes. It was the practice of all the men-of-war in that sea while I was there. Three British men-of-war were at that time in those seas, and in consequence of the particular situation in which Peru and Chili were then placed, the captains of those vessels as well as myself were subjected to considerable inconvenience and expense in such transportation between those two countries. I went twice from Lima to Valparaiso, and twice from Valparaiso to Lima. I mentioned to the authorities at those places that I had been very much incommoded by the numerous applications made to me, at both those places, and that as I could carry only a few at a time, I was willing to carry such as should be approved of by the authorities. It was impossible to resist the importunities of the applicants. There was no other mode of communication between those two countries than such as was afforded by the foreign men-of-war. I carried a Spanish officer and lady from Callao to Rio Janiero. They were both taken on board at the particular instance of the Vice-King. In my report to the government I stated what I had done, and also the circumstances which had induced me to do it. The Secretary of the Navy informed me that the President fully approved of my conduct under the circumstances.

I considered myself on this point as pretty much unrestricted by any orders.

Ques. Is it the practice to permit the crews of our ships to work for or on board of other vessels, receiving compensation therefor; also to furnish our merchantmen with materials they may stand in need of, taking care to have the same returned or paid for?

Ans. I have on several occasions supplied American vessels, particularly in the Pacific, where they could be obtained in no other mode, with men from the ship to work; and I have supplied them when necessary with articles from the ship—perhaps foreign vessels also, when they could not be procured elsewhere. On one occasion at Callao I received eight American seamen who were prisoners there; they were destitute of clothing, and I gave the purser a written order to furnish them with such articles as were necessary. At Rio Janeiro, in the Congress, I sent my carpenters on board a merchant vessel to put up some bulk-heads. On the coast of California, I sent on board a Russian man-of-war some paint, a courtesy which I should expect to give and receive from any foreign man-of-war under the same circumstances. I do not know what entry was made in the books of the articles. I merely directed the first lieutenant to have it sent on board.

Ques. Is it the practice to take on board money and bullion for transportation or on deposit, and to give convoy or protection to American or other neutral vessels?

Ans. Yes. It is, I believe, universal There was a piratical vessel in those seas when I was there, which made it peculiarly necessary.

Ques. Did you prevent the capture of an American vessel, and under what circumstances?

Ans. I prevented the Spanish blockading squadron from capturing an American vessel off Valparaiso. As I was going into Valparaiso I was boarded by the blockading squadron. The officer informed me that the port was blockaded, and that their orders were to permit no vessel, even a man-of-war, to enter. I told him I had orders to go into that port, that I should go in, and did. A few days after, I saw an American vessel coming in, the squadron in pursuit. I thought her in danger of being captured, as she was becalmed, and sent all my boats out to assist her, and they towed her into the anchorage.

Ques. Was there danger in traveling in Peru without a passport?

Ans. While I was in Peru, I received a letter from a man, who stated himself to be a surgeon on board an English whale ship, who stated that he was imprisoned at Lima, simply because he had no passport. I offered to the government that, if there existed no other cause for his detention, I would take him out of the country. He was released, and I carried him to Valparaiso. I knew the British officers in those seas had shown a disposition to aid American citizens, and I was always disposed to reciprocate it.

Ques. (By a member of the court.) Was not the duty of a commanding officer in the Pacific oftentimes embarrassing, owing to the political fluctuations which have so frequently occurred; changes of power producing distrust and imaginary causes of complaint? And is it not difficult for a commanding officer, studious of neutrality, to avoid the suspicion of being partial?

Ans. I believe it is impossible for any commanding officer to be in the Pacific without giving offence ot the one side or the other. The royal party, knowing the general feelings of our countrymen, are jealous of them; the patriots, on the other hand, expecting too much, are dissatisfied.

Ques. Have you known Com. Stewart for many years? Have you ever sailed with him? If yea, what was his character for humanity and kindness to those under his command? Has he been characterized for harshness and severity, or has he been remarked for indulgence to his officers, and gentleness to his men?

Ans. I have known Capt. Stewart for many years. In 1801, I sailed with him; he was first lieutenant, and I a midshipman. I always found his deportment humane and gentlemanly on board ship. The situation of first lieutenant is more trying to the disposition and temper than any other on board ship.

Edward Fitzgerald called:

Question. Look at the books shown you. Are those the muster rolls of the Franklin?

Answer. They are No's 2 and 3. No. 2 is from the first May, 1821, till the 31st December, inclusive. No. 3, from the 1st of January, 1824, till the 31st October of the same year, inclusive. William A. Weaver appears on both muster rolls as a lieutenant, attached to the Franklin. When an officer is absent from the ship on leave of absence, it is usual to enter the circumstance on the muster roll of the ship, by order of the commander. If he is absent on furlough I should make such entry without order. In the former case he would draw full pay; in the latter case he would draw half pay. No entry is made on the muster roll, opposite the name of Lieut. Weaver, that he was on leave of absence. That muster roll was approved by Commodore Stewart; on what day, I cannot say. I never received any order to enter such absence on that muster roll. On the muster roll No. 3, I marked Mr. Weaver absent without leave from the 1st of August, 1822, by the order of Commodore Stewart. I received the order to make the entry, and did it some time in November last. I do not recollect the day exactly. I think it was the day after the court-martial met in New York for the trial of Mr. Weaver. It was approved after that entry was made. When he directed me to make the entry he said it was in conformity with the rolls he had sent to the Department. It is the practice of the service, and I believe there is a regulation on the subject, to send, when an opportunity occurs, a copy of the muster roll to the Department. The two papers shown are papers made out for the purpose of being transmitted to the Department under this regulation; the one dated October 1, 1821, the other March 11, 1823. On the first, I made, by the direction of the commodore, "absent, with leave to join at Valparaiso;" on the second, "on leave of absence, in charge of stores on board the ship America for Lima, by permission," was entered by order of Commodore Stewart. The words "on leave of absence," are in the handwriting of my steward, the remainder of the sentence is in my own hand. I think it possible I omitted to enter the date, 1st August, on this last roll. I do not recollect to have received any orders from Commodore Stewart to make any other entries than those two that I have spoken of, in relation to Lieut. Weaver. Mr. Weaver sailed from New York in the ship America, about a week, I think, before us. We first saw him at Rio Janerio; he arrived there after us. We next saw him at Valparaiso; he came off the port after we got there; he came into port in a boat, and proceeded on the next morning to Lima. We received at Callao, in August, 1822, the stores which had gone out in the America. We arrived at that place on the 1st August. Mr. Weaver had then returned to the United States. The America had also sailed, and we took on board all the stores of my department brought out in that vessel. There were none others that I know of. There were not, at that time, nor at any subsequent time, any stores belonging to the Franklin, to my knowledge, at Callao, at Lima, or on board the America. Mr. Weaver was not on board the Franklin after we left Valparaiso, until after our return to New York. I did not receive at the port of Arica any permission to send any stores on shore. At Quilca, I received permission to send on board the Canton some officers' clothing. They went to the shore, not by my direction. They were private property, belonging to myself altogether. They were sold at Arequipa, a hundred miles in the interior. Some of the clothes I sent away did not suit the station; they were white drilling pantaloons and marseilles vests. Cloth was found the most comfortable. I retained as many of every article as I thought would be necessary, but I believe the black silk vests gave out; I believe nothing else. The officers had an ample supply. Other articles were procured, which answered the purpose better.

Cross-examined on the part of the accused:

Ques. Do not the regulations of the navy require the purser to provide, at the public expense, slops or clothes for the crew of the ships-of-war?

Ans. The government usually furnishes them at home; abroad they are paid for also by the government, and eventually paid for by the men who use them.

Ques. Do they require clothing for the officers to be provided, or do the pursers lay in these at their own cost and hazard?

Ans. If they are taken out by the pursers it is at their own risk. I never did it before.

Ques. Were not some of the officers of the Franklin lost, and did not others come home, which diminished the demand for clothing?

Ans. There were six, I think, lost, and several returned in the Constellation. This diminished the demand, and was the cause of my requesting permission of Commodore Stewart to send some away.

Ques. Did Captain O'Sullivan offer to dispose of the surplus on board the Canton? How came it to be taken on shore?

Ans. He offered to take them and sell them for me on board the Canton. He became alarmed at the appearance of the patriot sloop-of-war, the Belgrano, and sent my goods on shore, with some of his own, without consulting me. Part of them were stolen on shore, out of the custom house, by the soldiers. I endeavored to get the remainder back to the Franklin by the aid of Captain Smith, who was living on shore at the time. I lost about $400 or $500, on the whole, in consequence of the robbery. Commodore Stewart gave me permission to put them on board the Canton, but had nothing further to do with it.

Ques. Look at the muster roll now shown you; was that made by you?

Ans. It was. I made out two on that occasion for the commodore, on the 31st October, 1822. About that time the brig Dick was about coming to the United States; I sent it to the commodore, with the remark, opposite the name of Mr. Weaver, "on leave of absence," in the handwriting of my steward; the residue of the sentence, "in charge of stores, to August 1, 1822," is in the handwriting of the commodore. It is usual for the remarks opposite Mr. Weaver's name to be made by him.

Ques. Did you inquire of Captain Stewart, when you made up the muster roll No. 2, what entry should be made as to Mr. Weaver, and what did he say?

Ans. I omitted mentioning it to him then, at the time I made the entry on the roll transmitted in March, 1823; the commodore observed that he only knew Mr. Weaver officially there; if he had gone to the United States it was on his own responsibility. I inferred his meaning to be, that the commodore could only know him officially there until he had received instructions from the government what to do with him.

Ques. Does the captain of a ship sign the muster book, or roll of the ship, until the conclusion of the cruise, or closing of that book?

Ans. It is not usual to make up the book until the cruise is terminated. I, however, did it during the cruise, on this occasion. The book signed by Commodore Stewart in New York, in November last, had never before been presented to him for signature. I took it to the commodore for his signature without any intimation from him, having been ordered to produce it before the court-martial, and not conceiving that it could be evidence without his approval.

Ques. Is not there this difference between the muster roll sent to the Department and that kept for the ship—that the latter notes the final disposition of any person on it, while the former notes their situation at the time it is made out to be transmitted?

Ans. It is required that the muster roll transmitted should be a copy from the muster roll retained on board the ship, unless when something had occurred which had been previously transmitted to the Department, in which case it would be unnecessary to mention it again.

Ques. Have you, at any time during the period of the Franklin's cruise, received directions from me to make any remarks opposite the name of any person attached to the Franklin under my command?

Ans. I received directions from the first lieutenant to rate the men, to note promotions and reductions, such as appear on the book. I do not remember receiving any orders directly from the commodore himself; they were transmitted to me through the first lieutenant, and were afterwards approved by the commodore.

Ques. Did you refer to Commodore Stewart at any time during the cruise for remarks to be made opposite Lieutenant Weaver's name in consequence of his absence?

Ans. Only once, which was the occasion to which I have referred. Mr. Weaver had delayed returning so long that I thought it necessary to speak to him about it.

Ques. Were you not acquainted with the absence and cause of such absence of Lieutenant Weaver, from the sailing of the Franklin from New York to her arrival at Callao, and that he was on board the America in charge of purser's and hospital stores?

Ans. I was; I had heard of it; had no personal acquaintance with it.

Ques. Did you receive payment for the thirty-six bolts of canvas returned to the Canton, and have you accounted for it to the government?

Ans. I received $720, at the rate of $20 a bolt, and accounted for it to the government. The wine purchased was all used; part of it as wine, part vinegar. It cost $0.50, and I was informed by the agent there that vinegar could not be procured under a dollar.

Ques. Was it not known on board the Franklin, and to Captain Stewart, that Mr. Weaver had returned to the United States, and that the government knew he was there?

Ans. It was known by me. I had seen in the Intelligencer an account of his arrival at Washington. When this was I do not know; it was previous to the entry on the roll of his being in charge of stores.

Ques. (By the judge advocate.) What was paid for the canvas procured from the Canton?

Ans. I do not recollect; I think it was $20.

Ques. When was the $750 dollars received and accounted for, and from whom?

Ans. It was received some time, I think, in July, 1822, from Captain O'Sullivan, and accounted for on the settlement of my accounts last winter.

Ques. Was any money brought on board the Franklin under any arrangement with you, concealed about the persons of individuals, or was such money as you procured from the shore charged as having paid duty?

Ans. There was a bill for $20,000 dollars, to be deposited on board the vessel, sent out by the government to be collected there. I made inquiries; the bill was payable at Lima. I found I should have to pay five per cent. duty, one per cent. for package, and two per cent. for a guard to bring it to Callao. I was unwilling to incur such a responsibility; the times were hazardous, armies on both sides infesting the country. I mentioned to the man who had the bill to pay, and agreed to pay him six per cent. if he would deliver it on board the Franklin. He did so, and showed me a receipt from Sarratea for five per cent. duty. I thus saved two per cent., and avoided all responsibility. This man had money in belts laying in the boat; whether he brought it from the shore concealed I do not know. He brought it to the Franklin from his own vessel. None was about his person to my knowledge when he brought it to the Franklin. I know of no instance in which money, brought aboard under an arrangement with me, was concealed about the person.

Ques. (By the accused.) In purchasing supplies for the squadron in the Pacific, what was the object of purchasing such supplies afloat, instead of procuring them on shore?

Ans. One object was that the duties were not so high. The preference was always given to American vessels when the articles could be procured from them.

Samuel Brown, a witness produced on behalf of the United States:

An objection was made by the accused to the competency of this witness. The grounds of objection are stated in the paper filed (—). The court, being cleared, proceeded to consider the objections that had been taken to the competency of the witness, and the record of his conviction before the court-martial.

The court adjourned till ten o'clock on Monday morning.

MONDAY, August 29.

The court met pursuant to the adjournment of Saturday. Present: all the members of the court, the judge advocate and Captain Stewart. The proceedings of Saturday were read. The judge advocate then read an opinion, which, in pursuance of an intimation to that effect, he had prepared upon the exception taken on Saturday, annexed and marked (—). The court, being cleared, determined that the witness was not competent, and therefore that his evidence should not be heard.

David Conner, a master commandant in the navy of the United States, being duly sworn according to law, and interrogated by the judge advocate, deposes and says: I commanded the Dolphin, in the Pacific, at the time the Franklin was there. Sailed from New York at the same time. I received no instructions from Commodore Stewart in relation to the Canton. On my arrival at St. Juan Fernandez, I found the Canton there; no signal was displayed from her that I recollect. I received on board the Dolphin, on the 6th May, 1822, Captain Eliphalet Smith, as the bearer of dispatches by order of Commodore Stewart (read, annexed and marked —). On my arrival at Arica, I discovered that some of Captain Smith's trunks contained samples of goods. I had no previous knowledge of it. I had no knowledge of what his trunks contained when he came on board. Arica was the first port at which we arrived from Valparaiso. We staid at Arica about thirty-six or forty-eight hours, and sailed to Molliendo. There we landed Captain Smith with his baggage. I do not know whether Captain Smith came on board the Dolphin from the shore or from the Franklin. I think his baggage came from the Canton. I had no other orders, written or verbal, than the one that has been read.

Cross-examined by the accused:

Captain Stewart did not, to my knowledge, know anything of the samples going on board the Dolphin.

Ques. Did the Canton leave Juan Fernandez in company with the Franklin or the Dolphin?

Ans. I think she sailed about the same time with the Franklin, and they must have parted company during the night, as I fell in with the Canton the next morning, and the Franklin was not in sight.

Ques. Did Captain Stewart ever demand or receive any portion of the emoluments for money or bullion taken on board the Dolphin?

Ans. He did not. I know of no usage in the service which entitles him to claim it.

Ques. (By the judge advocate.) Did you carry on board the Dolphin, about the month of September, 1822, money, sails, &c., from Callao to Guayaquil, for the purpose of placing them on board the Canton? If yea, state the circumstances and the orders under which you acted.

Ans. I did carry money and sails for that purpose at the time specified. I received orders from Commodore Stewart on that occasion; they were in writing. The substance of them was, that I was to make inquiries respecting a piratical vessel on that coast; the next subject was a claim by the master of the American schooner Amanda, on the government there, and also to notify to the American vessels in that neighborhood, bound to the south, that I would afford them convoy. The orders did not embrace the subject of the sails, &c., for the Canton. Commodore Stewart requested me verbally to take those articles.

Ques. (By a member of the court.) Do you know of any instances in which specie, bullion, or plata pina were brought on board the public vessels of the United States, clandestinely and at night, in violation of the laws of Peru, with the knowledge or permission of Commodore Stewart?

Ans. I do not. There was money, &c., brought on board the Dolphin from the shore, which was transported to the Franklin, but in no instance was it smuggled. On my arrival at Callao, I applied to the minister of war for permission to receive on board my vessel, for safe keeping, funds belonging to citizens of the United States. The permission was officially granted, and the money brought on board the Dolphin was brought under that authority.

Ques. (By the accused.) Did you bring back to Captain Stewart, from Captain O'Sullivan, certain bills of lading canceled, which had been given for the money you took to him from Callao, also other bills of lading from Mr. Lang?

Ans. I did. Captain O'Sullivan and Mr. Lang canceled the bills of lading, and gave them to me to deliver to Commodore Stewart, which I did. I had carried money down for Mr. Lang also.

Ques. (By a member.) Have you ever known the force under the orders of Commodore Stewart to be employed by his authority, and with his knowledge, in violating actual blockade, the laws of neutrality or the revenue laws of either of the belligerents?

Ans. No.

Ques. (By the same.) Have you ever known extraordinary and illegal protection to be afforded to the Canton and other vessels, to the neglect of vessels employed in a lawful commerce?

Ans. No.

The judge advocate then read and submitted to the court certain documents:

Instructions from the Secretary of the Navy to Com. Stewart, dated September 8th, 1821.

Letter from the Secretary of the Navy to Com. Stewart, dated October 27th, 1824.

Letter from Com. Stewart to the Secretary of the Navy, dated October 29th, 1824.

Letter from the Secretary of the Navy to Com. Stewart, dated November 3d, 1824.

Letter from Com. Stewart to the Secretary of the Navy, dated November 5th, 1824.

The judge advocate then stated to the court that the testimony on the part of the prosecution was closed.

Captain Stewart, by his counsel, requested the indulgence of the court until to-morrow morning, whereupon the court adjourned till ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

TUESDAY, August 30.

The court met pursuant to the adjournment of yesterday. Present: all the members of the court (excepting Captain Henley), the judge advocate, and Captain Stewart. A communication was received from Captain Henley, enclosing a certificate from his physician, stating him to be too much indisposed to attend the court to-day.

The counsel for the accused then read and submitted to the court an opening of his defence, which was annexed to the record and marked (—).

Charles S. McCauley, a lieutenant in the navy of the United States, a witness produced on the part of the accused, being duly sworn according to law, and interrogated on behalf of the accused, deposes and says:

I went to Cadiz in May, 1825, under Le Roy, Bayard, and McEvers, to take command of the Canton. I assumed the command of her and brought her home to New York. She had on board nine or ten bales of goods, including the sample box; they were landed at New York. They appeared on the manifest of the vessel as part of the cargo which had been put on board her at New York before she went to the Pacific. They were silk goods—damask.

I have sailed with Capt. Decatur. He gave me leave of absence on a furlough to go to India. I was on my private business, and was absent about eighteen months. When I reported myself to the Department I was informed I had been kept on the books, and surprise was expressed at my having been absent. I received half pay during the time.

I remember bringing home $10,000 in the Constellation, under the command of Capt. Ridgely, from Valparaiso, for my father, Mr. John McCauley. That was the money sent home by Capt. Stewart.

Lieut. Wm. F. Hunter called on behalf of the accused:

There was some money on board the Franklin belonging to Le Roy, Bayard & Co., of New York; some belonging to Capt. Basset, an American captain who had sold his ship; and some to Capt. Baldwin of the brig Cora, which was sent on board the Cora on the afternoon of the day she sailed; it was sent by one of the midshipmen. He brought word that the captain of the Cora was not ready for it then, but would send word when he was ready. The boat remained alongside until about sundown; as he had sent no word, the money was hoisted on board again. I think between nine and ten o'clock Captain Baldwin came himself on board. I called the commodore up; he had gone to bed. The captain insisted on the money being sent on board at that time; threatened the commodore to prosecute him when he got home if he did not send it. The boat was then manned, and the money sent on board. Mr. Goldsborough was the officer who went. The captain said his boat would not carry it; we must send it in our boat. The Cora was then under way. I think there was from $50,000 to $60,000. The money of Le Roy, Bayard & Co. came on board at Quilca or Arica; that of Captain Basset came from the Dolphin; his own money, Capt. Baldwin had brought on board at different times in his own boats from his own ship.

I never saw money brought on board the Franklin, about the persons of individuals; I have known it brought in bags, belts, and handkerchiefs. Captain Baldwin was the only person that I recollect who brought money on board in that way. The captain said, "I have heard it said by many of them that they brought their money down from the interior in belts, to save it from being robbed. Reports were frequent of persons being stripped to ascertain whether it was carried in that way, by robbers between Callao and Lima. One in particular I remember, the secretary of the Baron Mackan, the commander of a French frigate, was thus treated.

The boarders, firemen and sail-trimmers were frequently exercised at sea, at evening quarters, at times when the guns were not cast loose. The marines were frequently landed by permission of the governments there and exercised on shore. At St. Juan Fernandez, they were also frequently exercised on shore. I was a lieutenant on board the Constitution, during the war, under the command of Commodore Stewart. Her guns were never deficient. Her guns were not more frequently exercised than those of the Franklin, nor do I think the men were more frequently exercised at general quarters. Commodore Stewart carried out with him a carriage for the accommodation of his family, and a coachman.

Between the time of the arrest of Lieutenant Sands and the arrival of the United States, there were four commissioned lieutenants attached to the Franklin. Part of the time I was sick on shore; when I came on board, Lieutenant Hammersley was put in charge of the Amanda. From the time I rejoined the Franklin until shortly before we sailed from Callao, on our return home, the Dolphin was not with us. When the wine was purchased from the Canton, it was procured for the purpose of giving to the officers. The midshipmen had been much in the habit of giving their liquor to the men; some of them got drunk, and we lost two or three overboard. The wine was procured on this account to be given to the officers as a substitute for spirits. Some of the stores laid in at New York, particularly paints and oil, were of a very bad quaility. It became necessary to procure other to enable it to stand the period of time allowed by the regulations of painting.

Cross-examined by the judge advocate:

While at Valparaiso, the Canton asked permission to have her muskets cleaned on board the Franklin. After cleaning them, the cartridges were examined and the balls found too large for the muskets. Capt. O'Sullivan requested to have them run over or changed. We were then busy making musket cartridges, and my impression and belief is, that his were sent on board, and exchanged for others. This was the understanding and agreement, and I think it was executed.

By the accused: "Pay was always received for the work done by the men on private account, and distributed among them. I was present and saw the men employed upon the schooners, paid to their satisfaction by Commodore Stewart." Look at the paper shown you. It is in the handwriting of a man of the name of Elliot, the master's clerk, and is the account of the articles received from the Pearl, annexed and marked (—).

William Horner, being duly sworn, according to law, and interrogated on the part of the accused, deposes and says: I was on board the Franklin in the Pacific. I was a quartermaster at sea, and the commodore's coxswain in harbor. A carriage was put on board the Franklin, by the commodore, at New York, for his own use, and a coachman. Mr. Stewart used it at Callao and Lima. There were two horses taken down from Valparaiso to Quilca; when they were landed, they had nothing but bare halters on them.

I was a captain of a gun, on board the Franklin; that gun was in the cabin, and therefore not regularly exercised; it was, however, kept in good order, and the men belonging to it were exercised at another gun. The guns I believe were always kept in a state for action.

The horses taken on board at Valparaiso were taken on board at a public dock-yard, by a crane at the place. They were good horses for that country—not what could be called fine horses.

The court adjourned till ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

WEDNESDAY, October 31.

The court met pursuant to the adjournment of yesterday. Present: all the members of the court (excepting Captain Henly), the judge advocate and Captain Stewart. A communication was received from Captain Henley, stating a continuance of his indisposition would prevent his attendance.

Eliphalet Smith, a witness produced on the part of the accused, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says:

Question. Were you in the Pacific at the time of the arrival of Captain Stewart there in the Franklin? How long had you been there, and in what vessel did you go out?

Answer. I arrived in the Pacific in the brig Macedonia, of Boston, about the middle of the year 1818, and continued there until after the return of the Franklin.

Ques. Did you go to Valparaiso on hearing of the arrival of Captain Stewart there; and for what purpose did you go?

Ans. I went up to Valparaiso from Molliendo in the Constellation frigate, with documents to aid Commodore Stewart to reclaim property that had been taken from me by Lord Cochrane.

Ques. Did Captain Stewart take any measures for your aid in consequence of your application to him, and what did he do?

Ans. He wrote to the minister of state of the government of Chili, and received an answer which was transmitted by him to the Government of the United States.

Ques. Did you at any time go as a passenger in the Franklin; for what purpose, and how long did you remain in her?

Ans. I went as a passenger in the Franklin, from Quilca to Callao, for the purpose of inducing Commodore Stewart to interpose with the government in consequence of a seizure of the brig Macedonian, and her cargo, by the government of Lima. I returned back to Quilca in the Franklin, where I should have remained, had not Commodore Stewart recommended to me to go to Valparaiso, as he had heard there was an officer coming out with dispatches from the Government of the United States, which might, perhaps, authorize him to act in the reclamation of the property taken by Lord Cochrane. I returned to Quilca in the ship, where I left her. I was not on board her as a passenger afterwards.

Ques. Did you bring a letter or dispatch from General Ramirez to Captain Stewart, and did you take back Captain Stewart's reply; in what vessel did you take the reply, and did you do so at the request of Captain Stewart?

Ans. When I first went to Valparaiso in the Constellation, I took a letter from General Ramirez, who was at that time commander of the southern provinces of Peru, under the royal government. I delivered the letter to the commodore. Some time after he mentioned that he was about returning an answer to General Ramirez, and asked me if I would take it down, which I did, in the Dolphin.

Ques. Was it a convenience to Captain Stewart, and saving of expense to the United States, that you should take Captain Stewart's dispatch to General Ramirez, rather than it should be sent by an officer of the Franklin?

Ans. It was so far a convenience that I could translate the letter to General Ramirez, and there was no one at Arequipa who could. It was so far a saving to the Government of the United States, as the Dolphin would have been compelled to remain a number of days on the coast, for the captain to have procured a passport for the officer who might carry the dispatch. The expense of the officer in going up and returning, which would have been very considerable, was likewise saved. I was going there upon business of my own, and received no compensation for the service.

Ques. Did you purchase the cargo of the Canton or any part thereof; of whom, where, and when, and on what terms?

Ans. I purchased the greater part of the original cargo of the Canton, in Valparaiso, of Captain John O'Sullivan, on the following terms: I was to give him a certain percentage on his original invoices, provided he delivered the cargo at Arica or Quilca. In my agreement with him, it was likewise understood that I should be at liberty to fill up the ship, if there should be any room, with any other goods of my own freight, free. I was to put the proceeds of this cargo on board the Franklin, within two months after the delivery of the cargo.

Ques. Was the cargo thus purchased delivered to you at Arica and Quilca, and was it landed with the permission and under the authority of the collectors of the custom houses at the places of landing, and what did the cargo consist of?

Ans The cargo consisted of English, German, and French dry goods; some wine. It was landed under a special license from the Vice-King of Peru, and delivered into the custom houses of Arica and Arequipa.

Ques. What were the proceeds of the sales of the cargo, in what did it consist, and was it taken on board the Franklin with the knowledge and consent of the collectors of the customs?

Ans. The proceeds were, I think, about $300,000, which consisted of specie and bullion; they were taken on board the Franklin, with the permission of the Vice-King, with the knowledge and consent of the collector of the customs at Arequipa.

Ques. Were the said proceeds brought from the interior of the country? How far? Were they put on board the Franklin by night or by day? If the former, why was it done so? Was it for the purpose of concealment from the custom house officers, or was it with the knowledge and consent of the collector of the customs?

Ans. The proceeds went from Arequipa, which is 30 leagues from the coast. It arrived on the coast sometimes by day, sometimes at night—most generally the latter, and on its arrival was immediately taken on board the Franklin. At the time that money was shipped, it was exposed, if it remained on the coast, to patriot crusiers; and, as Commodore Stewart told me he would not protect the property on shore, I was anxious to get it on board. I generally advised when it would arrive; no concealment was designed. There was always a custom house officer placed by the government at Quilca, for the purpose of preventing smuggling, who came down with the money and delivered it to me.

Ques. Had Captain Stewart an interest or concern directly or indirectly in the Canton or her cargo, to your knowledge; or was he at any time during his command in the Pacific, interested; or had he any concern or profit in any purchase, speculation in merchandise, vessels, or otherwise, with you or with any other person to your knowledge, directly or indirectly?

Ans. He had none.

Ques. Did the Canton land any arms or munitions of war at Quilca or Arica? Had she any on board when she sailed from Valparaiso, for those ports?

Ans. I do not know; she landed none to my knowledge.

Ques. Do you know anything of two horses taken on board the Franklin, at Valparaiso, and landed at Quilca? Were they taken with the knowledge of the governor or other officer at Valparaiso? To whom were they delivered at Quilca? What equipments had they?

Ans. I bought the horses at Valparaiso; one for Commodore Stewart, one for myself. I believe Mr. Hogan obtained permission from the Governor of Valparaiso to ship them. At any rate, they were shipped off at the public arsenal. They had no equipments whatever. They were carried down to Quilca in the Franklin. I presented one of them, in the name of Commodore Stewart, to a Spanish merchant, by the name of Cotera. It was designed by the commodore, as a return for some silver baskets which Mr. Cotera had presented to Mrs. Stewart. The other, which belonged to myself, I took to Arequipa, and gave it to a friend of mine. I believe they never got north of Cusco.

Ques. Did you offer the accused an interest in a commercial speculation, which promised a considerable profit to him; and did he refuse it?

Ans. I made an offer to Commodore Stewart, of an interest in a number of speculations, more particularly in a cargo of wool, which I purchased some time before I left the country. I mentioned to him, that as the wool was going immediately from the coast, it could not in the slightest degree implicate him. His reply was, that although he considered himself as having a right to employ his money in a speculation of that kind, yet, morally speaking, he could not feel himself justified.

Ques. Did you go in the United States schooner Dolphin to any, and which of the ports of the Intermedios; and by whose permission did you go? Did you take any and what goods or samples of goods with you? Was it to sell them? Did you actually sell or offer for sale any of said goods? Were the said goods or samples taken on board the Dolphin by the permission or with the knowledge of the said Charles Stewart?

Ans. I went in the Dolphin, as I have before mentioned, at the request of Commodore Stewart; first to Arica, and thence to Molliendo. I took, with my baggage, two trunks, containing samples of goods which I had previously purchased at Valparaiso. I took no goods for sale; neither did I offer any for sale while on board the Dolphin. I was landed from the Dolphin at Molliendo, and took with me, to Arequipa, all my baggage, with these two trunks of samples. They went on board the Dolphin, as my baggage, without the knowledge or permission of either Commodore Stewart or Captain Connor.

Ques. Where money or bullion was put on board ships-of-war, in the Pacific, for deposit or transportation, was a receipt or bill of lading given therefor, signed by the commander; and did said receipts and bills of lading pass for so much cash for the purchase of goods?

Ans. Yes.

Ques. Did you know a man named Madrid? Was he on board the Franklin? When, where, and how did he come on board? Where did he leave her?

Ans. He came on board at Callao. I know it from Mrs. Stewart's sending for me to come into the cabin as the ship was getting under way, and holding a note in her hand which she observed she had received from a female friend in Lima, recommending this person, Madrid, to her protection. She asked my opinion about his remaining on board, and her protecting him. I told her she ought to do no such thing without the consent of the commodore. She observed the commodere would probably turn him on shore and that he would be shot. I understood from her he was a deserter. After some conversation between us, I observed I would go on deck, and if the boat in which he had come was alongside, he must get into her and leave the ship, or I would inform the commodore of his being there. When I got on deck I found that the boat had shoved off, and was from half to three-quarters of a mile from the ship. I therefore thought no more of him until the ship arrived at Quilca, where he went on shore. I was landed at Molliendo; went up to Arequipa; was absent seven or eight days. When I returned to Quilca, he was still on board the ship. Mrs. Stewart, after my return from Arequipa, sent for me into the cabin and observed to me, I wish you would get this man out of the ship. I asked what man? She replied, what, have you forgot all about him, the man who came on board at Callao. I asked if the Franklin had not boats enough to get him on shore? She said yes, but she did not like to ask the lieutenants to put him ashore, and asked me whether I could not procure a boat from some other vessel, which I did. I borrowed a boat, went on board the Franklin, went into the cabin and told Mrs. Stewart there was a boat alongside the ship that would take the man ashore. Whether I went ashore in the boat I cannot recollect; he, however, went off in it. I saw him about ten or twelve days after at Arequipa. I fell in with him on the grand square. He appeared in the same dress he had on board the ship, which was a very mean one. I know nothing more of him than what I have stated.

Ques. Did you get a saw from the Franklin? When and where did you get it? Was it returned; when and where?

Ans. I got a saw at Quilca, under the promise of returning it at Valparaiso, where I thought I should be able to purchase another. When I arrived a Valparaiso, I was not able to procure one, and got a friend to write up to St. Jago, about thirty leagues distant, to ascertain if I could purchase one there. Not being able to obtain one, I took the earliest opportunity, on my arrival in the United States, to have a new saw purchased and deposited in the Navy yard, at New York, for which I have a receipt.

Ques. Do you know of any instances where Commodore Stewart refused to detain the ship for the purpose of receiving moneys or bullion on its way from the mines of Arequipa to the Franklin? if yea, state the times and circumstances.

Ans. I do. I was authorized by a number of persons at Arequipa, Americans and Englishmen, to make the commodore this proposition, when he was about to sail from Quilca, that if he would remain from fourteen to twenty days, they would be ready to put on board the Franklin about $500,000; and if the money did not come down in that time, I obligated myself to be responsible to the commodore for the freight. His reply was, public service is before private interest, and he refused to wait. I know likewise of an application being made to him by an English gentlemen, by the name of Turner, who asked his permission to go down to Lima from Arica, as a passenger in the ship, and to take with him about $70,000. The commodore told him he would take the money, but could not give him a passage. He observed, that if he could not go himself he should not ship the money. He did not go in the ship; whether he shipped the money I do not know.

Examined by the judge advocate:

Question. Was any part of the original cargo of the Canton landed at Valparaiso? Of what did it consist?

Answer. I believe some was landed, but I do not know of what it consisted.

Ques. Do you know whether any arms were carried from Valparaiso in the Pearl or any other ship that sailed about the same time with the Franklin, and where the same were landed?

Ans. I do not.

Ques. Do you know whether any arms were landed from the Pearl at Quilca or Arica, or transhipped from her on board the Canton at either of those places?

Ans. I do not.

Ques. Were you ever requested by Commodore Stewart to board vessels or perform other duties properly belonging to officers, other than the carrying the dispatch from him to General Ramirez, of which you have spoken?

Ans. I was not.

Ques. Do you know of any instances in which Commodore Stewart refused to give convoy or protection to American vessels, or to citizens of the United States engaged in a fair and lawful trade?

Ans. I do not.

Ques. (By the accused.) Did Commodore Stewart make you pay the expenses of the officer who carried the dispatch to the supreme director from Valparaiso to Santiago?

Ans. He did.

On the part of the accused, sundry documents were then read to the court, annexed to the record, and marked (—).

The court then adjourned till to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

THURSDAY, September 1.

The court met pursuant to the adjournment. Present: all the members of the court (excepting Captains Henley and Wadsworth, both of whom were detained from the court by indisposition), and the judge advocate. Mr. Hopkinson, as counsel for Captain Stewart, apologized for the absence of the accused, stating that he was very much indisposed, and requesting that the residue of the documents might nevertheless now be read. The court acceded to this proposition, and the reading of the documents was continued, and the same were annexed to the record and marked (—).

After concluding the reading of the documents, the court, being informed that the defence would be prepared by ten o'clock to-morrow morning, adjourned till that time.

FRIDAY, September 2.

The court met pursuant to the adjournment of yesterday. Present: all the members of the court, the judge advocate, and Captain Stewart.

The defence was then read to the court by Mr. Taylor, one of the counsel for the accused, annexed to the record, and marked (—).

The court having been cleared, proceeded to deliberate upon the charges and specifications, evidence and defence, and having maturely considered the same, and formed its opinion upon each and every of the matters of accusation, in order that the judge advocate might reduce the same to form, the court adjourned till ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

SATURDAY, September 3.

The court met pursuant to the adjournment of yesterday. The judge advocate read and submitted to the court the record of the opinion, finding, and sentence of the court upon the several charges and specifications against the accused, which, being approved and signed by the court, was directed to be transmitted to the Department, with the minutes of the proceedings of the court, whereupon the court adjourned till ten o'clock on Monday morning.

JAMES BARRON, President.

RICHARD S. COXE, Judge Advocate.

At a general court-martial, convened at the city of Washington on the eighteenth day of August, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-five, by virtue of a precept from the honorable the Secretary of the Navy, bearing date the seventeenth day of August instant. Present: Captain James Barron, president; Captains William M. Crane, Robert T. Spence, John D. Henley, Jesse P. Elliot, Stephen Cassin, James Renshaw, Thomes Brown, Charles C. P. Thomspon, Alexander S. Wadsworth, George W. Rodgers, and George C. Read, members; and Richard S. Coxe, judge advocate.

This court having fully and maturely investigated the matters submitted to it in the case of Captain Charles Stewart, and considered the charges and specifications, the evidence and the defence of the accused proceeded, this third day of September, in the year aforesaid, to which time the court had been adjourned from day to day, to determine upon the same; and after such deliberation, it is of opinion that the first and second specifications, and the first charge, are not proved, as it alleges that the said Captain Stewart did prevent the captain of the Peruvian brig Belgrano from taking and sending in, for adjudication, the American ship the Canton, then engaged in a lawful trade; that in so doing, the said Charles Stewart was acting in strict obedience to his duty, as indicated both in his instructions and by the laws of nations; and that his conduct on this occasion was highly meritorious and praiseworthy. The court is also of opinion that the residue of the specifications is not proved. The court is also of opinion that the fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, and ninth specifications are not proved. It is of opinion that the tenth specification is so far proved as it alleges the purchase of the articles therein mentioned to have been made from the Canton, but the court is decidedly of opinion that there was no impropriety in the act; that it was proper and correct; and that the residue of the specification is not proved. In relation to the eleventh specification, the court is of opinion that it is so far proved as it relates to the employment of the carpenters and other persons attached to the Franklin in the manner stated; but it is also of opinion that such employment was, in all cases to which the proof reaches, proper, consonant to the practice of the service, and in every view perfectly unobjectionable, and that the residue of the specification is not proved. The twelfth specification is not proved. The thirteenth is so far proved as that it is shown by the testimony that the said Eliphalet Smith was, on one occasion, employed, as a matter of convenience to Captain Stewart, and in aid of the public interests, to carry a dispatch, which had no other than public objects, and that this employment of Captain Smith was designed for the public good, and has not the remotest reference to, or effect upon, any other interests, and that the residue of the specification is not proved. The court is also of opinion that the fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth specifications are not proved. The seventeenth is so far proved as it relates to the building of three small schooners, with the aid of the carpenters of the Franklin, but not out of government property; that this was in the judicious and faithful exercise of an unquestionable right; and that the individuals thus employed, were thus employed by their own free choice, for their own benefit, and compensated for their labor. It is also of opinion that the eighteenth specification is proved; but the act therein alleged is in conformity with the practice of the service, in fulfillment of one of the duties which public vessels owe to the commercial interests of the nation, and essentially useful and necessary. In the circumstances accompanying this particular act, it was wholly unobjectionable, and not attended with any loss or injury to the public. The nineteenth specification is also proved in point of fact; but this likewise is deemed by the court one of those acts in which the convenience and comfort of those engaged in commerce may be essentially promoted without the slightest public injury, and that in this instance it was wholly unobjectionable. As regards the twentieth, twenty-first, twenty-second, and twenty-third specifications, it is the opinion of the court that the said Weaver was absent from the Franklin, with a permission granted on proper and sufficient grounds, till the arrival of the Franklin at Callao, on or about the 1st of August, 1822; that subsequent to this period he was absent without leave; that the muster-rolls transmitted to the Department did not precisely accord with those on board the Franklin, but the variances between them were wholly immaterial, such as could not have been designed, because not calculated to produce the smallest inconvenience or injury, and which the court believes were purely accidental; nor can the court perceive any grounds upon which to attribute this mistake, innocent and unimportant as it was, to any inadvertance of the accused. It is also of opinion that the muster roll approved in November, 1824, was approved in a regular manner, and at a proper time; that the entry contained in it corresponded with the fact and with the information previously communicated to the Department. The court is likewise of opinion that the twenty-fourth, twenty-fifth, twenty-sixth, twenty-seventh, twenty-eighth, and twenty-ninth, the only remaining specifications of the first charge, are not nor is either of them proved, and it does adjudge and declare that the said Charles Stewart is NOT GUILTY of the first charge.

The court is likewise of opinion that the first, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh specifications of the second charge are not proved, and that the second specification is only so far proved as is set forth, in the opinion of the court, upon the third specification of the first charge, and therefore does pronounce and adjudge that the said Charles Stewart is NOT GUILTY of the second charge.

The facts set forth in the first specification of the third charge have already been passed upon by the court, in its opinion upon the twentieth specification of the first charge, and reference is therefore made to the finding of the court thereupon. The second and third specifications are not proved. The court does, therefore, adjudge and declare that the said Charles Stewart is NOT GUILTY of the third charge.

In relation to the specification of the fourth charge, it is the opinion of the court that the same is not proved, and therefore the said Charles Stewart is adjudged and declared NOT GUILTY of the said fourth charge.

In terminating a trial which has awakened so general and so deep an interest, and in submitting the result to the Executive, the court trusts that the peculiar character of the accusations which have been investigated will furnish an excuse for appending to the record a few remarks.

When rumors and reports are widely and industriously disseminated, calculated to impair the high standing and usefulness of an officer in whom great trust and confidence have been reposed, it becomes the duty of the Executive to afford to such officer, by the convention of a proper tribunal, an ample opportunity of vindicating himself before the world. To afford this opportunity, and to preserve from the insidious effects of unmerited reproach a reputation dear to the nation, won by the honorable services of seven and twenty years, to extinguish prejudices and suspicions created by misrepresentations or misconceptions of public agents and private individuals, and finally to do all which the laws, which justice and which honor exact, this court has been convened.

Charges and specifications have been preferred, embracing all the accusations made against Captain Stewart; an investigation has been made into their truth. It has been conducted by the judge advocate in the most exemplary manner, yet with a minuteness and fullness calculated to leave no doubt or cloud of suspicion resting upon the character of the accused. This investigation has produced what was desired by Captain Stewart, and intended by the Executive, a development of all the important transactions attending the late cruise of the Franklin in the Pacific, and the principles and motives which guided the conduct of her commander. These charges and specifications the court has adjudged not to be proved—to be, in some respects, utterly groundless, and in others to have originated in a misconception or misrepresentation of the most innocent and meritorious acts, and Captain Stewart has been most fully and most honorably acquitted of every, even the slightest impropriety.

The court, however, conceives that the peculiar character of the accusation is such that it would not render that full measure of justice which is required at its hands, by a simple judgment of acquittal. It is therefore impelled by a sense of duty to go farther and to make unhesitatingly this declaration to the world, that so far from having violated the high duties of neutrality and respect for the laws of nations; so far from having sacrificed the honor of the American flag or tarnished his own fair fame by acting upon any motives of a mercenary or sordid kind; so far from having neglected his duty or betrayed the trust reposed in him, by refusing proper protection to American citizens and property or rendering such protection subservient to individual interests, no one circumstance has been developed throughout the whole course of this minute investigation into the various occurrences of a three years' cruise, calculated to impair the confidence which the members of this court, the navy, and the nation have long reposed in the honor, the talents, and the patriotism of this distinguished officer, or to weaken in any manner the opinion which all who knew him entertained of his humanity and disinterestedness. These virtues only glow with brighter lustre from this ordeal of trial, like the stars he triumphantly displayed when valor and skill achieved a new victory to adorn the annals of our naval glory.

JAMES BARRON, President.
W. M. CRANE.
ROB. TRAIL SPENCE.
J. D. HENLY.
J. D. ELLIOTT.
S. CASSIN.
JAMES RENSHAW.
THOS. BROWN.
CHAS. C. B. THOMPSON.
ALEX. S. WADSWORTH.
GEO. W. RODGERS.
GEO. C. READ.

RICHARD S. COXE, Judge Advocate.

The proceedings and sentence of the court are approved; with the exception of the exclusion of Samuel Brown as an incompetent witness; the grounds of objection to his testimony, apparent on the face of the record, being considered as going to his credibility, and not to his competency.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

WASHINGTON, September 5, 1825.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, Arica, June 22, 1822.

SIR: You will assume the command and direction of the dispatch boat, and have her rigged, and prepared for service.

When that is accomplished, you will apply to Lieutenant Wm. M. Hunter for the men necessary for her navigation. When you have prepared her for service you will report to me, and your instructions will be furnished accordingly.

I remain, very respectfully, your most obedient servant, CHAS. STEWART.

Lieutenant HENRY HENRY, U. S. Ship Franklin.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, Callao, April 23, 1824.

SIR: You will deliver over to Mr. Nixon the dispatch boat Peruvian, and repair on board the Franklin and resume your station.

Respectfully, your obedient servant, CHAS. STEWART.

Lieutenant H. HENRY. Present.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, off Quilca, July 24, 1822.

SIR: You will proceed, with all possible dispatch, to Guyaquil, where you will inform yourself with respect to the loss of an American whale ship, said to have taken place on that coast; the property had been taken possession of by the government, and the crew placed under restraint. This information was received by Captain Ridgely, when last at Lima, from a seaman who said he had belonged to the ship, and had made his escape. Should you find this to prove a fact, you will use your best endeavors, by strong representations to the authorities, to obtain their release, and a restitution of the property.

You will also represent to the government at that place, by a suitable note, the case of the American schooner Amanda, which vessel was taken possession of by the authorities of Guayaquil, for the purpose of transporting their troops, for which no compensation whatever has been made to the owners of that vessel. You will pay all the respect due to the authorities at the places you may visit, and by no means do anything calculated to compromit our neutral attitude. You will obtain from the best sources, and your own observation, all the political and commercial information that circumstances will permit, and make note of such as may be useful to our government or national interests. You will also ascertain, as far as practicable, the real state of the government and country, and the disposition of both towards the United States.

You will make no unnecessary delay in accomplishing these objects and returning off Lima, where you will find this ship or further orders for your guidance.

Wishing you a pleasant voyage, I remain, sir, your most obedient servant,

CHAS. STEWART.

P. S.—You will please to ascertain at Guayaquil, if possible, the practicability of an officer passing over to Panama with dispatches to Washington; and whether passports can be obtained from the authorities of that place.

C. S.

Lieutenant HENRY HENRY, commanding the Dispatch Boat.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, Valparaiso, March 23, 1823.

DEAR SIR: Enclosed you will receive some letters which have come to hand since you left us. On your arrival here you will take on board all the provisions, &c., which you may want, and my letters, &c., for this ship or the Dolphin, and come without delay to Quilca, where you will find us, or such further directions as may be necessary for your guidance.

I remain, respectfully yours,

CHAS. STEWART.

Lieutenant HENRY HENRY, commanding the Peruvian, Valparaiso.

LIMA, March 25, 1823.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose the copy of a note, received last evening from the secretary of state, soliciting your stay in port until after the departure of a secret expedition, which I am assured will take place in the course of the present week. As I have not had the pleasure of seeing you, sir, since your arrival, I am a stranger to your arrangements, and know not that it may interfere with them; but whether so or not, allow me to add that public usage has pointed this out as the mode of interfering with the sailing of neutral ships-of-war during any particular emergency, and that the courtesy of nations has ever given to it a controlling operation.

I am, sir, with great respect, your most obedient and very humble servant,

J. B. PREVOST.

Lieut. HENRY, of the Navy of the United States, commanding the Tender Peruvian, Callao.

LIMA, Marse 24, del 1823.

El ministro de estado y relacions estenines del Peru, tiene la honra de communicar al agente diplomatica de los E. U., Mr. J. B. Provost, que est Presidente de esta republica Colombia, que la getita Peruvian, conea del navio Franklin no zerpase del Callao antes de la saleda de la expedicion y debe verificaese pronto; y en casa de conceptuaese sa muy ergonte de la vela, antes del termina designado se verifique bayo la palabro de honor del commandante de dicha buque de noticer en punto alguno de los ocupados por los enemigos.

Con este motivo, el ministro de estada, que subsende mattua et l'agente diplomatica de los E. U., los sentimentos de la mas alta consideracion, y aprecia,

Firmado, FRANCISCO VALINESA.

A true copy.

J. B. PROVOST.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of yesterday's date, covering a copy of one from the minister of state of the republic of Peru, requesting that the dispatch boat Peruvian would wait the sailing of an expedition which you assure me will put to sea this week; and, if this request could not be acceded to, that the officer commanding her would pledge his word of honor not to touch at any port in possession of the enemies of the republic. I shall abstain from making any remarks on the above condition, which is as offensive as it is unprecedented.

Although it is important the vessel in question should join the Franklin as soon as possible, for which purpose she was to have sailed to-day, yet, as I feel satisfied I shall only act in accordance with the disposition of Commodore Stewart, by acceding to all reasonable requests of the Peruvian government, the sailing of the Peruvian will be deferred until Tuesday next.

Very respectfully your obedient servant,

(Signed) D. CONNER.

J. B. PREVOST, Esq., Special Agent of the United States, Lima.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, off Quilca, April 22, 1823.

SIR: In consequence of the ship Talbot having certainly sailed from Norfolk in November last, by which vessel I have long been expecting dispatches, and as she is in all probability near or at Valparaiso, you will proceed to that place with all dispatch, and receive the dispatches and letters for this ship and the schooner Dolphin, and meet me at Lima without delay.

I remain, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

CHAS. STEWART.

Lieut. HENRY HENRY, commanding the Dispatch Schooner Peruvian.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, Valparaiso, January 12, 1823.

SIR: You will proceed with the dispatch boat under your command, (after receiving on board Lieutenant Mayo,) with all possible expedition, to Lima, where Lieutenant Commandant Conner will give you, for Lieutenant Mayo, any dispatches or letters he may have for the government. You will lose no time at that place by waiting, unless under such circumstances, from important events likely to occur, as may be deemed important for the information of the government. Afterwards proceed without delay to Panama, and land Mr. Mayo. You will then return to Lima, and in case you hear nothing from me after remaining there ten days, you will return to this place.

Wishing you a pleasant passage, I remain your obedient servant,

CHAS. STEWART.

Lieutenant HENRY HENRY, Dispatch Boat Peruvian.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, Callao Bay, August 4, 1823.

SIR: You will proceed without delay to Valparaiso, for the purpose of having the provisions for this ship in readiness by the first of October next, when I expect to be there, and wish no detention of the ship for the want of provisions. You will be guided by your own discretion and view of the state of affairs generally whether you return to me or not; but write me your intentions, if any opportunity occurs, and I shall be enabled to make my calculations accordingly.

Wishing you a pleasant passage, I remain your most obedient servant,

CHAS. STEWART.

Lieut. HENRY HENRY, Schooner Peruvian.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, at sea, February 5, 1824.

SIR: Should you not find any dispatch from the Vice-King for me on your arrival at Quilca, you will repair immediately to Valparaiso. You will hold or have no intercourse with Quilca on any other subject whatever, neither will you land, or permit any of your people so to do, but send the Arab's boat in to receive any communication there may be. You will not take any letters or communications for any persons whatever at that place, and it would be desirable that you should not anchor.

Wishing you a speedy return to me, I remain your most obedient servant,

CHAS. STEWART.

Lieutenant HENRY HENRY, commanding the Dispatch Schooner Peruvian.

UNITED STATES SHIP FRANKLIN, Valparaiso, March, 15, 1824.

SIR: You will remain at this place, with the Peruvian under your command, until the arrival of Commodore Hull in the frigate United States, to whom you will deliver the accompaning letter, and place yourself under his orders, holding the Peruvian in readiness to depart at an hour's notice.

The enclosed directions from Lieutenant Commander Conner of the Dolphin, and Lieutenant Hammersly, commander of the hired armed brig Amanda, you will be pleased to deliver to them as they arrive from Chili.

Wishing you a speedy restoration to health, I remain your obedient servant,

CHAS. STEWART.

Lieut. HENRY HENRY, commanding Peruvian.

PHILADELPHIA, November 4, 1824.

I hereby certify that the dispatch vessel called the Peruvian, and belonging to me, was wholly and exclusively employed in the public service, and for the use of the naval forces in the Pacific, the whole period Lieutenant Henry Henry commanded that vessel.

C. S.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, November 15, 1824.

SIR: Your letter of the 11th instant has been received.

When I had a conversation with you, I made no objection to your claim, because I was not acquainted with the facts of the case, nor am I yet perfectly informed upon the subject; but I do not see any reason for an additional allowance to you while commanding a very small private vessel.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Lieut. HENRY HENRY, U. S. Navy, Philadelphia.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, November 18, 1824.

SIR: The papers enclosed in your letter of the 16th instant have changed the views taken by the Department of your claim for pay, and I have accordingly directed your account to be allowed.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

The papers transmitted by you are herewith returned.

Lieut. HENRY HENRY, U. S. Navy, Philadelphia.

SATURDAY, June 5, 1824.

SIR: The officers who had the honor to address you on the 2d inst., (with the exception of Lieutenant Hunter, Mr. Fitzgerald, and Mr. Andrews,) acknowledge the receipt of your answer, and beg leave to remark:

That they who have served under your command nearly three years, and many of them for a much longer time, without any public mark of your censure or disapprobation, feel hurt that, at this late period, they should have entered most willingly and unhesitatingly into the performance of an act which is considered by you as officious interference, and evidence of combination.

Their solicitation was simply the effusion of their sympathy for a fellow officer, of whose sufferings they, in a measure, might be considered the cause, inasmuch as the object of his close confinement was stated to be the maintenance of the peace of this ship, and the terms of his release that he would pledge himself not to provoke, molest, or impede Lieutenant Hammersley, or any other officer of the ship, until his case should be finally decided. And understanding that it was your wish to render his situation as little irksome as possible, and anxious that the enforcement of the rigid restrictions imposed on Lieut. Sands should not arise from a misapprehension of the relations between him and the officers of the ship generally, they deemed that the expression of their sentiments on this subject would not only not be looked upon as impertinent, but would be even considered as the fulfillment of an obligation due to their commander and their messmate.

Conscious then, of the correctness and purity of their motive, they most respectfully beg leave to disavow the intention of officious interference, and request to be acquitted of the accusation of conduct constituting "combination," which, if merited, would be unbecoming in them as individuals, disgraceful to them as officers, and at variance with the high respect due to their commander.

Commander CHARLES STEWART, commanding United States Ship Franklin.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, at Sea, June 6, 1824.

SIR: Last evening I received an anonymous letter addressed to me, purporting to come from all the officers who addressed a note to me on the 2d inst., with the exception of Lieutenant Hunter, Mr. Fitzgerald and the Rev. Mr. Andrews.

You will please to transmit to me a categorical avowal or disavowal of this letter having received your authority and consent.

I remain, &c.,
(Signed) CHAS. STEWART.

Copies of the above were sent to Lieutenants E. Ridgeway, H. W. Ogden, W. J. McCluney; Acting Lieutenants J. B. Hall, L. M. Goldsborough; Surgeon T. B. Salter; Lieutenant Commanding John Harris; Lieutenant Commanding Charles Grymes; Acting Purser J. Watson; Surgeons' Mates J. Corzick, R. Stevens; Sailing Master E. Peck.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, June 7, 1824.

SIR: In giving my consent to a note's being sent you on the 5th inst., explanatory of the letter which was written you on the 2d, I beg leave to say that it was only intended by me as a respectful explanation of what I was sorry to learn you were displeased with, wishing to do away with any bad impression on your mind; and so anxious am I to assure you that I had not the least idea of offering you offence by any part of my conduct, that I am willing to withdraw my name from both communications referred to.

I am well aware of the respect due from a junior to a senior officer, and if I have acted inconsistently I beg you will attribute my error to the warmth of my feelings in behalf of a friend rather than to any disrespectful motive.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. W. OGDEN.

Commodore CHARLES STEWART.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, at sea, June 7, 1824.

SIR: Your note of yesterday, agreeably to your wish, cancels your signature and consent to the letters of the 2d and 5th instant.

Your warm feelings professed in that note as a friend of Lieutenant Sands ought to be appreciated and honored, and perhaps few estimate more such feeling growing and advancing with life between two young officers than I do; they are inestimable in every point of view, and ought to be cherished. To you, then, who profess those sentiments for him, I may take the liberty of saying how much it is in your power to serve him, both by good advice and by good works. With a view, then, to contribute anything in my power to promote and cherish this sentiment between you, I can only say that if you find yourself at a loss, and will advise with me for his benefit, you will find me disposed to give it freely and to exert my authority liberally; and if thereby I can contribute, with yourself or any other of the officers, his friends, to bury in the Pacific the griefs and misfortunes of the Pacific, that you may return through the Atlantic to your country with the same unanimity with which you left it, it will afford me great satisfaction.

I remain, &c.,
(Signed) CHAS. STEWART.

Lieut. H. W. OGDEN, U. S. Ship Franklin.

UNITED STATES SHIP FRANKLIN, June 4, 1824.

SIR: It has given me great pain to observe, (in your answer to the ward room officers' request, that Mr. Sands might be released from his close confinement, and admitted to the usual privileges of officers under arrest, and to which my name was affixed by me, as one of the signers,) that you should deem it an officious interference, and a combination. Believe me when I assure you, sir, that I had not the most remote idea of interfering with your duties, or entering into any combination for that or any other purpose; but believing that you would embrace any measure, consistent with your duties, to release Mr. Sands from his disagreeable situation, I did suppose that this mediation, as it was simply meant, might have some effect. I was aware at the time that it might have the appearance of an officious interference, but was and acted under the impression that you would not view it in that light, and regret exceedingly that any act of mine should deserve so severe a censure from a commander whom I so sincerely respect and esteem.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EDWARD FITZGERALD.

UNITED STATES SHIP FRANKLIN, at Sea, June 4, 1824.

SIR: In reply to your note of this date, I can only observe, that there was no other light left me to view the joint note of the commissioned officers of this ship than two, viz: that of an officious interference with my duties to preserve the peace and quiet of the ship, or, that the officers considered my conduct as reprehensible, from an oppressive, cruel, and lawless confinement of Lieutenant Sands to his room, (without sentinel, and with egress and ingress as he thinks proper), and that, by a spontaneous and combined expression of their desires in his case, they presumed to drive me from my duties, and make any further violent acts he may be guilty of, recoil on me.

I feel sensible that yourself, as well as several other of the officers, have been decoyed into the act by some on board this ship, who have neither the comfort and convenience of Lieutenant Sands, the harmony of the ship, or the good of the service at heart. There could be no difficulty with me in penetrating its two-fold object, neither of which is honorable to an officer, or reputable to the service.

I am aware, also, with how little difficulty some designing men can get up a paper, which bears on its face and purport an appearance of humanity and goodness; and under this semblance how easy it is to decoy a brother officer out of his signature.

Your explanation is perfectly satisfactory, and I am fully persuaded that the motives which prompted you to combine with the other officers, emanated from a superabundance of the milk of human kindness. I can therefore only regret, that a necessity should exist at all for the state in which Lieutenant Sands is placed—but he has reduced himself to it, and it rests only with himself to be released from the contracted limits assigned him.

I remain, very respectfully,
(Signed) CHAS. STEWART.

EDWARD FITZGERALD, Esq., United States Ship Franklin.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, June 7, 1824.

SIR: In case you should think that I have intentionally been guilty of any disrespect or officious interference, I now declare to the contrary, and say that I regret that my conduct should have caused you any uneasiness, and am willing even to withdraw my signature from both papers.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant, T. B. SALTER.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, at sea, June 8, 1824.

Doctor T. B. Salter:

SIR: Your note of yesterday's date was duly received and fully cancels the authority and signature you gave to the letters of the 2d and 5th inst.

It affords me great pleasure and satisfaction to find you the first ready to restore to your ship her character for order and discipline, and who at all times, since you have been attached to her, have contributed so largely and so honorably to the reputation she and those belonging to her have acquired.

I remain, &c.,
(Signed) CHAS. STEWART.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, at sea, June 6, 1824.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of yours of this day's date, and in answer have to observe that the letter to which you refer was shown to me, and it having met with the approval of my messmates generally, and conceiving at the time it was intended to be perfectly respectful, I consented to its being sent. I beg leave, sir, further to add, that if anything either as to its form or contents is considered differently, I extremely regret it, and disavow any intention on my part of its being otherwise than an explanation of my motives for signing the letter addressed to you on the 2d instant, which I signed without any previous knowledge of its being in agitation until it was presented to me signed by those officers whose names precede mine.

I must regret, sir, that my conduct should meet with the disapprobation of a commander for whom I entertain so high a respect.

I remain, sir, your most obedient servant, CHAS. GRYMES.

U. S. Ship Franklin, June 6, 1824.

Sir: That my conduct at any time should meet your disapprobation would have been a source of the greatest uneasiness, and that I should be guilty of interfering in duties which did not belong to me, and which has (although innocently and without proper reflection) been done, I trust you will not impute to a wish, in any way, on my part to form a combination against you, an act which I consider in itself disgraceful, and the thought of it has been to me extremely mortifying. With feelings of regret for this act, and my general conduct will warrant me in believing you will do away with any unfavorable impressions towards me,

I have the honor to remain, yours, &c.,

WILLIAM M. HUNTER.

Commodore Charles Stewart. Present.

U. S. Ship Franklin, at sea, June 6, 1824.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of this date, and in answer have to observe that the letter to which you refer was shown to me, and it having met with the approbation of my messmates generally, and conceiving at the time it was intended to be perfectly respectful, I consented to its being sent. I beg leave further to add that if anything, either as to its form or contents, is considered differently, I extremely regret it, and disavow any intention on my part of its being otherwise than an explanation of my intentions for signing the letter addressed to you on the 2d inst., which I signed without any previous knowledge of its being in agitation until it was presented to me, signed by those officers whose names precede mine; and looking only to its ostensible object, I affixed my signature to it, without any intention that it should bear a different purport.

I am now aware that it was an officious interference, entered into without due reflection by me, and regret exceedingly that it should meet with the disapprobation of a commander for whom I have so high a respect and esteem.

I have the honor to be, &c.,

JNO. HARRIS.

Commodore Chas. Stewart.

U. S. Ship Franklin, at sea, June 6, 1824.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter bearing this day's date, and in reply beg leave to state that a note written you on yesterday, by the officers who addressed you on the 2d inst., (with the exception of Lieut. Hunter, Mr. Fitzgerald and Mr. Andrews,) in answer to yours of the 3d, was transmitted to you with my consent, but not intended to be considered as anonymous, inasmuch as it was in explanation of and referred to a former communication, to which my signature was affixed.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

H. W. OGDEN.

Commodore Charles Stewart, commanding the Ship Franklin.

U. S. Ship Franklin, at sea, June 6, 1824.

Sir: I had the honor to receive your letter of this date, and in reply have to observe that I did sanction a certain letter being sent to you, (bearing date 5th June, 1824;) at the same time I beg leave to say it was not my intention it should be considered as anonymous.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. J. McCLUNEY, Lieut. U. S. Navy.

Commodore C. Stewart, commanding U. S. Ship Franklin.

U. S. Ship Franklin, at sea, June 6, 1824.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of this date, and, in answer, have to say that I did, in company with others, give my consent to the letter to which you refer; but I must most respectfully beg leave to add, that it was not intended to be considered as anonymous or disrespectful, and I should be sorry if such a construction should be put upon it.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your most obedient servant,

J. B. HALL.

To Com. Chas. Stewart, commanding the U. S. Ship, Franklin.

U. S. Ship Franklin, at sea, June 6, 1824.

Sir: I have had the honor to receive your letter of this date, requiring my avowal or disavowal of a certain letter transmitted to you last evening, and in reply beg leave to say that the draft of a letter, explaining to you the motives which influenced the commissioned officers on board this ship to address you on the subject of Mr. Sands, was shown to me, and the sentiments therein contained meeting my views of the subject, I gave my consent to their being communicated to you in any manner that might be deemed respectful and proper.

The impropriety of sending to you an anonymous communication did not occur to me at the time; and as it would be equally improper in me to subscribe to a document (for the identity of which I have no voucher,) if I can be favored with a perusal of it, I will rectify my error by affixing my signature to it, provided the sentiments are the same which were intended to be conveyed in the letter which was shown to me.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, sir, your most obedient servant,

J. WATSON.

To Commodore CHARLES STEWART, &c., &., &c.

SIR: The letter to which you refer had my entire authority and consent.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOS. B. SALTER.

Com. CHAS. STEWART.

JUNE 6, 1824.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, at sea, June 6, 1824.

SIR: Your letter of this day's date has been duly received. In reply, I acknowledge my assent was given to the letter you allude to being transmitted to you, not being conscious at the time that it would be considered as anonymous or in any feature disrespectful.

Respectfully, I remain your obedient servant,

E. PECK.

Commodore CHARLES STEWART.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, at sea, June 6, 1824.

SIR: Your letter of to-day has this moment been handed to me. In reply, I have to acknowledge that the letter you received yesterday from the officers of the ward room was sent by my consent, but not under an impression that it would be considered as anonymous.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EBEN'R RIDGEWAY.

Commodore CHARLES STEWART.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, at sea, June 6, 1824.

SIR: In answer to your letter, bearing date this day, I have the honor to inform you that I was one of those who addressed you a letter last evening, in answer to yours of the 3d inst., with a view of assuring you that our motive for writing the letter of the 2d instant was not officious, and regretting that the imputation of a combination should have been alleged against us, and requesting of you, as we conceived, in a respectful and becoming manner, to acquit us of the accusation.

I, however, beg leave to state that I do disavow any intent, on my part, of the letter being anonymous, and regret exceedingly it should be considered so by you.

It was considered by me (in common with the rest) as being addressed in a polite and perfectly respectful way, and in one that was most foreign from my intention, either to incur your displeasure or disapprobation.

I remain, respectfully, your obedient servant,

LEWIS M. GOLDSBOROUGH, Acting Lieut. under your command.

Com. CHAS. STEWART, commanding U. S. Ship Franklin.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, June 6, 1824.

SIR: I was requested, last evening, to read a letter, to be addressed to you by the commissioned officers of the ship, proposing to explain the motives which induced them to address the one of the 2d instant; that they did not mean to be officious, or interfere in any manner with your duties as our commander, but were governed solely by humanity towards Mr. Sands. I thought it would remove your impression respecting our conduct, and gave to it my consent and authority.

I remain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES CORNICK.

Com. CHAS. STEWART, U. S. Ship Franklin.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, June 6.

SIR: I beg leave, very respectfully, to request that, if I have unconsciously infringed on the respect due to my commander, I may be acquitted of the offence, as it never was my intention to interfere officiously on subjects connected with his duties and irrelevant to mine. If, therefore, he thinks the papers which he has received from the commissioned officers of this ship, and which received my consent and authority, to be exceptionable, I beg he may withdraw my name from them.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your most obedient servant,

RICHARD STEVENS.

Com. CHARLES STEWART.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, at sea, June 6, 1824.

SIR: In compliance with your requisition, I have to state that a letter, such as is designated in your note of to-day, did receive my authority and consent yesterday.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your most obedient servant,

RICHARD STEVENS.

Com. CHARLES STEWART.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, at Sea, June 7, 1824.

To the ward room officers of the U. S. ship Franklin:

GENTLEMEN: For the honor and reputation of our navy, to which I have devoted the largest portion of my life, and in the welfare of which I have at all times felt and taken so deep an interest, I was in hopes that the letter I received on the evening of the 5th inst., in so anonymous a shape and so disrespectful a manner, was what I conceived it to be, and the lawless combination of so large a body of the officers of this ship had ceased to exist. I find, however, by the replies to my notes, addressed yesterday to the several officers, that I have been mistaken, and that this note of the 5th confirmed the continuity of the combination, with the exception of three of the gentlemen. That its appearance was anonymous, is evident from not a single name being attached to it, who could father it, and that the manner was disrespectful, is evident from its having been brought in by my own servant.

Now for its contents: You say that you feel hurt, after having most willingly and unhesitatingly entered into the performance of this act. If, then, gentlemen, you play with daggers and wound yourselves, why blame me for your sufferings, and call on me to undo or acquit you of an act which you alone have done, and which you alone could undo? I would ask you, gentlemen ("those at least who have served with me nearly three years and more") what you have discovered in my character or my conduct, that could lead you to suppose me possessed of supernatural power, or capable of doing a just act, and then to make it unjust by again undoing it? The full force of this insult is not unfelt; it ought not to be passed unnoticed; it merits more than silent contempt, but may hereafter be forgotten. Some of those who have served under me nearly three years and upwards assume much, nay, much too much, in implying, because no public mark of censure or disapprobation has yet appeared, that little or no cause has existed why it should appear; or, because I have often passed over slight neglects, not calculated to disturb the order and discipline of the hour, that I cannot see, or that they are immaculate; or, that through the necessities of the service, I have waived the immediate notice of high offences; or, that through my possessing some feelings of humanity (which I have been indirectly charged with wanting, by the note of the 2d inst.)

If some few of the signers of that note have not been similarly situated with Lieutenant Sands long ere this, it is because the dereliction of duty was uncombined with outrage, and did not produce a similar necessity for it; or, because a wish existed to promote the future welfare of such, by affording them a further opportunity of wiping off the past, by the good conduct of the future. Some of you I fully acquit heretofore of any offence; many of all but trifling and slight ones, unworthy and unnecessary to be noticed—but over the heads of a few indeed the law presses heavy. Do not then cut the stranded cord by which it is suspended. In my reply to your note of the 2d inst., I did not scrutinize or desire a disclosure of your motives. I believed them to be of the best intention on the part of the great majority; but I know that no such combination could exist without a head, and I believed you to be acting under a deception.

If we go into an examination of the sufferings of this brother officer, which have called forth such sudden sympathy and affection, I would ask, what are they? for you do not point them out in either of your notes. Will you allow me to answer them, and if I do not do it justly you are at full liberty to add.

In the first place, he is deprived of his seat at your table for violating the rules of society and decorum; he is restrained to limits for a second attack on his and your superior officer; he is under arrest for disobeying my orders, and exhibiting a contempt and disregard for the commission the government had honored him with; nay, he has since abandoned his limits, contrary to my orders, and gone on an expedition where he was not authorized to go; he has augmented the duties of his brother lieutenants, and at one period a national ship of the line has been found on the high seas, through casualties, necessities of the service, and the dereliction of this officer, with only one commissioned lieutenant on board of her. On the other hand, what is this "close confinement," the alleged cause of his sufferings? The limits of his room, with privilege of egress and ingress, as the calls of nature and necessity may require; no interference with his intercourse with others has been made, even though it has been carried to a pernicious excess. He is not prevented going forward and aft, on the upper gun deck, when and as often as he pleases, and his necessity for exercise may require; but it is not to be done at my responsibility, but at his own, and so long as he interferes with none in his egress or ingress, he has a right to attend to his own necessities; there exists no impediment; he is watched by no sentinel.

I would now ask you, gentlemen, if this statement is correct, where exists the cause for your assemblage, and your call on me to change my course, and the nature of my duties? It cannot exist in any human sufferings of his, which I have caused him: or do any appear to exist of which I can relieve him? If I examine the voluntary note of Doctor Salter I do not find it there; if I refer to his sick list, neither is it there; if I refer to your joint note, it is not even there; if I look at himself, there it does not appear. Perhaps we may find his sufferings in the escape he has made from the severity of his duties. He is bleached for the want of burning suns—incommoded by the lack of long and nightly watchings, drenching rains, and the chilling cold of southern climes—yet, I fear even here we shall not find the cause of those sufferings. The sympathy thus excited, then, cannot exist for him; here, then, is one of the deceptions under which you labor; the sympathy, then, is for yourselves (I mean some of you).

His confinement, you observe, (very justly,) is owing, in some measure, to yourselves; and although you have not yet discovered it, permit me to point it out—it may serve you on some similar, future occasion, and if it prove a good to your profession you will be enabled to thank me for it.

When his misfortunes commenced by his lawless attack on your senior and presiding officer, your duty to yourselves, to your visitors, and the obligations you owed to the service and your own honor, ought to have prompted you instantly to have stopped it, and to have protected your presiding officer from the intended insult, and saved your young and thoughtless brother officer from commitment. You were all under the protection of the same laws; your commandant was not unwilling to protect you all equally, under their authority; you could have told him if Lieutenant Hammersley had used reproachful and provoking words towards you—the laws and your commander will give you redress. Do not take the laws into your own hands; respect all by your submission to those supreme laws of the land, enacted under the Constitution for which you have received the national sword, and are sworn to support and defend.

Your letter of the 5th insinuates, as an excuse for the first, that you consider it as the fulfillment of an obligation due to me and your messmate. I am insensible to any obligations due me on that account. If Lieutenant Sands required it of you I am also ignorant, but I presume not, as he knew the moment his pledge was received, but divested of the jolly-boat load of reservations which it towed, that moment his limits would be increased to the fullest extent of my power.

Since writing the above, I have received several satisfactory notes, which fully impress me with the belief that the officers are becoming convinced of their error, and are returning to a due sense of what they owe to the dignity of their own honor and the public interest. I receive them with greater pleasure, as the strongest evidence of the rectitude of their hearts, and the very limited error of their heads; they cancel all that has passed on this subject, so far as they go, and will contribute to arrest the papers from becoming a part of the public archives. Then, let it be buried in oblivion; continue to preserve the confidence of your country, and the regard with which I am,

Your most obedient and humble servant,

(Signed) CHAS. STEWART.

P. S.—It would have been impossible for me to go into the above ramifications of this affair, and to express myself with that candor which belongs to my character, and the occasion seemed to require, without, perhaps, awakening some unpleasant feelings.

It also is due from that candor to assure you that it no less affects myself, and that you must attribute them to the unpleasant occasion which has called them forth, and not to any unjust or ungenerous intention on my part. I shall return an answer to each particular note I have received. C. S.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, June 7, 1824.

Commodore Stewart:

SIR: In consequence of having placed my name to a certain application sent to you, sir, by the officers of the ship, I beg leave to say that I did so without any intention of disrespect, or improper interference. If Commodore Stewart thinks my conduct in this case improper, I would be happy to have my name immediately withdrawn.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant, ADRIAN K. HOFFMAN.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, at sea, June 8, 1824.

SIR: Your perfectly correct conduct, combined with the medical skill and talent which you possess, and at all times so readily afforded, since you were appointed by me to act as surgeon's mate on board this ship, had excited in me no small degree of pleasure and satisfaction.

My surprise was no less excited on finding your name attached to the letter of the 2d inst., both because you had not been Lieutenant Sands' messmate, and stood in a different relation from that of the other officers. I therefore, on receiving the letter of the 5th, deemed it most proper to leave you wholly at liberty to act for yourself, unembarrassed by any impressions or opinions of mine, fully persuaded that you would do whatever appeared to yourself to be right.

Agreeably to your request, your name stands erased from the letter of the 2d instant.

I remain, &c.,

(Signed) CHAS. STEWART.

ADRIAN K. HOFFMAN, Acting Surgeon's Mate, U. S. Ship Franklin.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, at sea, June 7, 1824.

SIR: I trust my explanation to you last evening on the subject of those letters will be perfectly satisfactory, and trust you will now permit me to withdraw my signature from them both.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

JNO. HARRIS.

Commodore CHAS. STEWART, commanding U. S. Ship Franklin.

U. S. Ship Franklin, at sea, June 8, 1824.

Sir: Your notes of yesterday and the day before, have been duly received. They are perfectly satisfactory, and effectually cancel your name and authority to the letters of the 2d and 5th inst., agreeably to your wish.

I remain, &c.,

(Signed) CHAS. STEWART.

Lieut. Commandant John Harris, commanding the Marine Detachment, U. S. Ship Franklin.

U. S. Ship Franklin, at sea, June 7, 1824.

Sir: In addition to my letter of yesterday, I respectfully beg leave to inform you that, having considered the matter of our correspondence more maturely, I request to withdraw my signature from both communications; believing it to be the most effectual manner of convincing you of the innocence of my intention to act officiously, or engage in conduct bearing evidence of combination.

The motives that influenced me, I trust I have made sufficiently clear in my former letter; and if, while acting under the inducement, I should have committed myself so far as to incur your displeasure, I hope the request now made will entirely remove such feelings.

With sentiments of high respect, I remain your obedient servant,

L. M. GOLDSBOROUGH.

Commodore Chas. Stewart.

U. S. Ship Franklin, at sea, June 7, 1824.

Sir: I find, with deep concern, that I have offended in signing a paper addressed to you, soliciting the enlargement of Mr. Sands' confinement; and still more so, in consenting to a letter being sent to you the day after, explanatory of my motive for so doing. As I had no design of offending in either case, I feel myself in duty bound, most explicitly, to disavow the intention; and I am willing, and most anxious, if it will remove your impression, to withdraw my name from the original address, as also my consent to the letter of explanation. I admit it was an officious interference with your duty, and regret it accordingly.

Most respectfully, I remain your obedient servant, EBEN. RIDGEWAY.

Commodore Charles Stewart.

U. S. Ship Franklin, June 7, 1824.

Sir: When I gave my consent to a letter being sent you, explaining my motives for having signed that which was addressed you on the 2d instant, it was my wish that it should prove satisfactory to you, and not intended to give the least offence. I hope therefore, by withdrawing my name from both communications, to assure you that my object in signing them was not with the view of appearing officious, or interfering with the duties of my commander. On the contrary, it is my wish to treat him with every respect and consideration; and if I have acted differently from these sentiments, I trust he will ascribe it to a want of due reflection.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

W. J. McCLUNEY, Lieutenant United States Navy.

Commodore Charles Stewart, United States Ship Franklin.

U. S. Ship Franklin, June 7, 1824.

Sir: I am now fully aware that my signing the letter addressed to you, on the 2d instant, was an officious interference on my part, entered into without due reflection, for which I am, sir, sincerely sorry.

I beg leave, sir, that you will permit me to withdraw my name from both the notes you have received from us.

I am, sir, with high respect, your obedient servant, CHAS. GRYMES.

U. S. Ship Franklin, at sea, June 7, 1824.

Sir: Upon reflection, I am convinced of the impropriety I have committed, by taking a part in the communication addressed to you by the commissioned officers of this ship on the 2d inst. That it was an officious interference with your duties, I am now fully sensible, and I regret exceedingly that I should have been led to the commission of an offence without bestowing a proper reflection upon its impropriety, for which I should incur your displeasure.

In regard to the letter to which I, in common with the other officers, gave my consent, on the 5th inst., I must beg leave further to urge the intention of not offending in the smallest degree; but of expressing, as we all thought and intended, in the most respectful manner, our regret that we should have fallen under your displeasure, by the commission of any offence which bore the smallest mark of combination or of interference with your duties, accompanied by a respectful request to be acquitted of the imputation. I now, therefore, express my most sincere regret for any part I have taken in the affair, and to convince you that I had no improper intention, I will, with your approbation, withdraw my name from both the letters.

I have the honor to be, with the greatest respect, your most obedient servant,

I. B. HULL.

Commodore CHARLES STEWART, commanding U. S. Ship Franklin.

FRANKLIN, June 7, 1824.

SIR: Being aware of the construction which has been given by you to the letter addressed to you by the commissioned officers on board this ship, on the 2d inst., and feeling a conviction that such an act, on their part, may very properly be construed into an officious interference with your duties, I beg to assure you that my sanction to that letter was given in the full belief that we were only fulfilling the duties we owed to you as our commander, and to Mr. Sands as a friend and messmate, and that in such a light it would be received.

I beg leave to add my regret that any act of mine should receive such a construction as to draw upon me your displeasure, and as evidence of the innocence of my intention, am willing to withdraw my name from the letter in question.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, sir, your most obedient servant,

I. WATSON.

To Commodore CHARLES STEWART.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, June 7, 1824.

SIR: Reflecting upon your construction of the letter of the 5th instant, produced by your answer to that of the 2d, I have now to repeat, that it was not only my intention not to give offence, but to declare that I am sorry it should have had that effect in the slightest degree, and request that you will allow me to withdraw my name from the act itself.

I remain, very respectfully, your obedient servant, JAMES CORNICK.

Commodore CHARLES STEWART.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, at sea, June 7, 1824.

SIR: To evince to you that it was not in my person to become one of a party of combination against you, or knowingly subscribe, to be transmitted to you an anonymous letter, I have to request my name may be withdrawn from the communications to you from the ward room officers of this ship, bearing date the 2d and 5th instant.

Respectfully, I remain your obedient servant, E. PECK.

Commodore CHARLES STEWART.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, at sea, June 8, 1824.

SIR: Agreeably to your wish, your note of yesterday cancels your approval of and signature to the letters of the 2d and 5th instant.

I remain, &c.,
(Signed) CHARLES STEWART.

Copies were sent to Lieutenants E. Ridgeway, W. J. McCluney, and C. Grymes; Acting Lieutenants I. B. Hull and L. M. Goldsborough; Acting Purser J. Watson; Surgeons' Mates R. Stevens and J. Cornick; Sailing Master E. Peck.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, at sea, June 8, 1824.

Lieut. Wm. M. Hunter:

SIR: Your note of yesterday, which I have received, was quite unnecessary, as I had been apprised by the letter of the 5th that you had withdrawn yourself from further official interference with the subject.

I remain, &c.,
(Signed) C. STEWART.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, May 30, 1824.

SIR: I beg leave to inform you that Lieutenant Sands is in need of exercise, other than such as can be obtained in his private apartment.

Respectfully, I am, your obedient servant, THOS. B. SALTER, Surgeon.

Commodore CHARLES STEWART.

U. S. Ship Franklin, at sea, May 30, 1824.

Sir: In reply to your note of this date, stating that "Lieutenant Sands is in need of exercise other than can be obtained in his private apartment," I have to observe that Lieutenant Sands was informed, long since, of the conditions on which the greatest indulgence of liberty for exercise, both on board and on shore, would be extended towards him; and when the cause of his limited confinement was explained, he did not see fit then to embrace the generous offer, preferring to take the law into his own hands, to yielding to it and preserving the peace and quiet of this ship.

Since then conviction has followed the offence, but notwithstanding this circumstance, I again renew to him, through you, the offer of the privilege of either gun decks for exercise, on the same conditions.

I remain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. S.

To Doctor T. B. Salter, U. S. Ship Franklin.

U. S. Ship Franklin, May 31, 1824.

Sir: I have received a letter from Lieutenant Sands, in answer to the proposal you made to him. He refuses to bind himself by any other pledge than the one already given, under the belief that it would degrade his standing in society.

I did not intend that my note to you, of yesterday's date, should have relation to any course of conduct adopted by Lieutenant S. It was written without his solicitation or knowledge, and in execution of the part I have to perform towards all those who may come under my official superintendence, without reference to circumstances that are not for my consideration.

Mindful of the confidence I ought to deserve, and which, I trust, you repose in me, and my duty to the officer, the subject of this communication, I take the liberty to repeat the recommendation already made, with the hope that it may be in your power to comply with it, without infringement of the proper and just discipline of service.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant, THOS. B. SALTER, Surgeon.

Commodore Chas. Stewart.

U. S. Ship Franklin, Valparaiso, October 9, 1823.

Sir: I have been under the necessity of sending Lieutenant Sands to his room. The circumstances which led to so disagreeable an alternative are these: While attending to the opening of some packages in the ward room, which had been previously placed there, and as near midships as possible, and entirely out of the common walk, I was jostled by him several times. I conceived, from circumstances at the time, that it was intentionally done, for the purpose of provoking me to commit myself, and mildly requested him not to run against me, "leaving him full seven or eight feet for his walk," when he again repeated it, commanding me to stand out of his way, at the same time making use of most scurrilous and reproachful expressions towards me before several of the servants and others. Conceiving it to be my duty to put a stop to a course of conduct so disgraceful and injurious to the service, I made no retort, but called on Lieutenant Harris, of marines, and directed him to send Mr. Sands to his room.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

THOMAS S. HAMMERSLEY, Lieutenant.

Commodore Charles Stewart.

U. S. Ship Franklin, Valparaiso Bay, October 9, 1823.

Sir: I avail myself of the right given me in the 5th article, under the head of regulations and instructions relative to the United States naval service, most respectfully to say, that I conceive myself aggrieved and oppressed by suspension from duty, while an officer, as deeply implicated, and I believe it will appear, on proper investigation, more in fault than myself, is suffered to proceed as if no misconduct could be alleged against him, and permitted to enjoy every liberty of which I am deprived. I think my case a hard one; and when I assure the commodore that, in the affair in question, I have neither been the aggressor or challenger, believe that he will not persevere in a course of conduct so different from that high-toned sense of justice which has so long characterized his public proceedings.

With sentiments of great respect, I have the honor to be your obedient servant,

JOSHUA R. SANDS.

Franklin 74, Valparaiso Bay, October 9, 2 P. M.

Sir: I am under the necessity of again addressing you. Since one o'clock I have been confined to my state room, a resort, Mr. Arthur says, only justifiable in cases of a most criminal nature.

I know not what representations may have been made to you, sir; but would most respectfully suggest the propriety of endeavoring to get at facts through a medium that would have at least the appearance of a disposition to show me that justice which, on fair representation, I am willing to believe you will extend to me.

Very respectfully, I am your obedient servant, JOSHUA R. SANDS.

To Commodore Charles Stewart, Commander U. S. Forces in Pacific Ocean.

U. S. Ship Franklin, Valparaiso Bay, October 9, 1823.

Sir: In reply to your note of this date, I have only to observe that I have no intention whatever to aggrieve or oppress you, and if, in the course of the execution of the duties and obligations I owe to the service, as well as obedience I owe to the orders of the government, I should, at any time, do you injustice, I can have no objection whatever to your just claims to rights, and the protection of those laws which I may have violated towards you. No person whatever is implicated in the cause of your present suspension, or have I any complaints against any other.

Your conduct towards Lieut. Hammersly shall be a subject of inquiry so soon as circumstances will permit, and be assured nothing will give me greater pleasure than to see your conduct on that occasion divested of the violations of law and order with which it appears to be combined.

I remain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

(Signed) C. STEWART.

Lieut. J. R. Sands, Franklin 74.

U. S. Ship Franklin, Valparaiso Bay, October 9, 1823.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter bearing this day's date. I shall await with patience the decision of my country on my conduct, in any affair that has transpired since the Franklin left the United States.

With every mark of respect due from a subaltern to a superior officer,

I remain your obedient servant,

JOSHUA R. SANDS.

To Com. Chas. Stewart, Com. U. S. Ship Franklin.

U. S. Ship Franklin, Valparaiso Bay, October 10, 1823.

Sir: I last evening addressed a note informing you of my close confinement. Although the time elapsed has been but a few hours, and in the common-place affairs of service I could not ere this have expected an answer; still to an officer who has, as yet, been charged with no crime, and is kept, and would appear by your letters of yesterday it is intended should still remain, in a state of ignorance as to the fault intended to be alleged against him, the time has appeared long indeed.

McArthur's work on naval courts-martial is the authority to which, in most cases, men in the navy resort for such information as may have a bearing on their particular cases. I shall now quote what that able writer has said under the head of the arrest of officers—vol. II, chapter 1: "Should an officer be accused of a capital crime, or of an offence of such a nature as to affect his life; or of which the punishment may bear so heavy upon him as to tempt him to escape and elude justice, it is the custom to detain him in close confinement. But if the offence be of a minor consideration, he is allowed to be a prisoner at large; that is, to walk the deck without interfering in the duties on board, or he may be even allowed to go on shore without his sword, on his word of honor to wait the issue of a trial, or until his enlargement."

As yet, sir, I have not been informed even of the nature of the charge you intend to prefer against me. Your letter of the 9th says: "No person whatever is implicated in the cause of your present suspension, or have I any cause of complaint against any other." Independently of my collision with Lieut. Hammersly, I know of no fault with which to accuse myself; consequently, the inquisitorial proceedings adopted by you in not even deigning to acquaint me with the cause of my suspension, together with the connivance of the conduct of your lieutenant, my most avowed enemy, are, I conceive, sufficient grounds for my entering a protest against the conduct pursued towards me since the afternoon of Tuesday, 7th instant, as being illegal, oppressive, unjust, highly calculated to arouse feelings that might have a tendency to produce conduct on which to base other charges against the accused; and inhuman, inasmuch as the confinement necessarily imposes on me the necessity of breathing an infected atmosphere, arising from the putrid bodies of a large proportion of our men laboring under most loathsome, vile and disgusting diseases; ungenerous, because I threw myself on your mercy; and from the tenor of my note, addressed to you from the consul's house, you might readily infer that nothing but the sense of honor, to a man complaining of outraged feelings, could have prompted me to act in opposition even to your wishes. As the law pointed out, I availed myself of the privilege of respectfully complaining to you by letter; an answer to which I received. On reading it, I found that insult was combined with injury—insulted by continuance of confinement, injured by being kept ignorant as to the cause of it. But, sir, there is another appeal: the admiral of the navy of the United States, our common superior and President, will do the injured justice. From you and your proceedings, to him I look for redress, and am willing to abide his decision on any conduct of mine since I have had the honor to serve under the flag of my country.

I am sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOSHUA R. SANDS.

To Commodore Chas. Stewart, commanding U. S. Naval Forces in Pacific Ocean.

U. S. Ship Franklin, Valparaiso, October 10, 1823.

Sir: A court of inquiry is ordered to assemble on board this ship, on Monday next, to inquire into your conduct towards Lieutenant Hammersley on the 7th inst., at the ward room table; also, the cause of your disobedience towards your commander on that night, and the reasons of your absenting yourself from the ship, thereby neglecting the duties of your office.

You are now confined to your state room under suspension from duty, as it is found by a representation from Lieutenant Hammersley that you repeated your unlawful and insulting conduct towards him in the ward room yesterday. It constitutes a part of my duty, sir, to preserve the discipline, subordination and peace of this ship, and to confine all those who evince a determination to violate either, within such limits, and in such manner, as is best calculated to effect that object, McArthur to the contrary notwithstanding.

I remain, &c.,
(Signed) CHAS. STEWART.

Lieut. JOSHUA R. SANDS, U. S. Ship Franklin.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, Valparaiso, October 18, 1823.

SIR: The continued indisposition of the president of the court of inquiry, and the very little likelihood of his being able again to preside thereat, constrains me to regret there should be any necessity for the restraint under which I have placed you. This necessity originated in your disposition to disturb the harmony of the ship, as set forth by the complaint of Lieutenant Hammersley. To release you from such an unpleasant situation, and enable you sometimes to go on shore by special permission, for exercise, is desirable, and only requires that you should give me, in reply, your word and honor, that you will not provoke, molest, or impede Lieutenant Hammersley, or any other officer of this ship, until your case is fully decided.

I remain, &c.,
(Signed) CHAS. STEWART.

Lieut. JOSHUA R. SANDS, Franklin 74.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, October 18, 1823.

SIR: I have just had the honor to receive your note of this day's date. In reply, I beg leave to say: as in no instance have I been the aggressor in the difficulties existing between Lieutenant Hammersley and myself, so I pledge to you my honor not to do anything but defend myself from the injuries he or any other man may choose to offer me.

Very respectfully, I am, sir, your obedient servant, JOSHUA R. SANDS.

To Commodore CHARLES STEWART, &c., &c.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, Valparaiso, October 19, 1823.

SIR: Your letter of yesterday does not convey to me that unreserved pledge which I asked of you to enable me to enlarge your privileges and make your situation less irksome, which is so desirable to me and ought to be to yourself. My only desire is to preserve to the officers under my command, peace and harmony; and while the regulations of the navy forbid that any officers should take the law into their own hands, on service, it remains open to all for the punishment of injuries committed towards him by others.

With respect to your affair with Lieutenant Hammersley, and who is the wrong-doer, it does not rest with you or me to decide; it belongs to the present court of inquiry, or some future one, to determine, under the law. I have no desire to act on the occasion but in such a way as the law and my duty impose on me, with as little inconvenience to yourself as those obligations require.

I remain, &c.,
(Signed) CHAS. STEWART.

Lieutenant JOSHUA R. SANDS, U. S. Ship Franklin.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, October 19, 1823.

SIR: Your willingness to make my situation less irksome meets my thanks.

To pledge myself to show no resistance to indignities offered me, I cannot do, when I recollect that the narrow limits assigned me by your order of the 8th inst. were attempted to be abridged by a man who would not, under the privileges now held out to me, long want a pretext for rendering it necessary for you to order the close confinement imposed on me since the afternoon of Thursday, the 9th instant. It is not my wish, sir, to appear restive, or show any want of respect to the laws laid down for the peace, harmony, and good order of the ship, or to appear as proposing terms to you, but most respectfully beg leave to say that, under existing circumstances, the only way that seems to hold out a prospect of meeting your views, is to permit me to retire from the ship, subject at all times to your order, which privilege, remain assured, sir, shall in no way be violated.

With great respect, I am your obedient servant, JOSHUA R. SANDS.

To Commodore CHARLES STEWART, Commanding U. S. N. F., Pacific Ocean.

U. S. Ship Franklin, October 19, 1823.

Sir: It would be highly improper, under the present state of things, to permit you to retire from the ship, as you suggest.

I remain, respectfully, your obedient servant, C. S.

Lieutenant Joshua R. Sands.

U. S. Ship Franklin, October 20, 1823.

Sir: Your note of yesterday convinces me that the rigorous line of conduct pursued towards me is still to be continued.

If I have committed errors, which it remains for some future court to decide, to be removed from the sphere of their attractions is all I have asked. This has been denied. Rank or station in life will not prevent men from the commission of fault. Is it generous, then, to follow with vindictive measures the men we think we have already in our power? I answer not.

When I ask to be permitted to retire from the ship, I would be understood as only applying to remain on shore, or at most permitted to reside at the city, until the departure of the Franklin for the United States, at all times holding myself in readiness to obey your orders, or the mandates of any court that may hereafter be instituted with authority to take my case into consideration.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOSHUA R. SANDS.

To Commodore Charles Stewart, commanding U. S. N. F., Pacific Ocean.

U. S. Ship Franklin, Harbor of Callao, April 16, 1824.

Sir: The president of the court-martial now in session has informed me that, owing to some informality in its proceedings in my case, it was compelled to defer until some future time the investigation of the charges alleged against me by you. I have been closely confined to my room more than six months waiting a trial. Now that an opportunity is offered, I think myself entitled to a hearing; any little informality that a court composed of men not lawyers by profession might commit, (I think) ought not to be considered sufficient cause for deferring a case which, when properly examined, I flatter myself will appear that I, the accused, have been more sinned against than sinning. I therefore request that you will direct a speedy examination of my case, as every day is adding to those sufferings I have already endured; at a time, too, the laws of our country humanely suppose every man innocent.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOSHUA R. SANDS.

To Commodore C. Stewart, commanding U. S. Naval Forces, Pacific.

U. S. Ship Franklin, Callao Bay, April 16, 1824.

Sir: The general court-martial now sitting ought to know their duty, and I trust they will perform it. Your trial, when it does take place, shall be a just and fair one, or no sentence shall be carried into effect operating against you; therefore keep yourself in readiness for trial.

I remain, &c.,

(Signed) CHAS. STEWART.

Lieut. Joshua R. Sands, Franklin 74.

U. S. Ship Franklin, at sea, May 10, 1824.

Sir: It having been made known to me that you did, contrary to my orders of the 9th October and 3d November, 1823, last past, without my knowledge, privity, consent or permission, withdraw from the limits assigned you, and proceed on the 4th and 5th of January last, in one of the boats sent on an expedition from this ship for the purpose of intercepting the brig Quintanilla, I have determined to lay the subject before the government, and request a court-martial for this your conduct, on our arrival in the United States, under the enclosed charges and specifications.

I remain, &c.,

(Signed) CHARLES STEWART.

Lieut. Joshua R. Sands, U. S. Ship Franklin.

Tuesday Evening.

Sir: Circumstances make it necessary for me to remain on shore, should it be at the expense of my commission. By no means, sir, would I wish you to construe my conduct into disrespect. I hope when we meet I may have it in my power to explain the motives that actuate me to act in a manner seemingly indecorous.

In the interim, believe me, sir, to be,

With considerations of the highest respect, your very humble servant,

JOSHUA R. SANDS.

To Commodore Charles Stewart.

U. S. Ship Franklin, Callao, April 13, 1824.

Sir: It is now more than six months since I have been under an arrest and confined to my state room by your order; I have, therefore, to request that you will, so soon as the service shall permit, order a court-martial, to take into consideration the charges you preferred against me in November, 1823.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

(Signed) JOSHUA R. SANDS.

To Com. Charles Stewart, commanding U. S. Naval Forces, Pacific.

U. S. Ship Franklin, at sea, May 23, 1824.

Sir: It is now between seven and eight months since, by the order of the second lieutenant of this ship, I was put into a close and confined room; which order met your sanction. I have subsequently been tried by a court-martial on the charges preferred by you, which were the cause alleged for my confinement. Sentence has been passed on my case three weeks since, but I am still kept ignorant of the result. The rigorous course which has been pursued towards me, and which you are aware must be destructive to my constitution, has not been mitigated. Under these circumstances I am compelled to call your attention to this subject.

With due respect, I am your obedient servant,

(Signed) JOSHUA R. SANDS.

To Com. Chas. Stewart, commanding U. S. Naval Forces, Pacific Ocean.

U. S. Ship Franklin, at sea, June 4, 1824.

Sir: On the 23d ult. I addressed to you a note on the subject of my situation, and requested your attention to it, three months having then intervened from the time the court-martial on my case had closed its proceedings, without my being informed of its decision, and without any mitigation of the rigorous treatment I had received before, and which I flattered myself after trial would take place. I have since been informed of the generous manner in which all the commissioned officers on duty on board this ship addressed to you a most respectful note, soliciting for me the privileges usually granted to officers under suspension or arrest. I have been favored with a perusal of your reply; as that part of it which says "Lieutenant Joshua R. Sands has the power of enlarging the limits which are assigned him whenever he finds them irksome or too contracted" is somewhat ambiguous, it becomes me to put a construction on it least favorable to myself, and assume as its meaning that the power of extending my limits rests with me only when I shall have subscribed to the terms offered me in October last, and renewed seven months and a half afterwards, through the surgeon of the ship, who stated to you in a previous communication the necessity that existed for more exercise than my private apartment afforded.

At this late day I have to observe that my answer to your letter making the generous offer (18th October, 1823,) contained all that you required of me. Without repeating your own words, I agreed to your terms as explicitly as my poor knowledge of the English language would permit. My letter contained all, nay more than you required of me, for I was not ignorant of the circumstances which occurred on the day your generous offer was made; and although it was the first act of your clemency towards me, I did not wish at that time to add to the poignancy of those feelings which the melancholy circumstances of the evening of that day I knew had excited in your bosom. Notwithstanding, with your demand, the promised indulgences did not follow. The consequence has been that I have remained in close confinement ever since. A few days ago, through the interference of the surgeon, the same offer was again held out to me. Were I now, as I did then, to embrace it, would I not be again informed that it "was not that unreserved pledge you required of me, to make my situation as little irksome as possible, which was so desirable to you," &c.? I very much regret that any effort sixteen commissioned officers of the navy of the United States might make to procure the release from a close confinement of a brother officer should bring on them the charge of "officious combination.". I believe it was dictated by feelings common to most men; and that their generous exertion should have brought on them a dishonorable imputation is more painful to me than that their effort to make my situation more comfortable has proved unavailing.

It is also a source of regret to me to perceive that a doubtful meaning is left on that clause of your letter to Dr. Salter, in which you say, "since the conviction has followed the offence." It is impossible to believe that it can be your intention to refer to the sentence of the court-martial on my case; those feelings of delicacy, innate in the minds of all honorable men, revolt at this suggestion; still I am left to conjecture what additional offence I have committed to authorize the assertion that conviction has followed. That on our arrival in the United States it may not be said my long confinement was my own choice, I repeat the answer to the terms you before offered me, viz: I pledge my honor only to defend myself from the injuries he, Lieutenant Hammersley, or any other man, may choose to offer me.

Respectfully, &c., &c.,

(Signed) JOSHUA R. SANDS.

To Commodore Charles Stewart, &c.

The accused objects to Brown's being sworn as a witness. He has been convicted of an infamous crime, and is thereby rendered incompetent, and disqualified to testify in any cause whatever. This man was carpenter on the Franklin, on her late cruise in the Pacific. He was arrested and brought to trial, by Captain Stewart, on charges of embezzlement, and other fraudulent disposal of the ship's stores, placed under his care. The record now offered to the court proves that at a general court-martial, of which Captain Hall was president, held on the 15th of April, 1824, Brown was convicted of these crimes, and sentenced to "forfeit his pay and subsistence, and to be dismissed the naval service of the United States." This sentence was approved by the President. The clemency of the Executive did indeed remit the pecuniary mulct, but his justice confirmed the sentence which expelled him from the navy as a reproach and dishonor to the service.

Such is the person who now presents himself as a witness. Shall he be heard? Dishonored and degraded himself, shall he be allowed to degrade and dishonor others? especially shall he be suffered to testify against the accused, at whose instance he was tried, and on whom, as the author of his disgrace, his revenge seeks to retaliate similar degradation?

The experience and observation of every individual is necessarily very limited and circumscribed. In the affairs of life, we must therefore rely on the experience and observation of others, and found our belief on the statements of what they have seen or heard. But our faith in these statements rests wholly on our persuasion of their veracity or honesty. In proportion as that persuasion is impaired, is our confidence in the statement diminished. If once satisfied of the want of veracity or integrity in the witness, we utterly reject all statements resting on his authority. This is the deduction of reason and common sense.

The rules of law entirely coincide—one convicted of an infamous crime is not permitted to testify. The proof which the conviction affords, of want of honesty or truth, utterly disqualifies and makes him incompetent. The result is not confined to felonies of the deepest hue; a conviction of theft to the value of a cent, by the common law, disqualfies equally with a condemnation for treason. A statute in England has altered the law in that country as to petty larceny. But the common law rule prevails here; nor is the rule confined to felonies; a conviction for a conspiracy, or fraud, or gaming, or barratry, or bribery, a witness to absent himself from a trial or any species of crimen falsi (that is, of fraud or deceit) produces the same disqualification. For all these cases proceed on the principle that the person guilty of them, is destitute of the honesty of purpose which alone entitles a witness to credit.

The counsel beg leave to refer the court to the following authorities to sustain these positions:

"In the trial of military crimes by courts-martial, the rules of evidence, which have their foundation in the principle of justice and of reason, are the same that apply to the trial of crimes before the civil court."—Tytler's Military Law, page 135.

"The rules and doctrines of evidence, as admitted by law in all criminal cases, or on pleas of the ——— are adhered to nearly in the same manner upon trials at naval and military courts-martial."—2 McArthur, page 47.

"The law positively excludes certain persons from giving testimony in a court of justice, and these may be reduced to four classes; among them are, 'those who have committed crimes which destroy their credibility, or who are stigmatized by law.' "—Tytler, page 139.

"The moral character of a witness is to be considered, when stigmatized by a conviction on record against him for certain crimes; his evidence is wholly inadmissible, and becomes, in the eye of the law, what is called an incompetent witness."—McArthur, page 56.

"The crimes which are held to destroy the credit of testimony are felony, and the crimen falsi, as perjury and forgery."—Tytler, page 146; 2 McArthur, page 54–7.

"Crimen falsis includes forgery, and every species of fraud or deceit."—1 Brann's Civil Law, page 426.

"There are many offences which our laws consider such blemishes on the moral character as to incapacitate from giving evidence in courts of justice, as 'treason, and every species of the crimen falsi, such as forgery, perjury, subornation of perjury, attaint of false verdict, and other offences of the same kind which involve the charge of falsehood, and affect the administration of justice.' "—Phil. on Evidence, page 23.

"By the common law, a person convicted of petty larceny was not a competent witness, as the offence was felony no less than grand larceny. Some other offences, also, make witnesses incompetent, after conviction and judgment, as ——— barratry, or bribing a witness to absent himself and not give evidence."—Phil, on Evidence, page 23.

"At the present day a conviction of any description of treason, or felony, or of any species of crimen falsi, whether barratry, conspiracy, perjury, or other crimes, will incapacitate the party convicted from giving evidence, without regard to the punishment. So, all fraud or gaming, and bribing a witness not to give evidence."—1 Chitty, page 589.

The frauds of which Brown was convicted are not merely held infamous by the naval regulation which expelled him the service, but amounted to theft and felony by the municipal law.

In making this objection, the accused trusts he will not be considered to raise a mere formal or technical difficulty. The evidence by which the guilt or innocence of a party is to be established is of the very essence of the administration of justice; it is the stream which must be kept pure and incorruptible, or no man will be safe in the sanctuary of the law.

In his own case the accused has no apprehension of injury from anything the witness now offered can testify; but he feels it to be his duty to protect others from so dangerous a precedent. It is further due to the dignity of this court to exclude from its presence a witness whom the law pronounces infamous, and not worthy to be credited or heard.

The question now submitted to the consideration of the court is one which demands its serious deliberation, not more from its bearing upon the present case than as involving a most important principle of law, of general application.

No doubt is entertained by myself, and none can be felt by the court, that no captious disposition has induced this objection, and I trust that the gentlemen who have urged it will accord me equal justice as to my motives and feelings, should it unfortunately appear that we do not wholly coincide in our views.

I am disposed on this occasion, without discussing the questions fully, to yield the general principles of law that have been laid down, and freely to admit that the common law rules of evidence are to be the guides on the present occasion; that, by these rules, a person regularly convicted in due course of law of felony, or even of larceny, is incompetent to testify in a court of justice; and I am equally willing for the present to yield, what may perhaps be considered as by no means free from question, that a conviction before a court-martial is equally operative as a conviction at common law to work this consequence.

Stripped of these collateral matters, the question will then resolve itself into this: Is an individual convicted by the sentence of a court-martial of the offences charged against this witness thereby rendered incompetent to testify in a court of justice? The offences charged are fraudulently giving away or selling the public property, and embezzling public property, contrary to the twenty-fourth article of the rules and regulations for the government of the navy of the United States.

It may be remarked that Brown was punishable only under a statute. At common law, the embezzlement of public property is not a criminal offence. At common law, also, where property is received by a servant or other individual, as the agent or trustee of another, and he fraudulently appropriates the same to his private purposes, such offence, however heinous in a moral point of view, however anlaogous in the eye of reason to the crime of larceny, is not punishable as such. The offence, then, for which Brown was tried, and of which he was convicted before the court-martial, is a new one, created by statute. The common law could not reach it, not merely from the nature of the act itself, but from the circumstance of its being committed out of the United States.

The first question, then, which suggests itself is this. The statute which creates the crime has not prescribed, as part of the punishment consequent upon conviction, that the party shall thereby be rendered infamous, or incompetent to testify. No such punishment is affixed by the sentence of the court. I am inclined to the opinion that this consequence must always be regarded as part of the punishment following conviction, and therefore, where the offence is cognizable entirely at common law, must be prescribed by that code; when created by statute, the statute must declare that this result shall flow from the conviction. It is in no case sufficient, in order to produce this disqualification, to establish the fact that the party whose evidence is offered has been actually guilty of the crimen falsi; though he admit it on his examination, though he avow himself an accomplice, the objection goes only to his credibility, not to his competency. He must have been regularly convicted, and then only is he rendered incompetent to testify. The inference therefore deducible from this view of the matter is that, as the statute which creates the offence, and the court by which he was tried, have not prescribed this punishment of infamy, the witness is not, by the conviction produced, disqualified from testifying.

Should the view I have taken of this matter be considered unsatisfactory, I am also of opinion that the offence laid to the charge of Brown cannot be regarded as one which, if cognizable at common law, would render him incompetent. The essence of it is embezzlement of public property. Embezzlement signifies the appropriation to one's self of that which was received, or held in trust for another. It is a breach of trust, not larceny. At common law, a cashier of a bank could not be guilty of felony in embezzling an India bond which he had received from the court of chancery, and was in his actual as well as constructive possession. 1 Leach, 28; 3 Chitty, A. L. 364 (935, 6). The embezzlement of his master's goods by a servant, to whose custody they had been entrusted, was no criminal offence at common law, but made felony by the statute 21 Henry VIII, c. 2. So if a clerk received money of a customer, and, without at all putting it into the till, converted it to his own use, he was guilty only of a breach of trust. 2 Leach, 835; Chitty, u. s. A person inhabiting furnished lodgings, it was held by high authority, could not be guilty of larceny in taking the furniture let to him, and which he had a right to use, until the statute 4 William and Mary, c. 9, provided for the case. 3 Chitty, 367 (938).

It would be easy to multiply indefinitely citations to show the clear distinction known to the law between acts which amount to larceny, and those which are considered as breaches of trust. A conviction for the former disqualifies the individual from testifying in a court of justice; by the rules of the common law, the proof of the latter is followed by no such result.

It is not my business to vindicate the propriety of these distinctions. It is sufficient that they exist. With the greatest respect, therefore, for the opinion of the learned gentlemen who have urged this point, I am constrained to deliver it as my opinion to the court, that the objection only goes to the credibility of the witness, not to his competency. No serious inconvenience, it is apprehended, can result from a corresponding decision by the court, since the court is in duty bound to weigh the testimony of the witness, and to give it only that credit to which, under the circumstances of the case, he may be deemed entitled.

RICHARD S. COXE. Judge Advocate.

AUGUST 29, 1825,

NAVY DEPARTMENT, September 8, 1821.

SIR: You have been appointed to the command of the United States ship Franklin, destined to the Pacific ocean, for the purpose of protecting the commerce of the United States in that quarter of the world.

The schooner Dolphin, Lieut. Commandent David Conner, is ordered to accompany you on the cruise, and to be subject to your order. You will proceed directly round Cape Horn, and stop at the port of Valparaiso, where you will make the best display of your ship, and pay the usual civilities to the authorities of the country as due from a friendly nation. At that port you will ascertain whether the commerce of the United States has been molested by the cruising ships of either of the parties at war, and consult with J. B. Provost, Esq., the United States agent in Chili, as to the causes of such molestation, and the best means of affording relief and protection to the citizens of the United States and their property, so far as the laws of nations can be urged in their favor. Endeavor to secure for your country all the respect due to our rights; and at all ports and places, which you may visit, pay particular respect to the existing authorities of the country; and to avoid all collisions and disputes, maintain the strictest discipline, and permit none of your officers or men to visit the shores in cases where either of them shall have violated the rights of hospitality, or conducted themselves unbecoming the high reputation of our navy.

The public papers have announced that the government of Chili has declared the whole coast of Peru in a state of blockade, without anything like an adequate force to maintain it; and although the validity of this blockade is not admitted by the Government of the United States, so as of right, according to the laws of nations, to exclude our merchant vessels from the coast, or to subject them to lawful capture for a violation of the blockade, but on the contrary its legality is expressly denied, yet the nature of the controversy that is carrying on in South America, being a struggle on one side for liberty and independence, renders it peculiarly fit and proper for the United States to avoid any collision with them, or to do any act that may, in any manner, have the appearance or admit of the construction of favoring the cause of Spain against such a struggle. The policy of our government has heretofore been, and it still is, to observe the strictest neutrality, and this you will endeavor to pursue. I deem it necessary, during the present state of things, to caution you to avoid all collision with the Chilian squadron, under the command of Lord Cochrane, and to let nothing but the protection of the honor of the American flag lead you to an open conflict with any of the vessels under his command. Act at present on the defensive only; and for all violations of our neutral rights, if any occur under your observation, let strong and spirited appeals be made, through our public agent, to the government of Chili, impressing it upon the proper authorities that it is from respect to them, and the cause in which they are engaged, that our rights are not protected by force, instead of appealing, in a peaceable and friendly manner, to their sense of justice.

You will decline taking on board, for either party in actual hostility, in Chili or Peru, men, money, provisions or supplies, to be carried for such party to any other port or country whatsoever; except specie, which you are permitted to bring to the United States on your return.

For the contingent expenses, pay, &c., during the cruise of the ship Franklin, the purser will draw upon this Department, directly, under the sanction of the approval for the amount, on the best terms attainable; and it is presumed that such bills will be sought for by those who may wish to get funds from that country to Europe, or the United States, and in most cases at an advance premium. Bills may be drawn at such sight as the payees shall require, provided they be accompanied by letters of advice. It will be necessary to divide the amounts under the heads of appropriation for which the money shall be required to be expended, including pay, provisions, repairs, contingent, and pay, &c., of marines. The letter enclosed for Capt. Charles G. Ridgely, is an order for the return of the United States ship Constitution, under his command, immediately after your arrival, provided no important services or exigencies shall imperiously require that ship's co-operation previously to leaving that ocean.

I recommend your frequent communications to this Department, relative to all your movements, and the events which may take place. You will probably find the most direct conveyance for your dispatches through Panama and across the Isthmus.

You have, also enclosed, a copy of the general instructions of this Department, in relation to piracy and the slave trade, for your government, in the event of your meeting with vessels of either description on your passage out, or your return home.

It will be convenient for the vessels under your command, on your return to the United States, to enter the port of New York.

Previously to sailing, direct a complete muster roll to be transmitted to this Department.

Wishing you health, and a fortunate cruise, I have the honor to be,

Sir, your most obedient servant,

(Signed) SMITH THOMPSON.

Commodore CHARLES STEWART, U. S. Ship Franklin, New York.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, August 17, 1825.

The preceding has been carefully compared with the record kept in this Department, and found to be a true copy.

JOHN BOYLE.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, October 27, 1824.

SIR: I have received and examined the proceedings of the court-martial in the cases of Lieut. Joshua R. Sands and Midshipman John M. Rinker, and wish to be informed why the said proceedings have not been either disapproved or approved, and the sentences carried into execution.

I am, respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Captain CHARLES STEWART, U. S. Navy, Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, October 29, 1824.

SIR: I had the honor to receive your letter of the 27th inst., inquiring why the court-martial proceedings in the cases of Lieut. J. R. Sands and Midshipman Rinker have not been approved or disapproved, and carried into execution.

In reply, I beg leave to refer you to the tenor of the sentences which, requires that they should be carried into effect, by the commander-in-chief, a title belonging exclusively to his excellency the President of the United States.

It would have been arrogance in me, and an improper assumption of responsibility, at a time when I was no longer even commander of the squadron, and only senior officer on the station, which you will perceive by the transfer of the command to Captain Hull, dated April 29.

By the marked distinction made in the sentences, by the court in those two cases from the others tried at the same court, and which were carried into effect, you will perceive more forcibly the views and intentions of the court-martial.

If the proceedings in the case of Midshipman Rinker do not bear my approval, it is an omission, for I was under the impression it did.

Considering those in the case of Lieut. Sands as evidently partial and lawless, I could not give to them my approval. Besides the irregularities which appear in the proceedings, there are others that took place which do not appear on the record.

I have the honor to remain, very respectfully, sir, your most obedient servant,

(Signed) CHARLES STEWART.

The honorable SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, November 3, 1824.

SIR: I return to you the proceedings of the general court-martial, in the cases of Lieutenant Joshua R. Sands, Midshipman John M. Rinker, and carpenter Samuel Brown, and I request that you will approve or disapprove of them; and, in the case of the latter, that you will state your reasons on each case separately.

I have also to request that you will state whether you authorized the appointment of a deputy judge advocate.

I am, respectfully, &c.,
(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Captain CHARLES STEWART, U. S. Navy, Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, November 5, 1824.

SIR: I had the honor to receive your letter of the 3d instant, covering the general naval court-martial proceedings in the case of Lieutenant J. R. Sands, Midshipman John M. Rinker, and the carpenter, Samuel Brown. In compliance therewith, I enclose to you the proceedings in the case of Midshipman J. M. Rinker, approved, heretofore accidentally omitted.

Those in the case of Samuel Brown, carpenter, from the nature of the sentence, require the approval of the Executive, agreeably to law.

The proceedings in the case of Lieutenant J. R. Sands are returned disapproved, for the following reasons: First, under date of the 15th April, 1824, I was under the necessity of suspending the proceedings in the case of Lieutenant Sands, in consequence of the court having proceeded illegally and unprecedentedly in the case of the judge advocate, he having been objected to by the prisoner, which objection was admitted by the court. Second, I had assured Mr. Sands that no sentence should be carried into effect, operating against him, unless the proceedings were just and fair. Thirdly, I could not approve a sentence which lawlessly assumes a prerogative belonging to another power, the right of mitigation, as expressed in the sentence. In page 28, of the proceedings, it appears they were lawlessly suspended by the court, for the purpose of taking into consideration the propriety of releasing Lieutenant Sands from the limits I had assigned him.

Enclosed I transmit you the letters transmitted to the president of the court on the subject of the judge advocate, which will exhibit how far I had anything to do with the appointment of the deputy.

I have the honor to be, &c.,

CHARLES STEWART.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

Mr. President, and members of the court:

If an honorable man can have any consolation, when judicially and criminally charged with official misdemeanors, and the violation of the sacred duties he owed to himself and his country, it must be in finding his case submitted to the investigation and decision of honorable men: alive to all the sensibilities and pride of a well earned reputation; distinguished by their high rank in their common profession; firm in the confidence of their common country, and fully possessed of the experience and knowledge necessary to enable them to judge with perfect intelligence of the guilt or innocence of the accused.

Thus stands Capt. Charles Stewart before this court, and such is the tribunal by which he is to be tried.

On his part, his object and intention is to make a full, explicit and unreserved exhibition of all the transactions to which the charges against him relate, so far as he has any knowledge of them. He desires to derive no protection or aid from concealment, or the affectation of ignorance of anything really known to him; but will truly expose to this court and the country everything in his knowledge connected with his command in the Pacific, and relevant to the matters now under investigation. If his justification is not to be found in the truth of his case; in the honor and innocence of his intentions and motives; in the meritorious and conscientious discharge of the high duties and responsibilities of his station, he will not seek nor receive it from subterfuge and evasion. He requires to be justified, not to be screened from punishment; he asks to receive his honor and his sword unstained from your hands, and not to escape the penalties of the law.

There cannot be a member of this court that has not had personal knowledge and experience of the difficulties, mistakes and impositions to which the commander of a ship-of-war, on a foreign station, is daily and inevitably exposed, with his utmost vigilance. He is surrounded and beset by so many whose interest it is to deceive and mislead him, that if he escapes, even some serious errors, it may be deemed almost miraculous. Such experience will enable you to discriminate, with accuracy, between the errors arising from such sources and circumstances, if any shall be found, and those intentional, corrupt wrongs which are the proper objects of prosecution and punishment. This is an indulgence, I should rather say a justice, without which the great trusts of society could not be discharged; without which no man would be so insane as to take upon himself any public duty. It is the protection of every judicial officer, from the highest tribunal of our country to the lowest. It is the protection of the honorable members of this court, who, being human, are liable to err, but whose errors cannot be visited upon them either criminally or reproachfully if committed with pure hearts, a careful examination of their duties, and an honest endeavor to perform them. Nothing ever has been, or justly can be, required of any man, called upon to act on his own judgment, but an upright, conscientious discharge of the trust reposed in him. If there be found in the case no selfish motive; no corrupt influence; no private or public views inconsistent with the duties of the officer and the honor of the man, it is impossible there can be crime in the legal or moral sense of the term. It is impossible that errors of judgment in difficult situations, on difficult points; that impositions practiced on a commander against which he could not guard himself, or irregularities committed without his authority or knowledge, and without any gross and culpable negligence on his part, can be the legal, equitable or reasonable subjects of a criminal accusation.

In judging this case, then, it is indispensable to keep in view the time, place and circumstances under which the complaints arose, which have given birth to it. A civil war of a barbarous and exterminating character was raging in South America; there was no permanent government which pervaded the whole country and afforded a constant and regulated protection; but each party predominated in particular provinces, by turns, according to the result of a battle or a siege; a regular system of revenue and finance to meet the exigencies of the war was unknown, and the necessities of the combatants were, in part, at least, supplied by plunder, under any form and pretence, and from anybody, that might suit the occasion. If such proceedings were not directly practiced and authorized by those who from time to time held the powers of the people, and may in some sort be called the government, it is certain they did not or could not prevent and restrain them. In such a state of things, neutrals engaged in the most lawful commerce were daily falling a prey to the rapacity and avarice of marauders on the sea and robbers on the shore. To protect our citizens from injuries and ruin of this kind, to save their property from lawless plunder, and their persons from imprisonment and death, the President sent out the force of the nation. To the commander of this force the situation was delicate and hazardous, and he has a just claim to the utmost liberality in judging of his conduct. He was assailed by the sufferings and complaints of his countrymen on the one side, whom he was bound to protect, and, on the other side, he was menaced, when he interfered, by the local authorities of an extended coast, in the possession of different parties, and charged with an invasion of their national rights and sovereignty. He was compelled to decide and to act, and to do so promptly and efficiently. He was far distant from his government, and could not look there for counsel and countenance in difficult emergencies, and on intricate questions. Nothing could then, or should now, be required of him, but a pure and conscientious exercise of his judgment on the case as it was presented to him, and an efficient discharge of his duty according to the judgment so formed. Even error thus fallen into cannot be criminal or reproachful; as to dissatisfaction and complaints from the contending parties, whenever the accused interposed between them and their prey, is it not obvious they would become frequent and violent in proportion as the commander was firm and vigilant in performing his duty? Every disppointment of plunder would be a cause of complaint; every American citizen who was rescued from the grasp of their rapacity would excite indignation against the man who interposed to save him; and if they were so fortunate as to have an agent of the United States, who gave a willing and an eager ear to such complaints, is it to be wondered at that they multiplied without number, and assailed every naval commander of the United States, who had been put upon this arduous and dangerous duty?

The accused cannot be charged, however it may have been insinuated, with any partiality or preference for of either the belligerent parties. His official correspondence will show that his sole object was the protection and succor of his fellow-citizens, in their lawful pursuits; and that, whether the injury came from a patriot or a royalist, he was equally prompt to redress it.

With these general observations, containing principles important to, and which will be relied upon in, the defence, we proceed to a more special consideration of the charges set forth in the specifications submitted for the decision of the court, and the answers and explanations which will be severally given to them.

CHARGE FIRST—UNOFFICERLIKE CONDUCT.

First specification, charges the accused with various acts of misconduct in the months of May, June, and July, of the year 1822, in relation to the following vessels: the American ship called the Canton; the American ship called the Pearl; an English brig called the Sarah; a French ship called the Telegraph. The acts charged are:

1. In aiding and assisting those vessels in carrying on a contraband and illicit trade with certain ports in Peru.
2. Aiding and assisting them in violating the laws and decrees of the existing government of Peru.
3. In aiding them in transporting and landing arms, military stores, and other contraband articles.
4. And in protecting the said vessels from the consequences of such illegal traffic, by employing, or threatening to employ, the naval force of the United States in their defence.

It cannot have escaped observation that, with the exception of the last matter, no intimation or suggestion is made of the manner or means by which the alleged aid and assistance was afforded. This is now mentioned, not by way of a legal exception to the specification, but to excuse ourselves, if we are compelled to wander a little in the dark in seeking to meet and disprove the charge.

We put the French ship, the Telegraph, at once out of our way, by asserting, as we shall unquestionably prove, that we never gave her any sort of aid or assistance whatever in her carrying on any trade, lawful or unlawful, or in any other way, or for any other purpose; and that, so far from protecting her from the consequences of her illegal traffic, if she were engaged in any, she was actually captured by a patriot ship-of-war, directly under the guns of the Franklin, when, by the smallest movement for her protection, the capture might have been prevented. But Capt. Stewart had nothing to do but with the vessels and property of the citizens of his own country.

As to the Canton, we answer that this ship and her cargo were both, and entirely, the property of citizens of the United States, and were, therefore, both entitled to the aid and protection of a ship-of-war of the United States, while employed in a lawful commerce. This vessel sailed from the United States in the charge of Capt. O'Sullivan and Mr. Horatio Ward, who were joint supercargoes—the former being also master of the ship. She arrived at Valparaiso, where the greater part of the cargo was purchased by Capt. Eliphalet Smith, on condition that it should be delivered to Capt. Smith at Arica or Quilca, two of the ports of Peru, called the Intermedios. Of course, until the arrival of the goods purchased at one of those ports, the sale was not completed. The Canton sailed from Valparaiso for Arica and Quilca, in charge of Capt. O'Sullivan, in order to deliver there the goods purchased by Capt. Smith, according to the terms of the contract. She sailed in May, 1822, and she did go from Valparaiso to Quilca and Arica, under the convoy and protection of the Franklin; but it is utterly and explicitly denied that she carried on any illicit or contraband trade, that she violated any of the laws and decrees of the existing government of Peru, or transported or landed any arms, military stores, or contraband articles of any kind, at the ports mentioned, or any other ports. On the contrary, it is expressly alleged, and will be expressly proved, that all the cargo taken in the Canton from Valparaiso consisted of French, English, and German dry goods, wine, oil, and perhaps some other articles of the same character. And it is further expressly alleged, and will be proved, that all the goods landed at the said ports from the Canton were duly and regularly entered in the custom houses of the said ports, according to, and under, the authority of the laws of the existing government, and that all the proceeds of the sales of the said cargo and goods, consisting wholly of specie and bullion, were also taken on board the Franklin, with the knowledge and assistance of the officers of the said custom houses, and under the authority of the existing government; and, of course, that, in relation to this ship and her cargo, the accused neither employed, nor threatened to employ, the naval force of the United States to protect her from the consequences of any illegal traffic. And, further, that, so far was the accused from having any disposition or intention to give aid and protection to any illicit trade, that he refused to give convoy to the Canton, from Valparaiso to Arica, until she had landed at Valparaiso some arms she had brought from New York: and they were accordingly landed.

2. As to the brig Pearl, erroneously called a ship, in the specification, our answer is short and explicit: The accused never gave her convoy, nor aid, or assistance of any sort or kind; on the contrary, when convoy was asked for her, he refused it, which was a subject of complaint against him by the master and mate of the Pearl; but she was refused, because she had arms on board.

3. In like manner with the English brig, the "Sarah," the accused had nothing to do, in any shape or manner, or for any purpose. He never gave her convoy, protection, or aid, or assistance of any kind.

These answers are sufficiently broad and explicit to meet the charges of the specification; and if the answers are true and shall be proved, the charges must be overthrown. The accused, however, acting on the principles he has stated, will explain the only transaction in his knowledge, to which the charge of employing, or threatening to employ, the naval forces of the United States can allude. While the Franklin and the Canton were lying at Quilca, a vessel of war in the patriot service, called the Belgrano, and commanded by one Captain Brunier, threatened to capture and make prize of the Canton; not under any allegation or pretence that she was concerned in any illicit or contraband trade, or had arms or military stores on board, but under a charge of her violating a blockade. As the accused knew of no blockade, and there was none, either in point of fact or law, he, of course, denied that any blockade had been or could be violated; and declared that any attempt to take the Canton on that pretext, would be prevented by force. The correspondence between the accused and Captain Brunier will be exhibited to the court, and will fully sustain this statement. This pretended blockade of a coast of immense extent, was supported by no appearance of force, and indeed the whole navy of the patriots at that time did not exceed three or four small vessels. It was a blockade declared by San Martin, on the part of Peru, and the instructions given to the accused by his government had pronounced a much more formidable blockade, declared by the government of Chili, to be illegal and of no validity, because it was "without anything like an adequate force to maintain it." If, under these circumstances, the accused had suffered the Canton and her cargo to be captured by the Belgrano for the breach of such a blockade, and that were now the charge he is called upon to answer, he knows not what defence or apology he could offer for himself.

In a letter from our Secretary of State to Mr. Prevost, this transaction is expressly referred to, and the ground taken by the accused explicitly supported. It is declared that "Captain Stewart could not have submitted to see the Canton captured, under the very guns of his ship, without formally admitting thereby the validity of the blockade in its most licentious extent." I think it will be heard with some surprise by this court, and the American people, to whom these specifications have gone forth through every newspaper, that this charge, which stands pre-eminent in the long list for its bold and criminal daring, has been thus explicitly justified and commended by the American Government; not by general instructions or strong implications, but by a direct reference to the transaction itself.

Second specification. This specification charged the accused with sailing with the United States ship Franklin in June and July, 1822, to the Intermedios for the purpose of aiding in private and illicit traffic, and with a view to his own private emolument.

It has already been seen in the answer to the first specification that the only vessel to which the accused had given any sort of aid and assistance was the Canton, convoyed by him at the time mentioned, from Valparaiso to Quilca and Arica; and it has also been alleged and will be unquestionably proved, that the Canton was engaged in no illicit trade or traffic whatever; neither as to the character of her cargo, the manner of disposing of it, nor the proceeds received in return for it. All this would be a sufficient answer to this second specification; stripping it entirely of all that is illegal or offensive in the charge, and entitling the accused to a full acquittal. But however it might judicially satisfy the court to leave this specification with no further answer, it does not satisfy the accused, who knows and feels that here is the foundation of all the suspicion that has been excited against him; of all the calumnies and odium that have been heaped upon his head. The charge is that he gave aid and assistance to the Canton, "with a view to his own private emolument." It cannot be concealed that the source of all the complaints and hard thoughts that have been entertained against the accused, is the belief that he held a pecuniary concern in the Canton and her cargo, and was induced to afford her extraordinary facilities and aid in her enterprise and movements, because he thereby promoted his own interests and increased his own gains. He cheerfully meets this suggestion in the broadest and most unequivocal terms of denial and defiance. He asserts, not only from the absence of all affirmative proof of the fact, but from such absolute and direct testimony as the proposition is capable of, that he had not at the periods mentioned, and never had at any other period, directly or indirectly, absolute or contingent, immediate or remote, an interest of any description, to the value of a cent, in the Canton, in her cargo, or in any of the expeditions, enterprises or speculations in which she was concerned. That he had no pecuniary connection, concern or interest with Captain E. Smith, or any other person under whose care and direction the said ship, her cargo and movements were placed, and that all the aid and protection he gave to the said ship in her transactions had no view whatever to his own interest or gain, but was induced solely by a desire to perform what he considered to be his duty, and according to his instructions in giving the protection of a ship of the United States to citizens of the United States, engaged in the prosecution of their lawful business and trade, and the exercise of their undoubted rights. On the contrary, the accused avers that when, on a certain occasion, he was offered an interest in a commercial speculation which would have afforded him a large profit, he declined it—not because it was illegal or contrary to his duty, but because he was resolved not to expose himself even to unjust suspicions and misrepresentations, and not to trammel or blend the discharge of his public duties with any private interests, connections, views or feelings whatever. If, then, this mistaken and false foundation of the suspicions and calumnies under which the accused has so long and so painfully labored, be removed, as assuredly it will be, what doubt can remain of the pure and high principles of honor and duty on which he has acted through the whole course of his arduous command?

Remove the imputation of private and sordid objects from his conduct, and what could have been his guides but public honor and duty; the recollection of past services through many years of fatigue and danger, in peace and war, and the brighter recollection of the noble rewards he had received for his services in the confidence and honors of his country?

Third specification, charges the accused with preventing the Peruvian brig Belgrano from enforcing the laws of the government, by taking and sending in for adjudication the ship Canton, detected in carrying on an illicit trade, and in being concerned in the pecuniary profits of the illicit voyages and transactions of the said ship Canton.

Every part of the allegations contained in this specification have been already distinctly and explicitly answered. There was no illicit trade attempted or intended, by the Canton. There was none charged upon her by the commander of the Belgrano, whose only pretext for taking her was the breach of a fictitious blockade, illegal and invalid, and so considered and declared by the Government of the United States, not only in the instructions of the accused, but in various solemn and public acts. As to the participation of the accused in the pecuniary profits of the voyages and transactions of the Canton, legal or illegal, he refers to his answer to the second specification.

Fourth specification. This relates to a transaction which has been the subject of investigation at another place, and before another tribunal. The accused will reply to it, only so far as he is responsible for it. The charge is that the accused transported, or caused to be transported in the United States schooner Dolphin, in May, 1822, one Eliphalet Smith, with goods and merchandise for sale on private account, and permitting said Smith to carry his goods and samples of goods, not designed for the use of the Dolphin, on board of the Dolphin, and permitting said Smith to employ a national vessel to sell and display for sale such, his goods, when such traffic was illegal and contraband, and tended to the disgrace of the navy of the United States.

It must be observed that the mere transporting of E. Smith, a citizen of the United States, in the schooner Dolphin, to the ports mentioned, is not charged or pretended to be an offence of any kind, or against anybody, nor could it be. It is only by connecting it with the other circumstances detailed, in relation to goods taken with Smith, that the offence is made out.

That the accused did permit the said E. Smith to be transported in the Dolphin from Valparaiso to the ports mentioned, or one of them, for the purposes which will be presently mentioned, is freely admitted; but as to every part of this specification which relates to any goods or samples of goods taken by Smith on board the Dolphin, or as to any purpose for which such goods were taken for sale, display, or otherwise, or as to anything that was done or intended to be done with the said goods or samples of goods, the accused gave no permission, express or implied; he had no knowledge, direct or indirect, nor any means of knowledge. He was not on board the Dolphin when the said Smith went on board of her; nor on her passage to the ports mentioned; nor after her arrival there; and whatever was then and there done, was done without any participation or knowledge on his part. His order to take Captain Smith on board the Dolphin is in writing, and will speak for itself. He will, however, state the facts of that transaction, as he expects to give them in proof.

Captain E. Smith went to Valparaiso in the United States frigate Constellation, then commanded by Captain Ridgely. He there purchased the cargo of the Canton, as has been mentioned, to be delivered to him at Quilca and Arica. It was his intention to have gone to those ports in the Canton, and he could have done so, but for the following circumstance:

When he came to Valparaiso, he brought to Captain Stewart, the accused, an official letter from General Ramirez, commander-in-chief of all the southern provinces of Peru, under the royal authority. It was necessary that an answer should be returned to this communication, and one was accordingly written, which together with the letter of General Ramirez will be here exhibited. The general was then at Arequipa, about ninety miles in the interior, and it was necessary to send the answer to Arica or Quilca, to be thence transmitted to Arequipa. The Dolphin was about to sail from Valparaiso to Lima, and would or could touch at Arica or Quilca without deviating from her way. In order then to oblige Captain Stewart, and for no possible benefit to himself, Captain Smith consented to go in the Dolphin, instead of the Canton; and as his business would require him to go to Arequipa, he was to take Captain Stewart's dispatch to General Ramirez. The advantage to the United States in this arrangement was this: had the dispatch been forwarded by one of the officers of the Dolphin, she must have been detained until, in the first place, a license could have been obtained from Arequipa permitting him to go there, and afterwards until he should have gone there and returned.

As to what took place on board the Dolphin in relation to the goods and samples of goods mentioned, it is not material to the accused to explain or justify it, as he had no connection with or knowledge of the transaction; but he will, nevertheless, aver, and stands ready to prove, that no goods or samples of goods were taken for sale on board the Dolphin, or offered for sale, or intended for sale.

Fifth specification, charges that the accused in August, 1822, employed the schooners Peruvian and Waterwitch, then in the service of the United States, in traffic and carrying merchandise on private account. The gist and importance of this charge consists in the allegation that these schooners, at the time mentioned, were in the service of the United States. Take away this and there is nothing in the charge. This allegation is directly and explicitly denied; and will be proved to be unfounded. This might be a sufficient answer to the charge, but proceeding on the system of making a full and clear disclosure of all the knowledge in possession of the accused, that has any relation to the subjects of accusation, he will briefly detail the facts about these schooners Peruvian and Waterwitch. The frames, materials and rigging of these schooners, and of another called the Robinson Crusoe, were brought to Valparaiso out from Boston in the brig Pearl. They were afterwards built, or put up by the mechanics of the Franklin; they being paid for their work by the accused. The Waterwitch was built at Arica; the Peruvian at Quilca; and the Robinson Crusoe at Juan Fernandez. It has been the invariable practice of the naval commanders of the United States, as well as of other nations, to permit their people to be employed in in the work, not only of citizens of the United States, but of foreigners also, provided their duties on board the national ship are not obstructed or neglected by such employment; and provided the persons to whom they render such services make them a proper remuneration. By the contract between the accused and the captain of the Pearl, which will be exhibited, the Peruvian became the property of the accused, and he paid for the work of the whole, according to the terms of the contract, besides making a payment of $500. This is the origin of these schooners, both of which were private property. Now, as to the service in which they were engaged: the charge is that while in the service of the United States they were employed in traffic, and carrying merchandise on private account. As to the Waterwitch, she never was at any time, or for anybody, to the knowledge of the accused, employed in any private traffic, or in carrying any merchandize, but was sent immediately on public service to Guayaquil. The services rendered by these schooners to the United States will be shown to be important, if not indispensable. As to the Peruvian, it has been already stated she was the private property of the accused. The only employment she had in traffic, or carrying merchandise on private account, was as follows, and at a time when the Peruvian was not, and never had been in the service of the United States; although she was about two months afterwards so engaged:

The Franklin, the Canton, and the Peruvian were at sea together; the Franklin being bound to Lima; the Canton to Guayaquil, for a cargo of cocoa; and the Peruvian being in tow of the Franklin, having been launched but a short time before, and not equipped. Captain O'Sullivan, then in command of the Canton, who had been rescued, as already mentioned, by the accused from capture by the Belgrano, was apprehensive he might again fall in with that vessel and be plundered of his goods, as her captain had threatened to take him whenever he could catch him. To avoid this danger, when the Canton was about to separate from the Franklin at sea, O'Sullivan requested permission to put certain bales of goods, all that were left of the cargo of the Canton, on board the Peruvian, not for the purpose of any trade or traffic, but merely for security, and to be restored to the Canton when she should afterwards meet the Peruvian at Quilca, to which port the Canton was to sail, after getting in her cocoa at Guayaquil. This was accordingly done; the goods were taken to Callao in the Peruvian, in tow of the Franklin, and afterwards from Callao to Quilca, but no attempt made to sell them, nor were they ever sold, or offered for sale or traffic there; but on the arrival of the Canton at Quilca, they were returned to her in the same state they had been received from her; taken by the Canton to New York; regularly landed there, paying duties, and conforming in all things to the laws of the United States.

It may be well to add in this article, that by the frigate Constellation, on her return to the United States, the accused had written to the Secretary of the Navy, informing him of the necessity or utility of having some small vessel in the service, for many objects which a ship so large as the Franklin could not perform. After this letter was sent, the Pearl put into Valparaiso, bound to the Sandwich Islands, with the frames, &c., before mentioned, on board, and the accused purchased them on the terms already stated. The Waterwitch, which did not belong to the accused, was first employed in the public service; and afterwards the Peruvian; but not at the time she took the goods on board. To be more explicit as to dates, the Waterwitch sailed, under the command of Lieutenant Henry, in the public service, from Quilca to Guayaquil, on the 26th July, 1822. She arrived at Callao on 2d September, and there found the Peruvian not yet fitted out. He remained in command of the Waterwitch until 26th September, when he transferred his crew and command to the Peruvian; from which time only she can be considered a vessel in the public service, which is about eight weeks after the goods were put on board of her.

We will be a little more particular on this subject. On the 5th May, 1822, the accused wrote to the Secretary of the Navy, thus:

"The present state of Panama would afford great facilities in communicating with Washington, but to effect it expeditiously an advice boat would be requisite on this side; say a small pilot boat, to be manned and officered from the ship, which could be rowed in the long calms to which the passage from Lima to Panama and back, is subject. It would therefore be advisable to send a vessel of that description round here, otherwise no communication could be kept up by that route, as it takes two months for a vessel-of-war of any other description to come from Panama to this place." On the 5th January, 1823, the accused adresses another letter to the Secretary. After speaking of the difficulty and uncertainty of obtaining opportunities to write to the United States, and his instructions enjoined upon him to make "frequent communications to the Department," he says: "I have been constrained to procure myself a pilot boat schooner, at my own expense, but officered and manned from the ship, which now enables me to forward to you by way of Panama, the dispatches. The usefulness of this vessel will be more evident to you, when the various services she has already performed will be seen by the accompanying orders." After a scrupulous investigation of these services, the Department was so well satisfied with their usefulness, that it paid Lieutenant Henry the extra allowance he was entitled to as her commander; in addition to which, she recaptured from pirates an American vessel and cargo, worth $60,000, for which no salvage was ever asked or received. It should be remarked, that except this extra pay to Mr. Henry, the employment of this schooner actually cost the United States nothing. The officers and men on board of her would have consumed the same provisions on the Franklin, and all the arms, &c., were returned to the Franklin. The true character and result of this operation was simply this: that the accused, in his zeal to perform efficiently the service he was sent on, procured this vessel for that service, but as his own property and at his own expense; knowing that if his government should not choose to take her, he could always dispose of her for, at least, her cost. The United States had the use of the vessel for about two years, without any charge for it; and when his service ended, the accused sold her so as to reimburse his advances. I hope it will not be thought miraculous or incredible that the commander of an American squadron should do thus much for the service he was engaged in. Let it not be forgotten, he gave the same account of this transaction he now gives, in his letter to the Secretary, when he was far from anticipating any censure for it, and could have no object to misrepresent his motives, and the schooner never was engaged in any but the public service. This act of liberal and gratuitous zeal is now converted into a high crime and misdemeanor! Let every man, hereafter, beware not to do more than his duty, however honorable and useful it may be.

Sixth Specification. With every disposition to give the prosecution the utmost latitude of accusation, and a determination to interpose no exception or objection to impede its course, which the most liberal mind might deem captious or evasive, the accused cannot avoid to remark that this specification is most unreasonably loose and general. It covers the whole period of his command in the Pacific, and every transaction in which he was engaged. No act is specified, no person, and no place. If this is sufficiently certain and definite to put the accused on his defence, no other specification seems to have been necessary—everything is included here. The accused is charged with aiding "the violators," none of whom are named, of the revenue laws of Peru, at "various times"—none designated—between the arrival of the Franklin in the Pacific, in February, 1822, and her departure, in 1824. What the aid was, to whom rendered, when or where rendered, is all a mystery; not a hint is given by which the accused, or anybody else, can discover with any precision what is alluded to, or would be proved under this specification. It is true, it goes on to allege, in terms equally general, that this aid was afforded by permitting "sundry persons" to carry from the shore, coin, bullion, plata pina, a d other articles, "contrary to the laws of the said government, without the permission, authority, or knowledge of the custom house officers and local authorities, and to deposit the said articles, so smuggled, on board the public vessels of the United States, then under the command of the said Charles Stewart."

It has been already stated that the cargo of the Canton, purchased by Captain Smith, was afterwards sold by him at Quilca and Arica, and regularly there landed through the custom house, and agreeably to the laws of the existing government. It is presumed that the specification now under consideration alludes to the proceeds of the sales of this cargo, consisting of coin, bullion, and plata pina, which were brought on board the Franklin. So far from this having been done with any concealment from the local authorities, or in fraud of the revenue laws of the country, or under any circumstances which resembled a smuggling transaction, it will be unquestionably proved that it was done with the permission, authority, and knowledge of the custom house officers and local authorities—nay, with their direct aid and co-operation—the regular duties being paid and satisfied to the government. The coin, bullion, and plata pina were brought down to the coast from a great distance in the interior, along the public roads, on about seventy mules, in open daylight, and was three or four days on the road. This is a new species of smuggling, a new mode of defrauding the revenue laws and local authorities of a country. It will be recollected that at this time these ports, as well as Arequipa and the adjoining country for several hundred miles on the coast and in the interior, were in the full and unquestionable possession of the royal authority, and under that authority all these transactions took place: and this is, perhaps, the grievance that has called out the complaints of those who were struggling for that authority, and who, had they been in possession of it, would have been treated with the some justice and respect. We look only to the "local authority," in whatever hands we may find it; the question of right the accused was not bound to fathom or decide, nor even at liberty to inquire into.

Seventh specification. This is liable to the same objection of generality and looseness with the preceding, as to times, places, and persons. It charges that specie, bullion and plata pina, and other articles, were, at varions times, brought on board public vessels of the United States, clandestinely and at night, designed to be transported from Peru in violation of the laws of that country. The specie, bullion, and plata pina received in payment of the cargo of the Canton, were brought down, as above stated, on mules from a great distance in the interior. It would sometimes arrive in the day and sometimes in the night, and was taken in boats on board the Franklin as it arrived. As patriot vessels-of-war were sometimes hovering on the coast, it was thought most prudent and safe to ship the specie, &c., immediately on its arrival. But this was so far from being done with an intention of smuggling or concealment from the custom house officers or local authorities, that it was done with their knowledge and aid and under their direction. In the case of the first arrival at night, the colonel commanding at Quilca went with Captain Smith to show him the points or places at which it would arrive, in order that Captain Smith might have his boats there ready to receive it, and dispatched a sergeant to meet the money and have it brought to the places designated by him. So little did the accused imagine that receiving money at night was an offence against the revenue laws, or evidence of fraud and smuggling, that in June, 1822, he wrote to the sub-delegate at Quilca, informing him that Captain Smith's bullion and specie were on the way from Arequipa; that he wished it to be immediately embarked; and, as it would probably arrive in the night, asks his excellency to give such orders to the guard as would prevent their mistaking the boats of the Franklin for those of the patriots, and such orders were accordingly given.

The specification further charges, that the money thus brought on board the public vessels of the United States, was afterwards, at sea, transported to certain vessels bound to distant ports, these vessels being then out of the control of the authorities on shore. After such vessels had passed the examination of the custom house officers, the design of this operation is declared to be, to defraud the laws of the government of Peru; and this is, in fact, the gist and substance of the whole specification. It is, therefore, abundantly obvious, that if the money, &c., in question, was put on board the Franklin by the permission and authority of the local authorities and its custom house officers, having, of course, satisfied all the duties and claims required by the laws of the country, it was wholly immaterial what was afterwards done with it, or whether the vessels in which it was placed were at sea or in port, or had not passed the examination of the custom house officers. It is conceded that this money, bullion, &c., was afterwards, at distant periods, and various places, put on board other vessels, to be transported to the United States to the respective owners to whom it belonged. At other places, to wit, Lima and Valparaiso, money and bullion were put on board the Franklin by citizens of the United States, and others, not parties to the war, on deposit for safe keeping, and afterwards returned to the owners as called for. Whether they had paid duties or not, the accused had no means of knowing, and was not bound to inquire. He was sent on his cruise to protect the commerce of the United States; to afford relief and protection to the citizens of the United States and their property, with no prohibitions or limitations but such as the laws of nations impose. The notorious fact, that the property of citizens of the United States had been violently seized, not only on shore, but from their vessels, not able to defend it, rendered it necessary for its protection that it should be placed on board a ship-of-war, whose force alone could intimidate the audacity of those plunderers, and protect the innocent from their rapacity.

Eighth specification, seems to be but as generalizing the various matters contained in the preceding specifications, or some of them; and the accused therefore refers, as a reply to it, to the answers already given.

Ninth specification, charges that the accused afforded extraordinary and illegal aid to the Canton and other vessels in which he was interested with Captain E. Smith, to the neglect of other vessels engaged in a lawful commerce, but in the profits of which he had no participation.

The accused afforded no aid to the Canton, but such as he has already detailed; and he denies that any part of it was either extraordinary or illegal, or such as he would not have promptly and faithfully afforded to any other American vessel in the same necessity. As to his connection, concern or interest with Captain E. Smith, in the Canton or her cargo, or any other vessel, or any participation in their profits, he has already distinctly and explicitly denied, and will fully maintain his denial. The accused is entirely ignorant, and denies that he neglected to afford protection to any vessel, in his knowledge, to which he was bound to afford it.

Tenth specification, charges that the accused purchased from the Canton, at Valparaiso, in April, 1822, ninety bolts of canvas, twenty-five and a half casks of wine, and three hundred and thirty-five pounds of copper nails, paints, oils, &c., ostensibly for the use of the Franklin, when they were not necessary for her, and in fact were not employed or consumed in her.

It is somewhat hard to call upon a commander of such a ship-of-war, on a station which imposed upon him such arduous, important and embarrassing duties and responsibilities, to account for every article, even to a few pounds of nails or gallons of oil, purchased for the ship, and which he is obliged to procure, not always on his own knowledge or investigation, but on the representations and requisitions of inferior officers, in whose departments these wants occur, or for which the articles are intended.

The accused, however, denying his responsibility for any excesses or errors of this kind that do not amount to a culpable negligence and inattention to his general superintending duty and authority, will give the best account in his power of the matters charged against him.

As to the canvas. He did purchase, or ordered to be purchased, ninety bolts of canvas, on the indent or requisition of the sailmaker; twenty-four of which were actually consumed on board the Franklin for her use, thirty were furnished to the Constellation, Captain Ridgely, and thirty-six were, on the request of the captain of the Canton, who became in want of them, returned to him, and for which he paid the purser of the Franklin, who has regularly credited the United States with the amount, in his accounts; and so far was the purchase of this article from being useless or unnecessary for the Franklin, and so far was she from being amply supplied with it, that it was necessary afterwards to make a further purchase of canvas for her, which has not found its way into this specification; perhaps, because it was not purchased of that obnoxious ship, the Canton. The wine mentioned in the specification was purchased at about fifty cents a gallon by Mr. Hogan, the American consul at Valparaiso, by order of the accused, to be used by the midshipmen of the Franklin, as a substitute for ardent spirits. It was also used, with the exception of two or three casks, which spoiled, and were converted into vinegar, which would have cost about double the price of the wine.

The other articles mentioned were purchased on the indent or requisition of the officers of the Franklin, and were, as the accused believes, either employed for her use, or remain as part of the public stores on board of her.

The actual purchase of all these articles was made by Mr. Hogan, the consul and agent of the United States at Valparaiso, to whom the requisitions or indents were sent by the accused, as he received them from his officers, and who made the purchases of such persons and on such terms as he thought proper. The accounts of Mr. Hogan, filed in the Navy Department, will show this.

Eleventh specification, does not seem to charge the mere causing or permitting the carpenters and other persons attached to the Franklin to be employed in working on board private vessels, as an offence or breach of duty; nor could it do so, as it is a constant and beneficial practice, not only in our service, but in others, both naval and military, to permit the mechanics and other persons attached to a ship-of-war to be thus employed. The grievance laid is, that this was done without any proper and adequate reason, and without any compensation to the individuals thus employed. As to the adequate reason, it is presumed that must depend upon the opinion and wishes and wants of the persons asking for such assistance, and who are willing to pay for it, and would not probably require it on such terms, without an adequate reason. The difficulty and frequent impossibility of obtaining workmen of this description in the ports of the Pacific, are known to many of the members of the court. In every case where the carpenters or other persons of the Franklin were employed in working on board private vessels, the individuals thus employed were compensated for their services by the persons by whom they were employed.

Twelfth specification, charges that the accused received Capt. E. Smith on board the Franklin, and permitted him to remain there nearly a year, engaged in private traffic, and that he employed the naval forces of the United States in subserviency to the views of said Smith. It need not be repeated that it is the constant practice of our service, and it is believed of every service, to take passengers on board our ships for their personal accommodation and business, provided they have no unlawful objects to be aided by this accommodation, and are either our own citizens or are neutral in relation to any subsisting war; nor is any possible inconvenience or wrong perceived in this practice, used with discretion and without inconvenience to the ship. The allegation that the naval forces of the United States were made subservient to the traffic or views of Capt. Smith, is utterly without foundation or truth. Capt. Smith came in the Constellation to Valparaiso on his private business, and it has never been charged as an offence against the honorable commander of that frigate. The principal object of Capt. Smith in going to Valparaiso, was to call upon the accused, and claim his aid in obtaining certain claims he had upon the government of Chili for property taken from him before the arrival of the accused, who was specially charged in his instructions to afford relief in such, and all other cases, to the citizens of the United States. While at Valparaiso, Capt. Smith received information that the brig Macedonian, the vessel in which he had sailed from the United States, with a cargo of about $90,000, belonging to American citizens, was seized by the authorities of Lima, then in the hands of the patriots. On the arrival, as above stated, of Capt. Smith at Quilca, this disastrous news was confirmed; and he requested the accused to take him in the Franklin, then going to Lima, to look after this property. The accused did not and could not refuse this request. He would have abandoned his duty and the orders of his government if he had. He took Capt. Smith to Lima, and this was the first time he was on board the Franklin, unless as a casual visitor. The passage to Lima occupied about seven or eight days, and Capt. Smith remained there with the Franklin about two months, endeavoring, with the aid and co-operation of the accused, to obtain a restitution of his property. The correspondence between the accused and the government at Lima will fully explain this transaction. The Franklin, with Capt. Smith, returned to Quilca, occupying in the passage about twenty-two days, and here Capt. Smith would have left her; but the accused advised him to go in her back to Valparaiso, and on this account: before the accused had first sailed from Valparaiso, he had opened a correspondence with the government of Chili on the subject of Smith's claim, which correspondence will be exhibited to the court. This correspondence the accused had sent to his own government by the schooner Amanda. He had seen it reported in the public papers that Lieut. Forrest was coming out with dispatches to him, and he thought it probable they might contain some information or instructions in relation to Smith's claim upon Chili, which he had communicated, as aforesaid, to our government. He therefore advised Capt. Smith to go with him to Valparaiso to meet any such instructions, should they arrive. Capt. Smith very naturally and judiciously took this advice; sailed in the ship, and arrived in a passage of about twenty-five days; he remained with her there about fourteen days; sailed to Juan Fernandez, where the ship was detained, not for the accommodation of Captain Smith, about a month; went back to Valparaiso and remained there three or four weeks, and then sailed to Quilca, where he arrived in about eight days, and then left the Franklin, where he would have left her long before, but for the friendly and disinterested advice of the accused. The court have now, with a minuteness certainly tedious and almost ridiculous, but rendered necessary by the charge, an account of all the time spent by Captain Smith on board the Franklin, with the views and objects entertained both by himself and the accused in making these passages.

As a final and decisive justification of the accused, for all the exertions he used to aid Capt. Smith in his endeavors to obtain redress for the loss of the Macedonian and her cargo, it will be sufficient to show that the owners of that property had presented a memorial to our government, praying its interference in enforcing their claims, and that our government accordingly sent a copy of the memorial to the accused, with instructions to give any aid in his power in obtaining satisfaction for them.

I appeal, confidently, to every member of this court, whether he has ever heard of any prohibition in our service, forbidding the commander of a national ship to take an American, or a foreigner, into his cabin, to feed him at his own table, at his own expense, without the cost of a cent to the United States, and carry him where he pleases in the due course of his cruise, provided, in the case of a citizen, his business and purposes are lawful, and in case of a foreigner, he be not a belligerent. True, indeed, the commander of a national ship shall not give the countenance and protection of his force to assist an American citizen in violating the laws of his own country, or invading the rights of another, nor shall he extend his assistance to any belligerent subject or citizen, to protect him against his enemy, for this, in a degree, would be to take part in the war; but, with these exceptions, who ever heard of its being criminal in a naval commander, in any service, to take a passenger in his ship, at his own expense, from one port to another, for nearly a year, or for ten years?

Of Captain Smith, whose presence, on board the Franklin, seems to have excited so much ire against her commander, it is but justice to say, that he has been entrusted with property to an immense amount, by some of the first commercial men in the United States; that this confidence was continued through the course of many years, in situations requiring a high degree of intelligence, firmness and integrity, and that to the last hour of his agency, he retained the respect of his principals unimpaired.

This specification does not charge anything unlawful in the objects or views of Captain Smith, while on board the Franklin.

Thirteenth specification. In reply to this specification, the accused denies that he ever employed the said E. Smith to carry dispatches, with the exception of the letter to General Ramirez, the reasons and circumstances of which have been already explained, which prevented a long and inconvenient detention of the Dolphin at Quilca, when on her passage to Lima; which saved to the United States all the expense of such delay, as well as of a messenger for a license to Arequipa, which was done by the said E. Smith, purely to oblige the accused, or rather, the service of the United States, and which afforded no advantage or facilities whatever, in the knowledge of the accused, or in his view when he sent the dispatches by the said E. Smith, to his private concerns. The accused denies that he ever employed the said E. Smith to board vessels, or perform other duties, which ought to have been executed by officers in the service of the government, unless the carrying the letter to General Ramirez, shall be so deemed.

Fourteenth specification. The manner in which certain bales of goods were put on board the Peruvian, from the Canton, and the purpose for which they were put there, and their subsequent return to the Canton, have all been explained in the reply of the accused to the 5th specification, and need not now be repeated. He has also stated that the Peruvian was not, at that time, a public vessel; and he denies the allegation, in this specification, that she was "ostensibly a public vessel" in any proper meaning of the terms. But let us meet this accusation in its most formidable attitude. What if, instead of these goods having been put in the Peruvian, they had been taken on board the Franklin, for no purposes of trade, but bona fide to preserve them from an impending danger, and were afterwards, when the danger was past, returned to their owner as they were received—whom has he offended? Whose rights invaded? What duty or law has he violated? As to the part of the specification which charges that the accused received and carried on board the Franklin the supercargo of the Canton, and samples of goods put on board the Peruvian, for the purpose of furthering the sale of the said cargo—he answers: that the said goods were not put on board the Peruvian for sale or trade, with any permission or knowledge of the accused, nor were they afterwards offered or used for such purposes, or so intended, with his permission or knowledge; and, of course, the samples mentioned were not brought on board the Franklin with the permission of the accused, to further the sale of the cargo, nor did he know they were brought on board, if they were so, nor were the samples ever exposed or used for any such purpose. The goods, consisting of nine or ten bales of silk, were put into the Peruvian, merely for protection and security against the threatened seizure by the captain of the Belgrano. Mr. Horatio G. Ward, who had been supercargo of the Canton, was employed by the accused, as his secretary or clerk, being acquainted with the Spanish language, and therefore ceased to be the supercargo of the Canton. He appears on the books of the Franklin, to be in her service, from the 1st August, 1822, which is the day after he came on board. Among the baggage of Mr. Ward, these samples of the silks were brought on board; but it was unknown to the accused.

And the accused further begs leave to submit to the consideration and decision of the court, whether it is a violation of any law of the United States, or of any regulation of the naval service, in the commander of a vessel-of-war to take on board his ship a citizen of the United States, with samples of goods really intended for sale by him, and for the purpose of using such samples in effecting such sales, provided the goods are not brought on board the national ship; nor is the ship permitted to deviate from her course in order to facilitate or subserve such objects and purposes; and such citizen has no illicit trade or transaction to be thus aided by the permission or knowledge of the commander. The accused, nevertheless, protests that he had no knowledge that the samples in question were brought on board the Franklin; that he gave no such permission, nor knew of any use made or intended to be made of them, for the purpose of furthering the sale of the goods represented by them.

Fifteenth specification. The accused avers that neither Captain John O'Sullivan nor Mr. H. Ward were received or permitted to remain on board the Franklin, for any long period of time, for the purpose of traffic, or any other purpose. They made occasional and short visits, as other persons did or might have done. In this answer he does not include the period during which the said Ward was employed as his clerk on board the Franklin.

Sixteenth specification. The facts of the transaction, alluded to in this specification, are these: Two horses were taken from Valparaiso to Quilca, one of which belonged to the accused, and was presented by him to a Mr. Cotera, residing at Quilca, in return for some small silver baskets of Indian manufacture, which he had given to Mrs. Stewart. The other horse belonged to Captain E. Smith, which he disposed of at Quilca, as he thought proper; but how or to whom was unknown to the accused. Neither of the horses had any equipments, not even a saddle and bridle, when disposed of as aforesaid. They were both taken on board, at Valparaiso, with the knowledge and permission of the governor of that place, to whom applicaiion for such permission was made, by Mr. Hogan, the American consul. The governor recommended that they should be taken on board at the public arsenal; and it was accordingly so done.

Seventeenth specification. This specification is already substantially answered. The people or mechanics of the Franklin, who were employed in building the schooners mentioned, were fully paid and remunerated for their work, by the accused; any articles taken for their use, and in fact none were taken but for the Peruvian, were afterwards replaced or returned by the accused. A vessel of the description of the Peruvian was required for the public service, and the accused had so informed his government, and the Peruvian was actually and usefully employed in such service.

Eighteenth specification. This specification charges that the accused permitted sails, &c., to be made for the use of the Canton, by the crew of the Franklin and other public vessels, and out of materials which had been purchased for the service of the government. The crew of the Franklin did make on board the Franklin certain sails for the use of the Canton, and they were made of the thirty-six bolts of canvas before mentioned, originally purchased from the captain of the Canton, and afterwards, on his falling in want of them, returned to him and fully paid for by him to the purser of the Franklin, who passed the amount to the credit of the United States. These were services which the accused always thought himself not only authorized but bound to render to his countrymen in need of them, and which he did render, and was always willing to render, to other American vessels, as well as the Canton, when it could be done without injury to the service or loss to the United States. The work done was always remunerated; and the materials used replaced or paid for.

Nineteenth specification. The accused admits that this specification is substantially true. The Dolphin was ordered to proceed from Callao to Guayaquil, to give protection to the commerce of the United States in that quarter. The sails made on board the Franklin for the use of the Canton, as mentioned in the answer to the last preceding specification, were not finished when the Canton sailed for Guayaquil, and the accused took the opportunity of the Dolphin to send them to the Canton. He also sent by the same opportunity $50,000, part of the proceeds of the cargo of the Canton, taken in at Quilca as aforesaid, and belonging to the house of Le Roy, Bayard & Co., of New York, and which Captain O'Sullivan informed him he wanted at Guayaquil. He also sent about $100,000 belonging to Mr. Lang. The sails and the $50,000 were delivered on board the Canton, and the $100,000 to Mr. Lang, who was then at Guayaquil.

When money or bullion were taken on deposit or for transportation, receipts or bills of lading were given for them, signed by the commander of the ship, which passed in those seas in the purchase of produce or goods as so much cash, it being the most convenient and safe mode of carrying funds from place to place, and being known the money would always be paid on presenting them to the ship. Thus when Captain O'Sullivan was going to Guayaquil for his cargo of cocoa, he took with him bills of lading, the same spoken of by Midshipman Hopkinson, for his specie on board the Franklin, intending to pay for his cargo with them. But, for some reason, he found at Guayaquil the money would do better, and therefore it was that $50,000 were sent to him in the Dolphin by Lieutenant Conner, who brought back to Captain Stewart the bills of lading canceled, as well as those of Mr. Lang.

Specifications twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three. These four specifications all relate to the affair of Lieutenant Weaver; and as they have been the subject of so much speculation and misrepresentation, and occupy so large and conspicuous a place among the charges now preferred against the accused, he will answer them with some care and attention, though with precison and brevity. The charges are:

1. That he permitted Lieutenant Weaver, borne on the books of the Franklin, to absent himself from the ship and from her duties, during the entire cruise, from September, 1821 until August 1824, without any necessity or excuse of a public nature.

2. That the accused approved certain muster rolls, by which it was made to appear that Mr. Weaver was performing his duties on board the ship, up to December 31, 1823, when the accused knew he was absent, engaged in his private concerns.

3. That the accused directed the purser to transmit to the Navy Department false and erroneous transcripts from the muster rolls, representing that Mr. Weaver was absent in charge of public stores at Callao, when no such entry was ever made in the original muster roll, and the accused knew said Weaver was not at Callao, and that there were no public stores there he could be in charge of.

4. That the accused caused the purser of the ship to enter on the muster roll, on or about the 16th November, 1824, that the said Weaver was absent without leave from 1st August, 1822, when the accused had approved the muster roll by which it was made to appear said Weaver was actually on board, up to 31st December, 1823.

The accused will answer all these matters by a simple and connected narrative of all the facts, in his knowledge, to which they relate, trusting that the court will apply it to the several parts, as shall be just and requisite.

It was expected that the Franklin would sail from New York about the 1st of September. The situation of Mr. Weaver's family made it desirable for him not to sail so soon. Accordingly, on the 1st September, 1821, he wrote to Captain Stewart: "Circumstances of a personal nature render it extremely desirable for me to remain a short time longer at New York, and to have permission to join the Franklin in the Pacific. I shall proceed in the ship America, bound to a port in that sea; which will be the earliest opportunity from this place." To this application, the accused, on the 5th September, replied: "Agreeably to your request, of the 1st instant, you are hereby permitted to remain in New York, and to proceed to the Pacific, to rejoin the Franklin there, by the earliest opportunity which may suit your convenience." It happened that, from a part of the crew of the Franklin having been found unfit for service, she was detained at New York beyond the time mentioned; and, in the meantime, certain stores, for the use of the Franklin, were, by order of the Department, put on board the America. This produced a second order from the accused to Lieutenant Weaver, dated on the 4th October, 1821, in which he directs him to take special charge of the stores; and, on his arrival at the port of anchorage, to have them stored and preserved until the arrival of the ship. The America, with Mr. Weaver and the stores, arrived at Callao; the stores were landed and stored; and, after waiting some time at Callao, Mr. Weaver, before the arrival of the Franklin there, returned to the United States, and never afterwards rejoined the ship.

The twentieth specification charges that the accused permitted Mr. Weaver to absent himself during the whole cruise. The only permission given is now before the court, and they will easily decide whether it is of the nature and extent alleged. It is true, Mr. Weaver has contended, in another place, that such was the construction he put upon his order; and that by it he was only to rejoin the ship, when he should find it convenient. Even on this construction, one cannot see how he was justified in never joining her at all. But how can this construction be maintained? In the first place, can any one imagine that the grant was intended to be larger than the request; that the indulgence was to surpass the desires of the person to be obliged? In Mr. Weaver's letter he only asks to be permitted "to remain a short time longer in New York," and "to have permission to join the Franklin in the Pacific." That is, that he should not be required to sail in the ship, but might go out by some other conveyance, and join the ship in the Pacific. Was he, then, not only to go out in another vessel, but, on his arrival there, was he to join the Franklin or not, according to what he might consider his convenience? Was he, instead of waiting the coming of the Franklin, and then to rejoin her, to land her stores, and return, about his private concerns or for his own pleasure, to the United States, and never seek or see his ship more? But the order of the accused on this subject is clear and decisive: "Agreeably to the request" of Mr. Weaver, and what that was we have seen, he is permitted to remain in New York, and to proceed to the Pacific, to "rejoin the Franklin there, by the earliest opportunity which may suit your convenience." That is, most obviously, that he is to proceed to the Pacific by the earliest opportunity which should suit his convenience, and to rejoin the Franklin on his arrival there. His convenience is consulted as to the mode and time of his conveyance to the Pacific; but his orders are positive, to rejoin the ship on his arrival there. The order admits of no other grammatical or reasonable construction. The twentieth specification is thus wholly disproved; and it is clear that the accused did not permit Mr. Weaver to "absent himself from the ship during the entire cruise," and when he did so, it was on his own responsibility, and without the leave or permission of the accused.

The twenty-first specification charges that the accused approved a certain muster roll of the 31st December, 1823, by which it was made to appear that Mr. Weaver was on board the ship, performing his duties, when the accused knew he was absent. It is true the accused did sign the muster roll alluded to, and that he did then know Mr. Weaver was absent.

The twenty-second specification charges that the accused caused the purser to return to the Navy Department false and erroneous transcripts of the muster rolls, representing that Mr. Weaver was in charge of stores at Callao, when the accused knew Weaver was not at Callao, and there were no stores there to be in his charge.

These two specifications will be answered and explained together.

It has been seen that Lieutenant Weaver had received leave of absence at New York; that he had been put in charge of stores, with which he was to rejoin the ship in the Pacific. The first muster roll returned after the sailing of the ship was sent by the pilot, and is dated "Off Sandy Hook, October 10, 1821." In this the remark opposite to the name of Mr. Weaver is "absent on leave, to join at Valparaiso, in charge of stores;" of this entry the words "in charge of stores" were made by the accused in his own handwriting, the rest is the writing of the purser or his clerk. The Franklin and the America met at Valparaiso in February, 1822, when the accused ordered Mr. Weaver to proceed to Callao with the stores, and accordingly, in the next muster roll made up and transmitted to the government, in March following, Mr. Weaver is returned as "absent on leave, in charge of stores at Callao."

The third muster roll made up and returned to the government bears date on the 31st October, 1822. Now let it be observed, as a circumstance decisive of all the doubt and difficulty that has arisen on this subject, that the accused arrived at Callao on the 1st of August, 1822, and then learnt that Mr. Weaver had been there, had landed the stores put under his charge, and had returned to the United States. We shall now see what was the understanding of the accused of the permission he had given Mr. Weaver, and whether he was disposed to indulge him with a violation of his order, or an extension of his permission at his own will and pleasure, and above all, whether he intended or desired that the government should be misinformed or deceived about the true situation of Mr. Weaver. This muster roll was brought by the purser to the accused with this remark annexed to the name of Mr. Weaver "on leave of absence," to which the accused added at the time, in his own handwriting, "in charge of stores to 1st August, 1822." This roll was transmitted to the Navy Department by the brig "Dick," but with some others has not been found in the Department; it fully apprised the Secretary of State of the fact about Mr. Weaver, that his leave of absence from the accused extended no farther than to 1st August, 1822, leaving it to the Department to take such course with Mr. Weaver as they should think proper. It was neither necessary nor proper that the accused should strike him off the books; it was enough for him to put his case in possession of the government to do as they should please with it, and his remaining on the books could not make his case better or worse, could give him no rights or claim upon the government if, by abandoning his duty, he had forfeited them, or made himself in any other way amenable to reprehension or punishment. His duty was to join the ship on her arrival at Callao, and he was in the breach of that duty from the arrival of the ship at that port, which was on the 1st of August, 1822; from that time the accused considered him a delinquent and so informed the government, and here his duty was fulfilled and ended.

But the difficulty and confusion of this part of the case arises from the muster roll returned 31st December, 1823, in which it is said to be entered that Lieutenant Weaver was absent then in charge of stores at Callao. This entry or remark is made by the purser, and not as the former one, by Captain Stewart himself. It is alleged by the accused, and he trusts it will be shown to the satisfaction of the court, to have been made by a mistake or misapprehension, by the purser, of the directions given to him by the accused, simply in omitting the date ordered to be added to the remark or entry. At a time when the accused was in some haste, he was asked by the purser what entry should be made for Mr. Weaver, when the accused replied, "enter him as absent on leave, in charge of stores at Callao, to the 1st August, 1822," adding that he knew him officially, or as an officer of the ship, only to that period, and, if he had returned to the United States, it was on his own responsibility, and he must answer to the government for his conduct.

The muster roll was signed by the accused on the natural but incautious presumption that the entry would be made as directed, without examining it for himself. It is absolutely incredible, unless on the supposition of insanity, that the accused, in December, 1823, should designedly make a return to his government that Mr. Weaver was then on leave of absence at Callao, in charge of stores, when in October, 1822, he had returned to the same Department that said leave extended only to the 1st August, 1822, when he knew that the stores were no longer at Callao, but had been taken on board the Franklin, and were, in fact, in whole or in part consumed; and when he knew that Mr. Weaver was in the United States, by his personal presence to give to the government a direct and decisive contradiction to such a return. Surely the accused must be acquitted of such preposterous, useless absurdity, which could deceive nobody; and, if it did, could answer no possible object for his benefit or that of anybody.

Finally, who can, under all these circumstances, say that the accused did knowingly make or sign a false muster roll; or execute, attempt, or countenance, any fraud against the United States, within the true spirit and meaning of the 18th article of the navy regulations? Some misunderstanding between the commander and the purser, some error or forgetfulness, has brought confusion into the transaction; but as to the willful and designed falsehood and fraud contemplated in the article, it is impossible to imagine them. When he signed the muster roll he believed it returned the true state of Mr. Weaver's case, and therefore he did not knowingly sign a false one. It is to prove for such errors that the word "knowingly" is introduced in the article.

The 23d specification, and the last on this subject, charges that, in November, 1824, the accused caused the purser of the ship to enter on the muster roll that Mr. Weaver was absent from the ship, without leave, from 1st of August, 1822, whereas the accused had approved the muster roll, by which it appeared that he was actually on board to 31st December, 1823.

We have already shown that the leave of absence given to Mr. Weaver actually expired on the 1st of August, 1822, and shown how the mistake occurred which represented him as in the service to the 31st December, 1823, a mistake certainly of the purser, and not of Captain Stewart; and the entry made on the 16th November, 1824, being according to the truth of the fact, to wit, that he was absent from the 1st August, 1822, without leave, was an injury to nobody, and cannot be a just ground of complaint. If the leave of absence did expire at the time mentioned, what ground of censure does it afford that it was so stated in the final muster roll of the ship, whatever might have been said by mistake or otherwise, in December, 1823? But there is an error in this specification in not distinguishing between the muster rolls and the muster books, or roll kept for the ship. The former are made up and signed by the captain, from time to time, as opportunities offer for transmitting them to the government; the latter is the record of the purser, kept by him, seldom if ever seen by the captain until the end of the cruise, and the entries made in which are not directed or examined by the captain. It is true the muster book and the muster rolls ought generally to correspond with each other, as the latter should be a transcript of the former. The captain, during the cruise, sees only the rolls prepared to be transmitted home, and, at the end of the cruise, the purser's book. It is the duty of the purser to see that they correspond. If they do not, it is his error and not ours. In this case, the purser, with his own hand, had recorded Mr. Weaver as "absent on leave," in his roll of March, 1823; and afterwards, in December, 1823, he represents him as on duty in the ship, although he knew he had not returned to her. Is not this, obviously, an unintentional error, and the error of the purser, not of the captain?

The accused, then, when he corrected the first muster roll signed after he had found Mr. Weaver had left the ship, might well suppose the purser had made the entry in the book to correspond with it, especially as he had in substance repeated the same thing to the purser on the 31st December, 1823. The muster book is not brought to the captain for his signature until the conclusion of the cruise. In the present case, this book was presented by the purser to the accused for his approbation and signature at the time mentioned; and then, for the first time, could he know that the proper entry had not been made of Mr. Weaver's absence, and therefore required it to be done before he would give his approval to the book; and if he had discovered any other error or omission in the book, it is presumed he would have withheld his signature until it was corrected, and made to appear according to the truth and fact of the case. The entry in question is according to the truth of the case as it actually occurred, and as it had been actually stated on the muster roll of October, 1822, and transmitted to the government. It was made at the proper time, to wit, when the book was presented to the accused for approval; and no injustice or injury has been done to anybody by the time and manner in which it was done.

Twenty-fourth specification. This specification charges that the accused permitted the purser of the Franklin, at the port of Arica, in June, 1822, to send on shore, for sale, large quantities of clothing and other articles brought on board for the use of the officers; and, by this means, when these articles were wanted for the officers they could not be procured from the purser.

The clothing alluded to was the private property of the purser, taken on board by him at New York to be sold to the officers of the ship, and for their use and accommodation; without any, the most distant expectation or design of using them for any other purpose, or selling them to any other persons. Of course, in taking these articles on board, there was no infraction of the regulation which forbids the commander of a vessel to receive, or permit to be received, on board of his vessel, any goods or merchandise, other than for the sole use of his vessel. The subsequent disposition of a part of these articles took place in a manner and for reasons which will be briefly detailed.

The unfortunate loss of seven or eight of the officers of the ship, by the upsetting of a boat at Quintare, will long be remembered and lamented. A further diminution of the officers of the Franklin was made by the return of a number to the United States in the Constellation. The consumers or customers for the clothing taken on board by the purser, were thus considerably reduced; and the extravagant prices required at the ports in the Pacific for washing, induced the officers to prefer articles that did not call for that operation so frequently as white drilling pantaloons and marseilles vests. Under these circumstances the purser found himself in possession of a much larger stock of these articles than he was likely to sell on board the ship. In a conversation between the purser and Capt. O'Sullivan, of the Canton, this subject was adverted to, and Capt. O'Sullivan offered to take such articles as were considered surplus, on board his ship and endeavor to dispose of them for the purser, to persons from time to time coming on board the Canton. They were accordingly sent there, consisting of some fine shirts, black silk vests, drilling pantaloons, and marseilles vests. After this, Capt. O'Sullivan, alarmed at the approach of the Belgrano, and fearing to be plundered by her, sent these articles on shore with some of his own, where they were thrown into the custom house; part of them were afterward stolen from thence, by some soldiers, and the remainder sold. Upon the whole, the purser never received, by several hundred dollars, as much for them as they had cost him in New York. It was all fine clothing, suitable only for the officers, and instead of the officers suffering any inconvenience for the want of these articles, many were brought home in the ship; there being still a surplus of them, with the exception of the black silk vests, of which more were afterwards wanted than were on hand. It is necessary only to add that the permission of the accused went no farther than to allow the articles to be taken on board the Canton; all that was subsequently done with them was without any participation, permission, or knowledge on his part.

Twenty-fifth and twenty-sixth specifications. The accused has no knowledge of the matters alluded to in these specifications, nor can he even conjecture to what transactions they refer; and he certainly does not hold himself responsible for wrongs or irregularties of this description, committed on board his ship by persons unknown to him, and of which he has no knowledge or means of knowledge. That he neither caused, nor permitted such things to be done, he avers most explicitly.

As to the beggarly account given by the gunner, of some musket cartridges and match rope sent to the Canton, under an expectation that they would be replaced by others, the accused heard of them here for the first time. They were not entered, as the specification alleges, "as expended for the Franklin in the regular course of public service;" and if they were, he had nothing to do with it. He neither sent them, or caused them to be sent.

Twenty-seventh specification. This specification charges the accused with causing or permitting a number of hoops and other materials belonging to the government to be used; and the crew of the Franklin to be occupied in making kegs to hold specie, and not accounting to the government for the money received on account of the said kegs.

As to the money paid for the work of the crew, in making those kegs, it is presumed it belonged to those of the crew by whom the work was done, and no account of it to the government was required. Of the materials, consisting of some iron hoops and the staves of broken up beef barrels, an account will be given with as much seriousness as such a charge will admit of. The facts, as far as they are known to the accused, are these: a number of barrels or kegs, amounting to about 30 or 35, were made up, to put the specie in on board the vessel, with the cast-off staves of barrels that had contained beef for the ship, and had been broken up and cast aside, as the beef was consumed. Whether they would have been thrown overboard or used for fuel, if they had not been made into kegs for the specie, cannot now be settled. The iron hoops for those kegs did belong to the government, as asserted in the specification, and the only question is whether they have been accounted for. On the first opportunity that occurred, other iron hoops, greater, it is believed, in number, were purchased from what is called the slush fund, and restored to the ship, to replace those taken as aforesaid; and this slush fund was reimbursed this advance by the money received from the owners of the specie which was placed in the kegs. It has so happened that many of these kegs were not afterwards used for the specie, being found of insufficient strength, and they remained with the Franklin, and were used for water casks for the boats, &c. Thus, it is clear that by this operation the Government of the United States was a gainer by some dozen or two of iron hoops; having first received back as many, or more, as had been taken, and afterwards got some of her own again, round the kegs not used for specie. We will not charge the government with never having accounted for these hoops. After all, these are small matters to occupy the time and grave attention of such a court as this. Thirteen post captains, the foremost men in the country, called from their stations and homes to inquire into the loss of a few old staves and iron hoops! The commander of a seventy-four brought up like a petty pilferer to answer such a charge! The accounts of a slush fund to be audited by such a board! Was a slush fund ever so honored before?

Twenty-eighth specification. Of this specification, and the several matters alluded to in it, the accused has no knowledge. Certainly he never sent, or caused or permitted to be sent, on board the Canton any of the articles mentioned belonging to the government, to the injury or loss of the government. Whatever was done of this description, with his permission, has been already explained; and the articles were either paid for or returned.

Twenty-ninth specification. The accused gives the same denial of any permission or knowledge of the facts charged in this specification, with the exception of a saw which he permitted Captain Smith to have from the Franklin, at Quilca, on a promise to procure another to replace it, at Valparaiso; at which place Captain Smith endeavored to obtain one, but it was not to be had, and he was therefore obliged to postpone it until the return of the ship to New York, when and where he purchased another saw and delivered it to the Franklin. The United States have thus most happily got a new saw for an old one.

CHARGE II.

Specifications one, two, three, four, and five of this charge are but repetitions of those made under the first charge, and which have been already fully explained and replied to in the answers to those specifications. The accused begs leave to refer to those answers, and that they may be applied as shall be suitable to these specifications of the second charge.

Specification sixth. The sixth specification introduces new matter, and requires a distinct reply. Although in the beginning it broadly charges the accused with receiving on board the Franklin, and other vessels under his command, at various times, without the jurisdiction of the government of Peru, certain persons, obnoxious to capture and punishment, spies and officers of the royalist army; and with protecting these persons, spies and officers, from seizure and punishment; yet it is at last narrowed down to the case of an individual by the name of Madrid, who is alleged to be an officer in the royalist army; a spy in Lima; and the director, or late director, of the mint. It is now understood that the director of the mint was not Madrid, but another person received and protected on board the Franklin.

None of the various charges against the accused have been so much misrepresented and misunderstood as this. It has been the theme of every foul tongue and fouler press in the country. Bribery and corruption have been assigned as the motive of the act; and disastrous misfortunes to the patriots of South America as its consequences. The public ear has been abused with a grossness of falsehood almost without precedent. We reply not to these calumnies. They are foul vapors that can never rise to the elevation of this court, and can do us no prejudice here.

The history of the man called Madrid, as far as the accused has been able to obtain it, is this: He was at Rio Janiero with the intention of going from thence to Spain. A Spanish lady there, the Countess of Villehermosa, was desirous of going to Arequipa, where her son and friends resided, and Madrid was induced by her to accompany her on her voyage for her protection and as her attendant. They sailed from Rio Janeiro in an Italian vessel for Arica, from whence they were to go to Arequipa by land. The Italian vessel arrived at Arica, and was immediately there captured and taken to Callao by a patriot brig; Madrid never having been on shore at Arica, or any of the Intermedios, or had any communication with the government, or any of its officers, for whom it is alleged he was acting as a spy, and being taken forcibly as a prisoner to Callao by the patriots.

The Franklin was then at Callao; the lady having obtained a passport from San Martin, landed there and proceeded to Arequipa by land, but the Spaniard, her attendant, was afraid to expose himself to the danger of attempting the journey with her, having no passport; being of old Spain, and probably a royalist, however innocent his views, his person would have been in danger. The lady, in whose service he had fallen into these misfortunes, felt herself strongly bound to afford him all the relief in her power, and accordingly wrote a letter to Mrs. Stewart, the wife of the accused, then on board the Franklin, begging her to give this man a passage to Quilca, that he might join her at Arequipa. This letter was brought to the Franklin by the man himself, just as the ship was getting under way, and the boat that brought him left him there as soon as he was put on board. Mrs. Stewart yielded to the solicitations of her friend, the lady with whom she had made acquaintance at Lima; enforced by the earnest entreaties of the man himself, in whose appearance there was nothing to excite the least suspicion that he could be of any importance, or that giving him the passage would do wrong or injury to anybody. Still, as it was a fault committed against the regulations and discipline of the ship, and believing nobody had the least interest in it but herself, she was unwilling it should be known to the accused. She put this man into the pantry under the care of the steward, directing him to give him food. He was so destitute of clothing, that the steward, from mere charity, gave him a shirt and cravat, a roundabout coat and a pair of trowsers, all of his own property. On the other hand, this poor creature assisted the steward in his work, by cleaning knives and candlesticks, and in every way he could make himself useful. A boat was obtained from another vessel, into which boat Madrid was taken though one of the port-holes of the Franklin, and put on shore, having, however, remained on board seven or eight days after the arrival of the ship at Quilca; which he would hardly have done, if he had been a spy, returning from the execution of his mission, or had any interesting intelligence to communicate to the royalists. Some time after, he was seen at Arequipa in the same dress and miserable appearance as when he left the Franklin; and if he was indeed the great character he is now represented, he had a singular way of showing it.

Such is all the information the accused has been able to obtain of this affair. He most solemnly assures the court, and he will prove it, as far as a negative proposition is capable of proof, that he was as utterly and entirely ignorant of the whole transaction as any member of this court, and that it was nearly twelve months after it took place, it was first communicated to him. He immediately wrote a letter to the Navy Department, stating the thing as he had heard it, and the very writing this letter, and the expressions of surprise and indignation contained in it, afford strong, if not irresistible evidence of the truth and sincerity of his statement and feelings on the occasion.

In this letter, we see the pride of feelings of the husband, whatever the struggle may have been, overthrown by the duty of the officer; and the indiscretion of his wife exposed rather than that his honor should be impeached by the concealment of a transaction from the government which it was his duty to communicate.

The first information this government had of it, as far as we know, was from the accused. The man remained on board the Franklin eight or ten days after her arrival at Quilca, being under no such haste to quit her, as it is presumed a spy or officer of high rank would have been; nor is it known or believed that while at Callao he either had or sought any means of obtaining information to be used for either of the parties in the war; nor has it ever been heard or understood that he ever gave to either party any information or any subject or matter connected with the war or its operations. And here is the whole foundation of the vast fabrick of fraud and corruption, of the abandonment of duty, and the violation of belligerent rights, which has been so long the object of wonder and indignation! Does not the bosom of every soldier, of every gentleman, receive a shock, to find the too ardent, if you please, the indiscreet, humanity of a lady, assume the shape and character of a criminal charge against her husband? Is her humanity to become his dishonor? her sensibility his disgrace? When the facts are disclosed, the most active malice can discover no mischievous design; no sordid or corrupt motive, no intention of wrong or injury to anybody. It was truly an "unbought grace." So far as the innocence of the act depends upon motive and intention, it was innocent; so far as it depends upon the absence of any selfish, interested or unworthy object, it was innocent; so far as it depends upon injurious consequences, it was innocent. It was one of those technical errors which the law may condemn in those who were concerned in it, but is not to be imputed to the accused, who was ignorant of it; and which, under all its circumstances, the best heart will feel most disposed to excuse, if not to applaud. It was an offence against the discipline of the ship to take anybody on board, without the knowledge of her commander; but it had no possible reference, either in intention or fact, to belligerent rights or neutral duties. It may have snatched one miserable victim from a cruel and useless death, by an unlicensed soldiery or infuriated mob, who, in times of civil conflict, seize on any pretence to persecute and destroy.

Specification seventh. The accused has not the least knowledge, nor can he even conjecture to what transactions this specification refers; and he can, therefore, give it no more than an absolute and explicit denial.

CHARGE III.

Specification first, under this charge, relates to the affair of Lieutenant Weaver, to which the accused has already given his full answer.

Specification second, charges that whereas Lieutenant H. B. Sawyer did exhibit certain charges and specifications against Lieutenant Conner, yet the accused neglected or omitted to notice them. The 35th article of navy regulations declares that "general courts-martial may be convened as often as the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Navy, or the commander-in-chief of the fleet, or commander of a squadron, while acting out of the United States, shall deem it necessary." The propriety, then, of calling a court on charges exhibited, is properly left to the discretion of the President, the Secretary or the commander, as the case may be; and it is believed to be now, for the first time, pretended that if, in the exercise of this discretion, the commander should determine not to call a court on charges exhibited to him, he would himself, by the refusal, become liable to be tried and punished by a court-martial himself. If courts are to be called upon every complaint made in a ship-of-war, the officers will have little else to do but to try one another. If, indeed, the court is refused, from any corrupt motive, the commander, in like manner with any other judicial officer, may be amenable for his conduct. This specification charges no such motive, but is placed on the simple footing of an exhibition of charges against an officer on board the Franklin, and the omission of the accused to have them inquired into; for which he will show satisfactory reasons, if required, although it is presumed none can be necessary. The President of the United States, and the Secretary of the Navy, will, hereafter, be liable to the same accusation, if it is to be established that the refusal of a court-martial, when charges are exhibited by anybody and under any circumstances, shall be deemed an offence; and the discretion, apparently given to these high officers to decide when the court shall be granted and when denied, is a mere mockery and trap.

Specification third. To this specification the accused answers, that his ship and his guns were always in a proper state for action, and his men as regularly and properly exercised at quarters as circumstances required and would admit. He presumes these matters were intrusted to his discretion and judgment, which he exercised with fidelity and his best ability.

He hopes he may appeal, with no unbecoming pride, to his past conduct and experience, to prove that an enemy always found his guns in a proper state for action, and himself willing and able to use them to maintain the honor of his flag.

CHARGE IV.

Specification first. The proceedings of the accused, in the case of Lieutenant Sands, were necessary to the peace and order of the ship, which the accused was bound to preserve by the use of the authority given him for this purpose. The persevering and refractory obstinacy of Mr. Sands, rejecting the proffered indulgence of the accused, made those measures necessary which are now termed by him "cruel and oppressive." The circumstances of this case will be laid fully before the court. For the present I will barely state the principle which, it appears to me, will judicially decide this specification. We must keep in view that "cruelty and oppression" are very different from rigor and severity. The former imports something beyond the exercise of a lawful authority; the latter are consistent with a strict enforcement of it. Whether an officer has been cruel and oppressive must be decided by applying to the law, and the power held by him under it. Whether in the use of that power he has been rigorous and severe, is a matter of opinion, of which he had a right to judge, depending on various circumstances, about which men will differ according to their dispositions and temperaments. A judge has the power to inflict a greater or lesser punishment in any given case; to impose a fine of fifty or of five hundred dollars. He imposes the latter when others think the former would have been sufficient for the offence. We may say he is severe, but not that he is cruel or oppressive, for the law justifies it; and that which the law justifies cannot be an offence. But the truth is, that the accused did no more, in the case of Sands, than Mr. Sands himself made indispensable. There was every disposition to relieve him, but he would not unless in his own way. The inferior officer who would make terms with his commander—who will agree to obey him only at his own time, and on his own conditions, must be made to submit, or all subordination is at an end. Mr. Sands had his treatment in his own hands; he chose to suffer rather than to yield.

The accused has thus endeavored truly to place in the view and understanding of the court a plain and frank recital and exposition of all the facts, in his knowledge, connected with the charges he is called upon to answer. He has added no more comment or argument than seemed to be necessary to make the ground of his defence clear and intelligible. He trusts and believes the testimony of the case will maintain his statements, and it will then be seen how securely he may rest himself on the truth of his case, and with what confidence he may expect an honorable acquittal from the honor and justice of his judges.

If these charges be true,—if but a tithe of them be so,—the accused has plunged into dishonor and guilt with an unexampled rapidity and desperation. He has, in a few short months, for the most mean and paltry considerations, overthrown a reputation reared by the hard and honorable service of seven and twenty years, identified with the glory of his country and entwined with the brightest deeds of her fame. Has he passed through every grade of naval service, without an imputation or complaint, to fall into such a foul sink as this? You will have it well proved before you believe it.

The accused cannot forbear to conclude this opening of his case and defence with some striking remarks of a distinguished writer on naval and military courts-martial. "It must be revolting," says McArthur, "to every feeling mind to remark, during the last few years, the frequent instances of trials at naval and military courts-martial held on officers of the most meritorious and unimpeachable characters, and some, indeed, founded on charges derived from communications made by some anonymous writer or despicable informer. The compensation is poor indeed to the tortured feelings of an innocent officer, to be thus dragged before a tribunal of justice, and, after much anxiety, to have the charges pronounced unfounded, frivolous and vexatious."

BOSTON, September 4, 1821.

Commodore Stewart, New York:

SIR: There is a claim upon the government of Chili of the owners of the brig Macedonian, of this place, captured about two years since by Lord Cochrane. Mr. Forbes was fully instructed concerning it, and at the request of Mr. John S. Ellery, one of the owners, and in their behalf, a copy of their memorial containing their representation of their claim has been forwarded to you from the Department of State. I have only to add the request that you would give any aid in your power, should the occasion present itself, to favor by good offices the obtaining of satisfaction to this claim.

I am, with great respect, sir, your very humble and obedient servant,

J. Q. ADAMS.

To the honorable John Quincy Adams, Secretary of State of the United States:

The memorial of John S. Ellery and others, of Boston, in the commonwealth of Massachusetts, citizens of the United States, respectfully represents:

That on the fifth of February, A. D. 1818, the brig Macadonian, commanded by Eliphalet Smith and owned by the said John S. Ellery, sailed from Boston with a cargo on board amounting in value to the sum of one hundred and sixteen thousand one hundred and forty-four dollars and sixty-four cents, belonging to your memorialists, on a voyage to the coasts of Chili, and Peru, and Canton. On the twentieth of the succeeding May the Macedonian arrived at Coquimbo, in Chili; from thence she proceeded to Valparaiso. A small portion of the cargo was sold at Coquimbo and Valparaiso, but not being able to dispose of the cargo in Chili, and hearing that an embargo was about being laid on all vessels in Valparaiso, Captain Smith left that place in September of the same year, and went to Tongo Bay to procure seamen, and sailed from thence in said brig to Callao, the seaport of Lima, where he arrived on or about the twentieth of the following October. On the twenty-seventh of the same October, Captain Smith sold the residue of the cargo of the Macedonian to the agents of the Phillippine Company, at Lima, for the sum of one hundred and forty-five thousand dollars, to be paid on the thirty-first of January then next, on board the Macedonian; and Captain Smith agreed to deliver the cargo at any place on the coast from Callao to Panama, where the said agents might direct.

The purchasers required that a portion of the cargo should be delivered at Panama, and Capt. Smith, in the beginning of December, 1818, put the Macedonian under the command of the chief mate, being himself compelled by his business to remain at Lima, and ordered her for Panama. General Osorio, who was going to Spain for his health, with his wife (the daughter of the Viceroy of Peru,) and three children of the Viceroy, embarked as passengers, on board the Macedonian, for Panama. In consequence of taking these passengers on board, Captain Smith received letters of recommendation from the Viceroy, by means of which he hoped to procure a profitable freight for the said brig, from Panama to Callao, on her return.

The Macedonian was not able to get into Panama with safety, but landed her passengers on the coast, about twenty leagues from Panama, and returned to Callao, about the last of January, 1819; here she was new coppered, and preparations were made for proceeding to Canton.

Before the Macedonian had received on board the specie or bullion from the agents of the Phillippine Company, that is to say, on the 1st of March, 1819, Lord Cochrane appeared off Callao, with a squadron belonging to the government of Chili, and, by the authority of the same, declared Callao, and the whole coast of Peru, in a state of blockade. At this time the agents of the Phillippine Company had put on board certain vessels in the port of Callao sixty-two thousand dollars, for the purpose of having the same delivered on board the Macedonian, agreeably to their contract. After the arrival of Lord Cochrane, Captain Smith refused to receive this money on board the Macedonian; but agreed to receive it on shore, a permit for its landing having been obtained from the Viceroy, with a license to embark it at any point on the coast which Captain Smith might think proper. Captain Smith accordingly received this sum, and forwarded it, under the care of his agent, to Guamey. On the eighth of said March, the Macedonian left Callao, in charge of the first mate, and proceeded to Guamey, to which place Lord Cochrane gave permission for all neutral vessels to proceed to obtain provisions, water, &c.

Captain Smith remained at Lima, and, on the eighteenth of said March, settled his accounts with the agents of the Phillippine Company, and received the balance due him, amounting to eighty thousand dollars. With this sum Captain Smith left Lima on about the twenty-seventh of said March, taking with him two soldiers to protect him from robbers. On the 5th of April, 1819, on his way to Guamey, he was surrounded by about forty armed soldiers belonging to Lord Cochrane's ship, the O'Higgins, who took him prisoner and carried him on board the O'Higgins, with the said sum of money, excepting a portion thereof, which they left, notwithstanding the remonstrance of Capt. Smith, who informed their commanding officers of the amount he was about to leave; that if so left it would be lost to him, (the said Smith,) and that he should hold the said officer, or those under whose authority he was acting, responsible for the same. Capt. Smith was kept a prisoner on board the O'Higgins until the eighth of said April, and for twenty-four hours after the arrival of the said ship at Guamey, without being permitted, though he requested it, to visit the Macedonian, and he was informed by Lord Cochrane, that unless he would sign a certificate disclaiming all title to the property thus captured he should keep him prisoner, and carry him to Chili; and refused, at the same time, to take possession of the Macedonian. Thus situated, to regain his liberty and rejoin his ship, and in the hope, also, of being able to save the before-mentioned sixty-two thousand dollars, which he then supposed was on shore in charge of his agent, Capt. Smith signed the paper required, believing, at the same time, that a paper thus extorted from him would be entitled to no consideration in a court of justice.

After Capt. Smith had signed this certificate, he was suffered to go on board the Macedonian. Here he was informed that the sixty-two thousand dollars which he had sent to Guamey under the charge of Don Francisco Sarnine, after the news of his capture had reached Guamey, was put on board the French brig Gazelle, in the hope that it might escape the pursuit of Lord Cochrane, and reach a place of safety. This hope proved fallacious; the Gazelle was captured by Lord Cochrane, who took out the money and induced her captain to sign another certificate, by causing him to believe that he would otherwise be kept a prisoner, and eventually lose his vessel. Having done this, he was suffered to return to Guamey in his vessel to transact his business.

In this manner did Lord Cochrane possess himself of the property of your memorialists, very valuable in itself; but much more so, as it afforded them the means of prosecuting a voyage, the successful termination of which would have been extremely profitable, and which was thus entirely ruined and broken up.

In addition to the documentary evidence already transmitted to the Department of State, in proof of the above facts, your memorialists beg leave also to refer to the affidavit of George Lewis, the chief mate of the Macedonian, recently returned from Peru, and taken before the district judge of this district, which is herewith transmitted.

The capture and confiscation of the property taken with Captain Smith is attempted to be justified by Lord Cochrane, in his dispatch of the 8th of April, 1819, to the Chilian government, on various grounds, viz: that it was captured from the hands and under the protection of hostile soldiers; that this money belonged to the Phillippine Company; and lastly, that Captain Smith was not entitled to the immunities of a citizen of the United States, but must be considered an active agent serving the Viceroy of Peru.

Your memorialists cannot but express their surprise at the extraordinary nature of this dispatch of the admiral of Chili, which seems to have anticipated the judgment of a regular court of prize, and to have been intended to ensure a condemnation.

According to the laws and usages of modern warfare, among civilized nations, the property of individual citizens of a belligerent country is not subjected to pillage and plunder from the other belligerent on land, much less should the property of a neutral, which would be restored if captured on the seas, on board the ship of an enemy, be confiscated when captured within the country of the enemy, and accompanied by the neutral. The two soldiers who accompanied Captain Smith, to afford him some protection from thieves and lawless robbers on the road from Lima to Guamey, he had a right to employ; and in so doing he cannot be considered as having forfeited his neutral rights, or as having acted in derogation of the belligerent rights of the Chilian government. The belligerent rights of Chili can hardly be supposed to extend to a territory in the full possession and occupation of the government of Peru; and if Captain Smith could have apprehended that he should have been met by any of the forces of Chili, it is idle and ridiculous to suppose that he hired two soldiers for his protection against any such force. No resistance is pretended, and resistance would have been utterly ineffectual. The supreme court of the United States, in the case of the Nereide, (9 Cranch Reports, 388,) on the claim of Manuel Pinto, a native of Buenos Ayres, restored his property, though captured on board an armed ship of the enemy, which was chartered by him, he being on board, and although resistance was made by such ship, though not by him personally at the time of the capture. Your memorialists are satisfied that there is no foundation for the suggestion that this property belonged to the Phillippine Company. By the contract of sale between Captain Smith and the agents of this company, to avoid the risk of contraband on the part of Captain Smith, payment was to have been made by said agents on board the Macedonian; yet as Captain Smith after the blockade refused to receive a portion of this money on board his ship, but received it on shore, as before mentioned, and on the 18th of March, 1819, settled his final account with the agents of the said company, and received from them the balance due him, there can be no doubt but that the Phillippine Company became discharged from their debt by such delivery and payment, and that the loss of this property, in the possession and custody of Captain Smith, or his agents, is a loss which must fall on Captain Smith or your memorialists. No principle of justice or law is known to your memorialists which will enable them to resort again for payment to the Phillippine Company. That such must have been the view of Lord Cochrane himself upon this subject, is apparent from the fact that he deemed it necessary to procure from Captain Smith, by the most unlawful means, a certificate, purporting that until this money was on board the Macedonian, it was at the risk of the Phillippine Company; for it is hardly to be credited that an officer of high rank should have resorted to such a mode of procuring such evidence if he had believed himself in possession of papers which sufficiently proved this property to belong to this company.

Lord Cochrane represents that this certificate was given by Captain Smith, as his voluntary act, "after cool reflection, finding all his remonstrances and efforts unavailing." "After this confession (says Lord Cochrane,) Mr. Smith was satisfied, and this day went on board his own vessel." From this account, it would seem that Captain Smith, after remonstrating against the capture of himself and his property, and using all his efforts to save it, should, "after cool reflection" determine to sign a certificate in contradiction to all his previous statements, and so as to ensure its condemnation, and having done this "he was satisfied" and returned to his own vessel! A representation of conduct so extraordinary and contradictory, is not easily to be credited. When Captain Smith is heard in his own vindication it appears that, finding all his remonstrances and efforts unavailing to procure his release, he was compelled to sign the certificate that he might be allowed to go on board his own vessel, and save the residue of the property entrusted to his care from destruction.

By what right or color of authority the admiral of Chili thus imprisoned an American citizen, and threatened to separate him for a long period from the vessel of which he had the command, your memorialists will leave to their government to determine. To government also will they leave the question how far the property of their citizens is to be put in jeopardy or condemned by evidence thus obtained. According to this code of prize law, there will be little difficulty in converting all neutral property into good prize: the same force which makes the capture can procure the evidence, and the injured, insulted, and plundered neutral be left with an empty ship, to get home as he can, and seek for redress by the interposition of the government of his country. The facts stated by Lord Cochrane to prove that Capt. Smith was an active agent serving the Viceroy of Peru are, that he went secretly from Valparaiso and was employed to convey to General Osorio, at Panama, correspondence of great importance, and his services are acknowledged and recommended by the Viceroy in the papers adverted to.

It is not true that Capt. Smith conveyed to General Osorio, at Panama, any correspondence; the reason why he left Valparaiso has been before stated; it was to avoid an embargo, and because he could not there sell his cargo. He left Valparaiso in September, arrived at Callao in October, and remained there until December. The Macedonian then sailed for Panama, having on board General Osorio, his wife, and three children of the Viceroy as passengers. These services were acknowledged probably by the Viceroy, and such recommendations obtained by Capt. Smith as might enable the Macedonian, in case of her arrival at Panama, to procure a return freight. She never reached Panama, but returned to Callao, and there remained until the blockade of that place. Capt. Smith appears only as the active agent of your memorialists, and engaged in furthering the objects of his voyage. The reason of his sending the Macedonian to Panama has been stated, and as he was not to receive payment for his cargo until the 31st of January, 1819, he was, no doubt, disposed to employ his ship in earning some freight in the meantime. If the taking on board these passengers for Panama was unlawful, the penalty was to the ship, and not to property not then on board the ship, but captured on shore several months after the return of the Macedonian to Callao, and after the termination of the intended voyage to Panama. Your memorialists, however, believe that the law of nations permits a neutral to carry the persons, as well as the property, of the enemy, and that while engaged in his own commercial purposes, it will not be unlawful for him, as incidental to the same, to take on board persons in the service of the enemy, who may wish to avail themselves of his ship to get transported from one part of their country to another. But should a neutral charter his vessel to one belligerent, as a transport to carry the officers or soldiers of such belligerent, it would subject his vessel to confiscation, if captured by the other belligerent while in such service. These principles are recognized in the British high court of admiralty, in the cases of the Friendship, by Robinson's Reports, page 420; and the Orozimbo, same book, page 430. The confiscation of the sixty-two thousand dollars, captured on board the brig Gazelle, is defended by Lord Cochrane, in his dispatch of the 13th of April, 1819, first, as privately shipped; secondly, as property captured on an enemy's coast, without any ostensible owner; and, lastly, as an infringement of blockade. If this money had been privately shipped on board the Gazelle, this is no forfeiture of neutral, nor any offence against belligerent rights. It might have been an offence against the municipal laws of Peru, but could not subject the property to confiscation in the prize courts of Chili. The second reason is equally unfortunate, when the fact is taken into consideration that this money was found on board a neutral vessel, and was therefore to be presumed the property of a neutral, in the absence of all proof to the contrary; the most that could have been required in such a case was, that the claimant should give further proof of property before he could be entitled to restoration. The last reason assigned is an infringement of blockade. Your memorialists do not deem it necessary that they should enlarge much on this topic. The legality of paper blockades has too recently engaged the attention of the government of the United States, and their remonstrances against them have been of such a nature that they cannot suffer the property of their citizens to be confiscated under a similar system, to subserve the purposes of Lord Cochrane or of the government of Chili. The port of Guamey was not, in fact, blockaded; Lord Cochrane permitted all neutral vessels to repair thither, and virtually excepted this port even from the paper blockade. The money was brought from Lima over land to Guamey, and the blockade of Callao, being a blockade by sea, and not extending to the land, it was lawful for neutrals, notwithstanding this blockade, to carry on their commerce with Lima over land as heretofore. These principles have received the sanction of the British high court of admiralty, in the cases of the Stoit, Johnson, master, 4th volume Robinson's Reports, page 65, and the Songe Peter, Musterdt, master, same book, page 79.

With all these alleged reasons for the confiscation of the money captured on board the Gazelle, Lord Cochrane deemed it necessary to compel the captain of this vessel to sign such a certificate as he required, which he procured by keeping the said captain for three days on board the O'Higgins, and carrying him from Guambacho (the place of capture) to Payta, and inducing him to believe that, unless he would sign such certificate, he would be carried to Valparaiso with his vessel, where the vessel would be condemned for the alleged breach of blockade.

It appears that the money thus captured has been distributed without the form of a trial, (unless the examination and determination of Lord Cochrane is to be considered as such,) and the government of Chili has received its portion of the booty. To proceed to distribution first, and to trial afterwards, and by a court appointed by the government which has thus received its proportion of the prize, is not the mode to secure an impartial trial to a neutral claimant; a trial under such circumstances must be a mockery of justice.

The injury sustained by your memorialists is not confined to the loss of one hundred and forty-two thousand dollars, which they have suffered by the conduct of the admiral of Chili, as has been recited; but a long and distant voyage, which afforded every prospect of a profit of one hundred per cent., has been broken up, after much time and money had been expended in its prosecution, and the principal difficulties to its completion were surmounted. The government of Chili is bound in justice to indemnify them against all these losses, which have been necessarily occasioned by the unlawful acts of those who exercised this authority. Your memorialists forbear a full expression of their feelings at this flagrant outrage upon their rights and property. They believe that their government will not suffer the persons nor the property of its citizens, whether on the Atlantic or the Pacific, to become a prey to the revenge or avarice of any belligerent thus regardless of neutral rights. And, while the usual branches of commerce afford little or no profit to the merchant, it is peculiarly necessary that a fostering care and protection should be extended to the enterprising, who are traversing the globe to discover new channels, through which they may benefit themselves and their country.

Your memorialists beg leave to solicit that their case may be submitted to the President of the United States, in the hope that such measures will be adopted as will afford them the aid of their government in enforcing their just claims upon the government of Chili.

(Signed) JOHN S. ELLERY.
H. H. PERKINS.
J. PRINCE,
Attorney to and assignee of MACKEY, PRINCE & Co.
LORING, CUNNINGHAM & Co.
ISRAEL THORNDIKE.
Late of the firm of CARNES & RHODES. { N. G. CARNES, / CHARLES D. RHODES, GEO. SEARLE.
HENRY LEWIS.
DAVID HINCKLEY.
FAIRFIELD & CHOATE.
SAMUEL PARKMAN, JR..
SAMUEL MAY.
HENRY H. TUCKERMAN.
THOMAS FURBER.
W. and G. TUCKERMAN.
HENRY FARNAM.
THOS. PARSONS.
SAMUEL and JOHN G. TORREY.
DANIEL APPLETON.
N. R. RICHARDSON.
C. BRADBURY.
NEHEMIAH W. SKILLINGS,
By his attorney, IGNATIUS SARGENT.
JOHN B. TREMERE,
For himself and IGNATIUS SARGENT, JR.
WM. HAYDEN, JR.,
Attorney for the late firm of WM. HAYDEN & SONS.

BOSTON, May 27, 1820. JOHN T. REED.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, August 24, 1821.

Charles Stewart, Esq., Commodore of the U. S. Ship Franklin.

SIR: I take the liberty of furnishing you with the enclosnd copy of a memorial of John S. Ellery and others, of Boston, in the case of their brig, the Macedonian, in compliance with the wish of the memorialists, and to refer you to such instructions as the Secretary of State, who will be in Boston, may think proper to give you on the the subject, from that place.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, sir, your obedient and very humble servant.

DANIEL BRENT.

Extract of a letter from Mr. Adams to Mr. John M. Forbes, dated—

JULY 6, 1820.

The allegations of Lord Cochrane, that there had been, on the part of the Gazelle, a breach of the blockade, is fully repelled in the memorial. It appears by a letter from Mr. Prevost, of 16th May, 1819, that he had remonstrated with the government against this paper blockade of Lord Cochrane. He says the subject was met with the greatest frankness, and all claim of forfeiture for any infraction disavowed, as to any place where no actual force was employed, and the form preserved only to deter unfriendly neutrals from entering for the purpose of carrying information.

This disavowal was but partially satisfactory. A paper blockade of fifty degrees of latitude, or a thousand leagues of coast, is illegal throughout its whole extent, even for the ports which may be in actual blockade; otherwise, every capture under a notified blockade would be legal, because the capture itself would be proof of the blockading force. Lord Cochrane's notification was not of a lawful blockade, nor has a permanent force been kept before any one port under it, which would have made it a legal blockade, had it been limited to that single port. Nothing can be more clear than that the capture of no part of the property in question can be justified upon the plea of a broken blockade.

The foregoing is a true extract of a letter from Mr. John Q. Adams, then Secretary of State, to Mr. John M. Forbes, special agent of the United States at Buneos Ayres, faithfully copied from and compared with the record in this office.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, August 4, 1825.

DANIEL BRENT, Chief Clerk.

Extract of a letter from Mr. Adams to Mr. John B. Prevost, Lima, dated—

DECEMBER 16, 1823.

There is another point of great and permanent importance to the interests of the United States involved in these transactions. In the letter from Captain Prunier to Captain Stewart, declaring his disposition to take possession of the Canton for the purpose of carrying her into port for adjudication, he alleges, not that muskets had been landed from her at Arica, but that she had traded at certain ports between the fifteenth and twenty-second degrees of south latitude, contrary to a proclamation or paper blockade of the Peruvian government. This was the only fact alleged by Captain Prunier for his intention to take the Canton—the only allegation upon which Captain Stewart had then to decide whether he would protect her from capture or not. Now the very charge that the Canton had traded at the intermediate ports carried on its face the proof that there had been no force stationed before these ports to intercept the trade; and under such an allegation Captain Stewart could not have submitted to see the Canton captured under the very guns of his ship, without formally admitting thereby the validity of the blockade, in its most licentious extent.

The President considers a blockade by degrees of latitude as unlawful, not only in its general extent, but for every port and spot included within it. Were it otherwise, the mere fact of capture would legalize, in any point within the limits of the proclamation, that which would be unlawful upon every other point. The proclamation is the notice to neutrals of the blockade, and the blockade of the proclamation must be precisely the same as the blockade in fact; else the whole is unlawful, and neutrals are not bound by it. This principle is too important to be surrendered to any belligerent party, however favorably disposed we may be to his cause; for we cannot concede it to him without yielding it alike to his enemy. You will distinctly declare this to the Peruvian minister of state to be the deliberate sense of the Government of the United States.

The foregoing is a true extract of a letter from Mr. John Q. Adams, then Secretary of State, to Mr. John P. Prevost, special agent of the United States at Lima, faithfully copied and compared with the record in this office.

DANIEL BRENT, Chief Clerk.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, August 5, 1825.

Copy of Lieutenant Wm. A. Weaver's permission, &c.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, off New York, September 5, 1821.

SIR: Agreeably to your request of the 1st instant, you are hereby permitted to remain in New York, and to proceed to the Pacific, to rejoin the Franklin there, by the earliest opportunity which may suit your convenience.

I remain, respectfully, sir, your obedient servant, C. S.

Lieutenant WILLIAM A. WEAVER, New York.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, off New York, October 4, 1821.

SIR: As you are about to embark in the ship America for a port in the Pacific, you will be pleased to take special charge of the stores embarked in that ship for the navy service of the United States, and belonging to the ship Franklin under my command. When arrived at your port of discharge, you will cause them to be stored and preserved until the arrival of this ship.

Wishing you a pleasant and prosperous passage,

I remain, very respectfully, sir, your most obedient servant, C. S.

Lieutenant WILLIAM A. WEAVER, U. S. Navy.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, Valparaiso, May 6, 1822.

SIR: You will proceed with the Dolphin under your command to Callao, touching at Arica or Mollendo on your way, at either of which places, most convenient, you will land Mr. Eliphalet Smith, who is charged with a dispatch for General Ramirez, commander-in-chief of Upper Peru. The accompanying package you will deliver to Mr. Prevost, whom you will find at Lima.

I remain, &c., &c.,

(Signed) CHAS. STEWART.

Lieutenant Commandant DAVID CONNOR, commanding the U. S. Schooner Dolphin.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, Callao, September 5, 1822.

SIR: You will proceed, with the Dolphin under your command, to Guayaquil, and take under your protection such vessels belonging to citizens of the United States as you may find in readiness to sail to the southern ports. You will be careful not to compromit our neutral character by protecting beyond the authority of the laws of nations either contraband of war or to the ports actually blockaded by a competent force before such ports, and placed there by either of the parties at war for purposes of blockade.

Lieutenant Sawyer, who is under arrest and under conviction, by opinion of a court of inquiry, of having violated the laws and discipline of the service, has made application for permission to return to the United States. As he cannot be of any further use, in his present state, to the public service, you can exercise your own discretion in indulging him in his request; but you will keep in view the probable effect it may have on other officers wishing to go home to avoid duty, should they find their ends can be accomplished in that way most readily, through the inability of the service to institute courts-martial.

It is stated that a piratical-schooner is cruising off or near the coast of Guayaquil; and there is very little doubt but that the brig Arancano, (formerly belonging to Cochrane's squadron,) which vessel the crew ran off with from the Bay of Panama, has become piratical, and may be cruising in those latitudes. You will direct your attention towards them if you meet with vessels of that description.

When the property of citizens of the United States, which you may take under your protection, is placed in safety, you will proceed to Valparaiso for supplies and further orders.

I remain, &c.,

(Signed) C. STEWART.

DAVID CONNOR, Esq., U. S. Schooner Dolphin.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, Quilca, October 30, 1822.

SIR: The peculiar state of Lima requires that you should proceed with the Dolphin under your command to Callao for the purpose of giving countenance and protection to the citizens of the United States and their property at that place, so far as your means and the laws of nations will justify, and their neutral character may merit. You will keep in view the pacific policy of the Government of the United States towards those patriot governments, and advise me by every opportunity, per Valparaiso, of the state of affairs in that quarter; and should opportunities occur for the United States, advise the government of the state of things and your proceedings. I will direct Mr. Hogan to forward to you, as soon as possible, provisions, &c., for your vessel.

Should it be in your power, you will afford assistance to the officers of the brig Thetis, of Boston, lately taken from this port by one of their cruisers.

I remain, &c.,

(Signed) C. STEWART.

Lieut. Commandant DAVID CONNOR, U. S. Schooner Dolphin.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, Valparaiso, January 12, 1823.

SIR: Herewith you will receive dispatches Nos. 1 and 2 for the Hon. Secretary of the Navy and State Departments. With these you will proceed in the dispatch boat, with Lieutenant Henry, to Panama, from whence you will lose no time in crossing and proceeding on to Washington by the first good opportunity you may meet with. The purser will furnish you the necessary moneys for your extraordinary expenses, of which you will keep an account to be settled with the Navy Department.

Wishing you all possible health and success, I remain, &c.,

(Signed) C. STEWART.

Lieut. ISAAC MAYO, U. S. Ship Franklin.

U. S. Ship Franklin, Callao Harbor, May 27, 1823.

Sir: You will proceed, with the United States schooner Dolphin under your command, to Valparaiso, where you will procure all the necessary supplies, (for as long a period as the vessel can stow,) without any unnecessary delay, and return to Lima, touching at Quilca on your way for the purpose of affording any protection to the citizens of the United States and their property, under the sanction of the laws of nations, which may require it at that place.

Should you not have any highly important information or public dispatches for me, you can remain at the Intermedios long enough, (say two weeks,) to secure their property against any unlawful depredation the expedition from this quarter may be disposed to exercise.

You will be pleased to transfer Midshipman Boyd back to this ship. Midshipman Adams is ordered to report himself to you as acting master of the Dolphin.

Wishing you a pleasant cruise, I remain, &c.,

(Signed) C. STEWART.

Lieutenant Commandant David Conner, U. S. Schooner Dolphin.

U. S. Ship Franklin, Callao Harbor, July 7, 1823.

Sir: You will please to proceed with Captain Williams, master of the ship Arab, to the head-quarters of General Canterac. The accompanying letter to that general will make you acquainted with the object of the visit. It will be essential for our further guidance to ascertain under what authority, as well as under what pretext, the Arab has been detained and taken possession of at Pisco, as also whether restitution of that ship is intended.

I remain, &c.,

(Signed) C. STEWART.

Lieutenant H. Henry.

U. S. Ship Franklin, Callao Bay, July 7, 1823.

To his excellency General Canterac, commander-in-chief of the army of Peru, at Lima:

By advices received this afternoon from Pisco, we learn that the North American ship Arab, of Boston, was taken possession of at that port by a detachment of the army under the command of your excellency. Lieutenant Commandant Henry, and Mr. Williams, the master of that ship, wait on your excellency to ascertain the cause and grounds of such seizure, and to learn whether under the authority of your excellency, or what other, this seizure of the ship has been made while engaged in lawful and authorized commerce by both parties at war in Peru, and under the sanction of the laws of nations.

Should this seizure have been made without the authority of your excellency, I trust you will give such orders for her restoration to her master as to prevent those disagreeable consequences arising from illegal seizures, and which is calculated to preserve and promote the existing harmony between our respective countries.

I pray your excellency to accept the assurances of the high respect and consideration with which I have the honor to remain, your excellency's most obedient and very humble servant,

(Signed) C. STEWART.

U. S. Ship Franklin, November 3, 1823.

Sir: You will be pleased to arrest Lieutenant Joshua R. Sands (formally), and receive in charge his sword. You will assign to him as his limits those heretofore assigned to him by orders of the 9th of October last, when under suspension. You will hand over to him the enclosed copies of charges and specifications of charges against him.

I remain, &c.,

(Signed) CHAS. STEWART.

Lieutenant John Harris, commanding the Marine Guard on board the United States Ship Franklin.

U. S. Ship Franklin, at sea, January 3, 1824.

Sir: You will proceed in the Amanda in pursuit of the piratical vessel, General Quintanilla, up the coast of the Intermedios as far as Arica, if necessary, looking into Mallendo and Ilo, and if you fall in with her you will subdue and seize her, and bring her to me, securing all the papers and property on board, and take special care that none of your men plunder anything from the vessel or any person on board. You will take care that none of the prisoners escape, but secure them all and bring them to me. You will find us either on the coast at anchor or cruising off it. It will be desirable that you do not remain absent longer than it is possible to accomplish this object—say ten days. The rendezvous will be at Quilca.

Wishing you success, I remain, &c.,

(Signed) C. STEWART.

Lieutenant Thos. S. Hammersley.

U. S. Ship Franklin, Quilca, January 19, 1824.

Sir: As the whole coast from Arica to Camana, and its harbors, has been examined by the vessel under your command and this ship for the piratical brig Quintanilla, without success, and from the information since obtained I am led to believe she has been and may still be hovering about Ocoña or Chala to leeward for supplies, previous to her going on a farther cruise or return to Chiloe; and as the hired armed brig Amanda is fitted out and provisioned for two months' cruize, you will proceed to examine the coast between Camana and Chala for that vessel. In case you do not find her or receive any information of her movements after you have made this examination, you will make all possible haste to the coast of Chiloe, reaching for the southeast part of that island, and examine its coasts and harbors thereabouts. If you do not meet with her or any American vessel taken by her in that quarter, you will cruise down the west coast of the island, and take a position best calculated to intercept her or any of her prizes, (American) which may be making for San Carlos. You will use every precaution to keep the people and inhabitants of that island, as well as all others you meet with, ignorant of your vessel's character, force and object, and in order so to do, you will not communicate with any port or place that is inhabited in that quarter. Should you be so fortunate as to meet with and capture the brig Quintanilla, you will repair with her immediately to Valparaiso. In case you may recapture any American vessels that may be taken by her, or any other vessel cruising out of Chiloe, you had better send them to Juan Fernandez, and detain them there until you join them, previous to bringing them to Valparaiso.

You will therefore consider yourself authorized to attack, subdue, and seize the above brig, the Quintanilla, of which you have a correct description, and to retake any vessels of the United States which she or any other cruiser from Chiloe may have captured. Should they, when chased, run that vessel, or any American vessel they have captured, on shore, you will, notwithstanding, take possession of such vessel or vessels run on shore; but you are not to violate the territories of Spain, by pursuing the people on shore, should they escape to it, unless it should be some uninhabited island, rock, or key, in which case you are at liberty to pursue and take them.

You will preserve the usual discipline and health of your crew; and should you make any prisoners under the above authority, you will not yield them to any demand or authority whatever, but keep them in safe custody until you join this ship. You will so time your cruise as to be at anchor in Valparaiso on or before the first of April next, and, on no account, absent yourself after that period.

Wishing you health and success, I remain, &c.,

(Signed) C. STEWART.

P. S.—To all other vessels you may speak, you will use the utmost politeness, and never allow more than an officer to go on board to bring their papers to you for examination.

C. S.

To Lieutenant Thomas S. Hammersley, commanding the hired armed vessel Amanda.

U. S. Ship Franklin, Quilca, January 22, 1824.

Sir: You will proceed with the schooner Dolphin under your command, without delay, to the coast of the Island of Chiloe, as far south as its southern end, and cruise in such latitudes, and take such positions as may seem to you best calculated to intercept a piratical hermaphrodite brig cruising out of that island under the Spanish flag, or any vessel of the United States that corsair may have made a prize of, or which any other privateer, cruising out of that island, or under the Spanish authority, may have captured. Should you be fortunate enough to meet with the above piratical brig, called the Quintanilla, you will subdue, seize and bring her to me at Valparaiso. Should you recapture any vessels of the United States, you will send them to Juan Fernandez, until further orders. You will use every precaution to keep the people and inhabitants of that island, as well as all others you may meet with, ignorant of your vessel's character, force, and objects; and in order to do so, you will not communicate with any port or place that is inhabited in that quarter. Should they, when chased, run that vessel on shore, or any vessel of the United States they may have captured, you will endeavor, notwithstanding, to take possession of such vessel or vessels run on shore; but you are not to violate the territory of Spain, by pursuing the people on shore, should they escape to it, unless it should be some uninhabited island, rock, or key, in which case you are at liberty to pursue and take them. Should you make any prisoners under the above authority, you will not yield them up to any demand or authority whatever, but keep them in safe custody until you join me at Valparaiso, to which place you will repair on or about the 20th of March next. To all other vessels you may meet with, you will use the utmost politeness, and only allow an officer to go on board to bring their papers for your examination.

Enclosed you will receive the signals by which you will know the brig Amanda, Lieutenant Hammersley, and be enabled make yourself known to him, which vessel is sent to cruise on the station. You will also have, herewith, a good description of the pirate brig.

Wishing you health and success, I remain, &c.,

(Signed) C. STEWART.

Lieut. Commandant David Connor, U. S. Schooner Dolphin, Callao.

U. S. Navy Department, for the U. S. Ship Franklin,

To Michael Hogan, Dr.

1822.
April 1.	50,000 pounds bread, at 6 cents per pound	$3,000	00
30.	13,000 pounds bread, at 6½ cents per pound	845	00
May 10.	8,066 pounds bread, at 9 cents per pound	725	94
March 5.	22,000 pounds bread, at 6½ cents per pound	1,430	00
April 12.	12,062 pounds bread, at 7 cents per pound	844	34

May 17.	32,066 pounds bread, at 8½ cents per pound	$2,725 61
May 17.	50,186 pounds (country) salt beef, at 7 cents per pound	3,513 02
May 17.	100 barrels American (country) salt beef, at 18 cents per pound	1,800 00
May 17.	25 casks claret wine, in lieu of spirits, 1,470 gallons, at 51 cents per gallon	749 70
May 17.	130 boxes sperm candles, 3,706½ pounds, at 62½ cents per pound	2,316 57
May 17.	17 firkins butter, 1,048 pounds, (tare out, 861 lbs.,) at 62½ cents per pound	538 13
May 17.	427 gallons molasses, at 75 cents per gallon	320 25
May 17.	912 gallons beans, at 38 cents per gallon	346 56
May 17.	3,632 pounds cheese, at 12 cents per pound	435 84
May 17.	75,767 pounds fresh beef, at 4 cents per ponnd	3,030 68
May 17.	82 days' vegetables, at $11.83 per day	970 06
May 17.	60 barrels flour, at $16 per barrel	960 00
		$24,551 70
	Commission, 5 per cent	1,227 58
		$25,779 28

Approved.
(Signed) CHAS. STEWART.

Received, Valparaiso, May 17, 1822, of Edward Fitzgerald, Esq., purser, United States navy, twenty-five thousand seven hundred and seventy-nine dollars twenty-eight cents, in full of the above account, for which I sign triplicate receipts.
(Signed) MICHAEL HOGAN.

U. S. Navy Department, for the U. S. Ship Franklin, To Michael Hogan, Dr.

1822.
May 10.	11 quintals 26 pounds iron hoops, at $8, per quintal	$89 60
	36 kegs black paint, (each 28 lbs.,) 1,008 pounds, at 25 cents per pound	252 00
	60 pieces Russia duck, at $20 per piece	1,200 00
	456 pounds iron, at 8 cents per pound	36 37
	10 kegs black paint, (each 56 lbs.,) 560 pounds, at 35 cents per pound	194 50
	20¾ tons coal, at $14 per ton	290 66
	Water, from Almendral	21 00
	27 cords firewood, $13.75 per cords	371 25
	34 ash oars, 637 feet, at 25 cents per foot	159 25
	12 permits, for shipping provisions, &c.	21 00
	Expenses paid Morse for coach for Commodore Stewart, and aids, journey to Santiago, to see the supreme director on official business	310 50
	Expenses of burying bodies of officers and men lost at Quintero bay	19 25
	Demurrage of schooner Amanda for one day	50 00
		$3,015 38
	Commissions	150 76
		$3,166 14

Approved.
(Signed) CHAS. STEWART

Received, Valparaiso, May 14, 1822, of Edward Fitzgerald, Esq., purser, United States navy, three thousand one hundred and sixty-six dollars fourteen cents, in full of the above account, for which I sign triplicate receipts.
(Signed) MICHAEL HOGAN.

U. S. Navy Department, for U. S. Frigate Constellation, To Michael Hogan, Dr.

1822.
May 1st.	Thirty-seven panes glass, 50 cents per pane	$18 50
	Thirty gallons lamp oil, $1 per gallon	30 00
	Twenty-five gallons spirits turpentine, $2 per gallon	50 00
	Thirty gallons linseed oil, $2 per gallon	60 00
	Twelve kegs white lead, 300 pounds each, 25 cents per pound	75 00
	Seventy-eight feet 2 inch oak plank, 32 cents per foot	24 96
	Twenty-six pounds green paint	19 50
	Five hundred and twenty-two feet pine board, 12½ cents per foot	65 25
	Twenty-four ash oars, 379 feet, 25 cents per foot	94 75
	Two barrels lime, $3 per barrel	6 00
	Five hundred and forty-six pounds whiting, 3 cents per pound	16 38
	Thirty bolts Russia canvas, $20 per bolt	600 00
	Seventy-five pounds sewing twine, $1 per pound	75 00
	Two hundred needles, 4 cents each	8 00

May 1st.	Forty-three brooms	$8 06
	Thirteen cords firewood, $17.77	231 00
	Two and a quarter tons coal, $12 per ton	27 00
	Eight hundred and thirty casks water	207 25
	C. H. permits	10 50
	Half ream letter paper	3 50
	Half ream foolscap paper	3 00
	One hundred quills	3 00
		$1,636 65
	Commission, 5 per cent	81 83
		$1,718 48

(Signed) Ex. BEN. F. BOURNE, Purser.

Received, Valparaiso, May 4th, 1822, of Ben. F. Bourne, purser, U. S. navy, seventeen hundred and eighteen dollars and forty-eight cents, in full of the above account, for which I sign triplicate receipts.

(Signed) MICHAEL HOGAN.
(Signed) App'd. C. G. RIDGELY.

U. S. Ship Franklin, Valparaiso Harbor, January 2, 1823.

J. B. Provost, Santiago de Chili:

Sir: My arrival at this place affords me an opportunity of communicating to you the objects of the government in sending so considerable a force into this sea, and of apprising you that I am directed to call on you for information touching the seizure of any vessels and property belonging to citizens of the United States by either of the parties at war. They also advise, in such cases, my making spirited remonstrances through you to the government of this country, by whose authority such acts have or may be committed, and to advise with you relative to the best measures for preventing such depredations on our commerce, and the means of procuring respect for our interests and flag. Being charged with these important concerns, and having a force adequate to the object, I have to request you will advise me freely and suggest what may be essential to the ends desired. On my arrival at Lima, where it was expected I should have found you, and been enabled to have carried into effect these objects in conformity with my instructions, you may readily conceive my disappointment on finding you had departed, particularly as that was the only quarter in which the conduct of the government of Lima appeared to require our exertions; on my anchoring at that place many complaints were laid before me, with the necessary documents, touching the seizure and detention of the property of our citizens and the imprisoning of their persons, many of which had taken place under your notice. In this state of things, adopting the recommendation of our government, (in the only way I was enabled to do so,) I presented to the government of Lima a remonstrance and requested a restitution, but without effect. In addition to the particular urgency of our fellow citizens, the changes, which it was not difficult to foresee were about to take place in that government, seemed also to require that the subject should be brought immediately to the notice of the government which had authorized those acts.

I have the honor to be, &c., &c., &c.,

(Signed) C. STEWART.

St. Jago de Chili, January 5, 1823.

Sir: Had it pleased you upon your arrival at Valparaiso to have made the communication I yesterday had the honor to receive, it would have enabled me, either in person or by letter, to have exhibited for your information a view of the progress of the revolution, and the nature of our commerce, and of the jealousies excited by those preceding you in command; I should have unfolded the course I have adopted, together with the motives swaying me, and have endeavored to produce an union of measures directed to the restoration of confidence, and to the revival of that consideration we ought ever to have maintained. I should have offered my ideas of the blockade of Arica, or of any other of the intermediate ports before which a vessel-of-war was lying, and have shown that a force in station at any one place competent as to the enemy, was equally so to the neutral; you might then, sir, upon consideration, probably have thought proper to decline the protection afforded to the Pearl and other merchantmen at that place, and thus have avoided collision so powerfully tending to defeat the effect of the liberal and noble policy of the government of the United States.

The acknowledgment, sir, of the independence of these people is an act performed; as it regards the world, the responsibility is incurred; they are placed among the nations of the earth; and the peace of our country is involved in the early conclusion of the struggle. Under these circumstances, it appears to me, we ought to study every means to give full weight to the measure, and that it is important to cultivate American feelings, to cherish a national character, and to foster sentiments of good will.

I have no information, sir, touching the seizure of vessels and property belonging to the citizens of the United States, other than such as have hitherto been the subject of discussion; and I know of no grievances, either here or in Peru, in which your interference can avail. If, however, as you suggest, some have arisen in the latter place, I do not hesitate to advise a total silence on your part, and to leave the redress to the agency of the minister contemplated from the United States, who may, by treaty, obtain full reparation.

I hope, sir, that while thus freely meeting the object of your communication, I shall not have awakened an unkind feeling. The view I had taken appeared to me necessary, in order to justify the negative course I have undertaken to recommend, and it will gratify me to learn that it obtains your concurrence.

I have the honor to be, sir, your most obedient and very humble servant,

J. B. PREVOST.

Captain STEWART, of the Navy of the United States, &c.. &c., &c.

UNITED STATES SHIP FRANKLIN, Valparaiso, January 19, 1823.

J. B. Prevost, United States Agent, Santiago de Chili:

SIR: I had the honor to receive your very extraordinary letter of the 5th instant, on the evening of the 7th. A pressure of occupation has hitherto prevented my giving that attention to its contents which it seemed to demand. Had I found you at the place contemplated by the Government of the United States in their instructions, you would have received on my arrival a letter similar to the one addressed to you on my last arrival here; or had it been known to me where you were, and an opportunity had afforded, you would probably have had such a letter addressed to you. If any inconvenience, therefore, has arisen to the service and public interests, there can be no difficulty in the government's discovering its source, and fixing it where it ought to rest.

Had you possessed the information with respect to the progress of the revolution, the nature of our commerce, and a desire to co-operate with the views of government, in sending a naval force here for its protection, and a wish to counteract a lawless depredation on it, as well as to produce a revival of consideration and respect for our flag, under which you have so long sheltered, there was no impediment to your seeing me in person by the frigate Constellation, or communicating to me, as you state you knew where I was, and that I was then a stranger in the country.

With respect to the conduct of my predecessors in command on this station I have nothing to do; and if they have committed any acts of grievance towards these governments and people, they must seek their redress from the Government of the United States, under whose authority they acted. Had the blockade of the Intermedios been known to you, and had you entertained any ideas at that time on the subject, it is very extraordinary you should not have made them known to Captain Ridgely, (then with you at Lima), if you even deemed it unworthy of my knowledge. No such communication is to be found in the archives he left with me. The ideas, however, you now entertain, are not in unison with those of the Government of the United States, and you ought to know they have expended too much blood and treasure in contending with Great Britain for just principles to yield it now inconsistently, however desirable it may be to you.

With respect to the brig Pearl, which arrived at Arica the same day with the Canton, you must be badly informed. No protection was afforded by me to that vessel, nor did any Peruvian force present itself that required it. The schooner Sacramento, of one gun, the only vessel on that coast, and which was driven away by the royalists, made no attempt on her, although the commander knew she had arms and munitions of war on board. They were intended for trade with the savages on the northwest coast, and for that trade she was too well armed and appointed for the Sacramento to succeed against her.

I have received no new instructions from the government adapted to the new state of things, as involved by an acknowledgment of their independence, nor any authority under which to act, but those I received on my departure, and which must continue as the rule of my conduct. If the obedience I owe to the government, and the duties I am bound to perform in consequence, should not comport with the erroneous ideas of these governments as respects justice to ourselves, they must blame none but themselves, and not attribute it to improper sentiments of the Government of the United States or myself towards them. There was no disposition on the part of our government to incur so much expense, in sending a naval force to this sea, which could be so advantageously employed in suppressing pirates nearer home, had these governments and the officers under their authority not exhibited so much avidity in depredating on our commerce, imprisoning our citizens, in fine, by exercising every unfriendly act towards those who alone were their best friends; and the fact of a necessity existing of keeping up a naval force in the Pacific, is a strong proof that the Government of the United States are not willing to abandon either their rights or their commerce in this sea, and argues strongly the sense they entertain of the good will and justice these governments have for us.

When the contemplated ministers arrive, they no doubt will be instructed how to act, and I shall receive corresponding instructions from the government, by which my future conduct will be regulated.

I have the honor to remain, &c., &c., &c.,

(Signed) CHAS. STEWART.

ST. JAGO DE CHILI, January 26, 1824.

SIR: I had the honor to receive your note of the 19th yesterday only, so that I pray you not to attribute the delay intervening between its date and my acknowledgment to inattention on my part. The irritation you exhibit throughout is really a source of pain to me, and the more so as I cannot, upon recurrence to mine of the 5th, to which it is intended as an answer, discover aught to justify it. You asked my advice; it was incumbent upon me to give it; and I did so with the frankness our situation appeared to me to exact. Captain Ridgley was an inmate of my house while at Lima; the decree of blockade was always upon the table, was daily a subject of discussion, and every effort was made to dissuade him from its violation. In addition to which, a printed copy was transmitted by me to Mr. Hogan, anterior to your arrival, with a request to give it full publicity, and if he also omitted to mention it to you, the responsibility rests with him.

I am really a stranger, sir, to those acts of depredation upon our commerce, and of outrage upon the persons of our citizens, to which you refer with stress, as requiring interference and reparation, and you will oblige me particularly by detailing such as have fallen within your knowledge, that I may at least notice them to the Department. The claim of the owners of the Macedonian is the only case within my recollection, and however hardly the delay may operate, I doubt whether there is any way of extricating them but by treaty.

As to the Pearl, when I alluded to her, it was in common with others sailing at the same time from Valparaiso, and I regret that you or I should be so deceived as to the object of her visit to Arica. If my information be correct, those arms were landed from the Canton, and afterwards purchased and secretly put on board the Pearl, without the knowledge of this government or of Mr. Hogan, with whom some correspondence had taken place on this subject. It is now also stated that part of these arms were shipped by Captain Smith on board a schooner purchased for that purpose at Arica and sent to Chiloe, a circumstance unimportant as to Smith, but as he is stated to have been at the time an inmate of the Franklin, and as he still continnes to share your hospitalities, it gives to the transactions, in the eyes of these people, an unfortunate coloring, and, however improperly, attaches to it the protection of the flag of the United States.

Letters from Buenos Ayres of the 2d inst., induce a belief that Mr. Rodney has either arrived or is near that place by this time. With this information, sir, I ask leave to renew my earnest solicitations that any motive to further excitement may be avoided, so as to give to his embassy full effect.

I have the honor to be, sir, with great respect, your very humble servant,

J. B. PREVOST.

Captain CHARLES STEWART, of the Navy of the United States.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, Callao, May 9, 1823.

J. B. Prevost, Esq., U. S. Agent, Lima:

SIR: On my return from the Island of Juan Fernandez to Valparaiso with this ship, Mr. Hogan put into my hands your letter of the 26th of January last, which I have now the honor to acknowledge the receipt of.

The pain occasioned you by the perusal of the letter I had the honor to write you on the 19th of that month, could not have equalled that which I felt on finding myself reduced to the necessity of writing it, more especially on finding my conduct, and that of my predecessors in command, the cause of your animadversions. If either them or myself have done that which the laws of nations do not authorize, it belonged exclusively to our government to take cognizance of it, and punish us as they may consider the case to deserve; hence, sir, you will readily conceive my surprise as well as regret on receiving your letter of the 5th of January. As I never had the honor of your personal acquaintance, I trust you will do me the justice to believe, if any irritation has exhibited itself in my letter of the 19th, it would only grow out of that natural feeling originating in the disappointment of the hope that our joint efforts would contribute very materially towards the protection of our fellow-citizens from oppression and plunder, and thus, in sustaining our right to justice, preserve the honor of our government, having no favors to ask, and desiring no undue advantages over others.

With respect to the Canton, and arms brought out by that ship to Valparaiso, I can only say that I refused her master protection until they were landed, and the cargo rendered perfectly innocent, and that my permitting that ship to accompany me, after that had been done, was to preserve a power over her, and thereby prevent her doing any act that would place so valuable a property in jeopardy, as well as to preserve her from lawless seizure. If the Pearl conveyed any other arms than those she brought from Boston, (all of which I have satisfactory proofs remained on board of her when she departed from Arica,) I know not. The Canton's arms were deposited and locked up in the custom house stores at Valparaiso, from whence, I presume, they could not be secretly taken, as you suggest, and positive assurances had been given by the government of Chili to the minister of Peru, that they should not be exported unless under ample bonds, as appears by the copy of the correspondence had on that subject at Santiago. I, however, advised the master of the Pearl not to proceed to another belligerent port, and refused him convoy. This advice and this refusal were in consequence of the arms and military stores then on board, and which he brought from Boston for the purposes of his traffic with the Indians on the northwest coast, and not upon any presumption that he was going to take on board others at Valparaiso, which, if done from the public stores at Valparaiso with so much secrecy, it could not have come within my knowledge, and it did not belong to me to prevent his going when and whither he pleased. His voyage was not interdicted by the laws of his own country, and his clearance was regular from Valparaiso.

As respects Capt. Smith, I can confidently assure you that he had closed his business and left Valparaiso in the Dolphin schooner several days before the Pearl arrived at that place; that he had no knowledge of that vessel, or any concern in her cargo at any time. That gentleman has been received by me as any other unfortunate fellow citizen would have been, and came to this place with a view to recover his brig and cargo, seized by the government of his excellency, the Protector San Martin. I have been many years intimate with him, and have always believed his integrity unimpeachable, and I assure you I should regret extremely to be numbered among those who are prejudiced against him without reason, thereby adding to his previous serious misfortune.

If it is in your power to produce the objects had in view by the government without my interference and co-operation, it will be highly satisfactory to them as well as to myself. I enclose to you copies of such complaints made me by our countrymen as remain in my hands, but the whole have been transmited, long since, to the Secretary of State. The more recent ones, I am informed by Lieut. Commandant Conner, are already before you. In behalf of the brig Thetis, there remains to be recovered four thousand dollars, and a cable belonging to that vessel.

I have the honor to remain, &c.,

(Signed) C. STEWART.

LIMA, May 12, 1823.

SIR: I had the honor to receive, last evening, your note by Captain Conner, and hasten to assure you that I am sincerely gratified by the prospect it offers of a communication that will enable us to unite in promoting the several objects of our government. The course I advised as to the grievances by you heretofore intimated to exist, was not suggested by any desire of interfering with the exercise of the powers delegated to you, but solely by that of avoiding the irritating and unavailing discussions which, under the impressions of those composing the late junta, would inevitably have followed; the case of the Thetis is, however, the only one one among the documents accompanying your note that claims attention. The protest of Fitch is a gross misrepresentation, and that in which he has joined with H. D. Tracy would only have been made for the purposes of deception. The fraud committed by Mr. Tracy upon one of the banks of New York determined Mr. Forbes, while I was in Buenos Ayres, to deny him access to his house, and I regret to say that his conduct since his arrival on this side of the Andes has not indicated any return to principle.

The present chief magistrate is a patriot, disposed to cherish the most friendly relations between the two governments, and I shall take a pleasure in making him known to you on any day you may incline to visit the palace.

I have the honor to be, with great reepect, sir, your most obedient and very humble servant,

J. B. PREVOST.

Commodore CHARLES STEWART, of the Navy of the United States.

AMERICAN SHIP CANTON, Valparaiso, April 28, 1822.

SIR: In consequence of a vessel-of-war, (national flag unknown,) cruising off and on this harbor, and having understood that a Spanish frigate is in a state of mutiny, which, if so, will, no doubt, commit piratical depredations, and the very valuable ship and cargo under my command being the property of citizens of the United States, if not trespassing on your official capacity, may I request of you, as commander of the United States naval force in this sea, for the necessary protection to enable me to continue my voyage down the coast of Chili and Peru, having no contraband of war on board.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your humble servant,

JNO. O'SULLIVAN.

Commodore CHARLES STEWART, Commander-in-Chief, &c., &c., &c.

It is hereby understood and agreed, to and between Samuel Chandler on the one part, and Charles Stewart on the other, that is to say, the said Samuel Chandler hereby agrees to furnish and deliver to the said Charles Stewart all the frames, plank, copper, sail-cloth, cordage, &c., &c., &c., to build, equip, and complete three schooner boats, with the exception of running and standing rigging for one boat; this being completely and fully done on the part of said Samuel Chandler, the aforesaid Charles Stewart doth agree to build, equip, and complete the three schooner boats aforesaid, and deliver two thereof to the order of said Samuel Chandler, in the port of Oahu, in the Sandwich Islands, so soon as circumstances and the nature of his public duties will permit. The whole of the materials, and two of the schooner boats after being completed, to be at the risk of the aforesaid Samuel Chandler, the said Charles Stewart binding himself for nothing more than to furnish the necessary labor for building and equipping the said schooner boats, with the standing and running rigging for one thereof. And it is further understood between the said Samuel Chandler and Charles Stewart that, in consideration of the above services being performed by the said Charles Stewart as before specified, and five hundred dollars now paid to Samuel Chandler in hand, that he, the said Samuel Chandler, relinquishes to the said Charles Stewart one of the schooner boats so completed to the use for ever of the said Chas. Stewart.

In witness whereof, we have hereunto set our hands, this 10th day of June, 1822.

SAMUEL CHANDLER,
CHARLES STEWART.

Test: H. HENRY.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, Harbor of Arica, June 10, 1822.

SIR: In compliance with your directions this morning, we proceeded on board the American brig Pearl (after she was under way to leave this place), for the purpose of examining whether she had landed arms at this place, or had them still on board, agreeably to the invoices of her cargo. We have the honor to report, that the master exhibited his papers and invoices, and after a strict examination of the hold, we found all the arms remaining in the vessel, agreeably to those invoices of his cargo, with which he proceeded to sea, bound to the Sandwich Islands and river Columbia.

We remain, sir, your obedient servants,

WM. HUNTER, First Lieutenant.
THOS. S. HAMMERSLEY.

Com. CHARLES STEWART, commanding U. S. Naval Force, Pacific Ocean.

[Duplicate.]

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, Valparaiso, October 21, 1823.

SIR: I have the painful task to inform you of a transaction which took place on board this ship a year past, and which only came to my knowledge, through Lieutenant Henry, three days since. It appears that, by the contrivance of Mrs. Stewart, a person was received on board, at Callao, when getting under way, and secreted in the pantry, among the servants, until our arrival at Quilca, and through the dereliction of duty on the part of the first officer, kept from my knowledge, whose special business it was to report all persons on board not belonging to the navy, and send them out of the ship, unless he has my orders and sanction for their remaining on board. This circumstance is doubly afflicting to me, as it deeply involves a wife, whose conduct and confidence towards me ought to have been different, and who should have preferred my duty to any act of grace she could possibly confer on another, at so much hazard and expense to all concerned.

It may also involve a complaint on the part of the government of Lima, as he no doubt may be some person escaping from justice or the laws of war, and who could have no possible claim on us or our flag. I have deemed it proper to transmit to you this explanation, as I shall feel it my duty to do on all occasions requiring it, when they come to my knowledge; and I beg leave to assure you, sir, there is no part of my orders which I have more strenuously endeavored to guard against a violation of, than this; and, in many instances, I have refused passages to neutral persons (not strictly comprehended in the instructions), lest they should afterwards prove, from their transactions, improper persons, confining the indulgence entirely to my own countrymen.

I have the honor to remain, very respectfully, sir, your most obedient and humble servant,

CHARLES STEWART.

To the Hon. SMITH THOMPSON, Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

Translation of a letter to Mrs. Stewart.

My most esteemed friend, possessing my most ardent affection, I take the liberty of addressing a letter to you, not being able to go to Callao to see you, and to give you a last embrace. I regret the not seeing you excessively, but be persuaded that I can never forget your amiability and the deserving qualities of your distinguished nature; and from the time that I had first the satisfaction of knowing you your friendship has been precious to me. In whatever distance fate may place me from you, your remembrance can never be effaced from my heart. Under this assurance, depend always upon my friendship and command my invariable will. The bearer of this is a person whom I esteem, and who is desirous that I should use my influence with you in his favor to obtain a passage. He will explain this to you himself; and if not troublesome to you, be assured that you will do a very kind action to the individual whom I recommend, by granting his request. Excuse the freedom I take in thus interesting myself with you, my good friend, in his behalf, and write me if you can give him a passage, if not inconvenient.

Command the services of your most sincerely affectionate,

THE COUNTESS OF VALLE ERMOSA.

My respectful expressions of regard to the commodore, and tell him that I regret very much that he cannot pass a few days in Lima before his departure.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, Valparaiso, May 5, 1822.

SIR: Since I had the honor to address you on the 23d of March, as per duplicate enclosed, the United States frigate Constellation has arrived at this place, and leaves here in a few days for North America. By the last advices from Peru it appears that Admiral Cochrane, after the fall of Callao, refitted as many of his ships (say three) as his means allowed, and proceeded to leeward, along the Bay of Panama, down to Acapulco, in search of two Spanish frigates and a sloop of war, all the remaining ships of the royal naval forces in this sea. It seems his object in this pursuit was frustrated by the activity of San Martin and his agents. Apprised by them of Cochrane's movements, those ships reached Guayaquil a month or six weeks after he left there, and, by a convention entered into with San Martin, the royal officers and crew disposed of the ships to him, one of which has arrived at Callao and been given up, according to advices arrived yesterday; the others remained at Guayaquil, held as security in deposit for the delivery of the largest at her port of destination. In the meantime Cochrane returned to Guayaquil, with his vessels very much shattered by the storms he encountered, and almost destitute of provisions, where finding the remaining frigate and sloop-of-war, he took immediate possession of them, alleging that he disregarded such treaties, and the ships ought to belong to him, and it was his squadron which forced them to take refuge under such conventions, and that he would take the other whenever he could find her. To comprehend this affair you must know that two of the greatest rogues existing, Cochrane and San Martin, have been co-operating together in the reduction of Lima and Callao, both narrowly watching to overreach each other. San Martin, desirous of reducing that city and port under his dominion, kept Cochrane at his post by only allowing him two days' provisions at a time, and by that means ultimately effected his object. Cochrane, by means of licenses to his agents and partners in commerce, enabled the place to hold out, and was thus enriching himself, while he was defeating the object of San Martin, who, by keeping him at his post, prevented his carrying on that scene of plunder along the coast which he otherwise would have done, sheltered under the pretext of a paper blockade, and would thus have enriched himself more readily by plundering neutrals. San Martin, during his stay in the vicinity of Lima, had collected a considerable sum of money by plundering parties and the sale of passports, &c., &c. This money he prudently put on board a vessel for safety, in case he should be under the necessity of retreating suddenly. Cochrane seized upon this money under the pretext that it was necessary to pay his sailors, and thus an open war exists between them. San Martin, it is understood, has preferred several charges against Cochrane to the government of Chili. That government appears to approve of all he has done, particularly the seizing on the money and the ships. If they are sincere there will be war between San Martin and this country, but most persons believe O'Higgins and San Martin understand each other, and all the approbation is given out with a view to get back their ships, the property and plunder Cochrane has on board, and then to ruin him forever, as he is a foreigner and a heretic. The latter I think most probable, for deception is their forte, and when they profess most it is necessary to be most on your guard. Accounts have also arrived by this vessel that the brig Macedonian, of Boston, has been condemned at Lima under the same supposition that they condemned the money taken from Captain Smith, to wit, that she belonged to the Phillippine Company. When they want a thing they find no difficulty in making a pretext, as they acknowledge no law but expediency. As the Arminius is daily expected to arrive, I purpose waiting a few days for that event, being under the impression she may bring some instructions adapted to the new state of things occasioned by the fall of Lima. The blockade terminating with that event, would seem to render this ship's remaining out unnecessary, unless government should be desirous of enforcing rigidly all their neutral rights, which appears to me the only mode of gaining the respect of these people. Submission is construed into fear, and they cannot be brought to believe that "respect for them and the cause they are engaged in" would induce any nation to submit, unless they had higher interests to subserve. At all events, under any state of things, I would recommend to the government to equip for this station two of the sloops-of-war, say the Cyane and John Adams, without delay. Should any difficulties take place, our force would be more suitable for the necessary protection on the coast of 2,000 miles; but should no difficulties take place, this ship could return home, and one of the sloops be stationed at Lima and the other here; with the schooner to pass between, it would answer all the purposes that would be desired by the merchants, the principal one of which is, a place of deposit for their specie as it arrives from other ports, where it would not be subject to the seizure of every governor or officer who chose to lay violent hands upon it. The present state of Panama would afford good facilities for communicating with Washington, but to effect it expeditiously an advice boat would be requisite on this side, say a small pilot boat, to be officered and manned from this ship, which could be rowed in the long calms to which the passage from Lima to Panama and back is subject. It would, therefore, be advisable to send a vessel of that description round here, otherwise no communication could be kept up by that route, as it takes two months for a vessel of any other description to come from Panama to this place.

I have the honor, &c.,

(Signed) CHAS. STEWART.

Hon. SMITH THOMSON, Secretary of the Navy.

I certify that the foregoing is a true copy from the original on file in this Department.

CHAS. HAY, Chief Clerk.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, October 26, 1824.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, Valparaiso, January 5, 1823.

The honorable Smith Thompson, Secretary of the Navy:

SIR: Herewith I have the honor to enclose to you copies of the entire correspondence had with Captain Trunier, commanding the patriot brig Belgrano, at Quilca, relative to the American ship Canton, of and belonging to New York. This vessel (the Belgrano) arrived at Quilca in twenty-eight days from Lima, on the 8th of July, 1822, with two secret agents on board to be landed in Upper Peru. On the same day the commander came on board this ship and inquired of me what vessels those were in port. I stated them to be the French ship Telegraph and the American ship Canton. He asked if the Canton was a public or a private armed vessel; I stated she was a private, armed, merchant ship. He asked if she had any cargo on board; I replied she had not—her cargo had been landed and she was then in ballast, which, when completed, (in a few days) she was going to depart for Lima. On the following day he transmitted to me his letter marked (A), which was replied to by (B), and continued on to the letter (G), inclusive.

The want of opportunities to write by, for the United States, which rarely occur, except by whale ships bound that way with part of a cargo, and intending to continue fishing until they complete the whole, renders it so very uncertain when dispatches will reach you, that I have been constrained to procure myself a pilot boat schooner (at my own expense, but officered and manned from this ship,) which now enables me to forward to you, by way of Panama, the dispatches. The usefulness of this vessel will be more evident to you, when the various services she has already performed will be seen by the accompanying orders, &c.

After dispatching the Constellation frigate and procuring my supplies, I proceeded on the 22d of May for Arica, as heretofore advised by the copy of my letter to General Ramirez, under date of April 20th, taking under my protection and convoy the ship Canton, which was all the trade bound that way then in readiness, except the American brig Pearl, to the master of which vessel I refused giving convoy in consequence of arms and other munitions of war, constituting a part of his cargo, which he acknowledged he had on board, for the purpose of trading with the Indians on the northwest coast. That vessel and the British brig Sarah sailed the same day from Valparaiso, and arrived at Arica the same day with the Canton, and the day previous to our entering the port with this ship. From Arica I proceeded with the Canton to Quilca, where that ship discharged the remainder of her cargo, and on the 27th of July I left Quilca and proceeded to Callao, where we arrived on the 2d August. On my arrival at that place, representations and complaints were laid before me of the seizure of the property of our citizens, and the incarceration of some of their persons by the authorities and government of Lima, which I represented to that government, and transmit the result by this conveyance to the honorable Secretary of State. If the representation was not made in strict conformity with your instructions, (through Mr. Prevost,) I can only beg leave to offer you, as reasons for so doing, the absence of that gentleman; the extreme urgency of the complainants; the revolution which was about to take place in that government; the minister of state, Monteagudo, having been already transported to Panama, and San Martin, who, it was not difficult to foresee, would soon follow him, from his cruelties and oppressions towards the people of that city and province; it, therefore, seemed desirable to make, and was one of those occasions which asked for, a spirited representation, to keep alive any just claims we might have on the future government of that place, as well as to exhibit to them that we are not indifferent to injuries, and that they would not be passed unnoticed.

On the 20th September the congress of Lima met, and San Martin resigned all his authorities; they then appointed him commander-in-chief, but, to their astonishment, the next day they found he had embarked that night on board the Belgrano, taking with him all the money from the treasury and mint (as I have been informed) coined from the gold and silver taken from the churches in Lima, for the purposes of government, and sailed away. On the 30th September we got under way, taking under our convoy and protection the American ship Chauncey, of Baltimore, and proceeded to Quilca, where we arrived on the 22d October. On the 2d December we left Quilca, with four American vessels under our protection, and on the 29th arrived at this place, where we found Valparaiso had been entirely destroyed, on the 19th of November last, by an earthquake, and the country in a state of revolution.

It seems that the provinces of Conception and Coquimbo, dissatisfied with the proceedings of the Director, O'Higgins, and the self-created congress, together with the troops under General Freyre, who have received no pay for the last year. These provinces declared themselves independent of the government of Santiago, and are now in arms against that government. It will terminate, according to the best informed persons, in favor of Freyre, as the measure is popular throughout the country.

With respect to the blockade of the coast of Peru by the authorities of Lima, it only existed on paper, as no force was stationed there but the schooner Sacramento of one gun, from the day we arrived off Arica (June 5th) to the 8th of July, the day on which the Peruvian brig Belgrano arrived there from Lima, a coast extending seven degrees from north to south, and as much more from east to west. Under what pretext it was possible for the government of Lima to institute a blockade on so extensive a coast, embracing many harbors, even with the whole naval force they then possessed, (consisting of the brigs Pezuela and Belgrano, and schooners Cruz and Sacramento,) the enclosed paper marked A will throw the most light. The intrigues of the British, desirous of engrossing the trade of Upper Peru, induced that government to exclude all others, under pretext of blockade, and thus enabled them to sell the exclusive trade to those merchants.

I herewith have the honor to transmit to you the declaration of the master and mate of the ship Canton, since obtained in addition to Mr. Ward's, which accompanies the correspondence with the minister of state: also, the report of Lieutenants Hunter and Hammersley, of this ship, who searched, by my orders, the brig Pearl as she was departing from Arica.

The expedition for Upper Peru embarked and left Callao on the 15th and 17th October last, consisting of 4,500 men; the residue marched towards Ica, composed of 1,500 of the Columbian troops from Guayaquil, 500 lancers, and a regiment raised from plantation negroes, about 600 strong, (every third male of the slaves having been taken to form this corps;) no troops remained at Lima, and Callao was garrisoned by the livicos, (militia of Lima.)

A short time will decide the fate of this expedition, as their means of fitting it out were very limited. They had only provisions to carry them to Arica; the troops discontented as well as most of the officers, having received little or no pay since San Martin became Protector. The opposing party had left nothing within 100 miles of the coast; all was waste, and destitute of domestic animals. About 300 horses were sent them from this place, which is all the succor they could afford them, in consequence of the state of things here. It would not be rash to predict its failure; and, in that case, Lima will revert to the royalists.

By the best information I could get, when in Upper Peru, the inhabitants were generally in favor of being independent of Spain, but they were also as generally opposed to acquiring it through the invasion of San Martin, his character and conduct being too well known to them to render it desirable to come under his sway. Thus, if Peru has not been independent of Spain long since, it is owing to the invasion of San Martin and Admiral Cochrane, which united the greater part of Lower Peru, and all of Upper Peru against them; even the Viceroy would not oppose the wishes of the people in this respect, as he finds the supineness of the Spanish government has left them to their fate.

Enclosed you will receive the correspondence of Lieuts. Henry and Connor, on the subjects they were charged with at Guayaquil; also, the proceedings of a court of inquiry on Lieut. Sawyer, of the schooner Dolphin. Lieut. Mayo, of this ship, who conveys these dispatches by way of Panama, has, in his possession, a pass I have procured from General Bolivar, which he will deliver to you, and which can be made use of should you find it necessary to transmit to this quarter any dispatches.

This gentleman's health, while on board the Dolphin, to which he was attached, was such (owing to her confined state) as required his returning home last year; he, however, volunteered to remain out if on board this ship, so long as his health would permit, and his services could be advantageous. His high standing with the Department, and the continued services he has heretofore rendered to the satisfaction of those whose command he has been under, render it unnecessary for me to do more on this occasion than to confirm their good report, and request towards him the notice of the Department. I have directed Lieut. Henry (to whom I have given the command of the dispatch boat) to stop at Lima, on his way to Panama, and receive any dispatches Lieutenant Commandant Connor may have for you, which will put you in possession of the latest advices from that quarter. Towards Lieut. Henry I also take the liberty of requesting your notice, whose attentions and activity on the service in this sea deserve my commendation. And in case of any reduction of the navy, I beg leave to report, that all the officers in this ship will merit your consideration in any selection that may be made for retention; all have hitherto conducted properly and merit my approbation.

Admiral Cochrane has resigned the service, and, yesterday, embarked all his baggage and effects preparatory to leaving this place. He has given out that he is invited into the service of Brazil, and is going to take command of the naval forces of that country.

I have the honor to remain, &c., &c., &c.,

(Signed) CHARLES STEWART.

U. S. Ship Franklin, Valparaiso, April 16, 1822.

To his excellency the Supreme Director of Chili:

May it please your Excellency: I have the honor to inform you that I am about to dispatch to North America the frigate Constellation, Captain Ridgely, by which vessel it will be highly gratifying to me to transmit, and pleasing to my government to receive, any and all the information relating to the seizure and detention of two sums of money belonging to citizens of the United States, and taken possession of by and under the authority of Vice-Admiral Cochrane, commander-in-chief of the naval forces of Chili. The first seizure took place, in part, on shore, near the river Baranca, and the other part was taken from the neutral vessel Gazelle, in May, 1819, and constituting together, in plata pina and dollars, the sum of one hundred and forty-two thousand dollars. The second was taken possession of by and under the same authority of Vice-Admiral Cochrane, in the valley of Citara, in May, 1821, constituting, in bars of silver and dollars, the sum of seventy thousand four hundred dollars; all of which was under the control and direction of Eliphalet Smith, master of the American brig Macedonian, who then was, and now is, a citizen of the United States of America.

Considering the long period which has elapsed since the seizure of the property, and the repeated applications that have been made by my predecessor in command, and the commercial agent of the United States at Valparaiso, to the authorities of Chili, without any satisfactory response having been made on this subject; that it is claimed as property of, and belonging to, citizens of the United States, and that ample time has elapsed to enable the authorities seizing and detaining it to prove their right so to do; and, considering the honorable sympathy felt by the Government and people of the United States towards the patriots of South America, in their struggle for independence, I feel persuaded that your excellency will acquiesce in the right we have to expect, that justice will not be delayed or denied them.

As it comports with the best interests and is the policy of the United States to cultivate a good understanding with all governments and people, and, in the spirit of amity, to exhaust all amicable means for obtaining justice for its citizens,—in this spirit, and entertaining, in common with my fellow citizens and the Government of the United States, a high opinion of the very many excellent qualities you possess, and the desire you have to cultivate a good understanding with the United States, I have availed myself of this occasion to ask, for the information of my government, whether the property seized, as above, will be restored, with suitable damages; or, whether judgments have been given in the prize courts condemning the same, and, if so, to ask a copy of the judgments, that I may lay before them the grounds of such condemnation.

In bringing to the notice of your excellency the above acts, committed on land by the authority of the naval forces of Chili, I would also beg leave to bring to your notice a more recent act committed on the water by the military authorities at Talcahuano, in the province of Conception. Although some color of pretext might be assumed for the seizure of neutral property in the territory of an enemy; yet, no pretext whatever could exist for the violent seizure of neutral property on board a friendly vessel, within the port and territory of Chili. As the act was committed without the authority of the government of Chili, it was hoped and expected that immediate restitution of the property taken would have followed the decree of your excellency, and a suitable punishment would have been inflicted on the authors of that outrage, so nearly allied to piracy by its character and the manner in which it was executed.

May I ask of your excellency, for the information of my government, whether it is contemplated by the authorities of Chili to do anything more in the above case of the ship Ocean, Captain Pinkham, whose declaration you will receive, enclosed, for your excellency's information?

I have the honor to remain, with assurances of the highest consideration and respect, &c.,

(Signed) C. STEWART.

C.

[Translation.]

Eliphalet Smith, a citizen of the United States of America, prompted, no doubt, by a lively interest in whatever may be beneficial to his country or its citizens, and animated with a generous sympathy in the concerns of the inhabitants of this province, with whom he has been for some time associating in mercantile transactions; and whereas, said Smith, by his residence here, has had an opportunity to witness the good faith of this government in the fulfillment of all its engagements, and to mark its invariable respect and courtesy to all foreigners, in conformity to the established usages of Spain, adopted by the noble magnanimity of her policy, the said Smith hath expressed a wish to this royal government that articles of agreement should be entered into which shall secure to his countrymen the right to land their goods and merchandise from their vessels upon this coast, and from which, great and mutual advantages are to be derived by both the parties contracting. In furtherance of this meritorious proposal, I shall be happy to sanction it with all the faculties which have been entrusted to me by his excellency the Vice-King; and having no doubt that your excellency, as commander-in-chief of the naval forces of the United States, derives powers correspondent to my own in this behalf from your government, there seems to be no difficulty in our agreeing upon such terms as may appear most advantageous to both nations. I have no doubt that such an arrangement might be made without delay if it were possible for us to have a personal interview. But I apprehend this to be impracticable, since it may not be convenient for you to leave your squadron, and it is improper for me to absent myself from the front of my troops.

I propose, therefore, that your excellency send some vessel-of-war to the port of Molliendo, under the command of an officer, or with some other person on board in the confidence of your excellency, clothed with full powers to treat with me on this interesting subject; upon which we may agree to articles of arrangement that shall result so beneficially as to place us in grateful remembrance with those who shall successively participate in them, and prove us both more worthy of the nations we represent.

I shall ever be, with the highest consideration,

Your excellency's very obedient and most humble servant,

(Signed) JUAN RAMIREZ.

The Commander-in-Chief of the U. S. Naval Forces in the Pacific.

Arequipa, February 25, 1822.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, August 18, 1825.

I certify that the preceding is a copy of a paper purporting to be a translation of a document marked C, which accompanied a communication from Commodore Charles Stewart to the Secretary of the Navy, dated May 3d, 1822, the original of which is on file in this Department.

JOHN BOYLE.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, Valparaiso, April 20, 1822.

To his excellency Juan Ramirez, commander-in-chief of H. C. Majesty's forces in Upper Peru:

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your excellency's letter directed to me under date of the 25th of February last, inviting me to arrange and agree upon articles for the future commercial intercourse between his Most Catholic Majesty's provinces in Peru and the United States of America.

The invariable policy of the Government of the United States in leaving to foreign powers the free enjoyment of commerce with its ports, precludes the possibility of granting to the authorities of Peru an equivalent for any relaxation they may deem proper to grant from the rigid colonial policy of his Most Catholic Majesty. In this state of things, should his highness, the Viceroy of Peru, deem it proper (for the commerce of the provinces and for the facilitating their essential supplies) to rescind those existing restrictions, and moderate the excessive duties hitherto imposed on the imports and exports to the provinces, towards neutral powers, it will afford me great pleasure to receive from his highness the same and transmit it to my government for their information, as one of those neutrals towards whose commerce such relaxation has taken place. The strict neutrality adhered to by the Government of the United States during the contest carrying on in South America between the contending parties, was, at all times, an assurance to both that their commerce was equally open to each, under the sanction of neutrality and the laws of nations, whenever either party was disposed to receive the same, and extend towards it that protection and reciprocity of convenience and facility which constitute the basis of mutual benefit and intercourse. Therefore, should his highness, the Viceroy, be desirous of placing the intercourse with the provinces of Peru in that unshackled state which will enable neutral merchants to trade therewith without a certain hazard of loss, I can assure your excellency it will afford me great pleasure to be the organ of communication to whatever may be mutually beneficial to our respective nations. That sufficient time may be allowed to enable your excellency to lay before his highness, the Viceroy, this communication for his consideration, I dispatch one of the vessels-of-war under my command, and shall shortly touch at Arica, in this ship, to receive any further communications you may deem proper to make.

I pray your Excellency to accept the assurances of my high respect, with which,

I have the honor to be, your most obedient servant,

(Signed) CHARLES STEWART.

Señor Comandante de las Fuerzas Navales de los Estados Unidos.

AREQUIPA, Junio 3 de 1822.

Muy Señor mio de tode mi aprecio: Como V. S. se sirvió comunicarme su pronta llegada á esta costa, aprovecho este motivo que me proporciona la ocasion de saludarlo, avisarle, que su pliego lo dirigí al Exmo. Señor Virey, cuya contestacion espero, y afrecerle mis respetos, y la fina propension que me asiste emplearme en su beneplácito con una voluntad sincera y espresiva. Así vea V. S. qué se le ofrece, seguro de que, pendiente de mi arbitrio, será servido por su afmo. Q. B. S. M.

JUAN RAMIREZ.

Anticipé á V. S. mis respetos en Arica, reservándome instruirle la contestacion del Exmo. Señor Virey á la que le acompañe de V. S. mismo sobre el arreglo propuesto en beneficio del comercio y utilidad de las Naciones á que pertenecemos. Sin haberla recibido aun se me anticipa la noticia del arribo del Navio Franklin, de su mando á Quilca, puerto mas inmediato de mi cuartel General, y no puedo menos de valver á repetir á V. S. mis consideraciones, y dirigir un oficial que se las ofrezca á mi nombre. Si V. S. haciendo un franco uso de mis ofrecimientos me presentare la ocasion agradable de egercitar en su obsequio mi persona y facultades, yo la aprovecharia desde luego haciéndome en ello el mas alto honor; pero seguramente siento reclamar ántes la generosidad de V. S. y su proteccion en favor de un General que despues de haber cumplido sus deberes, cansado de las fatigas á que lo han necesitado sus mismos servicios, tiene su Pasaporte para restituirse á Europa y desea incorporarse eu el seno de su familia. Todo depende de que V. S. se decida á franquearme su proteccion para realizar idea tan justa, que en nada compromete su neutralidad respecto de los partidos en América. Préstese pues á ello, por el consejo de su corazon generoso, y por la mediacion del amigo Smith, que no dudo interponga su influjo en mi favor.

Dios que á V. S. ms. as. Cuartel General en Arequipa, Junio 29 de 1822.

JUAN RAMIREZ.

Translation of the above.

I forwarded my respects from Arica, reserving for some future time to inform you of the reply of his excellency, the Viceroy, to the letter which your honor addressed to me, and which I forwarded to him, respecting the proposed arrangement in behalf of commerce, and for the benefit of the nations to which we belong. Without having as yet received said answer, I am informed of the arrival, at Quilca, of the ship Franklin under your command, a port nearer to my head-quarters, and I can do no less than to reiterate to your honor my considerations, and to send an officer to offer them in my name. If your honor, frankly accepting my offers, should afford me the pleasing opportunity of exercising, in your behalf, my person and my influence, I would avail myself of it at once, considering it a great honor; but, really, I regret to be under the necessity, beforehand, to appeal to the generosity of your honor, and to solicit your protection in behalf of a general who, having performed his duty, and worn with the fatigues which the discharge of those very duties has brought upon him, has his passport to return to Europe, where he desires to return to the bosom of his family. All depends upon your honor deciding to grant me your protection in order to realize so just a wish, which in no wise compromises your neutrality respecting the parties in America. Yield, then, to my request—to the dictates of your generous heart, and through the mediation of friend Smith, who, I have no doubt, will use his influence in my behalf.

God preserve you many years.

JUAN RAMIREZ.

HEAD-QUARTERS IN AREQUIPA, June 29, 1822.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, off Quilca, July 12, 1822.

To his excellency Lieutenant General Ramirez, commander-in-chief, &c., &c., Arequipa:

The letter your excellency did me the honor to write me on the 20th ult., by some accident was not received until yesterday. I was in hopes that by the early opportunity in which I had dispatched Mr. Eliphalet Smith with my reply to your excellency's letter transmitted me by that general, dated the 25th of February last, that I should have received by this time any propositions his excellency, the Vice-King, might wish to make through me to the Government of the United States, for the regulation of the commerce of our citizens. Under the supposition that his excellency declines anything further on that subject, I beg leave to apprise your excellency that my stay at this place will be made as short as possible, and only long enough to place the funds of my fellow-citizens on board this ship, which is collecting in Arequipa, and on its way to that place from the mines in the vicinity. Your excellency will render a service to the object of my government in this sea, by your influence with his excellency the delegate of Arequipa, to expedite by affording all necessary facilities to this object: by dispatching it to the coast, within the province of his authority.

In replying to that part of your excellency's letter for a passage in this ship, I have to observe that it will be entirely out of my power to meet your wishes. Our station in this sea will continue for two years, in intercourse with various ports, all of which are in a belligerent state. Your excellency will perceive the impropriety of affording you, as a neutral, the accommodation which you desire.

I pray your excellency to accept the assurance, &c., &c.,

(Signed) C. STEWART.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, Harbor of Callao, August 9, 1822.

To his excellency the Marquis of Truxillo, supreme delegate of the government of Lima, &c., &c., &c.:

I have the honor to represent to your excellency, that, since my arrival in this port, complaints have been made to me by several of my fellow-citizens, of the injustice and injuries they have sustained in their persons and property, by the authorities and government of Lima, from the illegal seizure of their vessels and cargoes, or their proceeds, and the imprisoning of some of their persons without just cause or pretext other than as coercive measures, to compel a relinquishment of their property.

Confiding in the justice of the government of Lima, and sensible that the Government of the United States has given no grounds for acts so hostile to their national rights, and so injurious to their interests, I feel persuaded it will be only necessary to present the cases to the government of Lima, to insure the restitution of the property so unjustly detained from my fellow-citizens, with suitable compensation for the damages they have sustained in consequence, and such orders to the officers and agents of the government of Lima as will effectually prevent, in future, the imprisonment and duress of their persons, so highly inconsistent with the respect due from a government professing friendship for the Government of the United States, and who are so justly entitled to it from the respect and sympathy they have always shown towards the cause and patriots of South America.

By the memorial and protest of Stephen B. Howe, a citizen of the United States, and late supercargo of the brig Macedonian, of Boston, and John B. Jones, chief officer of that brig, it appears that on the 28th of February last, that vessel was forcibly taken possession of by officers and soldiers acting under the authority of the government of Lima; that four of the seamen belonging to the Macedonian brig were conducted to prison; that the officers of said brig were turned on shore by the guard on the 13th of April, after which the cargo of cocoa was landed, which, together with the remaining cargo on shore, brought from China, in the brig, as also the proceeds of such part as had been disposed of, was condemned by some secret tribunal or inquisition, and the whole applied to the necessities of the State; and the brig Macedonian fitted out as a national cruiser, and has since sailed under the authority and flag of the government of Lima. Under this state of things, it becomes my duty to claim from the justice of the government of Lima restitution of the brig Macedonian, and the cargo she brought from China to Callao, in proceeds or otherwise, as also the cargo of cocoa on board at her seizure, or full value for the whole thereof, with suitable damages for its unjust detention.

I have the honor to remain, with great consideration and respect,

Your excellency's most obedient and very humble servant,

C. STEWART.

CALLAO HARBOR, August 20, 1822.

To his excellency Francisco Valdiviedo, minister of state of Peru:

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your excellency's letter of the 13th instant.

The Government of the United States would, were it necessary, most sensibly appreciate the motives and condescension of the government of Lima in extending towards the only representative the United States have at this place the special favor of replying to his appeals to your sense of justice in behalf of his fellow-citizens, notwithstanding the decree of his excellency the Protector of Peru. If I comprehend the spirit and intention of that decree, I should have no difficulty in considering it in conformity with the laws of nations, and as binding only on those neutrals and strangers residing in the country, and enjoying the protection of its laws, but by no means binding on those transient strangers who are not subject to the laws, further than is necessary for the internal peace and quiet thereof.

Although this case refers to personal interest, yet there are circumstances attending the transaction, involving essential principles of international law, as well as important individual and national interests; and the Government of the United States feel too sensibly the claims their citizens have on their protection, not to be aware how far their dignity is concerned in affording it.

Your excellency states that this case has been discussed and adjudged in the hearing of the parties concerned; but you will perceive by the accompanying copy of the protest of one of the parties, that this was not the case, and that his prayer for a suspension of the trial, until the arrival of the principal evidence, and the original documents essential to a defence, was disregarded.

Your excellency also states, that the brig Macedonian was sequestered as the property of Don Jose Arismendi, whose share in the vessel and cargo was of more value than the whole property seized. I am at a loss to discover how your excellency renders a share greater than the amount seized, unless you consider the part of the cargo landed at Arica as constituting a part of his share; and that you seized the shares of others in this vessel and cargo, because that which belonged to Arismendi was not within your reach. This would be setting up a principle so contrary to every rule of justice, that I trust there is no government existing capable of adopting it. If Arismendi owned any part of the brig and her cargo, it is susceptible of proof, and it remains for the government of Lima to furnish those proofs for the information of the Government of the United States.

Your excellency states that the permission for the expedition of this vessel from Canton to Callao was negotiated with the enemy by Arismendi and Captain Smith: they having paid to that enemy, for the purposes of the war, certain sums of money in advance of duties, and in violation of the neutrality said Smith ought to have religiously observed. By the documents herewith transmitted, no such fact appears, but the reverse. They show that Arismendi made the contract with the government then existing, and that, if any money was advanced, he alone paid it; that Smith's contract was with Arismendi, for the benefit of which, Arismendi was to receive a portion of the profits of the voyage, and no money was paid by Smith to Arismendi or the government; consequently, Smith committed no breach of neutrality, as your excellency has alleged. The recent contracts entered into by the government of Lima with certain merchants, for the purpose of trading in British vessels with the ports of your enemies at the Intermedios, would not constitute a justifiable cause for seizing and confiscating those vessels and cargoes by your enemy, under the pretext that those contracts had violated their neutrality, although the consideration money should be applied, as it may be, to the support of the war.

Your excellency states that, it being necessary to detain some individuals who were on board, to prosecute a judicial investigation, the four seamen were of course detained for that purpose, and that this act cannot be considered as oppressive. Where habits of incarcerating foreigners prevail, I make no doubt, the consideration and feelings of those practicing such habits become seared to their oppression. To the citizens of the United States, who have not forfeited their liberty under the laws, imprisonment is particularly oppressive, and extremely obnoxious to their government, and so far as they were essential to the prosecution then contemplated, the very act of incarceration destroys the validity of their evidence, and renders all they do and say a nullity in the eyes of justice; for, those who have suffered personal injury and insult, and stand in personal fear, are not the tools by which justice works her ends.

By the accompanying documents it will appear that the following facts are established as regards the brig Macedonian and her cargo:

First. That the brig Macedonian belongs to John S. Ellery, of Boston, and Philip Mercier, of Baltimore, citizens of the United States.

Second. That the cargo belonged in part to Pacqua, a Hong merchant in Canton, and several citizens of the United States, by whom the cargo was shipped in Canton.

Third. That the case is not a seizure under the common law, or a litigation between the citizens of one State and the citizens of another State, but a seizure by the government of Lima for an alleged breach of neutrality.

Fourth. That no contract was made by E. Smith with the former government of Lima, and that E. Smith has never paid on account of such contract to the former government of Lima one dollar, in advance of duties or otherwise, for the purposes of carrying on the war.

Fifth. That E. Smith made a contract with Arismendi for their mutual benefit, but wholly prospective on their part, as said Smith was not obliged, and did not pay to Arismendi one dollar on account of the said contract.

Sixth. That Arismendi failing to perform his part of the contract, it became null and void, and released E. Smith fully and effectually from all obligations on his part, in consequence of which E. Smith went to Arica, and not to Callao, as the contract obliged him to do; from whence he sent the brig to Callao, with such parts of the cargo as were not suited to any other market.

Seventh. That his property was condemned contrary to the rules of justice, which require that the claimants should be heard in its defence, and that time should be allowed to produce all the evidence essential to such defence.

Eighth. That part of the crew were, without justifiable cause, taken forcibly to prison, and there confined, not for the ends of justice, but for such purposes as are generally the object in such cases of incarceration.

The foregoing facts being sufficiently established by the evidence transmitted, common justice towards a friendly and neutral power would seem to require the restitution of the property thus unjustly taken, as due to the citizens of a country whose government has shown, at all times, the most friendly respect for the rights of the patriots of South America, and who only desire a reciprocity of respect towards their own flag.

I pray your excellency to accept the assurances of the high
Consideration and respect with which I remain, &c., &c., &c.,
(Signed) CHARLES STEWART.

Note of documents transmitted.

No. 1. Attested copy of protest.
No. 2. Attested copy of Arismendi's contract with the former government of Lima.
No. 3. Attested copy of Smith's contract with Arismendi.
No. 4. Attested copy of Smith's declaration.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, off Callao, September 26, 1822.

To his excellency Francisco Valdeviedo, minister of state of Peru:

I have delayed replying to your excellency's letter of the 10th inst., in consequence of the rapid changes which seem to have taken place in the government and authorities of Lima since I had the honor of receiving the same.

Waiving, for the present, the question of legality attaching to the decree of his excellency the Protector, on the broad basis your note seems desirous of attaching thereto, as well as the questionable right of the government of Lima to seize and condemn the property of citizens of the United States, for the lawful transactions of E. Smith with the subjects of a State under the former government of Lima, I have given my particular attention to the documents your excellency has transmitted to me, on which that confiscation has been predicated. No. 11 appears to be the copy of a transfer from Mercier to Arismendi for his half of the brig Macedonian, written by the said Arismendi, who therein states the original to be in his power. Such a paper as this copy would not be received as evidence in any court of justice, more especially where the original existed in the power of Arismendi, and the said Arismendi was in the power and prison of the government of Lima, and, if that government could force from Arismendi such a copy, they could also force from him the original. Your excellency cannot but be aware that such a document, if it existed, could give no legal rights to Arismendi over the vessel, as the forms of law require a regular bill of sale to constitute the ownership and partnership in property of that description, and Arismendi was too strict and correct a merchant to hold property by so flimsy a tenure.

No. 12 appears to be the copy of instructions given by Arismendi to his agents Helme and Joiberry; admitting this to be genuine, it only proves that Arismendi was willing and desirous of holding Smith bound to his part of the contract, while he (Arismendi) failed completely in the performance of that part which he had undertaken: and, surely, your excellency has not to learn, at this late period, that the failure of one of the parties to a contract, in any part he binds himself to do, not only exonerates the other party from a compliance therewith, but subjects the party so failing to all the damages and detriments arising in consequence.

No. 13 is the report of the judge of sequestration to your excellency, which states that, in the second page of Arismendi's greatest book, under date of the 1st of July, 1820, the sum of $18,500 is charged as his (Arismendi's) half part of the Macedonian, and supplies for expenses of the vessel—the day book confirming the charge as $15,000 for half the vessel, and $3,500 for expenses. From the dates of this entry in the great book and the day book differing so widely from the document said to be Mercier's transfer of half of the Macedonian to Arismendi, wherein he acknowledges to have that day been paid $15,000 for the same, I should suppose your excellency would find yourself at a loss which to credit, the copy of Mercier's conveyance, or the report of the judge of sequestration: if the transferring paper, the entry in the books cannot be just; if the entry is just, the paper given by Mercier must be fictitious.

Nos. 15 and 16 are the depositions of the master and mate of the brig Macedonian, which confirm all set forth in the protests and declarations of B. Howe and E. Smith, which state that the freight of the goods was received at San Blas, the amount of which freight constituted the specie and piña there put on board, with which they sailed to Canton.

Your excellency will pardon me if I cannot perceive in the transactions of E. Smith with Arismendi, and the lawful voyages of the brig Macedonian, that violation of his neutral character so strongly insisted on by your excellency, and you will excuse my presumption if I cannot give credence to your excellency's assumptions, so illy borne out by facts and proofs, however often reiterated by the minister of state of Peru.

The claimants, having been excluded from a hearing in defence of their property before the first tribunal, as also from making their protests and reservations before the proper authoritiy, have little to expect from the justice of any other tribunal before which they could bring it. Their appeal must now be made to the justice of their own government, who will not deem it unworthy of their most serious attention; and I can assure your excellency that if so unjust and nefarious a transaction has not been resisted by force of arms, you owe it exclusively to the respect the Government of the United States desires to feel for the patriot cause of South America.

I have the honor to renew to your excellency
My assurances of the highest consideration and respect,
(Signed) CHAS. STEWART.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, Callao Harbor, June 30, 1823.

To his excellency General Sucre, civil and military commander-in-chief at Callao:

I had the honor to receive your excellency's note of yesterday's date, apprising me that you have "ordained that all the ports situated between Pisco and Chancay, occupied by the Spanish forces, are in a state of blockade, on the same principles and conditions as those of all the coast of Puru from Iquique to Pisco." In reply to these new principles of blockade adopted by the patriot governments in the waters of the Pacific ocean, and by the royal authorities on the opposite side of this continent in the north Atlantic, I have to observe that the Government of the United States expressly disavow their legitimacy; that they have at all times heretofore, and in future will continue to protest against their legality, at least so far as they may affect their just rights, and interrupt their lawful commerce with either of the parties at war. In thus preserving their neutral attitude under the authority of gubernatorial law, and their innocent commerce from being seized or turned from the ports of either of the belligerents under such pretexts, decidedly illegal, they do not deny to the belligerents the right of search for contraband munitions of war, the only legitimate purpose of such blockades.

Whenever it shall please the authorities in Peru to declare a port or ports in a state of blockade, and permanently station before such port or ports a competent naval force to carry it into effect, then such blockade will be respected, or those attempting to enter (after due notice) will be subject to all the penalties in such cases. A conformity with these principles on the part of the belligerents will strengthen and preserve the harmony subsisting between the republic of North and the republics of South America, which it is so much their disposition and interests respectively to maintain.

I have the honor to tender to your excellency

The highest consideration and respect, with which I remain, &c., &c., &c.,

(Signed) CHAS. STEWART.

U. S. Ship Franklin, Callao Bay, July 14, 1823.

To his excellency General Sucre, civil and military commander-in-chief at Callao:

The letter your excellency did me the honor to write me on the 8th inst, in reply to mine of the 30th ult., has been duly received.

It does not, perhaps, belong to me to discuss the principles your excellency contends for, with respect to the declared blockade of the western coast of Peru by the patriot government; it may only belong to me to notify my respectful protest against its illegal and injurious operation, so far as the commerce of the republic of North America is concerned; and, in compliance with my orders, to guard it against those effects, leaving the principle and points contended for to the discussion of the two governments. But, the government of Peru may have been led into an error on that subject, by the infraction of those principles of the laws of nations, during the late war in Europe, between France and England, and then for the first time adopted by Great Britain, and, as your excellency states, not opp sed by her commanders on this station. If I bring to the notice of your excellency some important facts, out of the strict line of duty attaching to my command, I hope and trust your excellency will do me the favor to believe it only originates in a strong desire to guard our respective rights, and to preserve a lasting harmony between the governments.

After the commencement of hostilities between Great Britain and France, in 1793, so long as it was the interest of England, and during the existence of the marine of several European powers, that government observed and applied the principles of the laws of nations to all the blockades instituted. But when she had destroyed, in turn, the marine of the other European powers, her policy was then changed; international law was rejected; honor and common honesty were abandoned; power gave right, and a war of destruction was waged against the unoffending neutrals. Thus, having nothing for her triumphant marine to prey upon, the neutral commerce was given up to its cormorant rapacity; and even that which escaped its talons, she forced her open enemies to prey on, under pretext of retaliation.

Against such principles, I need not remind your excellency, the United States resisted, even with England, successfully; and as the republic of the north was the first to contend for just principles in the late war, she was also found the last in the field defending them.

The conclusion your excellency has drawn from the tacit conduct of the British naval commanders on this station are not applicable to the United States; and perhaps those commanders may not be instructed to interfere with any kind of blockade the patriot government may deem proper to impose, especially one founded on principles so lately and newly exercised by themselves. England, the most politic nation, has always been guided in her conduct towards others by principles of policy and interest, oftentimes just, but as often at variance with justice and previous conduct. She may reserve to herself the right of discussing and demanding indemnification of the patriot government hereafter, for any violation of her rights—to preserve a future cause of quarrel with these governments, to obtain some exclusive commercial advantage as indemnity hereafter—to apply the same rule to the commerce of this country in her future wars. Whatever infraction of her rights she may deem proper to tacitly acquiesce in now, does not and cannot constitute a reason that the Government of the United States should also yield theirs.

Your excellency very justly observes that a blockade declared by the commander of a ship of the line, or a schooner, legally commissioned for war, does not import less in the one case or the other; and it will be but just to add that the declaration of a blockade, originating in their will, imports nothing. The commander of a ship-of-war, or commander-in-chief of a squadron, can institute a blockade in very distant seas; the urgency and necessity of the case render it legal. The act of a belligerent, involving certain rights of a friend; is an act of sovereignty, it belongs to that authority to declare it, and only to the commander to carry it into effect. But the belligerent's right and will to do so, and the declaration of it, do not constitute the act, unless combined with an object that is legitimate, and a force competent to sustain it. With respect to the legitimacy of the object, that can only exist in depriving your enemy of all external means of annoying you, and external sources for continuing the war, and is in a great measure dependent on their actual situation; hence, the right of the neutral to introduce all articles of a perfectly innocent nature, and which do not constitute anything towards carrying on the war.

It would be preposterous to blockade by sea a port against the entrance of provisions, which has an extensive and abundant country adjoining to supply it; in such a case, the belligerent would only be injuring a common friend without prejudice to his enemy. This the laws of nations forbid his doing; but on the other hand, where a possibility exists of your reducing your enemy to terms by excluding such provisions, your right is legitimate to do so, and the injury done the neutral is accidental.

With respect to the competency of the force, it will depend on the localities of the port or ports blockaded, and not on the size of the vessels and the weight and number of their guns. With this neutrals have nothing to do; it is sufficient for them that the place is susceptible of being blockaded, and the force applied is of such description, and so stationed, as to render it extremely hazardous to enter. So also with respect to the force of your enemy: if he possesses a thousand ships-of-war more than the blockading power, and does not see proper to drive it from his ports, it is effectual against the neutral so long as that blockade preserves and does not voluntarily abandon its stations.

A blockade originally legitimate and legally instituted, may derive an opposite character from the conduct of the belligerent blockading. Thus, the forces stationed to carry it into effect negligently and partially executing it, the government contravening its legitimate object, and by partiality or license permitting one or two neutral flags to trade, while all others are excluded, thereby rendering it a subject of convenience to themselves or a source of tribute to their coffers. Admitting, in consequence of the localities of the western coast of Peru, that it be susceptible of blockade by as small or smaller a force than the same extent of coast in any other part of the world, yet the whole naval force of Peru, even if actually engaged in that service, is not a competent force for the blockade of a coast eight hundred miles in extent, and containing very many ports and harbors. I, however, believe very little of the naval force of Peru has been employed in that service; and, in fact, this extensive blockade has often been left for months with no other vessel beyond a schooner. And also there can no doubt exist of exclusive privileges having been given by the government of Peru to particular persons and flags to trade by license with this coast, declared under blockade.

The principles here contended for, the United States are also contending for with Spain, in the north Atlantic, where they operate in favor of the patriot government. It would be absurd for the government of Spain to declare under blockade and the operation of the laws of the Indies, the whole coast of Chili, Peru and Mexico, and as the most susceptible and convenient mode of sustaining that declaration, to cause a naval force superior to that of the patriots to cruise to the westward of Cape Horn, and there arrest every vessel coming or going, under pretext of violating the laws of the Indies and blockade of the coasts; yet this conduct on their part would not be less effectual or more absurd than the blockade of an extensive coast without anything like an adequate naval force to sustain it.

I pray your excellency to accept the assurances of the high respect

And consideration with which I have the honor to remain, &c., &c., &c.,

(Signed) CHAS. STEWART.

U. S. Ship Franklin, Quilca, January 15, 1824.

To his excellency Don Geronimo Valdez, commander-in-chief of the southern army of Peru:

On anchoring at this place to-day, the letter your excellency did me the honor to write me, under date of the 7th instant, was put into my hands, relating to certain transactions that had taken place since my arrival on this coast, as detailed in the reports of the commanders at this port and that of Molliendo.

Your excellency very justly persuades yourself "that some powerful motive, of which you are ignorant," has given rise to my attempts to intercept the brig Quintanilla, but very improperly attribute that transaction as growing out "of a state of war between our respective countries," or to imagine that any transaction of mine (were I capable of doing an intentional wrong) could seriously disturb the harmony between Spain and the United States of America, for my government never hesitates to do ample justice to complainants, even for inadvertent wrongs, as well as intentional ones, committed by officers acting under their authority. The transactions of the commander of the brig Quintanilla are so notoriously piratical, that I deem it would be the duty of all officers acting under the authority of just and legal governments, to seize and bring to condign punishment a person who so flagrantly outrages all law, justice and humanity, and I cannot persuade myself that either yourself or his excellency, the Viceroy, are prepared to avow the nefarious acts of this freebooter, or to entrust the honor of the Spanish flag to such hands.

Your excellency may not yet be aware of the transactions of this man, because no representations may have reached you, and my anxiety to arrest his career has hitherto prevented my offering to your excellency and the Vice-King the representation I now make, and to ask your co-operation to put an end to this lawless depredator on the persons and property of my fellow citizens in the Pacific, whatever minor authority (if he has any,) he may plead as his right. The commander of the privateer armed brig Quintanilla was formerly acting under, aiding, abetting and co-operating with Benavides, and in conjunction with him piratically seized, robbed and destroyed the American brig Ocean, and ship Hero, putting to death the captain, mate and one boy of the latter vessel. This man piratically seized the brig Cinco Hermanas, (being one of the crew,) at the mouth of the river Guayaquil, she being a merchant vessel on a trading voyage from this place to San Blas, which vessel is now the Quintanilla. This piratical act should have induced a gallant and just officer, officiating for a magnanimous nation, to have arrested and detained him, even should it not have comported with policy to have restored the property he so unlawfully possessed himself of, to an enemy; but cases have occurred in the history of Spain where magnanimously they have restored not only the property taken, but the offenders to an enemy, disdaining any advantages resulting from such lawless baseness, originating in acts of piracy. The recent piratical acts committed by this man, consist in his having fired a broadside into the American brig Frederick, coming from Pisco to this place, taking possession of her and sending her to Chiloe. Also in taking possession of, and robbing to a considerable amount, the American brig Winifred in the port of Quilca. Whatever commission he may have received from the Governor of Chiloe, authorizing him to capture the enemies of Spain, he could have no legal authority from such source to interfere with the commerce and citizens of the United States, trading to your own port, and under your own authority. The American brig Amanda was taken possession of in this port, her ballast tore up, and every part of the vessel ransacked and searched for money; and the crews of the several vessels were put in irons or confinement, and by coercion and bad treament induced to join this highway robber.

Enclosed I transmit to your excellency copies of the 15th and 18th articles of the treaty of amity, limits and navigation, between the King of Spain and the United States of America. The 15th article provides that free ship neutralizes all goods on board, although it should be property of the enemy of the other party; the 18th article provides for the respect due to their flags, and the caution, as well as motives, for boarding the vessels of either party in time of existing war. By these articles of the existing treaty between Spain and the United States, there is no authority in this country to grant commissions for seizing vessels of the United States; a treaty being the supreme law of the land, no power exists that can cancel its obligations, other than that of the King of Spain, who made it; and consequently any acts committed against the citizens of the United States and their property, contrary to those stipulations, by any authority other than that of the King of Spain, is unlawful and piratical.

These are the grounds for my late proceedings, which your excellency has been pleased to bring to my notice by the letter of the 17th instant. I shall now proceed to state to your excellency the authority under which these proceedings are justified. In the first place, the Government of the United States has kept a naval force, at a great expense, in this sea, to protect the commerce of the United States and their citizens against lawless depredations by either of the parties engaged in the civil war existing in South America. As I have already shown your excellency that, by the subsisting treaty between the King of Spain and the United States, the commander of the brig Quintanilla has no legal right to capture, detain, or search vessels of the United States, therefore, all his acts towards the American vessels before stated are lawless. In the second place, your excellency admits she has no other authority under which she cruised than that of the commission of the Governor of Chiloe, and under which authority this commander has conducted himself as he has done in the above cases. This, I have shown your excellency, is no authority whatever, unless the said governor possesses all the attributes of sovereignty adherent in the King of Spain, and can annul treaty stipulations. However indifferent we may be with respect to scrutinizing the authority with which the vessels cruising under the Spanish flag may be commissioned, so long as they confine their depredations to their enemy, yet we cannot be regardless of that authority when their hostilities are extended towards the interests we are sent here to protect: then, if we test that given by the Governor of Chiloe, by the laws of nations, it will be found defective.

The act of commissioning for war is an act of sovereignty, and Vattel's authority, in page 467, under book 3d, of war, section 229, is as follows: "Persons fitting out ships to cruise on the enemy, in recompense of their expenses and the risk they run, acquire the property of the capture; but they acquire it by grants from the sovereign, who issues out commissions to them," &c. In the third place, authority is given by a law of the Congress of the United States, under the second section, "to the commanders of the ships-of-war of the United States to subdue, seize, take, and send into any port of the United States any armed vessel or boat, the crew whereof shall be armed, and which shall have attempted or committed any piratical aggression, search, restraint, depredation, or seizure upon any vessel of the United States, or of the citizens thereof."

From the foregoing facts and circumstances, your excellency will perceive that no late movement of mine, or the forces under my command, are predicated upon views of hostility towards Spain or her rights; but on the contrary, that I owe it to the laws of my country and that of nations to examine all vessels armed for war in this sea, and thereby ascertain their character and authority, which is essential to my discriminating between those that are legally authorized to cruise and pirates.

The detaining of the boat belonging to the Quintanilla, as well as the other small boats belonging to the vessels in the Caleta, (which is now returned,) was a defensive act, in favor of the vessels and property in that port, and with no view to incommode the commandant or authorities at the place; particularly as a large number of the equipage of the pirate brig were in possession of her, and might, with such means, have committed a further outrage on the American brig Winifred, lying there.

It now remains for me to declare to your excellency that I entertain the highest confidence in the honor, justice, and integrity of the royal authorities of Peru, and that no reclamation on behalf of my fellow citizens, can be made by me, in justice, that will not be readily complied with. I owe to that candor which characterizes the government and nation I represent in this sea, as well as to that high and honorable character of your excellency, and the dignified station you fill and have sustained with so much virtue, honor, fidelity, and valor, thus to detail to your excellency the motives and obligations which dictated the late movements under my commnnd; and I feel fully persuaded your excellency holds in too high estimation the honor of the Spanish nation, and the dignity of its crown, to countenance an alliance with pirates, so dishonorable to the gallant struggle you are making for the colonial rights of Spain.

Enclosed I have the honor to transmit to his excellency, the Vice-King, copies of this correspondence, &c., which I beg the favor of your excellency to forward to him.

I embrace this occasion to renew to your excellency the assurance of my highest consideration And respect, and have the honor to remain, &c., &c., &c.,

(Signed) CHAS. STEWART.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, Quilca, January 16, 1824.

To his excellency Joseph La Serna, Viceroy of Peru:

Some transactions on the part of the naval forces under my command, originating in piratical depredations committed on the citizens of the United States and their property trading in the ports of the Intermedios, by a brig called the Quintanilla, fitted out of the Island of Chiloe, under the authority and jurisdiction of your excellency, have given rise to a correspondence with his excellency, General Valdez, commander-in-chief of the southern Spanish army in Peru. I have the honor to enclose to your excellency copies of that correspondence, which I hope will exhibit to you fully the grounds and authorities for those transactions.

I have also taken the liberty to transmit to your excellency, herewith, an attested copy of the stipulations and obligations of amity, commerce, and limits entered into between the King of Spain and the Government of the United States of North America, by convention and treaty, under the date it exhibits; which treaty stands confirmed and extended by the treaty of 1819, entered into with the King of Spain at the city of Washington, for the cession of the two Floridas to the United States, which convention and treaty were solemnly and duly ratified in the year 1821, by his present Majesty, the King of Spain,

Ferdinand VII, under the authority of the present constitution, and by the advice and consent of the constitutional cortes, with the exception of the third and fourth articles, which became null and void, under the cession of Louisiana to the United States of North America.

It becomes my duty to ask, for my information and that of my government, an explicit avowal or disavowal of the acts of the corsairs fitted out of the ports of Chiloe, towards the persons and property of the citizens of the United States, by the authorities there existing; it also becomes my duty to solicit from your excellency's justice that you will be pleased to order a restitution of the property thus taken from the citizens of the United States by this lawless corsair, as well as indemnity to the sufferers for all losses and detentions, in conformity with the existing treaty stipulations.

Enclosed I also have the honor to transmit to your excellency certain just claims, originating in the capture of the American ship Arab at Pisco, in July last, under the authority of his excellency, General Canterac, commanding the national armies of Peru. With respect to the cargo on board that ship at the time of her capture, I have not deemed it necessary to say anything, but shall leave it to the owners thereof, to reclaim through the Government of the United States, when it will become a subject of discussion between the two governments.

To receive the answer of your excellency to this dispatch, I shall direct one of the vessels under my command to touch at this port about the first of next month, when I flatter myself it will be of such a nature as to confirm the high confidence we have in the justice and integrity of his Catholic Majesty's government in Peru, and in the virtues which characterize your excellency, and calculated to promote and cement the subsisting harmony between our respective nations.

I have the honor to remain, with the highest considerations of respect, &c., &c., &c.,

(Signed) CHAS. STEWART.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, off Quilca, February 3, 1824.

To his excellency Joseph de La Serna, Viceroy of Peru:

Enclosed, I have the honor to transmit to your excellency the protest of several citizens of the United States, relative to the transactions and conduct of the officers and crew of the piratical brig Quintanilla, fitted out of the Island of Chiloe, under the authority of the governor and commander-in-chief of that island. All of which is duly submitted to your excellency, that you may be enabled to see how far those transactions will comport with the amity existing between the crown of Spain and the United States, as settled by the subsisting treaty.

I have the honor to remain, with the highest consideration and respect,

Your excellency's most obedient and very humble servant,

(Signed) CHAS. STEWART.

Note of documents transmitted.

No. 1. Copy of the declaration of the master and mate of the brig Winifred.
No. 2. Copy of the protest of the master and supercargo of the schooner Adonis.
No. 3. Copy (in Spanish) of the protest of the supercargo of the brig Frederick.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, at sea, February 6, 1824.

Col. Rafael Pero, secretary to the Vice-King of Peru, Quilca:

In reply to your letter of yesterday's date, I have to observe, in confirmation of what was stated to you in our personal interview on the 4th instant, that I cannot discuss the subject referred to with you or any other person acting under the authority of any inferior power to that of his excellency the Viceroy of Peru; and having exhibited to you the letters I had the honor to address their excellencies, General Valdez and the Viceroy, which fully explain all the motives for my transactions relative to the piratical vessel Quintanilla, and the officers and crew, I have no further explanation to give you on that subject, and must now refer you to the Government of the United States, through the Spanish minister resident at the city of Washington. In my letter to his excellency, the Viceroy, I have demanded an explicit avowal or disavowal of the character and conduct of this vessel fitted out at Chiloe, under the Spanish authority, and I cannot receive the avowal or disavowal of any authority subordinate to him.

Your observations respecting the consideration and deference which until this date have been granted to me with too much generosity and liberality by the Spanish government of Peru, are inapplicable to me, as I am not conscious of having received more than was due from the officers of one friendly nation to another, or more attentions and courtesy than have been shown to the officers and citizens of other nations similarly situated with myself, all of which have been reciprocated on every occasion that the officers and citizens of Peru have presented themselves on board the ship under my command.

Your insolent observation relative to my transactions with the patriot government would be treated on this occasion with the contempt it merits, were it not accompanied with an assertion that is false, and of which abundance of proofs exist to attest its falsity.

Here our correspondence on this subject must terminate, and this letter, with one remark I have to make on a passage in the letter of his excellency, General Valdez, which letter states you to be "authorized by his excellency, the Viceroy, to treat with me on some other subjects." On this I have to observe that I am not authorized by my government to enter into any political or commercial stipulations whatever with either of the parties at war, and that, if you do possess any powers, as stated in the letter of his excellency, General Valdez, your commission on that subject has terminated also.

I remain, &c., &c.,

(Signed) CHAS. STEWART.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, off Quilca, June 26, 1822.

To his excellency Don Jose de Pinera, sub-delegate, &c.:

SIR: Mr. Eliphalet Smith has apprised me that a number of mules laden with specie and bullion is on its way to the coast from Arequipa, for embarkation on board this ship. As he wishes it immediately embarked on its reaching its point of destination on the coast, and has requested the boats to be sent from the ship for that purpose, and it may probably arrive in the night, may I ask the favor of your excellency to give such directions to the guards as will prevent their mistaking the boats for those of the patriots?

I have the honor to remain, your excellency's most obedient, humble servant,

(Signed) CHARLES STEWART.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, Valparaiso, January 5, 1823.

SIR: Enclosed I have the honor to transmit to you copies of the correspondence which took place with the minister of state at Lima, and the translations of all the documents he transmitted to me relating to the American ship Canton, with the declaration of Mr. H. G. Ward, transmitted to him in my letter of 11th September, 1822. I shall also transmit to you copies of the whole correspondence with Captain Wm. Prunier, commanding the Peruvian brig Belgrano, a part of which only is forwarded under this enclosure, being all the minister of state sent me, as also with my explanations thereon, which will enable you fully to understand this subject.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

(Signed) CHARLES STEWART.

Hon. SMITH THOMPSON, Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

I, Horatio G. Ward, a citizen of the United States of North America and of the State of New York, being of mature age, and supercargo, in conjunction with Jno. O'Sullivan, of the ship Canton, of New York, and belonging to Messrs. Le Roy, Bayard & Co., of that city, do solemnly declare, on the Holy Evangelists of Almighty God, to the truth of the following statement, as hereinafter sworn to and subscribed with my name, to wit:

I sailed in the ship Canton from New York on the twenty-third day of October, 1821, bound to the Pacific ocean on a trading voyage, with an assorted cargo of various merchandise, including several cases of arms, as set forth in the invoice of the cargo and the clearance from the custom house in New York; that we arrived on the sixth day of February, 1822, at Valparaiso, the same day on which the United States ship Franklin arrived at that port. The deponent further states, that the whole of the cargo on board the ship Canton was regularly entered, arms and all, without deception or concealment of any part thereof, at Valparaiso; that, with sundry other parts of the cargo, the whole of the arms shipped on board as cargo was landed at Valparaiso and placed in the custom house stores, and no other arms were retained on board, except such as were registered by the authorities of the United States for the sole use of the vessel and her defence. The deponent further states that the arms landed as before stated were not again shipped on board the ship Canton, and that no arms or other military stores were ever landed from that ship at Arica, Quilca, or any other place except Valparaiso, as before stated, up to the time of the deponent's leaving the said ship Canton, on the thirty-first day of July, 1822, off the port of Callao.

(Signed) HORATIO G. WARD.

[Translation.]

Stamp of the 3d class—two shillings: for the year 1820 and 1821; Peru independent; for the years 1822 and 1823, 2d and 3d of its liberty.

I, José Maria de la Rosa, notary public, &c., &c., do hereby certify that Mr. Horace G. Ward, supercargo of the ship Cannon (Canton) signed, in my presence, the annexed paper, which is signed by me, and he also swore before God our Lord, and by the Bible, to the truth of all his statement, and at his request I give this present, on the sixteenth day of the month of September, of the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty-two, and second of the independence.

(Signed) JOSÉ MARIA DE LA ROSA.

I, John O'Sullivan, a citizen of the United States of North America and of the State of New York, being of mature age, and commander and supercargo of the ship Canton, of New York, belonging to Messrs. Le Roy, Bayard & Co., of that city, do solemnly declare on the Holy Evangelists of Almighty God, to truth of the following statement, as hereafter sworn to, and subscribed with my name, to wit: I sailed in the ship Canton, from New York, on the twenty-third day of October, 1821, bound to the Pacific ocean, on a trading voyage, with an assorted cargo of merchandise, including several cases of arms, as set forth in the invoice of the cargo and the clearance from the custom house in New York; that we arrived, on the sixth day of February, 1822, at Valparaiso, the same day on which the United States ship Franklin arrived at that port. The deponent further states, that the whole of the cargo on board the ship Canton was regularly entered, arms and all, without deception or concealment of any part thereof, at Valparaiso; that, with sundry other parts of the cargo, the whole of the arms, shipped on board as cargo, were landed at Valparaiso, and placed in the custom house stores, and no other arms were retained on board, except such as were registered by the authorities of the United States for the sole use of the vessel and her defence. The deponent further states that the arms, landed as before stated, were not again shipped on board the ship Canton, and that no arms or military stores were ever landed from that ship at Arica, Quilca, or any other place, except Valparaiso, as before stated.

(Signed) JOHN O'SULLIVAN.

Personally appeared before me the within-named John O'Sullivan, and made oath that the statement subscribed by him is just and true.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal, this first day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-two.

(Signed)

W. M. HUNTER, First Lieutenant U. S. Ship Franklin. [SEAL.]

I, William January, a citizen of the United States of North America, and of the State of Pennsylvania, being of mature age, and first officer of the ship Canton, of New York, belonging to Messrs. Le Roy, Bayard & Co., of that city, do solemnly declare on the Holy Evangelists of Almighty God, to the truth of the following statement, as hereafter sworn to, and subscribed with my name, to wit: I sailed in the ship Canton, from Valparaiso, on the 22d of May, 1822, with a cargo of various merchandise, and arrived on the fifth of June, at Arica; that, after landing a part of the cargo at Arica, we sailed on the twenty-third of June, and arrived on the twenty-fifth, at Quilca, where the remainder of the cargo was discharged, the whole under my superintendence; and that no arms or military stores of any kind were landed from said ship, at either of the above ports, or any other port, to the present date.

(Signed) WM. JANUARY.

Personally appeared before me the within-named William January, and made oath that the statement subscribed by him is just and true.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal, this first day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-two.

(Signed)

W. M. HUNTER, First Lieutenant U. S. Ship Franklin. [SEAL.]

A.

[Translation.]

BELGRANO, Quilca, July 9, 1822.

SIR: Immediately after my arrival at this port, with the object of fulfilling the instructions of the free government of Peru, upon which I have the honor to depend, I observed the ship Canton using the pendant of a ship-of-war of the United States, anchored at the side of the ship of the line, under your command; and being by other means informed that said ship is only a merchantman, and is transacting commercial business on this coast, you will permit to know by the means of yourself if she is, or not, a ship-of-war.

May God preserve you many years.

(Signed) WILLIAM PRUNIER.

To Commodore CHARLES STEWART, Ship of the Line Franklin.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, July 9, 1822.

William Prunier, Esq., commanding the brig Belgrano, off Quilca:

SIR: In reply to your note of this date, I have to inform you that the ship Canton is a private vessel, belonging to citizens of the United States; with respect to her wearing a pendant, there is no law or practice of our country that prohibits the use thereof to private armed vessels belonging to North America.

I remain, sir, your most obedient servant,

(Signed) CHARLES STEWART.

C.

[Translation.]

BELGRANO, Quilca, July 10, 1822.

SIR: From the nature of the instructions which I have received from my government, I have found sufficient motives to detain the ship Canton, and to send her to the disposal of the government, and I have determined to do it to-morrow; but you being the representative in this port of the nation to which she belongs, I communicate it to you for your information. May God preserve you many years.

(Signed) WILLIAM PRUNIER.

To Com. CHARLES STEWART, Ship of the Line Franklin.

[Translation.]

QUILCA, July 10, 1822.

RESPECTABLE SIR: Yesterday, on returning from the corvette Canton, I had the honor of putting into your hands an official letter relative to the conduct which my instructions prescribe me to observe with the aforesaid corvette, and, as your excellency assured me verbally it would be replied to immediately, if deserving of attention; and as twenty-four hours have transpired without this being the case, which I judge is involuntary on your part, at the same time, I find myself urged to pursue the objects which my government have entrusted to me, on other parts of this coast.

I should be happy to have immediately your determination, in order if it were possible to conciliate them with the performance of my duties.

(Signed) WILLIAM PRUNIER.

To Commodore CHARLES STEWART, Ship of the Line Franklin.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN, off Quilca, July 11, 1822.

Wm. Prunier, Esq., commanding the brig Belgrano, off Quilca:

SIR: In reply to your note of yesterday's date, wherein you say, you intend to take possession of the American ship Canton, now in this port, in conformity with instructions from your government, I have to inform you that I am sent into this sea with the naval forces of the United States under my command, to protect the citizens (and their property) of the United States in all their lawful pursuits.

As the ship Canton has done no act contrary to the laws of nations, you can have no legal pretext for interfering with her. She is entitled to protection, and will be defended as property of citizens of the United States.

I remain, sir, your most obedient and very humble servant,

(Signed) CHARLES STEWART.

[Translation.]

BELGRANO, July 11, 1822.

RESPECTABLE SIR: The official letter, which your excellency had the goodness to write me to-day, (in reply to the letter I left in your hands yesterday) has reached me, relative to the ship Canton, of the United States, (which you now represent) to Callao, to the disposal of my government. Permit me, sir, to justify my conduct in this case. The free government of Peru has formally declared the coast of Peru under a rigorous blockade, from the 15th to the 22d degree of south latitude. In order that all nations might be acquainted with this measure, whose commerce might thereby be interrupted, at the end of May, the last time expired for foreign or national ships to carry on their commerce on these coasts, without being exposed to the penalties of the infraction of a law; a few weeks after the expiration of the term, the ship Canton, as I have been informed, was in Arica, Molliendo, and Quilca, carrying on her commercial proceedings, under the protection of the ship you command; and though this was done with impunity in the two first blockaded ports, in this she has been found by a commissioned commander, who notified her, through your excellency, that she should proceed to Callao, to be disposed of by his government, to whom it appertains to declare, admitting the legal defence of the captain of the Canton, if he be innocent, or if he has been guilty of an infraction of the law of blockade. Such has been my conduct respecting him, and I repeat it to you, that I ordered the captain of the ship Canton to proceed to Callao, with his ship, there to justify his conduct before the government, who certainly observe the general laws of civilized nations, or not to comply, protected by the superior force which you command in this port.

I protest to your excellency, and through your excellency to the government which you represent, for all damages, disadvantages and interests, which my government may be entitled to reclaim, calculating the value of said ship, her merchandise, or their proceeds, to be at the time one hundred thousand dollars, all of which, and the last reply I expect from you, I shall impart to my government. Respecting the protection of citizens and their property, legally employed in these seas, which your government has entrusted to you, I believe that it is all consistent with what is done by the authorities of illustrious governments, in which number your excellency appears singularly established.

May God preserve you many years.

(Signed) WILLIAM PRUNIER.

To Commodore CHARLES STEWART, Commander of the Naval Forces of the United States, in the Pacific Ocean, Ship Franklin.

U S. SHIP FRANKLIN, off Quilca, July 12, 1822.

William Prunier, Esq., commanding the brig Belgrano, off Quilca:

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of yesterday's date, wherein, for the first time, you exhibit a reason why the American ship Canton should be detained by you; the pretext for which you state to be a general blockade of the coast from the fifteenth to the twenty-second degree of south latitude. Waiving with you the question of illegality attaching to so general a blockade of a coast, extending seven degrees from north to south, and as much more from east to west, and which, in principle, is not recognized by any international law, I will confine myself to the ports of Arica and Quilca, the only places the Canton has been in, which you state to be specially blockaded. It is particularly unfortunate for the grounds you have taken in this case, that your government has omitted to comply with the first essential and most important requisite which constitutes a legitimate blockade of either of those ports, and that is the stationing a competent force to prevent the entrance of neutrals, and to warn them away in the first instance. On the entrance of the ship Canton at Arica and this port no such force appeared, and although I have been now six weeks on this coast, which you assert to be blockaded, your vessel and the schooner in company are the only vessels we have seen in all that time, carrying the flag you wear.

Thus, sir, you will perceive that the ship Canton has violated no law which the flag of our nation is bound to respect, or gives you a right to lay your injunction on her commander, or your government judicial authority over her. Eight days after our arrival at Arica, a schooner of one gun presented herself as belonging to the patriots of Peru, but as she did not bear the same colors which you wear, and her conduct was irregular and equivocal, I now am led to believe she was piratical.

I remain, sir, your most obedient and humble servant,

(Signed) CHAS. STEWART.

[Translation.]

BELGRANO, Quilca, July 14, 1822.

RESPECTABLE SIR: After 12 o'clock yesterday, as I was preparing to dispatch the French ship Telegraph to Callao, I had the honor of being favored by the note from your excellency in reply to mine of the preceding day. At the commencement of your note, you observe that my motives for detaining the Canton are for the first time explained to you in my note, &c., &c. My only reply to the observation is, that I cannot persuade myself that these motives could have been concealed from the acute penetration of your excellency, and from the captain of the Canton, as you have been for several months on this coast and that of Chili, where they are quite notorious; and besides, I had the satisfaction of informing you of these motives in detail on board the ship under your command, the day of my arrival, and I am persuaded that the captain of the schooner also did the same. You then proceed, supported by your wise diplomatic conceptions, to comment upon the line marked out by the blockade. This is a point, although not foreign to the subject in question, on which I am not permitted to observe. You then proceed to consider my intentions as unfortunate, since the government has omitted, &c., &c., and you conclude this chapter by observing that, although the blockade were valid, that the stationed force, in lieu of detaining, ought merely to warn neutral vessels from the port. Respecting the unfortunate part of my intentions in this case, I shall not take upon myself the liberty of deciding. In satisfying the enlightened confidence of my government, my conscience remains tranquil. The decision of my government alone shall actuate my conduct. I can assure your excellency, at the same time, with regard to the last head of this chapter, that according to the most recent orders of my government, the time for informing and warning neutrals and friends to retire, only from the ports comprehended in the blockade, has expired. This attentive measure has taken place already, and still is put in practice with ships which have not entered into the aforesaid ports. Towards the conclusion of the very respectable note from your excellency, you inform me that, in the six weeks you have been off this coast, no armed ship has appeared to enforce the law, which, in the name of my government, I have exhibited to your excellency, excepting the brig and schooner which I have the honor of commanding, now anchored in this port, &c. Waiving a discussion in reply to this penultimate of your excellency, I shall limit myself to the present case, which, conformably to the reasons already exhibited, gives me sufficient grounds to reclaim, through your excellency, what was stated on the 10th, and repeated on the 11th, regretting that it is not in my power to offer any other terms, on the present day, than the requisitions proposed in my communication of the 11th. You terminate your note by informing me that eight days after your arrival at Arica, an armed schooner presented herself as belonging to the patriots of Peru, yet without the flag which distinguishes our ships of war, and as the conduct of this armed schooner was irregular and equivocal, your excellency is persuaded that she was piratical; on which subject it only recurs to me to observe, that probably the armed schooner fulfilled the instructions of the government to which she was responsible.

Your most faithful and obedient servant,

(Signed) WILLIAM PRUNIER.

TO CHARLES STEWART, commanding the Naval Forces of the U. S. in the Pacific Ocean, Ship Franklin, Quilca.

[Translation.]

BELGRANO, July 13, 1822.

I have the honor of informing your excellency that the first days of my passage were attended by bad weather, in which (although inconsiderably) the sails and rigging of the Belgrano suffered. The 21st June, finding myself in the latitude of 25 degs. south, I stood off from shore, and the 22d, at 4 A. M., it carried away the foretop-mast, and the maintop-gallant-mast. The want of proper means to replace the first, made me supply its place with a maintop sail-yard, on which I set a top-gallant sail. The 23d I stood in shore above the Quebrader of Camarones, and with little sail and wind, I directed myself above Arica, whose port I recognized, and learnt that there were no vessels in the windward ports. I took the direction of Ylo, informing myself by the Huaneros, and had partial information that the ship of line Franklin, and two or three vessels more, had set out from Arica for Molliendo; that, having disembarked muskets (not exceeding 2,000) in the former port, they had gone to transact business in Molliendo and Quilca. Finding myself off the Morro de Sama, I saw at a distance, gave chase and registered, a whaler, from whom I purchased a top-mast, which, although not a proper one for this vessel, supplies the want without material difference. The 6th of July, the schooner Cruz joined me at Ylo, in whose neighborhood she had made the land, (some few days before,) and had on board Don Marianna Guzman, the bearer of some communications from Col. Lanza, and from his officers of the heights of La Paz, for his excellency the Protector, and produced his passports, that it appears were given him by his excellency in Lima, on 28th November, 1821. As those letters or communictions related to subjects important to the service, I have thought fit to retain them, that they might be of use to his excellency the Protector, or the general who may be entrusted with the expedition which I presume will soon be in these seas. I gave orders to the captain of the schooner that he should follow me, with the object of recognizing the ports towards Quilca. In half an hour Col. Landa observed that we were keeping off Ylo, where he ought to disembark; he accompanied this verbal remonstrance by various representations should he not disembark: at last I determined and made towards Ylo, after having arranged that the schooner should follow on this night, and the following I disembarked, in Pochoca, the colonel, his horses, equipage and accompaniments, and afterwards took the course for this port, where I arrived on the 9th, at 9 A. M., and found anchored the Cruz, ship of the line Franklin, and the armed merchant ship Canton, of the United States, and the French ship Telegraph; of the last, the schooner had taken possession the night before, as it appeared she had disembarked effects on the coast according to the statement of her officers, and that her captain was in Arequipa. At the moment of anchoring I sent to call the commander of the schooner, who informed me of the occurrences with the French ship; and, moreover, that he was informed by the captain of the Canton, and by the commodore of the Franklin, that said Canton was a licensed ship, and conveyed articles and munitions, having a pendant like a ship-of-war, as by the more private information which he had, he was satisfied she was a merchant ship, and had sold her cargo.

I sent an official letter to the commodore observing to him this singularity, asking him for a formal declaration of the nature of the aforesaid Canton, anchored under the protection of his guns. I lay before your excellency the copies of the communications which, till now, these circumstances have produced. By the French ship I forward your excellency the person who returns from Col. Landa with the aforesaid communications, by which your excellency can inform yourself of the situation of the people in this direction. As my occupations do not permit me to enter into detail respecting the coast, I refer your excellency to the relation that, by mutual consent, Don Mariano Vidal (who goes on board) will make to his excellency the Protector, or, in his absence, to your excellency, from which source you will be informed equally of the conduct of the commodore with regard to the ship Canton, according as I am myself verbally informed by various persons.

May God preserve your excellency many years.

(Signed) WILLIAM PRUNIER.

To the illustrious Minister of War and Marine, Don THOMAS GUIDO.

It is a copy. VALDIVIESO.

Attested: H. G. WARD.

NEW YORK, August 23, 1825.

SIR: We have had the honor to receive your letter of the 15th instant, requesting one of our firm to repair to Washington to give evidence before the court-martial, now in session, in the case of Commodore Stewart. We regret that our necessary attention to our commercial concerns renders it very inconvenient for either of us to be absent from New York, at this moment, or it would give us pleasure to comply with the wishes of the government.

As some of the charges against Commodore Stewart refer to his conduct in relation the ship Canton, of which we were the owners, justice to ourselves seems to require that we should state, that when the Canton arrived at Valparaiso, from this port, Captain O'Sullivan, who was the master of said ship, and also the supercargo, informed us that he had sold the cargo at that place, to a Mr. E. Smith, and forwarded us an account of sales. After the sale of the cargo, Captain O'Sullivan informed us that he had chartered the ship to a Mr. Smith, at the rate of $3,500 per month, and forwarded us a copy of the charter party. If the Canton was, after this, employed either directly or indirectly, in smuggling, or in aiding the royalists against the patriots of South America, she has been so employed without our knowledge or approbation, or consent, and at a time when she was out of our control under the charter party. Mr. Ward went to the Pacific in order to see about the concerns of the Canton, and her cargo. He went on board of the Franklin, not in our service, where he remained until his return to this country. As we understand Mr. Ward is now at Washington, we presume he can give the court much more information upon the subject of the Canton and her cargo, than any member of our house could do, were he examined.

We cannot, however, but add, that all the cordage, sails, and other articles procured for the ship in the Pacific, and charged to us in our accounts with Captain O'Sullivan, as purchased and paid for by him—we never should justify or permit any captain of ours asking or receiving articles of the kind from a public ship of the United States, except in cases of extreme necessity, and paying for them, when it was impossible to procure them elsewhere.

We have understood that, at Valparaiso, the carpenters of the Franklin were employed in making some slight repairs to the Canton, it not being practicable, as we were informed, to procure a carpenter at that place. For the amount of this work we are charged by Captain O'Sullivan, as being paid to the carpenters of the Franklin; while at Rio Janeiro, application was made to a British frigate for a carpenter to do similar repairs, which was granted without the least hesitation, indeed, with the utmost politeness.

The account of sales of the cargo of the Canton, at Valparaiso, and the charter party with Mr. Smith, and the accounts furnished to us by Captain O'Sullivan, we will, with pleasure, forward to Washington, if you desire it. This would give all the information we possess in relation to the business. Any information in our power, we shall, at any time, cheerfully communicate to the government upon this, or upon any other subject, (being fully aware, however, that government cannot exact, as a right, the information we now offer,) and we regret that it is not in our power, at this time, for one of us to visit Washington, agreeably to your request.

We have the honor to be, sir, your humble servants,

(Signed) LE ROY, BAYARD & CO.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, August 27, 1825.

I certify the within to be a correct copy of the original letter, on file in this Department.

(Signed) J. BOYLE.

QUILCA, November 5, 1822.

SIR: We, the undersigned, citizens of the United States, having been informed that it is the intention of Commodore Charles Stewart that the United States ship Franklin shall sail hence for Valparaiso very shortly, in which event our commercial interests, as well as those of other citizens of the United States in the interior of this country, and more particularly in Arequipa (amounting, at the lowest calculation, to about one million of dollars,) will be very much at stake on the arrival of the intended expedition from Lima against that city, which is now daily expected, do humbly request that Commodore Chas. Stewart will take into his most serious consideration the prejudice which may occur to the interests of his countrymen in this part of Peru by the removal of their present and only protecting force, and that Commodore Charles Stewart will, if it be not incompatible with the instructions he may have received from our government, allow the U. S. ship Franklin to remain at this port until the 1st of the ensuing month, as we at present anticipate that we shall, in that interval, have sufficient time to recover our aforesaid property.

We remain, most respectfully, Commodore Charles Stewart, your very humble servants,

(Signed) JOHN O'SULLIVAN.
ANTON & LOTTEN.
GEO. LITTLE.
HARRY PARSONS.
JOHN E. HERON.
ELIPHT. SMITH.

Commodore CHARLES STEWART, Commander-in-Chief of the American Naval Forces in the Pacific.

LIMA, May 2, 1824.

To Commodore Charles Stewart, commander-in-chief of the U. S. naval forces in the Pacific:

SIR: Impressed with a high sense of the zeal and ability you have manifested in the cause of your country during a period of twenty-six years of public service, the undersigned citizens of the United States, at present residing or transacting business in Lima, beg leave respectfully to express to you their sense of your conduct in the command on this coast. You are now about to leave. The duties you have had to perform have been no less arduous than various, from the peculiar situation of the countries to which your command extended. You arrived at a time when the revolutionary governments of Peru and Chili, intoxicated with success, and regardless of every principle of national law, preyed upon the unoffending neutral at will. By your firmness their rapacity was restrained, and by your skill their friendly relations, which our government is so anxious to maintain, has remained unimpaired. We are grateful to acknowledge the readiness with which you have at all times listened to the complaints or wishes of your countrymen, and the promptness with which you have afforded them all the protection your situation would permit.

With these feelings, which are as sincere on our part as they are well founded, we look with peculiar regret to your departure, and especially at this moment, when circumstances so strongly demand rather the increase than the diminution of force on this station. Within a few days an unauthorized blockade has been declared under the flag of a country which in reality has no longer any existence, and which, therefore, leaves us without the smallest hope of future reparation for any wrongs it may inflict upon us. The experience you have acquired during your long command in this ocean, and the imposing force of the Franklin, would doubtless be of the greatest utility to the distinguished officer who has come to succeed you, and your remaining here a very short period would greatly facilitate his future operations. With these views, and under the urgency of circumstances which have so recently arisen, we most earnestly hope that you may be induced to delay your departure for a short period, since by so doing the new danger that threatens the extinction of our commerce may in all probability be removed.

The amount of interest at stake, the distant position of our country, and the threatening evils to which we allude, all seem to us to require it, and we have therefore no doubt they will justify to our government your remaining a few weeks longer. Perhaps a few days only may dissipate the dangers that are gathering. You may, in this case, probably have the satisfaction of having contributed to save a large amount of property to your fellow citizens, of which, if they are despoiled, neither they nor their government have any power to look to for future compensation. Whatever may be your determination, we offer to you our most cordial wishes for your safe return to your country, where we feel satisfied you will receive the approbation from your government and fellow citizens which your long and efficient services so justly merit.

We have the honor to be, sir, your friends and fellow citizens,

(Signed)

WILLIAM H. CONCKLING.
JOHN C. GREEN.
SAMUEL ERWIN.
RUSSELL BALDWIN.
MOSES GIBBS.
JOS. JAMES.
JAMES BRADLEY.
J. M. SEBER.
NIXON & McCALL.
DANIEL W. COIT.
JOHN DONNELL.
CHAS. MANCHESTER.
A. H. BURROWS.
PERRY BOWERS.
WM. JOHNSON, JR.
HENRY L. DECOVEN.
HIRAM PUTNAM.
J. A. STEVENSON.
ROZMAN LAWRENCE.
JOS. McCOMB.
J. JONES.

Reply.

UNITED STATES SHIP FRANKLIN, Callao Bay, May 4, 1824.

GENTLEMEN: I have received the letter you did me the honor to address me on the 2d instant, and for which I beg leave to return you my thanks, while, at the same time, I assure you that the order to return with this ship to the United States is peremptory; but notwithstanding this circumstance, I would most cheerfully meet any new responsibility originating in that circumstance, particularly as all are aware of the great desire of the Executive Government of our country to afford to their fellow citizens, and their property, protection, which has been so repeatedly evinced by the adequate force they have constantly maintained in this sea, since its exposure to the vicissitudes of lawless depredations by those who acknowledge no rights but those of force and expediency; but the period having arrived in which a large portion of our crew, (already much diminished,) are entitled to their discharge, under the faith of our government, and which circumstance, in a very short time, might render this ship no longer serviceable, and incapacitate her from returning, I conceive it would be encountering too high a responsibility, and which the ultimate state of affairs in this quarter would not justify.

The good opinion you have been pleased to express, of my poor exertions and zeal, since I have been found serving under the flag of my country, merit my warmest gratitude, and at all times, and under all circumstances, I shall derive consolation from the circumstance that at least those of my fellow-citizens trading in and to these countries approbate the course I have pursued, and the protection I have endeavored to afford.

Accept, gentlemen, my best wishes for your health and prosperity, and a happy return to your country.

I have the honor to remain, very respectfully, your most obedient and humble servant,
(Signed) CHARLES STEWART.

TO MESSRS. NIXON & MCCALL, DAVID W. COBB, WILLIAM H. CONCKLING, JOHN C. GREEN, and others.

Mr. President and gentlemen of the court:

It must certainly be a subject of sincere congratulation to us all that this painful and interesting investigation approaches its conclusion. In its progress it has awakened the most various and agitating feelings; the enormity of the charges, the precision, as to time, place and circumstances, with which they were stated, and the tone of confidence they assumed, were calculated, on their first presentation, to alarm the most steadfast friends of the accused, and even to shake the constancy of his own firm mind, sustained as it was by the consciousness of absolute and entire rectitude; but, as the inquiry moved on, as the evidence gradually developed the facts of the case, as the charges and specifications fell, one after another, as they were successively touched by the wand of truth, every foreboding fear subsided, every anxious doubt was silenced, and the accused might look back with a proud but grateful satisfaction upon the course he had passed over, in which it is believed no eye can discover one motive he should blush to own, or one act he should desire to recall.

But even with the prospect of this happy and triumphant termination, the case excites some distressing reflections. It is difficult to imagine a spectacle more mortifying to professional pride, more afflictive to a generous spirit, than it has presented; an officer of the highest rank and longest service, whose name, familiar to the ear of his country, had hitherto been associated only with proud recollections, publicly accused of multiplied and varied transgressions, ruinous to his professional, degrading to his private character!

One circumstance only mitigates the pain of this reflection; the publicity which has been given to these charges, the unhesitating confidence with which they have been asserted, rendered the investigation necessary to the vindication of his own and his country's honor.

The government would have been deemed accessory to offences thus boldly imputed if they were not investigated; the accused himself might have been condemned by the malevolent or unthinking, as his innocence had not been manifest by a public trial. The investigation has indeed been minute, searching and severe, but candor requires him to admit that it has been frank and liberal; on his part I may be permitted to add that he has opposed no impediment to full inquiry, and that he has evinced an inclination to seek security only in his innocence.

It cannot have escaped your observation that the very facts specified to support the first charge of "unofficer-like conduct," are relied on in many instances to sustain the other charges of "disobedience of orders" and "neglect of duty." In other instances the same facts, by subdivision, or change of phraseology in stating them, form the subject of distinct specifications under the same charge. This is not mentioned in the spirit of complaint. Such a mode of preferring charges is usual and proper, and often indispensable to accommodate the accusation to the actual state of the proofs, drawn from numerous sources, unexposed until the trial. It produces, however, some inconvenience to the accused. It imposes on him the alternative of breaking the continuity and impairing the vigor of his defence by detached and partial explanations, and at the same time fatiguing the court by unavoidable repetitions; or of exposing himself to the suspicion of evading charges to which he does not formally and separately reply.

To this suspicion the accused ought not, in this instance, to be exposed. In the statement offered preparatory to the introduction of his proofs he has already noticed each specification, in the order of the prosecution, and apprised the court and the judge advocate, frankly and distinctly, of the matters on which he relied to repel them. He hopes, therefore, to be acquitted of all intentions to elude any specification, though his defence entirely disregards the order of their arrangement. The convenience of the court will be promoted, and the harmony and perspicuity of his explanations will be best preserved, by generalizing the offences imputed to him, by bringing into groups all the scattered facts applicable to each offence, and thus presenting in one connected view any circumstance which can influence the judgment of the court in deciding on his guilt or innocence. No part of the accusation on which the slightest evidence has been offered to his prejudice will be intentionally pretermitted. Thus generalized, the charges impute to Commodore Stewart two kinds of offence; one to foreign nations, by applying the naval force of the United States to prevent the governments of Chili and Peru from exercising their belligerent rights, and to aid in the violation of their municipal laws; another, to his own government, by applying that force to subserve improper personal interest; and by numerous acts of maladministration in the internal police and discipline of his squadron.

Of these offences, the first in order and dignity is that alleged to have been committed against Chili and Peru; as to these governments there is scarcely any wrong that a naval commander could commit, which these charges do not impute to the accused. Their dignity, as independent nations, scorned and insulted; the exercise of their undeniable belligerent rights, to confiscate contraband trade, and to enforce blockade, opposed and prevented by terror, or by arms; their military expeditions frustrated and defeated by spies, (of whom he was the coadjutor and protector); their enemies supplied with military means; the obligations of neutrality (which the commander of an American squadron was specially bound to observe in favor of a people warring for their national independence) contemned and violated; these are high offences against the law of nations which Commodore Stewart is said to have committed toward Chili and Peru. As to their internal and municipal rights he is said to have stooped from his high station to become a smuggler, and to participate in the shameful gains of other violators of the revenue laws, aided by him in the perpetration of their frauds.

Before we enter on details, some preliminary matter must be noticed.

The situation of Commodore Stewart on his cruise in the Pacific was both novel and delicate. It was not the ordinary one of an executive officer entrusted with the arms of his government to be applied to a specific object, under prescribed circumstances and in a defined manner. To a certain extent he was invested with a different, and (if I may so express it,) diplomatic character; much was left to his judgment and discretion. His instructions informed him that he was "appointed to the command of the Franklin, destined to the Pacific ocean, for the purpose of protecting the commerce of the United States in that quarter of the world." He was "to ascertain whether the commerce of the United States had been molested by the cruising ships of either of the parties at war, and consult with the agent, Mr. Prevost, as to the causes of such molestation, and the best means of affording relief and protection to the citizens of the United States and their property."

The means placed under his control to attain these objects were the Franklin and the Dolphin. In all his operations he was specially instructed to remember what was due to the neutral situation of the United States.

That the dangers to which the lawful trade of neutrals was exposed were neither unfrequent in occurrence, inconsiderable in amount, or confined to the subjects of one nation, is proved, not only by the evidence now given, but attested by the acts of every nation whose commerce floated in those seas. England and France, as well as the United States, found it necessary to send there a naval force to protect their trade from the profligate rapacity which assailed it on land and sea, under the guise of belligerent seizure. Their policy was perhaps the same. They wished to maintain a neutral attitude in the civil war. England and the United States avowedly; France, it is possible, covertly, wished success to the revolutionary cause. One motive was common to all, a desire to open to commercial and manufacturing enterprise a vast theatre, which the jealous and exclusive spirit of colonial government had held closed against them. As to two of these powers, more noble and generous considerations mingled themselves with their commercial views; neither England nor the United States were indifferent to the moral and political improvement of South America, which would follow in the train of free and liberal institutions.

While each of these powers, therefore, threw its shield over its commerce in the Pacific, it certainly was not desired by either that actual force should be employed to protect it. That might commit their neutrality, if executed against the royalist party, and, if in their favor, might retard, or perhaps jeopard the revolutionary cause. Security to the citizens and trade was therefore hoped to be attainable, rather by moral than physical power, by the exhibition of a naval force adequate to repress outrages upon it, by either of the belligerents, rather than its actual employment.

If this were not the policy and design of the American government, sending a naval force into the Pacific was, to say the least of it, a ridiculous parade and idle expenditure. A minister or chargé des affaires would have been a more appropriate, safe, economical instrument to protect American commerce, than a naval squadron.

It was in this spirit Commodore Stewart conceived his instructions. His squadron was sent "for the purpose of protecting the commerce of this country in the Pacific:" but he was to give this protection by the most scrupulous respect for the rights of the belligerents. It remains to be seen, if in aught he has transgressed against them. The accusation to which your attention is first invited, is that respecting the intended capture of the Canton by the Peruvian cruiser Belgrano, which forms the subject of the third specification of the first charge, and the second specification of the second charge.

The fact charged is, that Commodore Stewart employed the naval force under his command in preventing the commander of the Peruvian brig Belgrano from enforcing the laws and instructions of his government, by taking and sending in for adjudication, an American ship called the Canton, detected in carrying on an illicit trade to the injury of said government. The motive ascribed to him for this employment of the naval force is, that he was concerned in the pecuniary profit of said illicit voyages and transactions of the aforesaid ship Canton.

The relation which Commodore Stewart bore to the Canton, her owners and captain, will be hereafter minutely examined, when other charges respecting that vessel come under review. It will suffice, now, to say that it is undeniably proved that "he was not concerned, directly or indirectly," in the pecuniary profits of any voyages or transactions of the Canton, either licit or illicit. His offence, whatever it may be, can therefore receive no aggravation from the base and interested motives which are gratuitously said to have stimulated him to its perpetration. There is no evidence applicable to this matter in the terms in which it is charged by the specification. The terms "illicit trade" apply only to that carried on in contravention of municipal regulations, and not to trade forbidden by the laws of nations, as being either contraband or with a blockaded port. Such is the meaning of these terms as fixed by mercantile usage and commercial law. In this sense the specification has used them, for the "illicit trade" in which the Canton is thereby said to have been detected, is represented to have been carried on against the laws and instructions of the existing government of Peru, and not against the public law. Now there is not even the slightest evidence that the commander of the Belgrano ever wished to seize the Canton under any pretext that she had violated the municipal laws of Peru, or any of its internal regulations. The only occasion in which his wish to seize this vessel was even intimated, was while she was lying at Quilca, and then the sole charge against her was a violation of blockade. It is a settled and well-known principle in military, as well as civil courts, that a prosecution cannot be sustained by the proof of any other offence than the very one of which the prisoner is notified by the accusation. If Commodore Stewart chose to avail himself of this technical defence, he might then safely insist, that there is no proof of the matter charged, and that he is bound to give no answer to proofs which apply to a different matter for which he is not arraigned. But he disdains to shelter himself behind technical coverings. He will not purchase security at the price of honor; it is reproach, not punishment, he feels desirous to avert. He wishes, therefore, to be understood in this, and in every other part of the trial, as waiving every objection of a technical character, and consenting that his conduct be scrutinized by the court, though embraced by no specifications.

The transaction to which the specification is, perhaps, intended to apply, is alluded to in the testimony of Lieutenant Hunter, and is recorded in the correspondence between Commodore Stewart and Captain Prunier. I beg permission to offer you an epitome. In the month of July, 1822, the Peruvian brig-of-war, Belgrano, arrived off Quilca, at which port the Franklin, the ship Canton, and the French ship Telegraph, had been some time lying. Captain Prunier, who commanded the Belgrano, addressed a letter to Commodore Stewart, in which he stated that "he had observed the ship Canton using the pendant of a ship-of-war of the United States, anchored at the side of the ship of the line under his (Commodore Stewart's) command, and being informed by other means that said ship was only a merchantman, and transacting commercial business on the coast, he wished to know from Commodore Stewart if she was a ship-of-war, or not." It is proved by Lieut. Hammersley that the Canton was at that time anchored from the Franklin at the distance usual for vessels in port.

To this communication, Commodore Stewart replied, "that the Canton was a private vessel belonging to citizens of the United States. As to wearing a pendant, there was no law or practice of the United States prohibiting its use to private armed vessels belonging to North America."

On the next day Captain Prunier went on board the Franklin and handed Commodore Stewart a letter from himself. In this he stated that "from the nature of the instructions from his government, he had found sufficient motives to detain the Canton, and send her in to be disposed of by his government"—that "he had determined to do so on the morrow; but, Commodore Stewart being the representative of the government to which she belonged, he communicated it to him for his information." In this official letter, either by design or accident, no cause was assigned for the intended seizure. But the verbal remarks of Captain Prunier, as proved by Lieutenant Hunter, gave notice of them. In the subsequent correspondence they are distinctly avowed.

On the 1st of July Captain Prunier sent another letter to Commodore Stewart, in which, after referring to his former communication, and stating, that he had received no reply, he expressed a wish to have, immediately, Commodore Stewart's determination, in order, "if it were practicable, to reconcile it with the performance of his duties," On the same day Commodore Stewart wrote to Captain Prunier. Apprised by the several communications of that officer, that the pretext for her seizure was a breach of blockade by the Canton, and believing, for reasons which will hereafter be explained, that he ought not to suffer her to be seized on that pretext, he informed Captain Prunier that "he had been sent into that sea to protect the citizens of the United States, and their property, in all their lawful pursuits; and as the Canton had done no act contrary to the laws of nations, Captain Prunier could have no legal pretext for interfering with her; that she was entitled to protection, and would be defended, as property of citizens of the United States." In his reply to that letter, Captain Prunier, openly and officially, stated among other matters, "that the free government of Peru had formally declared the coast of Peru under a vigorous blockade from the 15th to the 22d degree of south latitude," and the violations of that blockade, by trading at Arica, Molliendo and Quilca, were assigned as the offences for which he desired to seize the Canton. The commodore, waiving the inquiry if the blockade itself was not illegal, replied, "that the Peruvian government had omitted to comply with the first and most essential requisite which constitutes a legitimate blockade, to wit, stationing a competent force to prevent the entrance of neutrals, and to warn them away in the first instance."

Had the Canton been found by Commodore Stewart in the actual possession of Captain Prunier, or, had that officer, without any communication of his intentions and reasons, taken possession of the Canton in the port of Quilca, on the charge of breach of blockade, Commodore S., though satisfied of her innocence, ought to have deliberated seriously before he retook her by force. Forcible opposition to belligerent seizure, or forcible recapture, are forbidden by the laws of nations, even by a private neutral; the offence is greatly aggravated if the force be applied by a national ship, for that tends directly to war with the neutral government to which she belongs. The repose of the world requires the neutral, however innocent, to submit to the capture. The comity of nations presumes, that the prize court will impartially decide on the propriety of the seizure, and if it prove illegal, will restore the property, and indemnify the neutral for all injury sustained. The government of the belligerent stands responsible for the flagrant injustice of its courts. Whether that principle applies to a people not recognized as independent, not yet admitted into the society of nations, and, therefore, presenting no government responsible to foreign nations; and, if applicable, how far it was modified by Commodore Stewart's instructions, and the circumstances under which he was sent on that duty, or by the known profligacy of public and private citizens of both belligerents, (who affected to detect crime wherever they could discover spoil,) or by the consideration that in a moment of revolution, of great personal exasperation, and of much public necessity, the prize court, yet green and inexperienced in the knowledge and application of public law, could not be expected to deny, by their sentence, the legality of a blockade ordered by their own government; all these considerations would merit your most serious thought, had this been a recapture by Commodore Stewart. It is probable, however, that, even then, it would have been found the duty of Commodore Stewart to dispossess Captain Prunier of his spoil.

Such, however, was not the state of things. Captain Prunier thought proper to premonish Com. Stewart of his intention and his reasons, and to express his wish "to reconcile Com. Stewart's determination with his duties to his own government." The silent acquiescence of Com. Stewart would have amounted to a tacit permission to make the seizure; and, consequently, to an implied admission of the legality of the blockade. But it did not suit the views of Capt. Prunier and his government, that the propriety of the seizure, and the legality of the blockade, should rest on tacit admission. With indecorous haste, he pressed Com. Stewart for a written reply. No alternative was left him, appealed to as "the representative of his government," but either formally to authorize the seizure, and as formally to admit the lawfulness of the blockade; or, referring, as he did, to his instructions, to express his determination to protect the Canton "in her lawful pursuits," and to deny the validity of the paper blockade, which she was said to have violated.

The correctness of his determination upon this subject calls for our admiration, and not our reproach. During twenty-seven years of naval services, his hand has been more familiar with the sword than with the pen. The quarter deck, not the closet, has been the scene of his employment. His meditations have been occupied by those high musings which fit the mind to conceive and to execute acts of chivalrous and daring valor, and not in the abstractions of legal science on the subtile disquisitions of Puffendorff and Grotius, and Vattel. His determination is believed to have been exactly such as the law of nations warranted and his duty to his government enjoined. And, I venture to predict, that the manner in which he maintained the neutral rights of his country in his correspondence with the royal and patriot governments, will be both admired for its ability, and sanctioned for its correctness.

The blockade was declared by San Martin in ————, after he had expelled the royalists from Lima, and taken possession of the capital of Peru. It was a blockade by latitude, and comprehends, as you have seen, a coast of eight hundred miles. The maritime force of Peru at that time consisted of two brigs and two schooners, and but a small portion of that puny force was employed in the actual enforcement of the blockade; not one of them had been seen by the squadron until the arrival of the Belgrano. Had the government of Peru a right, by this sweeping prohibition, sustained by so inconsiderable a force, to interdict the trade of neutrals with so extensive and rich a region? On such a pretext, should Com. Stewart have given up the commerce of his country as spoil?

No branch of public law is better defined, or more generally understood, than that of blockade. The general doctrines are recognized by all civilized powers, whatever occasional infractions necessity or injustice have made on it. In the protracted and deadly wars, which, in our days, have convulsed Europe, neutral rights have been assailed by every mode of belligerent annoyance. By none has it been more threatened, than by schemes of blockade, professing to distress the enemy, but often intended to rob friends. By no nation has the injustice of these measures been more severely felt than by our own.

While our policy continues, as it heretofore most wisely has been, peaceful and neutral, no nation is so deeply interested in restraining the right of blockade within its proper limits, and denying the validity of mere paper blockades, which affect to maintain by proclamation and the stroke of the pen, what the laws of nations allow to be attained by arms and actual investment. From a recent elementary work of great respectability, (Chitty's Laws of Nations, pp. 128, 131,) I beg leave to state the established doctrine. The court may test its accuracy by consulting the original authorities cited in it.

"If," says Vattel, "I lay siege to a place, or simply blockade it, I have a right to hinder any one from entering, and to treat as an enemy whosoever attempts to enter the place, or carry anything to the besieged, without my leave; for he opposes my undertaking, and may contribute to the miscarriage of it, and this involves me in all the misfortunes of an unsuccessful war.

"Clear, however, and indisputable as this right is, just and necessary as is the exercise of it, it cannot be denied but that it is one of the most severe and harsh in its operation of any that is inscribed in the whole code of public law. It is under this impression that tribunals of the law of nations, before they have enforced the provisions of a blockade, have uniformly required it to be established by clear and unequivocal evidence; first, that the party proceeded against has had due notice of the existence of the blockade; and secondly, that the squadron alloted for its execution was fully competent to cut off all communications with the interdicted port. These points have been deemed so indispensably requisite to the existence of a legal blockade, that the failure of either of them has been held to amount to an entire defeasance of the measure, and this even in cases where the notification of it has issued immediately from the fountain of supreme authority. The blockade must not only have been declared by competent authority, but must be also an actually existing blockade. A blockade is then only to be considered as actually existing, when there is a force to enforce it. The very notion of a complete blockade, said Sir William Scott, in the case of the Steel, "includes that the besieging force can apply its power to every point of the blockaded state. If it cannot, there is no blockade of that part where its power cannot be brought to bear."

But Commodore Stewart was apprised of the opinion of his government in relation to such a blockade. Some time before he sailed, Chili had declared a blockade that had a greater show of lawfulness; for Chili had a respectable fleet, under Lord Cochrane, to enforce it. It was, however, deemed illegal on account of its extent, and the want of an adequate and permanent force to sustain it. The instructions to Commodore Stewart prove this. The language of the Secretary of State in his instructions to Mr. Forbes, commercial agent at Buenos Ayres, is, if possible, more explicit.

Extract of a letter from Mr. Adams to I. M. Forbes, dated July 6, 1820:

"The allegation of Lord Cochrane, that there had been on the part of the Gazelle a breach of blockade, is fully repelled in the memorial. It appears by a letter from Mr. Prevost of 16th May, 1819, that he had remonstrated with the government against this paper blockade of Lord Cochrane. He says the subject was met with great frankness, and all claim of forfeiture for any infraction disavowed, as to any place where no actual force was employed, and the form preserved only to deter unfriendly neutrals from entering for the purpose of carrying information. His disavowal was but partially satisfactory. A paper blockade of fifty degrees of latitude or a thousand leagues of coast, is illegal throughout its whole extent, even for the ports which may be in actual blockade; otherwise every capture under a notified blockade would be legal, because the capture itself would be proof of the blockading force. Lord Cochrane's notification was not of a lawful blockade; nor has a permanent force been kept before any one port under it, which could have made it a legal blockade, had it been limited to that single port. Nothing can be more clear than that the capture of no part of the property in question can be justified upon the plea of a broken blockade."

This Chilian blockade had been abandoned before the arrival of the Franklin in the Pacific. But why urge this defence? In respect to this very blockade which Captain Prunier wished Commodore Stewart to respect, the opinion of the Government of the United States has since been expressed. It is in absolute harmony with that of Commodore Stewart, and in entire justification of the act which is to-day imputed to him as an offence.

The Secretary of State in his letter to Mr. I. B. Prevost, at Lima, dated December 16, 1822, says: "There is another point of great and permanent importance to the interests of the United States involved in these transactions. In the letter from Captain Prunier to Captain Stewart, declaring his disposition to take possession of the Canton, for the purpose of carrying her into port for adjudication, he alleges not that muskets had been landed from her at Arica, but that 'she had traded at certain ports between the 15th and 22d degrees of south latitude,' contrary to a proclamation or paper blockade of the Peruvian government. This was the only fact alleged by Captain Prunier for his intention to take the Canton; the only allegation upon which Captain Stewart had then to decide whether he would protect her from capture or not. Now the very charge, that the Canton 'had traded' at the intermediate ports, carried on its face the proof that there had been no force stationed before those ports to intercept the trade; and under such an allegation Captain Stewart could not have submitted to see the Canton captured under the very guns of his ship, without formally admitting thereby the validity of the blockade in its most licentious extent. The President considers a blockade by degrees of latitude as unlawful, not only in its general extent, but for every port and spot included within it. Were it otherwise, the mere fact of capture would legalize in any point within the limits of the proclamation that which would be unlawful upon every other point. The proclamation is the notice to neutrals of the blockade; and the blockade of the proclamation must be precisely the same as the blockade in fact, else the whole is unlawful, and neutrals are not bound by it. This principle is too important to be surrendered to any belligerent party, however favorably disposed we may be to his cause, for we cannot concede it to him without yielding it alike to his enemy. You will distinctly declare this to the Peruvian minister of state, to be the deliberate sense of the Government of the United States."

Let me appeal then to your coolest judgment: Ought Commodore Stewart to have consented to the capture of the Canton by the Belgrano, and thereby legalized a blockade which would have subjected all the American commerce in those seas, amounting to many millions of dollars, to certain and immediate confiscation? Would he not have contravened the known opinions of his government, impaired the established rights of neutral nations, and become an accessory to the spoil of that very commerce he was sent to protect?

Another violation of public law is imputed to him by the 1st specification of the 1st and 2d charge. They assert that "he aided and assisted the American vessels Canton and Pearl, the English brig Sarah, and the French ship Telegraph, and other vessels in carrying on a contraband trade with certain ports called the Intermedios, and in transporting and landing arms, military stores, and other contraband articles, and protecting the said vessels from the consequences of such illegal traffic, by employing, and threatening to employ, the naval force of the United States in their defence."

As to the British vessel Sarah, and the French ship Telegraph, there is not a shadow of proof that they were engaged in any illicit or contraband trade with the Intermedios; had their guilt been established, it could in no manner affect the accused; for it is absolutely certain from the testimony before you, that they received neither countenance, convoy, nor protection from the United States ships. On the few occasions in which these vessels were in sight of the United States ships at sea, the meeting was purely accidental, and their continuance together brief. On the only occasion in which they were in port together, the Sarah had no cargo of any sort, and the Telegraph was actually captured by the consort of the Belgrano, while lying within three hundred yards of the Franklin, and carried away by the captors without the slightest remonstrance or interference by Commodore Stewart. Yet he is charged with "employing or threatening to employ the naval forces of the United States in her defence."

What vessels are intended to be comprehended by the description of "other vessels" is unknown; no evidence applies to any such. This part of the accusation must fail.

As to the Pearl, her history may be briefly given. She was an American vessel, armed in Boston; the first knowledge we have of her is at Valparaiso, where she arrived in the month of May, 1822, on her way to the Sandwich Islands. She had on board the frames and materials of three small vessels, intended to be employed in the trade of the Sandwich Islands and the northwest coast; and some arms, which every one knows constitute an essential article of commerce on that coast. It is in positive proof that she did not carry on any contraband or other trade with the Intermedios; but, after touching at Arica, proceeded on her original destination, to the northwest coast. So scrupulous was Commodore Stewart that this vessel, known by him to have contraband articles on board, should give no just cause of complaint to the Peruvian government, that, before her departure from Arica, he sent two officers on board, to search her, and to see that no portion of the arms had been landed at Arica. Refer to the evidence of Lieutenants Hunter and Hammersley, and you will find that not a single musket was landed; but all the arms which the Pearl brought into the Pacific were actually on board when she left the Intermedios for the northwest coast.

It is true that the Pearl left Valparaiso about the time the Franklin did, and was generally in sight until her arrival in Arica. That her master should desire to obtain all the security which the neighborhood of the United States naval force could afford, will not excite surprise, when you recollect the system of buccaneering then in active operation in those seas. Had she been fallen in with, experience had taught him that the innocence of her trade and her actual destination to the northwest coast would not have protected her from confiscation. But it is proved by Lieutenants Hammersley and Ogden that convoy was refused by Commodore S. from Valparaiso, because she had arms on board; and that her security and motions were consulted in no one movement of the Franklin. Commodore S. had neither the right nor the power to prevent the Pearl from pursuing her voyage at a distance, and without co-operation of the Franklin.

As to the Canton, so far as the specification imputes to her "contraband trade," it wants support by any particle of evidence. The court will be pleased to bear in mind that "contraband" consists in such articles as minister to war, and which the law of nations inhibits a neutral to furnish to either belligerent under penalty of confiscation. No such articles were on board the Canton. However criminal might have been the traffic carried on by that ship with the Intermedios, it was not, as the specification charges, "contraband." Commodore Stewart therefore could, by no possibility, have employed or "threatened to employ" his squadron to defend her from the penalties of a transgression never committed. His guilt in defending her in violating the revenue laws of Peru, will be noticed in its proper place. It is imputed to him that he himself engaged in contraband trade, and even employed the Franklin in its transportation.

The fifteenth specification of the first charge asserts "that he took on board and carried in the Franklin, from Valparaiso to Quilca, horses with their equipments for the use of General Canterac, or some other royalist officer, thus furnishing aid and assistance to the one party in a military contest, in violation of the duties of a neutral officer."

This charge is conceived in the true spirit of a demagogue, who seeks to array the prejudice of the judge against the person whom he accuses. Had it suited his purpose he might have charged, with equal propriety, that the accused had carried horses from Valparaiso to Lima for the use of San Martin, or some other patriot officer. Both imputations would, indeed, have been unfounded, but at least, it would have borne a seeming of impartiality, and protected Commodore Stewart from suspicion of aiding the regal against the patriot cause. But he was not with the dead—the grave closes on all resentments. In the exasperation of the rival parties it was impossible to avoid unfounded suspicions of partiality. The best refutation will be found in the correspondence of Commodore Stewart with the royal and patriot chiefs, now before you. The tone of his communications to the Viceroy and his officers will refute every imputation of favoring the royal cause.

There were carried at different times in the Franklin from Valparaiso five horses. Mrs Stewart, with her children, accompanied her husband in his voyage to the Pacific. For their accommodation on shore during this long absence, he carried with him his carriage and coachman. On his first arrival at Valparaiso he procured a pair of carriage horses. While on shore at Quilca, Mrs. Stewart was presented by a lady with a pony, of which she had the use at that place. These three horses were carried in the Franklin to Lima, there landed, and afterwards impressed by the patriots.

On his second voyage from Valparaiso three other horses were taken on board, openly, and from the navy yard—as proved by Mr. Hunter; one for Commodore Stewart's use, one designed as a present for Mr. Cotera, (a Spanish merchant who had, on a former voyage, offered polite attentions and made a present to Mrs. Stewart,) the third was the property of Mr. Smith. At Quilca Commodore Stewart presented to Mr. Cotera the horse designed for him. Mr. Smith landed his own, and what was done with him is unknown.

This is the simple state of the transaction proved by the evidence, and this act of personal courtesy to a Spanish merchant has been made to assume the hue of a high offence against the law of nations, and against our natural prejudices, by torturing it into military aid furnished to a royalist general.

It is true that Lieutenant Ogden thinks he afterwards saw a horse in General Canterac's camp which he supposed to be one of those landed at Quilca. Waiving all questions of identity, and all inquiry whether the horse was that landed by Mr. Smith or Commodore Stewart, or whether it was in possession of General Canterac, or some other person; the court will remember that the horse mentioned by Mr. Ogden was near Lima, a distance of —— miles from Quilca, where it was landed—was seen months after the landing, &c. Above all, as the same gentleman proved that General Canterac was not at Quilca when the horse was landed by Commodore Stewart, a candid mind would have no difficulty in believing that, by the transfer of the animal through various hands, it is probable impressment for military purposes, (as was the practice with both parties) and in various other ways, a sufficient explanation might be found of its being in General Canterac's camp, without resorting to the suspicion against Commodore Stewart, conveyed by the accusation.

And what motive, I pray you, could Commodore S. have to conceal the fact, if he had presented this horse to General Canterac, or any other royal general? Horses, unless accompanied by military equipments, are not contraband of war, but may lawfully be conveyed by a neutral to a belligerent. So say all the jurists, and many treaties. And even if so equipped, the understanding which believes the law of nations forbade Commodore Stewart to present a single caparisoned horse to a royal general, is not less contracted than the heart which confounds an offering of personal compliment with military aid. Arms and ammunition are always contraband; but we should pity the weakness which could imagine that the commander of a naval squadron could not present an officer in the Spanish or patriot army with a handsome sword, or a pair of pistols, with a pound of fulminating powder, without the imputation of a breach of neutrality.

One other alleged breach of neutrality remains to be noticed. This "is the unkindest cut of all." No offence is too vile and base to be imputed to him. By the 7th specification of the 2d charge, he is accused of "carrying from Callao to the ports of the Intermedios, sometime between the 13th May and 15th July, 1822, intelligence of a contemplated military expedition, prepared by the patriot government of Peru, against the Intermedios, and thereby exposing the same to defeat and destruction." And, lest this should not suffice to degrade him, he is also charged with being the abettor and coadjutor of others engaged in a system of espionage. By the 8th specification of the same charge, he is said to have received on board "the Franklin and other vessels under his command, within the jurisdiction of Peru, certain persons, who, by the laws of said government, were obnoxious to capture and punishment—spies and officers in the royal army—and protecting their persons from seizure and punishment; in particular, an individual by the name of Madrid, an officer in the royal army, and a spy in Lima, and the director, or late director, of the mint."

So far as personal agency in this system of espionage is attributed to Commodore Stewart, the accusation is a wanton and inexcusable outrage on his character and feelings. Nothing has occured, certainly nothing appears, in any part of the evidence, to give even the semblance of suspicion that he personally participated in such communications. The failure of the expedition is to be ascribed to its own intrinsic defects in preparation and arrangement, which could not escape the observation of one accustomed to ponder on the aptitude of means to attain a military result. In his letter of the ——— to his own government, he pointed out the want of proper arrangement, and, with prophetic spirit, foretold the failure which ensued. No one knew better than he who communicated to the government the matter of this charge, the inherent vice of the expedition, and the causes of its failure. Peace to his remains!

What persons, other than Madrid, and the director of the mint, were intended to be embraced by the expression "certain persons," nothing, either in the proof or charges, show. No hing, therefore, need be answered to that part of the charge.

It is utterly untrue that the director of the mint was "received on board the Franklin," or "any other vessel under" her command. Whether this director was "obnoxious to capture" as a spy, "or a royalist officer," is neither proved nor known. One thing, however, is certain—that he went on board the Franklin at Callao with a very large sum of money, which he wished to deposit on board the ship; but it is as certain (notwithstanding the great temptation to the avarice which is said to have led him to the perpetration of so many daring and so many contemptible crimes,) that Commodore Stewart refused to receive either the director or his money, on the ground that it was the property of one of the belligerents. Both went on shore again, and if the director of the mint was "obnoxious to seizure and punishment," the authorities of Peru had an opportunity to seize and punish him. The openness with which he came on board, and returned, rendered it improbable that he was exposed to such danger as the charge expressed. Turn to the evidence of Lieutenant ———, and this will be made manifest.

It is true that a man by the name of Madrid did go on board the Franklin, in the month of ———, 1822, at Callao; went in her to Quilca, a port of the Intermedios, and there landed about ——— days after the arrival of the Franklin in that port; that this man, about two years afterwards, was an officer in the royal army, appears extremely probable. What was his rank, and whether he entered the army after his arrival at Quilca, or before he left Callao, are matters altogether of conjecture. That he was "a spy" is neither proved nor reconcilable with his actual situation at Callao—with his remaining on board the Franklin several days after his arrival at Quilca, where he was to disburthen himself of intelligence—nor with the indigent and obscure situation in which he is proved to have been sometime after his landing at Quilca, then in possession of the royalists; that no intelligence conveyed by him "of the contemplated military expedition prepared by the patriot government against the Intermedios, exposed it to defeat," appears from the evidence of Lieutenant ———, who testifies that the notice of that expedition had been received at Quilca before the Franklin arrived there.

But, had all these matters been as the specification stated them, still Commodore Stewart could not be guilty, under the specification, unless he "received," or permitted Madrid to be received on board. The charge, by its very terms, presupposes the knowledge and consent of Commodore Stewart; nor, indeed, is it easy to discover how crime (which cannot exist unless "the will avouch the deed,") can be committed without knowledge or consciousness. The rules of law do not permit the person by whom he was received on board to testify, in this case, as to the manner and motives of his reception. On the trial of Lieutenant Hunter, all these are detailed with frankness and precision by Mrs. Stewart herself. But the evidence offered now does distinctly prove that he was received on board by Mrs. Stewart—cautiously concealed from the commodore's eye, and that he had no knowledge that such person had ever been on board until twelve months afterwards; and when, two years after, this man, accompanied by another Spanish officer and an interpreter, were on board the ship, (probably to return his acknowledgments to Mrs. Stewart,) it is proved, by Lieut. Ogden, that Commodore Stewart then for the first time saw him, and when informed that he was the person who had been on board, turned from him with silent scorn, (the only notice he could then take of it,) and left him and his companion on deck, unattended to, and retired to his cabin. The mingled sensibility of a husband and an officer, displayed in his letter to the Secretary of the Navy, as soon as he was informed of the fact, furnish such intrinsic evidence of his want of participation, as no one, accustomed to examine the operations of the human mind, can mistake or disbelieve.

For the justification of the accused not one word more is needful. But his counsel would not satisfy their own feelings if they permitted folly or malice to tinge with their sombre coloring a transaction in which every generous eye will find much to admire. The true history of the transaction is, that this man went on board after the ship was under way, leaving the port of Callao. He bore a letter to Mrs. Stewart from a lady of high distinction and character in Callao, urgently soliciting a passage for him. At first she declined the application, but he urged her with supplications and tears; stated that his return to the shore would expose him to certain death; and invoked her protection with that overpowering eloquence which actual misery always commands. Had she reasoned at all, she could not have believed that a great State offender lurked under the humble habiliments of the man before her. She could not have believed that a spy had been recommended to her courtesy by a lady of the first distinction among the patriots. She would probably have ascribed his danger to that exasperation which, in moments of revolution, converts suspicion into proof, and deems a difference of political opinion the highest of all possible crimes. But there are moments when the heart does not await the slow processes of the head; it feels and decides promptly. Mrs. Stewart probably did not reason at all. She saw before her an unhappy wretch who asked protection, and she gave it. If she forgot for a moment what was due to the discipline of a man-of-war, it was because she remembered what was due to humanity. She was indiscreet, if you please, in receiving Madrid on board without the knowledge of her husband; but when that had been done, she best consulted his honor in keeping him ignorant of what could no longer be remedied, and subjecting herself, rather than him, to censure. The American people will rejoice to perceive that, if her sons are heroic, her daughters are feeling and generous.

Besides these contraventions of public law, many breaches of the municipal regulations of the royal government of Peru are ascribed to Commodore Stewart. By the second specification of the first charge it is said "he sailed in the Franklin, in June or July, 1822, to the ports called the Intermedios, for the purpose of aiding in private and illicit traffic, with a view to his private emolument." The 6th and 7th specifications of the same charge, and the fourth and fifth specifications of the second charge, impute to him that "he lent aid and countenance to the violators of the revenue laws of Peru, by permitting and aiding sundry persons in carrying from the shore coin, bullion, and plata pina, and other articles, contrary to the laws of the said government, without the permission, authority, or consent of the custom house officers and local authorities; and to deposit the said articles so smuggled on board the public vessels of the United States; and that he permitted such articles, designed to be transported from Peru, in violation of the laws of that country, clandestinely, at night, to be brought on board the public vessels under his command, and in transporting said articles at sea, out of the control or reach of the authorities on shore, to certain vessels bound to distant ports, after such vessels had undergone the examination of the custom house officers, such transportation being without the authority, or permission, or knowledge of said officers, but designed as a fraud upon and a contravention of the laws of Peru."

That a breach of the revenue laws, by landing any article, was committed by any of the United States ships, or by any vessel with their aid or countenance, there is no room to suspect. The vessels enumerated in other specifications, as connected with the Franklin, are the Sarah, the Telegraph, the Pearl, and the Canton. The first had no cargo; the second was captured by the Peruvian vessel-of-war in open day; after having landed a part of her cargo; the Pearl landed nothing, as has been shown already; and with each of these it has been proved that Commodore Stewart had no co-operation whatever.

The Canton, it is true, did land articles, both at Arica and Quilca, without any aid from the national ships, either in men or boats, as is proved by Lieut. Hunter and others.

The articles were those of peaceful commerce, and not contraband of war. The duties were paid, as is proved undeniably by Mr. Smith and others, and the articles deposited in the custom house stores, as is proved by Mr. Smith.

It has never been denied that the Franklin and other United States ships did take on board specie and bullion, or plata pina, on deposit and for transportation. But it was done in every instance with the knowledge and permission of the revenue officers; lawfully, and not in fraud of the revenue laws of Peru, or the laws of this nation. The testimony of Lieut. Henry places this beyond doubt. There is no insinuation or proof that any articles of merchandise were taken on board against the laws of Peru or Chili.

To you, sirs, it is needless to vindicate the right of the commander of an American ship-of-war to take specie and bullion on board; but there seems to be a strange misconception on the subject throughout the nation. It is indeed known that the practice exists both in the American and British navy. But it is generally believed that it rests on usage alone; and its policy and correctuess is questioned by many. But to you, sirs, it is known that it is expressly authorized by the act of Congress establishing rules and regulations for the navy. The recent inquiry in the case of Commodore Porter will, it is hoped, leave the legality of this practice no longer doubtful. Till the law be repealed, no reproach can attach to the officers acting under it.

But though the laws permitted Commodore Stewart and the commanders under him to receive specie and bullion on board the public ships, still he is guilty if it was taken on board "in fraud and violation of the revenue laws of Peru."

That the laws of that country did not absolutely prohibit the exportation, is distinctly shown. Exportation was allowed and duties fixed. The supposed fraud in the shipment is attempted to be inferred from the times and places of the shipment. They were chiefly in the night, and at points distant several miles from the places where the Franklin lay. This circumstance would indeed justify suspicion in a settled government like our own, with an organized custom house system, where check upon check exists on our public officers, where regular written permits are necessary, and official copies of them may always be obtained, and shipments can be made nowhere but at places designated by law. But they justify no suspicion when the actual state of that country is considered. At all times their custom house system was left much to the personal guidance of the officers. The presence of an officer stood in lieu of a permit, and exportation was confined to no particular places. The ordinary observances were less rigidly maintained at that time, when all law was relaxed, and property near the coast was exposed to double risk, from rovers of the sea and robbers of the shore. It was brought from the interior in open day, by large caravans of mules, occupying several days on the route. Those who designed to ship it generally concerted the time and place of its arrival, so as to expose it when near the coast to as little chance of plunder as possible, and it was embarked as soon as it reached the coast, and deposited on board ship for safety.

I refer you to the testimony of Lieutenant Henry and Midshipman Hopkinson and Mr. Smith, to show that custom house officers superintended the shipments, and fixed the place of receiving it, though the shipments were made in the night: and what is decisive proof that the circumstance was neither illegal nor unauthorized by the government, is the letter of Commodore Stewart to the sub-delegate at Quilca:

U. S. Ship Franklin, off Quilca, June 26, 1822.

To his excellency Don Jose de Panera, sub-delegate, &c.:

Sir: Mr. Eliphalet Smith has apprised me that a number of mules laden with specie and bullion is on its way to the coast from Arequipa, for embarkation on board this ship. As he wishes it immediately embarked on its reaching its point of destination on the coast, and has requested the boats to be sent from this ship for that purpose, and it may probably arrive in the night, may I ask the favor of your excellency to give such directions to the guards as will prevent their mistaking the boats for those of the patriots.

I have the honor to remain, &c.

Evidence has been given showing that in some instances money was brought on board the Franklin concealed about the persons of those who brought it. In no instance was this ever known to Commodore Stewart, but one, mentioned by Lieutenant Ogden. But he also testifies that Commodore Stewart, seeing the manner in which it had been concealed, refused to receive the money, and turned out of the ship the person who brought it.

The only vessel to which specie was transported from the Franklin, or other public vessel, under circumstances at all questionable, is the Cora. The witnesses speaking of the transaction are Lieutenants Goldsborough and Hunter. By the latter it is shown that it was money belonging to citizens of the United States; that it was sent to the Cora in open day, but the captain of the Cora was not ready to receive it at that time; that the captain called for it in the night, being about to sail, and then received it.

Many innocent reasons may be imagined why the Cora should have sailed in the night—the state of the wind or tide, or the desire to get clear of picaroons on the coast; or, if you please, the whim of the captain. But surely there is nothing so singular in a vessel's leaving an open roadstead, in a night so light that her name was legible on her stern, as shall justify suspicion of the accused.

The money was sent to her when she was about to sail; a guard boat came alongside, but experienced no interruption from the United States officer. Commodore Stewart's innocence of all impropriety is evinced by the inquiry which he instituted on the application of the custom house officer on the next day. That no censure on any one was merited by that transaction, is reasonably to be inferred, as the explanation given to the boarding officer of the customs was entirely satisfactory to him.

Every wrong said to have been committed on the belligerent or internal rights of Peru and Chili has now been noticed. How facts have been magnified and distorted so as to give to petty and innocent occurrences the air of intentional and gross violations of sovereign right, or of fraud upon the revenue, you have seen. It will not, however, excite surprise, when the inflamed passions of both the combatants, the suspicious fears of one, the unreasonable expectations of the other, are taken into account. Captain Biddle explained it in a few words. The royalists were suspicious because they knew our national sympathy for the patriots; the patriots unreasonable in their demands upon that sympathy. To escape from complaints by each, was impossible. It is no slight proof that Commodore Stewart held the scales of neutrality with a steady and impartial hand, that each party accused him of inclining it in favor of his adversary.

His correspondence with both governments, now in your possession, will evince that neither prepossession nor prejudice influenced his official conduct; but that his measures were such as public law and the instructions from his government prescribed to a neutral commander. The charges which remain to be answered grow out of the relation in which Commodore Stewart stood to his own government and laws. These he is said to have offended in various modes enumerated in a multitude of specifications. Many of these I am happily relieved from all necessity to refute.

One (that which charges him with neglect of duty in not bringing Captain Conner to trial, on the application of Lieut. Sawyer,) has been impliedly waived, no evidence being offered to sustain it. Another, (for permitting Mr. Smith to be transported in the Dolphin, with merchandise for sale on private account, allowing him to employ a national vessel to sell or display merchandise for sale,) was openly abandoned by the judge advocate.

Others, respecting the employment of the carpenters and others attached to the Franklin in working on board, &c., for other vessels; receiving passengers on board the Franklin, or transporting them gratuitously to the places where the ship was bound; the employment of Mr. Smith in carrying dispatches and performing other duties properly appertaining to officers; allowing the purser to send on shore, for sale, clothing and other articles brought out for the officers; the purchase of canvas and other articles for the Canton; the transportation of sails and money in the Dolphin to the Canton, at Guayaquil; the omission to have the crew properly exercised, and the guns in proper order; all these are so undeniably proved to be utterly false in the principle, or unfounded in the facts relied on to sustain them, that farther comment would be impertinent.

As to the petty frauds and despicable peculations imputed by some of the specifications, I could not advert to them, especially in a tone of grave refutation, without offending every honorable mind. It is humiliating to reflect that for such matters, some untrue, some unheard of by the accused till his trial, others magnified, all innocent, a man who has been honored by a vote of national thanks for illustrious service should have been exposed to the pain of a public trial.

The four specifications relative to Lieut. Weaver might have merited more particular notice; but the facts are so perspicuously stated in the opening of the defence, the evidence so entirely corresponds with that statement, and the reasonings of my associate so convincing, that I cannot hope to illustrate that transaction. Brief recapitulation is all that is left to me.

That the 24th specification is mistaken in point of fact seems undeniable. The permission granted to Lieut. Weaver to absent himself from the Franklin did not extend to the cruise, but was temporary and brief. He was to rejoin the ship at the Pacific. Originally he was allowed to remain at New York till a favorable opportunity arose to proceed to the Pacific; but the order he received to take charge of the stores on board the America still further restricted the indulgence and required his departure in that ship. Indeed, he was, on all military principles, in actual service on board that ship by virtue of the order which placed the stores under his charge. The authority of a commander to grant temporary leave of absence not only rests on general practice, but is believed to be an attribute of command, naval or military. In the army it is believed to be exercised; in the navy it is proved to have been practiced. The fact was in this case reported by Com. Stewart to the Department, and was neither reproved nor questioned.

The 23d specification, though true in fact, is predicated on the singular opinion that guilt can arise out of an act proper in itself, and not to have done which would have been an offence. He did, on November 24, cause the purser to make an entry on the muster roll "that William A. Weaver was absent from said ship without leave from the 1st August, 1822." That this entry corresponds exactly with the fact the United States has been at some pains to prove, and is undeniably true. It was made on the first occasion in which that muster had ever been presented to Com. Stewart for approbation and signature. In what, then, did his guilt consist? This specification says, in this: "That he had approved a previous muster roll, in which Lieut. Weaver was said to be actually on board to December, 1823." That the statement of his being on board till December, 1823, is on all hands admitted to be incorrect, and the preceding specification seeks to punish Com. Stewart for having made it. Yet, with strange inconsistency, it is imputed to him as a crime that he did not intentionally repeat in the muster of November, 1824, the very misstatement which he is prosecuted for committing in the preceding one of December, 1823. The condition of that man is indeed deplorable to whom no safe course of action is allowed. Had Com. Stewart, in the muster of November, 1824, caused any other entry to be made but the one he did, he would have been liable to prosecution for a false muster. For having made it according to the truth of the case, he is prosecuted because it does not correspond with the previous one, admitted to be erroneous. If he sinned in the first instance, he ought at least to be applauded for his reformation.

The 21st specification, strictly and literally taken, is untrue in point of fact. It charges that he approved the muster roll of the Franklin, "wherein it was made to appear that William A. Weaver was actually on board said ship, and performing the duties of a lieutenant." Now the muster roll did not make it appear that "he was actually on board." That was matter of mere inference, founded on the supposition that every one is presumed to be on board whose name stands on the muster, and who is not expressly stated to be absent. That inference is not warranted, as it is proved that the name of an officer is not stricken off the books, though absent with or without leave. The truth is, that the muster roll neither negatively stated that Lieut. Weaver was not on board, as the law intended it shall state, nor affirmatively that he was on board, as the specification supposes.

But the accused means to rest his defence on no law subtilties or verbal criticism. He wishes to be tried only on the honesty of his purpose. The muster roll, by which it might be inferred that Lieutenant Weaver was on board to December, 1823, is undeniably shown not to have been such as he designed it to be. The error arose by mistake, either in himself or the purser, probably in the purser, but undoubtedly by a mere mistake. He could promote no possible interest of his own by the misstatement; the United States could sustain no possible wrong. He had by prior muster rolls officially informed the Department of the actual condition of Mr. Weaver. It was personally known by the Secretary, to whom Mr. Weaver reported himself in Washington. The muster roll, in December, 1823, could give no new intelligence, if the mistake in it had not occurred. In what, then, does his offence consist? Has he violated the spirit of the regulation? That was designed to prevent frauds on the government; here none was intended, none practicable. Has he violated its letter? Morality exclaims, no; for guilt consists in intentional error, and not in accidental mistake. Philology confirms the opinion. A muster to be false must not only be erroneous, but the error must be committed with intent to deceive. A few words will suffice to repel the imputations conveyed by the 5th and 14th specifications of the first charge. The offence is in "employing in August, 1822, the Waterwitch, then in the service of the United States, in traffic and carrying merchandise on private account;" and "permitting the cargo, or part of the cargo of the Canton, in August, 1822, to be shipped on board the Peruviano, then in tow of the Franklin, and ostensibly a public vessel; and in carrying on board the Franklin the supercargo of the Canton, and samples of goods thus put on board the Peruviano, for the purpose of furthering the sale of the goods."

As to the Waterwitch, it is positively proved by Lieutenant Henry and Mr. Wilkes, who successively commanded her, that while she was employed it was exclusively in the public service; and in no traffic, until she was delivered up to the agent of her owner; not one article of merchandise was on board during all that whole time.

Lieutenant Henry has given you a detailed account, sustained by his books and orders, of all the operations of the Peruviano, from the moment at which she was first employed on the public service, till her surrender to Mr. Nixon, in April, 1824, when the Franklin was about to return to the United States. Not only is there no proof to sustain the prosecution on this head, but it is proved so [far] as a negative admits of proof, that no merchandise was received on board, and that she was engaged in no traffic whatever during that whole time. She had indeed received some merchandise on board for the Canton, before she was "in the public service," not "for traffic" but safe keeping; and it was restored to the Canton after the Peruviano was in the public service. If there be guilt in the transactions, then indeed Commodore Stewart must be convicted of the double crime of granting to his countrymen in the Pacific an accommodation which none but a churl would have refused, and of believing that his country could appreciate the motives which led him to advance the objects of his squadron at the cost of some temporary expenditure to himself. The inconsistency of some of these charges is very curious, and would be amusing, but that the honor of an officer is too sacred to become the fit subject of an idle jest, and a criminal prosecution not a proper mode of practicing it.

The 31st article of the naval regulations, subjects an officer to be cashiered, if he receives on board his vessel any merchandise (other than specie and bullion), except in cases of necessity and distress, and to preserve them. To bring this case under that article, it was necessary to allege, as the 14th specification does, that the Peruviano was, at the time the goods were put on board, in the service of the United States; that is, a public vessel for the time being.

But the 17th specification, which attempts to punish the commodore for employing the crew and arms, &c., of the Franklin on board the Peruviano, attests her "not to have been required for the public service, or that she did not, and does not belong to the United States." It is impossible both offences could be committed. For if the Peruviano was not a public vessel, receiving or carrying merchandise on board could not be an offence against the naval regulation. If she were a public vessel, the employment of the crew, &c., of the Franklin on board her, instead of being a crime, was a positive duty. The inconsistency of the specifications should destroy both.

But, in truth, he was guilty of neither offence. The explanation given on the opening of the defence is clear in its principle, and the facts sustained completely by the proofs. The Peruviano was, at no time, the property of the United States, though for some time in their service. She had been constructed and equipped at private cost, and with private materials. When the goods were put on board as a place of deposit, she was private property. In this state she was officered, manned, and armed by the Franklin, for public purposes, and solely employed in public duty. The necessity of such a vessel to the uses of the squadron is obvious; was pointed out by Commodore Stewart immediately on his arrival in the Pacific; when an unexpected opportunity arose to obtain her, he did so, but at his own private cost, as he had received no express instructions to buy on public account. He informed the government that he had done so; her utility, and the sum she saved to the public, are proved at this trial; the Department has sanctioned his conduct, and paid Lieutenant Henry, who commanded her.

Placing her in public employment did not require that the private property on board, which did not at all interfere wi h her storage or armament, should be thrown into the sea. They were, therefore, kept on board till the return of the Canton, then restored to her, and Midshipman McCauley has proved the goods were brought back to the United States.

As to the residue of the specification, it may be briefly said that Mr. Ward went to the Franklin, not as "supercargo of the Canton," but as secretary to Commodore Stewart, an office which had become vacant by the death of Dr. Dupuy, and which the penmanship of Mr. Ward, and his knowledge of the Spanish language, peculiarly qualified him to fill. He may perhaps have carried the samples on board the Franklin. I dare affirm the commodore did not search his secretary's baggage to ascertain it, and if he had known it, it was a facility to the commerce of his country, forbidden by no law, proper and reasonable.

The charges already noticed, exhibit the commodore as at once the proudest and meanest of mankind. At one moment he is represented assailing sovereignty itself in his audacity; at another, stooping to the commission of sixpenny frauds, and petty peculation that a Newgate offender would scorn to commit.

The last charge imputes to him oppression and cruelty. It consists "in confining Joshua R. Sands, a lieutenant in the navy of the United States, in an unusual and unnecessary manner, from the 8th October, 1823, to the 13th April, 1824, without taking any measures to bring him to a trial for any alleged misconduct, and in continuing said oppressive and cruel conduct, subsequent to the 13th April, to the manifest and great injury of the health of said Sands."

The principle, stated in the opening of the case, would suffice to defend Commodore Stewart, if he sought only impunity. The exercise, however stern and rigorous, of a lawful power, can never be an offence against the law; for it were absurd that the law should punish that which the law authorizes. Mr. Sands has been convicted, by a court-martial, of the offence for which Commodore Stewart confined him.

If Commodore Stewart exercised his lawful authority more sternly and severely than the occasion required, it might, indeed, expose him to moral, but never to judicial censure. But it will be shown that his conduct throughout, merits commendation. Those who have known Commodore Stewart, in private life, will learn with astonishment, that under the modest and unpretending good sense, the forbearing manners, the amiable and kindly sentiments which have characterized him, lurked a tyrant's temper, which could exercise protracted oppression, and derive a fiend-like gratification from the suffering it inflicted.

To you, gentlemen, some of whom have known him in every situation which could test the vigor or permanancy of his moral principles, defence is needless. You could personally attest that his professional life, by a rare and happy union of qualities, not easily nor often combined; the sternness of official authority has been so blended and attempered by personal mildness, that those who have been placed under his authority, obeyed not more from duty than respect. On more than one memorable occasion, he has been compelled to take very decisive measures, when the subordination and discipline of the service were menaced. It was equally honorable to himself, and to those on whom he acted, that no personal ill-will was engendered by those measures, but they were afterwards, with an honorable frankness, approved by those who had occasioned them. But he has not chosen to call witnesses to his general temper and conduct to those under his command. He prefers that should rest on the testimony of the very person said to be the victim of his oppression. You cannot doubt his evidence when favorable to the accused; for if his wrongs had been great, his resentment for them has certainly been enduring. Appeal then to Lieutenant Sands. When asked if the general conduct of Commodore Stewart was marked with a cruel and oppressive temper, he replied, "Commodore Stewart's conduct has not been cruel and oppressive, but the contrary. As to myself, I have met with no reprimand from him for two years that I served under him, except once, for swearing." Those who have young sons in the navy will best know how to estimate the temper of a commander, who gave a reprimand for an impropriety, unhappily too common, but offensive both to good manners and good morals.

It must be obvious, then, that Commodore Stewart's conduct to Lieutenant Sands cannot be ascribed either to natural propensity to oppression and cruelty, or to any personal hostility to that young gentleman. Let us see, then, if its cause may not be found in the temper and conduct of Lieutenant Sands himself. In pursuing this inquiry, the principal facts will be taken from his own statements.

It appears that on the 7th of October, 1822, several gentlemen were guests of the ward room table, while the Franklin was lying in port. Lieut. Hammersley, who was the superior officer, presided at the table. In the presence of these strangers, and of several officers of the ship, a quarrel arose between Lieutenants Hammersley and Sands, which proceeded so far that Mr. Sands threw a bottle at Mr. Hammersley. Who was the aggressor is not very important; but Mr. Sands has been convicted by a court-martial of being the offender. Heated with wine and passion, these young gentlemen immediately went on shore to settle the dispute by private combat. After the exchange of three shots, their ammunition being expended, they separated, with an engagement to renew the duel on the next morning. In this state of the affair, Commodore Stewart became informed of it. He instantly did what his duty as an officer, and what a much higher duty demanded. He determined to interpose his authority to save these hot-brained young men from the effects of their mistaken pride and reckless anger. Enough had been done to satisfy the most fastidious advocate of the point of honor, and the orders of their commander would have prevented all possible misconception of their failure to comply with their engagements for the next morning. He therefore sent an order, on that evening, to the parties, then on shore, requiring their immediate return to the ship. By Lieutenant Hammersley this order was promptly obeyed. But Mr. Sands (who seems to have singular ideas of obedience in naval life) not only disobeyed it and remained on shore, but (as if to prove that his disobedience was considerate and deliberate) sent a letter of refusal to his commander. His object was to prosecute the duel, and that he seems to have considered a sufficient reason for disregarding his order.

On the next morning the lieutenant of marines was sent with a new order to Mr. Sands to return to the ship, and with instructions to use force to bring him, if needful. By this time the fermentation of the passions had subsided, and it might have been expected that Mr. Sands would have recollected the observance due to his commander. It might have been hoped, too, that his heart would have felt some touch of grateful reverence for the paternal solicitude which, while it was mindful of what was due to notions even of fastidious honor, was exerting itself to save him from the distraction of misery his rash and inconsiderate courage was preparing. Not so, however. This reiterated order was not obeyed, till Mr. Sands, finding that the duel was prevented, consented (as he says) to go on board.

Had Commodore Stewart been cruel and oppressive, there was much here to excite his temper; had he felt individual hostility towards Mr. Sands, here was an opportunity to indulge it, not only with impunity, but even under the appearance of zeal for the service. The regulations of the ship had been violated by going, and staying, on shore without leave; the decorum of the ward room outraged; the respect to a superior officer contemned; a direct attack made upon his person; the commodore's own reiterated orders contemned and disobeyed; yet, under all these circumstances, the only measure adopted by Commodore Stewart on his coming on board, was a suspension from duty. The occasion would have merited more severity; less could not have been practiced without an absolute surrender of all authority.

But even this measure, mild, indispensable, and lawful as it certainly was, had for its object, not the punishment of Mr. Sands, but his reformation; and with almost any other person it would have produced its intended effect. He ought to have perceived, not only the necessity, but the kindness of the restraint, and have restored himself, in a day or two, to service, by a proper apology to his commander. Instead of this, on the very next day, and while under suspension, he again insulted and jostled Lieutenant Hammersley, with the manifest design of increasing the flame which Commodore Stewart was anxious to extinguish. On this, Lieutenant Henry, then commanding lieutenant of the ship, ordered Mr. Sands to confine himself to his state room. When this was officially reported to Commodore Stewart, he had no choice but to confirm the order, or by reversing it, impliedly to censure Lieutenant Hammersley, and invite a repetition of acts which would have converted the deck of a ship-of-war into a theatre of gladiators. He would have been highly criminal had he hesitated in his choice. He confirmed the order which confined Lieutenant Sands to his cabin. The patience of most commanding officers would have been, by this time, exhausted; the ardor of most young men cooled; still, Commodore Stewart looked only to wholesome and temporary restraint of Mr. Sands. But that young gentleman resolved to push the forbearance of his commander to the uttermost. In examining the conduct of the parties afterwards, one knows not which most to wonder at, the undisguised disrespect and dogged obstinacy of Mr. Sands, or the mild forbearance of his commander. In one part of it, indeed, Commodore Stewart's feelings seemed, for a moment, to have been excited. But it was when a most dangerous blow was aimed at all discipline by a combined representation of his officers, which, under whatever specious pretext they may be formed, must, if tolerated, subject a commander to the direction of his inferiors, communicated in the shape of remonstrance and advice. But that excitement was momentary. His mind was "like the flint, which, rudely stricken, gives forth a hasty spark, and straight is cool again."

On the 9th of October, Mr. Sands sent a letter to Commodore Stewart, to say that he "conceived himself aggrieved and oppressed," and to charge him with "partiality" in not arresting Lieutenant Hammersley, though that officer was the person injured, and had not aggravated his original misconduct by disobedience of orders. Consulting less the sternness of official rank than his indulgent temper, the commodore in his reply assured him that he had no intention to grieve or oppress him, and stated that nothing would give him greater pleasure than to find his conduct divested of the violations of law and order with which it seemed to be combined. Mr. Sands, on the same day, in another letter, quoted law authorities to the commodore to prove that his confinement was illegal, and politely suggested the propriety of endeavoring to get at facts through a medium that would have at least the appearance of a disposition to show him justice. Without waiting a reply to that letter, he sent another to the commodore on the next morning, in which he attempted to prove by argument and authority that Commodore Stewart had acted lawlessly and oppressively in confining him, charges him with connivance with Lieutenant Hammersley, his avowed enemy; "protests against his conduct as illegal, oppressive, unjust, highly calculated to arouse feelings that might have a tendency to produce conduct on which to base other charges, inhuman, and finally threatened an appeal to the President of the United States for redress against his injustice." This, it must be admitted, would be uncourteous language used by a young gentleman to any person; disrespectful, when addressed to a senior; but, addressed by a young lieutenant to his commander, was a high military offence. Indeed, if one part of it alluded—and it seemed to admit no other construction—to a challenge to Commodore Stewart, or an attack on his person, as not unlikely to grow out of his measures, it wanted nothing but combination and numbers to make it a direct act of mutiny. Every attempt by inferiors to intimidate and to force him from his measures is mutinous. No considerations shall ever tempt me to become the apologist of military tyranny. I am entirely convinced that tyranny is not discipline, and that no mistake can be more fatal to the army or navy than the belief that unrestrained violence and unbridled power in a commander contribute to their efficacy. Such a system of command may make obsequious slaves, but heroes never. But it is folly to extend to military life the maxims and manners of personal equality. Countenance the idea in the navy that your inferior officers may use such language to their commanders in the actual exercise of duty, and, depend on it, you will have no victories to boast hereafter.

The insubordinate disposition of Mr. Sands has been, perhaps, sufficiently exhibited already; but follow him on, and take his own account of matters. Finding Mr. Sands, instead of becoming more temperate and considerate in the opportunities afforded him for reflection, was becoming more disrespectful—desirous to ascertain by judicial inquiry whether Mr. Hammersley's official report of his conduct was in any particular misstated or exaggerated, as Mr. Sands had intimated, Commodore Stewart, on the 10th of October, directed a court of inquiry to examine the case; by Mr. Sands' own account, he immediately quarreled with that court and the judge advocate; charged them with keeping an unfair record, and protested against their proceedings. The sickness of the president and a member of the court, suspended its proceedings. Here, again, Mr. Sands' want of self-control appeared. By his own acknowledgment before you, he sent, without the slightest provocation, an irrascible and offensive message to a member of the court, and in a subsequent conversation grossly insulted him.

When the commodore found that the proceedings of the court of inquiry would probably be long suspended by the indisposition of its members, the kindness of his temper led him to overlook the contemptuous language of his letters and to endeavor to release him without endangering the harmony of his officers. On the 18th of October he addressed a letter to Mr. Sands, in which, after stating that the continued indisposition of the president rendered it improbable that he would be able again to preside at the court of inquiry, and expressing his regret there should be any necessity for the restraint under which he had been placed, he proposed to release Mr. Sands from his unpleasant situation on his giving his word of honor that he would not "provoke, molest or impede Lieutenant Hammersley or any other officer of the ship until his case was finally decided." Instead of accepting the proffered indulgence on these reasonable terms, in his reply of the same date he said: "As in no instance have I been the aggressor in the differences existing between Mr. Hammersley and myself, so I pledge to you my honor not to do anything but defend myself from the injuries he or any other man may choose to offer me." Commodore Stewart perceived, as he believed, that the pledge offered by Mr. Sands was not likely to attain the object he wished. His views will be seen in his reply, which I beg leave to read in extenso. (See letter marked § No. 9, in document 10.)

Mr. Sands refused to accede to the terms offered by Commodore Stewart and closed the correspondence by a letter of the 20th of October, in which he says to the commodore, "rank or station in life will not prevent men from commission of faults; is it generous to follow with vindictive measures the man we have already in our power? I answer not." It is in proof that after this Mr. Sands knew in various modes that he could at any time be relieved by giving the pledge required, but he pertinaciously refused, in the persuasion that his commander would ultimately submit and take the pledge in the terms he had been pleased to offer rather than prolong his confinement. If he had experienced inconvenience, let him charge it to his own sullen obstinacy.

Mr. Sands has told the court that the pledge he offered to give was substantially the same that the commodore required; why then did he stickle so much about the form? he knew that Commodore Stewart believed them to differ; if he really meant to accede to the substance of the pledge, why did he not yield with grace and dignity, and accept the indulgence in the way in which it had been offered; why insist that his own terms and not those used by the commodore should be adopted? He could have been influenced by one motive only—a desire to obtain a petty triumph over his commander.

But the assurance required by the commodore was not "substantially the same" with that which Mr. Sands was willing to give. The former would have presented not only a renewal of old hostilities, but all new excitements between Lieutenants Hammersley and Sands, the latter would have left an opportunity for new disagreements. Passion is seldom either just or discriminating; a look, a word, or even silence, may be easily construed by ingenious hatred into insult.

The privilege which Mr. Sands reserved to himself, of determining what were injuries and of defending himself from them, would have led to the very mischief which Commodore Stewart intended to prevent; and that Mr. Sands intended by changing the words of the assurance not to restrict himself, as was wished, is partially proved by his letters of the 19th and 20th of October. In them he does not once insinuate that his acceptance was intended to be coextensive with the offer made; on the contrary, he refused to accede to the offer of the commodore for the very reason that it went farther than he could consent to go.

He clearly manifested that he meant to reserve to himself a right which would have led to new violence. His words are "to pledge myself to show no resistance to indignities offered I cannot do, when I recollect the narrow limits assigned me by your order of the 8th instant were attempted to be abridged by a man who would not, under the privilege now held out to me, long want a pretext for again rendering it necessary for you to order close confinement."

You will remember in what this pretended abridgment of his limits consisted, and it is obvious that the privilege of jostling Lieutenant Hammersley on a similar occasion was intended to be reserved by Mr. Sands in his pledge; yet that was the very thing which it was the duty of Commodore Stewart to prevent.

The idea held out by Mr. Sands, that under the pledge asked by Commodore Stewart he would have been left exposed to degrading insults which he could not resent, is unfounded and absurd; no pledge would have taken from him the imprescriptable right of self-defence against actual violence; and he had the highest possible security against insult of any sort from that sentiment of honor which teaches every man that to offer indignity to one pledged not to resent it is base and cowardly. It would have cost Lieutenant Hammersley his commission had he dared to outrage Mr. Sands in that condition. More time has been taken in explaining the origin of this affair than it merited; but the charge of cruelty and oppression is so injurious to an officer, so odious in an individual, that it was proper to examine it somewhat in detail. Those who know how difficult it is to subdue the pride, the self-will, and headstrong passions of youth, to the order and obedience essential to military life, will not be surprised that after a three years' cruise in a ship of the line some individuals should complain of severity. It is no slight proof of the paternal and mild administration of Commodore Stewart that one only has complained. The motives of his original interference the most considerate will most approve. His subsequent measures were forced upon him by the unyielding temper of Mr. Sands.

It may possibly be said that Commodore S. protracted his trial unnecessarily, and therefore oppressively. The answer is simple, and must be satisfactory. The report of the court of inquiry ascertained judicially Mr. Sands' impropriety; that, therefore, gave him no new claim to indulgence. The squadron did not furnish officers sufficient to form a court-martial. The three members of the court of inquiry could not sit on the court-martial, for they had formed and expressed an opinion on the proofs. Lieutenant Hammersley was incompetent, being both a witness and a party; one officer had perished in a boat; Lieutenant Mayo had come to the United States; five officers, the smallest number for a court, could not be obtained until the arrival of the United States, under Captain Hull. Immediately after a court-martial was called; that court found Mr. Sands guilty, but its proceedings were irregular and illegal, and, moreover, the punishment inflicted was not such as the case required; the court undertaking to exercise a power of mitigation belonging to another department.

Commodore Stewart, exerting his undoubted authority, disapproved the sentence. The proceedings have been laid before the government, who have not thought proper to reverse the Commodore's decision: and in point of law Mr. Sands is still under prosecution; that he is not prosecuted, in fact, he owes to the lenity of the government.

The opinion of the court-martial in the Pacific was not promulgated, because it was not a final sentence, and, being unfavorable to Mr. Sands, its promulgation might have injured him on another trial.

The specification says that the confinement was "to the manifest and great injury of the health of Mr. Sands;" if that were true, Mr. Sands should attribute it to his own obstinacy, not to Commodore Stewart, whose duty imposed the restraint. But it is untrue; he never was on the sick report, nor was it made known to Commodore Stewart that he was actually sick; that his confinement was unpleasant, that he would have found it more agreeable to frolic on shore, as he proposed, is true. But Mr. Sands' military condition required a physician. We do not give comfits as medicine. If the dose he received was nauseous, it was necessary, and it is to be hoped will prove to have been wholesome.

In the defence of his own conduct, Commodore Stewart has been compelled to exhibit that of Mr. Sands in no attractive form; but he would not do justice to his own feelings if he allowed any impression to be made to the permanent injury of that young gentleman; he has said always, and now repeats, that he is an officer of promise.

The wildest and most mettlesome colts generally prove the best horses, but they require the severest discipline of the menage; they must feel the curb and the spur often and severely to render them tractable and obedient to the voice of their rider. The excellent good sense of Mr. Sands cannot fail to teach him sooner or later that a dignified obedience in military life is not irreconcilable with a manly and intrepid spirit, and that he who hopes to command with distinction must first learn to obey. He will then find fitter objects for that intrepidity of spirit which courts danger and that indomitable constancy which never yields. He will then thank his commander for the painful but instructive lesson taught him in the Pacific.

I have now, sir, taken a review of every offence imputed to the accused. It has been more protracted, perhaps desultory, than it should have been, but that may in some measure be ascribed to the number and variety of the matters embraced by it. The conduct of no officer has hitherto been exposed to an analysis so minute.

There may perhaps be found in his conduct some alloy inseparable from humanity, but much rich and pure ore will be discovered by the process; it is for you to announce the result.

Gentlemen, this entire nation awaits your decision with intense anxiety; the most precious of her gems is her naval renown; to it she chiefly owes that elevation of national sentiment, that lofty tone of conscious worth, which constitute the chief power of every government, without which republics perish.

If Commodore Stewart has sinned as this prosecution supposes, he is alike dangerous for his audacity, hateful for his cruelty, contemptible for his meanness; your oaths, your personal integrity, the reputation of the navy, the honor of our beloved country, demand his punishment. It would indeed have been better had he fallen as a gallant officer would wish to fall, at the close of some battle made memorable by his valor and skill; the triumphant banner of his country waving over him; the ocean his grave; his epitaph written by a nation's gratitude. Such a fate would have been in keeping with his former renown. But let no thought of this unnerve you; if he be guilty, strike, and strike fearlessly. The punishment of his offences will promote the interests of his country not less than his victories contributed to her renown; the navy will be purified from his contamination, the dignity of the law will be maintained, and an example will be given, salutary and striking, that no length of service, no rank, no splendor of naval or military achievement, will stay the arm of public justice.

But if he shall sustain this fiery ordeal, your own high-minded and generous sentiments will suggest what is due to his reputation and his feelings. You will not, with niggard hand, give to him a cold and grudging acquittal; but you will replace his laurels, green and fresh as when the hand of Congress placed them on his brow; you will restore with honor to the navy one to whom the navy is so largely indebted for its honors; you will give to your country the precious privilege of recounting her naval actions, without a blush for the crimes of those who achieved them.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, September 5, 1825.

SIR: I enclose to you the judgment of the court-martial, which the President of the United States has approved, acquitting you most honorably of all the charges which have been made against you, and of which the government has been apprised, while you commanded the squadron in the Pacific. The number and nature of the charges, and the character of those who presented them, were such that an inquiry was demanded, by your own honor, and the duty which the government owed itself and the interests of the nation. The result of the investigation has been satisfactory to the Executive, will be useful to the public, and honorable to yourself. It has furnished a conclusive answer to public and to private accusation, and redeemed your fame from reproach; a fame heretofore dear to your country, and hereafter to become still more precious.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,
(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Captain CHAS. STEWART, U. S. Navy, Washington.

WASHINGTON, September 7, 1825.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 5th instant, covering the judgment of the court-martial, which has been approved by the President of the United States.

For this early attention, and the very flattering manner in which you have been pleased to make the communication, I beg leave to tender to you my sincere thanks; as also, for the time you have accorded, and the facilities you have afforded me to defend myself against such a variety of matter, set afloat at periods and places so distant.

That the late Executive Government believed it due to itself and the interests of the nation, to have the allegations against me fully inquired into, I am most willing to believe; but that my own honor demanded and required the investigation, I have been furnished with no lights or means to enable me to form a judgment. If the character of those who laid or presented these odious charges is such as to leave no grounds to suppose they were actuated by the worst and vilest motive, it appears to me to belong to that justice the government owes itself, to make it manifest. But if, on the other hand, they shall appear to have been based on the most corrupt principles of the human heart, and to have emanated from the most impure sources, "whose rankness smells to heaven," the government then owes it to the honor of this nation to exhibit them to the world, and, in imitation of divine justice, set a mark on the wretches. Should they be found attached to the civil departments of the administration, the purity of those departments would seem to require their expulsion. But should they be found in the bosom of the navy, (where I believe they can only be found,) then how essential it is to its future welfare and glory, that such disorganizing characters, such disgraceful, unworthy associates in arms, should no longer be permitted to hang on the skirts of the mantle, with which its former virtues and valor have covered it.

Next to an approving conscience, I know of no circumstance that could be more gratifying to me than to learn that the result of this investigation has been satisfactory to the President, and is in accord with his virtues and principles of justice.

On the restoration of my health, and the removal of my arrest, I shall have the honor to renew to you, in person, the high consideration and respect with which

I remain, &c., &c.,
(Signed) C. STEWART.

The Hon. SAM'L L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, September 7, 1825.

SIR: I have this moment received your letter of this day's date, and, as I am about leaving the city, for a short time, with General Lafayette, hasten to reply to it.

Your arrest was matter of form, for the purposes of trial only. Your sword was not demanded, and therefore cannot be returned to you; and when I communicated to you the judgment of the court-martial, it did not occur to me that it was necessary to say anything respecting your arrest. You are, from the date of my letter of the 5th inst., in all respects relieved from that arrest, and restored to your standing in the service. The principal charges against you rested upon the authority of more than one foreign government, and of individuals of respectable standing, and these were corroborated by rumors and representations from a great variety of sources, which had also reached, and as I believed, seriously affected the public mind, as regarded your conduct and reputation. Hence the remark in my letter, that the inquiry was demanded by your own honor, and the duty the government owed to itself and the interests of the nation. In no other way could the truth be sufficiently established, and accomplish all the objects presented by the case. The government cannot discover the motives of those who made the charges, so as to determine that it resulted from "the corrupt principles of the human heart," nor is there at this time, either in the civil department of the government, or in the navy, any one against whom it could present a distinct accusation of such principles, or upon whom it could with propriety act with a view to punishment. If there be any one, within your knowledge, who is culpable, and deserves punishment, and you will furnish charges against him, they shall be examined and investigated, with the same regard for truth and the public interests which has influenced the government in the course which has been pursued toward yourself.

I am, respectfully, &c., &c.,

(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Captain CHARLES STEWART, U. S. Navy, Washington.

[Translation.]

Decree of San Martin.

To obviate all difficulties that might arise in future between the commanders of vessels-of-war belonging to neutral nations, and the government of the country, in regard to the rights that foreigners residing therein enjoy, and the obligations which they contract during their residence, I have decreed as follows:

First. Foreigners resident in the country possess the same rights as its citizens to the protection of the government and the laws, in whose eye there is no respect of persons.

Second. Foreigners, consequently, are subject to the laws of the country, and the orders of government, without the right of demanding the interference of the commanders of the vessels-of-war, or the consuls of their nation; there being but one case in which, by the law of nations, the demand may be made, that is an open violation of their laws.

Third. Foreigners, resident in the country, are obliged to take arms for maintaining internal tranquillity, but not for waging war against the Spaniards, while they preserve the character of neutrals.

Fourth. Foreigners are obliged to bear the burdens and pay the contributions of the other inhabitants of the State, proportionably to their possessions, and the advantages they derive from a free exercise of their profession.

Let this be published as a law, and communicated to whomsoever it may concern.

Given at the Protectoral palace of Lima, on the 17th of October, 1821.

SAN MARTIN.

By order of his excellency:

BERNARDO MONTEAGUDO.

It is a copy.

(Signed) VALDIVIE.

AREQUIPA, June 3, 1822.

To the commanding officer of the United States naval forces:

MY DEAR SIR: The communication which you were pleased to address me, informing me of your late arrival on this coast, affords me an occasion of offering you my respects, and of intimating to you that I have transmitted your letter to his excellency the Viceroy, whose reply I await. I proffer you the assurances of a sincere disposition to serve you, and I pray you to believe that your commands will be executed with pleasure, by

Your very devoted and respectful servant,

(Signed) JUAN RAMIREZ.

[Translation.]

HEAD-QUARTERS AT AREQUIPA, June 29, 1822.

To the commanding officer of the naval forces of the United States in the Pacific:

I made you my respects when at Arica, intending at a future period to communicate to you the reply of his excellency the Viceroy to your letter, in relation to a proposed arrangement for the benefit of commerce, and the advantage of the nations which we represent. This reply I have not yet received, and I have been notified of the arrival, at Quilca, of the ship Franklin, under your command. As this port is contiguous to my head-quarters, I venture to renew to you my consideration, the expression of which I have confided to an officer. The opportunity of serving you personally, to the extent of my power, would afford me sincere pleasure and the highest honor; but I am compelled, before I can realize this pleasure, to solicit your generosity and protection, in favor of a general, who, after having faithfully discharged his duties, and become exhausted by service, has obtained a passport to return to Europe, desirous of embracing his family. Everything depends on your determination to grant me his protection, in so proper an object, which would by no means compromit your neutrality towards the parties in America I pray you, therefore, to grant it him, from the dictate of your generosity, and for the sake of the mediation of his friend Smith, who, I have no doubt, will interpose in his favor.

God preserve you many years.

(Signed) JUAN RAMIREZ.

[Translation.]

LIMA, August 13, 1822.

To the commanding officer of the United States ship Franklin:

The secretary of the State of Peru, in the name of the Supreme Director, has the honor to reply to the note of the commander of the United States ship Franklin, of the 9th inst., in relation to a claim for the brig Macedonian and her cargo. I have to observe that, by the 2d article of the protectoral decree of Peru, of the 17th of October, ult., published in the accompanying gazette, the interference of commanders of vessels-of-war, or of consuls, can be admitted only in cases where the laws of nations have been openly violated; and that, therefore, it cannot be exercised when personal interests alone are concerned; which, in the present case, have been defended by the parties in a court of justice, and decided according to the laws of the country.

The secretary of state would conceive that the note of the commodore has now been answered, but that the high consideration due from the government of Peru to that of the United States, from a similarity of principles in their glorious revolutions, and the sincere desire of preserving their respective rights, has established between them mutual relations of frankness and good intelligence. These considerations have determined the secretary of state to make known to the commodore, that the brig Macedonian was sequestrated as the property of the fugitive Spaniard, Don José Arismendi, who gained more by this vessel and her cargo than the whole amount of her value: that the permission for this brig to sail from Canton to the port of Callao with her cargo, was obtained from the enemy by this Arismendi and Captain Smith, in consideration of $100,000, $25,000 as a donation, and $75,000 in advance for payment of duties, to be applied to the maintenance of the war, in open violation of the neutrality which Smith should have religiously observed: that, on the arrival of the vessel from the Puertos Intermedios, several of the crew were taken from on board, and detained to answer in a judicial process, to the conduct and termination of which they were absolutely necessary; which act cannot be considered oppressive: that, the vessel having been declared to belong to the State of Peru, by the judge of sequestrations, to whom the case was referred, after the decision of the high court of justice, the flag of Peru could properly have been hoisted thereon, and she employed in the service of the State: that the sentence pronounced by the judge in the usual form, is legal, and conformable to the order observed in trials, and is not an arbitrary act, or secret and iniquitous means of deciding the fortunes of an individual; and finally, that the parties interested, having made their protests, have the power of appealing to the proper judicial tribunals, which alone are competent to pronounce a decision on the present case.

The secretary of state, with the present occasion, proffers to the commander of the United States ship Franklin the sentiments of his esteem and consideration, subscribing himself,

His obedient servant,

(Signed) FRANCISCO VALDIVIE.

[Translation.]

LIMA, September 10, 1822.

To Commodore Charles Stewart, commanding United States ship Franklin:

The secretary of state of Peru has delayed a reply to Commodore Stewart's note of the 20th of August last, in relation to the brig Macedonia, in consequence of having received at a late period the proceedings in the case before the court to which it was brought, and because of his wish to communicate some facts that might prove to Commodore Stewart how little merit this case possesses, which he seems disposed to advocate.

The subject is one in no wise national. It concerns, exclusively, personal and private interests, commercial matters and agreements between E. Smith, a citizen of the United States, and the fugitive Spaniard, D. José Arismendi, whose property now belongs to the State of Peru. This matter, therefore, cannot be subject of official correspondence between the governments of the United States and Peru; its cognizance belongs to the judicial power, those interested being the only legitimate parties for prosecuting or opposing their claims before the proper tribunals.

This opinion is in conformity with the law of nations, and with the protectoral decree of the 17th of September ult., a certified copy of which is herewith enclosed. Its provisions extend not only to foreigners settled in the State, but also to transient traders in the country, which require that every foreigner speculating or importing goods shall submit to the laws of the State that govern in commercial transactions. The private interests of transient foreigners would otherwise destroy the system and order of commerce established in the State, and public right would be defrauded by individual property. By the above protectoral decree this property cannot be claimed by the commanders of the vessels-of-war of neutral nations; but the parties interested, if they conceive themselves aggrieved, may, as before said, have recourse in suit before the proper tribunals.

What Mr. Smith pleads, under pretext of a hearing having been denied him, is without foundation; for inasmuch as this was fully granted to Horre, the supercargo of the Macedonian, who was the legal representative of the concern, and who appeared by attorney in the cause, having been regularly informed of the proceedings, the judgment pronounced is legal, and the time specified by law having expired, the judgment from his default was regularly confirmed and executed.

The brig Macedonian and that part of her cargo which was brought to Callao was justly seized and sequestered as the property of the Spaniard Arismendi. Commodore Stewart will perceive by documents numbers 11 and 12, herewith transmitted to him by the secretary of state, that one-half of the hull of the brig was purchased of D. Felipe Mercier by Arismendi, for $15,000; that he moreover gave to the Spanish government in Peru, $100,000 for permission to bring his goods from Canton to the port of Callao; and that he gave $25,000 as a donation, and $75,000 in payment of duties accruing upon the cargo of the Macedonian. These facts will also appear from the paper connected with document No. 13.

Although Arismendi, in the second part of his instructions to his agents at Arequipa, No. 12, notified them (doubtless to avoid consequences) that he had not been able to fulfill the contract, No. 14, of depositing $50,000 on board the brig Macedonian, at San Blas, it nevertheless appears from the depositions of the captain and pilot of the vessel, copies of which are found with Nos. 15 and 16, that money and silver bullion was taken from the vessel at Canton. Until Smith shall have proved a different ownership of this money and silver, it is fair to presume that Arismendi performed his contract, being indebted, according to his instructions, in the sum of $100,000, and also of $25,000 as owner of one-half of the brig, and of $3,500 due to Smith for the expenses of the expedition.

That the interest of Arismendi in the brig Macedonian and her cargo was great, is evident. The most valuable and largest part of her cargo having been sold in the Intermedios, and the claims of Juan S. Ellory for the half of the vessel, as well as the adventures and profits of the interested parties being satisfied, it cannot be doubted that the sequestration of the brig and part of her cargo did not cover the interest of Arismendi and the other parties concerned.

To this simple exposition of facts, Smith can have nothing to oppose; and in this affair he is moreover chargeable with a want of due observance of neutrality. In contracting with Arismendi he was informed of the steps that had been taken to procure license, and he entered into a negotiation which could not be executed without an obligation to furnish the Spaniards with several thousands of dollars, destined to support the war. This is certainly at variance with a punctilious observance of strict neutrality.

The detention of a small part of the crew has been magnified into oppression. This is far from being true, and the detention was only intended for the procurement of the truth, which cannot always be elicited when witnesses are at liberty to make depositions. The crew of the Macedonia that was detained suffered no violence, and were liberated as soon as the truth was discovered.

From a view of the whole case, it appears that the brig Macedonia was legally sequestrated as the property of the Spaniard, Arismendi, whose interest in the enterprise was not destroyed by the confiscation of the vessel, having satisfied with profit the parties concerned by sales at Arica of the largest and most valuable part of the cargo; that Smith was privy to the contract of Arismendi with the Spanish government, then at Lima, to furnish a considerable sum of money for the prosecution of the war, and entered into a negotiation which could not have permitted an observance of strict neutrality; that Arismendi owned one-half of the vessel, and should have received advantages proportioned to the $50,00 ', which on the testimony of the captain and pilot of the Macedonia, he ordered to be landed at San Blas, from which port the brig transported to Canton a considerable sum of money and bullion; that the crew have suffered no great inconvenience, nor any evil separate from the peculiar circumstances attending the sequestration; that the trial was conducted and concluded with the attendance and defence of those who represented the rightful parties; and that finally, if these parties have any remonstrance to make against it, they should prefer it before the proper tribunals, where their legal demands will be admitted, as this subject does not belong to the governments of the United States and Peru, nor is it worthy the attention of the commander of the ship Franklin.

The secretary of state on this occasion renews to Commodore Stewart the high considerations of the esteem with which he subscribes himself

His obedient servant,

(Signed) FRANCISCO VALDIVIE.

[Translation.]

HEAD-QUARTERS AT CALLAO, June 29, 1823.

To Commodore Stewart, of the United States ship Franklin:

In the exercise of the full powers conferred on me by the sovereign congress of Peru, and finding the ports from Pisco to Chancay, inclusive, occupied by Spanish forces, I have issued orders that they be considered in a state of blockade, under the same principles and conditions prescribed in the supreme decrees of the President of this republic, declaring the ports between Pisco and Iquique to be in a state of blockade.

The commanding officer of the United States naval forces in this harbor will be pleased to notify the citizens of the United States, within his authority, of this order; and it is believed, that the application of the common law of nations to the peculiar circumstances that have induced the present decree, will be regarded and rigidly observed.

I pray the commanding officer of the United States naval forces to accept expressions of my high esteem.

By order of his excellency the general-in-chief.

(Signed) R. ALVARADO.

[Translation.]

HEAD-QUARTERS AT CALLAO, July 8, 1823.

To Commodore Stewart, of the United States ship Franklin:

The government of Peru having declared the western coast of the Pacific in a state of blockade, being occupied by a Spanish force, upon the same principles that make similar declarations by the most civilized nations against their enemies legal, I should consider it superfluous to add observations in reply to your note of the 30th June, for I cannot persuade myself that upon a closer examination of the subject you will fail to perceive the legality of the above blockade, which Sir Thomas Hardy, the commander of the British forces, recognized when he visited these ports. It may also be expected of you to acquiesce in the blockade of the ports comprehended between Pisco and Chancay, as did Captain Prescot of H. B. M. frigate Aurora, when notified of it, the principles of which you have been pleased peremptorily to pronounce new.

Without attempting then to discuss the question of right to blockade the coasts in possession of the enemies of the republic, I will be permitted to remind you, that as a marine force sufficient to enforce the blockade of these coasts can be employed, and as the Spaniards have none to break it, it is not with neutrals to determine whether or not the force be competent to cause the blockade to be respected. It is well known that, by the common law of nations, the notification of a blockade by a schooner, legally armed and commissioned, is of as much force as if proclaimed by the commander of a ship.

A sufficient naval force having been destined to enforce the blockade, and as the Spaniards have not even a barge at command, in all the Pacific, I flatter myself that you and every other commander of United States vessels, as also those of his Britannic Majesty, will observe these principles, in preserving a rigorous neutrality. We shall then have the pleasure of seeing the good intelligence that subsists between the republic of the north and those of the south, confirmed by its officers, in a similarity of principles adopted in relation to this important matter.

If, however, we should unhappily witness conduct of yours opposed to the blockade that has been laid, and completely enforced, by the government of Peru, we shall be obliged to claim of the government of the United States for acts, in violation of strict neutrality, of the just rights of the nation, and in prejudice of its independence.

Be pleased to accept my sincere respects.

(Signed) A. DE SUCRE.

[Translation.]

To the commanding officer of the United States naval forces in the Pacific:

The military commandant at Quilca informs me that at 2 o'clock, P. M., the United States ship Franklin came to anchor, and her commander went on shore to pay his respects to the general-in-chief, through him, which was done with great politeness. The commandant says he returned these civilities in my name, to the commodore, who said he would sail the same day, but would return within eight days.

The following extract is from the same place and person: "The commander of the United States ship Franklin, on his return to the ship from this port, took in tow the launch of the schooner Quintanilla, anchored within a stone's throw of the shore, without having condescended to advise me of his resolution, who am the public commander of this port."

From Molliendo, under date of the 4th, the military commandant writes to me as follows: "At 9 o'clock this morning, six barges, equipped and armed with one hundred and thirty men from the United States ship Franklin, came into this port for the purpose of pursuing and capturing the privateer belonging to Chiloe. The ship and a schooner were yesterday discovered at a distance in chase of this privateer, but she, by fast sailing, easily escaped from them. The commanding officer, who has come on shore, assures me that the ship will anchor here to-day."

From the same place, and under the same date, a letter reads as follows:

"6 o'clock, P. M.—The ship Franklin has set her sails, and taken on board the six barges which I reported to you, in an official communication, as having anchored in this harbor this morning. The Franklin has directed her course towards Quilca. The Spanish privateer escaped from her, and sailed in the direction of Arica. A brig and schooner, armed and equipped by the commodore, have gone in chase, with orders to pursue and capture her."

These evident facts, commodore, occasion me great perplexity. On the one hand, the United States ship Franklin is seen, commanded by an officer who has sustained the most exalted character for prudence, circumspection, and other commendable qualities, and the government of that nation, which I have always considered as possessing good faith like an inherent virtue, in perfect harmony with the government of Spain; and on the other hand are exhibited the foregoing facts, wholly inconsistent.

I am persuaded that some strong motive of which I am ignorant, or which I do not comprehend, induced you to act as you have. But whatever it may have been, I cannot conceive of any just reason but a state of war between your government and mine, of which, if it do exist, I have not been apprised. If it do not exist, what reason can you propose sufficient to justify your conduct towards the schooner Quintanilla, which, of itself, might disturb the good intelligence subsisting between the United States and Spain? But suppose that the captain of this schooner may have committed acts of violence upon the vessels or commerce of the United States; has there been to this moment any claim presented by a citizen of those States, or by yourself? If justice and good faith are to be observed, should not a demand have been made before you assumed the infliction of vengeance? This should have been done, for a greater reason, because you could not have doubted, without injustice to the Spanish government in Peru, that your just complaints would be heard. But you preferred to use the law of force, opposed to all the principles of society and of nations, thereby doing great injury to Spain.

If your conduct towards the Quintanilla was not induced, as has been suggested, I am unwilling to believe that it arose from the supposition of her being a pirate, and not furnished with a commission. The captain of the schooner has a commission from the Governor of Chiloe, which can be shown; this, I trust, you will not consider insufficient, nor will I do you the injustice to believe that you will excuse, by this frivolous apology, a proceeding of important consequences, and which may interrupt the harmony and peace subsisting between friendly nations.

But whatever may have been your motives for pursuing, capturing or sinking the schooner Quintanilla, what reason can you assign for having taken a barge out of a port subject to Spanish arms, without giving information of it to the military commandant, with whom you had, but a moment previously, been conversing, having gone on shore under the honorable pretext of paying your respects to the government? What right had you for considering the barge as belonging to the Quintanilla, or any other vessel, whilst under the protection of the Spanish government, and had failed in no duty to the Spanish nation, nor offended against it? This act, commodore, I cannot but regard as a violation of the law of nations. The affair demands to be fully explained, and satisfaction to be made that shall remove unfavorable opinions that may have been formed. I hope, at the same time, that you will direct the barge to be returned to the place whence it was taken; and I may venture to assure you, in the name of his excellency, the Viceroy, that whatever complaints you may have against the schooner Quintanilla shall be heard and satisfied. The foregoing I shall submit to his excellency, the Viceroy, that, with his approbation, that course may be pursued which justice may dictate in so delicate an affair.

God preserve you many years.

(Signed) GERONIMO VALDES.

YURA, January 7, 1824.

[Translation.]

To Commodore Stewart, of the United States ship Franklin:

With your letter of the 16th ultimo I received the copy you were pleased to enclose, of the treaties concluded between the United States and Spain, on the 27th of October, 1795, and your reply to Don Geronimo Valdes, general-in-chief of the army of the south, who addressed you a letter in relation to the motives that had induced you to pursue the Spanish privateer, Quintanilla, armed at Chiloe.

Informed of everything connected with the subject, I must say to you that there appears to have existed no reason why this privateer should have been considered as a pirate. By the royal order of February 8, 1816, a copy of which, certified by my secretary, I enclose to you, it will be seen that his Catholic Majesty, in consequence of the situation of these countries, grants to his subjects of Spain and America the power of arming their vessels at pleasure. The Quintanilla, therefore, or any vessel sailing in these seas as a privateer against the rebels or dissidents, cannot be considered as a pirate, having been commissioned by the legitimate authority of Spain. This is required by the war waged by the dissidents and the peculiar situation of these ultra-marine possessions.

I have before me the privateering ordinance of the year 1801, with which that of 1805, referred to in the above royal order, agrees; and as this ordinance of 1801 prescribes the regulations to be observed by privateers, I have transmitted a copy of it to the Governor of Chiloe, that it may be minutely enforced, and difficulties prevented. I would remark to you, that as the nineteenth article of this privateering ordinance authorizes privateers to visit merchant vessels of every nation, and to compel them to exhibit their commissions, passports, documents of ownership and bills of lading, &c., and if resistance should be made to this regular examination, to execute it by force, what you cite cannot be valid, nor can the articles of the treaty of October 27, 1795, between the United States and Spain; for it does not appear that it was ratified in all its parts by his Catholic Majesty in 1821. It follows, of consequence, therefore, that the privateering ordinance of 1801, being posterior to the treaty of 1795, to which you refer, must be in force.

Whatever may have been the conduct of the captain of the Chilocan privateer, the Quintanilla, it was not sufficient reason that you should have pursued her as an enemy. The criminal conduct of an individual, according to the law of nations, not legally proved, gives no other action than a demand for reparation of offences committed against the citizens of his nation; or rather a demand against the authorities of his Catholic Majesty, who would immediately have ordered the necessary measures to be taken for the punishment of the offender, and the just satisfaction of their claims to the complainants.

The case of the ship Arab, which you have mentioned to me, I believe has been settled, as appears from the enclosed copy of a letter from the Governor of Chiloe to his excellency, the general-in-chief of the army of the north, Don Jose Canterac. But if Williams, the interested party, have any further claim, let him make it in proper form, that justice may be rendered.

The notoriety of certain acts justifies me in suggesting to you that the dissidents of these countries have been treated with a consideration, both by the officers of the United States naval forces and by those of other nations, neutral towards Spain, which is not consistent with strict neutrality. It is well known that American, English and other merchant vessels are detained by armed vessels of the dissidents, who will not suffer them to unload at any port but at the one they may direct; that these vessels convey to the rebels munitions, arms, clothing for troops, and other articles of war; and that they afford transports to the expeditions against those who are here defending the rights of the nation and of the King. Aware of these facts, it is expected that you, who are so solicitous for the preservation of the rights of nations and of neutrality, will use measures to secure your fellow citizens from the attendant consequences; for you know, that it is not within my power or my duty to restore any vessel that shall be taken by a Spanish privateer, under commission from a legitimate authority, while transporting the rebel troops, or conveying to them arms and munitions of war. As the Viceroy and Captain General of Peru for his Catholic Majesty, I am authorized by the laws and various royal orders to use whatever means I may judge to be proper, for preserving these countries an integral part of the monarchy.

The character for virtues which you sustain induces the hope that the facts and reasons advanced will cause every difficulty to be removed, that might affect the consideration due to the citizens of the United States, or disturb the relations that subsist between the two nations.

God preserve you many years.

(Signed) JOSE DE LA SERNA.

CUZCO, February 4, 1824.

[Translation.]

To Commodore Charles Stewart, commanding United States naval forces in the Pacific:

Don Geronimo Valdes, general-in-chief of the army of the south, Maréchal de Camp, has done me the honor to appoint and empower me, in due form, to receive from you an exposition of the motives that induced you to pursue the Spanish privateer, General Quintanilla, of Chiloe, as an enemy's vessel, and to demand of you reparation of the injuries inflicted on this privateer, and of the insult offered the nation, in the person of Lieutenant Colonel Don Juan Diaz del Rivero, military commandant of this port, whom you obliged to return, when, on the 29th, he was proceeding, in a boat, to give instructions to the captain of this privateer, which was then in sight. This last act was, of itself, a tacit declaration of blockade; and your public and well known pursuit of the Spanish privateer Quintanilla; your perseverance in dispatching and placing at various points, and repeatedly, your armed barges; the capture of seven men of the crew of this privateer, whom you retained in confinement on board your ship, and the bold and daring act of taking her boat from this harbor, are evident acts of hostility, by an enemy of the Spanish nation. It is the object of my commission, therefore, and the desire and instruction of the general, that these unpleasant and unexpected occurrences should be explained and adjusted, in a friendly manner, so as not to disturb or weaken the harmony that has happily prevailed between the United States and Spain.

I thought it proper to defer any official demands, and with this view, I yesterday repaired on board your ship, conceiving that a verbal conference would tend to settle these affairs speedily, and in a friendly manner. But, unfortunately, and much against my hopes and wishes, I perceived, with regret, that my reasons and arguments, used to convince you of the injustice of your conduct, were ineffectual. Being compelled to abandon the measures of respect and deference heretofore observed towards you by the government of Peru, I demand of you, definitively, an explanation of your conduct in the acts before mentioned, and reparation for the insult thereby offered to the Spanish nation, and more immediately to the government here representing it. Its chief authority, though characterized for moderation and goodness, cannot be indifferent to acts which wound too deeply the honor, respect, and just pride of Spaniards, whom you evidently wish to insult, by denying to them the consideration paid by you to the gangs of the dissidents, and by respecting their illegal and unrecognized flags, and declining to prosecute with becoming earnestness and integrity the claims of numerous citizens of the United States who have suffered injuries from them.

The just and regular conduct of the superior government of Peru are well known. This, and its dependence on a nation which has always furnished proof of its disposition to satisfy complaints, and repair injuries, should have dissuaded you from assuming to yourself the execution of justice, against the captain of the Quintanilla, for any infractions of treaties or conventions existing between the two nations. The consequence of your caprice and perseverance, in the pursuit of this vessel, has been, to drive her from the harbors and ports of this coast; the superior government of Peru has, therefore, been unable to give orders and instructions for her movements, and to observe her conduct. I shall hold you responsible, in the name of the Spanish government, which I represent, as is shown by a copy of my commission, which I yesterday submitted to you, for all the injuries that have been or may be done to this privateer, by the vessels of the United States, as also for those arising from measures of retaliation pursued by other citizens of those states, and in relation to which you have, arbitrarily and unjustly, erected yourself into a judge, where you are not competent, and by your illegal proceedings have prevented the legitimate Spanish government from acting in this matter, as was proper.

I expect that you will be pleased to reply to me, that I may communicate to his excellency, the Viceroy of Peru, to whom I have transmitted this note, by General Valdes.

God preserve you many years.

(Signed) RAFAEL PERO.

QUILCA, February 5, 1824.

Minutes of the proceedings of a general court-martial, at Brooklyn, in the State of New York.

TUESDAY, November 30, 1824.

The court met pursuant to the adjournment of yesterday, and adjourned until to-morrow morning at half-past nine o'clock, in consequence of the non-attendance of the principal witnesses on the part of the prosecution, in the case of Lieutenant Joshua R. Sands.

WEDNESDAY, December 1, 1824.

The general court-martial, convened on board the United States ship the Washington, at the Navy yard at Brooklyn, on Monday, the fifteenth day of November, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-four, by virtue of the precept of the honorable the Secretary of the Navy, bearing date of the 26th of October, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-four, the original of which is annexed to the record in the case of Lieutenant William A. Weaver, and a copy thereof hereunto annnexed and marked A, and adjourned by virtue of a warrant from the honorable the Secretary of the Navy, bearing date the 17th day of November, 1824, the original of which is also annexed to the record in the case of Lieut. William A. Weaver, and a copy thereof is hereunto annexed, marked B, and now in session at the Marine barracks at the Navy yard at Brooklyn, proceeded this first day of December, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-four, pursuant to the adjournment of yesterday, to the trial of Lieutenant Joshua R. Sands, upon certain charges and specifications exhibited against him.

Present: Captain William Bainbridge, president; Captains Jacob Jones, John D. Henley, Jesse D. Elliott, Master Commandant George C. Read, members; Masters Commandant Wolcott Chauncey, William B. Finch, supernumeraries.

Lieutenant Joshua R. Sands appeared in court to answer the charges preferred against him. The question was then proposed by the judge advocate to the accused, whether he had any objections to the members of the court, to which he replied that he had none.

The charges and specifications were then read to the accused by the judge advocate, annexed to the record, and marked C.

On the part of the prosecution, no witness appeared to establish the fact of the arrest stated in the specifications, whereupon the accused produced a letter from Lieutenant John Harris, of the marine corps, by whom he had been arrested, stating the particulars thereof, which, by consent, was read in evidence, annexed to the record, and marked No 1.

Lieutenant Sands then read to the court the annexed paper, marked No. 2.

Robert W. Jones, a midshipman in the navy of the United States, a witness produced, sworn and examined on the part of the prosecution, testified as follows:

Question. Were you a midshipman attached to the Franklin in January, 1824?

Answer. I was.

Ques. Do you recollect the expedition sent from the Franklin on the 4th of January last, under the command of Lieutenants Ridgeway and Ogden?

Ans. I do; the object was to intercept an armed vessel, supposed to be a pirate, which had boarded several American vesels in the neighborhood of Molliendo.

Ques. Do you recollect Mr. Sands being on board one of the boats?

Ans. I did not see him.

Cross-examined by the accused:

Ques. Have you understood, and do you believe Mr. Sands was in that expedition?

Ans. I was told he was in the boat.

Ques. When the boats landed, did Mr. Sands land and participate in the pleasures of the other officers on shore?

Ans. I did not see him during the whole expedition. The officers did land and amuse themselves on shore; I was in company with them, but did not see Mr. Sands.

Lieutenant William M. Hunter, a witness produced, sworn and examined, testified as follows:

Question. Were you the first lieutenant of the Franklin, during her late cruise to the Pacific?

Answer. I was.

Ques. What was the 7th article of the rules and regulations for the government of that vessel?

Ans. No person is to be confined or arrested but by order of the commanding officer.

Ques. (By the court.) What was the general character of Mr. Sands as an officer; was his conduct of so refractory a kind as to require uncommon rigor?

Ans. Not while I was on board. I had been on board with him during the whole cruise up to within two or three days before his arrest, in October, 1823.

The evidence being closed, the court adjourned till two o'clock P. M., to receive the defence of the accused.

The court opened pursuant to the adjournment. The accused appeared, and read his defence, which is annexed, and marked D.

The court was cleared, and the proceedings being read over by the judge advocate, and the court proceeded maturely to deliberate upon the charges, specifications, evidence, and defence, and having considered the same, is of opinion that the specification of the first charge is not proved, inasmuch as it is of opinion that the said Joshua R. Sands was not under a legal arrest at the time of his absenting himself from the Franklin, on the fourth of January, 1824, and therefore that the accused is NOT GUILTY of the first charge.

In regard to the specification of the second charge, the court is of opinion that the facts being admitted by the accused, the specification is proved. But it is also of opinion that Lieutenant Sands has already been punished by a most rigorous confinement beyond the degree of his offence. The court cannot, therefore, adjudge any punishment, and does ACQUIT the accused of the second charge.

WM. BAINBRIDGE.
J. JONES.
J. D. HENLEY.
J. D. ELLIOT.
GEO. C. READ.

RICHARD S. COXE, Judge Advocate.

The court then adjourned till half-past nine o'clock to-morrow morning.

A.

To William Bainbridge, Esq., captain in the navy of the United States:

Certain charges of misconduct having been alleged against William A. Weaver, a lieutenant in the navy of the United States, and others, a general court-martial, to consist of Captain William Bainbridge, president, Captains Jacob Jones, Lewis Warrington, William M. Crane, John D. Henley, Jesse D. Elliot, and Master Commandant George C. Read, members, and Masters Commandant Wolcott, Chauncey, and William B. Finch, supernumeraries, or any five or more of them, is hereby authorized and ordered to assemble on board the United States ship Washington 74, at the Navy yard at Brooklyn, in the State of New York, on Monday, the fifteenth day of November next, for the trial of the said persons for the offences of which they do severally stand charged, which charges, together with the testimony in support of them, will be laid before the court by the judge advocate.

And Richard S. Coxe, Esq., is hereby appointed judge advocate to the court hereby ordered to assemble; and if he should decline acting, the said court will appoint such other suitable gentleman, learned in the law, to discharge the duties of judge advocate to the said court, as they, or a majority of them, may, in their wisdom, deem fit and proper.

In faith whereof, I have hereunto signed my name, and affixed the seal of the Navy Department [SEAL.] of the United States, this twenty-ninth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-four, and of the independence of the United States the forty-ninth.

SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

B.

To the court-martial now assembled on board the United States ship Washington 74, at Brooklyn, New York, of which William Bainbridge, Esq., is president:

You are hereby authorized to adjourn the court to such place as you shall consider most proper, within the limits of the Navy yard at Brooklyn, and to hold your sessions upon such adjournment.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Navy Department, this seventeenth day of November, [SEAL.] in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-four.

(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

C.

Charges and specifications exhibited against Joshua R. Sands, a lieutenant in the navy of the United States, prepared by Captain Charles Stewart.

CHARGE FIRST—DISOBEDIENCE OF THE ORDERS OF HIS COMMANDING OFFICER.

Specification. In that the said Joshua R. Sands did, on or about the 4th day of January, 1824 (sea time), withdraw himself while under arrest, contrary to the 30th article of the rules and regulations for the better government of the navy of the United States, from the limits assigned him by his commander, which limits had been notified to the said Joshua R. Sands, on the 9th of October and 3d of November, 1823, through Lieutenant John Harris.

CHARGE SECOND—ABSENTING HIMSELF WITHOUT LEAVE.

Specification. In that the said Joshua R. Sands did absent himself from the United States ship Franklin, to which vessel he was attached, while at sea, without leave or permission, on or about the 4th and 5th days of January, 1824.

RICHARD S. COXE, Judge Advocate.

No. 1.

FRANKLIN 74, June 8, 1824.

SIR: In answer to your note of last evening: On the 8th of October, I was ordered by Commodore Stewart to suspend you, and order you to confine yourself to the limits of the ward room, with the privilege of going forward on the upper gun deck, for the purpose of satisfying nature's calls. On the 9th I was ordered by Lieutenant Hammersley to take you to your room, and on reporting it to Commodore Stewart, he approved of it, and said you would remain there until further orders, with the privilege of going forward on the main deck as before, of which I informed you at the time. On the 3d of November I received from Commodore Stewart a copy of charges and specifications, accompanied with a written order to arrest you, and assign to you the limits prescribed on the 9th of October.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

(Signed) JNO. HARRIS.

Lieutenant JOSHUA R. SANDS, U. S. Navy.

No. 2.

Mr. President and gentlemen of the court:

I do not wish to consume your time by counsel, nor will I deny anything which I have done.

That I did leave the Franklin, is true. To account for this dereliction from the orders I had received, I beg leave, most respectfully, to submit to the court the following reasons, not with a belief that I shall escape all censure or disapprobation, but that the court will take into consideration the motives and causes that could so far influence me to conduct myself in such way as to bring myself before its cognizance. The first circumstance to which I solicit the attention of the court is my confinement, which was imposed by an officer other than the commanding officer, which order I conceived to be a violation of the 30th article of the rules and regulations for the better government of the navy of the United States. The next point to which I would draw the attention of the court, is that the long and unprecedented confinement which I was compelled to endure, in a small room on board a ship, infected, a part of the time I was thus confined, with the small pox, was in defiance of the 7th article of internal rules and regulations of the ship to which I was attached, which rules and regulations were, at the time, and had been from the commencement of the cruise, hung up at the cabin door, for the instruction and guidance of all on board. Another circumstance, which, with deference to the court, I submit to its consideration, is that of my arrest, which, as I conceived at the time, took place when confined, and not when, subsequently, furnished with a copy of charges and specifications. I am not ignorant that, with respect to furnishing the accused with a copy of charges and specifications, and making a demand of his side-arms, without a reference to his former confinement, is according to custom. How far such custom is in conformity to law, gentlemen, you will decide. The foregoing circumstances attending the horrible confinement to which I was consigned by an unauthorized person, induced me to believe (in which belief I was confirmed by the opinions of others whom I consulted on the subject) that my confinement was an illegal one, consequently my leaving it was no violation of law. How far I was right I most respectfully submit to this court to say.

Therefore, to the first charge I plead not guilty.

The second charge I admit, and have little more to say than that on the occasion I was influenced by a feeling common to us all—as common to you, gentlemen, as I hope it will ever be inseparable from me.

I trust that I may be permitted to show to this court that a hope of achieving some act that might relieve my person from a cruel and unnecessary torture, was the sole cause of my leaving the Franklin for a few hours. With these remarks I am ready for trial.

D.

Mr. President and gentlemen of the court:

After a lapse of nearly thirteen months, during eight of which I have been compelled to endure confinement and sufferings unparalleled in the history of our navy, I stand before you to answer to charges unsupported by any other testimony than such as I myself have produced before this court. Before entering into an examination of the evidence, I beg leave to enter into a brief detail of circumstances attending my arrest and long confinement. When the Franklin, to which ship I have been attached for nearly the last four years, was at Valparaiso, in October, 1823, a dispute occurred between Lieutenant Hammersley (who, in the absence of Lieutenant Hunter, assumed the duties of first lieutenant) and myself, which led to a meeting on shore, where, having been for some time, circumstances made it necessary to meet at an adjourned time, during which interval I received an order to repair on board by ship. The engagement I was under to remain where I was, induced me, on the receipt of my orders, to write a note to my commander, requesting him to put a favorable construction on my conduct and non-appearance, which note was returned by the officer who waited on me, by the directions of my commander. The time appointed for the meeting between Lieutenant Hammersley and myself having elapsed without any answer to my note, or performance of the engagement on the part of Lieutenant Hammersley, I conceived the causes that led to a moment's hesitation to compliance with the directions of my commander to have ceased, and I repaired, as ordered, on board my ship. When there, I received orders to consider myself suspended, and to confine myself to the limits of the ward room, with the privilege of going forward as nature's calls made necessary. Of this I had no right to complain, but at the same time I felt aggrieved when I found myself alone subjected to a suspension from duty, while the man who had called me on shore to satisfy the calls of his aggrieved honor, and who there left me under an express agreement to meet him again the ensuing morning, (whereby I was drawn into a difficulty with my commander,) was suffered to go at large, which I believe would not have been the case had I or any of my friends been asked an explanation of the circumstances.

On the second day of my suspension by the commanding officer, Lieutenant Hammersley came down into the limits to which I had thus been confined. It has appeared on a former trial that Lieutenant Hammersley put himself into the narrow path where I was at the time, and had been some time previously walking, and that I could not, without running over him, have pursued it. Gentlemen, I will acknowledge that on a recollection who this man was that thus pertinaciously put himself in my path, I did so far forget the warning voice of prudence as to reproach him for his ungenerous conduct, whereupon he took on himself the liberty, without consulting his commanding officer, to order me to my room, enforcing his order by the assistance of the officer of marines. Gentlemen, the document from Lieutenant Harris, the officer of marines, which I have furnished, and which is the only testimony for or against me before this court, will show how far what I have now stated with respect to the close confinement can be substantiated.

Far be it from me to make any unmanly appeal to your feelings or sympathy, by painting to your imaginations the horrors of a close confinement in a ship unhealthy from a disease of a vile and virulent nature, or the pangs of suspected virtue, endured by a belief that my enemies had the will and the power to represent my conduct in the most unfavorable light, without an opportunity on my part to rebut the stories propagated to my disadvantage. Confined thus, like a malefactor, unheard, unpitied, such, gentlemen, was my case. Pent up in a small state room, damp and cheerless in the extreme, denied the privileges even of eating or associating, except in my apartment, with my brother officers; in such a situation I suffered for the space of eight months, my health suffering so much under these circumstances as to induce a number of my brother officers to make an affecting representation of my situation to my commander. Still was the unrelenting hand of severity upon me, and so continued until the surgeon made several official reports, which finally procured me a little alleviation. Sufferings like mine cannot but excite the sympathy of every generous heart, and I trust they will be taken into consideration, and go far towards mitigating any punishment I may have deserved in the first instance.

The motive that influenced me to take the step I did was one which, I confess, led me to hope would never be arraigned. Indeed, I had reason to hope further, under the circumstances of the case; and admitting that my confinement was a legal one, that whenever it should have been discovered by my commander that I had thus secretly stolen away from my hard confinement to give all my feeble aid in the detection and punishment of a pirate, the motive would have been generously received as an atonement for the offence specified in the second charge. I had even the vanity to expect praise instead of censure. It is a well known fact to the officers of the expedition, and corroborated by the evidence, that my object was not pleasure or mere evasion of the limits of my confinement. The expedition of boats was preparing; I could hear from my prison the different parties congratulating each other on the prospect of an engagement with the enemy in the course of an hour or two. The night was favorable to the complete success of the enterprise. The pirate was said to be in sight, and every consideration was unheeded except that which led me to hope I might achieve something that would draw on me the praise of my commander, or at least gloss over the indiscretion I was about to commit. Gentlemen, it was the only time I ever left the limits assigned me, and I trust that this fact will not be lost sight of in making up your decision. It must be conceded that the protection of the same laws under which I am now arraigned for a violation on my part, ought not to be withheld when it is proven that I have been proceeded against illegally, not to say with unnecessary severity and rigor. The facts which I wish you to bear in mind, are, that I was confined to a close room by a person other than the commanding officer, on the 9th of October; on the 3d of November I was furnished for the first time with a copy of my charges, and it is with deference to the court that I refer you to the 30th and 38th article of the rules and regulations of the navy, and to the 7th article of the internal rules and regulations of the ship on board of which I have suffered so much. I was unprepared with my defence, but I have endeavored in the course of the two hours which the court were kind enough to indulge me, to place the motives of my conduct in their true light, and to call your attention to the extraordinary treatment I have received while a prisoner. I cannot but indulge the hope, that even should you consider the former proceedings against me legal and in conformity to the laws of our courts, the motive that led me to pass the bounds assigned me was in some degree venial. I confess that in this view, I must throw myself entirely on your lenity, and with this acknowledgment, leave my case to your decision.

JOSHUA R. SANDS.

TUESDAY MORNING, December 7, 1824.

The court met pursuant to the adjournment of yesterday, for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of the case of Lieutenant William M. Hunter, but in consequence of Lieutenant Hunter not appearing, and there being no other business before them, they adjourned till to-morrow morning at half-past 9 o'clock.

WEDNESDAY, December 8, 1824.

The court met pursuant to the adjournment of yesterday; Lieutenant Hunter did not appear, and the judge advocate, by order of the court, made a communication to the honorable the Secretary of the Navy on the subject. The court then adjourned till to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

THURSDAY, December 9, 1824.

The court met pursuant to the adjournment of yesterday. The judge advocate submitted to the court the annexed communication from the honorable the Secretary of the Navy, bearing date the 6th day of December instant, and the record in the case of Lieutenant Joshua R. Sands.

The court resumed the consideration of the said case, and having maturely deliberated upon the same, is of opinion that the specification of the first charge is not proved within the true meaning and spirit thereof, and therefore does adjudge the said Joshua R. Sands is NOT GUILTY of the first charge.

In regard to the specification of the second charge, the court is of opinion that the facts being admitted by the accused, the specification is proved, and therefore it does adjudge that the said Lieutenant Joshua R. Sands is GUILTY of the second charge. But the court is also of opinion that the said Joshua R. Sands, in the manner in which he admitted himself to have acted, has evinced no spirit of insubordination, and no inclination to evade or neglect duty, and therefore cannot adjudge any punishment.

WM. BAINBRIDGE.
JAS. JONES.
J. D. HENLEY.
J. D. ELLIOTT.
GEO. C. READ.

RICHARD S. COXE, Judge Advocate.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, January 3, 1825.

The sentence of the court upon the second charge is approved. The finding of the court upon the first charge is not approved. Lieutenant Sands did not confine himself to the limits assigned by the orders of his commanding officer, but left them, not from necessity but choice. He was therefore guilty of disobeying those orders. But although the finding is not approved, yet yielding credit to the motives and feelings which he urged in his defence, he is hereby restored to duty, in conformity with the decision of the court.

(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

A communication was received from Chandler Price, Esq., of Philadelphia, addressed to Captain George W. Rodgers, commandant of the Navy yard at Brooklyn, stating that it was written at the request of Lieutenant Hunter, who was sick at his house, and who had been confined to his bed for several days; whereupon the judge advocate was directed to make a communication to the government and request instructions.

The court then adjourned till to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, December 6, 1824.

SIR: I return the proceedings in the case of Lieutenant Joshua R. Sands, with a view that the same may be reconsidered by the court before the decision of the Department, approving or disapproving the finding, be made.

The points to which the attention of the court is desired are, 1st, the finding under the first specification of the first charge. The court decides that Lieut. Sands was not under a legal arrest at the time of absenting himself. That time was in January, 1824. On the 3d November, preceding, Commodore Stewart, his commanding officer, by Lieut. Harris, gave him a written order of arrest, furnished the charges and specifications, and assigned his limits. These limits he left. It is not perceived in what the arrest was illegal, for it is manifest that none of the previous or subsequent acts could invalidate an arrest perfect in itself. The previous suspension and confinement to limits, the order of Lieut. Harris, and the subsequent confinement, cannot, in any degree, affect its legality, however they may present matters of mitigation towards him, or charges against others. It is not intended, now, nor is it believed to be proper, to express any opinion respecting them, because they are not the questions to be tried by the court. But if they were all admitted to be harsh, illegal, and unjustifiable, still the question whether the arrest was legal would not be affected by them. The second point to which I request the attention of the court is the finding under the second charge. The charge is, absenting himself without leave. The specification states the time and place. The accused admits its truth, pleads guilty both on the trial and in his written defence, and yet the court acquit him; in other words, say that he is not guilty. The fact and the admission of the accused are both denied by the finding. The reason assigned, viz., his subsequent confinement, has no connection with the truth of the fact. The court was not called on, nor had it the authority to try the nature or extent of Lieut. Sands' imprisonment. It might have been produced or continued by other and higher considerations, not shown to the court. They were called on to pass on the simple fact of his absence without leave; and although he admits that he was absent without leave, yet, because he has since been rigorously confined, the court declare, in effect, that he was not absent without leave.

It is suggested to the court to consider whether it be not proper to pass upon the charge according to the fact and the admission of the accused. The extent of the punishment is a subsequent consideration, which the court will measure according to the view which it takes of the whole case.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your most obedient servant,

(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Captain Wm. Bainbridge, President General Court-Martial, New York.

Further proceedings of the general court-martial convened at the Navy yard, at the city of Washington, on the seventh day of July, in the year eighteen hundred and twenty-five, and continued by adjournment, from day to day, and now in session at the building on Capitol hill.

Tuesday, August 16.

Having completed the proceedings in the case of Lieutenant Whitlock, Lieutenant William M. Hunter appeared in court to answer to the charge exhibited against him. Being asked whether he had any objection to make to any of the members of the court, he replied that he had none.

The judge advocate then read the charge and specification, which were annexed to the record and marked A. The accused being called upon to plead to the same, submitted and read to the court the paper which was annexed to the record, and marked B.

Whereupon the judge advocate stated that he had a deposition taken in this case, which, at the request of the prosecutor and with the consent of the accused, he would submit to the consideration of the court. He then read certain interrogatories addressed to Mrs. Delia T. Stewart, with her answers to the same, regularly sworn to in due course of law, which were annexed to the record and marked C.

The judge advocate then stated to the court that the fact charged being admitted by the accused, he should not offer any further testimony to substantiate the same; whereupon the court was cleared to deliberate upon the matters aforesaid, and having maturely considered the same, the court is of opinion that the specification is so far proved as that the accused was the first lieutenant of the said United States ship Franklin; that said Madrid, therein mentioned, was on board the same vessel at the time therein mentioned, with the knowledge of the accused, and carried in her from Callao to Quilca, and that the accused did not report the said circumstance to his commanding officer, Captain Charles Stewart; but it is not proved that the said individual was received or permitted to be received on board by the accused, or with his knowledge or consent; that these facts are proved by the distinct admission of the accused, entered on the record.

The court is also of opinion that the accused is not guilty of the charge, and therefore acquits him of the same.

(Signed) JAMES BARRON, President.
JAMES BIDDLE.
ROBT. TRAILL SPENCE.
JNO. DOWNES.
J. D. HENLEY.
J. D. ELLIOTT.
JAMES RENSHAW.
THOS. BROWN.
CHS. C. B. THOMPSON.
ALEX. S. WADSWORTH.
GEO. W. RODGERS.

Richard S. Coxe, Judge Advocate.

Approved August 17, 1825.

SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

A.

Charge and specification exhibited against William M. Hunter, a lieutenant in the navy of the United States, by Captain Charles Stewart.

CHARGE—NEGLECT OF DUTY.

Specification. In that the said William M. Hunter, some time in the year 1822, then being the first lieutenant of the United States ship Franklin, seventy-four, under the command of Commodore Charles Stewart, in the Pacific ocean, did receive, or permit to be received, on board said ship, while in the port of Callao, a foreigner, called by the name of Madrid, or by some other name, without informing his said commanding officer, as he was in duty bound to do, at that time, or at any time afterwards, that such person was on board, which said person was transported in said ship Franklin from the above-mentioned port of Callao to the port of Quilca.

B.

In the case of Lieutenant William M. Hunter, before the general court-martial now in session at the city of Washington.

Interrogatories to be proposed on the part of the prosecution to Mrs. Delia T. Stewart:

First. Were you on board the United States ship Franklin, commanded by Captain Charles Stewart, during her late cruise in the Pacific?

Second. Do you know whether, while the said ship was lying at Callao, a certain Spaniard, called Madrid, came on board of the said vessel? If yea, state by whose request, under what circumstances, in what manner, and for what purpose the said Madrid came on board the Franklin?

Third. By whose assistance and agency was the said Madrid brought on board the Franklin; how long did he continue on board; in what part of the said vessel did he live; what was his occupation; when and how did he leave the vessel; and with whose assistance, knowledge and agency?

Fourth. During the period that the said Madrid remained on board the Franklin, was the fact of his being so on board ever communicated or reported to the said Captain Charles Stewart by any one; was the said circumstance known to him, as you know or believe? Did you communicate the circumstance yourself? If not, why did you not?

Fifth. Who was the said Madrid? Was he at the time in the military or other service of either of the contending parties in South America? Did he come on board the Franklin from the shore, or from a vessel, and what vessel, then lying at Callao?

(Signed) RICHARD S. COXE, Judge Advocate.

Replies to the annexed interrogatories:

First. I was.

Second. I do. Madrid came on board the United States ship Franklin at Callao, as she was getting under way for sea, bringing me a letter of recommendation from the Countess of Valle Ermosa, whom I had seen very frequently, and who had been a passenger with the said Madrid from Rio Janeiro to Quilca and Callao. He also brought me a verbal recommendation from Dona Rosita Panizo, who resided at Lima, and in whose house the countess was staying. He informed me that the Diana, a Genoese vessel, in which he was a passenger from Rio Janeiro, had been taken by a patriot cruiser as she was entering a port of the Intermedois, and that since her arrival at Callao they had been in daily expectation of her getting cleared, which had prevented his taking out a passport. In consequence of this neglect he had become obnoxious to the authorities; that he expected hourly to be imprisoned, and probably shot. He implored me to save his life by allowing him to remain on board. He was an entire stranger to me. I told him that I had no authority to allow him to remain; but finally I yielded to the recommendation of the two friends whom I have mentioned, to the testimony which Madrid bore to his own innocence, and to his impressive appeals to my humanity. His story appeared to be true and lamentable, and I could not summon sufficient resolution to request him to depart.

Third. I know not by whose assistance or agency the said Madrid was brought on board the Franklin. He remained there during the passage from Callao to Quilca. He lived in the pantry with the cabin steward, Peter Burch. I ordered the said steward to take care of the poor man and give him sufficient to eat. I know not what his occupation was while he remained on board the United States ship Franklin, as I only conversed with him for about ten minutes when I first saw him, and never afterwards, during the period that he remained on board, renewed any conversation with him. I know not how he left the ship, or by whose knowledge, assistance or agency.

Fourth. Whilst the said Madrid remained on board the United States ship Franklin, the circumstance of his being there was never made known to Captain Charles Stewart. About a year after the said Madrid left the ship, the said Captain Charles Stewart first became acquainted with the fact, to the best of my knowledge and belief. I myself did not inform him of it, supposing that if he were entirely ignorant of the said Madrid's being on board, no censure could possibly be attached to him; but that if he knew it, he would find himself under the painful necessity of surrendering an unfortunate human being to his merciless pursuers. I wished to take the whole responsibility on myself; at the same time, I was under the impression that the act could never be seriously misconstrued, and that it never in any way could affect myself or the character of the ship.

Fifth. I knew nothing of the said Madrid at the time he presented himself to me but from his own testimony and the recommendations of the two ladies who interested me in his behalf. He wore no uniform, and did not inform me that he was, or had been, in the military service of either of the contending parties in South America, or that he was, or ever had been, employed in any way in the service of either of them. Neither did the countess of Valle Ermosa mention his profession or pursuits in her letter to me. I was told, a year after the said Madrid left the United States ship Franklin, when the circumstance became a subject of inquiry, that, at the time he first came on board, he was lieutenant in the royalist army, on furlough. But this fact I only know from report, and cannot positively affirm. He came on board the United States ship Franklin from the Diana, a Genoese merchant vessel lying at Callao, as he himself informed me.

(Signed) DELIA TUDOR STEWART.

MASSACHUSETTS, Essex, ss., August 9, 1825.

Then the above-named Delia Tudor Stewart made solemn oath to the truth of the foregoing statement of facts, before me.

(Signed) ELIJAH DOWNING, Justice of the Peace.

C.

To the president and members of the court:

GENTLEMEN: Conceiving it necessary that some cause should be assigned for not reporting to Commodore Stewart the man named in the specification, and to which part I plead guilty, though not guilty of the charge, I submit the following explanation to the court.

In justification of my conduct, I beg leave to state that on the last of September, 1822, the United States ship Franklin, under the command of Commodore Charles Stewart, sailed from the harbor of Callao. On the same evening, at sea, a stranger was reported as being in the pantry attached to the cabin. On inquiry, the cabin steward informed me Mrs. Stewart had directed him to take care of this man; and believing the order would not have been given without the commodore's knowledge, I did not report it to him, not conceiving it to be my duty to do so. Other reasons, also, induced me to adopt this course. The door of the pantry, in which this man was placed, was frequently open and subject to the inspection of all who passed it. Under these circumstances, it cannot appear extraordinary that I should feel satisfied in my own mind that the commodore was acquainted with the fact of the man being in the pantry. It was known to almost every person on board. This man was also frequently employed by the cabin steward in cleaning knives and forks, and, except his remaining pretty constantly in the pantry, it did not appear to be wished to have him concealed. He remained in the same apartment during our passage to Quilca, about three weeks. In what manner he came on board or left the ship was never reported to me, and under the belief I then was, never inquired.

In October, 1823, the ship lying in the harbor of Valparaiso, Commodore Stewart sent for me (I was sick on shore) and informed me then, and for the first time, he had been informed of this man being on board. I informed him that my reason for not reporting it was his being in one of the apartments of the cabin, and my belief that he was acquainted with the fact. This was the only conversation we had on the subject. In justice to Commodore Stewart, I must state the great distress he was in at that time induced me to believe he had not known it before.

There was nothing in his manner then, or during the remainder of the cruise, towards me, that led me to believe he attached blame to me. I remained by the ship until she was delivered to the Navy yard at Brooklyn, N. Y., and the charge preferred by Commodore Stewart, in November, 1824, was the first intimation I had on the subject.

All of which is most respectfully submitted.

(Signed) WILLIAM M. HUNTER.

WASHINGTON, August 16, 1825.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 284. [1ST SESSION.

STATEMENTS IN RELATION TO THE NAVY PENSION FUND IN 1825.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 27, 1826.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, January 26, 1826.

SIR: In obedience to the act of Congress for the better government of the navy of the United States, I have the honor, on behalf of the commissioners of the navy pension fund, to transmit herewith the annual statement in relation to that fund, as follows:

A. Statement of United States stock belonging to the navy pension fund.
B. Statement of bank stock belonging to the navy pension fund, and abstract of warrants drawn by the Secretary of the Navy upon the treasurer of the navy pension fund.
C. Account of Thomas T. Tucker, Treasurer, with the commissioners of the navy pension fund.
D. List of navy pensioners, and the pensions allowed to each.

All which is respectfully submitted.

SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

The honorable the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

A.

Statement of stocks on the books of the Treasury, to the credit of the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of War, for the time being, commissioners of the navy pension fund, with the interest which accrued during the year 1825.

Stocks.	Principal.	Commencement of interest.	Interest for the year 1825.	Unredeemed principal, 31st December, 1825.
Three per cent	$30,895 93	January 1, 1825	$926 88	$30,895 93
Six per cent. of 1812	79,000 00	January 1, 1825	3,555 00
Six per cent. of 1813 (sixteen million loan)	18,400 00	January 1, 1825	1,104 00	18,400 00
Six per cent. of 1813 (seven million and a half loan)	134,235 02	January 1, 1825	8,054 08	134,235 02
Six per cent. of 1814 (ten million loan)	279,634 72	January 1, 1825	16,778 08	279,634 72
Six per cent. of 1814 (six million loan)	201,236 09	January 1, 1825	12,074 16	213,586 09
Six per cent. of 1814 (six million loan)	12,350 00	July 1, 1825	370 50
Six per cent. of 1815	43,814 41	January 1, 1825	2,628 88	43,814 41
Treasury note, six per cent	2,815 00	January 1, 1825	42 23
Four and a half per cent. of 1824	150,000 00	October 1, 1825	1,687 50	150,000 00
Total	$952,381 17		$47,211 31	$870,566 17

Unredeemed amount of principal on 31st December, 1824		$789,836 39
Deduct stock paid off, viz:
On the 1st January, 1825, exchanged six per cent. of 1812	$4,504 86
On the 1st April, 1825, Treasury note six per cent	2,815 36
On the 1st October, 1825, six per cent. of 1812	79,000 00
		86,320 22
		$703,516 17
Add stock purchased, viz:
Six per cent. of 1814, loan of $6,000,000	$17,050 00
Four and a half per cent. of 1824	150,000 00
		167,050 00
Unredeemed amount of principal, 31st December, 1825, as above		$870,566 17

JOSEPH NOURSE, Register.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Register's Office, January 25, 1826.

B.

Statement of bank stocks belonging to the navy pension fund.

	Nominal value.	Amount of costs.
890 complete shares Columbia Bank stock	$89,000 00	$95,902 60
90 short shares Columbia Bank stock	3,600 00	3,600 00
700 shares Washington Bank stock	14,000 00	14,260 00
600 shares Union Bank stock	15,000 00	15,340 50
	$121,600 00	$129,103 10

T. WATKINS.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Fourth Auditor's Office, January 26, 1826.

Abstract of warrants drawn by the Secretary of the Navy on the Treasurer of the United States, on account of "navy pension fund," from the 1st of January to the 31st of December, 1825, inclusive.

Date.	No.	In whose favor drawn.	Amount.
January 6.	248	Eliza L. Pearce, Erie, Pennsylvania, for her pension from 1st of July, 1824, to 1st of January, 1825	$120 00
January 11.	249	The president of the Branch Bank United States, at Cumberland, Maine, to pay pensions	40 00
January 12.	250	Joseph Watson, attorney of Jas. Tull, for his pension from 29th July, 1816, to 1st July, 1824	475 33
February 14.	251	The president of the Branch Bank United States, at Chillicothe, Ohio, to pay pensions	60 00
February 21.	252	The president of the Branch Bank United States, at New Orleans, to pay pensions	250 00
April 13.	253	Peter McMahon, O. S. Boston, for his pension, from 1st January, 1811, to 1st January, 1825	756 00
April 25.	254	Martha Rose, widow, Bedford, Pennsylvania, for her pension from 10th September, 1813, to 10th September, 1824	792 00
May 4.	255	James Jeffers, for his pension from 1st July, 1821, to 1st January, 1825	168 00
June 15.	256	George MacDaniel, special agent District of Columbia, to pay pensions	1,825 00
	257	The president of the Branch Bank United States, at Charleston, South Carolina, to pay pensions	500 00
	258	The president of the Branch Bank United States, at Boston, Massachusetts, to pay pensions	4,000 00
	259	The president of the Branch Bank United States, at New York, to pay pensions	5,000 00
	260	The president of the Branch Bank United States, at Savannah, Georgia, to pay pensions	100 00
	261	The president of the Branch Bank United States, at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, to pay pensions	400 00
	262	The president of the Branch Bank United States, at Baltimore, Maryland, to pay pensions	2,500 00
	263	The president of the Branch Bank United States, at Providence, Rhode Island, to pay pensions	350 00
June 15.	264	The president of the Branch Bank United States, at Philadelphia, to pay pensions	3,000 00
June 16.	265	Thos. T. Tucker, agent navy pension fund, for the purchase of United States stocks	13,000 00
July 11.	266	The president of the Branch Bank United States, at Norfolk, Virginia, to pay pensions	1,000 00
	267	Eliza L. Pearce, Erie, Pennsylvania, for her pension from 1st January to 6th July, 1825	120 00
August 6.	268	The president of the Branch Bank United States, at Chillicothe, Ohio, to pay pensions	60 00
December 13.	269	Charles Hay, secretary to the fund, for the purchase of United States stock	63,679 78
December 16.	270	Thos. T. Tucker, agent navy pension fund, for the purchase of United States stock	11,500 00
December 17.	271	The president of the Branch Bank United States, at Boston, to pay pensions	4,500 00
	272	The president of the Branch Bank United States, at New York, to pay pensions	4,500 00
	273	The president of the Branch Bank United States, at Philadelphia, to pay pensions	2,500 00
	274	The president of the Branch Bank United States, at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, to pay pensions	500 00
	275	The president of the Branch Bank United States, at Providence, Rhode Island, to pay pensions	250 00
	276	The president of the Branch Bank United States, at Hartford, Connecticut, to pay pensions	650 00
	277	The president of the Branch Bank United States, at Baltimore, Maryland, to pay pensions	2,500 00
	278	The president of the Branch Bank United States, at Charleston, South Carolina, to pay pensions	250 00
	279	The president of the Branch Bank United States, at Norfolk, Virginia, to pay pensions	800 00
	280	The president of the Branch Bank United States, at Savannah, Georgia, to pay pensions	120 00
	281	George MacDaniel, agent District of Columbia, to pay pensions	1,725 00
			$127,991 11

T. WATKINS.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Fourth Auditor's Office, January 26, 1826.

C.

The commissioners of the navy pension fund, in account with Thomas T. Tucker, treasurer thereof.

DR.

1825.	To warrants paid, viz:
No. 248.	E. L. Pearce, pensioner	$120 00
No. 249.	President of the Cumberland Bank	40 00
No. 250.	Joseph Watson, attorney, &c.	475 33
No. 251.	President of the United States Branch Bank, Chillicothe	60 00
No. 252.	President of the United States Branch Bank, New Orleans	250 00
No. 253.	Peter McMahon, pensioner	756 00
No. 254.	Martha Rose, pensioner	792 00
No. 255.	James Jeffers, pensioner	168 00
No. 256.	George MacDaniel, agent	1,825 00
No. 257.	President of the United States Branch Bank, Charleston	500 00
No. 258.	President of the United States Branch Bank, Boston	4,000 00
No. 259.	President of the United States Branch Bank, New York	5,000 00
No. 260.	President of the United States Branch Bank, Savannah	100 00
No. 261.	President of the United States Branch Bank, Portsmouth	400 00
No. 262.	President of the United States Branch Bank, Baltimore	2,500 00
No. 263.	President of the United States Branch Bank, Providence	350 00
No. 264.	President of the Bank of the United States, Philadelphia	3,000 00
No. 265.	T. T. Tucker, treasurer navy pension fund	13,000 00
No. 266.	President of the United States Branch Bank, Norfolk	1,000 00
No. 267.	E. L. Pearce, pensioner	120 00
No. 268.	President of the United States Branch Bank, Chillicothe	60 00
No. 269.	Charles Hay, secretary to the commissioners, &c.	63,679 78
No. 270.	T. T. Tucker, treasurer of the navy pension fund	11,500 00
No. 271.	President of the United States Branch Bank, Boston	4,500 00
No. 272.	President of the United States Branch Bank, New York	4,500 00
No. 273.	President of the Bank of the United States, Philadelphia	2,500 00
No. 274.	President of the United States Branch Bank, Portsmouth	500 00
No. 275.	President of the United States Branch Bank, Providence	250 00
No. 276.	President of the United States Branch Bank, Hartford	650 00
No. 277.	President of the United States Branch Bank, Baltimore	2,500 00
No. 278.	President of the United States Branch Bank, Charleston	250 00
No. 279.	President of the United States Branch Bank, Norfolk	800 00
No. 280.	President of the United States Branch Bank, Savannah	120 00
	Total	$126,266 11

CR.

1825.
January 1.	By balance this day	$74,957 08
January 8.	By Charles Hay	1,790 00
March 4.	By Treasury warrant, No. 345	11,618 75
June 25.	By Treasury warrant, No. 229	11,576 52
September 23.	By Treasury warrant, No. 6,712	11,761 77
December 31.	By Treasury warrant, No. 7,033	12,264 27
	Balance	2,297 72
	Total	$126,266 11

THOMAS T. TUCKER, Treasurer United States.

TREASURY OF THE UNITED STATES, January 1, 1826.

D.

List of navy pensioners, 1st of January, 1826.

Names.	Rank.	Monthly pensions.	Annual pensions.
MASSACHUSETTS.
George Arbuckle	Seaman	$3 33⅓	$40 00
Zepha Allen	Marine	4 00	48 00
Isaac Alleston	Seaman	3 00	36 00
John Allison	do	6 00	72 00
Cotton Brown	Cook	9 00	108 00
Joseph Barrett	Quartergunner	9 00	108 00
John Barrett	do	9 00	108 00
John Bennett	Seaman	6 00	72 00

List of navy pensioners—Continued.

Names.	Rank.	Monthly pensions.	Annual pensions.
Lemuel Bryant	Ordinary seaman	$8 00	$96 00
John Ball	Boatswain	9 00	108 00
Nathaniel Barker	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Jacob Bull	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
James Blake	do	5 00	60 00
John Clements	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Russel Coats	Quartermaster	5 00	60 00
Samuel Cotton	Marine	3 00	36 00
James Clarke	Gunner	10 00	120 00
John Chaldwell	Seaman	6 00	72 00
John Chamberlain	Boatswain	8 00	96 00
Robert Cathcart	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Geo. Cearson, alias Cassin	Quartermaster	5 00	60 00
Dennis Cary	Ordinary seaman	7 00	84 00
Arthur Carroll	do	2 50	30 00
Richard Dunn	Seaman	6 00	72 00
John Davidson	Lieutenant	20 00	240 00
Wheatly Dyer	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
Asa Ewell	do	5 00	60 00
Ebenezer Evans	Seaman	6 00	72 00
William Edes	do	6 00	72 00
Thomas Edwards	Quartermaster	6 00	72 00
Jonathan Fellows	Boatswain's yeo.	9 00	108 00
Samuel H. Green	Quartermaster	9 00	108 00
John Geyer	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Uriah Hanscom	Ordinary seaman	6 00	72 00
James Hatchin	Quartergunner	9 00	108 00
Peter Hosier	Seaman	6 00	72 00
William Ingersoll	Boatswain	12 00	44 00
Thomas Konse	Quartergunner	9 00	108 00
Henry McDonough	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Andrew McCollum	Marine	8 00	96 00
Thomas Melburn	Seaman	6 00	72 00
John Mitchell	do	10 00	120 00
James Merrill	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
Enoch M. Meley	Quartergunner	8 00	96 00
Peter McMahon	Ordinary seaman	4 50	54 00
John Nogle, alias Vogle	do	4 00	48 00
William Nicholls	do	5 00	60 00
Isaac Omans	Seaman	6 00	72 00
John Peterson	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
Robert Poulton	do	5 00	60 00
Nathaniel Rolfe	Seaman	6 00	72 00
John Shapely	Cook	9 00	108 00
Patrick Scanton	Ordinary seaman	6 00	72 00
William Stewart	Seaman	4 00	48 00
Samuel Sawyer	do	6 00	72 00
Benjamin Stevens	Master's mate	10 00	120 00
Robert Sanders, alias Willet	Seaman	6 00	72 00
John Shaw	do	6 00	72 00
John Smith	Quartermaster	6 00	72 00
Silas Taft	P. marine	3 00	36 00
William Thompson	Boatswain's mate	9 50	114 00
James Trumbull	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
Seth Townshend	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Samuel Tucker	Captain, revolutionary war	20 00	240 00
Owen Taylor	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Charles F. Waldo	Master's mate	10 00	120 00
Peter Woodbury	Quartermaster	9 00	108 00
William Wood	Seaman	6 00	72 00
William Welsh	do	5 00	60 00
Michael Welsh	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
David Quills	Quartermaster	5 00	60 00
			$5,782 00
NEW HAMPSHIRE.
Samuel Abbott	Seaman	5 00	$60 00
Edward Banks	do	6 00	72 00
Robert Forsyth	Marine	3 00	36 00
John Grant	Seaman	6 00	72 00
John Hodgekins	Carpenter's mate	7 00	84 00

List of navy pensioners—Continued.

Names.	Rank.	Monthly pensions.	Annual pensions.
John Lloyd	Marine	$3 00	$36 00
John Mushaway	Boatswain	10 00	120 00
John Veazy	Quartergunner	9 00	108 00
			$588 00
RHODE ISLAND.
Isaac Bassett	Ordinary seaman	5 00	$60 00
John Hoxse	Seaman	8 50	102 00
Andrew Mattison	do	5 00	60 00
William Payne	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
Isaac Stearns	P. marine	3 00	36 00
Reuben Wright	Carpenter's mate	8 00	96 00
			$414 00
CONNECTICUT.
Schuyler Bradley	Seaman	6 00	$72 00
Nathaniel Chapman	Quartergunner	8 00	96 00
Edward Field	Surgeon's mate	10 00	120 00
William Lewis	P. marine	3 00	36 00
Richard Lee	Quartermaster	6 00	72 00
John Williams	Seaman	6 00	72 00
			$468 00
NEW YORK.
George Albro	Quartergunner	6 00	$72 00
Bernard Allen	Seaman	5 00	60 00
Jacob Albrecht	do	6 00	72 00
John Bernard	Marine	3 00	36 00
John Baptiste	Boy	3 00	36 00
Dominick Burnes	P. marine	3 00	36 00
Peter Bernard	Ordinary seaman	4 00	48 00
John Bremen	Seaman	6 00	72 00
William Burney	do	6 00	72 00
Edmund Brett	P. marine	3 00	36 00
John Butler	Seaman	6 00	72 00
John Brannon	do	5 00	60 00
Samuel Butler	Quartergunner	8 00	96 00
John Blair	Seaman	5 00	60 00
Adam Brown	do	6 00	72 00
Jacob Booker	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
James Brown	Boatswain's mate	10 00	120 00
George Burton	Quartergunner	4 50	54 00
John Carberry	Cooper	4 50	54 00
Charles Clay	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Christian Clarke	do	6 00	72 00
Samuel Colsten	do	3 00	36 00
William Cain	do	6 00	72 00
John Collins	do	6 00	72 00
Zachariah Conklin	Ordinary seaman	6 00	72 00
Benjamin Campbell	Sergeant marines	5 00	60 00
John Campbell	Boatswain	8 00	96 00
Thomas Crawford	Seaman	5 00	60 00
Shubael Cunningham	do	4 00	48 00
Francis Covenhoven	Ordinary seaman	7 50	90 00
Joseph Cotter	Boatswain's mate	9 00	108 00
David Christie	P. marine	4 00	48 00
Jacob Dorne	Seaman	8 50	102 00
William B. Downes	do	5 00	60 00
John Dennis	do	5 00	60 00
Thomas Dailey	Quartermaster	8 00	96 00
James Davis	Quartergunner	9 00	108 00
William Davis	Seaman	6 00	72 00
John Dunn	P. marine	3 00	36 00
Samuel Deane	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Thomas Dennis	do	6 00	72 00
John Daniels	Quartermaster	9 00	108 00
Thomas Edwards	do	6 00	72 00
William Fitzsimonds	Ordinary seaman	7 00	84 00
John Francisco	P. marine	3 00	36 00

List of navy pensioners—Continued.

Names.	Rank.	Monthly pension.	Annual pension.
Bennett Fields	Armorer	$9 00	$108 00
John Ford	Seaman	5 00	60 00
Peter Gillen	do	5 00	60 00
Leonard Green	Quartergunner	9 00	108 00
Peter Green	Seaman	5 00	60 00
Thomas Gore	Ordinary seaman	2 50	30 00
Roswell Hale	do	5 00	60 00
William Hinds	Boy	6 00	72 00
Seth Hebbard	P. marine	3 00	36 00
William Hardingbrook	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Stephen Hammond	do	6 00	72 00
Daniel Hogenon	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
George Hutton	Quartergunner	8 00	96 00
John Hyatt	Seaman	6 00	72 00
John Hadden	do	6 00	72 00
John Haywood	Master's mate	10 00	120 00
James Jackson	Seaman	5 00	60 00
John Johnson	do	6 00	72 00
Thomas Jackson, 2d	Quartermaster	9 00	108 00
Thomas Kelly	Seaman	4 00	48 00
James A. Lewis	Quartermaster	9 00	108 00
John Lazarro	Seaman	5 00	60 00
James Linscott	do	3 00	36 00
Timothy Lane	Cook	8 00	96 00
James McMane	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
John McCracken	Boatswain's mate	12 00	144 00
Roger McGee	Marine	3 00	36 00
John Mahen	Seaman	6 00	72 00
John McCarty	Purser's steward	5 00	60 00
John Melvill	Seaman	5 00	60 00
William Moran	do	6 00	72 00
James McKernan	do	6 00	72 00
Emero Males	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
Samuel McIsaacs	Boy	5 00	60 00
James Moses	Purser's steward	9 00	108 00
Thomas Miller	Seaman	5 00	60 00
Enos Marks	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
Jeremiah McMahan	do	5 00	60 00
Colin McLeod	Boatswain	10 00	120 00
Mathew McKenzie	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Patrick McLaughlin	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
Charles Moore	Seaman	6 00	72 00
William Nesbet	do	4 00	48 00
James Nickerson	do	6 00	72 00
Thomas Oliver	do	6 00	72 00
John Otternell	Carpenter's mate	5 00	60 00
William Parker	Seaman	6 00	72 00
George Pierce	do	4 00	48 00
John Place	Armorer	8 00	96 00
John Peterson	Seaman	6 00	72 00
James Peyton	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
Benjamin H. Parker	Seaman	4 50	54 00
John Robinson	do	6 00	72 00
William Rodgers	Quartergunner	8 00	96 00
John Reagan	P. marine	5 00	60 00
Thomas Reed	Seaman	5 00	60 00
Edmond Rowland	Ordinary seaman	4 00	48 00
Rosnante Rhodes	Seaman	6 00	72 00
James Rogers	Sailingmaster	15 00	180 00
John Ratler	Quartermaster	6 00	72 00
John Smith	Seaman	6 00	72 00
John Scriver	do	5 00	60 00
George Stanley	Purser's steward	6 00	72 00
John Schrouder	Seaman	6 00	72 00
John Sniffen	Carpenter's mate	6 00	72 00
William Spratt	Ordinary seaman	4 00	48 00
Daniel Smith	Seaman	5 00	60 00
John Stone	do	6 00	72 00
Purnell Smith	do	4 00	48 00
Augustus Swartwout	Midshipman	12 00	144 00
Peter Tinkum	Seaman	4 00	48 00

List of navy pensioners—Continued.

Names.	Rank.	Monthly pension.	Yearly pension.
Henry Townsend	Ordinary seaman	$5 00	$60 00
George Thomas (black)	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Isaac Vallence	Quartermaster	8 00	96 00
Charles Vandyke	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
James Williams	do	5 00	60 00
William Wells	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Charles Williams	Ordinary seaman	4 00	48 00
Solomon White	Seaman	4 00	48 00
Charles Williams	do	4 00	48 00
John Wright	Quartergunner	6 00	72 00
James Warner	Seaman	8 00	96 00
Thomas Welch	Quartergunner	12 00	144 00
John Webb	Seaman	4 00	48 00
John Wright	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
			$9,192 00
NEW JERSEY.
Peter Dunlevy	Marine	5 00	$60 00
James Hazle	Seaman	5 00	60 00
Wm. Robinson	Marine	6 00	72 00
			$192 00
PENNSYLVANIA.
Alexander Adams	Ordinary seaman	3 00	$36 00
George Alexander	Quartergunner	8 00	96 00
William C. Allen	Quartermaster	12 00	144 00
Nathaniel Begley	Quartergunner	9 00	108 00
Enos Bateman	Seaman	5 00	60 00
Thomas Brown	P. marine	2 00	24 00
William Baggs	Marine	3 00	36 00
John Baxter	Seaman	6 00	72 00
James Bell	do	6 00	72 00
John Cassin	Marine	3 00	36 00
John Coffin	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Henry Collins	do	6 00	72 00
Arch. Campbell	do	5 00	60 00
David Christie	Marine	4 00	48 00
Patrick Cain	P. marine	6 00	72 00
Robert Carson	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
Augustus Dundas	Gunner	10 00	120 00
William Deane	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Thomas Davis	do	5 00	60 00
William Dearing	do	6 00	72 00
Henry Dugan	Marine	3 00	36 00
Stephen Elderkin	Seaman	6 00	72 00
William Evans	Quartermaster	6 00	72 00
Edmund Fitzgibbon	Ordinary seaman	4 00	48 00
Pero Fisher	do	5 00	60 00
John Fryer	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Nicholas Hyberger	do	6 00	72 00
David Horton	Quartermaster	6 00	72 00
George Huffstidler	Seaman	6 00	72 00
William Holins	Marine	3 00	36 00
John Hogerbets	Prisoner, Dartmouth	6 00	72 00
William Hagerty	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
William Jackson	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Edward Johnson	do	6 00	72 00
Job Jones	nary seaman	5 00	60 00
Hugh Kelly	P. marine	6 00	72 00
George Hensinger	Master-at-arms	9 00	108 00
Lawrence Kripfar	P. marine	3 00	36 00
Nicholas Klein	Sailingmaster C	5 00	60 00
John More	Seaman	6 00	72 00
William Mooney	P. marine	3 00	36 00
Miles Morris	Corporal marines	5 00	60 00
George McDaniel	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
Michael McConnomy	do	6 00	72 00
Mathias McGill	Seaman	8 00	96 00
John McMullen	Gunner's mate	9 00	108 00

List of navy pensioners—Continued.

Names.	Rank.	Monthly pension.	Yearly pension.
Bernard McDonough	P. marine	$6 00	$72 00
Daniel Muncey	Seaman	8 00	96 00
William Morris	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
James Mulliniffe	do	10 00	120 00
John Nugent	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Benjamin Norcrose	Sergeant marines	5 00	60 00
Benjamin Newton	Seaman	6 00	72 00
William Price	do	6 00	72 00
John Pasco	do	6 00	72 00
John Pitt	do	6 00	72 00
Peter Quantin	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
John Roberts	Gunner's yeoman	9 00	108 00
Eli Stewart	Sailingmaster's mate	7 00	84 00
Joseph Smith	Marine	4 00	48 00
William Smith, 6th	Seaman	8 00	96 00
David Thomas	P. marne	3 00	36 00
John Thompson	Quartergunner	9 00	108 00
Phillip Tully	Seaman	6 00	72 00
John B. Truman	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
Robert Webb	do	5 00	60 00
James White	Gunner's mate	9 00	108 00
Peter Whelan	Marine	3 00	36 00
John Walter	Seaman	4 00	48 00
John Williams, 6th	Ordinary seaman	8 00	96 00
James Wilson	Quartergunner	10 00	120 00
John Wilson	Seaman	6 00	72 00
John Young	Quartermaster	9 00	108 00
			$5,208 00
DELAWARE.
Richard Gilbody	Ordinary seaman	4 00	$48 00
James Tull	Sergeant marines	5 00	60 00
William Wicks	Ordinary seaman	4 00	48 00
			$156 00
MARYLAND.
Alexander Ardery	Seaman	6 00	$72 00
James Allcom	Sailingmaster	30 00	360 00
James Brown	Seaman (blind)	8 00	96 00
Andrew Beard	Seaman	6 00	72 00
John Burdeen	do	6 00	72 00
Edward Burke (black)	do	4 00	48 00
Thomas Burr	Ordinary seaman	6 00	72 00
William Carter	Master's mate	8 00	96 00
John Cole	Quartermaster	9 00	108 00
John Diragan	Seaman	5 00	60 00
Matthias Douglass	Ordinary seaman	10 00	120 00
John Denney	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Francis Elliott	do	6 00	72 00
Daniel Fullen	Ordinary seaman	7 00	84 00
Cornelius Garrison	Seaman	6 00	72 00
William Gillen	do	6 00	72 00
Peter Goshelle	do	10 00	120 00
John Gregory	Boy	4 00	48 00
George Gallager	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
John Henry	do	5 00	60 00
Isaac T. Heartle	Acting sailingmaster	20 00	240 00
Nicholas Igerbrelson	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Edward Murray	Sergeant marines	4 50	54 00
Francis Mason	Quartermaster	9 00	108 00
Antonio Maria	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Hamlet Moore	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
Joseph McMasters	P. marine	3 00	36 00
Isaac Nicholson	Cook	9 00	108 00
John Patterson	Seaman	10 00	120 00
Charles Parture	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
Neal Patterson	Seaman	8 00	96 00
John Randall	Marine	3 00	36 00
Thomas Smith	Boatswain	10 00	120 00
William Stockdale	Marine	6 00	72 00

List of navy pensioners—Continued.

Names.	Rank.	Monthly pension.	Yearly pension.
James Stewart	Seaman	$6 00	$72 00
Horatio Salter	Boy	4 00	48 00
Hamilton Sellers	Ordinary seaman	7 00	84 00
Francis Trepenny	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Benjamin Underwood	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
James Wells	Seaman	9 00	108 00
David Wilson (black)	do	6 00	72 00
Peter Young	Quartermaster	6 00	72 00
			$3,678 00
VIRGINIA.
Obadiah Brown	Seaman	5 00	$60 00
Lawrence Bishee	Quartergunner	4 00	48 00
Jotham Briggs	Seaman	12 00	144 00
John Brown	Ordinary seaman	6 00	72 00
Lawrence Barsayline	Seaman	5 00	60 00
James Coruger	do	6 00	72 00
Silas Durham	Boy	6 00	72 00
Thomas Englis	Seaman	4 00	48 00
William Howell	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
Anson Harvey	do	5 00	60 00
James Jeffers	do	4 00	48 00
Obadiah Johnson	Seaman	5 00	60 00
James H. Hansford	do	4 00	48 00
Joseph Ward		6 00	72 00
			$924 00
DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.
William Baker	Ordinary seaman	6 00	$72 00
John Butler (black)	Seaman	5 00	60 00
Amasa Conner, alias Corwer	do	6 00	72 00
Michael Conner	Marine	3 00	36 00
Andrew Chambers	do	5 00	60 00
John Earle	Sailingmaster	20 00	240 00
Jerry Garner (black)	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
Simeon Hillman	do	4 00	48 00
John Hawkins	P. marine	3 00	36 00
Benjamin Kendrick	Cook	6 00	72 00
William Kingsbury	Boatswain	5 00	60 00
William McMullen	Marine	3 00	36 00
John Read	P. marine	3 00	36 00
Burwell S. Randolph	Midshipman	6 00	72 00
Richard S. Suter	do	6 00	114 00
John Shannamon	Seaman	6 00	72 00
William Staunton	Quartergunner	9 00	108 00
John Shinney	P. marine	3 00	36 00
Charles Young	Marine	3 00	36 00
			$1,326 00
NORTH CAROLINA.
Thomas Owings	Quartermaster	8 00	$96 00
John Thompson	Seaman	6 00	72 00
			$168 00
SOUTH CAROLINA.
John Jacob Hardy	Seaman	6 00	$72 00
Peter J. R. Staunton	Carpenter's yeoman	6 00	72 00
Charles Sheeten	Boatswain's mate	6 00	72 00
			$216 00
GEORGIA.
James Lennis	Marine	3 00	$36 00
OHIO.
John Meigs	Seaman	10 00	$120 00
LOUISIANA.
Robert Spedden	Lieutenant	20 00	$240 00
William Whitney	Seaman	8 00	96 00
William Wagner	Quartergunner	9 00	108 00
			$444 00
Grand total			$28,912 00

List of widow pensioners, January 1, 1826.

Names.	Rank.	Monthly pension.	Yearly pension.
MASSACHUSETTS.
Sally Annis	Seaman	$6 00	$72 00
Sarah Atkins	do	6 00	72 00
Hannah Adams, of James Adams	do	6 00	72 00
Sally Bates	do	6 00	72 00
Hannah S. Benete, of William Benete	Quartermaster	9 00	108 00
Mary P. Barlett, William, her son	Boatswain's mate	9 00	108 00
Sarah Brimblecomb's two children	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Abigail Cowell	Sailingmaster	20 00	240 00
Mary Cheever	.....	.....	75 00
Susanna Chritchet	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Harriet Carter	Lieutenant	20 00	240 00
Rebecca Day	Marine	3 00	36 00
Mary Ford	Carpenter's mate	9 00	108 00
Martha Flanders	Quartermaster	9 00	108 00
Sally Harvey	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Hannah Hazen	do	6 00	72 00
Mary Hackleton	do	6 00	72 00
Abigail Jones	Cook	9 00	108 00
Nancy Lancy	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
Hannah Lowther's heirs	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Ann G. McCulloch	Sailingmaster	20 00	240 00
Elizabeth Martin	Boatswain	10 00	120 00
Elizabeth Manly	Quartergunner	9 00	108 00
Jane Moulton	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Ann Martin	Quartergunner	9 00	108 00
Judetha Mullen's two children	do	9 00	108 00
Elizabeth McKim	Sergeant marines	5 00	60 00
Elizabeth S. Nickerson	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Nabby Phippen	S. coxswain	9 00	108 00
Elizabeth Parker	Captain	30 00	360 00
Charlotte Passenger	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Nancy Patch	do	6 00	72 00
Nancy Riggs	do	6 00	72 00
Nancy Simmonds	do	6 00	72 00
Mary Stone	do	6 00	72 00
Mary Trainer	.....	3 00	36 00
Hannah Webb	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Margaret Wyer	Sailmaker	10 00	120 00
Abigail Young	Seaman	6 00	72 00
			$3,927 00
PENNSYLVANIA.
Margaret Arundel	Sailingmaster	20 00	$240 00
Hannah Archbold	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
Mary Archbald	do	5 00	60 00
Ann Brown's minor child	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Jane A. Blakely's daughter	Captain	50 00	600 00
Nancy Carlisle's children	Marine	3 00	36 00
Sarah Esham	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Mary Ann Hill, minors	Quartergunner	9 00	108 00
Sarah Hill's minor children	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
Diana Hardy	do	5 00	60 00
Mary Hadding	Quartermaster	9 00	108 00
Maria T. Johnson	Carpenter's mate	9 50	114 00
Jane Logue's children	Marine	3 00	36 00
Sarah Mathews	Quartergunner	9 00	108 00
Eleanor Monroe's minor child Mary Ann Monroe	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Ann Midlen	Master's mate	10 00	120 00
Martha Rose	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Margaret Rankin's minor child George A. Rankin	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
Elizabeth Tromp	Marine	3 00	36 00
Lydia Vanhorn	do	3 00	36 00
Mary Wine's minor child James	Seaman	6 00	72 00
			$2,202 00
NEW YORK.
Mary Allen, alias Gordman	Seaman	6 00	$72 00
Betsey Blossom	Captain's mate	9 50	114 00

List of widow pensioners—Continued.

Names.	Rank.	Monthly pension.	Yearly pension.
Eliza Baldwin	Captain's clerk	$12 50	$150 00
Belinda Bowie	Sailingmaster	20 00	240 00
Susanna Brum	do	20 00	240 00
Sarah Care	do	20 00	240 00
Margaret Cummings	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Dorotha Cooper	do	6 00	72 00
Elizabeth Cunningham	Gunner	10 00	120 00
Mary Davis	Quartermaster	9 00	108 00
Ellen Dix	Surgeon	25 00	300 00
Catharine Fury	Steward	9 00	108 00
Mary Griffin	Surgeon	25 00	300 00
Phœbe Hamersley	Lieutenant	20 00	240 00
Susannah Longill	Boatswain	10 00	120 00
Julia M. Lawrence	Captain	50 00	600 00
Mary Lewis	Marine	3 00	36 00
Susan L. Osgood	Sailingmaster	20 00	240 00
Mary Olcutt	Steward	9 00	108 00
Sarah Place's infant children	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
Margaret Parsells	Sailmaker	10 00	120 00
Catharine Rasmupen	Pilot	20 00	240 00
Sarah Sisson's daughter	Sailingmaster	20 00	240 00
Sarah Smith	Boatswain's mate	9 50	114 00
Elizabeth Shubrick	Lieutenant	20 00	240 00
Eleanor Smart	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Mary Ann Springer	Lieutenant	20 00	240 00
Sarah Town	Marine	3 00	36 00
Charlotte Wares	Com. flot. N. Y.	20 00	240 00
Marvel Wilcox	Carpenter's mate	9 50	114 00
			$5,196 00
CONNECTICUT.
Nancy Brice	Seaman	6 00	$72 00
MARYLAND.
Harriet Barney	Captain	50 00	$600 00
Lavinia M. Edgar	Surgeon	25 00	300 00
Ruth Gilbert	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Sophia Gardner	Commandant	30 00	360 00
Elizabeth Grayson	Captain	20 00	240 00
Sarah Hopkins		6 00	72 00
Elizabeth Marshall	Quartergunner	9 00	108 00
Elizabeth Traproll	Marine	3 00	36 00
Susannah Wedge		9 00	108 00
Margaret Warner	Sailingmaster	20 00	240 00
Mary Van Blake	Gunner	10 00	120 00
			$2,256 00
DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.
Ellen Beev's infant child Jane		10 00	$120 00
Eliza Cassin	Purser	20 00	240 00
Sophia Grenele	Sailingmaster	20 00	240 00
Susan Hook's daughter		4 00	48 00
Eliza Hall	Sailingmaster	20 00	240 00
Susan Haraden	Master commandant	30 00	360 00
Mary E. Martin	Ordinary seaman	5 00	60 00
Charity Nicholson		10 00	120 00
E. L. Pearce	Lieutenant	20 00	240 00
Eleanor Jane Snow	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Isabella J. Searcy	Lieutenant	20 00	240 00
Eliza Tarbell	Captain	50 00	600 00
			$2,580 00
NEW HAMPSHIRE.
Mercy G. Christopher's children	Seaman	6 00	$72 00
Abigail C. Fernald	do	6 00	72 00
Mrs. Flagg		10 00	120 00
Mary, Nancy, and Caroline Perkins, minor children		5 00	60 00
			$324 00

List of widow pensioners—Continued.

Names.	Rank.	Monthly pension.	Yearly pension.
VIRGINIA.
Eliza W. Cocke	Lieutenant	$20 00	$240 00
Ann Hardin	Seaman	6 00	72 00
Frances M. Lewis	Captain	30 00	360 00
Eliza Maury	Lieutenant	20 00	240 00
Mary Neal	do	20 00	240 00
Harriet H. Sanders	do	20 00	240 00
			$1,392 00
NORTH CAROLINA.
Ann D. Collins	Carpenter's mate	9 00	$108 00
SOUTH CAROLINA.
Mary Rawlain Hatch	Pilot	20 00	$240 00
KENTUCKY.
Charlotte A. Holcomb	Seaman	6 00	$72 00
GEORGIA.
Harriet Ann Elbert	Lieutenant	20 00	$240 00
Total widows' pensions			$18,609 00

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 285. [1ST SESSION.

EXPERIMENT IN THE USE OF COTTON, COMPARED WITH FLAX, FOR CORDAGE AND CANVAS—THEIR RELATIVE PRICE, ETC.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 1, 1826.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, January 31, 1826.

SIR: In compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 25th instant, inquiring "whether any, and, if any, what, experiments have been made in the trimming and equipment of any of the vessels of the United States navy, to test the utility of cotton for cordage or sail cloth; and also what are the comparative strength and cost of such manufacture of that article and those of hemp," I have the honor to transmit, herewith, copy of a report made by the Commissioners of the Navy upon the subject, which embraces all the information in relation to the objects of inquiry in possession of this Department.

All which is respectfully submitted.

SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

The Hon. the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

NAVY COMMISSIONERS' OFFICE, January 28, 1826.

SIR: Upon the subject of the resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 25th instant, which you were pleased to refer to this board, we have the honor to state that in the month of May last we procured a quantity of cotton sail cloth and directed it to be made into sails to be used on board several of our public ships, with a view to test its relative strength and durability, when compared with American and Russia flax or hemp canvas; but sufficient time to make a full experiment not having elapsed, no report as to the result has been received.

With respect to the "comparative cost" of cotton canvas, the following shows the prices per yard at which we have contracted for flax canvas, and the prices asked for cotton canvas:

Flax canvas.	Cotton canvas.
No. 1. 47½ cents per yard	47 cents per yard.
No. 2. 43¾ cents per yard	46 cents per yard.
No. 3. 42½ cents per yard	45 cents per yard.
No. 4. 41¼ cents per yard	44 cents per yard.
No. 5. 40 cents per yard	43 cents per yard.
No. 6. 38¾ cents per yard	42 cents per yard.
No. 7. 37½ cents per yard	41 cents per yard.
No. 8. 36¼ cents per yard	40 cents per yard.

The width of both is made for 20 inches; but referring to the samples in our possession, the flax canvas is full 1¼ inches wider than the cotton.

It has never occurred to the board that it would be expedient to make any experiments of "cotton cordage," and we have no information upon the subject.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your most obedient servant,

JACOB JONES, Navy Commissioner.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 286. [1ST SESSION.

APPLICATION OF MARYLAND FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A NAVAL ACADEMY AT ANNAPOLIS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 7, 1826.

By the House of Delegates, January:

Resolved, By the General Assembly of Maryland, that our senators and representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to call the attention of their respective houses to the superior advantages which the city of Annapolis and its neighborhood possess, as a situation for a Naval academy, and that they use their best exertion in favor of the establishment of such an institution.

Resolved, That a copy of the above resolution be forwarded, by the Executive, to each of our senators and representatives in Congress.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 287. [1ST SESSION.

ON A CLAIM TO REMUNERATION FOR A METHOD DISCOVERED FOR SECURING THE DECKS AND SIDES OF VESSELS, CALLED WATER TIGHT PLUGGING.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 7, 1826.

Mr. STORRS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of William Mellers, and the documents accompanying the same, reported:

That the petitioner states that he invented in the year 1804, a method of securing the decks and sides of vessels from decay, by what is usually called water-tight plugging. That in the year 1822, he obtained a patent for his invention, which has since been determined, judicially, to be of no validity. That in 1823 an order was issued, from the Navy Board, for the use of the said invention in the public vessels of the United States. He represents the invention to have been of great utility to the country, and to the naval forces, and prays a compensation from Congress for the benefits which have, or may acrue from it to the public. The committee are of opinion that it is inexpedient to grant the prayer of the petition, and that he has no claim to remuneration from Congress, and recommend to the House the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petitioner have leave to withdraw his petition and documents.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 288. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM OF A SAILINGMASTER OF THE NAVY, IN COMMODORE BARNEY'S FLOTILLA SERVICE, FOR THE VALUE OF A HORSE KILLED IN THE BATTLE OF BLADENSBURG, AND FOR CLOTHING LOST IN SERVICE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 9, 1826.

Mr. HAYNE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of John A. Webster, late sailingmaster in the navy, praying indemnity for property lost while in the discharge of his duty, reported:

That it appears that John A. Webster was a sailingmaster, and attached to the flotilla under Commodore Barney during the late war. That when the city of Washington was threatened by the enemy, Commodore Barney caused the flotilla to be destroyed, and with the force under his command joined the army near Washington, and rendered essential services at the battle of Bladensburg. It further appears that the petitioner received orders from his commander to join him near Bladensburg, and that to effect this object in due season he mounted a horse and rode the whole night, and arrived the next morning at the battle ground in time to take part in the action. In consequence of his fatigue, the petitioner was permitted by Commodore Barney to remain on horseback, and during the action his horse was killed, and he himself narrowly escaped the same fate. Under these circumstances the committee are of opinion that the petitioner has a just claim on the United States for the value of his horse and accoutrements. With respect to the claims for clothing lost by the destruction of the flotilla, and for the expense of medical attendance, no proof having been adduced in support of them, the committee deem it unnecessary to state the objections which exist against such claims. In pursuance of these views the committee herewith report a bill for the relief of John A. Webster.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 289. [1ST SESSION.

PROBABLE COST OF CERTAIN LOTS OF LIVE OAK TIMBER, AND COST FOR PRESERVING THE SAME.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 10, 1826.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, January 28, 1826.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 20th instant, directing the Secretary of the Navy to furnish estimates of the probable cost of certain lots of live oak timber, together with the cost of erecting permanent sheds for their preservation, I have the honor to transmit, herewith, a copy of a report from the Board of Navy Commissioners upon the subject, which contains the information called for.

I am, very respectfully, SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

The SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

NAVY COMMISSIONERS' OFFICE, January 24, 1826.

SIR: Upon the subject of the resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 20th instant, which you have been pleased to refer to this board, the Commissioners subjoin an estimate which affords the information called for.

Live oak frames.

	Cubical feet.
For steam batteries, six frames, each requiring 12,000 cubical feet	72,000
For ships of the line, twelve frames, each requiring 34,000 cubical feet	408,000
For frigates of the largest class, fifteen frames, each requiring 23,000 cubical feet	345,000
For sloops-of-war, fifteen frames, each requiring 8,000 cubical feet	120,000
	945,000
Cubical feet of live oak, at $1.50	$1,417,500
Permanent sheds for the preservation of the above frames, including the expense of stowing the frames away	100,000
	$1,517,500

All of which is respectfully submitted.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, sir, your most obedient servant,

W. BAINBRIDGE.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 290. [1ST SESSION.

APPLICATION OF THE CITY OF BALTIMORE FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A NAVY-YARD AT THAT PLACE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 13, 1826.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the mayor and city council of Baltimore respectfully showeth, that, having understood it is the intention of the general government to establish some additional navy yards, for the purpose of building and repairing national vessels, and understanding a resolution has passed the honorable the House of Representatives of the United States, instructing the Naval Committee to inquire into the expediency of locating a navy yard at the port of Baltimore, they would respectfully call the attention of your honorable body to the great advantages possessed by this port, which, in the estimation of your memorialists, render it peculiarly fitted for such an establishment, being situated upon a branch of a safe, navigable river, and having a spacious harbor, of sufficient depth of water, and completely protected by its natural position; possessing the greatest facilities for procuring ship timber and naval stores, in consequence of her proximity to, and great intercourse with, those places from whence such articles are obtained; having also within her limits and immediate vicinity several foundries, at which cannon and other implements of war may be forged, with several powder mills in the neighborhood, and a surrounding country furnishing the most abundant supplies of iron ore, and also capable of supplying the various articles necessary for provisioning and equipping vessels-of-war; numbering within our city first-rate mechanics, to do every description of work in the most remote degree connected with the building and fitting out ships-of-war, men who are alike distinguished for their industry, science, and integrity; with numerous and extensive ropewalks, several of which are distinguished for the superior quality of the rigging manufactured by them, as tested by the experience of many years. Two of these establishments are constructed upon the most modern and approved plans, with patent machinery, and all in successful operation. With these qualifications, and a consciousness that Baltimore is eminently calculated, in consequence of her great local advantages, for a most efficient and serviceable establishment of the kind, your memorialists feel justified in recommending it, as such, to your consideration and notice. It is not the advantages that Baltimore possesses upon which alone are founded her claims for such distinction. It must be recollected by your honorable body that she ranks as the third commercial city in these United States, and is steadily advancing to eminence and importance; that she contributes towards the support of government by the large and increasing amount of import and tonnage duties which she annually pays into the national treasury. Your memorialists have it from the very best authority, the average aggregate annual amount of receipts, after deducting the amount paid as drawbacks, for the last three years, exceeds seven hundred thousand dollars, and that the net receipts, from the flourishing condition of our commerce, will far exceed this amount during the current year. While your memorialists indulge a conscious pride in pointing out the capacities and resources of Baltimore, and her fiscal importance to the Union, it is with equal feelings of pleasure they would direct your attention to the patriotism and devotion of her people in the most gloomy and disastrous periods of the war—to those periods of national calamity when a powerful enemy, rich in the science and all the means of war, was directing his undivided energies against the nation; to that period when he had penetrated to the Capitol, and laid it in ashes; a period which, even now, casts a gloom over the patriot's mind, as he takes a retrospective glance over the awful verge upon which the fate of his loved country rested; a treasury exhausted, the enemy's fleet riding in triumph in every bay and river, from Washington to the Capes; his armies landing wherever they listed, driving the peaceful citizen from his home, and in many instances laying waste and desolate the domicil that had protected him from the elements; a period when the stoutest hearts were palsied with fear and trembling. It was at this period, and under those circumstances of national suffering, that the citizens of Baltimore generously sealed their devotion to these United States by the liberal application of their treasures and their blood, to extricate their country from the disasters and difficulties she was then encountering.

It is scarcely necessary to call the attention of your honorable body to the sufferings, privations, and distresses endured by our citizens during the whole continuance of the war, most of whom will be benefited should the contemplated navy yard be established at this port; for they are identified with the system of embargo, non-intercourse, and war.

Your memorialists would state that, prior to the establishment of the peace of 1815, there was a small navy yard located at this port; but, although it was not of sufficient importance or magnitude for its influence to be advantageously felt, the citizens of Baltimore never murmured, though several of her Atlantic sisters were at that time reaping the rich harvests of extensive establishments. That, small and unimportant as it was, has subsequently been withdrawn; but, as others are now to be erected, and almost every Atlantic State has an establishment of the kind located within them, your memorialists respectfully urge the claims of Baltimore, as the emporium of Maryland, for a portion of the national patronage; believing, as they do, in all expenditures of the public money, due regard should be had to its equal distribution.

JOHN B. MORRIS, President First Branch City Council.
THO. MOORE, President Second Branch City Council.

TH. PHENIX, Clerk First Branch.
R. WILSON, Clerk Second Branch.

Approved February 9, 1826.

JOHN MONTGOMERY, Mayor.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 291. [1ST SESSION.

STATEMENT OF THE PAY AND ALLOWANCES OF OFFICERS OF THE NAVY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 13, 1826.

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS, House of Representatives, February 2, 1826.

SIR: I have been directed, by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to request of the Department of the Navy, information on the following points, viz:

What is the highest amount of compensation paid to a captain in the navy, while in service, including allowances and emoluments of every description; and what are the particular items of such pay, allowances, and emoluments, and the respective amounts of such items?

What is the like amount to the officers in service, below the rank of captain?

What are the rules established, and acted upon, in relation to the pay, allowances, and emoluments to officers of the several grades in the navy, while in service?

As the information is desired by the committee on subjects immediately before them, and requiring their prompt attention, I would consider it a favor to be furnished with the information at an early hour.

I am, sir, with great respect, your most obedient servant,

HENRY R. STORRS.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, February 4, 1826.

SIR: Your letter of the 2d inst. has been received. I am not aware that I can furnish more minute information, respecting the pay of the officers in the navy, than has been repeatedly communicated to Congress, and is now to be found in the documents on the tables of the members, and on the files of the House.

Permit me to beg your attention to those documents, particularly to the following: The recapitulation at the end of the naval register of 1826, a copy of which I enclose, and which shows all the pay and emoluments which officers on active duty at sea receive. The estimates for the year, which are annexed to and printed with the report to the President, at the commencement of the session, and which show all the items allowed at all the navy yards and stations; the report to the Senate of 1st January, 1825, and which shows the allowances in all other cases, except at yards, and the principles on which they are made; and any or all the annual reports to Congress, for years past, respecting the contingent expenses. Every dollar received by any officer, for any object, will be found in those papers, and, as I have believed, detailed minutely, clearly, and distinctly. Their object was expressly to communicate the information which you seek, with the wish that every member might have in his hands the amount of the allowances, and the principles on which they are made.

The laws of Congress, fixing the pay and rations of the officers, are to be found in the 2d volume Laws, page 385, and 3d volume, page 6. The recapitulation referred to, will be found to agree perfectly with those laws.

That I may present you results, as far as practicable, I enclose paper A, which is a statement of the sums received by the several officers in active service, calculating the ration as money at twenty-five cents.

I also enclose a copy of the report and estimates of last year, which, as well as those of this year, detail all the allowances, at all the navy yards, and exhibit the highest amount in each case. It is not necessary to make a copy in writing, as it will be easier to examine the printed copy. When you can spare it, you will confer a favor by enclosing it to me.

The papers thus enclosed and referred to, furnish an answer to the two first inquiries in your letter. They state "the highest amount of compensation paid to a captain," and all "other officers," while in service, "both on land and water;" including "allowances and emoluments of every description; and the particular items of the pay, allowances, and emoluments, and the respective amount of such items." There is but one item which is not set down in money, although it is embraced in the amount—I mean wood. It is furnished to the officers in kind, not in money. The number of cords is therefore mentioned, but their estimated cost is included in the amount stated.

In answer to the third inquiry, I have the honor to state:

1st. That officers on active service at sea, and on leave of absence from such service, and awaiting orders, by direction of the Department, for such service, receive the full pay contained in paper A. The law shows the amount of their pay and rations; and no "rule" is necessary to be applied in ascertaining what it is, except that which determines the value of the ration, when it is received in money. This has, for many years, been fixed at twenty-five cents; and the reasons for valuing it at that sum have more than once been presented to Congress, and especially in the report from the Department, of the 12th February, 1821. While on ship board they are provided by the government with all the quarters, fuel, candles, and servants which their situation requires; and being subjected to no expense for these objects, no allowance is made for them. There is, therefore, no reason why they should receive any compensation beyond their pay and rations, and no "rule" gives them any.

2d. Officers on furlough receive half pay and no rations. The "rule" for this has been supposed to be fixed by the law itself. See law 21*st April*, 1806.

3d. There is active and very important employment for officers on shore, at stations and navy yards, where, by their orders, they are compelled to remain, and are subjected to great expense; an expense to which other officers are not subjected, and which their pay would not meet. The principle, therefore, and rule of the government, since the original establishment of the navy, in such cases, has been, to make an allowance sufficient to pay such of these expenses as were indispensably and absolutely necessary to enable them to do their duty. And the mode of estimating the allowances has been, to obtain the best information within the reach of the Department, of the cost of the article at the different places, and be guided by it. Thus, an officer is compelled, by the order of the government, to remain stationary at Brooklyn, and daily to perform duty at the navy yard at that place. He must have lodgings, candles, and firewood, or he cannot obey the orders; or if he have not servants to aid him in his labor, both public and private, he cannot constantly attend to his duty, and perform the services demanded of him. If he were obliged to procure them for himself, it would consume the whole of his pay; and no man, but he who had a private fortune, and chose to bestow both it and his time upon the public, could remain in the navy. An allowance for these things, therefore, has always been made; but this allowance is not intended, nor is it believed that there are any cases in which it operates, as an emolument or addition of pay to the officer; but merely of a satisfaction of the expenses to which the order of the government had exposed him. Be good enough to look at the estimate for the year, for the navy yards, and you will at once perceive the operation of these principles.

House rent is allowed where there are no quarters in the yard for the officers to live in. It is computed as low as the circumstances of the place will permit. At Brooklyn, for the commandant of the yard, nothing, having a house; for the master commandant, when one is there, $300; for the lieutenant, $200, and so on for the rest. See the estimate. See also the allowances at other yards. It has heretofore been stated, that economy requires sufficient buildings at each of the yards to afford lodgings to the officers at it. This item of expenditure would not then be necessary. Wood is allowed to all officers so circumstanced, and is bought as low as the agents can buy it. At Brooklyn, we give the commandant 30 cords, the master commandant 20, lieutenant 20, &c., &c. See estimates for this and all the other yards.

Candles allowed to a captain, at Brooklyn, $65; master commandant, $40; lieutenant, $20; &c., &c. See estimates.

Servants—to the captain, three at $8, or two at $12. The master commandant, two at $8. Lieutenant, one at $8. The servants are mustered on the books of the yard, and liable to be called on for its protection, &c., in case of necessity. These several allowances are all, and are believed to be barely sufficient to pay for their objects, and to save the officer from actual loss in obeying his orders. These places and stations are sought, not for the purpose of making money, but as a change of duty, and to enable the officer to spend a part of his time with or near his family and private interests. Their amount is expressly stated in the estimates of the last and present year.

These allowances being made, increase the annual cost of the naval establishment; and, with a view to as much economy as can be obtained on the subject, as few officers are now placed at the yards as the duties to be performed will admit. Indeed, I believe the impression is almost universal with those who have to do the duties, that too few are assigned to them; and they have as much to do as they can well perform. If it were not for the necessary increase of expense, more would be added, to make their labors less. I again refer to the estimates of the present year, to show the numbers and grade of officers at each yard. There are no other allowances at yards and stations.

By the item in the appropriation bills which enumerates certain contingent expenses, it will be perceived that some other payments are sometimes made to officers, such as traveling expenses, at fifteen cents per mile, &c., &c. It is unnecessary, I presume, to repeat them, or the principles on which they are made. They will be instantly understood, on an inspection of the estimates of the appropriation bill, and of the report of the 1st of January, 1825, heretofore referred to.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Hon. HENRY R. STORRS, Chairman Naval Committee, H. of R.

A.

Pay of commissioned and warranted officers on active duty.

Captain, commanding a squadron, $100 per month, and 16 rations per day; all rations, when paid in money, are estimated at 25 cents each	$2,660 00
Captain in command of a ship of 32 guns and upwards, $100 per month, and 8 rations per day	1,930 30
Captain commanding a vessel of 20, and under 32 guns, $75 per month, and 6 rations per day	1,447 50
Master commandant, $60 per month, and 5 rations per day	1,176 25
Lieutenant commanding, $50 per month, and 4 rations per day	965 00
Lieutenant, $40 per month, and 3 rations per day	753 75
Midshipman, $19 per month, and 1 ration per day	319 25
Chaplain, $40 per month, and 2 rations per day	662 50
Surgeon, $50 per month, and 2 rations per day	782 50
Surgeon's mate, $30 per month, and 2 rations per day	542 50
Sailingmaster, $40 per month, and 2 rations per day	662 50
Purser, $40 per month, and 2 rations per day	662 50
Boatswain, $20 per month, and 2 rations per day	422 50
Gunner, $20 per month, and 2 rations per day	422 50
Sailmaker, $20 per month, and 2 rations per day	422 50
Carpenter, $20 per month, and 2 rations per day	422 50

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 292. [1ST SESSION.

STATEMENT OF THE EXPENSES OF COURTS-MARTIAL AND COURTS OF INQUIRY, FROM THE 1ST OF JANUARY, 1824, TO FEBRUARY, 1826.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 14, 1826.

WASHINGTON, February 14, 1826.

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

In compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 12th ult., I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of the Navy, with the statements relating to naval courts of inquiry and courts-martial, since the first of January, 1824, requested by the resolution.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, February 13, 1826.

In answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 12th of January last, "that the President of the United States be requested to cause to be laid before this House an exact account of the expense incurred by each court-martial convened for the trial of any officer of the naval service of the United States; and the expense of each court of inquiry held by order of the Navy Department, since the 1st of January, 1824; stating for what service the expenditures were incurred, to whom paid, and out of what appropriation. If the proceedings of the court-martial in the case of Captain David Porter have been printed by said Department, out of what fund were the expenses paid, and to what amount;" the Secretary of the Navy has the honor to enclose copy of a report from the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury, which contains an account of the expenses called for.

The Secretary of the Navy has the honor further to state, that the proceedings of the court-martial, in the case of Captain David Porter, have been printed by Davis & Force, of this city, and an agreement made with them that, for the privilege of printing the same under the direction of the Department, they should furnish as many copies of the work as should be required by the Department at one-half the price at which they sold it to others. Under this agreement, three hundred copies were taken at $1.25 each copy, making for the whole three hundred and seventy-five dollars. The work was sold to others and is now held by them at $2.50. This sum of $375 has been charged to, and paid out of, the appropriation made on the 21st of February, 1825, "for defraying the expenses which may accrue during the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty-five," "for printing and stationery of every description." Some of the 300 copies are now in the office, others have been sent to the several stations, navy yards and squadrons; and forty-eight were sent on the 4th instant to the Senate of the United States, in compliance with a resolution of that body, passed on the 2d of February.

Which is respectfully submitted. SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

To the PRESIDENT of the United States.

NOTE.—The table showing the names of witnesses, their compensation and traveling expenses, in gross, are inserted in the original in this place, but are here omitted, on account of their bulk and unimportance.

Recapitulation.

Aggregate amount of the expenses of the court of inquiry in the case of Elnathan Judson, surgeon	$515 00
Aggregate amount of the expenses of the court-martial in the case of Captain Smith and Lieutenant Kennon	2,204 80
Aggregate amount of the expenses of the court-martial in the case of Lieutenant Weaver, Lieutenant Warner, Lieutenant Wolbert, Lieutenant Sawyer, Lieutenant Conner, and Lieutenant Sands	2,747 12
Aggregate amount of the expenses of the court-martial in the case of Lieutenant Joshua R. Sands, on board the United States ship Franklin	210 00
Aggregate amount of the expenses of the court-martial in the case of Lieutenant Carter, Sailing Master Mull and Midshipman Van Dyke	201 50
Aggregate amount of the expenses of the court of inquiry in the case of Captain David Porter	2,242 35
Aggregate amount of the expenses of the court-martial in the case of Captain David Porter	2,997 80
Aggregate amount of the expenses of the court-martial in the case of Captain Stewart, Lieutenant Ramage, Lieutenant Whitlock, and Lieutenant Hunter	7,859 05
Total amount	$18,977 62

T. WATKINS.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Fourth Auditor's Office, February 6, 1826.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 293. [1ST SESSION.

ON A CLAIM BY A CITIZEN EMPLOYED BY A NAVAL OFFICER IN A SURVEY OF THE COAST, FOR EXPENSES OF SICKNESS CONTRACTED IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 20, 1826.

Mr. HOLCOMBE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Ed. L. Young, of the borough of Norfolk, in the State of Virginia, reported:

That the petitioner, in the years 1819 and 1820, was employed by Captain Elliot, of the navy, in assisting to survey a part of the southern coast of the United States; that whilst thus employed, owing to excessive fatigue and exposure, he contracted a violent illness, for the expenses of which, and for loss of time consequent thereon, he prays relief.

The committee cannot perceive, upon any proper principle, or precedent established by this government, that such relief should be afforded, and, therefore, recommend the adoption of the resolution:

Resolved, That the petition of Ed. L. Young ought not to be granted.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 294. [1ST SESSION.

ON A CLAIM OF THE ADMINISTRATOR OF LIEUTENANT THOS. G. TILLINGHAST, LATE AN OFFICER OF THE SLOOP-OF-WAR WASP, FOR PRIZE MONEY AND RELIEF FROM A JUDGMENT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 1, 1826.

Mr. SANDS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Daniel H. Tillinghast, administrator of Thomas G. Tillinghast, late a lieutenant on board the sloop-of-war Wasp, praying for his right of $50,000, voted by Congress to the relatives of the deceased officers on board that ship, and for his pay for his services, unsettled for the want of vouchers; and, also, that the money paid on a suit instituted against him by the Navy Department may be refunded, reported:

That Lieutenant Tillinghast's proportion of the $50,000, voted by Congress, and twelve months' pay for the unsettled account, for the want of vouchers, have both been paid by the Navy Department, and that the suit instituted against him for $505.42, was for a balance due from Lieutenant Tillinghast, as settled at the office of the Fourth Auditor.

And they, therefore, report the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 295. [1ST SESSION.

ACCOUNT OF THE KILLED, WOUNDED, AND PRISONERS OF THE OFFICERS AND CREW OF THE FRIGATE CHESAPEAKE, IN THE ACTION WITH THE BRITISH FRIGATE SHANNON, IN THE WAR OF 1812–'15.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 1, 1826.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, February 24, 1826.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit a list of "the names of the officers and crew of the United States frigate Chesapeake, who were killed or wounded at the time of her capture during the late war." There is no document in this Department showing "the names of those who were afterwards confined in the hospital at Halifax on account of the wounds received in the engagement."

I have also the honor to transmit a copy of the muster roll of the officers and men who were carried to Halifax as prisoners of war.

These two papers contain all the information in the possession of the Department, on the subject of the resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 9th instant.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, &c.,

CHAS. HAY, Chief Clerk.

Hon. JOHN W. TAYLOR, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Return of killed and wounded on board the United States frigate Chesapeake, James Lawrence, Esq., Captain, in the action with the British frigate Shannon, on the 1st of June, 1813.

KILLED.

Names.	Rank.
Edward I. Ballard	Acting lieutenant.
William A. White	Sailingmaster.
Pollard Hopewell	Midshipman.
John Evans	Midshipman.
Courtlandt Livingston	Midshipman.
Abraham Cox	Ordinary seaman.
George Craton	Boy.
Sterling Clark	Seaman.
Daniel Burnham	Quartermaster.
Alexander Marino	Ordinary seaman.
Thomas Evans	Ordinary seaman.
John Miller	Seaman.
Daniel Martin	Seaman.
Robert Bates	Seaman.
James Woodbury	Quartermaster.
William Russell	Seaman.
Harris Ball	Ordinary seaman.
Andrew Williams	Seaman.

Names.	Rank.
Joseph Simonds	Seaman.
John W. Duggin	Ordinary seaman.
David Bias	Seaman.
Henry Munroe	Seaman.
Josiah Shatfield	Seaman.
John Philips	Seaman.
Benjamin Esday	Ordinary seaman.
John Reed, 2d	Seaman.
Michael Kelley	Quartergunner.
Samuel Mullen	Ordinary seaman.
Michael Sawyer	Ordinary seaman.
James Betton	Seaman.
John Carter	Boatswain's mate.
John Crabb	Seaman.
Samuel M. Perkins	Ordinary seaman.
Joseph Judith	Seaman.
John Jones	Seaman.
Christopher Houston	Seaman.

Marines.

Names.	Rank.
James Broom	First lieutenant.
Thomas Wheaton	Private.
Benjamin Morrison	Private.
John Mulligan	Private.
John German	Private.
John Huntress	Private.
James Traenor	Private.
Jacob Preston	Private.
Philip Bryant	Private.
Redmond Berry	Private.
Robert Standley	Private.
Delaney Ward	Private.
Total killed,	48

WOUNDED.

Names.	Rank.	Remarks.
James Lawrence	Captain	Since dead.
Augustus C. Ludlow	Lieutenant	Since dead.
George Budd	Lieutenant	Severely.
William Cox	Acting lieutenant	Slightly.
Samuel Livermore	Acting chaplain	Severely.
Francis Nichol	Midshipman	Severely.
Walter Abbott	Midshipman
William A. Weaver	Midshipman	Severely.
Edmund M. Russel	Midshipman	Slightly.
William Berry	Midshipman	Slightly.
Peter Adams	Boatswain	Since dead.
James Sprout	Ordinary seaman	Severely.
John Appleton	Ordinary seaman	Severely.
Peter Quantin	Ordinary seaman	Dangerously.
James Butler	Ordinary seaman	Severely.
John Johnson	Ordinary seaman	Dangerously. Since dead.
John Peterson	Ordinary seaman	Severely.
Thomas Sterling	Ordinary seaman	Slightly.
Jefferson Griffith	Quartermaster	Severely.
Peter John	Seaman	Slightly.
James A. Lewis	Quartermaster	Severely.
John Smith	Seaman	Severely.
Joseph Weyland	Ordinary seaman	Slightly.
Francis Symonds	Seaman	Since dead.
Forbes Dela	Quartergunner	Since dead.
Eliphalet Carr	Seaman	Severely.
Thomas Flanagan	Seaman	Severely.
John Hodgman	Seaman	Since dead.
Francis Franklin	Ordinary seaman	Slightly.
Henry Hyde	Ordinary seaman	Severely.
Alexander Grant	Ordinary seaman	Slightly.
Enoch Hacket	Ordinary seaman	Severely.
Andrew Mercer	Seaman	Slightly.
John Talman	Seaman	Severely.
James Parker	Seaman	Severely.

Wounded—Continued.

Names.	Rank.	Remarks.
Ebenezer Day	Ordinary seaman	Severely.
Giles Cone	Ordinary seaman	Dangerously.
Andrew Vandemear	Seaman	Slightly.
Samuel Hatton	Sailmaker's mate	Slightly.
Darby Lee	Seaman	Since dead.
John Hunt	Ordinary seaman	Since dead.
Rola Peters	Seaman	Slightly.
Robert May	Seaman	Severely.
Thomas Finnegan	Gunner's yeoman	Slightly.
Joseph Vaughan	Ordinary seaman	Severely.
John Devo	Seaman	Since dead.
Noah Dearborn	Seaman	Severely.
John Rollins	Seaman	Slightly.
Charles Sargent	Seaman	Slightly.
William Metcalf	Seaman	Slightly.
Charles Thompson	Seaman	Severely.
Abraham Richardson	Ordinary seaman	Slightly.
James Durfee	Seaman	Slightly.
Thomas Smith, 2d	Quartergunner	Dangerously.
John Veazy	Quartergunner	Severely.
Lewis Hanscom	Ordinary seaman	Since dead.
William Hubar	Seaman	Severely.
John Giles	Quartergunner	Slightly.
Benjamin Sumner	Seaman	Dangerously.
William McAfferty	Seaman	Slightly.
Thomas Kouse	Quartergunner	Severely.
Marcus Mansel	Seaman	Since dead.
John Dezink	Seaman	Severely.
John Peterswing	Seaman	Slightly.
William Peterson	Seaman	Slightly.
William Stewart	Seaman	Severely.
Asa Newhall	Seaman	Severely.
Alexander Brown	Seaman	Severely.
Mathias Douglass	Ordinary seaman	Dangerously.
John McNiel	Seaman	Since dead.
John Crutchett	Seaman	Severely.
Thomas Jones, 2d	Seaman	Slightly.
John Caldwell	Seaman	Severely.
William Gardiner	Seaman	Severely.
Thomas Jackson, 2d	Quartermaster	Severely.
John Kegan	Seaman	Severely.
Michael Twee	Ordinary seaman	Slightly.
Marines.
John Twiss	Sergeant	Slightly.
William Harris	Sergeant	Slightly.
William Dixon	Corporal	Since dead.
Richard Hoffman	Private	Slightly.
James Brown	Private	Severely.
Joseph Twiss	Private	Slightly.
George Upham	Private	Slightly.
John Crippen	Private	Slightly.
Samuel Jackson	Private	Slightly.
John Johnson	Private	Slightly.
John Wright	Private	Dangerously.
Miles Morris	Private	Severely.
Matthias Wolberry	Private	Severely.
Warren Fogg	Private	Slightly.
Thomas Johnson	Private	Slightly.
George Clyne	Private	Severely.
Joseph Crane	Private	Slightly.
William Lewis	Private	Severely.
John Livre	Private	Slightly.
John Brady	Private	Severely.

Total wounded 96

R. C. EDGAR, Surgeon.
T. J. CHEW, Purser.

HALIFAX, June 15, 1813.

Muster roll of the officers and men belonging to the late United States frigate Chesapeake, who were carried to Halifax as prisoners of war.

Names.	Rank.	Remarks.
George Budd	Lieutenant
Richard C. Edgar	Surgeon	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Francis Nichols	Midshipman	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Walter Abbott	do	Returned to Boston per Agnes.
James W. Forrest	do
Wm. Randolph	do
D Higinbotham	do
Wm. A. Weaver	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Horatio Beatty	do
Wm. Steele	do
James A. Custis	do
Edmund M. Russell	do
George Miller	Carpenter
William Thompson	Sailmaker
Thomas Burseil	Seaman
Benjamin Gold	do
William Martin	do
John Williams	do
Joseph Allen	Ordinary seaman
Moses Stephens	do
Benjamin Osgood	do
Joseph Stephens	Seaman
William Thompson, 2d	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Perry Yearman	Ordinary seaman
William Brown, 2d	do
Oliver Cromwell	do
James Spourt	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Harvey Howard	do
Sylvester Stacey	do
John Appleton	Seaman	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
John Orr	Ordinary seaman	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Elias Beall	do
Joseph Goodall	do
Henry Foster	do
Peter Quartin	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
James Butler	do	Returned to Boston per Agnes.
John Watson	do
Joseph Pitcher	do
William Thomas	do
Green Camp	do
Wilson Denight	Boy	Returned to Boston per Agnes.
Cæsar Black	Ordinary seaman
John Johnson	do
George Daw	do
Philip Bertram	Boy
George Williams	Seaman
Henry Ensign	do
Levi Waterman	Ordinary seaman
Abijah Davis	do
John Peterson	do	Returned to Boston per Agnes.
John Chappell, 1st	do
Thomas Sterling	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Richard Williams, 2d	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
John Monday	do
Peter Davis	do
Robert Spencer	do
Jefferson Griffith	Quartermaster	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Joseph Wells	Gunner's mate
Henry C. Minor	Ordinary seaman
Christian Carlson	Seaman
Peter Labroder	do
Peter John	do
Nicholas Johnson	Quartermaster
George North	Boatswain's yeoman
John Pressy	Ordinary seaman
John Lee	Boy
James A. Lewis	Quartermaster	Returned to Boston per Agnes.
Lewis Francis	Ordinary seaman
Christian Cook	do
John Demidoff	do
George Cawdell	Boy

Muster roll—Continued.

Names.	Rank.	Remarks.
Haffiel White	Seaman
George Fernandez	do
William Frederick	Ordinary seaman
William Day	Seaman
Anthony Joseph	Ordinary seaman
Patrick Brooks	Boy	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Thomas Lindley	Seaman
John Smith	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Ebenezer Lord	Ordinary seaman
Joseph Wheyland	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Benjamin Simonds	do
Samuel Hays	Seaman
Henry Smith	do
John Hill	do
John Dale	Ordinary seaman
Joseph Chedman	do
Mathew Kentner	do
Jonathan Shaw	Seaman
John Wood	do
Robert Holmes	do
John Brown	Ordinary seaman
James Sperrin	do
John Scott	do
John Smith	do
John Joice	do
Charles Wilford	Seaman	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Andrew Sampson	do
John Brice	Ordinary seaman	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Peter Penyman	Seaman
Eliphalet Carr	do	Returned to Boston per Agnes.
Francis Williams	Ordinary seaman
Christian Nelson	Seaman
Benjamin Landers	Cooper
Robert Perkins	Seaman
Hatch Oakman	Carpenter's yeoman
Joseph Witcher	do mate
Michael Grace	do do
Lambert Flowers	Seaman
Samuel Gale	Quartermaster
Thomas Turner	Seaman
Andrew T. Rogers	Ordinary seaman
Thomas Flanagan	Seaman	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
John Buck	Ordinary seaman
Joseph Russell	Boatswain's mate
Peter Lingreen	Seaman
Francis Franklin	Ordinary seaman	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
William Leonard	Cook
Martin Mathley	Quartergunner
Samuel Webber	Ordinary seaman
Christian Holmes	Seaman
Henry Hyde	Ordinary seaman	Returned to Boston per Agnes.
Henry White	Seaman
Thomas Leonard	Ordinary seaman
Alexander Grant	do
Enoch Hackett	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Magnus Sparing	Seaman
Andrew Mercer	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
John Medley	do
John Thompson	Ordinary seaman
Paul Limer	Seaman
John Tallman	do	Returned to Boston per Agnes.
Joseph Gale	do
James Parker	do
Martin Anderson	do
Ebenezer Day	Ordinary seaman	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
James Waterman	do
Stephen Ball	do
Andrew Vandermear	Seaman
Samuel Hatton	Sailmaker's mate
Samuel Green	Ordinary seaman
Francis Paris	do
John White	Boy
Henry Simpson	Gunner's mate

Muster roll—Continued.

Names.	Rank.	Remarks.
Thomas Arthur	Seaman
Thomas Barrett	do
Joseph Wright	do
Charles Reynolds	Ordinary seaman
Rola Peters	Seaman	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
John McNeir	Boy
Joseph Calhoon	Seaman
Samuel Ratcliffe	do
Stephen June	do
John Douglas	Ordinary seaman
Robert May	Seaman	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Thomas Finigan	Gunner's yeoman	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Joseph Vaughan	Ordinary seaman	Returned to Boston per Agnes.
Francis Commagee	do
Thomas Gibson	Seaman
Peter Thompson	do
John Sieve	do
Henry Stainback	Ordinary seaman
Noah Dearborn	Seaman	Returned to Boston per Agnes.
John Rollins	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Abraham Cutler	Ordinary seaman
Charles Sargent	Seaman
Salmon Goodrich	Armorer
Edward N. Thayer	Midshipman
Thomas Gould	Seaman
William Metcalf	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
John Price, 2d	do
Murty Collins	do
William Philips	do
James Peterson	do
Charles Thompson	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Abm. Richardson	Ordinary seaman	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
James Durfee	Seaman	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Thomas Smith, 2d	Quartergunner
Charles Eastland	Seaman
John Vezy	Quartergunner	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Mark Ferauld	Ordinary seaman
Jonathan Walker	Quartergunner
Daniel Croxford	Seaman
Henry R. Goodwin	Boy
William Hubar	Seaman	Returned to Boston per Agnes.
William Brown, 3d	do
Matthew Rogers	Gunner
Nathaniel Coles	Boatswain's mate
Andrew Dunham	Boy
Hammond Bush	Ordinary seaman
John McNey	Boy
Aaron Jackson	Ordinary seaman
Peter Frost	Seaman
John Coursey	Ordinary seaman
Florence Crawley	do
John Giles, alias Gerald	Quartergunner	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Luke Sherburn	Seaman
John Carlton	do
Philip Blake,	do
Benjamin Trefethan	do
Benjamin Sumner	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Joseph Pike	Ordinary seaman
David Abbott	Seaman
Joseph Sanders	do
Andrew Cunningham	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Jacob Ellsworth	do
John Dix	Surgeon's mate
William Swift	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Halsey Carey	Seaman
William R. Ruse	do
William M'Cafferty	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Lewis Doyle	do
Luther Eldridge	do
Francis Williams, 2d	Quartermaster
Thomas Levinus	Ordinary seaman
Thomas Jones	do
Isaac Smith	Seaman

Muster roll—Continued.

Names.	Rank.	Remarks.
William Parker	Quartergunner	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
William Staples	Ordinary seaman
George Gifford	Quartermaster
Mathias Rogers	Boy	Returned to Boston per Henry.
Charles Goodman	Seaman
Thomas Kouse	Quartergunner	Returned to Boston per Agnes.
William Wainwright	Ordinary seaman
William Worthington	do
Michael Rutherds	Seaman
John Dezinck	do	Returned to Boston per Agnes.
John Peterswing	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Nathan Leaver	do
Daniel Malona	Ordinary seaman
William Gordon	do
Benjamin Proctor	do
William Perry	do
William Peterson	Seaman	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Stephen Haynes	Quartergunner
John Northup	Seaman
William Stewart	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
John Elburn	do
Joseph Antonio	do
Emanuel Gaumas	do
Peter Decosta	do
Michael Tivyly, alias Tivea	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Emanuel James	do
Asa Newhall	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Alexander Brown	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Michael Douglass	Ordinary seaman	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
James Denny	Seaman
Charles Sherlock	do
John Johnson, 2d	do
Nicholas Fountain	Master-at-arms
Israel Buckins	Seaman
William Small	do
George Mills	do
Christian Stephens	do
Mason Reynolds	do
Charles Brunnan	do
James Alexander	do
Charles Westerberg	do
Thomas Taylor	do
William Lockwood	do
John Fisher	Midshipman
Kingsbury Moore	Seaman
John Lund	do
Thomas Carpenter	do
William Jones	do
John Crutchett	do
Robert Millikin	do
Daniel Low	do
Thomas Jones, 2d	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
John Caldwell	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
James Tompkins	Ordinary seaman
William Gardiner	Seaman	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Thomas Hardy	do
Thomas Jackson, 2d	Quartermaster	Returned to Boston per Agnes.
William Cox	Acting lieutenant	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
William M'Kenney	Midshipman	Returned to Boston per Henry.
Thomas I. Chew	Purser	Returned to Boston per Henry.
Josiah Rainsford	Steward	Returned to Boston per Henry.
Ab'm W. Blanchard	Clerk	Returned to Boston per Henry.
Russell Baldwin	Acting midshipman	Returned to Boston per Henry.
Samuel Livermore	Acting chaplain	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Benjamin Follett	Acting midshipman
——— Flushman	do
Thomas Smallpence	Master's mate
Edward Parker	Boy	Returned to Boston per Henry.
William Jordan	Boy
Esaw Himan	Captain's steward
John Kegan	Seaman	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
William Berry	Midshipman	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
John Twiss	Sergeant marines

Muster roll—Continued.

Names.	Rank.	Remarks.
Richard Hoffman	Private	Died on the passage per Frederick Augustus.
James Brown	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Thomas Stocker	do
Joseph Twiss	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
George Repham	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
John Crupper	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Samuel Jackson	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
John Johnson	do
John Wright	do
Miles Morris	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Nicholas Tilton	do
James Orault	Corporal
Jonathan Landers	Private
Joseph Smith	do
Mathias Woobery	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Warren Fogg	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Thomas Johnson	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
John Creasy	do
Sylvester Holland	do
George Clyne	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Joseph Crane	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Archibald Roulstone	do
William Harris	Sergeant
Patrick Dillon	Private
William Lewis	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.
Joseph Clarke	do
James Dearin	do
Isaac Porter	Fifer
John Livre	Private
John Brady	do	Returned to Boston per Frederick Augustus.

THOMAS I. CHEW, Purser.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 296. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE EXPEDIENCY OF ESTABLISHING A NAVY YARD AT CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA, AND ON THE ST. MARY'S RIVER, OR AT SAVANNAH, GEORGIA, ETC.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 2, 1826.

Mr. STORRS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, who have been directed, by resolution of the House, respectively to inquire into the expediency of establishing a navy yard at Charleston, in South Carolina, and at some suitable point on the St. Mary's river, and to whom was also referred the memorial of the mayor and alderman of the city of Savannah as to the inquiries directed by the said resolution, and so much of the said memorial as prays the establishment of a navy yard or depot at Savannah, reported:

That they have considered the said projects so referred to them by the House, and are of opinion that it is inexpedient, at this time, to establish a navy yard at any port between the Chesapeake Bay and Cape Florida. Before a navy yard can be judiciously located at any place between these points, on the coast, it is indispensable that further surveys should be made of harbors, which have not yet been minutely and thoroughly examined. Among these are Beaufort in South Carolina, and Savannah and Brunswick in Georgia, for the survey of which, the committee recommend to the House that an appropriation be made of the sum of eight thousand dollars. This amount will, in the opinion of the committee, be sufficient to cover all the expenses incident to such surveys.

On an application from the Naval Committee of the Senate, the Secretary of the Navy informed them that the survey of Charleston and St. Mary's did not enable him to decide, on the point between Hatteras and Florida Cape, at which it would be best to have a naval establishment, but that surveys would be necessary of Savannah, Brunswick and Beaufort.

R. Y. HAYNE, Chairman on Naval Affairs of the Senate.

See also Secretary of the Navy's annual report of Dec. 2d, 1825, page 75.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 297. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE EXPEDIENCY OF ESTABLISHING A NAVY YARD ON THE RIVER THAMES, IN CONNECTICUT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 2, 1826.

Mr. STORRS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, who were instructed, by a resolution of the 6th of January last, to inquire into the expediency of establishing a navy yard in the waters of the river Thames, in the State of Connecticut, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is not expedient, at this time, to establish a navy yard in the waters of the river Thames, in the State of Connecticut.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 298. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE EXPEDIENCY OF ESTABLISHING A NAVY YARD AND STATION ON THE NARRAGANSET BAY, IN RHODE ISLAND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 2, 1826.

Mr. STORRS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, who were instructed, by a resolution of the House, of the 5th of January last, to inquire into the expediency of establishing a navy yard and naval station within the waters of Narraganset Bay, in the State of Rhode Island, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is not expedient, at this time, to establish a navy yard or naval station in the waters of Narraganset Bay, in the State of Rhode Island.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 299. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE EXPEDIENCY OF ESTABLISHING A NAVY YARD AT BALTIMORE, MARYLAND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 2, 1826.

Mr. STORRS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of the mayor and city council of Baltimore, praying that a navy yard may be established at that port, and who were also directed, by a resolution of the House, of the 16th of December last, to inquire into the expediency of establishing a navy yard at the said port, reported:

That they have had the subjects of the said memorial and resolution under their consideration, and are of the opinion that it is inexpedient, at this time, to provide by law for the establishment of a navy yard at the said port. It does not appear to the committee that any pressing necessity exists at this time, which calls for the increase of the number of navy yards north of the entrance to the Chesapeake, and if it shall be found hereafter expedient to increase them, it will first be necessary to obtain complete surveys of the whole of that part of the coast. The committee now have under their consideration the expediency of providing by law for completing the survey of the coast of the United States, as recommended in the report of the Secretary of the Department of the Navy to the President of the United States, in his letter of the 2d of December, 1825, and by the President communicated to Congress, with his message, at the commencement of the session; and they, therefore, deem it inexpedient to grant the prayer of the said memorial. They recommend to the House the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the said memorial.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 300. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE ADDITIONAL NAVAL FORCE REQUISITE FOR THE PROTECTION OF THE COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES WITH BRAZIL AND BUENOS AYRES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 7, 1826.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, March 3, 1826.

SIR: In answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 23d February, "that the Secretary of the Navy be directed to report if there are a sufficient number of vessels now in commission, for actual service, to enable him to extend adequate protection to our commerce to the empire of Brazil and to the republic of Buenos Ayres; and, in the event of the whole naval force in commission being engaged on other stations, what additional appropriation will be required for this object," I have the honor to state that estimates have been formed and an appropriation bill passed for the support, in commission, of one ship of the line, three frigates of the first class, one frigate of the second class, six sloops-of-war of the first class, three sloops of the second class, and seven brigs, schooners, &c.

These vessels were intended to be distributed in the following manner:

In the Mediterranean—North Carolina 74, Constitution frigate, sloops Erie and Ontario, and schooner Porpoise. These vessels are now there, and it is not believed that any change can be made, with safety to the public interest, by withdrawing any part of this force.

In the Pacific—the frigate United States, sloop Peacock, and schooner Dolphin. The Brandywine, now in commission, will be prepared for the purpose, and relieve the frigate United States, so that that vessel will return about the close of the year. The Peacock must, in like manner, be relieved by another sloop-of-war, and it was intended to send an additional vessel of that class, making in all a frigate, two sloops and a schooner,—a force which cannot be diminished with safety to our commercial interests in that ocean.

In the West Indies we have the frigate Constellation, corvette John Adams, sloop Hornet, brig Spark, and schooners Shark, Grampus and Fox, to which may be added the corvette Cyane, intended for that station at the expiration of her present cruise on the coast of the Brazils and Buenos Ayres. The recollections of the last two years admonish us that any part of this force cannot be withdrawn. It could be sent to no place where our interests are in greater jeopardy. Indeed, the impression is not feeble that we ought to increase it without delay.

This distribution of the force leaves but a single sloop-of-war in commission, which is not specifically attached to and employed in the protection of commerce upon and near some station. Separate service, and objects of a general nature, will certainly employ that one.

It may, therefore, in answer to the resolution, be stated that there are not a sufficient number of vessels, now in commission for actual service, to enable the Department to extend adequate protection to our commerce to the empire of Brazil and to the republic of Buenos Ayres. It is believed that an additional frigate and two sloops-of-war would be necessary for that object, and an estimate is herewith transmitted, marked A, of the annual expense of supporting a frigate of the first class, one of the second class, and one sloop-of-war.

The appropr ation which shall be made by Congress will determine the character and number of the vessels which will be put in commission for that service.

I have the honor to enclose copies of communications, recently received, marked B, C, D, and E, recommending the employment of an additional naval force, for the purpose mentioned in the resolution.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

The SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

A.

Estimate showing the annual expense, for one year, of a frigate of the first and second class, and of a sloop-of-war, exclusively of the pay and rations of the commission and warrant officers, but including the expense of outfits.

	Frigate, 44.	Frigate, 36.	Sloop.
Pay of petty officers, seamen, &c.	$53,772 00	$44,616 00	$17,712 00
Provisions	36,043 75	29,930 90	11,223 75
Medicines and hospital stores	2,000 00	1,600 00	1,000 00
Outfits, to be appropriated	50,000 00	45,000 00	20,000 00
Wear and tear, under head of "repairs"	16,000 00	12,000 00	8,000 00
	$157,815 75	$133,146 00	$57,935 75

B.

WASHINGTON, February 15, 1826.

SIR: Intelligence, apparently authentic, having reached this country of the existence of a state of war between the governments of Brazil and of the United Provinces of the La Plata, the undersigned, on behalf of their constituents, beg leave to represent to you the consequences likely to result from the war between these governments. The uniform course of events, for the last seventeen years, leaves no doubt of the fact that the coasts and waters of the countries at war will instantly swarm with privateers, and pirates assuming their character, and that the commerce of neutral powers will become the indiscriminate prey of their rapacity. To prevent the vexatious delays and losses which must ensue, the undersigned, on behalf of their constituents engaged in commerce with Rio Janeiro, Buenos Ayres, and other ports of the government of Brazil, and of the United Provinces of La Plata, respectfully ask leave to suggest the expediency of dispatching forthwith a respectable naval force, to protect the American navigation from the interruption and insults to which it must otherwise be exposed in that quarter. Leaving all further considerations of the urgency of this step, or of the amount of force required by the exigency of the occasion, the undersigned beg leave to sign themselves,

With great respect, your faithful, humble servants,

JOHN REED.
JOHN BAILEY.
JOHN DAVIS.
H. W. DWIGHT.
DANIEL WEBSTER.
B. W. CROWNINSHIELD.
SAMUEL LATHROP.
SAMUEL C. ALLEN.
JOHN VARNUM.
AARON HOBART.
EDWARD EVERETT.
JOHN LOCKE.
FRANCIS BAYLIES.

Hon. S. L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

C.

BOSTON, February 20, 1826.

SIR: The existing war between the Brazilian and Buenos Ayrean governments, it is feared, by the merchants trading to South America, both on this side and beyond the capes, and to India and China, will be put in great hazard. The valuable trade, which has necessarily to pass at no great distance from the seat of war, or the importance and value of this trade, does not require to be remarked upon. It is believed much of the danger may be avoided, should the government think proper to send a respectable force, to cruise off the coast from the La Plata to northwardmost part of the Brazilian territory, with orders occasionally to show itself at Buenos Ayres, Montevideo, Rio Janeiro, Pernambuco, &c. Many privateers will be fitted out on both sides; and however either government may be desirous to keep them within bounds, as respects neutral states, it is to be feared they cannot be restrained from committing depredations on our commerce, particularly in cases where the incitement is strong, from the value of the cargo; as would be the case of those going to and coming from India, China, and the southern coast of America.

It is respectfully suggested that a small force would rather give confidence to than awe those who may be disposed to prey upon us. The opinion here is that the contest will be soon over; but that, until such is the case, property will be very unsafe in those seas.

Gentlemen have thought it best that you should be addressed on the subject, rather than to memorialize the President; should your opinion be in accordance with ours, a suggestion from you to the Executive would produce the desired effect.

With much personal regard, and with sentiments of respect from those who join me in the application, and at whose request I make the above suggestion,

I am, sir, your obedient servant. T. H PERKINS.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

D.

PHILADELPHIA, March 1, 1826.

SIR: The Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce, at a special meeting held last evening, directed me, as their organ, respectfully to represent the exposure to which it is believed the commerce of the United States, in the trade to South America, will be exposed, in consequence of the war which has been declared by the Emperor of Brazil against the republic of Buenos Ayres, and to solicit in their behalf such protection from the armed vessels of the United States as the government in their wisdom may consider effective and competent to the object.

The fostering care which is manifested on all occasions by the Naval Department towards the commerce of the country, inspires the highest confidence that, on the present occasion, there will be nothing wanting to comply with the reasonable wishes of the mercantile part of the community which existing circumstances will permit. Notwithstanding, it is viewed as a duty by the chamber to make known the apprehensions which are excited for property supposed to be in jeopardy, and to co-operate with their fellow-citizens in other seaports, who have or may make known similar apprehensions to the government.

With sentiments of the highest respect, I have the honor to be, &c.,

ROBERT RALSTON, President of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce.

To the honorable the SECRETARY of the Navy.

E.

BALTIMORE, March 2, 1826.

SIR: It cannot be necessary for me to state to you the great magnitude of our commerce with the rich and extensive empire of Brazil, and with the provinces of Rio de la Plata; that its importance is enhanced in a national point of view, from the circumstance of its taking off a larger proportion of the produce of our country than any other branch of our South American trade; that owing to the existing state of war in those countries, the whole of this valuable commerce is left to the mercy of pirates, privateers, and men-of-war; the first two always ready to depredate on the property of any nation, and the latter but little disposed to respect neutral rights (as we know from experience), unless awed by the presence of a respectable naval force.

The Chamber of Commerce of this city, therefore, most respectfully beg leave to suggest the expediency of immediately dispatching, not only a respectable, but an imposing naval force, for the protection of our commerce in that quarter.

I have the honor to be, with the utmost respect, your most obedient servant,

W. LORMAN, President of the Baltimore Chamber of Commerce.

To the Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the United States Navy.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 301. [1ST SESSION.

INSTRUCTIONS FOR THE ENCOURAGEMENT OF VACCINATION IN THE NAVY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 8, 1826.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, March 6, 1826.

SIR: In answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 10th of February last, "that the Secretary of the Navy be directed to inform this House whether any, and, if any, what, regulations have been adopted by that Department for the encouragement of vaccination in the navy of the United States," reported:

That in the month of August, 1816, the commissioners of naval hospitals appointed Doctor Elnathan Judson an acting surgeon, (see paper A,) and instructed him "to visit the several ports of the United States, for the purpose of vaccinating all the seamen, ordinary seamen, and others attached to the United States navy, who had not been previously secured against the small-pox by that salutary operation," (see paper B.) Orders were also given to him from time to time containing directions for his government; but as they relate principally to the places where the duties were to be performed, it is not considered necessary to annex them to this report. Doctor Judson continued to act under his appointment until June 7, 1821, (see paper C.)

On the 13th June, 1821, he was appointed an acting surgeon of the navy, and received orders from the Secretary of the Navy similar to those which he had before received from the commissioners of the naval hospitals, (see paper D,) and he continued to act under them until the 2d October, 1824, when other duties were assigned to him. Since that time no person has been ordered on this service.

No general regulations have been adopted by the Department for the encouragement of vaccination in the navy of the United States, other than those which relate to the general health of our vessels, as found in the rules and regulations for the navy, page 44, &c., and especially the 20th article, relating to the duty of surgeons, (see paper E.)

It is considered the duty, both of the commanding officer and the surgeon, to see that every precaution is taken both to prevent and arrest contagious and other diseases; a duty for the faithful performance of which they are held responsible. The small-pox has not frequently made its appearance in our ships, though instances have occurred, the most recent of which was on board the frigate United States, in the Pacific ocean, in September last, by which one seaman was lost, and several others suffered severely. At the last advices, health had been entirely restored to the ship.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

The honorable SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

A.

Doctor Elnathan Judson:

You are hereby appointed an acting surgeon under the act establishing naval hospitals in the United States, and you will be entitled to the pay and emoluments of a surgeon in the navy during the period of your services under this appointment. In every stage of your operations you will make a regular report weekly to the Secretary of the Navy of the number and description of the persons vaccinated, and consider yourself subject to such further orders as the commissioners of naval hospitals may deem expedient.

Given under our hands this 5th day of September, 1816.

A. J. DALLAS, Secretary of the Treasury.
B. M. CROWNINSHIELD, Secretary of the Navy.

B.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, August 7, 1816.

SIR: By direction of the honorable the commissioners of naval hospitals in the United States, I have the pleasure of transmitting to you an appointment as acting surgeon, and you are hereby authorized to visit the several ports of the United States, for the purpose of vaccinating, gratis, with the best vaccine matter, all the seamen, ordinary seamen, and others, attached to the United States navy, who may not previously have been secured against the small-pox by that salutary operation. You will be pleased to notify your acceptance of this trust, and make reports of your progress accordingly.

Your pay will be determined and settled when the commissioners shall again meet upon the execution of their duties

I am, very respectfully, &c., BENJAMIN HOMANS.

By order of the commissioners of naval hospitals.

Doctor ELNATHAN JUDSON, New York.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, August 22, 1816.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 20th, current, requesting instructions as to the extent of your operations under your commission, I have the honor to inform you that the immediate appointment is predicated upon the several principles of humanity towards that useful class of citizens, seamen. You will therefore give public notice in such newspapers as may be disposed to favor the cause gratis, and apply to the commanding naval officers personally, for such an examination of the men actually in service, to whom, of course, you will always give a preference, and such others of the class of seamen as may apply, you will not turn away. You will proceed in this business as your own good judgment shall point out, and notify your change of residence from time to time. Your pay will be settled when the commissioners meet, and the mode will then be pointed out.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

BENJAMIN HOMANS, Secretary to the Commissioners of Naval Hospitals.

Doctor ELANTHAN JUDSON, Acting Hospital Surgeon, Philadelphia.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, October 28, 1816.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 24th inst., I will observe that your appointment, being direct from the commissioners of naval hospitals, you are alone subject to their orders, there being no intermediate officer between them and yourself in the establishment. Being thus responsible to the said commissioners, you will use your own discretion and judgment in the exercise of your duties, and report your progress and proceedings regularly for their approval, as well as to show the proper application of your time and attention to the object of your appointment. In the letter of instructions, of the 22d of August, you were directed to apply to the naval commanding officers upon the several stations; therefore, a proper respect for them would point out, of course, a compliance with their requests, when the good of the service shall require, and not incompatible with your immediate duties.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

BENJAMIN HOMANS, Secretary to the Commissioners of Naval Hospitals.

Doct. ELNATHAN JUDSON, Acting Hospital Surgeon, New York.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, September 8, 1817.

SIR: Your letter of the 29th August, and annual report of persons vaccinated, have been duly received, and are satisfactory evidence of your attention and zeal in performing the duties assigned you. Orders will be transmitted to you by the next mail, in relation to the further prosecution of your labors, and, in pursuance of which, you will immediately proceed to New Orleans. By the next mail you will also receive a remittance of six hundred dollars, to meet your expenses.

I am, respectfully, &c., by order of the commissioners of naval hospitals,

BENJAMIN HOMANS.

Doctor ELNATHAN JUDSON, Acting Hospital Surgeon, Charleston, S. C.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, September 9, 1817.

SIR: Your proceedings, thus far, under your appointment, have been approved, and upon receipt of this you will proceed to New Orleans, and report yourself, to the commanding naval officer upon that station, as acting hospital surgeon, under the commissioners of naval hospitals. In so reporting, you are not to consider yourself under the orders of any officer, or the control of any surgeon of the United States navy; your authority being direct from the honorable commissioners of naval hospitals, for the purpose of vaccinating, with pure virus, all the seamen of the United States navy, and, subsequently, all others who may apply for, or be willing to receive the benefit.

In reporting to the commanding officer of any station, you will request from him an order to the officers under his command, to facilitate your operations, and to have their men all mustered for the purpose of being vaccinated; and you will report, to the commissioners, any obstructions you may meet with in the discharge of this duty, in order that measures may be taken accordingly, to secure the successful issue of your appointment. By exhibiting your authority to the commanding officers of the navy, it is presumed you will meet with every attention and support in their power to afford.

I am, respectfully, &c., by order of the commissioners of naval hospitals,

BENJAMIN HOMANS, Secretary to the Commissioners.

Doctor ELNATHAN JUDSON, Acting Hospital Surgeon, Charleston, S. C.

To all captains and commanding officers of the United States navy:

Whereas, The commissioners of naval hospitals have appointed Doctor Elnathan Judson a surgeon in the hospital establishment, and he is specially charged with the duty of vaccinating the seamen of the United States; therefore, you will please to recognize Doctor Judson, in his official station, permit him to examine and vaccinate all seamen, and others, under your command, and afford to him generally all the facilities and aid in your power to accomplish those important objects, of which he will, from time to time, make due report to the Navy Department.

B. W. CROWNINSHIELD, Acting Commissioner of Naval Hospitals.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, June 29, 1818.

C.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, June 7, 1821.

SIR: Your letter of this date, resigning your appointment as acting surgeon under the act establishing naval hospitals, has been received, and your resignation accepted; and we avail ourselves of this occasion to inform you that the duties assigned you under that appointment have been discharged with fidelity, and to our entire satisfaction; and we hope and trust your services will contribute very materially to exterminate the small-pox, which has, in times past, been exceedingly destructive among our seamen.

We are, very respectfully, &c.,

S. THOMPSON.
M. H. CRAWFORD.
J. C. CALHOUN.

DR. ELNATHAN JUDSON, late Acting Hospital Surgeon. Present.

D.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, June 13, 1821.

SIR: You will proceed to Philadelphia, New York, Boston, and Portsmouth, N. H., and report yourself to the commanding naval officers of each of these stations, for the purpose of vaccinating, with the best vaccine matter, all the seamen, ordinary seamen, and others attached to the United States navy, who may not previously have been secured against the small-pox. The commanding naval officers will afford you all the facilities and aid in their power to enable you to accomplish this object.

I am, respectfully, &c.,

SMITH THOMPSON.

DR. ELNATHAN JUDSON, Acting Surgeon United States Navy. Present.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, January 14, 1822.

SIR: You will visit the principal seaports in the United States, and administer gratuitously to all seamen, who may not be secured against the small-pox, the benefits of vaccination, reporting from time to time your change of station, and the progress made by you in the discharge of the special duties assigned to you. The Fourth Auditor of the Treasury will remit to you your pay as it shall accrue, and make the same allowances in the settlement of your account as were done heretofore, when you were acting under the authority of the commissioners of naval hospitals.

I am, respectfully, &c.,

SMITH THOMPSON.

DR. ELNATHAN JUDSON, Surgeon United States Navy. Present.

E.

"20. He shall occasionally inspect the crew, and take every precaution to prevent the origin or progress of contagion; on the appearance of which, he shall, without delay, report the case to the commander, in order that a timely separation may be made of the sick from the well, and adopt such measures as may have a tendency to arrest the progress of the disease."

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 302. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE UTILITY OF A BREAKWATER AT THE CAPES OF THE DELAWARE TO THE VESSELS OF THE NAVY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 14, 1826.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, March 11, 1826.

SIR: In answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 6th of February, directing "the Secretary of the Navy to inquire and report whether the construction of a breakwater at the capes of the Delaware, for the security of merchant vessels seeking a shelter from storms, would not furnish important advantages to the navy of the United States, in operations offensive and defensive, in war as well as in building, repairing and equipping public vessels in time of peace," the Secretary of the Navy has the honor to report, that there are not in the possession of this Department any important facts other than those which are within the knowledge of the public, and which have been presented to Congress in the various documents relating to the subject which occasioned this resolution.

It is not perceived in what way the smaller of the two breakwaters proposed could furnish advantages, of any description, to the navy of the United States, either in peace or war, as the depth of water would prevent its use by the vessels belonging to the navy. Nor is it perceived in what way advantage could be derived from the larger of the two breakwaters, in building, repairing and equipping vessels in time of peace, unless, after its completion, works for those purposes should be added.

Of the expense of such works no safe estimate can be formed until after the breakwater is completed. Their usefulness must depend upon the sufficiency of our navy yards and depots, which are designed for those purposes. At present these are believed to be sufficient for the number of our vessels and the wants of the service, and that it would not be expedient, at great expense, to provide another establishment, unless it is the intention of the legislature to break up one or more of those now in use.

It is not improbable that a very large and very useful navy yard, for building and repairing, might be formed there; but probability is all that can be reached upon the subject until the breakwater is erected.

The advantages which the navy would derive from the larger of the proposed works, are, protection from storms, in peace and war, in the same way and to the same extent as merchant vessels on that part of our coast, and as a place of resort for security from a superior force, where a junction of separate portions of our own forces might be formed, and from which an attack might be advantageously made on an enemy cruising on the coast.

These advantages will be estimated highly when the nature of our coast, and the distance from the Chesapeake to the head waters of New York and New England, are considered.

The copy of a letter from the Commissioners of the Navy, herewith transmitted, will present their views upon the subject.

All which is respectfully submitted.

SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

The SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

NAVY COMMISSIONERS' OFFICE, February 7, 1826.

SIR: The small breakwater, or partial harbor, would not, in the opinion of the board, afford any protection or shelter to the vessels of the navy. There is not a sufficient depth of water even for the class of sloops-of-war. It could not, therefore, become a place of resort for our vessels either in peace or war.

The large breakwater in contemplation may, in many views, be considered as offering important advantages to the vessels of our navy cruising along or approaching the coast. If cruising near the capes of the Delaware, on the appearance of an easterly storm, vessels could, and would no doubt avail themselves of such a harbor to ride out the storm in safety, instead of contending with it on the ocean, where great damages, possibly a total loss, might occur. Without such a safe harbor to bear up for, where they might find protection against the storm, and shelter against the ice, they would continue at sea and contend with its furies, in preference to contending with the dangers of the ice. Hence, it is evident that, in time of peace, the large breakwater would be of benefit to the vessels of our navy.

In a state of war these advantages would be greatly increased. A vessel of our navy, falling in with a superior force, might be saved by retreating to such a harbor, where protection against the enemy, and the winds and ice, would be found. For want of such a harbor, a vessel might be captured or stranded in an effort to avoid a superior force. Greatly more important will these advantages appear when considered in reference to a squadron or fleet of our vessels. Such a squadron cruising between New York and the Chesapeake, where an enemy's squadron might also be cruising—suppose a storm to arise before the two squadrons can meet—ours could find shelter from the storm, while that of the enemy would be completely exposed to it; and, when the storm should subside, our squadron would proceed in search of the enemy, who, being most probably in a crippled state, would be easily found and easily vanquished.

Again, suppose an enemy's squadron to be cruising between New York and the Chesapeake, and that we have a squadron lying at New York, and another at Hampton Roads—each, singly, inferior, but, when united, equal or superior to the enemy; a junction becomes important to enable us to contend with the enemy; and, in order to effect it, one of these squadrons sails for the port where the other may be riding; on its passage thither it falls in with the enemy, and is pursued by him, but has time to arrive at the great breakwater, which it enters, and is saved by the protection which that work would afford.

Many other views might be taken, but it is presumed that those mentioned will be sufficient.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, sir, your most obedient servant,

WM. BAINBRIDGE.

Hon. SAM'L L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 303. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE NECESSITY OF INCREASING THE NAVAL FORCE FOR THE PROTECTION OF THE COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES WITH BRAZIL AND BUENOS AYRES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 17, 1826.

Mr. BARTLETT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, of the 3d instant, in answer to a resolution of the House of the 23d of February last, inquiring "if there are a sufficient number of vessels now in commission for actual service to enable him to extend adequate protection to our commerce to the empire of Brazil and to the republic of Buenos Ayres, and, in the event of the whole naval force in commission being engaged on other stations, what additional appropriation will be required for that object," reported:

That they have had the subject so referred to them by order of the House under their consideration, and, in their opinion, a due regard to the interests of the United States, and the protection of its commerce, requires that provision should be made by law for fitting out a naval force adequate to their security from aggression by the public or private armed vessels of the governments now at war on the eastern coast of South America. It appears, by the letter of the Secretary of the Navy Department, that the means now in the power of the government will not enable that Department to afford this protection to our commerce in that quarter, without withdrawing a naval force from other stations, where it cannot be diminished with safety. The committee are of opinion that the force to be sent on this service should not be less than a frigate of the first or second class, and two sloops-of-war. The Guerriere can be prepared for sea in ninety, the Congress in sixty, and the Macedonian in forty-five days, and two sloops-of-war in about sixty days. To enable the government to fit out one of these frigates and two sloops-of-war, the committee have directed a bill to be reported to the House, making the necessary appropriations for that object.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, March 11, 1826.

SIR: I enclose you a letter which will explain the situation of the vessels, and the time required to fit them.

I also enclose a detailed statement of the expenses of supporting a ship of each class. The clerk did not understand me, and made the statement embrace the commissioned and warrant officers, which is not done in the paper A, annexed to the report. It is now too late to correct the error, but a short explanation will relieve from the difficulty.

The paper A states the amount of the expense of the vessels, exclusive of commissioned and warrant officers.

The paper B, from the line which is drawn across it, gives the items of that expense, so far as pay and subsistence is concerned. By adding them up, you will perceive the amounts agree.

Paper B gives all the expense of pay and subsistence of all the officers. The commissioned and warrant officers were not embraced in A, because the support of them is provided for in the annual appropriation bill. The others are employed when the vessels are put in commission.

The item of provisions in A, is formed by taking each person on board the vessels, and calculating one ration for each at twenty-five cents. Thus you will perceive that in a frigate of the first class there are of officers, seamen, &c., 436 persons; multiply this by the days in the year, 365, and divide by four, and you have the amount in dollars, of that item in C.

So take the number of petty officers, seamen, &c., and multiply and divide in the same mode, and you have the amount of that item in A.

The three remaining items in A are the uniform estimate on those subjects, and as near the truth as we can come. Sometimes they are a little more and sometimes a little less than the actual wants of the vessel, but always very near the truth.

The haste in which these statements are made induces me to request you to consider them private, so far as not to print them, and if further explanations be required, I will call on you to-morrow and give them.

I am, very respectfully, &c., SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Hon. H. R. STORRS, Chairman Naval Committee.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, March 11, 1826.

SIR: There are three frigates, one of the first, and two of the second class, which may be fitted for sea in a short time, viz:

The Guerriere in ninety days; the Congress in sixty days; the Macedonian in forty-five days. The Guerriere and Macedonian are at Norfolk—the Congress at this yard.

There are also two of the new sloops-of-war, viz: the Lexington and Vincennes, both at New York, which may be prepared for sea in about 60 days.

The only doubt as to the times mentioned arises from the difficulty in enlisting seamen, but it is hoped that little, if any, delay will arise from this cause.

I enclose to you a detailed statement respecting the estimates of the expenses of preparing and supporting these vessels for the year.

I am, very respectfully, &c., SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Hon. HENRY R. STORRS, Chairman Naval Committee, House of Representatives.

B.

Estimate of the pay and subsistence of all persons attached to a frigate of the first class, a frigate of the second class, and a sloop-of-war, for one year.

	Frigate of the 1st class.		Frigate of the 2d class.		Sloop-of-war.
Captains	1	$2,112 50	1	$2,112 50
Master commandants	....	.....	....	.....	1	$1,085 00
Lieutenants	8	5,300 00	7	4,637 50	5	3,312 50
Masters	1	571 25	1	571 25	1	571 25
Chaplains	1	571 25	1	571 25
Surgeons	1	691 25	1	691 25	1	691 25
Pursers	1	571 25	1	571 25	1	571 25
Boatswains	1	331 25	1	331 25	1	331 25
Gunners	1	331 25	1	331 25	1	331 25
Carpenters	1	331 25	1	331 25	1	331 25
Sailmakers	1	331 25	1	331 25	1	331 25
Midshipmen	26	5,928 00	20	4,560 00	12	2,736 00
Surgeons' mates	2	902 50	2	902 50	1	451 25
Clerks	1	300 00	1	300 00	1	300 00
Armorers	1	216 00	1	216 00	1	216 00
Boatswains' mates	4	1,112 00	3	684 00	2	456 00
Gunners' mates	2	456 00	2	456 00	2	456 00
Carpenters' mates	2	456 00	1	228 00	1	228 00
Sailmakers' mates	1	228 00	1	228 00	1	228 00
Masters-at-arms	1	216 00	1	216 00	1	216 00
Coxswains	1	216 00	1	216 00	1	216 00
Ship corporals	2	432 00	1	216 00
Coopers	1	216 00	1	216 00	1	216 00
Cooks	1	216 00	1	216 00	1	216 00
Quartergunners	12	2,592 00	10	2,160 00	8	1,728 00
Quartermasters	8	1,728 00	6	1,296 00	5	1,080 00
Yeomen	3	648 00	3	648 00	3	648 00
Pursers' stewards	1	216 00	1	216 00	1	216 00
Seamen	160	23,040 00	129	18,576 00	70	10,080 00
Ordinary seamen	170	20,400 00	131	15,720 00	40	4,800 00
Boys	20	1,440 00	22	1,584 00	10	720 00
	436	$72,101 00	354	$59,334 50	175	$32,763 50

N. B.—Deduct all the items above the black line; they are provided for in the general navy appropriation bill.

C.

Estimate of the annual expense of a frigate of the first class, a frigate of the second class, and a sloop-of-war.

	Frigate—1st class.	Frigate—2d class.	Sloop-of-war.
Pay and subsistence	$72,101 00	$59,334 50	$32,763 50
Provisions	39,785 00	32,302 50	15,993 75
* Medicines and hospital stores	2,000 00	1,600 00	1,000 00
* Outfits, to be appropriated under head of "repairs"	50,000 00	45,000 00	20,000 00
* Wear and tear	16,000 00	12,000 00	8,000 00
	$179,886 00	$150,237 00	$77,757 25

* These estimates are the same as those made for vessels of the same rates.

Pay, one year.

Frigate of 1st class	$53,772	9 months is	$40,329
Sloop-of-war	17,712	9 months is	13,284
Sloop-of-war	17,712	9 months is	13,284
Pay			$66,897
Provisions—frigate	$36,043	9 months is	$27,032
sloop	11,223	9 months is	8,418
sloop	11,223	9 months is	8,418
Provisions			$43,868

NAVY DEPARTMENT, March 3, 1826.

SIR: In answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 23d February, "that the Secretary of the Navy be directed to report if there are a sufficient number of vessels now in commission for actual service, to enable him to extend adequate protection to our commerce to the empire of Brazil and the republic of Buenos Ayres; and, in the event of the whole naval force in commission being engaged on other stations, what additional appropriation will be required for this object;" I have the honor to state, that estimates have been formed, and an appropriation bill passed, for the support in commission of

One ship of the line, three frigates of the first class, one frigate of the second class, six sloops-of war of the first class, three sloops of the second class, and seven brigs, schooners, &c.

These vessels were intended to be distributed in the following manner:

In the Mediterranean—North Carolina 74, Constitution frigate, sloops Erie and Ontario, and schooner Porpoise. These vessels are now there, and it is not believed that any change can be made, with safety to the public interest, by withdrawing any part of this force.

In the Pacific—The frigate United States, sloop Peacock, and schooner Dolphin. The Brandywine, now in commission, will be prepared for the purpose, and relieve the frigate United States, so that that vessel will return about the close of the year. The Peacock must, in like manner, be relieved by another sloop-of-war, and it was intended to send an additional vessel of that class, making in all a frigate, two sloops, and a schooner; a force which cannot be diminished with safety to our commercial interests in that ocean.

In the West Indies, we have the frigate Constellation, corvette John Adams, sloop Hornet, brig Spark, and schooners Shark, Grampus, and Fox, to which may be added the corvette Cyane, intended for that station at the expiration of her present cruise on the coast of the Brazils and Buenos Ayres. The recollections of the last two years admonish us that any part of this force cannot be withdrawn. It could be sent to no place where our interests are in greater jeopardy. Indeed, the impression is not feeble, that we ought to increase it without delay.

This distribution of the force leaves but a single sloop-of-war in commission which is not specifically attached to, and employed in, the protection of commerce upon and near some station. Separate service, and objects of a general nature, will certainly employ that one.

It may, therefore, in answer to the resolution, be stated, that there are not a sufficient number of vessels now in commission for actual service, to enable the Department to extend adequate protection to our commerce to the empire of Brazil and to the republic of Buenos Ayres. It is believed that an additional frigate and two sloops-of-war would be necessary for that object, and an estimate is herewith transmitted, marked A, of the annual expense of supporting a frigate of the first class, one of the second class, and one sloop-of-war.

The appropriation which shall be made by Congress will determine the character and number of the vessels which will be put in commission for that service.

I have the honor to enclose copies of communications recently received, marked B, C, D, and E, recommending the employment of an additional naval force, for the purpose mentioned in the resolution.

I am, very respectfully, &c.

SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

The SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

A.

Estimate showing the annual expense, for one year, of a frigate of the first and second class, and of a sloop-of-war, exclusively of the pay and rations of the commission and warrant officers, but including the expense of outfits.

	Frigate—44.	Frigate—36.	Sloop.
Pay of petty officers, seamen, &c.	$53,772 00	$44,616 00	$17,712 00
Provisions	36,043 75	29,930 00	11,223 75
Medicines and hospital stores	2,000 00	1,600 00	1,000 00
Outfits to be appropriated	50,000 00	45,000 00	20,000 00
Wear and tear, under head of "repairs"	16,000 00	12,000 00	8,000 00
	$157,815 75	$133,146 00	$57,935 75

B.

WASHINGTON, February 15, 1826.

SIR: Intelligence, apparently authentic, having reached this country, of the existence of a state of war between the governments of Brazil and of the United Provinces of the La Plata, the undersigned, on behalf of their constituents, beg leave to represent to you the consequences likely to result from the war between these governments. The uniform course of events for the last seventeen years leaves no doubt of the fact that the coasts and waters of the countries at war will instantly swarm with privateers, and pirates assuming their character, and that the commerce of neutral powers will become the indiscriminate prey of their rapacity. To prevent the vexatious delays and losses which must ensue, the undersigned, on behalf of their constituents engaged in commerce with Rio Janeiro, Buenos Ayres, and other ports of the government of Brazil, and of the United Provinces of La Plata, respectfully ask leave to suggest the expediency of dispatching forthwith a respectable naval force to protect the American navigation from the interruption and insults to which it must otherwise be exposed in that quarter. Leaving all further considerations of the urgency of this step, or of the amount of force required by the exigency of the occasion, the undersigned beg leave to sign themselves,

With great respect, your faithful, humble servants,

JOHN REED.
JOHN BAILEY.
JOHN DAVIS.
H. W. DWIGHT.
DANIEL WEBSTER.
B. W. CROWNINSHIELD.
SAMUEL LATHROP.
SAMUEL C. ALLEN.
JOHN VARNUM.
AARON HOBART.
EDWARD EVERETT.
JOHN LOCKE.
FRANCIS BAYLIES.

Hon. S. L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

C.

BOSTON, February 20, 1826.

SIR: The existing war between the Brazilian and Buenos Ayrean governments, it is feared by the merchants trading to South America, both on this side and beyond the capes, and to India and China, will be put in great hazard: the valuable trade, which has necessarily to pass at no great distance from the seat of war—the importance and value of this trade does not require to be remarked upon. It is believed much of the danger may be avoided, should the government think proper to send a respectable force to cruise off the coast, from the La Plata to northwardmost part of the Brazilian territory, with orders occasionally to show itself at Buenos Ayres, Montevideo, Rio Janeiro, Pernambuco, &c. Many privateers will be fitted out on both sides; and however either government may be desirous to keep them within bounds, as respects neutral states, it is to be feared they cannot be restrained from committing depredations on our commerce, particularly in cases where the incitement is strong, from the value of the cargo, as would be the case of those going to and coming from India, China, and the southern coast of America.

It is respectfully suggested that a small force would rather give confidence to than awe those who may be disposed to prey upon us. The opinion here is that the contest will be soon over; but that, until that is the case, property will be very unsafe in those seas.

Gentlemen have thought it better that you should be addressed on the subject, rather than to memorialize the President; should your opinion be in accordance with ours, a suggestion from you to the Executive would produce the desired effect.

With much personal regard, and with sentiments of respect from those who join me in the application, and at whose request I make the above suggestion,

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

T. H. PERKINS.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

D.

PHILADELPHIA, March 1, 1826.

SIR: The Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce, at a special meeting held last evening, directed me, as their organ, respectfully to represent the exposure to which it is believed the commerce of the United States, in the trade to South America, will be exposed, in consequence of the war which has been declared by the Emperor of Brazil against the republic of Buenos Ayres, and to solicit in their behalf such protection from the armed vessels of the United States as the government, in their wisdom, may consider effective and competent to the object.

The fostering care which is manifested on all occasions by the Naval Department towards the commerce of the country, inspires the highest confidence that, on the present occasion, there will be nothing wanting to comply with the reasonable wishes of the mercantile part of the community, which existing circumstances will permit. Notwithstanding, it is viewed as a duty by the chamber to make known the apprehensions which are excited for property supposed to be in jeopardy, and to co-operate with their fellow-citizens in other seaports, who have, or may make known, similar apprehensions to the government.

With sentiments of the highest respect, I have the honor to be, &c.,

ROBERT RALSTON, President of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce.

To the honorable the SECRETARY of the Navy.

E

BALTIMORE, March 2, 1826.

SIR: It cannot be necessary to state to you the great magnitude of our commerce with the rich and extensive empire of Brazil, and with the provinces of the Rio de la Plata; that its importance is enhanced in a national point of view, from the circumstance of its taking off a larger proportion of the produce of our country than any other branch of our South American trade; that owing to the existing state of war in those countries, the whole of this valuable commerce is left to the mercy of pirates, privateers, and men-of-war; the two first, always ready to depredate on the property of any nation, and the latter but little disposed to respect neutral rights (as we know from experience), unless awed by the presence of a respectable naval force.

The Chamber of Commerce of this city therefore most respectfully beg leave to suggest the expediency of immediately dispatching not only a respectable but an imposing naval force for the protection of our commerce in that quarter.

I have the honor to be, with the utmost respect, your most obedient servant,

W. LORMAN, President of the Baltimore Chamber of Commerce.

To the Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the United States Navy.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 304. [1ST SESSION.

CORRESPONDENCE ON THE COURSE PURSUED BY COMMODORE DAVID PORTER, IN COMMAND OF THE SQUADRON FOR THE SUPPRESSION OF PIRACY IN THE WEST INDIES, AND MATTERS INCIDENTAL THERETO.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 21, 1826.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, March 15, 1826.

SIR: In answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 16th of December, 1825, the Secretary of the Navy has the honor to send a printed volume,* containing the proceedings of the late court of inquiry, and court-martial, in the case of Commodore Porter, together with copies of sundry papers which, with the papers accompanying the reports from this Department to the President of the United States, dated 1st of December, 1823, and 1824, are supposed to be "the documents and correspondence connected with the case," which are called for by the latter part of said resolution.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

The honorable the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

NEW CASTLE, October 26, 1824.

To the President of the United States:

Understanding that erroneous impressions have been made on your mind as regards my return from the West Indies in June last, and the removal of the squadron thence, and having been charged by the honorable the Secretary of the Navy, Samuel L. Southard, Esq., in his letter to me of the 21st October, with having left my station in the West Indies without permission, and without apprising the Department of my intention, I take the liberty of enclosing to you a copy of my reply to the charge, together with a copy of my communication of the 28th of May last, expressive of my intention of removing the principal part of the force under my command to the north, and of the causes which compelled me to do so.

I trust that you will believe that my only object in doing this is to defend myself from a serious charge brought against me at this late period, to justify conduct toward me on the part of the Secretary, unexampled, I believe, in the annals of our navy, and I hope such as will never be repeated. I have had the honor to serve under your immediate command in a situation of some danger, one which required extraordinary exertions, and exposed me to extraordinary hardships. You know, also, something respecting my former services, and are well acquainted with my history for the last nine years. My exertions in the West Indies, in the suppression of piracy, have called forth an eulogium from you, which I

---

* This printed volume was communicated to the Senate the 26th of December, 1826. See preceding, No. 270.

rank among the proudest testimonials of my public services. I do not enumerate them, for if they are not known they are not worth enumerating; but I safely and confidently appeal to you, whether under any circumstances of danger, exposure, or privation, you ever knew or ever heard of my shrinking from duty? If you answer in the negative, is it not reasonable to believe that some cause more powerful than mere personal exposure, or personal inconvenience, should have induced me to ask the poor boon that has been denied to me after two years' arduous and active service? Mortification after mortification have been heaped on me, and I go to the duties, which under other circumstances would have been most pleasing to me, with a heavy heart, and with the strongest and most anxious apprehensions for the future. In answer to my application to be relieved, the Secretary informed me that it shall be done when it is convenient to the Department. My convenience, my comfort, my feelings, nay, my life, are therefore entirely held at his mercy. To whom, then, can I appeal but to you? You have witnessed and applauded my conduct, and you alone have it in your power to prevent further outrage to me. I appeal, therefore, with a confidence that the feelings of an officer, which, as you know, are dear to him, may not be suffered to receive further injury in me. In enclosing this letter I beg leave to observe that I have no desire to retire from active service. I wish to be employed wherever my services are most useful to my country, and, in the performance of them, all I ask is the courtesy due to an officer who has done nothing to forfeit the respect of the head of the Department to which he belongs, and who is willing that his conduct shall be subjected to the strictest scrutiny.

I have the honor to be, your very obedient servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

NOTE.—This letter, purporting to have been written at New Castle, was not received by the President until several weeks after its date. It was referred to the Secretary of the Navy, that the papers relating to the matters mentioned in it might be collected, with a statement showing their order, operation, &c. They were collected, and, with the memorandum now accompanying the letter, placed in the President's hands, and after examination were sent to the Department to be filed. They were in the hands of the judge advocate, to be offered to the court should they be asked for by Commodore Porter, or rendered necessary by the course of the evidence. They were among the papers referred to in the proceedings of the court on the first and second days of August.

To the President of the United States, Washington City:

SIR: I have read the communication from Commodore Porter to yourself, dated New Castle, October 26, 1824, which you were pleased to hand me, and I perceive that it is an urgent appeal to your justice to rescue him from mortification, want of courtesy and conduct towards him, on my part, unexampled in the annals of the navy. As such, I beg leave, respectfully, to suggest to you that it demands your personal attention.

You have already been made acquainted with every leading fact connected with the intercourse between Commodore Porter and the Department, since I came into it. No step of importance has been taken without your approbation, and in several instances your direction. It would be well, however, that you should review the whole, in order that you may form a deliberate judgment upon the case, as your guide in what shall hereafter occur. For this purpose I enclose all the letters received from him, and copies and extracts of all the orders sent to him, which can, I believe, furnish any aid in making up your opinion.

The determination heretofore taken, that Commodore Porter should be recalled, at a time when no injury would be done to the public, will certainly be executed, unless, on such review, you should disapprove it.

If it should be found that I have, in anything, lacked courtesy towards so distinguished an officer, or done him any injustice, my regret would be severe. I should find no consolation in the power I have the right to exercise, if an unwise use of it has wronged any one, especially Commodore Porter.

The object of placing a squadron in the West Indies could only be accomplished by a steady and persevering application of our force. The law, public interest, and public opinion, all require this.

The original instructions, numbered 1 and 2, accompany this letter. I am not aware that they have been altered. Occasional directions, as to the application of a part of the force, have been given, but these have been his general guide.

On the 24th day of June last he arrived in Washington. Some hours after his arrival, and in the evening of the same day, Lieut. Legaré presented to me his letter of the 28th of May last, marked A, which Commodore Porter had passed on his way to this place.

The next morning I left Washington on a visit of five or six days to my family, and did not see him nor make any communication to him until my return, when he was prepared to visit the springs. To this visit I afterwards assented.

On the day after his arrival he wrote a letter to the Departmant, marked B, which is worthy of particular notice, as containing his account of the causes of his return, and his view of the health of Thompson's Island at that time.

On the 29th of June last copies of the several letters which had been sent to the station, and among the rest those of the 31st of May, 1824, were furnished to him.

On the 19th of July last was sent the letter numbered 5, and on the 9th of August that numbered 6, conveying to him the necessity, in the opinion of the Department, of sending back the force which he had withdrawn.

I left Washington on the 3d of August, 1824, and certainly did not expect, as he had arrived in June, that he would be here on my return in September. Late in September, however, on my reaching New York, he was there, attending, probably, to preparations of the vessels under his command.

At that place I informed him of my intention to place the Constellation under his command; but made no arrangement when, or how she was to join the squadron, or that he should remain to go out in her.

About the 11th or 12th of October I stated to him that an order would probably be given for his immediate departure in the John Adams, then in the Delaware, to which he very properly replied that he should promptly obey any order which he received from the Department.

On the 14th of October I gave the order of that date, numbered 7, which I believe was not delivered until the 18th or 19th, to which, on the 20th, I received his answer of the 19th, marked E. To that answer your particular attention is requested, both from its character, and because both it and my orders to him are omitted in the communication from New Castle, in which he makes his complaint, and by which he purports to present a view of the injuries he has received.

You will excuse the trouble I give in directing your attention to certain portions of this letter.

He states that he "has sought in vain," in my instructions of the 14th, 15th, 16th and 19th for the motive of my unexpected order for him to proceed as speedily as possible to his station in the John Adams instead of the Constellation, as was expected and arranged.

From the foregoing statements I cannot very well imagine how the order could have been unexpected, and I confess I was not aware when I gave it that it was necessary for me to submit to Commodore Porter "my motive" for giving it. I had thought it sufficient for me, as your representative, to give the order, and that it was his duty, without questioning its propriety, to obey it.

I had before that time, also, communicated to him some scraps of newspapers, conveying information of piracies. The public prints were full of complaints on the subject; inquiries were constantly made where the commanding officer was, and why our force did not repress those evils. His own character and that of the government were endangered by his delay. All this, it is presumed, he knew; and if he did not, it was enough that his station was there; it was his duty to be on it.

Why he says that it was arranged that he should go in the Constellation and not in the John Adams I know not, nor when, or where such an arrangement was made. All that I had said verbally was, that the Constellation should join the squadron as soon as she could be prepared; but he had received no permission to remain until she was prepared. And, although I believe he did order officers to her, here, in the United States, in violation of one regulation, (see page 20, and section the 1st of "Rules, Regulations and Instructions for the Naval Service of the United States,") and did direct as to repairs, stores, &c., in violation of other regulations, (see said rules, page 12, section the 2d, and page 14, section the 17th;) yet should this prove to be so, as the Department and Commissioners were quite willing, if not competent, to discharge their respective duties, it was not necessary that he should remain to perform them, nor could his interference with them, without rebuke, create an arrangement by which he was to proceed to his station in that ship, rather than in any other.

As to what is said of exposure to insult of the pendant of an American commodore by being hoisted on board a sloop-of-war, his arguments on that subject, and his aversion to being instrumental in the exposure, it is proper to admit that I have been profited by arguments somewhat in the style of his present letter; but it is also to be remarked that, so far as I am informed, when Commodore Porter sought earnestly the command of this squadron, no larger vessel belonged to it, nor was any promised or proposed. But he then understood perfectly the nature of the service, of the vessels, and of the appropriation, and that if a larger vessel were added, it must be taken from the general appropriation, not from that for the suppression of piracy. It is proper to add that the very orders on which he comments state that the Constellation would be sent to him "as speedily as possible." As to the honor of an "American commodore's pendant," the only question was whether he should wait here for the larger ship and neglect the interests of the service, or go to the service and have the ship sent to him as soon as repairs and crew would permit.

The nature, expense, responsibility, &c., &c., of the service are, it is hoped, perfectly known and duly appreciated, but it was not known that the command had ceased to be pleasant, or another commander would have been substituted.

I am not aware of the reasons which induce the belief that the "generous confidence" of the Department, which "encouraged to active and faithful performance of duty," had been withdrawn, nor do I know what "orders implying want of confidence were almost daily handed to him." I enclose all that were given within several months preceding this letter, which can, I think, by possibility, be construed to have any effect on this point; they are numbered 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15 and 16; and, although I will not deny that I thought and felt that Commodore Porter had more than once unnecessarily assumed the duties of the Department, yet I was cautious not to wound his feelings by anything like rebuke; the orders, particularly that numbered 3, will show rather a wish to free myself from imputation of neglect than to condemn him. In this, perhaps, I erred, and to this are, perhaps, in some measure, to be attributed the manner and the matter of his subsequent course.

His complaint of want of instructions, respecting South American crusiers, is not very well founded. He could not have had better instructions than the general ones, which are given to all our crusiers; a copy of which accompanies this, numbered 2.

The Department could not possibly give specific instructions, for specific cases, which were to be anticipated. And there was one principle, which he ought not to have forgotten, that an officer has no right to go beyond his instructions, in seizing vessels belonging to any nation. On this point, I refer to my letter of the 21st of October last, numbered 17, and also to that numbered 20.

I do not doubt that Commodore Porter's health was not good; but I do doubt the propriety of an officer leaving his station without urgent necessity, and without notice to the Department. It does not seem very candid, to urge the notice given by his letter of the 28th of May, 1824, marked A, and which reached this place after he did. Leaving a station, without notice, is a violation of the rules and regulations (see page 15, section the 28th); and it would not, in this instance, have passed unrebuked, but for other considerations. The impropriety will appear strongly, from the fact that several communications were sent to him, after he left the station; and about the day of his arrival, I denied that he was about to return, to those who inquired on the subject. There were others, however, better informed than the Secretary.

He thinks "he owes it to himself and his family, if not to his country, to avoid that climate." It would certainly be matter of regret that he should fail in what he owes to either; but it seems to be the tenure of the office he holds, to go where the interest of the public requires. Officers of equal rank have cruised for years upon that station; and inferior officers were then daily cruising there under his orders.

Notwithstanding the manner of his return, and other matters, I did not give an earlier order for him to resume his duties, because his health had been bad; but as that difficulty was removed sometime before the order of the 14th of October, and there was no danger from the climate after the middle of October, as he himself assured the Department (see his letter, marked D), no good reason for longer delay could be imagined. Besides, the complaints of increasing piracy were renewed by the public prints, merchants and public agents, and he had been apprised of it by communications from the Department, and it did not correspond with my notions of duty to disregard the complaints, and allow a greater chance for the depredations to pass unpunished, in order that the "pendant of an American commodore" might be hoisted for a few weeks "on board the Constellation rather than the John Adams." All alarm on the score of health did seem to me too visionary to be the foundation of any movement in the naval service.

From what expressions in my order of the 14th of October, or any other, Commodore Porter derived the idea, that I considered Thompson's Island as his station, and that he was to remain stationary there, or to lead in person every expedition fitted out from it, cannot readily be guessed. The order merely directs him to proceed to his station, but does not name or define it. Its limits were very extensive, many parts of it very healthy, but the city of Washington was not within it. Nor do I perceive whence is derived the idea that that order implies an unwillingness in him to go. It is in the same style as his original orders, as his orders on his return last year, and as the orders to all other officers. His error was in undertaking to judge when his presence on the station was necessary; that was the business of another, and he had no right to question the judgment which might be formed upon it. It may be that he derived his impression from previous orders, which stated the necessity of the vessels being on the station, and communicated acts of piracy, and complaints against the squadron. It would have been better had those induced an earlier return.

The style in which a change of duty is asked, in the letter of the 19th of October, 1834, marked E, following as it does the crimination in the early part of that letter, is worthy of your observation.

On the receipt of Commodore Porter's letter, it was felt to be impossible, consistently with the respect which the Department owed to itself, to pass it without notice. The proper remedy might have been, either to accept his resignation of the command, and place him on furlough, or arrest and try him. But I believed it necessary that an officer of rank should be on the station, that no other could immediately go there and the public interest might be endangered, and that he ought to be compelled to obey an order, which, upon review, I could not find to be objectionable.

I, therefore, gave the order of the 21st of October, 1824, numbered 18, and soon after wrote to another officer to prepare for that service, determining to recall Commodore Porter, as soon as it could be done consistently with the public interest. That determination is still unchanged.

On receiving the order of the 21st of October, he wrote the letter dated the 22d, marked E, a copy of which he has enclosed to you, as his defence against a charge brought by me against himself; having omitted to apprise you of any of the preceding facts, or even to furnish you with a copy of the order to which his letter was an answer.

As you have now the order, I should be pleased that you would compare it with what purports to be the answer. I offer a very few remarks upon it.

First. There was a necessity for the return of the squadron in 1823, on account of the number of officers sick and dead. His report, on his arrival in June, 1824, (see his letter marked B,) is, that the island promised to be healthy this year, &c. The circumstances were by no means similar, if his reports be correct.

Second. The permission of August 19th, 1823, numbered 19, was given by my predecessor.

Third. The extract from the orders of the 1st of February, 1823, is nothing more, in substance, than is given to every commanding officer, and is a direction to great care and caution; but it gives no authority to leave a station at the discretion of the officer. It grants no more than is possessed by every officer when necessity presses him.

Fourth. The opinion that all the force ought to be on the station had been communicated by the letters numbered 5 and 6. Commodore Porter did, also, know that the Executive was dissatisfied with his return.

Fifth. But, if his return was proper, there ought to have been some limit to his stay. He left his station early in June; the order to return, of which he complains, was given the 14th of October, after at least four months' absence.

Sixth. It is somewhat singular that Commodore Porter should complain that it was not intimated to him, nor suspected by him, that the removal of the vessels and his own stay here did not meet the approbation of the government. He must have forgotten what related to his interview with yourself; the orders for the return of the schooners and the John Adams, and the frequent communications of complaints on the subject of piracy. And as to his declaration that, if the idea had occurred to him that he was not acting in full accordance with its views, he would have instantly left Washington, on his return, I have only to subjoin the fact that he wrote the letter of the 19th of October in answer to an order to return to his station, after he had been four months absent from it.

My remark, respecting his impression that Washington was within the limits of his station, was, perhaps, unnecessary; but it arose from a part of his letter of the 19th of October, from the length of his stay here, from the offence given by the order to leave it, from orders given by him, here, for change of service of officers, and for repairs, &c., &c.,—orders never given by officers in the United States, and when not on their station.

In his letter of the 28th of May, marked A, communicated to you, in which he attributes the removal of the vessels to the north to a deficiency of surgeons, it is only necessary to refer to my letter of the 31st of May, 1824, numbered 3, to letters numbered 21 and 22; and to add that the order, at the close o No. 3, was indispensably necessary, from the rapid and constant changes permitted in the officers of the squadron.

It is, perhaps, proper that I should, at this time, lay before you a letter from Commodore Porter, of the 5th of June last, marked F, respecting the case of Lieut. Kennon, with the facts of which you are perfectly acquainted. Also, a letter of the 11th of August, and one of the 20th of October, 1824, marked G, and H, respecting acting appointments, with the remark that there are in the squadron, at this moment, I believe, above forty officers, with acting appointments, not one of whose names can I find recorded in the Department.

I also submit to you a letter to Commodore Porter, numbered 16, and one from that officer, marked I, respecting the appointment of Lieut. Aulick to do the duties of captain of the squadron, with the remark that, in the letter of the 3d of November, 1823, marked J, Commodore Porter asks for a master commandant, as necessary for this service. Captain Finch was appointed to it, and, after his return, there was an abundance of officers of that grade, fully competent to the duties. Under these circumstances, I did not think it proper to confirm an order, or direction, to Lieut. Aulick, given without my permission, to repair from New York to this place to assume those duties.

I also enclose for your perusal, letters marked K, L, M, N, O.

After you shall have examined these papers, I shall receive your direction, either to recall Commodore Porter, as I had heretofore determined, or take such other course as you may consider proper.

With the highest respect, I have the honor to be, sir, your most obedient servant.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, December 20, 1822.

SIR: You are hereby appointed to the command of the vessels-of-war of the United States on the West India station, and of those to be purchased and equipped for the suppression of piracy. You will proceed with all possible diligence and expedition, under the direction of the Navy Commissioners, to procure by purchase, and equip the vessels authorized by the Department to be procured for that purpose.

When you are prepared to proceed on service, report to the Department, in order that further instructions may be furnished to you. During the continuance of your command, you are authorized to hoist a broad pendant, and you will be entitled to the pay and emoluments of an officer commanding a squadron of vessels on separate service.

You will apply to the Navy Commissioners for such orders as may be necessary from their office to facilitate the execution of your instructions.

I am, respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) SMITH THOMPSON.

Capt. DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. Naval Forces, West Indies.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, April 10, 1823.

SIR: Thomas Randall, Esq., special agent for the government, proceeds in the U. S. brig Enterprise, Lieutenant Commandant John Gallagher, to Porto Rico; and should he, as he will in all probability, have occasion to transmit dispatches to the United States, you will send them by one of the small vessels under your command, retaining the brig Enterprise, as more efficient for the protection of our commerce in the West Indies and Gulf of Mexico.

I am, respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) SMITH THOMPSON.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. Naval Forces, West Indies.

Extract of a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, dated May 26, 1823, to Captain David Porter, commanding United States naval forces, West Indies, Thompson's Island.

In all future negotiations by drafts or bills upon the Department, you will, when practicable, direct your purser to draw the bill and submit it for your approval. All difficulties will, by this course, be avoided, and no further charges made against you by the books of the Treasury. It is the course also pointed out by the regulations for the service in relation to transactions of that nature. It would even be desirable that the accounts for the articles purchased might also accompany the bill or draft, that the transaction might be closed at once by a final settlement.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 14, 1823.

SIR: Your letter of the 18th ult. was duly received, and, agreeably to your suggestion, permission is granted to the vessels attached to the squadron under your command to take out gold from the United States; but you will, however, issue the most positive injunction to the commanders, respectively, not to enter any port in which the yellow fever prevails, so as to endanger the lives of the officers and men.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) SMITH THOMPSON.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. Squadron, West Indies, &c.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 14, 1823.

SIR: In the first vessel of the squadron under your command that you shall order to Washington, be pleased to send John Cunningham, one of the marines attached to the expedition against the pirates, as I have given an assurance to his aged mother that he shall be discharged from the service of the United States.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) SMITH THOMPSON.

Commodore D. PORTER, commanding, &c.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 24, 1823.

SIR: I deferred replying to your communication, respecting the disposition of the wrecked property that you deemed it your duty to take into custody, until I could have an opportunity of submitting the matter to the consideration of the President of the United States, who was, at the time your letter was received, absent on a visit to Virginia.

There can be no doubt, from the representations you have made, that the wreck was fraudulent, and that method adopted to supersede, as was supposed, the necessity of proceedings in a court of admiralty, to try the question of prize. There is no statute of the United States regulating the disposition of property wrecked on our territory; but the common law contemplates all wrecks as the property of the sovereign. The proper course will, therefore, be to send the whole of the property to St. Augustine and have it placed in the custody of the marshal, carefully preserving all the papers and writings found with the same, which you will transmit to the attorney of the United States for East Florida, with a request that he will institute proceedings against the property in the superior court of East Florida, on behalf of the United States, founded on the right of the United States to the said property as wreck, and give notice to all parties interested to appear and interpose their respective claims.

I am, very respectively, &c.,

(Signed) SMITH THOMPSON.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. Naval Forces, West Indies.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 26, 1823.

SIR: The President of the United States has under consideration the subject, mentioned in some of your letters, of South American privateers, and their prizes, touching at Thompson's Island; and so soon as he shall decide in relation to the same, the result will be communicated to you.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) SMITH THOMPSON.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. Naval Forces, West Indies, &c.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, August 7, 1823.

SIR: In my letter to you of the 26th ult., it was stated that the subject of private armed vessels entering the ports of the United States was under consideration, and, since that time, the conduct to be observed by the United States towards the public and private armed vessels of belligerents, and their prizes, has been determined, and you will find the rules that have been adopted embodied in the enclosed circular, addressed by the Treasury Departmant to the respective collectors of the customs, and which I now transmit to you for your information and the government of the naval force under your command.

You will not permit any clause of the enclosed circular to contravene my instructions to you of the 24th of July last, in relation to the disposition of the property believed to have been fraudulently wrecked at Key Vacas.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) SMITH THOMPSON.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. Naval Forces, West Indies and Gulf of Mexico.

Circular.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, July 30, 1823.

SIR: As it is probable that in the progress of the war, which now exists between France and Spain, the public and private armed vessels of one, and perhaps of both belligerents, may, by stress of weather, pursuit of enemies, or some other urgent necessity, be forced to enter the ports and harbors of the United States, it becomes the duty of the government to prescribe the manner in which they shall be treated whilst they remain within its jurisdiction.

As there exists, upon this subject, no legislative enactment, the question must be decided by the conventional engagements which the United States have contracted with the belligerent parties.

By the 8th article of the treaty between the United States and Spain, it is provided that the public and private vessels of Spain, when forced by stress of weather, pursuit of enemies, or any other urgent necessity, to seek shelter or harbor, may enter into any of the rivers, bays, roads, or ports belonging to the United States, and shall be received with all humanity, and enjoy all favor, protection and help, and be permitted to refresh and provide themselves, at reasonable rates, with provisions and all things needful for the subsistence of their persons or reparation of their ships and prosecution of their voyage; and they shall be no ways hindered from departing from the said ports or roads, but may remove and depart when and whither they please, without any let or hindrance.

With France, the United States have no treaty stipulations upon the subject. The obligations of neutrality, however, impose upon them the observance of the same course of conduct toward both belligerents, unless Spain has a right by treaty to exclusive privileges. A reference to the provisions of the 8th article of the treaty above recited, proves that no exclusive privileges have been granted to her. It becomes, then, the duty of the United States to treat the public and private armed vessels of both parties in the same manner.

Assuming the provisions of the article referred to as the rule by which the conduct of the United States is to be regulated, I am instructed by the President to direct:

1st. That the public and private armed vessels of France and Spain, with their prizes, may, under the circumstances described in the said article, enter the ports, harbors, and waters of the United States, and repair any damages which they may have sustained; but no increase of arms or munitions of war, or of the number of men on board, can be lawfully made.

2d. That such prizes cannot be condemned or sold, within the jurisdiction of the United States, and consequently cannot be admitted to entry at the custom houses, nor permitted to enter into the general consumption.

3d. That they may, at any time, depart from the United States without let or hindrance.

4th. That when prize vessels have been wrecked, or so disabled as not to be rendered seaworthy, their cargoes may be reshipped in any other vessel which shall enjoy an exemption from capture not enjoyed by such prize vessels. For example: if France, in the progress of the war, shall conform to the rule that free vessels make free goods, the cargoes of vessels captured by either belligerent, when reshipped in neutral vessels, will enjoy an exemption from capture which the prize vessels did not enjoy.

5th. During the time that prize vessels may remain in the ports of the United States, they shall be subject to such inspection and such superintendence by the custom house officers as may be necessary to prevent smuggling of any kind.

The same rules are to be observed in relation to the public and private armed vessels of Spain, and of the independent governments established in Spanish America, and their prizes, when brought within the jurisdiction of the United States.

I remain, with respect, your obedient servant.

—— ——, Collector of the Customs.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, August 19, 1823.

SIR: Your letter of the 1st inst., relative to the transportation of specie from Vera Cruz to Cadiz, has been submitted to the President; and it would afford both him and myself great pleasure to comply with your request, could it be done consistently with the honor of the American flag, and the relation in which we stand to the belligerents.

Your letter is not explicit as to whom the money belongs. I take it for granted, however, it is Spanish property, and from the amount most likely belonging to the Spanish government. In either case it is deemed inadmissible to employ our public armed vessels for its transportation; under no circumstances could it be permitted to send a vessel direct from Vera Cruz to Cadiz. Should I be under a misapprehension as to the ownership of the property, and upon further explanation your request can with propriety be complied with, I can assure you it will give me great satisfaction to promote your interest in this respect.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) SMITH THOMPSON.

Com. DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. Naval Forces, West Indies, &c.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, December 22, 1823.

SIR: You will as speedily as possible, with all the vessels under your command, resume your station at Thompson's Island, and continue your exertions to repress piracy and protect our commerce.

It is the intention of the Department to increase the force under your command, as soon as it can be effected. To this end the frigate Congress will, after her arrival in the United States, be ordered to join you, and in the course of the spring one or more sloops-of-war will be added to those already with you. The officers engaged in the survey of the coast of Florida will report to you, and you will communicate their proceedings to this Department.

You will keep, as constantly as you can, one of your vessels in the neighborhood of Vera Cruz, cruising between that port and Punto Lezardo, to protect our commerce in that quarter. As soon as possible send the Hornet or one of the large schooners to cruise on the coast of Africa, touching at Cape Mesurado, ministering to the wants of the African agency, and thence returning to the usual track of the slave ships. Let the cruise of the vessel be such as will comport, as far as possible, with the health and comfort of the officers and men. Upon its return you will report the proceedings to this Department, and send another vessel upon the same service.

Our national vessels ought not, and must not, be used for purposes of commercial adventure. You may receive on board specie and the articles permitted by the act "for the better government of the navy," belonging exclusively to our own citizens, and carry them from one port or place to another, when it does not, in any degree, interfere with your other duties, or violate the laws of the country where you are. You may also bring to the United States specie belonging to our own citizens; but you are in no case to permit anything in the shape or character of public advertisements to be used for the purpose of giving information that you will carry them. So many complaints have been publicly made on this subject, that you will carefully abstain from everything which can give rise to unfriendly comments; and that the government may know the extent to which the commercial interests of our citizens are benefited by the assistance afforded by our public vessels on this point, and be prepared to answer any complaints on the subject which may be made by individuals or governments, you will from time to time make reports to this Department of all the specie and other articles you may carry,—the places to and from which you carry them, and the circumstances, terms, and conditions under which you do it.

You will communicate as often as possible to this Department; but you will prevent communications from all officers and men under your command to our public prints respecting the movements of the vessel, and of any of your transactions. The propriety of such publications must be left to this Department, and it will take care to afford to the public full knowledge of all facts which the interests of the nation will permit to be known. You will be the channel of all communications from the officers and men under your command, and will see that every communication from any of them to yourself is received through the commanding officer of the person making it. In cases of complaint and grievance, in which the superior officer is unwilling to be the channel of communication, you will receive it directly from the person complaining; but it is hoped that this will seldom be the case, as the duty of the superior officer requires him to forward all which are necessary and proper.

Rigid discipline, enforced in a mild and gentlemanly manner, is essential to maintain the reputation of the navy, and must not for one moment be neglected. Public opinion seems strongly to incline to the belief that such discipline is not sufficiently preserved; great care must be used to overcome this impression.

On proper occasions you will enjoin it on all grades of officers that they are not to speak reproachfully of each other, or disrespectfully of their superiors, or retail anecdotes which do no credit to the individual members of the profession nor to the character of the service, and are never on any occasion to comment on each other in the public prints, but that each is to maintain in himself and encourage in others the most marked respect, the most decorous language, and the strictest correctness of conduct. A thousand acts may disgrace the individual officer and injure the reputation of the navy, which yet cannot well be made the cause of courts-martial and punishment. By a course of rigid discipline, and attention to language and conduct in the officers, it is hoped that there will be less call for public trials, which have heretofore been so numerous, and lessened the warm attachment of the nation to the navy. It has happened on several occasions, with those who have preceded you in command, that a number of the officers have been arrested and sent home to await the return of the squadron, which has created great expense and inconvenience to individuals in the service. It is hop d that you will be able to preserve a proper discipline without a resort to this expedient, which should only be used when no doubt of its necessity remains.

You will make no acting appointments of any description, except in cases of absolute necessity, and then with the understanding that the appointment ceases with the necessity which created it.

Great anxiety is felt that the most rigorous attention should be paid to the situation and improvement of the midshipmen; they are to be objects of your unceasing care, both as to their conduct and improvement in their profession. Of the most common difficulties into which they fall, you are perfectly aware, and they need not be mentioned to you; but there is one which I fear is generally unknown to the commanding officers, and which is said to be common: I mean the habit of borrowing from each other money and articles of dress of all kinds. This is a habit which produces improvidence and uncleanliness, and ought to be repressed. It is also especially necessary that commanding officers guard against the exercise of their feelings of partiality and preference in the treatment of inferiors. Every officer is entitled to and must enjoy all the rights and privileges of his rank and station. Whenever they are denied to one and permitted to another, or preferences are shown, unkind feelings and insubordination are immediately engendered and lasting injury done to the service. You need not, I am sure, be urged to an attention to this matter.

It will probably be in your power, while protecting the commercial, to add something to the agricultural interests of the nation, by procuring information respecting valuable animals, seeds, and plants, and importing such as you conveniently can, without inattention to your more appropriate duties, and without expense to the government.

I enclose, for your information and direction, copies of the acts of Congress relating to piracy and the slave trade, together with the general instructions on those points given to the commanders of our cruising vessels. Previously to sailing, transmit a complete muster roll of all persons attached to the vessels under your command, mentioning, among other things, of what States the officers, both commissioned and warranted, are residents or citizens.

Accompanying this, for your information and a guide in your instructions, are copies of the orders given by this Department to some of the commanders who were directed to cruise on the coast of Africa.

Wishing you good health, a prosperous and honorable cruise, I am, with great respect,

(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

P. S.—The United States schooner Porpoise, Lieutenant Commandant Ramage, is under your command.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. Naval Force, West Indies, Gulf of Mexico and Coast of Africa. Present.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, January 12, 1824.

SIR: I enclose to you a copy of a letter from Doctor Christie to Commodore Rodgers, and request your attention to its contents.

After you shall have made yourself fully acquainted with the situation of the persons on the island, if you shall be of opinion that their safety requires it, you will send them to the United States.

I remain, very respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, commanding United States West India Squadron, Norfolk, Va.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, January 14, 1824.

SIR: I enclose to you a letter received from John Mullen, one of the crew of the United States ship Hornet; you will please to direct an inquiry into his case, and if you shall be satisfied that he is a British subject, let him be discharged, if he be not in debt to the United States.

I am, very vespectfully, &c.,

(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Enclosed is an extract from a letter dated at Alvarado, in November last, submitted for your information.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, commanding United States West India Squadron, Norfolk, Va.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, January 15, 1824.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit to you the enclosed letter, from C. C. Cambreleng, Esq., and to request your immediate attention to the same.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,
(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Captain DAVID PORTER, commanding United States West India Squadron, Norfolk, Va.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, February 7, 1824.

SIR: Upon the subject of your letter, dated the 24th ultimo, respecting the cruise contemplated for the United States schooner Grampus, I would observe that the orders to Lieutenant Sloat are proper, except that the aid furnished on the coast of Africa must be to the agent of the government for recaptured Africans, not to the agent of the American Colonization Society. The government has not yet recognized that society as proper to receive such aid, but the result will probably be the same.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,
(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, commanding United States West India Squadron, Norfolk, Virginia.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, February 19, 1824.

SIR: Your communications on the subject of blockade have been received, and laid before the President, and he has instructed me to inform you that it is his wish that you should not attempt to break any blockade sustained by force; but when you are prevented from entering a blockaded place, immediately make report thereof, with the circumstances attending it, to this Department.

I am also instructed to urge upon you the cultivation of the best personal and national feeling in your intercourse with all the officers of other nations with whom you may meet, and enjoin the same upon those under your command.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,
(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Com. DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. W. I. Squadron, Norfolk.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, February 21, 1824.

SIR: I enclose, for your information, copy of a letter from Mr. Thomas H. Perkins, jr, of Boston, in relation to measures supposed to have been taken to procure a schooner to be employed for piratical purposes.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,
(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Com. DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. Naval Force, West Indies, &c.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, March 19, 1824.

SIR: It has been represented to this Department that some hostile feelings have been manifested by the Indians in Florida towards the commissioners engaged in running certain lines under the authority of the government, and that the occasional appearance of an armed vessel on the western coast of Florida, particularly in Tampa Bay and its neighborhood, would be serviceable in repressing those feelings, and keeping the Indians quiet.

It has also been represented that many depredations are committed on the live oak, cedar and other timber of Florida, and that much of it is carried away and sold in the West India islands, and elsewhere. It is very important that these depredations should be prevented. On the 23d of February, 1822, a law was passed authorizing the President of the United States to employ the land and naval forces to prevent the felling, cutting, and other destruction of timber, or the carrying away of what was already cut, and to take measures to prevent the destruction of the public timber in that Territory. It is believed that, by sending frequently one or more of the vessels under your command along the western coast of Florida, both objects may be accomplished, and it is the wish of the President that it be may done.

I take this occasion to remind you that I am very anxious that all commanding officers should make frequent and particular reports to the Department of the conduct and merits of the officers under their command.

I am, very, &c.,
(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Com. DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. W. I. Squadron, &c., Thompson's Island.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, April 23, 1824.

SIR: I have received a letter from the presidents of the Union and New York Insurance Companies, at New York, stating that, "by an arrival at Philadelphia, information is received that the schooner Pacification, Hilliard, master, bound from Jacmel, in the Island of Hayti, to New York, had been captured by a Colombian armed schooner, and was afterwards fallen in with by the United States steam galliot Sea Gull, commanded by Lieutenant Voorhees, who took possession of and ordered her for Key West." They also state that insurance on this vessel and cargo to a considerable amount had been effected at their respective offices, and they are therefore desirous, for the benefit of all interested, that the property should be brought to its port of original destination.

If there be not in the case some facts which would render a compliance with their request inexpedient or improper, it would be best to gratify their wish.

I am, very, &c., your obedient servant,

(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. Naval Forces, West Indies, Gulf of Mexico, &c.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, May 24, 1824.

SIR: Your letter of the 3d instant has been received, advising that a bill of exchange, drawn by Purser Thornton upon this Department for $5,000, had been returned protested. This circumstance is to be regretted, both as it respects the injury done to the credit of navy bills, and the damages incurred in the present instance. The refusal to pay this draft when offered was occasioned entirely by the want of funds, in consequence of the delay in the passage of the annual appropriation bill by Congress, and an occurrence of the kind will not again take place.

I am, respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. Naval Forces, West Indies, Gulf of Mexico, &c.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, May 31, 1824.

SIR: Your letter of the 4th of May has been received. The Decoy will be prepared to return to you as speedily as possible. No provision has been made for the repairs of the Grayhound; and it is probable that she will be laid up or sold. When any vessels are ordered home for repairs, they must be reported to the Department, that orders may be issued for the purpose.

The amount of force at this time on the station is less than was intended; but the delay in passing the appropriation law has rendered it impossible to send you either the Hornet or Porpoise. They will both be dispatched now, as soon as they can be prepared. This delay is the more to be regretted, as the Hornet must either encounter the rainy season, or not go to the coast of Africa, as was originally designed.

You have now under your command the John Adams, Hornet, Spark, Porpoise, Shark, Sea Gull, Decoy, and seven small schooners, in all fourteen vessels, exclusive of the barges. I did intend to send a larger vessel than either of them, but the amount of the appropriation, and the time it was made, will probably put it out of my power. It shall still, however, be done if it can be accomplished.

I regret the state of your medical aid. You have now eleven medical officers attached to the station; and within ten months past there have been under your command no less than five surgeons, and seventeen surgeons' mates, many of them acting as surgeons, and fitted for the office. With such numbers your medical assistance ought not to have been so reduced as you state it to be at present. Neither these, nor other officers, must be permitted to leave the station for light excuses. If they are, it will be impossible for the Department to keep the station supplied. All that can be done, with the numbers for which provision is made by law, will be done. In the meantime those with you must be retained, unless absolute necessity compels them to leave you.

I am, respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. Naval Forces, West Indies, Gulf of Mexico, and Coast of Africa, Thompson's Island.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 8, 1824.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit to you, herewith, copies of letters addressed to you from this Department, but which you have not received, bearing dates on the 19th February, and 16th March, (enclosing copy of a letter from James Beatty,) 19th March, and 23d March, (enclosing copy of a letter from Lieutenant F. H. Gregory,) to which I respectfully request your attention.

I am, &c.,

(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, per CHAS. HAY.

Captain DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. West India Squadron, &c.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, August 16, 1824.

SIR: I enclose for your information a copy of a communication from Col. George M. Brooke, of the U. S. army, to the Secretary of War, respecting some timber seized by the former, and supposed to have been cut from the public lands in Florida. I refer you to my letter, under date of the 19th March last, for instructions on this subject.

I am, very, &c.,

(Signed) SECRETARY OF THE NAVY, per CHAS. HAY.

Captain DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. West India Squadron, &c. Present.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, September 8, 1824.

SIR: I am instructed to inform you that the commanding officer at New York has been directed to send fifty men, if that number has been entered for the general service, immediately to Philadelphia, to serve on board the U. S. ship John Adams. The recruiting officer, at Baltimore has been authorized to enter twenty-five additional men, and send them as early as practicable to Philadelphia for the same ship. These, it is supposed, will be nearly enough to make up her complement, but, if not, the deficiency will be supplied in a few days.

I am, very, &c.,

(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, per JOHN BOYLE.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. West India Squadron, Chester, Penn.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, October 9, 1824.

SIR: Surgeon Walter W. New having reported to you, in obedience to his order of the 11th June last, you are hereby authorized to grant him leave of absence for five months, if, in your opinion, the situation of the service will permit his absence for that length of time.

I am, very, &c.,

(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. Squadron, W. I. and Gulf of Mexico, &c.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, October 14, 1824.

SIR: It is deemed expedient by the Executive that you proceed as speedily as possible to your station in the John Adams, that by your presence there the most efficient protection may be afforded to our commerce, and you may be ready to meet any contingencies which occur. The Constellation will be fitted for sea, and sent to you as speedily as possible.

I enclose, by order of the President, an extract from a letter lately received from the Island of Cuba. You will consider it confidential, and to be used for your information so far as you may find it useful.

With the Constellation, directions will be sent for you to proceed to the Island of Hayti, there to accomplish certain objects which will be particularly explained to you, and instructions given.

I enclose a circular letter on the subject of acting appointments, to which I urge your particular attention. No subject has been found to create greater difficulties than acting appointments, and permission to officers to perform duties above the grade in which they are known to the Department.

I also enclose certain directions for the survey of Pensacola, Tampa Bay, Key West, and the Dry Tortugas. I have also directed to report to you, for the purpose of aiding in this survey, Master Commandant —— ———, Lieutenant J. W. Sherburne, Midshipmen Lewis M. Goldsborough and Joseph Bowman. Should you deem the services of any other officers necessary for this purpose, you will inform me of it. You will direct a vessel to be used for this purpose. The Florida will be retained for a few weeks to make a survey of the Charleston harbor, after which she will be ordered to proceed forthwith to join your command.

I am, respectfully,

(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore DAVID PORTER. Present.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, October 14, 1824.

SIR: I enclose to you an extract from one of the public prints, to apprise you of the fact that Midshipmen Robert Ritchie, George F. Weaver, and Wm. Green are stated to have sailed from New York in the United States schooner Beagle, the two first as lieutenants, and the last as sailingmaster. I presume this must have been done without your knowledge, as I am aware of no authority which could have been given to these midshipmen to sail from the United States in those capacities.

I am, respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore D. PORTER. Present.

Circular.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, October 14, 1824.

SIR: It has become necessary to enforce rigorously the following directions, to which your particular attention is requested:

No person is to be appointed acting midshipman, or permitted to act as such on board of any of our public vessels, without the express authority and permission of the Secretary of the Navy.

No acting appointments of any other kind are to be made without such permission, except in cases of absolute necessity, and then with the understanding that they cease with the necessity that caused them, and always, as matter of course, when the officers are detached from the vessel or service in which they received them; and when any commander on a foreign station shall be under the necessity of making any acting appointments, he is to give the earliest possible information of the same to the Secretary of the Navy, with his reasons for making such appointments.

No officer acting under an appointment, not expressly sanctioned by the Department, shall wear the uniform of a higher grade than that by which he is known to the Department, nor shall any midshipman or sailingmaster, acting as lieutenant, receive the pay of lieutenant commanding, except under the circumstances provided for in the 13th article, under the head of appointments, in the general regulations of the service.

I am, respectfully, &c.,
(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Com. DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. West India Squadron, Washington.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, October 15, 1824.

SIR: I enclose copy of a resolution of Congress. The surveys and examinations under it, so far as they relate to Thompson's Island, the Dry Tortugas, Tampa Bay, and Pensacola, are confided to your care, superintendence a d direction. The surveys of the two former places, already made, are supposed to be sufficient. Several officers have been directed to report to you to aid in this duty, and you will assign for it such vessel under your command as you think most proper. —— ——, of the corps of engineers, will accompany you to aid in that portion of the service which relates to the defences of the place examined. Having other duties to attend to, it will be best that the vessels to be engaged proceed there immediately, to be followed by you as soon as you can make the necessary and proper arrangements with your squadron. You will make report on the subject at as early a day as possible. Your examination and report will be directed to the following points, viz:

The depth of water upon the bar at the lowest and highest spring tides, and at common tides.

Whether the depth of water upon the bar is affected by any, and what winds, to what extent, and in what manner.

The strength of current on the bar, and to a safe anchorage within it.

Width of channel upon the bar, width of the bar, and nature of the bottom; with what wind large vessels can cross the bar, bound inwards and outwards.

The prevailing winds at different seasons of the year.

Whether the passage across the bar can be commanded by batteries upon the shore.

Whether vessels can anchor without, and near the bar, under the protection of batteries to be erected on the shore.

From what positions, and by what extent and nature of force, can the entrance of the harbor be defended against an enemy.

The extent of safe anchorage for vessels of the largest size which can cross the bar.

The convenience of such anchorage for receiving supplies from the shore.

Facilities for obtaining good fresh water.

What supplies of provisions and stores for a fleet could be obtained from the surrounding country, and to what extent, at short notice.

Whether the harbor has good positions for a dock or navy yard.

How near to the present shore of such position does a channel run, of the same depth as the water on the bar, at highest spring tides.

Has it good fresh water in its vicinity, and in what quantities.

General health of the position, and quality of the soil.

Facilities of wharfing to the channel.

Whether the worm is destructive in the harbor.

From what quarter the navy or dock yard could be most readily attacked.

The best means of defence.

To what extent a militia force could be depended upon to resist a sudden attack.

You will specify the points which are determined from personal observation, and those upon which your information is derived from other and what sources.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,
(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

P. S.—It has been ascertained, since the foregoing was written, that an officer of the corps of engineers cannot be detailed to assist in the survey; you will therefore proceed in the execution of this duty in the best manner you can with the force at your disposal.

Commodore DAVID PORTER. Present.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, October 18, 1824.

SIR: I have examined the regulations and reflected on the subject of Lieutenant Aulick being ordered to discharge the duties of captain of the squadron, and I cannot view it in any other light than a direct violation of the regulations. This being so, I cannot give the orders.

There are several masters commandant not employed, any of whom I should be glad to order to yon for the purpose, if it be your wish to have an officer of that grade to discharge the duty.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,
(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. Naval Forces, West Indies and Gulf of Mexico. Present.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, October 18, 1824.

SIR: Enclosed herewith you will receive a copy of a communication from Andrew Armstrong, United States agent at Port au Prince, to the Secretary of State, respecting the capture of the ship Onis, of New York, by the Colombian privateer Independentia.

I am very, &c.,
(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. Naval Forces, West Indies and Gulf of Mexico. Present.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, October 19, 1824.

SIR: The enclosed papers are submitted for your perusal, and, if you think it necessary, you can make extracts from them; after which, be pleased to return them to the Department.

I am, &c.,
(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, United States Navy. Present.

Circular.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, October 19, 1824.

SIR: Herewith you will receive a quantity of blank forms, of the following description, viz: Monthly return of the officers and crew; of persons discharged; of desertions; and of deaths on board each vessel attached to the squadron under your command.

You will be particular in directing that every commander be furnished with a supply, and requiring that they be carefully and correctly filled up, and regularly forwarded, through you, to this Department. They are always to be filled up for the term of a calendar month, and are to commence from the month next ensuing the departure of a vessel from the United States on a cruise. Whenever it so happens that no deaths, desertions, or discharges take place during a whole month, the fact may be communicated by letter. It is not only desirable, but indispensably necessary, that the Department should be constantly advised of the situation of every vessel in service; therefore, a strict compliance with this, as well as all other circulars, will be exacted.

In addition to the above-mentioned forms, I transmit a number of a different description, exhibiting a general view of the whole squadron under your command.

Should the quantity now sent not be sufficient for all the vessels of your squadron, you will be pleased to advise the Department of the same, and also give early information when a further supply is wanted, that you may be furnished in season therewith. It is presumed that you have enough, at present, for six months.

I am, very, &c.,
(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore DAVID PORTER. Present.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, October 20, 1824.

SIR: Your letter of this day's date has been received; the act of Congress therein referred to was inadvertently omitted in the hurry of making up the last package for you, and is enclosed herewith.

A communication will be addressed to you in the course of the day, respecting the appointment of a master commandant for the surveying service, under your command.

I am, respectfully, &c.,
(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, commanding United States West India Squadron, &c. Present.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, October 20, 1824.

SIR: The commanding officer of the United States ship John Adams has applied to the recruiting officer at Baltimore for twelve men, in addition to those already entered; if this number should be required to make up the complement of that ship, they can be transferred from other service on your application to the Department.

I am, very, &c.,
(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore DAVID PORTER. Present.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, October 21, 1824.

SIR: In reply to that part of your letter dated the 20th inst., which related to the name of the master commandant, left blank in my orders to you of the 14th inst., I would observe that the blank was left on account of your intimation that the officer in command of the vessel designated for the surveying service would be sufficient, as he possessed the requisite qualifications.

The charts necessary to aid you in the accomplishment of the surveys, committed to your direction, will be in readiness to-morrow; and you will please to send for them to the office of the commissioners, in which they are now in possession.

I am, very, &c.,

(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, commanding United States West India Squadron. Present.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, October 21, 1824.

SIR: Until your letters of the 14th and 19th were received, I supposed that an answer had been sent to your inquiries respecting the cruisers sailing under the flags and authority of the governments in South America, which are said to have trespassed upon our commerce.

The subject was promptly laid before the President, his instructions received, and an answer prepared; the omission to send it was accidental. Until it was received, however, the previous instructions were your proper guide.

It is the will of the President that you do not molest vessels belonging to those governments, and bearing their flags, except such as are piratical, if any such there are.

The injuries which we have suffered from vessels of the description you mention have already been made a subject of discussion between us and their respective governments, and it is hoped that speedy reparation will be made and the evil terminated. The object of communicating the instances of capture was to apprise you fully of the character and extent of the evil, so far as known to the Department, that you might do what you could to guard our vessels against it, and procure and furnish such information as might be within your reach upon the subject.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore DAVID PORTER. Present.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, October 21, 1824.

SIR: You letter dated the 19th instant has created surprise. Looking to the good of the service, every attention has been shown to you which your station required, and which could be dictated by a just estimation of your public service.

The command which was given to you, at your earnest request, on the 1st of February, 1823, was a highly important one, and your conduct, in discharge of its duties, satisfactory to the President. The interval since you left that station has been interesting, as it is understood that piracy has revived, and is making extensive ravages on our commerce. Communications have been made to you to apprise you fully of this fact. The presence there of an officer of rank and experience is, of course, necessary. The size of the vessel in which he sails is matter of small moment, and must depend upon circumstances. You are aware of the intention to send the Constellation to that station as soon as she can conveniently be prepared.

Your return to this place without permission, or apprising the Department of a necessity for it, was unexpected; but no complaint has heretofore been made of your remaining here, because it was believed that your health was not perfectly good, and your shoulder lame and painful. But this obstacle has been removed; and had you earlier apprised the Department that you considered this place within the limits of your station, that the command had ceased to be pleasant to you, and that you were apprehensive of the climate, you would have been relieved, and a successor appointed. But having failed to give this information, and the presence of a commander on the station being now indispensable, you will proceed to it.

When it is convenient to the Department, your wish to be relieved shall be gratified. Upon a reperusal of your orders you will find that no intimation is given that Thompson's Island alone is to be considered as the station, and that you are to remain stationary there, nor that you are to lead in person every expedition fitted out from it.

I purposely abstain from comment upon certain matters in your letter. You will hereafter hear from the Department on the subject.

I am, very, &c.,

(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore DAVID PORTER. Present.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, March 24, 1825.

SIR: Midshipman Rowan, of the West India squadron, has applied for leave of absence to visit his friends in Ohio. I have suspended a decision on his request until I can be informed whether you will require his testimony in the investigation which you have called for. Your early attention to this is requested.

I am, respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, United States Navy, Washington.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, March 25, 1825.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of this date, and to inform you that I am aware of no objection, on the part of the Department, to your going to Norfolk and returning at the time specified.

I am, respectfully, &c.,
(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, per C. HAY.

Captain D. PORTER, United States Navy, Washington.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, April 20, 1825.

SIR: Enclosed you will receive a copy of the precept which has been issued for a court to make the inquiry, instituted by the Executive, into your conduct at Foxardo. You will perceive that the same court is also directed to make the inquiry which has been granted at your own request.

In your letter of the 13th instant, which has been received, it created some surprise to find the declaration that the "positive injunction," in the letter from the Department of the 27th December, 1824, to "proceed without unnecessary delay to this place," deprived you of the opportunity, without taking on yourself great responsibility, of obtaining, by personal application, the written testimony necessary in the case.

By referring to that letter, you will find that you are expressly charged to "bring with you those officers whose testimony is necessary, particularly Lieutenant Platt, and such written evidence as you may suppose useful" for the "full investigation," which it was declared the importance of the transaction demanded.

No change has taken place in the views of the Executive, either as to the necessity or character of the investigation, and any delay which has occurred in proceeding with it must he attributed to other causes.

In relation to that part of your letter in which you say, "the affair at Foxardo was the occasion of my recall; the affair of Foxardo was the occasion of my being displaced from my command; it is that affair which now keeps me suspended from the exercise of my official functions," it is proper to remark, that although that affair was the immediate cause of your recall, yet you are not ignorant that it was the purpose of the Department to recall you from that command for other reasons, as soon as it was found convenient to substitute a competent officer in your place, a purpose only prevented by this transaction, which intervened previously to its execution.

No other notice of the style and manner of your letter is deemed necessary, at this time, than to remind you of the relation which subsists between you and the Department.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your most obedient servant,
(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, U. S. Navy. Present.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, April 26, 1825.

SIR: I enclose for your information several papers which have been presented to the Department in the form of complaint, respecting certain proceedings at Thompson's Island.

The Department has not the means of furnishing a satisfactory answer, and requests your early attention to the matter.

The papers sent are the originals, which you will please to return with such statement as you can make on the subject.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,
(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, U. S. Navy. Present.

NAVY DEPARMENT, May 28, 1825.

SIR: The court of inquiry lately assembled at the Navy yard, Washington, has closed its examination into the matters submitted to it, and made report to the Department.

I am instructed by the Executive to inform you that it has been found necessary that further proceedings should be had in relation to the transactions at Foxardo, and that in the course of a few days charges will be preferred, you will be arrested, and a court-martial summoned for your trial.

I am, very respectfully,
(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Captain DAVID PORTER, U. S. Navy. Present.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, June 13, 1825.

SIR: Your letter transmitting a pamphlet respecting the proceedings of the court of inquiry, and the transactions at Foxardo, &c., was received, and the copy, endorsed for the President, immediately delivered to him.

It is cause of surprise that you should have considered it proper, while your case and the report of the court of inquiry were still under the consideration of the Executive, to make a publication relating thereto, and especially a publication in so many respects deficient and inaccurate.

I am, very respectfully,
(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, United States Navy. Present.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, June 22, 1825.

SIR: I enclose to you the charges and specifications upon which you will be tried before a court-martial, which will be convened on the seventh day of July next, at the Navy yard, Washington, and of which Captain James Barron has been appointed the president. At the time and place mentioned you will report yourself to the court for trial upon said charges. In the meantime you will be under no restraint in preparing for your defence. On the receipt of this letter, you will consider yourself under arrest. It is not deemed necessary to call upon you to surrender your sword, nor to assign limits to you.

I am, respectfully, &c.,
(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Capt. DAVID PORTER, United States Navy. Present.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, August 17, 1825.

SIR: I enclose, for your information, a copy of the proceedings of the court-martial, during the five last days in which it was engaged in the trial of the charges against you. You will perceive in them the finding and sentence of the court, with the approval annexed.

I have also to inform you that the proceedings of the court of inquiry, and those of the court-martial, will be published without delay, by direction of the Executive.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,
(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Capt. DAVID PORTER, United States Navy. Present.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, August 20, 1825.

SIR: Your letter of the seventeenth instant, requesting "leave of absence during the term of suspension prescribed by the court," has been received. It is not considered necessary that officers under suspension, by sentence of a court-martial, should apply for or obtain leave of absence to visit any part of the United States during the time of suspension. If your object is to leave the United States, the Department has no objection to your doing so. This permission is in no way to operate upon or affect the sentence of the court.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,
(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Capt. DAVID PORTER, United States Navy. Present.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, August 23, 1825.

The Secretary of the Navy acknowledges the receipt of a note from Commodore Porter, of yesterday's date, requesting that he would "authorize Mr. Force to give publicity, in his journal, to the opinion of the court of inquiry as to the employment of the West India squadron during his command."

No objection is perceived to Mr. Force's publishing the whole report and finding of the court of inquiry, whenever Commodore Porter shall think proper. A communication to this effect has been made to Mr. Force.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, April 29, 1825.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that a court of inquiry, consisting of Captains Isaac Chauncey, president, William M. Crane, and George C. Read, members, has been ordered to convene at the Navy yard in Washington, on Monday, the 2d day of May next, for the purpose of examining into the conduct of Captain D. Porter, in relation to the occurrences which took place at Foxardo, in the Island of Porto Rico, in the month of November last.

I have the honor to be, &c.,
(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Hon. HENRY CLAY, Secretary of State.

Mr. Clay to Mr. Salmon.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 29, 1825.

Don. Hilario de Rivas y Salmon, Philadelphia:

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that a court of inquiry has been ordered, and will assemble at the Navy yard, in Washington city, on Monday, the 2d of the next month, for the purpose of examining into the conduct of Captain D. Porter, of the United States navy, in relation to the occurrences which took place at Foxardo, in the Island of Porto Rico, in the month of November last. Any evidence pertinent to the case, which you may think proper to adduce before that court, will be respectfully received and considered. The court will, probably, remain in session several days.

I avail myself of the occasion to renew assurances of my high consideration.

(Signed) H. CLAY.

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to the Secretary of the Navy, and informs him that he has just received from Mr. Salmon, the Spanish chargé d'affaires, a communication of some papers for the court of inquiry, in the case of Captain Porter, which he will transmit to the Secretary of the Navy as soon as a translation of them, now in progress, shall be completed.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, May 5, 1825.

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to the Secretary of the Navy, and he transmits to him, herewith, a note from Mr. Salmon, Spanish chargé d'affaires, which has just been received at the Department of State, accompanied by two documents, in relation to the incursion of Captain Porter into the Island of Porto Rico, and the affairs at Foxardo, which occurred last November, together with translations of the same.

The propriety of laying these papers before the court of inquiry into the conduct of that officer, in regard to these transactions, is submitted to the consideration of the Secretary of the Navy.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, May 6, 1825.

Mr. Southard is requested to cau e the original papers to be returned, when there shall be no further use for them.

[Translation.]

Mr. Salmon to Mr. Clay.

LEGATION OF SPAIN, Philadelphia, May 2, 1825.

To the honorable Henry Clay, Secretary of State for the United States:

SIR: I yesterday received your note, with which I was honored, announcing to me that a court of inquiry would be instituted to-day to investigate the conduct of Captain D. Porter in relation to the affairs of Foxardo, in the month of November last, and requesting of me any documents or testimony which you would have the goodness to submit to that court.

I have the honor, herewith, to transmit an extract of a communication made to me by the Captain General of Puerto Rico, under date of the 23d of November, upon this subject, and a gazette of the government subsequently received, in which you will find an article on the present affairs.

These are the only documents which I am able to furnish at this time. The proceedings and the gazette alluded to in the communication of the captain general were neglected, by some difficulty or accident; these might have been important in elucidating the conduct of Captain Porter.

I presume the gazette, mentioned in the communication, may be the same as that from which a translation was made for the newspapers of this city, about the middle of last November. These papers, at the same time, published letters from a clerk in the house of Cabot, Bailey & Co., and from some citizens of the United States, who, it appears, were principally concerned in this unpleasant matter.

The relations of these citizens, if true, as I incline to think they are, tend to criminate Capt. Porter more deeply than those published in the government gazette of Puerto Rico. There have existed cases, as I have been informed, where Colombian privateers (whose commanders and crew had assumed the uniform and flag of the United States, of which they were native citizens) have entered Spanish ports, unsuspected by the local authorities. But supposing this never to have happened, was it strange that the subaltern authorities of Puerto Rico, at a time of war with some neighboring governments, and when the island was exposed to an invasion, should have detained a few foreigners, for an hour or two, who were justly liable to suspicion from their having neither passports nor papers, nor any uniform to distinguish them from enemies? This short and just detention appears to have been the sole ground of complaint by Captain Porter against the authorities of Foxardo, and which was judged sufficient cause for violating the Spanish territory and threatening a small, peaceable and defenceless village with vindictive menace. It has not yet appeared that Captain Porter, or his agents, had received any injury from the Spanish authorities at Foxardo, but, on the contrary, they were shown the greatest attention.

These agents, far from respecting the laws, and the orders of the local authorities, derided them, and provoked their resentment, with the most insulting insolence. "The town," (Foxardo,) says the relation of the clerk, in the house of Cabot & Co., which was published in the Boston Palladium, "lay about two miles from the beach, but we found the harbormaster there, and having explained to him our business, and the reason why the officers came in citizens' dresses, we took our road to the town; we were immediately called back, and ordered to remain on the beach until the captain of the port should come down, which would be in the course of the day. I told him my business was too urgent, and I could not wait, but I would call on the captain when I got to town. This would not answer, and we pursued our course without further ceremony."

But, independently of the publications in the papers of this country and of Puerto Rico, and notwithstanding the neglect of the proceedings in the trial instituted in that island, in relation to the affair at Foxardo, it would seem to me that the communication from the captain general, which I enclose to you, is of itself sufficient to prove that Captain Porter had but a very slight pretext for committing so great an outrage in the dominions of his Catholic Majesty, and why did he do it? To protect the property of a foreigner, and not a citizen of the United States. But, supposing the motive to have been the most urgent, and the complaint of Captain Porter to have been just, how will it be possible for governments to maintain peace and a friendly understanding with each other, if their officers, who should present examples of moderation to the rest of the citizens, are to become judges in their own cause, and of themselves to retaliate for wrongs, which prerogative belongs to the nation and the government?

I will refrain from making further observation on this unpleasant subject. The promptitude with which the President ordered the return of Captain Porter, and the investigation of his conduct by a respectable court, is decisive evidence of his love of justice, his respect for the law of nations, and his desire to cultivate the friendship subsisting between the governments of the United States and Spain. I am assured that his Catholic Majesty will receive satisfaction proportioned to the offence.

I avail myself of this occasion to renew to you, sir, my respects, and the assurances of my distinguished consideration.

(Signed) HILARIO DE Y SALMON.

Translation of the copy of a paper received at the Department of State, on the 6th May, 1825, in a letter from Don Hilario de Rivas y Salmon, chargé d'affaires from Spain, dated 2d May.

To his excellency the Secretary of the Despatch of State, I thus represent:

I transmit to your excellency the proceedings in the inquiry relative to the shameful aggression of Commodore Porter, commanding United States squadron, on the peaceable town of Foxardo, the 14th instant, together with all letters and papers concerning it, that with this information of the unwarrantable contempt of the flag and arms of his Majesty, you may communicate it to his royal person. By these you will perceive that on the 26th of October, the U. S. schooner Beagle entered Foxardo, when the captain of the port demanded papers, to assure him that this vessel-of-war was in reality of a friendly nation. This was done as a precaution against any deception from the many insurgent privateers cruising in these waters, and exercising great acts of violence and rapacity; suspicion was excited by the smallness of the vessel, her crew and armament, because citizens of the United States generally constitute the crews of the dissident privateers, and by the recent information in the royal order of the 31st May, that the dissident armament would be increased by fourteen vessels from North America. This schooner had on board, Mr. George Beajon, clerk in the commercial house of Cabot & Co., at St. Thomas, whose object was to search the place, where goods stolen from that house were supposed to be concealed. You will see that as soon as they gave assurance of their being Americans, they were allowed to proceed in their object, as will appear from the letter from the alcalde of the town, and from that which the captain of the port addressed to the principal commandant of marine. The former enclosed to me a list of the goods stolen, and a notice of the reward offered for the discovery. You will also be informed by the dispatch of the same alcalde, of the 14th instant, of the outrageous insult of Commodore Porter to that town, into which he marched with 150 armed men, spiked the artillery used in defence of the port, and demanded satisfaction of the said authority, in the most insulting and degrading manner that can be conceived of, and having obtained it he retired, although I do not know the terms in which it was couched.

This unprecedented affair, contrary to the laws of honor, unbecoming a high minded officer, opposed to the law of nations, contemptuous of the sovereignty of monarchs and their inviolable rights, and to have been expected only from highwaymen, resulted in favor of the aggressor from the cowardice of the alcalde, the want of a local commander or of troops, and from the surprise of the neighborhood. It is very certain that, at the voice of alarm and union, the inhabitants of the surrounding country would have assembled to oppose the invaders, and they would have paid severely for their rash attempt. As soon as I had received notice of this aggression, fearful that this example might be injurious for the future unless promptly and energetically opposed, I ordered a company of militia to be raised for the defence of that point most distant from population. I appointed the commandant of battalion, Don Juan Nepomercene, as the military commander of the district, and Lieutenant Don F. M. Penatel as commander and driller of the company. I issued an order to all the departments that no armed vessels of any nation should be permitted to enter under any pretext, and that they should be opposed if they employed force; and I caused the relation of the outrage committed by Commodore Porter to be inserted in the Gazette of to-day. This inflated commander supposes a grievance of which he submits no complaint to this government; and pretends that to have been American property which belonged to a Danish subject, the demand of which should have been presented to the chief authority of this island; with an armed force he required satisfaction of the person whom he supposed to be the offender; he violated the state of peace in which we exist; he prostituted the force committed to him by his government; he attacked by surprise a friendly and inoffensive town, and became the admirer of his own exploit; for his safety he spiked the artillery, pulled down the royal flag, and with gross threats and vulgar expressions he thought to intimidate the officers of Foxardo by menacing fire and desolation to their innocent but spirited district. With such a contemptible triumph he escaped from the punishment which he feared would fall on his devoted head were he to remain longer on land.

I have directed the commandant of department to make an abstract for the information of H. M., and at the same time have suspended the alcalde for his pusillanimity, and the commander of the garrison for his unfitness for office, and because till this moment he has not communicated to me anything in regard to this event.

I transmit the foregoing to your excellency, that it may be submitted to his Majesty.

PUERTO RICO, November 23, 1824.

(Signed) MIGUEL DE LA TORRE.

To the CONSUL GENERAL of his Majesty in the United States.

[Extracted from the government Gazette of Porto Rico, January 12, 1845.]

Quixotic and ungallant adventure of an American commodore, and false imputations refuted.

In the Baltimore papers of the 4th of December last, we have read an article on the affair of Foxardo, related in our number of the 23d of November. It is the most insulting and calumnious production that ever issued from an indecorous and degraded pen against a civilized people. This is the return made by certain American journals for the generous, polite and frank reception which citizens of the United States have ever received from us.

The temerity of Commodore D. Porter's conduct on our unsettled shores, that of the officer under his orders, whose letter we shall notice, and that of the editor who made the publication, authorizes us in saying that our most hostile enemies have never shown themselves more infuriated; and that the commodore, the officer and the editor have conducted themselves in the most shameful and vulgar manner, inasmuch as they imagined grievances and invited difficulties, for the sole purpose of seeking an occasion for uttering their billingsgate and committing acts of the vilest and most disgraceful character.

The following is the caption of an article, which was printed in large letters:

"Insult and imprisonment of an American naval officer revenged, and Spanish insolence properly chastised."

In our 279th number, of November 23, we published the history of this affair, which statement we now confirm, for it is substantiated by authentic documents, and we defy the most astute American to oppose them with proof, and which we can adduce, of the guilt of Commodore Porter. We believe, therefore, the imprisonment or insult of an American naval officer to have been planned to create an occasion for satisfying the vengeance that consumes the commodore, in relation to Puerto Rico and the Spaniards. But this act was committed in so indecorous a manner that he has excited public odium and contempt; it was indeed an act which cou'd only have been committed by one belonging to the canaille of society, and who had been educated with neglect.

The commodore thus becomes a knight errant, who couches his lance and buckles on his shield to avenge wrongs that neither affect nor concern him, and pretends, like a second Amadis de Gaul, that at the voice of his Dorothea all laws and rights must be suppressed.

The schooner Beagle was engaged at St. Thomas to convey a clerk of the house of Cabot to Foxardo, instead of cruising for pirates, for which she was fitted out. The object in conveying this clerk to Foxardo was, it is said, to claim some merchandise that had been stolen from this Danish commercial house, and which they suspected to have been transported to that place. A suspicion of this kind had so little foundation, that to the present moment the least insinuation has not been made by that government to the chief authority of this island, which has always decided its claims justly and with honor to the nation. She was freighted, we have said, for she was employed by a foreign individual, and in a matter where the United States could have had no interest.

In this service of transportation so important, the commander refuses to use himself and his vessel. Nothing more natural than that he should defer his departure until the vessel had gone. If the American officer at his arrival had presented himself with proper respect to the authorities at Foxardo, and had made known to them his commission and object, the suspicion which was excited would have been dispelled. This was naturally produced at seeing a vessel-of-war in the service of an individual, of a different nation from himself, when her aspect and object contradicted it. This induced the suspicion that she was carrying on a contraband commerce, so usual with those in whose service she was at that time. To this is reduced what the editor of the Baltimore paper calls imprisonment and insult, when the officer was dismissed as soon as he had satisfied what was required by his duty and the laws.

It would seem that the American gentlemen to whom we refer expect that at their name every knee should bow, and every one confess that their mistress is the most lovely in the world, without inquiring if she be deformed, lame, ugly, peevish, or ill-disposed. To this alone does he aspire, who calls insolence the exercise of a right in the delegates of the government, in discharging their duty, to ascertain the true character of the person visiting the town. As to revenged and chastised, it has already been seen by the history of the event, and will be shown by what is yet to be said, that the result of that affair was about as satisfactory as the attack of the Knight of La Mancha on the sheep, who achieved universal pity and laughter.

Extremely vain and satisfied of his preamble, the editor proceeds to publish a letter written by an officer of the frigate John Adams, under command of Commodore Porter, dated at the Isle of Passage, the 10th of November, which we will remark upon.

"I doubt not," says the letter, "that you will have heard of Commodore Porter having taken a Spanish town in Puerto Rico."

A mighty sensation must have been produced, among those who have never visited our island, at the report of a town being captured. One would suppose that it was at least a town of the second or third size; but it never would be dreamed of that the town in question was but a hamlet, containing 74 houses covered with tile, and 84 bojios. This is the town of Foxardo, which Commodore Porter desired to capture, but into which he dared not enter, notwithstanding his arrogant presumption.

"The circumstances," it continues," are briefly these: The governor imprisoned the captain of one of the small schooners, and suffered him to be grossly insulted."

To magnify the importance of the post supposed to have been taken by the commodore, and its means of defence by this distich,

"The more the honor which the vanquished bear,
The greater glory does the hero share," it would have been first necessary to supply a magistrate of superior command; and although our commodore did happen to address a letter to the alcalde de campo, yet the officer who is writing should have metamorphosed him into a governor, by taking advantage of a poetic license in the composition of his farce. In like manner, an American officer is represented to have been grossly insulted, because the captain of a vessel in commission of a St. James mercantile house was detained until he presented papers attesting his authority and person.

"As soon," the letter continues, "as the commodore knew of it, he was there with two schooners' boats and a part of the crew of the frigate; he captured two batteries, spiked the cannon, and marched to the town, (Foxardo,) about two miles in the interior. He there found the Spaniards prepared to give battle; he drew up his force within pistol shot of the enemy, and sent a deputation to the governor and captain of the port, who were the two principal offenders, requiring them to come and make atonement, or he would, in case of a refusal, burn their town. They chose the first alternative, and in presence of all our officers asked pardon of the insulted officers, manifested great contrition, and promised to pay respect to all American officers who might in future visit the port."

The two batteries said to have been taken were two bare intrenchments, in which there was not a single man; for as no attack from North Americans was expected, they had been deserted for the defence of the port, and every person in the vicinity continued at his occupation, and did not resort to defend these entrenchments, as usual on the least alarm. As soon as armed men were seen to debark, the people assembled, and the small number collected declared themselves ready for fight.

Very little should be expected from the contrition of those called the offenders, and from their promise to respect American officers who should hereafter visit the place, as they have always done when the officers have been recognized; because these offenders, so called, were instantly cashiered by the government, which, although it requires them to be polite and attentive, does not wish them to be quite so complaisant. American officers, as well as all others at peace with us, may be assured of that friendly reception which the good education of the Spaniards gives them a right to expect of us, if they observe what is due by them; but they shall also be convinced that, for the least violation against the honor of the nation and respect for authorities, their presumptuous arrogance shall be checked.

"The commodore," concludes the letter, "then marched to the town, merely to show that it was at his mercy, and afterwards returned to his boats and left the place. There was not the least disorder; not a man left the ranks whilst on shore, where they continued more than three hours. Self-defence required that the cannons should be spiked, and this is all they have to complain of. They had been informed of our intention to visit them [false]. The population of this town is about two thousand souls. The country is quiet. Before we had left the place, a force three times greater than ours had assembled, with a field piece; and in presence of these, and within pistol shot of their forces, our commodore made them humble themselves."

[It should be the two.]

The author of this letter is a most consummate liar. It is false that Porter entered the town; and although he received an invitation, in return to his, to approach the few men who had assembled, he excused himself and retired.

We had always supposed that honor and truth were inherent virtues in those who devote their lives for the defence of the state; but the event authorizes the assertion that these obligations were apparently forgotton by the aggressors of Foxardo.

This tissue of falsehood gives two proofs in our favor. The first is, that Mr. Porter is represented, even by his officers, as capable of being an incendiary, since revenge would have urged him to it had he not been restrained by fear: the second, that they are persuaded of the reception that awaits them if they shall again dare to violate our territory, and if they shall return to assume the character of, as they are called by Charles X, self-ministers of justice.

The spiking of the cannons is said to be the only ground of our complaint; these and others are now prepared to receive all who shall attempt an aggression on our soil. The offence was given to all nations, because the law of nations was violated. We view the conduct of Porter, particularly in relation to the government, as if he were irritated with any of us individually, and for revenge had entered by the yard-gate, and had violated the first of our servant maids. Such had been his conduct, and so contemptible has been his pretended satisfaction.

It is not becoming, at this time, to forget that moderation which we have always observed, and which was distinguishable in the first Foxardo article; but we ought to retort in some degree on the Baltimore editor and others of like character.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 8, 1825.

SIR: I am directed by the President of the United States to inform you that a court-martial is now sitting at the Navy yard in this place, for the trial of Captain David Porter, upon charges preferred against him, one of which is founded upon his conduct in landing in a forcible manner at Foxardo, in the Island of Porto Rico, in the month of November last.

In apprising the representative of the Spanish government of the fact, I suggest to you the propriety of informing him that the documents heretofore forwarded by him to be laid before the court of inquiry were rejected by the court as incompetent evidence, and not properly authenticated.

This notice should have been given at an earlier day, but was accidentally omitted.

I have the honor to be, &c.,

(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Hon. HENRY CLAY, Secretary of State.

Mr. Brent to Mr. Salmon.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, July 8, 1825.

Don Hilario de Rivas y Salmon, chargé d'affaires from Spain:

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that notice has just been received at this office, from the Secretary of the Navy, that a court-martial is now sitting, at the Navy yard in this city, for the trial of Captain David Porter upon charges preferred against him, one of which is founded upon his conduct in landing in a forcible manner at Foxardo, in the Island of Porto Rico, in the month of November last.

In the absence of the Secretary, and by direction of the President of the United States, I have the honor further to state, that any evidence pertinent to the case, which you may think proper to furnish, will be respectfully received and considered; but in apprising you of this circumstance, I beg leave to suggest that the documents heretofore forwarded by you, to be laid before the late court of enquiry into the conduct of the same officer, were rejected by the court as incompetent evidence, and not properly authenticated.

With great consideration, I am, sir, your obedient and very humble servant,

(Signed) DANIEL BRENT.

[Translation.]

Don Hilario de Rivas y Salmon to Mr. Brent.

LEGATION OF SPAIN, Philadelphia, July 10, 1825.

SIR: In answer to your note of the 8th, which I have just received, I have the honor to say, that the documents which I formerly sent, relative to the conduct of Commodore Porter in Foxardo, which were rejected by the court of inquiry, as you inform me, are the only ones which have come to my hands as yet. If, during the session of the court-martial which is now sitting, I shall receive others, which I may think proper to present to the aforenamed court, I shall have the honor of transmitting them to you for that purpose.

I repeat to you, sir, my respects and the assurance of my consideration.

(Signed) HILARIO DE RIVAS Y SALMON.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 18, 1825.

SIR: I have the honor to request that you will furnish this Department with a copy of so much of Mr. Nelson's last letter as relates to the complaint preferred by the government of Spain, respecting the conduct of Captain David Porter in landing forcibly, in November last, at Foxardo, in the Island of Porto Rica.

With great respect, I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient and humble servant,

(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Hon. HENRY CLAY, Secretary of State.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, July 18, 1825.

Samuel L. Southard, Secretary of the Navy:

SIR: I have the honor, agreeably to the request in your letter to the Secretary of State, of this date, to send you an extract, enclosed, from the only dispatch of Mr. Nelson, minister plenipotentiary of the United States in Spain, which has been received at this Department in relation to the complaint of the government of Spain respecting the conduct of Captain David Porter in landing forcibly, in November last, at Foxardo, in the Island of Porto Rico, and to add that this extract comprehends all that the said dispatch contains upon the subject.

I am, with the highest respect, sir, your obedient and very humble servant,

(Signed) DANIEL BRENT.

Extract of a letter from Mr. Nelson, minister plenipotentiary of the United States in Spain, to the Secretary of State of the United States, dated—

MADRID, April 6, 1825.

I had an interview with the secretary of state on the subjects of interest between the two governments, not embraced in his note last received. At the close he observed that he should have to address me in relation to the conduct of Commodore Porter.

He observed that his government made a great distinction between the act of Commodore Porter and the American government; that governments friendly towards each other had never any difficulty in arranging matters of this sort.

He alluded to some misconduct of the French in Spain, occurring through the intemperance of their officers; said that as soon as presented to the proper authorities they were remedied by the most prompt accommodation; that he did not entertain a doubt of the same result from the appeal in the instance of the American officers.

He was told that I had no official communication on this subject as yet; but that from the American newspapers, with which I had been furnished, I perceived that Commodore Porter had been recalled, and another officer sent to supply his place in the American squadron.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, December 24, 1823.

SIR: Yours of the 18th instant, reporting your arrival in the frigate Congress, in Lynnhaven Bay, has been received.

You will deliver the ship to the commandant of the yard, that she may receive such repairs as may be found necessary, and be prepared for sea as speedily as practicable, as it is my intention that she join Captain Porter's command, on the Florida station, for a cruise of six months or more.

I take pleasure in complying with your wishes to retain the command of the ship.

I am, very respectfully, &c., SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Capt. JAMES BIDDLE, U. S. Ship Congress, Norfolk, Va.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, December 30, 1823.

SIR: Your letter of the 26th instant, in relation to the condition of your ship, and the terms of service of part of the crew, has been received.

I learn with pleasure that no repairs will be necessary for the cruise for which she is intended. It will not continue longer than six months, and of this you may assure the crew, and re-enter all those whose terms of service will expire before that time, who may be disposed to do so.

I am, very respectfully,

SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Captain JAMES BIDDLE, commanding U. S. Frigate Congress, Norfolk, Va.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, December 31, 1823.

SIR: The United States frigate Congress, under your command, being intended to form part of the squadron placed under the direction of Commodore David Porter, you will immediately, as commander of that ship, report yourself for duty to that officer.

I remain, very respectfully, &c.,

SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Captain JAMES BIDDLE, commanding U. S. Ship Congress, Norfolk.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, January 3, 1824.

SIR: Upon the subject of your letter of the 28th ultimo, I would remark that I do not know any lieutenant in the service of the name of Byrne. It will be necessary that the officers remain attached to the ship, and that those who are absent on permission return, as the service requires that the Congress sails immediately. As the ship under your command is attached to the West India squadron, under the direction of Commodore David Porter, he will give to you all necessary orders in relation to the contemplated service.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Captain JAMES BIDDLE, U. S. Ship Congress, Norfolk, Virginia.

FRIGATE CONGRESS, Norfolk, January 4, 1824.

SIR: In obedience to your order of the 31st ultimo, I have reported myself to Captain David Porter as my commanding officer.

I learn indirectly from Captain Porter that, upon my arrival in the West Indies, it is his intention to come on board this ship and live. In that event, my command will be subordinate to that which is usually held by an officer of my grade of commission, and would necessarily be mortifying and unpleasant to me. I enclose an order to me from Master Commandant Wm. B. Finch, who signs as "captain of the squadron." So far, therefore, from my services being required at all after arriving out, my presence would rather occasion embarrassment and difficulty. Capt. Porter informs me that this ship is to remain abroad only until the Independence can arrive out. I respectfully request, therefore, that upon Captain Porter's joining this ship, I may be allowed to remain on shore in Cuba or wheresoever else the ship may be, and to resume my command of this ship upon the arrival out of the Independence. My desire to continue afloat has been much increased since reading the President's message. The arrangement I solicit will be gratifying to me, as relieving me from serving in a situation not suitable to my commission, and it may prevent unpleasant collision. It will not be attended with expense, since I would not desire any allowance to be made to me for personal expenses on shore.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

(Signed) JAMES BIDDLE.

Honorable SAM'L L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

U. S. SHIP JOHN ADAMS, January 2, 1824.

SIR: I enclose to you the copy of an order from Commodore Porter, which you will be pleased to communicate to the two officers, Lieutenant Wm. Taylor and Purser S. Hambleton, concerned, and who are under your immediate command.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. B. FINCH, Captain of the Squadron.

Captain JAMES BIDDLE, commanding U. S. Frigate Congress.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, February 19, 1824.

SIR: Several applications have been made to me, by officers of the Congress, who have leave of absence from Captain Biddle, and have been ordered by you to join other vessels.

There has been some confusion as to these officers, created in part, perhaps, by myself. Some of them had leave of absence before Captain Biddle was ordered to report to you, and others, perhaps, after that time. Captain Biddle, when here, asked me if there would be any objections to those whose services were not wanting in the vessels being absent while she was repairing. I answered that there would not; that it was better they should be absent with their friends, if there was no duty for them. I have had no communication since from Captain Biddle; but he has no doubt properly considered this answer as confirming the permissions already granted, and justifying such as were applied for afterwards, if there are any such. It is my wish, therefore, that the officers who have leave of absence from that vessel be left until she is ready for them. I have another reason. I do not wish transfers to be made in the United States, without the orders of the Department. Several very unpleasant occurrences have lately taken place, arising from that cause. All transfers here ought to be by order of the Department, and elsewhere, immediately communicated to the Department.

I shall write to Captain Biddle, and direct him on this subject, that no further inconvenience may arise to you from his conduct on this point.

There has been some confusion on the subject, but a little time and patience will make matters right. It will probably be necessary, hereafter, to issue a general order on this subject.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,
(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. West India Squadron, Norfolk, Va.

SIR: Acting, as I am, in strict conformity with the orders I have received from the Navy Department, and having never, in the slightest degree, departed from them, I confidently look to it to defend my character from unjust aspersion, particularly as I am, with others, prohibited from defending myself through the public prints. I am induced to express this hope, in consequence of the article contained in the newspaper which I have the honor to send you, and which is evidently intended to do me some great injury.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

Honorable SECRETARY of the Navy.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, December 31, 1823.

SIR: I have received several communications from you by the mail of this morning, and shall attend to them as early as possible.

I have ordered Captain Biddle (the order sent herewith) to report to you for duty, and you will dispatch him in the Congress to the Florida or the Thompson's Island station, with such orders as you may consider necessary, to execute the views of the Department, contained in the instructions heretofore given you. You will send with him all the vessels under your command which are ready, and will permit no delay which is not indispensable.

I have heretofore sent you some account of piracies lately committed, and I herewith enclose two more, and request your particular attention to the letter signed by Mr. Lawrence, and the course pointed out as a mode of effecting the object.

It being indispensable that difficulties, such as have arisen with Lieutenant Kennon and yourself, should be promptly and firmly terminated by this Department, you will remain at Norfolk, in order that an investigation may take place, and you will therefore forward immediately such charges as you may have to make, and which may direct me in the orders which I have to issue.

It is my intention to have an investigation into the conduct of Captain S. Smith at the same time with that into the conduct of Lieut. Kennon. If, therefore, any of the officers of the vessels which you may send with Captain Biddle are necessary in these investigations, you are authorized to detain them at Norfolk, and, if necessary, supply their places with others now at the station, and who can be spared, taking care not to send away any who may be wanting as witnesses in the trial of Captain Smith and Lieutenant Kennon, so far as you are acquainted with them.

Lieutenant Kennon has named the following officers as witnesses necessary for him:

Lieutenant J. Tattnall, Acting Lieutenant V. M. Randolph, Acting Lieutenant F. Buchanan, Purser Samuel Hambleton, Lieutenant William Taylor.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, &c., SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. Squadron, Norfolk.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, January 2, 1824.

SIR: As it is desirable that the investigation of the cases of Captain Smith and Lieutenant Kennon should take place as early as practicable, you will furnish to the Department the names of the persons, in each case, who are capable of giving testimony, and also a statement of the facts into which you wish an inquiry to be made.

I have the honor to be, &c.,
(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Captain DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. West India Squadron, Norfolk, Va.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, January 3, 1824.

SIR: You will deliver the enclosed order to Dr. Haslet, detaching him from the squadron under your command. Doctor Tinslar is necessary as a witness in the case for the trial of Lieutenant Kennon.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. West India Squadron, Norfolk, Va.

U. S. SHIP JOHN ADAMS, January 4, 1824.

SIR: I have received your instructions of the 31st, which shall be strictly attended to in every particular.

Acting up to the letter and spirit of your instructions, dated December, 1823, I made, through the medium of Mr. Samuel Hamilton, the following proposals in writing to Lieutenant Kennon, which he rejected, hence there was no other alternative but to bring him to a court-martial.

"Captain Porter has heard, from a mutual friend, that Lieutenant Kennon denies that any unfriendly motives actuated him in the publication which drew forth the remarks in the Georgian.

"If Lieutenant Kennon is willing to declare this in writing, this being the primary cause of all the recent difficulties between them, Captain Porter will be then willing to withdraw his charges against Lieutenant Kennon, and suppress all proceedings in the case.

"Captain Porter cannot receive, now, in explanation of Lieutenant Kennon's views or objects in the first publication, any declaration contained in his defence against the remarks in the Georgian; because he (Captain Porter) never made any objection to those remarks, and ought, therefore, to have been considered as satisfied with them. But new causes for offence have been since given, and he can receive no explanation affecting them which may heretofore have appeared in the public prints.

"Captain Porter, when he arrested Lieutenant Kennon, believed that the United States would wait for the Peacock, and therefore thought there would be time enough to admit of his trial; but he had no sooner arrested Lieutenant Kennon, than Captain Hull went to Washington to get orders to proceed immediately to sea. This unexpected occurrence is the cause why Captain Porter is desirous that the affair should be adjusted before she sails, that Lieutenant Kennon may proceed to his destination."

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

(Signed) D. PORTER.

To the Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, January 7, 1824.

SIR: A general court-martial has been ordered to convene at the Navy yard, Gosport, Va., on the 22d inst., for the trial of Lieutenant Beverley Kennon, of the United States navy, and such other persons as shall be arraigned before the said court.

The court will be constituted as follows, viz:

Captains Wm. Bainbridge, president, Thomas Macdonough, Robert T. Spence, John D. Henley; Master Commandants Alex. T. Wadsworth, George C. Read; Lieutenants Lawrence Kearny and Thomas M. Newell, members; and Walter F. Jones, Esq., judge advocate.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Captain DAVID PORTER, commanding West India Squadron, Norfolk, Va.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, March 29, 1824.

SIR: I enclose to you herewith copy of the sentence of the court-martial in the case of Lieutenant Beverly Kennon, with a copy of the letter in which the sentence was enclosed to him.

This trial has occasioned great public excitement and much inconvenience to the service, and it is hoped that all officers will perceive the necessity of avoiding in future whatever will have a tendency to such results.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Com. DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. Naval Forces, W. I. and Gulf of Mexico.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, April 23, 1824.

SIR: An application has been made to this Department for a copy of the proceedings of court-martial, to be used in the further vindication of the conduct and character of Lieutenant Kenyon, which was declined. In consequence of the copy not being granted, a resolution has been offered and adopted in the House of Representatives calling for a copy of the proceedings.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Com. DAVID PORTER, commanding U. S. Naval Forces, West Indies and Gulf of Mexico.

Extract of a letter from the Secretary of the Navy to Commodore David Porter, Thompson's Island, dated—

NAVY DEPARTMENT, May 17, 1824.

Upon a call by resolution, the proceedings of the court-martial which tried Lieutenant Kennon have been sent to Congress, and they will be published in a few days.

MATANZAS, June 5, 1824.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 29th March, enclosing the sentence of the court-martial on Lieutenant Kennon, with a copy of your letter to him of the 16th, authorizing him "to publish the sentence fully acquitting him," and refusing to order my arrest and trial on the charges preferred by Lieutenant Kennon.

I have also to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 23d of April, notifying me of the resolution adopted in the House of Representatives, calling for a copy of the proceedings of the court-martial in the case of Lieutenant Kennon, the publication of which will be highly satisfactory to me, inasmuch as the whole affair is badly understood by the public, who, on perusing them, cannot fail to discover that the court, by a limitation in the inquiry, rendered it impossible that I could prove the bad feeling which had long existed towards me on the part of Lieutenant Kennon, on which the charge of malice was founded. Documental and oral testimony on this head were both rejected; and, in addition, it was intimated to me, by the presiding officer, towards the closing of the testimony on the part of the prosecution, that my presence in court was not necessary, which prevented my attendance as prosecutor. I beg leave to remark, also, that I did not go a willing witness before the court—I was ordered to attend. My testimony was ample, and being called for by the counsel of Lieutenant Kennon, the court was bound to respect it.

I know of no reason why the court was justified in imputing, by its sentence, perjury to me—for if the sentence "fully" acquitting Lieutenant Kennon is just, I am certainly a perjured man; but, sir, my conscience tells me otherwise. In these respects I cannot conceal that I feel myself aggrieved, but should have refrained from complaint, had not this sentence brought on me the reprimand contained in your letter of the 29th March, which I cannot feel that I merit; for if "great public excitement" has been occasioned, it has been by the persevering hostility of Lieutenant Kennon and his friends, who have availed themselves of the press to produce it, before, pending, and subsequently to the trial, an advantage which I have been deprived of by your general order and my absence from the country. The excitement is neither of my seeking or occasioning, and I cannot think myself answerable for it; the blame must therefore rest on those with whom it originated; and the information and admonition which accompany it, could, with great propriety, be applied to those who have been acting in the double capacity of counselors to Lieutenant Kennon, and public accusers of me, without specifying any other charge against me than my having brought a junior officer to a court-martial, who, by the sentence of the court, was "fully acquitted." This appeal to the tribunal of public opinion was not a measure of mine; and if by it the sentence of the court should be reversed, or further "excitement" should be produced, I hope I shall stand acquitted of any participation in the cause, or of censure for any injuries which may result therefrom to the navy.

I regret, sir, that the public do not understand the merits of the differences between Lieutenant Kennon and myself, and I rejoice that it can be made to understand them without any responsibility on my part. I have quietly borne the vituperation of Lieutenant Kennon and his friends through the public prints, and I have patiently waited the result, knowing that justice would sooner or later be done to me. The publication of the proceedings of the court is all I can desire, and to my fellow-citizens I cheerfully confide my cause, with a full confidence in the justice of their decision.

The intimation that "it is hoped that all officers will perceive the necessity of avoiding, in future, whatever will have a tendency to such results," will certainly receive every respect and attention from me; but I cannot help remarking that courts-martial are at all times inconvenient, and occasion more or less "public excitement;" yet they are a necessary evil, are provided for by the laws for the government of the navy, and are the only proper appeal of those of the navy who believe themselves injured. It is made the duty of every officer to prevent a violation of the laws which regulate them, and this duty I felt myself in the performance of when I arrested and brought to trial Lieutenant Kennon.

By this implied censure the prerogatives of a court-martial are exercised; and by a refusal to try me on the charges exhibited against me by Lieutenant Kennon, (a copy of which I beg you to furnish me,) I am deprived of the opportunity, which he has enjoyed, of repelling them, while a knowledge of his having exhibited them and your refusal has gone before the public, who, ignorant of their nature, may imagine them of the worst character, and may conceive the protection of the Department necessary to screen me from the consequences of an investigation.

What the charges of Lieutenant Kennon are I know not; but be they what they may, I do not shrink from them. There is no part of my official conduct that I would not desire to be laid before the world. I have done nothing to be ashamed of; and if the charges embrace any part of it, I cannot willingly consent that they should go on the files of the office unaccompanied by a refutation. If they originate in private animosity alone, and are unconnected with my public duties, I am willing that they should be disposed of as you may think proper; for after what has been done by Lieutenant Kennon and his friends to injure me, nothing of that nature can occasion me surprise or uneasiness.

I beg you, sir, to make allowance for any warmth of expression which may have escaped me in this letter, as it is my wish to make known my own grievances without offending the feelings of others, and nothing is further from my wish than to reflect on any measure of the Department or of the court-martial; but I cannot silently acquiesce in the propriety of an implied censure for performing what I conceived to be a duty I owed to myself and to the service, or in a sentence which I am persuaded others, as well as myself, will, after the publication of the proceedings, think extraordinary.

Having noticed in your letter to Lieutenant Kennon this expression: "There are matters in the trial and in the defence which are not approved, and which it is not proper to publish," allow me to ask of you to inform me what those matters are. Under such circumstances, whether full approbation has been given to the sentence, and whether they are of a nature which, if rejected, should have changed the decision of the court.

I have the honor to be, with the highest respect, your very obedient servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. SAM'L L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, May 10, 1824.

SIR: I have the honor of enclosing, herewith, copies of a letter received at this Department from the chargé d'affaires of Great Britain, and of the correspondence which forms the subject of the complaint contained in it, as also of my provisional answer to it, given by direction of the President of the United States.

I have to request the favor of being informed of the result of the inquiry to be instituted, in such manner as to enable me, as soon as may be practicable, to fulfill the promise made in my answer to Mr. Addington.

I am, with great respect, &c., &c., JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Esq., Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. Addington to Mr. Adams.

WASHINGTON, May 4, 1824.

SIR: In conformity with instructions recently received from England, I have the honor to communicate to you, herewith, copies of a correspondence which has been transmitted by the board of admiralty to his Majesty's secretary of state for foreign affairs, relative to an occurrence which took place in the harbor of the Havana, in the month of June last, when the American merchant brig Hiram received some injury in her rigging, in consequence of the refusal of her mate to make room for his Majesty's ship Eden to pass up the harbor.

In making this communication to you, sir, I am commanded to call your attention to the extraordinary conduct pursued towards the first lieutenant of his Majesty's ship Eden, by Lieutenant Gregory, of the United States schooner Grampus, in making a complaint of a public nature an excuse for attempting to provoke a personal quarrel with a British officer.

His Majesty's government have also seen, with much regret, from the correspondence which followed, that an officer so high in the service of the United States as Commodore Porter, should have been induced to sanction a proceeding of so intemperate a character as that pursued by Lieutenant Gregory.

I confine myself, sir, to bringing these circumstances simply, and without comment, to the knowledge of the American Government, as I feel confident that they will view the affair in the same light with his Majesty's minister, and that they will not hesitate to convey to the naval officers in question the expression of their displeasure at the conduct they have pursued on this occasion; and likewise that they will furnish their naval commanders with such instructions as may prevent a recurrence of conduct so little calculated to preserve a good understanding between the officers of the two navies, and so much at variance with that spirit of sincere friendship and good will which animates their respective governments.

I have the honer to be, with distinguished consideration, sir, your most obedient, humble servant·
H. U. ADDINGTON.

The honorable JOHN QUINCY ADAMS, Secretary of State.

Captain Lawrence to Commodore Owen, dated—

HIS MAJESTY'S SHIP EDEN, Carlisle Bay, Barbadoes, December 16, 1823.

SIR: In compliance with the order contained in your letter of the 28th September, just received by his Majesty's sloop Scout, I have the honor to inform you that, on the 27th of June last, while his Majesty's ship under my command was warping up the harbor of Havana, the American brig Hiram was lying in mid channel, moored with a small warp directly in our way. More than an hour previous to our weighing anchor, the Hiram was hailed and requested to slack her warp, to give the ship room to pass up the harbor; this the mate, who was left in charge of the brig, refused to do, on this as well on the request being several times repeated; the consequence of this refusal was, that the boom irons on the lower yards of this ship (although braced sharp up to avoid it) hooked part of her rigging, to extricate which I was obliged to order some of her ropes to be cut, the pilot reporting that as the wind blew strong and broad on the bow, if the Eden brought up there was not room to let go an anchor, and that she would go on shore. When weighing anchor, I hailed the Hiram myself, and told the person in charge of her that a few fathoms of her warp would be sufficient to slack, but even this he refused to do, and that in a most violent manner. The consequence of the Eden getting foul of the Hiram was, the cutting of her topmast backstays, and a topsail lift; and on the master, some days after, coming on board, and representing the damage the brig had sustained in her rigging, and expressing his regret at the obstinacy of his mate, and also having written me a letter to the same effect, (copy of which I enclose herewith, as also a copy of my answer to it) I ordered such a quantity of rope to be given him as I thought necessary to replace those cut away, which was about fourteen fathoms, not wishing the owners to sustain injury from the misconduct of the mate of the Hiram. The United States schooner Grampus, Lieutenant Gregory, arrived at Havana on the evening of the 27th, and on the following night, between the hours of nine and ten, the first lieutenant of his Majesty's ship under my command, brought a letter into my cabin, which he had received from the lieutenant commanding the Grampus, (a copy of which I herewith enclose) and which was brought on board the Eden by the second lieutenant of the same vessel. I immediately sent for the lieutenant, and asked him if Lieutenant Gregory had ordered him on board with it, to which he answered in the affirmative. I then remarked that I was sorry he should have written so extraordinary a letter to my first lieutenant, and that he should either have come himself, or have written to me to ascertain if the statement of the master of the brig was correct, but which I thought it impossible for him to believe. I then stated the conduct of the person in charge of the brig, and asked him how he would have acted under similar circumstances; he replied that he should have acted exactly the same I then told him I thought Mr. Gregory's letter of such an extraordinary nature that I should merely enclose it to Commodore Porter. He then left my cabin and went below with the officers, to whom he expressed the same opinion, and that I had acted perfectly right, and with great forbearance. He then left the ship, and I neither saw or heard more from the Grampus on the subject.

On the 5th July I wrote to Commodore Porter, and enclosed copies of the letters from Lieutenant Gregory and the master of the Hiram, with my answer, (copies of which I enclose herewith.)

I beg to observe that, if the copy of my answer to the master of the brig was dated the 3d of July, as stated by Commodore Porter, it must have been a mistake of my clerk, and ought to have been the 4th. The two bottles of wine which I gave the master was an act of charity, as he was suffering much from a complaint that required port wine, and which he had not been able to procure at the Havana.

In the above statement I hope I have done away with any unfavorable impression which might have been made by false representations and ungenerous insinuations; for surely it never could be supposed that an officer of my rank could so far forget his duty as to wantonly order the ropes of a defenceless merchant vessel to be cut away (to whatever nation she might belong), unless it was to ensure the safety of one of His Majesty's ships, and more particularly one having so large a quantity of specie on board as was the case in this instance.

I have the honor to be, &c., &c., &c.,

(Signed) JOHN LAWRENCE.

Captain Allen, master of the American brig Hiram, to Captain Lawrence of his B. M.'s ship Eden.

HAVANA, July 4, 1823.

SIR: In my two several interviews with you, I am perfectly well convinced that the damage done my vessel was owing to an unavoidable accident, and not to any wantonness or outrage on your part, but in some measure to the remissness of my chief officer; and inasmuch as the offer you make me, of replacing the rigging cut, is not a measure that I have any right peremptorily to insist upon, it becomes my duty to acknowledge the procedure as a voluntary courtesy on your part, and at the same time to avow myself perfectly satisfied therewith; inasmuch as it is one of the numerous instances of the good treatment I have always been in the habit of receiving in my intercourse with his Majesty's officers.

With sentiments of respect, I am, &c.,

SYLVESTER ALLEN, Master of the American Brig Hiram.

Captain Lawrence to Mr. Allen of the brig Hiram.

HIS MAJESTY'S SHIP EDEN, Havana, July 4, 1823.

SIR: I have just received yours of this day's date, wherein you appear to be convinced that the cause of the brig's rigging being cut was owing to the obstinacy of your chief officer, not slacking the small warp when repeatedly requested to do so; therefore, under these circumstances, I do not hesitate a moment in sending you rope to replace the injury done to your rigging, and I also send you two bottles of old port wine, and which, as you are going to take medicinally, I hope will have the desired effect.

I am, &c., &c., &c.,

JOHN LAWRENCE.

Mr. ALLEN, Brig Hiram.

Lieutenant Gregory to the first lieutenant of the British ship-of-war Eden.

UNITED STATES SCHOONER GRAMPUS, Havana, June 28, 1823.

SIR: The captain of the American brig Hiram having informed me that he has been most wantonly abused by you, and the rigging of the vessel cut and injured, when there was no necessity for either, it becomes my duty, as his brother citizen, to resent this outrage. Such acts of wantonness, I can aver, are not the character of British officers; and therefore I mean not to insult them en gros, because you have so far forgotten the duty you owe them. We (the American officers and citizens) entertain no fear of you; we wish to, and will respect you, so far as your deportment deserves it, and no further.

Ignorance and despotism go hand in hand. Duty compels me to leave this port at ten to-morrow morning, until which time you can consider (if necessary) what belongs to an honorable man.

I am, &c.,

F. H. GREGORY, U. S. Navy.

John Lawrence, Esq., to Commodore Porter.

HIS MAJESTY'S SHIP EDEN, Havana, July 5, 1823.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose you a copy of a letter, from the commander of the United States schooner Grampus to the first lieutenant of his Majesty's ship under my command, which letter was brought on board by a lieutenant, between the hours of nine and ten P. M.

I will not comment on this extraordinary letter, more than its effects might have a tendency to destroy that harmony which, thank God, exists between the officers of the two nations, but leave it to your good judgment to take such steps as you may judge expedient.

Wishing you much health and happiness, I have the honor to be, &c.,

JOHN LAWRENCE.

N. B.—I also enclose you the copy of a letter from the master of the brig Hiram, with a copy of my answer thereto.

Commodore Porter to John Lawrence, Esq.

UNITED STATES GALLIOT SEA GULL, Allenton, Thompson's Island, July 25, 1823.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 5th instant, by H. B. M. brig Bustard, enclosing a copy of a letter from Lieut. Commandant Gregory, of the U. S. schooner Grampus, to the first lieutenant of H. B. M. ship Eden, respecting the cutting of the rigging of the American merchant brig Hiram, and the abuse of the captain by that officer, written in consequence of a complaint made by the American captain, and expressing the sentiments of Lieut. Gregory of the conduct of the first lieutenant of the Eden, which, if the representations made were correct, was, to say the least of it, wanton and unjustifiable.

I have also received, under the same envelope with those letters, copy of a letter from Capt. Sylvester Allen, master of the American brig Hiram, to you, written after his second interview with you on the subject, and dated on the 4th of July, expressing his conviction that the damage done his vessel was owing to unavoidable accident, and not to any wantonness or outrage on your part, but in some measure to the remissness of his chief officer, acknowledging an offer from you of replacing the rigging cut, as a voluntary courtesy on your part, and at the same time avowing his perfect satisfaction, as it is one of the numerous instances he has always been in the habit of receiving in his intercourse with his Majesty's officers. To this is added what purports to be your answer to Capt. Allen, dated the 3d of July, wherein you acknowledge the receipt of his letter, in which you say he states his conviction that the cause of the brig's rigging being cut was owing to the obstinacy of his chief officer not slacking the small warp when repeatedly requested to do so; therefore, under these circumstances, you do not hesitate a moment in sending the rope to replace the injury done to the rigging, and also two more bottles of old port wine, &c., &c.

It appears satisfactorily from the foregoing that an American brig, while in the Spanish port of Havana, had her rigging cut by the order of an officer of H. B. M. ship Eden; that the captain of the brig complained to the commander of the only American vessel-of-war in port, who, in the moment of exasperation, and under the feelings of indignation that would very naturally be produced by such unwarrantable conduct, and not wishing to make a public affair of a thing which he supposed an individual alone responsible for, did address a letter to an officer of his own rank, and the one whom he considered answerable for the outrage, which was evidently intended to excite him to a personal rencontre. This he thought (as he was on the point of sailing) would be a shorter road to the obtaining of satisfaction than an application to the authorities of the port, who had been disregarded by the British officer, or the commander of the British forces in these seas, whose distance precluded the possibility of his rendering immediate redress.

In the conduct of Lieut. Gregory in addressing the letter to the first lieutenant of the Eden, which is made the subject of complaint, I can see nothing that requires an official interference on my part; there is no insult offered or intended to the British officers or to the British flag, but, to the contrary, expressly disavowed.

I view it, therefore, as a personal affair between Lieut. Gregory and the first lieutenant of the Eden, which, as every man must be left to judge for himself in these matters, they must of course settle in the way that best suits theirown feelings; and whatever way it may be settled, I cannot apprehend that it can be productive of any ill-will between the American and British naval officers in those seas, at least it is my sincere wish that it may not; and I shall use every precaution in my power to prevent it.

I cannot but regret that Lieut. Gregory permitted his feelings to master him so far as to induce him to write the letter of which you complain; but let us change places for an instant, and suppose the American brig to have been an English vessel, the officers of the Grampus to have been the offenders, and an appeal had been made by the injured party to the commander of the Eden, the only British vessel in the neutral port of Havana, would you not, let me ask, make use of the readiest means of punishing the aggressor? Lieut. Gregory has done no more.

I am gratified to perceive, by the correspondence, that justice has been done to those who have been injured, to wit, the owners of the American vessel, who were certainly no party in the offensive conduct of the mate, and therefore ought not to have been made to suffer by the destruction of their property; it would have been more gracious, however, if this had not been done in consideration of the acknowledgments contained in the American captain's letter of the 4th of July, six days after the outrage, and after having had two interviews with you, and to which yours dated the 3d of the same month is given as reply.

As justice, however, has been done, and as the American captain has expressed his satisfaction at your proceedings, it does away the necessity of any complaint on my part to the local authorities whose rights you had violated, or to your commanding officer; which would certainly have been made, however painful it might have been to me, but for this (though tardy) adjustment.

I cannot but observe, from the confusion of dates, the circumstances under which the acknowledgments were obtained from the American captain, the day on which this letter is dated, (the day of our national anniversary,) and certain characteristic expressions in his letter, that there is room for suspicion that the letter was not written by him, and that some management was used in obtaining his signature. That the rigging of his vessel was cut by your crew, and that he did complain of the outrage, is certain. If it was right and proper in you to use this violence, there was no necessity in making atonement for it; and if, actuated by a sense of the wrong you had done, you thought proper to make good the damage, you ought not to complain of Lieut. Gregory for making you sensible of it, and least of all should you, to cover your own injustice, have taken advantage of the American captain's distress or weakness to obtain from him acknowledgments calculated to disgrace himself and throw censure on others.

In conclusion, I beg leave to state that I have received no official communication from Lieut. Gregory on the subject, and that my opinion on the merits of the case is founded from facts contained in your own communications.

I have the honor, &c.,

(Signed) D. PORTER,

Commanding U. S. Naval Forces in the West Indies and Gulf of Mexico.

Commodore Owen to Commodore Porter.

H. B. M. SHIP LANCASTER, Port Royal Harbor, Jamaica, September 28, 1823.

SIR: Captain Lawrence, of H. B. M. ship Eden, being absent when the Scout arrived, your letter for him, bearing date July 25, has been delivered to me.

With respect to the affair of the American merchant brig, the Hiram, I can give no opinion, as Captain Lawrence has reprehensibly neglected to report to me upon it. It is, however, impossible to conceive that any officer could commit an act of wanton, violent, and unprovoked aggression on an unoffending merchant vessel; and I trust it will appear that nothing has arisen in this case to bear out such an accusation.

If Captain Lawrence has, by intemperance, exposed himself to the rebuke and the insinuations conveyed by your letter, whatever may have been the provocation, it is right that he should give an explanation of his conduct to that department of the government of H. B. Majesty by whose authority he acts. I shall call upon him so to do, and trust he will most fully justify it.

I refer with much regret to the remainder of your letter.

While an officer of your high rank and consideration in the service of your country, condescends to justify the course which, I learn from your letter, was adopted by the commander of the schooner of the United States, the Grampus, not only as applying to a particular case, but as a general measure, it will be in vain that you profess the wish it may not be productive of ill-will between the officers whom we respectively command.

The personal rencontres of hot-headed individuals are seldom the result of reason, nor do they assure at all times the punishment of the aggressor; certainly a reference to that decision, in such difference of feeling as may arise out of the discharge of public duty, can add nothing to the cordiality and confidence of the two services, nor will it conciliate that general good-will which, I had hoped, was making rapid progress, and which I had flattered myself there was, between us, a sincere and mutual disposition to improve. On my part, that disposition yet remains, and trusting it will still be met by corresponding sentiments,

I have the honor, &c.,

(Signed) E. W. C. R. OWEN,

Commodore, commanding-in-chief the Squadron of H. B. M's. Ships and Vessels in the West Indies.

The Secretary of State to Mr. Addington.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, May 10, 1824.

SIR: In acknowledging the receipt of your letter of the 4th inst., enclosing copies of a correspondence relating to a transaction in the harbor of the Havana, in the month of June last, I am directed by the President of the United States to request you would assure your government of the regret and concern with which he has learned that anything should have occurred having a tendency to irritation or estrangement between officers in the service of our respective countries, and inform them that he has directed immediate inquiry to be made with regard to the facts in the case, and to the motives of the officers of the United States for the proceedings which form the subject of complaint against them. Of the result of this inquiry, your government will, as speedily as shall be practicable, be informed.

I pray you, sir, to accept the assurance of my distinguished consideration.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, May 31, 1824.

SIR: I enclose to you copy of letters, purporting to have been occasioned by a transaction in the harbor of Havana, in the month of June last. They have been communicated by the chargé d'affaires of Great Britain, under instructions from his government "to call the attention of our government to the conduct pursued by Lieutenant Francis H. Gregory, in making a complaint of a public nature an excuse for an attempt to provoke a personal quarrel with a British officer;" and to express regret that you should have been induced to sanction a proceeding of so intemperate a character as that pursued by Lieutenant Gregory.

The President has directed me to communicate these papers to you, and to call on you for an early explanation of the motives which influenced you in the course which you pursued. I have, by his direction, also called for an explanation from Lieutenant Gregory. It is at all times desirable, and never more so than at present, that the most amicable feelings should be cultivated between our officers and those of other nations; and it is a cause of deep regret that anything should occur having a tendency to irritation and estrangement between them.

I cannot express to you in terms too strong, the necessity of pursuing the objects of your cruise, and with a strict regard to them only. Should you meet the squadrons or ships of other powers, it is the desire of the President that, claiming what is due to ourselves, you manifest a proper respect for their flags; and, should they be employed in similar service, that you extend towards them a very conciliatory disposition, and a sincere desire to harmonize. It is of the highest importance to preserve peace with foreign powers, and, with that view, that no irritating circumstance should occur between our public ships and those of any power. The conduct of our naval commanders is watched by every nation; and our fellow-citizens look to our navy as the means of supporting our rights against encroachments and injuries from other powers, after the constituted authorities have pronounced that such have been committed. They would lose their confidence in and respect for the navy, if it should, in any mode, provoke such injuries, or be instrumental in producing war. I do not urge the strict observance of this conduct in you, from the apprehension that there is any danger that you will depart from it. It is a course of policy which the President thinks of the highest importance to the best interests of the nation, as well as of the navy, and he has enjoined it on me to make a like communication to all our naval commanders, whatever their grade or force may be, or wherever employed.

To the injunctions heretofore given respecting the transportation of specie, the most strict attention will also be paid. A suspicion that our naval commanders, who have heretofore given such proof of their patriotism and high sense of honor, had lost any portion of those manly sentiments, would sink them in the estimation of their country.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Captain David Porter, commanding U. S. Squadron in the West Indies and Gulf of Mexico.

Navy Department, May 24, 1824.

Sir: I enclose to you a copy of a letter purporting to have been written by you on the 28th of June, 1823, to the first lieutenant of the British ship-of-war Eden, at Havana, with the correspondence to which it gave rise. They have been communicated by the chargé d'affaires of Great Britain, under instructions from his government to call the attention of our government to the conduct pursued by you, in making a complaint of a public nature an excuse for attempting to provoke a personal quarrel with a British officer.

The President of the United States has directed me to call on you for an early explanation of your letter, and the circumstances and motives which occasioned it.

It is at all times cause of regret and concern that anything should occur having a tendency to irritation and estrangement between officers in the service of the two countries, and it is hoped that such an explanation will be given as may be satisfactory to the government, and consistent with the high character you have heretofore sustained in the public service.

I am, respectfully, &c.,

(Signed) SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Francis H. Gregory, Esq., Lieutenant U. S. Navy, New York.

New York, June 10, 1824.

Sir: I have had the honor to receive your letter, and the accompanying documents, relative to the differences which occurred between an English naval officer and myself at Havana, in June, 1823.

My letter, addressed to the first lieutenant of the English sloop-of-war Eden, bears its explanation in the first paragraph; it was intended promptly to resent an insult and outrage offered an American citizen, who had no means of redressing his wrongs but through my intervention, and whose call for satisfaction had previously been contemptuously disregarded. I had then as little disposition to provoke a personal quarrel with a British officer as I had fears of the consequences, when insulting aggressions on his part rendered it not only necessary, but absolutely unavoidable, as I conceived was the case in the instance wherein I am accused. The circumstances which induced me to address the first lieutenant of the Eden were briefly as follows: Shortly after my arrival at Havana, on the 27th June, 1823, Captain Sylvester Allen, of the American merchant brig Hiram, came on board the Grampus for the purpose, and complained that the Eden had warped foul of his vessel, on her way up the harbor, either by design or mismanagement; and without the least forbearance, or using any endeavors to clear her without damage, and although there was no necessity from the apprehension of any accident befalling the ship, they immediately and most wantonly cut all the Hiram's rigging within their reach; that to their respectful entreaties to desist they were answered with abusive and insulting language; and that no redress could be obtained for the injuries and insults thus put upon him. While deliberating upon the course most proper to be pursued upon this information, Captain Winder, of the English brig Cherub, a very respectable man, and well acquainted with me, came on board the Grampus and voluntarily corroborated Capt. Allen's statement, expressed his regret at the wantonness of the Eden's officers, and said that he had been on board the Hiram and surveyed the damages done her, and given it as his opinion that satisfaction was due for the outrages which had been committed, he having witnessed the transaction. Believing then, as I now do, that Capt. Lawrence had refused to do justice upon the application of Capt. Allen, and considering it an outrage which ought to be instantly noticed to prevent a recurrence of such treatment to our merchantmen, who are always looking to us and expect protection, and intending to leave the port in a few hours, I had no time for negotiation, nor the least prospect of obtaining satisfaction by pacific measures, I conceived it most proper, under all circumstances, to express myself in the manner my note exhibits, and I addressed it to the first lieutenant of the Eden, because, as a gentleman, he ought to have held himself responsible to Capt. Allen for his abusive language, and because I was upon a level with him, an honor Capt. Allen was not permitted to enjoy.

I enclose you a certificate of Lieutenant Ray, who carried my note, by which you will be informed of the truth of that part of the transaction. On Lieutenant Ray's return, with the assurances of Captain Lawrence that the damage done to the Hiram should be immediately repaired, I informed Captain Allen thereof, and gave myself no further concern about the matter, excepting merely to satisfy myself that Captain Lawrence had promptly and faithfully performed his promise. The damages were repaired between the date of my note and the 2d of July, of which I had information previous to my departure from the port on that day. On the 3d of July I arrived at Thompson's Island. After all this the correspondence between Captain Allen and Captain Lawrence takes place under date the 4th, and is of a character unworthy of any honorable man. I was informed of Captain Lawrence's extraordinary attention to Captain Allen, and though I suspected his intentions, I took no measures to counteract them, not believing Captain Allen would act so basely as he has been instigated to do. Commodore Porter's remarks upon those letters are fully warranted by the circumstances under which they were written and presented to him, and I entirely accord in opinion with him, and also do not conceive it necessary for me to notice them further than to remark my belief that such a display of ingenuity must be at the expense of some one's integrity, and that I am not one of those who consider Captain Lawrence's rank as a positive assurance that he could not have been guilty of any aggression or malconduct in this affair. I trust, sir, that you will perceive there was a necessity for my interference in this case, and that you will acquit me of having any designs to interrupt the friendly intercourse with foreign officers, which it is the wish of the government, and the interest of the navy officers particularly, to preserve.

I have never been engaged in a personal contest with any one, and hope that I may never be compelled to make so painful a sacrifice of principles long cherished, by any circumstances that may hereafter transpire in the course of my life. I shall always be found obedient to the orders of my superiors; but I cannot promise ever gracefully to submit to insults either to myself or countrymen.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FRANCIS H. GREGORY, Lieut. U. S. Navy.

Hon. Samuel L. Southard, Secretary of the Navy

I, James W. H. Ray, a lieutenant of the United States navy, do hereby certify that while attached to the United States schooner Grampus, commanded by Lieut. Francis H. Gregory, and lying at anchor in the harbor of Havana, on the 28th June, 1823, Captain Sylvester Allen, of the American merchant brig Hiram, came to the Grampus, and, after inquiring for Lieutenant Gregory, stated that the English sloop-of-war Eden, in warping up the harbor the evening previous, had run foul of his vessel, and without having any provocation, or there being any necessity for doing so, wantonly cut and damaged the rigging of his vessel, and otherwise abused them, for which no satisfaction whatever could be obtained. This complaint, made alongside, before most of the officers of the Grampus, was properly reported by me to Lieutenant Gregory immediately afterwards. Early in the evening of the 28th June I was directed by Lieutenant Gregory to carry a sealed note to the first lieutenant of the Eden, which I delivered to him on the quarter-deck of that ship. He immediately went below and read the note by the sentinal's light, at the cabin door. After having perused it he went into the captain's cabin, while I, at the special invitation of some of the officers of the ship, went into the ward-room. After remaining there some little time I repaired to the cabin, at the captain's request. On my entrance he immediately adverted to the note I had delivered to his first lieutenant, which he then had before him, and detailed to me the circumstances of his differences with Captain Allen, in his own way, very differently from the statement given by Capt. Allen, to which I replied, in mere civility, that if his stat ment was true the course he had pursued was justifiable. But I am free to say, as it differed so much from Captain Allen's account of the matter, and was totally at variance with other proofs which had come within our knowledge, that I could not give full faith to his relation of the circumstances. As to my expressing myself to the officers of the Eden in the manner Captain Lawrence has stated, I positively deny it; the more so as from my knowledge of the circumstances, I thought Lieutenant Gregory acted very properly in resenting the outrageous conduct of the Eden's officers towards one of our countrymen. Captain Lawrence, after commenting upon Lieutenant Gregory's note, and the circumstances of the case, and frequentl reyverting to his ship's being a man-of-war, and having then on board a very large quantity of specie, finally expressed his regret that any difficulty should have arisen; that he would immediately repair the damage done the Hiram, and intended to make the letter written by Lieutenant Gregory the subject of an official complaint to Commodore Porter. I then left him and returned with his message immediately on board the Grampus, and communicated it to Lieutenant Gregory. I did not, as Captain Lawrence has stated, go down amongst his officers after my interview with him in the cabin of his ship.

We left Havana on the 2d July, for Thompson's Island, and I heard nothing more of these matters until Lieutenant Gregory laid before me several papers on the subject, recently transmitted to him by the honorable Secretary of the Navy. On perusing them I could not but remark that the letter purporting to have been written by Captain Allen to Captain Lawrence fully warrants the suspicions expressed by Commodore Porter respecting it. I have no doubt of its having been dictated by some person, as I am persuaded, from what I observed of Captain Allen, that it is not his language which it bears. Captain Lawrence's charitable care towards Captain Allen, after the receipt of Lieutenant Gregory's note, and his generous condescension in inviting him to his table, laid him under obligations which certainly called for some expression of his gratitude, though they by no means required so great a sacrifice of his honor.

(Signed) J. W. H. RAY, Lieutenant U. S. Navy.

New York, June 6, 1824.

WASHINGTON, June 26, 1824.

SIR: I have this day received your communication of the 31st May, enclosing certain papers respecting an altercation between Lieutenant Gregory and Captain Lawrence, of the British navy, and am somewhat surprised to find myself charged with having sanctioned Lieutenant Gregory's conduct on that occasion, when, so far from having given my sanction to it, I disapproved of it, and so expressed myself to Lieutenant Gregory. It is certain, however, that I did not, and could not, approve the shameful, wanton and disgraceful conduct of Captain Lawrence, to whom, he having appealed to me, it became my duty to make known my sentiments on the subject, which are contained in my letter to him of the 25th July, 1823, and which now continue the same as they were when that letter was written. Commodore Owen has pledged himself, by his letter to me of the 28th September, to investigate the conduct of Captain Lawrence; and it was his duty to have done so and ascertained the result before any charge was brought against Lieutenant Gregory or myself.

I am aware of the propriety, and believe it always necessary to preserve a good understanding with all foreign officers, and I have uniformly manifested a disposition to harmonize with them since I have held my present command, as has been made manifest on every occasion when I have come in contact with them, and as has been expressed not only in their letters to me, but in the orders of the board of admiralty, recently published by Commodore Owen. The harmony which has existed between myself, the officers under my command, and the officers of the British navy, in our frequent intercourse with them, has been the source of great pleasure to ourselves and some surprise to others, and whatever other charge may be brought against us, the charge from them of a disposition, on our part, to encourage bad feelings, is groundless, as you will perceive by the enclosed copy of a letter to Commodore Owen.

As regards the transportation of specie, I shall be governed, myself, and cause others under my command to be governed, by the orders of the Department, from which there will not be the slightest deviation, whatever they may be. I know not the causes which gave rise to your injunction on this head, but it is a source of great satisfaction to me that my conduct is made an exception from the general apprehension; and I shall esteem it a particular favor, if, hereafter, any suspicions should be entertained of my having "lost any portion of those manly sentiments" adverted to, that I may be early apprised thereof, in order that I may meet them promptly.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, sir, your most obedient servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

Honorable SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

WASHINGTON, November 22, 1823.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your several communications of the 28th of July and 23d and 28th of September. The cordiality which prevailed between the forces under the direction of Captain McLean and those under Lieutenant Watson gave me sincere pleasure, and I was prepared by the report of Lieutenant Watson to esteem your officer before I had, by a personal acquaintance, become better acquainted with his character. The small services I was enabled to render Captain McLean, his officers and crew, have been too highly estimated by him. I did no more than humanity called for, and no more than might have been expected in one of your ports, had any of our vessels been similarly afflicted.

The expression of the sentiments contained in your letter is highly gratifying to me, and I beg you to be assured that it will at all times afford me the utmost pleasure to have it in my power to extend to any of his Britannic Majesty's officers every hospitality that our small establishment will afford.

With regard to the complaint of Captain Lawrence and his aggression, as commented on in my letter to him, I can only regret that you have so hastily expressed your opinion as to the impossibility of such conduct on his part, because I feel a conviction in my own mind that you will, on investigation, be satisfied that I have said nothing to him which his conduct did not justify; that he did "commit an act of wanton, violent and unprovoked aggression on an unoffending merchant vessel," and that, too, in a Spanish port, and in disregard of the proper authorities.

You misunderstand me, sir, when you suppose me to be an advocate of duelling, and you do not properly appreciate my feelings when you doubt the sincerity of my assurances. I have felt every desire to preserve harmony between those under my command and all foreign officers, and I hope the uniformity of my conduct has proved it; but if it is believed that I will permit violence to be offered by any one to the persons and property of my fellow-citizens, or an insult to our flag, with impunity, too much is expected of me.

I have the honor to be, with every sentiment of respect, your very obedient servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER,
Commanding U S. Naval Forces in the West Indies and Gulf of Mexico.

Commodore E. W. R. C. OWEN, Commanding-in-chief the Squadron of his Britannic Majesty's Ships and Vessels in the West Indies.

OAK HILL, August 9, 1824.

SIR: I send you a letter addressed to the Secretary of the Navy, of which I wish you to communicate a copy to Commodore Porter for Lieutenant Gregory, and one to Mr. Adams.

I address it to the Secretary, that you may communicate in the manner stated.

With great respect, your obedient servant,
(Signed) JAMES MONROE.

Inform Mr. Adams, that I shall answer his by next mail. Return me a copy of the letter enclosed.

To the CHIEF CLERK of the Navy Department.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, August 12, 1824.

SIR: I have been instructed by the President of the United States to transmit to you the enclosed copy of a letter addressed by him to the Secretary of the Navy, and have the honor to request that you will communicate the same to Lieutenant F. H. Gregory.

I am, very, &c.
(Signed) CHARLES HAY.

Capt. DAVID PORTER, U. S. West India Squadron, &c. Present.

OAK HILL, August —, 1824.

SIR: I received from the Department, by the last mail, a copy of the letter from the Secretary of the Navy to Commodore Porter, of the 31st of May last, relating to the transaction which occurred in the port of Havana, between Lieut. Gregory and the commander of the British sloop-of-war Eden. I had before received a copy of the commodore's letter to the Secretary, of the 26th of June, in reply to that to him, with a copy of his letter to Commodore Owen, of the 22d of November, and of Lieut. Gregory's to the Secretary, of the 10th of June, in reply to one to him, and of a report of Lieut. Ray to Commodore Porter, on the same subject.

It appears by these documents that the incident occurred in the port of Havana, and that Lieutenant Gregory interfered, at the instance of Captain Allen, whose brig, the Hiram, a merchant vessel, had been injured by the British sloop-of-war Eden, and whose commander, Capt. Lawrence, had refused to make to the injured party, on his own application, a just reparation. Of the nature of the interference no precise information is given, except what is contained in the report of Lieut. Ray, and Lieut. Gregory's letter to the Secretary, above noticed. Lieut. Ray states that he carried and delivered a sealed letter to the first lieutenant of the Eden from Lieut. Gregory, which, from the other passages contained in the report, I infer to have been one which made the affair between the captain of the Hiram and the British officer personal; Lieut. Gregory resenting the injuries done to the Hiram, and insults offered to Captain Allen, as if rendered to his own ship and to himself.

This interference is supported by Lieut. Gregory's letter to the Secretary, in which he states that he had no prospect of obtaining the satisfaction which had been refused to Capt. Allen by pacific measures; and also by other passages, and indeed by the tone of the whole letter.

Any interference of Lieut. Gregory, or by any commander of one of our public ships, would, it is presumed, be considered by the commander of the British ship, in such a case, as official; and that it was so intended by Lieut. Gregory, is to be inferred from his letter. He speaks of the protection claimed by the commanders of our merchant vessels from our ships-of-war, and due to them, and that this was an instance which required prompt attention. It was as commander of the Grampus that application was made to him by Captain Allen, and it was in that character that he addressed his letter to Captain Lawrence. Had he not been the commander he would not have been there. He could write the letter, therefore, in no other character.

In time of peace, expeditions are equipped for special purposes.

The orders given to their commanders are precise, and intended to preserve peace with the belligerents, on just principles; with other friendly powers they bear no relation. In this instance the great object was the suppression of piracy, which had in view a lawless banditti only. Great care has been observed, in the instructions given to Commodore Porter, to guard, in the execution of his orders, against any collision between him and those under his command, and either of the belligerents, Spain or the new governments. The possibility of such an occurrence with any other friendly power was not even anticipated.

It was concluded that our officers, well acquainted with this duty, would follow strictly their instructions, and not go in any instance beyond them. In every view, therefore, which I have taken of the subject, I have considered the interference of Lieut. Gregory improper. The incident occurring in the port of Havana, he had, on no principle whatever, any right to interfere with any power in his character as commander of a public ship. The government of the island had jurisdiction of the case. To the governor complaint of the injury ought to have been made by the consul, whose duty it was, had redress not been obtained of him, to have reported the whole transaction to his own government, that it might be sought by it through the proper channel of the British government. Had Lieut. Gregory, in a mild and friendly way, disclaiming all official pretension or right to act as naval commander, endeavored to reconcile the parties, and to obtain justice for his injured fellow-citizen, there could have been no objection to it. There would, in that case, have been no compromitment of his government and country. The principle on which Lieut. Gregory interposed has no limitation. If the commander of a public ship can interfere in such a case, or in any case to which his orders do not extend, on the general principle of protecting our commerce according to his own discretion, the most pernicious consequences will necessarily follow from it. The right of peace and war may be taken from his government into his own hands. In expressing thus decidedly my disapprobation of Lieut Gregory's conduct, I do not mean to impute any improper motive for it. I think that he acted from patriotic motives, though, undoubtedly, they were mis conceived and misapplied in the instance under consideration.

I am, with great respect, your obedient servant,
(Signed) JAMES MONROE.

To the SECRETARY of the Navy.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, August 31, 1824.

SIR: Your letter of the 4th of May last, with its enclosures, have been laid before the President of the United States, by whose direction I have the honor of assuring you of the great concern with which he has learnt the occurrence of circumstances tending in any manner to interrupt the good understanding, or impair the harmony which it has been, and continues, his earnest desire to see prevailing between the officers of the United States and those of your country, who, in the course of their respective services, may be brought into personal relations with each other.

He concurs entirely in that sentiment of disapprobation, which has been on this occasion expressed by your government, and to which your note has invited particular attention, upon the ill example of making a transaction of a public nature the ground of a provocation to personal conflect in private war.

Of this sentiment of the President, Commodore Porter and Lieut. Gregory have both been apprised. It is in strict conformity with the instructions to all the naval officers of the United States, and it is hoped will serve as a guide to them in all their public relations with the officers of your country hereafter.

With regard to the facts in which the controversy to which your letter refers originated, an aspect somewhat different from that exhibited in the papers which you enclosed has been presented by the communications received from Commodore Porter and Lieutenant Gregory. But as the differences are not deemed absolutely necessary to the single principle upon which the animadversion of both governments has been called forth, it is believed to comport with the views of both to leave them without further investigation.

I pray you, sir, to accept the assurance of my distinguished consideration.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

HENRY U. ADDINGTON, Esq., Chargé d'Affaires from Great Britain.

U. S. SHIP PEACOCK, Hampton Roads, February 13, 1823.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that I am now anchored in these roads with the whole squadron, with the exception of the barges, which will be ready to leave Norfolk in the course of two days, and will proceed direct to Thompson's Island. My course with the squadron will be circuitous, and will be regulated by your instructions of the 4th instant.

Accompanying this is a list of the officers under my command, with the names of the ships to which they belong.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. SMITH THOMPSON, Secretary of the Navy, Washington City.

A return of the officers attached to the expedition, under Commodore D. Porter, for the suppression of piracy.

David Porter, commander of the squadron.
Lieutenant Commander John M. Maury, acting as captain to the squadron.
David P. Adams, chaplain.
Peter Wilson, secretary to Commodore Porter.
James G. Boughan, signal officer.
Thomas Barron, clerk.

UNITED STATES SHIP PEACOCK.

Stephen Cassin, Esq., commander.
Joseph Cassin, lieutenant.
Eli A. F. Vallette, lieutenant.
Thomas Crabb, lieutenant.
Corn's K. Stribling, lieutenant.
Joseph Williston, sailingmaster.
John De Bree, purser.
Wm. D. Babbit, surgeon's mate.
John G. Rodgers, midshipman.
Francis Stone, midshipman.
Robert Steed, midshipman.
John A. Carr, midshipman.
Wm. Rittenhouse, midshipman.
John E. Bispham, midshipman.
P. A. Stockton, midshipman.
R. M. Benbridge, midshipman.
Miles King, jr., midshipman.
Kinsey Johns, midshipman.
James Thayer, boatswain.
Walter Cochran, gunner.
Thomas Armstrong, carpenter.
James Childs, sailmaker.

(Signed) JOHN DE BREE, Purser.

UNITED STATES SHIP PEACOCK, February 13, 1823.

UNITED STATES SCHOONER GRAYHOUND.

John Porter, captain.
Sam'l W. Downing, lieutenant.
David G. Farragut, acting lieutenant.
Wm. Belt, surgeon's mate.
Benjamin Follet, passed midshipman.
Cadw'r Ringgold, midshipman.
Cha's T. Shoemaker, midshipman.

UNITED STATES SCHOONER SHARK.

Matthew C. Perry, lieutenant, commander.
Wm. T. Temple, lieutenant.
Wm. F. Shields, lieutenant.
Cha's Ellery, acting lieutenant.
Rob't Cunningham, sailingmaster.
John B. Timberlake, purser.
John S. Wiley, surgeon.
Timothy G. Benham, midshipman.
Arthur Lewis, midshipman.
Charles H. Starr, midshipman.
Samuel F. Hazard, acting midshipman.
Amasa Paine, acting midshipman.
Alex'r Gibson, acting midshipman.
Wm. J. Slidell, acting midshipman.
John M. Breeze, master's mate.
Tho's Norman, captain's clerk.
Ja's B. Wright, boatswain.
John Deacon, carpenter.

UNITED STATES GALLIOT SEA GULL.

Wm. H. Watson, lieutenant, commander.
Hiram Paulding, lieutenant.
Ralph Voorhees, lieutenant.
William Inman, lieutenant.
Tho's Williamson, hospital surgeon.
Arthur Bainbridge, acting sailingmaster.
C. H. Van Brunt, surgeon's mate.
Andrew A. Harwood, midshipman.
Sam'l W. Stockton, midshipman.
Robert Taylor, midshipman.
Quinton Ratcliffe, cadet midshipman.
John Webb, master's mate.

UNITED STATES SCHOONER JACKAL.

Tho's H. Stevens, lieutenant, commander.
Josiah Tatnall, lieutenant.
James Goodrum, lieutenant.
Edmond Byrne, passed midshipman.
Tho's J. Harris, midshipman.
Wm. W. Whetcroft, cadet midshipman.
Hamil'n E. V. Robinson, cadet midshipman.

UNITED STATES SCHOONER FOX.

Wm. H. Cocke, lieutenant, commander.
Rich'd M. Potter, lieutenant.
John Kelly, passed midshipman.
Geo. F. Pearson, passed midshipman.
Mordecai Morgan, surgeon's mate.
John L. Ball, midshipman.
John J. Jenkins, cadet midshipman.
Sam'l B. Cocke, cadet midshipman.

UNITED STATES SCHOONER WILD CAT.

Cha's W. Skinner, lieutenant, commander.
Fred'k G. Wolbert, lieutenant.
J. W. Sullivan, passed midshipman.
Wm. H. Gardner, passed midshipman.
Geo. W. Simmes, midshipman.
Henry D. Scott, midshipman.
Geo. B. Wilkinson, cadet midshipman.

UNITED STATES SCHOONER BEAGLE.

John T. Newton, lieutenant, commander.
James E. Legare, lieutenant.
Rob't Ritchie, passed midshipman.
Geo. W. Sommerville, passed midshipman.
Sam'l Marshall, cadet midshipman.
J. M. Watson, cadet midshipman.
Neil Howison, cadet midshipman.

UNITED STATES SCHOONER FERRET.

Sam'l Henley, lieutenant, commander.
John T. Ritchie, lieutenant.
Fred'k Engle, passed midshipman.
Thomas Dornin, passed midshipman.
John Swartwout, midshipman.
Nath'l W. Duke, midshipman.
Edward Hoban, cadet midshipman.

UNITED STATES SCHOONER TERRIER.

Rob't M. Rose, lieutenant, commander.
John A. Wish, lieutenant.
Ephraim D. Whitlock, lieutenant.
W. W. McKean, passed midshipman.
Ebenezer Reyner, midshipman.
G. C. Ashton, cadet midshipman.
Wm. B. Everett, cadet midshipman.

UNITED STATES SCHOONER WEASEL.

Beverly Kennon, lieutenant, commander.
Henry Ward, lieutenant.
F. M. Buchanan, passed midshipman.
V. M. Randolph, passed midshipman.
Wm. M. Glendy, midshipman.
William Green, midshipman.

BARGES.

Tho's M. Newell, lieutenant.
W. D. Conway, surgeon's mate.
Joseph Moorhead, acting sailingmaster
John H. Smith, acting sailingmaster.
Wm. P. Pearcy, midshipman.
Joseph G. Smith, midshipman.
F. L. C. Fatio, midshipman.
Rob't W. Alden, acting midshipman.

DECOY.

Lawrence Kearney, lieutenant, commander.
Wm. E. McKenny, lieutenant.
Ja's M. McIntosh, lieutenant.
Wm. T. Rodgers, acting master.
Francis A. Thornton, purser.
Richard C. Edgar, surgeon.
Benj. R. Tinslar, acting surgeon's mate.
Stephen M'Cloud, master's mate.
L. M. Powell, midshipman.
Hampton Westcott, midshipman.
D. L. Randolph, midshipman.
John J. Glasson, acting midshipman.
L. Pennington, acting midshipman.

MARINE OFFICERS.

Alfred Grayson, captain.
Geo. W. Walker, lieutenant.
Stephen W. Rogers, lieutenant
William A. Bloodgood, lieutenant.

(Signed) J. M. MAURY, Captain to the Squadron.

UNITED STATES SHIP PEACOCK, Norfolk, February 12, 1823.

List of officers who held acting appointments in the West India squadron during the years 1823 and 1824, and whose acting appointments were not given by the Department.

John M. Maury, lieutenant, appointed acting captain.
Mordecai Morgan, surgeon's mate, appointed acting surgeon.
Wm. Belt, surgeon's mate, appointed acting surgeon.
Wm. D. Conway, surgeon's mate, appointed acting surgeon.
Wm. D. Babbet, surgeon's mate, appointed acting surgeon.
E. L. Dubarry, surgeon's mate, appointed acting surgeon.
H. W. Bassett, surgeon's mate, appointed acting surgeon.
B. Ticknor, surgeon's mate, appointed acting surgeon.
John S. Wiley, surgeon's mate, appointed acting surgeon.
Samuel Anderson, appointed acting surgeon's mate.
Wm. D. Price, appointed acting surgeon's mate.
Gregory Weems, appointed acting surgeon's mate.
C. H. Van Brunt, appointed acting surgeon's mate.
D. G. Farragut, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
Charles Ellery, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
Henry D. Scott, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
Frederick Engle, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
George W. Somerville, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
John Kelly, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
Wm. W. McKean, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
Franklin Buchanan, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
George F. Pearson, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
Wm. H. Gardner, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
Edmund Byrne, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
Robert Ritchie, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
Benjamin Follet, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
John M. Sullivan, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
Levin M. Powell, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
Wm. T. Rodgers, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
V. M. Randolph, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
James G. Boughan, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
Joseph Moorehead, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
Wm. P. Piercy, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
John Rudd, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
Thomas Dornin, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
T. G. Benham, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
Ste. B. Wilson, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
B. S. Grimke, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
A. B. Pinkham, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
Joseph Cutts, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
Jott S. Paine, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
John A. Carr, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
Henry Bruce, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
R. B Cunningham, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
R. S. Pinckney, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
L. M. Booth, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
Alexander Slidell, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
James K. Vallette, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
James Glynn, midshipman, appointed acting lieutenant.
A Bainbridge, midshipman, appointed acting sailingmaster.
John H. Smith, midshipman, appointed acting sailingmaster.
Wm. M. Rittenhouse, midshipman, appointed acting sailingmaster.
John D. Bird, midshipman, appointed acting sailingmaster.
Peyton T. Henley, midshipman, appointed acting sailingmaster.
Lewis Seeger, midshipman, appointed acting sailingmaster.
L. M. Harby, midshipman, appointed acting sailingmaster.
Elias C. Taylor, midshipman, appointed acting sailingmaster.
John Manning, midshipman, appointed acting sailingmaster.
Wm. D. Newman, midshipman, appointed acting sailingmaster.
Wm. Shaw, midshipman, appointed acting sailingmaster.
Wm. H. Pennock, midshipman, appointed acting sailingmaster.
M. S. Scott, midshipman, appointed acting sailingmaster.
A. F. Porter, midshipman, appointed acting sailingmaster.
Jas. T. Homans, midshipman, appointed acting sailingmaster.
John H. Little, midshipman, appointed acting sailingmaster.
Joshua H. Justin, midshipman, appointed acting sailingmaster.
Chas. E. Hawkins, midshipman, appointed acting sailingmaster.
William Green, midshipman, appointed acting sailingmaster.
Jas. H. Clinton, midshipman, appointed acting sailingmaster.
James M. Watson, appointed acting midshipman.
Kinsey Johns, appointed acting midshipman.
Robert A. Cocke, appointed acting midshipman.
William Covington, appointed acting midshipman.
Robert Benbridge, appointed acting midshipman.
F. G. Beatty, appointed acting midshipman.

Ben. L. Slye, appointed acting midshipman.
A. Aiken, ordinary seaman, appointed acting midshipman.
Jas. S. Scott, yeoman, appointed acting midshipman.
William E. Hoxie, master's mate, appointed acting sailingmaster.
R. Richardson, master's mate, appointed acting sailingmaster.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, December 20, 1822.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 16th instant, I have to observe that I have repeatedly had occasion to consider and refuse requests similar to yours, and to explain what is the established course of the Department with respect to acting appointments. They are authorized only in cases of emergency, and cease as soon as the necessity ceases. The rules and regulations of the service are explicit on this subject, and I have constantly endeavored to impress upon commanders the necessity of rigidly adhering to these rules, and to explain, to the officer receiving the acting appointment, that it would cease as soon as the place could be filled by a regularly commissioned or warrant officer. I cannot, therefore, comply with your request.

I am, respectfully, &c.,
(Signed) SMITH THOMPSON.

Midshipman V. M. RANDOLPH, U. S. Navy, Norfolk, Va.

SEA GULL, Port Rodgers, August 1, 1823.

SIR: Application has been made to me by the American consul, to take one million of dollars from La Vera Cruz to Cadiz, in October; and as we have but few opportunities in this way to make a little for ourselves, may I ask the indulgence of the Department in this respect?

If a direct conveyance cannot be granted, can I send the money to the United States? and can a transhipment take place from thence to Cadiz? This course will obviate all objections as regards the belligerent character of the property, if any exists.

An answer by the return vessel is desirable.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon SECRETARY of the Navy.

WASHINGTON CITY, November 3, 1823.

SIR: There are wanting for the West India station the following officers, to wit:

One master commandant to command the Hornet. One master commandant to be stationed on Thompson's Island, and to command the barges. One master commandant to do the duty of captain to the squadron. One lieutenant. Five passed midshipmen. Four surgeons. Nine surgeons' mates.

As the captain to the squadron is at present much wanted to relieve me from the details of duty, which dwell heavily on me, may I ask that his orders to report himself to me may be made out as early as possible? Master Commandant Finch is the officer I should prefer for this duty, and Master Commandant Wilkinson has volunteered for the other service.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. SECRETARY of the Navy.

U. S. SHIP JOHN ADAMS, January 6, 1824.

SIR: For your information, I have the honor to state that the frigate Congress is at the Navy yard, and will probably be ready for sea in two or three weeks.

The Hornet is undergoing considerable repairs, and will probably be ready in a month.

The Grampus is coppering, and will be ready in about ten days.

The Spark is ready for sea, and waiting for her commander.

The Weasel will be ready in three or four days; is now getting on board her provisions and other supplies.

I have dispatched the Shark, Fox, and Decoy, and shall send off the others as fast as they are got ready.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

To the Hon. SAM'L L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

U. S. SHIP JOHN ADAMS, January 9, 1824.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your instructions of the 3d inst., enclosing orders for Dr. Haslett to join the United States; but as that ship has sailed, I have retained his orders until I could be informed by you whether it is your intention that he should follow her.

The following list will show the medical men under my command, in the ships and vessels here, with the exception of the Congress, from which ship I have not yet received a return:

The John Adams, Drs. Babbit, Rapalje. The Decoy, Dr. Austin. The Hornet, Dr. Anderson, a supernumerary and passenger; Weems acting. The Shark, Dr. Chase. The Grampus, Dr. Norris.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. SECRETARY of the Navy.

U. S. SHIP JOHN ADAMS, Norfolk, January 10, 1824.

SIR: I have the honor to state that, in progressing with the repairs of the frigate Congress, it is found that she must be hove out to have her copper mended, as much of it is off, and it is believed that the worms have injured her bottom. She is found, also, to be very rotten under the counter; and under these circumstances, I am of opinion that it would be best for the public interest not to send her out with the temporary repairs she will require, as they cannot be made in less than two or three months, by which time, or soon after, the Independence can be got ready.

I have therefore given it as my opinion, to Captain Warrington, that whatever is done to the Congress, should be with views to more extensive repairs.

It will be necessary, for her preservation, that the copper should be mended before they are commenced.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

(Signed) D. PORTER.

To the Hon. SAM'L L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

U. S. SHIP JOHN ADAMS, January 14, 1824.

SIR: In reply to your several letters respecting piracies, I have the honor to inform you that the Spark and Weasel, in company, will sail to-morrow or next day, with full information on the subject, to scour the West Indies, from St. Bartholomews to the bottom of the Gulf of Mexico.

I have the honor to be, your very obedient, &c.,

(Signed) D. PORTER.

Honorable SAM'L L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

U. S. SHIP JOHN ADAMS, Norfolk, January 14, 1824.

SIR: Having received from you a copy of the instructions given Lieutenant Commander Perry, and those generally given to commanders, respecting the suppression of the slave trade, and perceiving it to be your intention to place the vessels employed for this purpose under my orders, I must beg of you to know whether the operations on the coast of Africa are to commence immediately, as it will, in all cases, be most advisable to let them commence their cruise there before going to the West Indies. I shall be glad to know your wishes on this subject, as one of the vessels under my command will be ready to execute them by the time I can receive your instructions.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. SAM'L L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

U. S. SHIP JOHN ADAMS, January 19, 1824.

SIR: I had the honor to address you, prior to my leaving Washington, on the subject of blockades.

Wishing to support the rights of a neutral, without infringing on those of belligerents, I beg I may be instructed on this head before my departure from this place; and as I am frequently dispatching vessels on service which may bring them in collision with French and Spanish vessels on the coasts of Mexico and the Colombian republic, it is extremely desirable that their commanders should know how to act correctly on the occasion.

The information lately received of a blockading force of French and Spanish vessels having been sent into the Gulf of Mexico, must be my apology for again troubling you.

I have the honor to be, sir, with great respect,

(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. SAM'L L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

U. S. SHIP JOHN ADAMS, January 23, 1824.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that in consequence of further repairs on the Congress being stopped, and wanting crews for the Grampus and Sea Gull, I have directed those of her crew who had volunteered for a special service for six months to be discharged, as also those whose terms of service expire on or before the 30th of March. I have directed also that those who have less than seven months to serve may be paid off, provided they will re-enter for two years without receiving any advance.

These men being a heavy expense to the public, without rendering any service whatever, I have thought this course the most advisable, as there is no doubt that by their re-entry all difficulties for the want of men will cease on this station.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your very obedient servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. S. L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

U. S. SHIP JOHN ADAMS, Norfolk, January 24, 1824.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that I shall, in a few days, dispatch the Grampus for the coast of Africa, and thence to the West Indies.

It is probable the Colonization Society may wish to communicate with the colony on the coast, and by informing them of the destination of that vessel the opportunity will be presented.

The following is an extract from Lieutenant Sloat's orders:

"While on the coast you will touch at the American settlement of free colored people; communicate with the agent of the American Colonization Society; ascertain the state and condition of the colony, giving it such aid, assistance and protection as it may stand in need of and be in your power to furnish."

It is my opinion that, with the contemplated addition to my force, I shall be able to send a vessel to the coast of Africa every six weeks, and give complete protection to our commerce in the West Indies and Gulf of Mexico. You are aware, however, that I have but one sloop-of-war fit for service. I cannot think the Hornet will be ready for sea much before spring.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient humble servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. SAM'L L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

U. S. SHIP JOHN ADAMS, February 14, 1824.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that I shall put to sea with [this] ship and the Sea Gull on the 17th. The Grampus will sail about the same time for the coast of Africa. The Hornet is still in the hands of the officers of the yard, and it is uncertain when she will be ready. Enclosed are Captain Cassin's orders for sailing, which I beg you to cause to be delivered to him.

In my route to Thompson's Island I shall touch at the different islands to windward, to obtain information respecting piratical vessels, if any should be out.

It is extremely desirable that I should be in possession of your instructions respecting blockades, as soon as possible.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

The Hon. SECRETARY of the Navy.

U. S. STEAM GALLIOT SEA GULL, Matanzas, May 4, 1824.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that I have sent to New York the store-ship Decoy for stores, and the schooner Grayhound for coppering and repairs.

The reduced state of the force under my command, and want of stores, make it necessary that they should return to the station with all expedition.

Application has been made to me to station a force at St. Thomas, for the protection of our commerce in that quarter, and to keep in check the Porto Rico privateers; but until piracy is completely suppressed in this quarter it will not be in my power to comply with the wishes of those interested, unless an augmentation should be made to my forces. I have directed all vessels on their passage to Thompson's Island to touch at St. Bartholomews and St. Thomas, which will obviate in a great degree the necessity of a stationary force, and give confidence to those engaged in commerce at those places.

I beg leave to observe that the medical department of the squadron under my command never has been in a worse condition. I have no medical aid whatever for any of the small vessels. I have only one acting surgeon's mate to attend those stationed on the island and those in the hospital.

I have a surgeon's mate, acting as surgeon, at this place to attend to the sick which may arrive here; one acting surgeon's mate in the Sea Gull; one surgeon's mate and one acting on board the John Adams; and these, with one mate on board the Spark, make the sum total of medical men on the station.

The sickly season is fast approaching. I shall do all in my power to guard against its effects; but should disease rage this year as much as the last, our situation would be truly deplorable.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. S. L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

WASHINGTON, July 20, 1824.

SIR: I beg leave, for your information, to state that by the arrival at this place yesterday of the schooner Ferret, from Thompson's Island, via Nassau, advices are received to the 2d instant, which describe the health of that place to be unusually good. The sick report accompanies this. All the improvements directed by the commander-in-chief, as regards buildings for public purposes and individual comfort, are progressing in the order contemplated, and their completion to the extent intended may very early be realized.

Plants of various kinds have been introduced from Cuba, and are in a thriving condition. The canals have been deepened so as to admit the sea water into the lagoons near the seat of population. Wild grass in that neighborhood has been destroyed, and the beach cleansed of the drift sea-weed which lodges upon it, subject to decomposition; so that all due care seems to be taken to guard against the recurrence of the malady similar to that which visited it last year. The season has been dry, the winds refreshing and variable, and the range of the thermometer from ninety-five to ninety-eight.

Acting Lieutenant Farragut, commanding the Ferret, reports that while at Nassau, about the 10th instant, one of his crew by the name of James Fredenbourg stated himself to be a deserter from H. B. M. ship Pandora, and that, in consequence, he gave him over to Captain Du Maigne, commanding H. B. M. ship Kangaroo. The grounds on which Lieutenant Farragut acted are, that it was repugnant to our regulations to have a foreigner in the service, and as a requital for a similar act of courtesy on the part of Captain Du Maigne, who had not long before returned to the Wild Cat, Lieutenant Legare, a deserter from one of the West India squadron. As Lieutenant Farragut has been governed in this transaction by a regard to reciprocity, and not constrained thereto by any act of the British officers, I indulge the expectation that you will approve of his proceedings.

Lieutenant Commandant McIntosh, under date of the 2d inst., gives a detailed report of his cruise in the Terrier along the coast of East Florida, from Cape Sable to Carlos Harbor, in search of a reported smuggling or piratical establishment not known before to us precisely, but which he has discovered to be situated on a key called Punta Rosa, bearing N. by W. ½ W. from the northeast end of Langbee Island. The number of inhabitants, Spaniards, are not ascertained with precision, but cannot be many, as there are but five thatched houses on the key, which is under the culture of corn, pumpkins, and melons. They are occupied in fishing, principally, and have licenses from Cuba to trade therewith. They rely upon the protection of our troops at Tampa Bay, regard themselves as belonging to the Territory, and feel secure in their avocation. Lest, however, they might become lawless, Lieutenant McIntosh removed to Thompson's Island two small carriage guns, which were alleged to have been kept to intimidate the Indians, who had committed some outrages on them.

The place is now so particularly identified, that occasional visits from the revenue cutters will effectually guard against the illicit introduction of goods into Florida.

Lieutenant Sloat, commanding the Grampus, reports under date of the 17th instant, from New York, that between the dates of the 4th and 27th of June, he had visited the ports of Campeachy, Alvarado and Tampico, in accordance with orders; that rumors prevailed of a piratical vessel being near Campeachy, for which he made diligent search, fruitlessly.

The schooner Jackal was at Tampico about the 20th, and the schooner John Adams near Vera Cruz on the 21st instant, so that you will perceive all the protection is afforded in the Bay of Mexico contemplated in your letter of the 20th instant.

Lieutenant McIntosh, who superseded, Lieutenant Oellers in command at Thompson's Island, writes under date of the 4th of July, that an American brig was stated to have been captured by a piratical boat near Matanzes and carried into Port Escondido; that he had an accurate description of the boat, and had dispatched a barge, together with the Terrier, to effect her rescue. I am encouraged to hope that his efforts may meet with success.

In addition to the protection already afforded to the commerce of Matanzas, you may calculate on the services of the Wild Cat, which sailed on Saturday last, so that this demand on the Department is answered.

The force at present in the Bay of Mexico, it is hoped, will succeed in taking or driving away the marauders, stated by the papers to infest it; it was desirable to guard against the almost simultaneous return of several vessels of the West India squadron to the United States, and the cruises have been arranged with a view to that object, and the keeping at all times of a sufficient force about Cuba and in the Bay of Mexico.

On the 15th of July, the schooner Fox had sailed from Tampico to New Orleans, so that at every practicable point some of our vessels are seen.

I cannot but congratulate you on the general good health enjoyed by the respective crews. Some symptoms of fever have manifested themselves, and some deaths have occurred; this must be expected; exemption from disease cannot be calculated upon, although I am convinced by reports from the respective officers that every regard is paid to health, cleanliness and comfort.

With respect, I have the honor to be,

W. B. FINCH, Captain West India Squadron.

Honorable SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

WASHINGTON, August 10, 1824.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose you a correspondence between Admiral Sir L. W. Halsted, Knt., commanding her Britannic Majesty's naval forces in the West Indies, and myself, on the subject of a salute; and I take the liberty to suggest that, in order to avoid a repetition of the indignity to which I have been subjected, an order be given that no United States vessel shall salute any British flag officer whatever.

We cannot do it under the existing British naval instructions, as cited by Admiral Halsted, with a knowledge of the fact, without dishonoring our flag. No such rule exists with regard to salutes to British army officers, whatever may be their rank. My salute previously given to the forts at Jamaica, was returned with an equal number of guns.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

(Signed) D. PORTER.

Honorable SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

To Admiral Sir Lawrence William Halsted, knight, commanding his Britannic Majesty's naval forces in the West Indies, &c.:

SIR: Having been assured by the officers of this ship, since leaving Jamaica, that the salute to your flag of fifteen guns, fired by my order while there, was only returned by a salute of thirteen guns, I have to request you to inform me if such was the fact, and if so, to ask your reasons for not returning a salute equal to the one fired by me.

The vessel-of-war which bears this will await your answer.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

(Signed) D. PORTER,

Commanding U. S. Naval Forces in the West Indies and Gulf of Mexico.

U. S. SHIP JOHN ADAMS, April 21, 1824.

HIS BRITANNIC MAJESTY'S SHIP SERAPIS, in Port Royal Harbor, Jamaica, May 14, 1824.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 21st of April last, in which you are pleased to request that I would inform you whether 13 guns only were fired by the ship which bore my flag, in return for 15 guns which you had ordered to be fired when you were last at Jamaica.

In answer to which, I beg to inform you that thirteen guns only were returned, and that the British naval instructions do not permit a flag officer to return any salute but in the manner pointed out in the same; namely, to all junior flag officers of every nation, two guns less, and to private captains four guns less. Such is the reason why you had only 13 guns in return for the 15 you were pleased to order.

I have the honor to remain, sir, your most obedient, humble servant,

(Signed) L. W. HALSTED, Vice-Admiral and Commander-in-Chief of his Britannic Majesty's Naval Forces in the West Indies, &c.

To Commodore PORTER, commanding the U. S. Naval Forces in the West Indies and Gulf of Mexico.

WASHINGTON, August 11, 1824.

SIR: Understanding from Captain Finch that you had manifested some dissatisfaction that certain youths, in the squadron under my command, should have been permitted to do the duty and receive the pay of midshipmen, I feel it incumbent on me to make such explanations as are necessary to remove any erroneous impressions on your mind, that this has been done in evasion or violation of any regulation or order issued from the Navy Department. When I took the command of the expedition for the suppression of piracy, there was a scarcity of officers to fill many of the situations in the squadron, which, in fact, was equipped with so much expedition as to prevent the possibility of collecting from distant parts the necessary officers for it, and it became necessary to fill the vacancies by acting appointments which, although understood as intended, were not to take place while the squadron was in the United States, and while there was a prospect of their being filled by the Secretary of the Navy. Among others were acting lieutenants and masters from the passed midshipmen, and surgeons' mates. The acting lieutenants and masters have been continued in their situation by the Department, and the appointment of the surgeons' mates has since been confirmed by you.

It became also necessary to have some youths to do the duty of midshipmen, and as permission had been given to Commodore Stewart to take some boys in his ship on trial, and among the number my son, I, following his example, and compelled by necessity, took on board the vessels of the squadron a few of the most promising and respectable, but gave them no acting appointments, and with the express understanding that my taking them was to give them no claims on the Department, but that if they were found suitable for the service, they were to come in as new applicants, leaving their term of probation to weigh in their favor for as much as the Department might think it worth.

When my command was augmented I increased them, some taken by the express wish of the Secretary of the Navy, and some by that of the President of the United States.

On my own selection I have not taken more than five, and not even those without permission from the Secretary of the Navy, your predecessor. Not one has obtained my permission to embark on board any vessel under my command, to my recollection, since you came into office; and certainly no acting appointment whatever has been made by me in the United States since your general orders of December, 1823, and none of any description whatever out of the United States, except such as was occasioned by unavoidable necessity. As regards midshipmen or persons to do duty as such, I have taken none since, but those who have been ordered to report to me for duty by the Navy Department.

It has been the source of great uneasiness to me that any misunderstanding on this subject should have taken place, but I trust that this explanation will remove from your mind all impression of any wish on my part to frustrate the views of the Department, or take from it any of its patronage. I have been influenced solely by views to the public interest.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

(Signed) D. PORTER.

HON. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

WASHINGTON, August 11, 1824.

SIR: Understanding it to be the intention of the government to give me a ship suited to my rank in the service, I have ordered the John Adams to proceed to the West Indies, and thence to the Gulf of Mexico for the protection of our commerce, where her services are much wanted.

Should a frigate be selected, I beg leave to state that it will be most agreeable to me that there should be no commander appointed to her, as I should wish the particular and personal command to be vested in myself alone.

I also beg leave to observe that a flag or fleet captain to the squadron may be dispensed with if I can be allowed to select an intelligent lieutenant to relieve me from many of the details of the sqnadron. For the present the services of Captain Finch are necessary to me, but I shall not want him long, and it is his wish to retire from the situation so soon as I can otherwise provide myself.

I shall be glad to be apprised as early as possible of the ship intended for me, that I may give my personal attention to her outfits.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. S. L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

WASHINGTON, October 12, 1824.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that I have just received very unfavorable accounts of sickness prevailing at Thompson's Island. Three cases of yellow fever, which proved mortal, have been reported, and the sick list contains the names of thirty-one patients, mostly of bilious and intermitting fevers; of this number eleven are convalescent, and seven are reported as very bad cases.

The island is, however, supplied with every comfort in my power to provide for it. There is a good hospital for officers and seamen on the windward side, a floating hospital comfortably fitted up in the harbor, capable of containing the whole population of the island, and an abundant supply of refreshments, hospital stores and medicines.

There are two medical attendants on the island, one of whom, however, is on the sick list; but the arrival of the Hornet must ere this have furnished, if required, an additional number. I know of nothing to ameliorate the condition of those on the island not in the power of the senior officer on the coast of Cuba to furnish; and I do not conceive that any steps are necessary to be taken by me, or any orders beyond what have already been issued for the preservation of health, as from the advanced season of the year, the sickness will undoubtedly subside before they could possibly reach the island. As it will no doubt be satisfactory to you to know how the force under my command is employed at this moment, I enclose you a brief report, with the names of the vessels and their commands.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

List of the vessels of the West India squadron, their commanders, and the service at present employed on.

Constellation, frigate, D. Porter, commander, fitting out in New York, expected to be ready for sea early next month.

John Adams, corvette, Captain A. J. Dallas, ready for sea at Philadelphia, now waiting additional orders; destined from thence to St. Bartholomews, St. Thomas, down the coasts of Porto Rico, St. Domingo and Cuba, to Thompson's Island; thence to the Gulf of Florida, to cruise about Tampico, Alvarado, and La Vera Cruz.

Hornet, sloop-of-war, Captain E. P. Kennedy, to South America, by orders from the Navy Department; from thence by my orders to the north coast of Cuba for the protection of our commerce there.

Spark, brig, Lieutenant Commandant J. T. Newton, in quarantine at New York; repairing under orders to proceed from thence to St. Bartholomews, St. Thomas, down the coasts of Porto Rico, and St. Domingo, and Cuba, to Thompson's Island; thence down the coasts of Yucatan and Campeachy, around the Gulf of Mexico, back to Thompson's Island.

Grampus, schooner, Lieutenant Commandant John D. Sloat, stationed at St. Thomas, for the protection of our commerce between St. Barts and the east end of St. Domingo.

Shark, schooner, Lieutenant Commandant John Gallagher, ordered from New York to St. Bartholomews and St. Thomas; thence down the coasts of Porto Rico, and St. Domingo, and Cuba, to Thompson's Island; thence to the coasts of Yucatan and Campeachy, around the Gulf of Mexico, back to Thompson's Island.

Porpoise, schooner, Lieutenant Commandant Charles W. Skinner, sailed for the coast of Africa, under orders from the Navy Department.

Sea Gull, steam galliot, Lieutenant Commandant Isaac McKeever, awaiting orders at New York.

Ferret, schooner, Lieutenant Commandant C. H. Bell, on the north coast of Cuba.

Terrier, Lieutenant Commandant Jott S. Paine, on the north coast of Cuba.

Wild Cat, Lieutenant Commandant Legaré, on the north coast of Cuba.

Weasel, Lieutenant Commandant Boarman, for the protection of our commerce between Tampico and New Orleans.

Beagle, Lieutenant Commandant Charles P. Platt, has sailed for the protection of our commerce between St. Barts and the east end of Cuba.

Decoy, store ship, late Lieutenant Commandant F. B. Gamble, at New York in quarantine; just arrived from Thompson's Island.

Barges Gallinipper, Mosquito, Gnat, Midge, and Diablita, Lieutenant Commandant James M. McIntosh, commanding at Thompson's Island; occasionally cruising on the north coast of Cuba, and in the old Straits of Bahama.

WASHINGTON, October 14, 1824.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose you an extract of a letter from Lieutenant Commandant James M. McIntosh, the commander of Thompson's Island, with copies of certain documents respecting a colored man named Francis Hale, and to request of you instructions as to the course to be pursued in relation thereto.

I am also to request some instructions to govern my conduct towards the South American privateers, which sometimes come inside the Florida reef in distress, real or pretended, thereby availing themselves of the facilities which offer, to violate our neutrality and infringe our laws.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. S. L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

WASHINGTON, October 19, 1824.

SIR: I have received by the hands of Lieutenant Aulick your letter of yesterday, stating it as your opinion that your appointment of that officer to discharge the duties of captain of the squadron would be a direct violation of the regulations, and offering to order for that purpose one of the master commandants not employed, if it is my wish to have an officer of that grade to discharge the duty.

The force under my command (by a rigid enforcement of the regulations) not entitling me to an officer of the rank of master commandant to discharge the dutes of captain of the squadron, and yet, more than any other now employed, requiring an officer to assist me in the details of my duties, it would be, in my opinion, as direct a violation of the regulations to order a master commandant as to order a lieutenant; and as an officer of any grade, incompetent to perform the duties, would be more than useless to me, I beg leave to decline having a captain to the squadron under my command.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

(Signed) DAVID PORTER.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

WASHINGTON, October 19, 1824.

SIR: I have received your instructions of the 14th, 15th, 16th and 19th instant, with the papers accompanying them, and have sought in them in vain for the motive for your unexpected order of the first date, for me to "proceed as speedily as possible to my station" in the John Adams, instead of the Constellation, as was expected and arranged.

I need not remind you of the repeated argument I have urged, that the pendant of an American commodore should not be exposed to insult by being hoisted on board a sloop-of-war, if a vessel of a more respectable character could be obtained, and of the repeated expression of my aversion to be instrumental in so exposing it.

This would alone be a sufficient motive for begging permission to retire from my present command, as the only means of relieving myself from the responsibility, but I have others of a more personal nature, but of equal weight.

The nature of the service I have been engaged in has been of the most arduous nature, subject to great expense, great exposure and fatigue, and imposing upon me great responsibility; the generous confidence which was extended to me at the outset of my command, which encouraged me to an active and faithful performance of the duties assigned to me, appears of late to have been withdrawn, and orders implying the dissatisfaction of the Department, and at every step calling forth explanations, are almost daily handed to me. The various cases alluded to are of a recent date, and unnecessary to enumerate. I have made frequent application to the Department for instructions to guide me in my conduct toward the cruisers of South America, whose depredations on our commerce have been so frequent. New cases are made known to me unaccompanied by any instructions for my government, thereby leaving me to encounter responsibilities which do not belong to my situation or my profession.

I left the West Indies for my health, and my experience teaches me that it is improper to return at so early a period as the one exacted of me by the Department.

I owe it, therefore, to myself and my family, if not to my country, to avoid a climate which has been so fatal to so many under my command, (and has nearly proved so twice to myself) at a season when disease prevails to such and extent as it does at present.

By the expression of your order of the 14th, it would appear that Thompson's Island is considered my station; my instructions inform me that my command extends from the coast of Africa to the Gulf of Mexico, and that my duties are to protect our commerce throughout this extent and suppress the slave trade. Thompson's Island has heretofore been considered an appendage to my command, not my station, and I have been considered in my place whenever I have been within the limits prescribed to me; to remain stationary at Thompson's Island, to the neglect of the rest of my command, can scarcely be the intention of the Department, and if it were, it can hardly be expected that so great a sacrifice of health and comfort would be made by me, except under greater necessities than at present exist.

We have now at that island and on the coast of Cuba a sloop-of-war, a schooner of twelve guns, two small schooners, and five barges, a force more than necessary to quell all the pirates that ever existed there, if the officers do their duty, and if they do not I shall take care that they shall be brought to punishment.

I feel myself responsible for the employment of the force under my command to the best advantage, for the purposes for which it was equipped, and if any part of my duties are neglected I ask for no lenity from the Department. I cannot, however, in the present state of my command, consent to lead in person every expedition fitted out from it, as is implied that I should by the order alluded to. A general superintendence is all that ought to be expected of me; and had my presence at Thompson's Island been considered absolutely necessary, no order would have been wanting to make me go, and no danger from climate would have deterred me from hastening there with all possible expedition. It is implied by the orders within alluded to that this disposition on my part does not exist.

Taking, therefore, a full view of the subject, and considering the circumstance of the compensation of a captain not being adequate to the performance of the duties and the responsibilities of an admiral; duties which I have for a long time performed, and responsibilities which I have for as long a time encountered, I have thought it best for the Department and most to my own satisfaction, to ask permission to retire from my present command, and to ask for other service less inglorious, of less responsibility, less expensive, and subjecting me less to the mortifications and vexations which appear inseparable from the one I now hold.

An early reply is requested, and it will afford me pleasure to make such explanations to my successor, whoever he may be, as will prevent any injury to the service from the step I have taken. I beg that it may not be considered that my request proceeds from any disinclination for active service; to the contrary, I desire it, when I better understand the views of the Department, and when more confidence is manifested in mine.

I have the honor to be, your obedient, humble servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. Sam'l L. Southard, Secretary of the Navy.

Washington, October 20, 1824.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 14th, enclosing a scrap from a newspaper, to apprise me of the fact that Midshipmen Robert Ritchie, George F. Weaver, and William Green are stated to have sailed from New York in the United States schooner Beagle, the two first as lieutenants and the last as sailingmaster, and remarking that you presume that this must have been without my knowledge, as you know of no authority which could have been given to these midshipmen to sail from the United States in those capacities. Passed Midshipman Ritchie has been doing the duty of lieutenant in the squadron under my command, from the commencement of the expedition against the pirates, and Midshipman Green has also been in one of the small vessels for the same period. Of Midshipman G. F. Weaver I have no knowledge, but I have no doubt Captain Finch can satisfactorily explain the cause of his being there; he was placed on board that vessel during my absence.

As much has been said lately against the practice of giving acting appointments to midshipmen and others, I beg leave to inform you that I have never in any instance given them, except under the most absolute necessity, and never in violation of any known regulation.

When vacancies have occurred in the squadron under my command, and they have been frequent from the reluctance that officers have to exposing themselves in a sickly climate, I have directed the passed midshipmen when there were any, and when none, the oldest and most experienced midshipmen, to do the duty required, but have never given any appointment; thus leaving the Department free to grant or reject the claim for duties performed. They no doubt consider themselves acting lieutenants and masters, but they hold no appointment from me as such.

I cannot prevent the editors of newspapers from giving what title they please to officers, or making what statement they think proper. I can only say that I have never authorized the article or given the midshipmen in question the titles as printed. From the frequency with which I have been addressed by the Department on the subject of acting appointments, I am apprehensive there has been some misunderstanding with regard to me, and have therefore been thus explicit.

For further explanation on this subject, I beg leave to refer you to my letter of the 11th of August last.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. Sam'l L. Southard, Secretary of the Navy.

Navy Department, October 21, 1824.

Sir: Your letter of the 19th instant has created surprise. Looking to the good of the service, every attention has been shown to you which your station required, and which could be dictated by a just estimation of your public service.

The command which was given to you at your earnest request, on the 1st February, 1823, was a highly important one, and your conduct in discharge of its duties satisfactory to the President. The interval since you left that station has been interesting, and it is understood piracy has revived, and is making extensive ravages on our commerce. Communications have been made to you to apprise you fully of this fact. The presence there of an officer of rank and experience is of course necessary. The size of the vessel in which he sails is a matter of small moment, and must depend upon circumstances. You are aware of the intention to send the Constellation to that station as soon as she can conveniently be prepared.

Your return to this place without permission, or apprising the Department of a necessity for it, was unexpected; but no complaint has heretofore been made of your remaining here, because we believed that your health was not perfectly good, and your shoulder lame and painful. But this obstacle has been removed, and had you earlier apprised the Department that you considered this place within the limits of your station, that the command had ceased to be pleasant to you, and that you were apprehensive of the climate, you would have been relieved and a successor appointed.

But having failed to give this information, and the presence of a commander on the station being now indispensable, you will proceed to it. When it is convenient to the Department, your wish to be relieved shall be gratified. Upon a reperusal of your orders, you will find that no intimation is given that Thompson's Island alone is to be considered as the station, and that you are to remain stationary there, nor that you are to lead in person every expedition fitted out from it.

I purposely abstain from comment upon certain matters in your letter. You will hereafter hear from the Department on the subject.

I am, very respectfully, &c., (Signed) SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

Commodore DAVID PORTER. Present.

WASHINGTON, October 21, 1824.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose to you copies of communications from Lieut. Commandant McIntosh, accompanied by the latest sick reports from Thompson's Island.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant, (Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. SAM'L L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

ALLENTON, Thompson's Island, August 2, 1824.

SIR: I addressed you on the 29th ultimo, per the Spanish schooner Maria, via Havana. By the schooner Terrier, which goes over to Havana this evening for medical stores, I again have the pleasure of addressing you, and enclosing the sick report of to-day, by which you will perceive there has been no change in our situation for the better. I still continue to be indisposed, but am in hopes in a few days to be perfectly recovered. Acting Lieut. Pinckney has been so much indisposed that the doctor has granted him a sick ticket, and advises his immediate return to a more northern climate for the restoration of his health; he will consequently leave here by the first opportunity.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

(Signed) JAS. M. McINTOSH, Lieut. Commandant.

Commodore DAVID PORTER, Commander-in-Chief of the U. S. Naval Forces in the West Indies, &c., &c.

ALLENTON, Thompson's Island, September 26, 1824.

SIR: I enclosed you yesterday, by the Fox, Doctor Ticknor's sick report. She sailed early this morning for Washington. The Ferret went to sea yesterday evening with orders to cruise between Havana and Matanzas. The sailing of the sloop Ocean early to-morrow morning for Norfolk affords me the opportunity of enclosing you this day's sick report. You will no doubt notice with much pleasure how much it is lessened, and it is with much gratification I am enabled to inform you that but two more cases at present remain that are considered dangerous. This happy change in our situation must be attributed to the change of weather which we have experienced for a few days past, and if it continues as favorable for a short time I am in hopes the dreadful disease will be entirely removed. We have heard nothing of the Wild Cat, and I think there is no doubt but that she is lost.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAS. M. McINTOSH, Lieut. Commanding.

To Commodore DAVID PORTER.

Report of the sick at Thompson's Island, September 26, 1824.

Names.	Rank.	Disease.	Remarks.
F. A. Brown.....	Clerk.....	Bilious remittent....
Francis Joseph...	Boy	Affection of bowels ..	Convalescent.
Wm. Payton.....	Ordinary seaman.	Intermittent fever ...	Convalescent.
James Murray ...	Marine.....	Bilious remittent....	Convalescent.
Nath'l Soley.....	Seaman.....	Syphilis.....	But little change.
Miles Austin.....	Corp'l marines ..	Bilious remittent....	Convalescent.
Hezekiah Smith..	Seaman.....	Typhoid fever.....	Convalescent.
Wm. Hoglan	Marine.....	Bilious remittent....	A little better than yesterday.
Evan Gamester ..	Serg't of marines	do	Convalescent.
Levi Caywood ...	Carpenter	do	Convalescent.
James Gallagher.	Boy	do	Convalescent.
Thomas Leach ...	Carpenter	Intermittent fever...	Convalescent.
Adam Loyd.....	do	Bilious remittent....	Convalescent.
John Monnett....	do	do	Convalescent.
Alex'r Cornot	Marine.....	Gravel, piles, &c....
Jacob Taylor	Ordinary seaman.	Bilious remittent....	Convalescent.
Joseph Hammett .	Carpenter	do	Apparently a little better.
Ruel Wilber.....	Blacksmith	Intermittent fever ...	Convalescent.
John Jones	Ordinary seaman.	do	Convalescent.
Henry Rothwell..	do	Bilious remittent....	Convalescent.
Benj. Low.....	Gardener	Intermittent fever ...	Convalescent.
Obed Orr	Carpenter	Bilious remittent....	Had a paroxysm of fever this morning.
DIED.
Jacob Haines....	.....	....
James Bryan	.....	.....	Total.....22

Respectfully, (Signed) B. TICKNOR, Surgeon.

To JAMES MCINTOSH, Esq., commanding Thompson's Island.

ALLENTON, Thompson's Island, September 29, 1824.

SIR: The sloop Ocean has been detained in consequence of bad weather, but she is now weighing, and I take advantage of her sailing to forward for your information the sick report of yesterday. The weather for the last twenty-four hours was very unfavorable, in consequence of which the doctor apprehends an increase to his list. We have not a single carpenter fit for duty, and I am fearful we will not for some time, for as soon as they convalesce from yellow fever they are attacked with fevers and agues, and it appears utterly impossible for a man to recruit his health on this island, after having been seriously sick.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,
(Signed) JAS. M. McINTOSH, Lieut. Commanding.

To Commodore DAVID PORTER.

Report of the sick at Thompson's Island, September 28, 1824.

Names.	Rank.	Disease.	Remarks.
F. A. Brown.....	Clerk	Bilious remittent....
Francis Joseph ..	Boy	Debility.....	Convalescent.
James Murray ...	Marine	Bilious remittent	Convalescent.
Nathaniel Soley..	Seaman	Dysentery.....	Has relapsed in consequence of excess in eating.
Miles Austin.....	Corp'l marines..	Bilious remittent....	Convalescent.
Hezekiah Smith..	Seaman	Typh. fever	Convalescent.
Wm. Hoglen.....	Marine	Bilious remittent....	Not quite as well as yesterday.
Evan Gamester ..	Sergeant marines	do	Convalescent.
Levi Caywood ...	Carpenter	do	Convalescent.
Obed Orr	do	do	Had a paroxysm this morning.
Adam Loyd	do	do	Convalescent.
John Monnett....	do	do	Convalescent.
Alexander Cornot	Marine.....	Gravel, piles, &c. ...
John Jones.....	Ordinary seaman	Intermittent fever...	Convalescent.
Henry Rothwell..	do	do ...	Worse than yesterday.
Benjamin Low ...	Gardener	do ...	Convalescent.
Lewis Shore.....	Ordinary seaman	do ...	Convalescent.
Ruel Wilber.....	Blacksmith	do ...	Convalescent.
ADMITTED.
Wm. Stout	Corp'l marines..	Bilious remittant....
George Beard....	Seaman.....	Wound	Of the foot.
Daniel Cleiss	Blacksmith	Intermittent fever...
Koin Barrett	Ordinary seaman	do ...
Henry White	Marine	Fever.....
Almon Johns	do	Fever.....
DISCHARGED.
James Gallagher.	.....	.....
DIED.
Joseph Hammett .	.....	.....
Total—24.

Respectfully,

B. TICKNOR, Surgeon.

To JAMES McINTOSH, Esq., commanding Thompson's Island.

WASHINGTON, October 22, 1824.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose instructions for the officer who may have the Constellation in charge, to take to the West Indies.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. SAM'L L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

The general instructions referred to in the enclosed orders to the commander of the Constellation will be furnished as soon as a copy can be made.

WASHINGTON, October 22, 1824.

SIR: When the United States frigate Constellation shall be in every respect ready for sea, you will proceed to touch at St. Bartholomew's and St. Thomas for further orders. Should you receive none at either of those places, you will proceed down the south sides of Porto Rico, St. Domingo, and Cuba, around Cape Antonio to Thompson's Island.

The accompanying general instructions will guide you as to the course to be pursued in any case which may occur during your voyage, wherein they can be applied. On your arrival off the reef at Thompson's Island, you will fire a gun, and make a signal for a pilot. I have great confidence in the knowledge and judgment of Mr. Boughan, as regards the pilotage of the ship into the harbor; but, as she is of a class larger than any that have yet been there, and of greater draft of water, I shall wish some person on board to point out the buoys which I intend to have placed—one on the point of the shoal extending from the Dry Rocks, on the lee side of the entrance, through the reef; one on the windward side, near the shoal to leeward of Loo Keys; one on the shoal off Whitehead's Point; and one on the extremity of the shoal which forms the entrance to the inner harbor.

Should any circumstances occur to prevent my arrival at Thompson's Island before the arrival of the Constellation, you will exercise your sound discretion in taking the ship over the reef, trusting nothing to accident or chance when prudence or forethought can guard against evil. Under any circumstances, you will send in one of your boats ahead of the ship, and cause the soundings to be indicated by signal. Should you not receive further instructions, you will anchor about half way between Whitehead's Point and the town, or so as to be well under shelter of the Point, in about six fathoms water. Mr. Boughan is well acquainted with the marks for running in.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. PORTER.

The COMMANDER of the U. S. Frigate Constellation.

WASHINGTON, October 22, 1824.

SIR: I have received your letter of yesterday, and shall proceed to sea, in the John Adams, with the least possible delay. The ship will be at New Castle by the time I reach there. I enclose orders for the officer who may take out the Constellation.

There are two points in your letter which, in justice to myself, I am bound to notice. First, the charge of returning to this place without permission, or apprising the Department; and, secondly, considering this place within the limits of my command. To the first, I beg leave to observe that when the malady of 1823, which caused the destruction of so many valuable lives, had gotten to such a height as to render flight from a tropical climate necessary, I ordered the squadron to repair to Norfolk, and this measure met the approbation of the government and of the country at large. Conduct that was approved of in the one instance, I naturally concluded would be approved of under similar circumstances again; and, on the appearance of the yellow fever this year, I gave similar orders, with the hope that, by so doing, I should meet your views, and should not have dared to encounter the responsibility of not ordering the squadron home.

It is true that, some time after I reached the United States, in the fall of 1822, I did receive your written permission of August 10th to return home, and your discretionary instructions of September 30th, but I had stronger reasons than permission or the exercise of my own judgment. I had what I considered positive orders on the subject from the honorable Smith Thompson, who, in his instructions of February 1st, 1823, states as follows: "You will be particularly watchful to preserve the health of the officers and crews under your command, and to guard in every possible manner against the unhealthiness of the climate; not permitting any intercourse with the shore where the yellow fever prevails, except in cases of absolute necessity."

You will perceive I am ordered to guard in every possible manner against the unhealthiness of the climate; not permitting any intercourse with the shore where the yellow fever prevails. The yellow fever prevailed at Matanzas and Havana, and it was reasonable to believe that Thompson's Island would not be exempt from it. Many began to sink under the debilitating effects of the climate, myself among the number; and I conceived I was acting in furtherance of the views of the Department in coming home myself, and ordering the squadron home before disease got to any head in it. By my so doing, many lives have not been lost; but had you even before intimated to me that my doing so had not met the approbation of the government, an idea that never occurred to me, never doubting that I was acting in full accordance with its views, I should have instantly left Washington on my return at all hazards; but this information has been withheld from me until the present moment, which makes me the more sensitive to the charge. I trust, however, this explanation will convince you I have had no disposition to run counter to any wish of the Department or to any rule of service.

To the second charge, I have only to remark that I know of no expression or conduct of mine that could lead to the belief that I entertained the idea that this place was within the limits of my station, and, much less, have I apprised the Department that I so considered it.

My presence here I do conceive is occasionally necessary, that I may thereby become fully acquainted with the views of the government in everything relating to my command; and it is also necessary that the vessels under my command should visit some of our northern establishments, for the purpose of obtaining the necessary repairs, and the time most proper for them to do so is during the hurricane months and sickly season, when our commerce least requires protection, as the crops are not ready for delivery, and when it can be done with least injury to the service, and most benefit to the officers and crews. From the month of July to the month of November, I consider it unsafe for them to remain within the tropics; those who have remained longer or have gone earlier there, have suffered more or less from climate, and it is feared that one has been lost. The French ships in the West Indies have for many years been in the practice of coming to the north during these months, and the British ships either go to England about this time, or to Bermuda or Halifax. All experience teaches me the necessity and propriety of the measure, and having adopted it, it became necessary that I should be with the vessels of the squadron; wherever they are, there my duties lay, and when they are in the United States, there is no place so convenient for me to attend to their wants as at Washington, and it is very certain, as I hope you will do me the justice to allow, that they have not been neglected, nor has my time been misspent whenever my health has allowed me to attend to the duties assigned to me. My station, as I have before stated, is from the coast of Africa to the Gulf of Mexico, and includes, according to my orders, the West Indies, and the vessels surveying on the coast of Florida.

I must now, sir, beg leave to ask of you instructions to guide me in future as regards the disposition of the squadron during the sickly months: whether they are to remain on the station or return to the United States; whether I am to be with the squadron or remain within the tropics; and if they are to return, the precise time of their return.

If it is the determination of the Department that the commanding officer of the squadron shall remain within the limits of the station during the sickly season, I hope it may suit the convenience of the Department to have me relieved from my command by the middle of June next, as no consideration connected with my present duties would induce me willingly to remain after that period.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

NEW CASTLE, October 26, 1824.

SIR: In my letter to you of the 19th October, I omitted to say that I did notify the Department of my intention of removing the squadron to the north, as you will perceive by the enclosed copy of a letter of the 28th May, the original of which was sent to you from Matanzas, and, intending to remove the squadron, it was very natural to infer that I intended removing with it. For the cause of the necessity of removing it, I am not answerable.

I have the honor to be, your very obedient servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

Honorable SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

U. S. SHIP JOHN ADAMS, Thompson's Island, January 1, 1825.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose you this day's sick report. I am sorry to say that the sick on the island have more than doubled since my arrival, and that several deaths have occurred. Doctors Ticknor and Weems are so low, that I have permitted them to leave the island. I have no hopes that Lieutenant Stallings will recover. From the feeble condition of every person on the island, who has remained during the last sickly season, there is scarcely a possibility that they could survive another.

With great respect, your obedient servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

Honorable SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

Report of sick at Thompson's Island, January 1, 1825.

Names.	Rank.	Disease.	Remarks.
G. Weems	Surgeon's mate	Intermittent	Severe paroxysm yesterday.
Otho Stallings	Lieutenant	Bilious remittent	No material change.
B. Tickner	Surgeon	Intermittent	Paroxysms continue to return.
P. Friery	Ordinary seaman	Hepatitis	Continues feeble.
J. Calhoun	do	Intermittent	Paroxysms continue to return.
Jacob Taylor	do	Jaundice	Convalescent.
John Bridges	Master-at-arms	Rheumatism	Improving.
Charles Holtz	Corp'l of marines	Fever	Relapse.
J. Cardif	Seaman	Intermittent	Better.
J. Harris	do	do	Paroxysm yesterday.
J. Rice	Ordinary seaman	do	Paroxysm this morning.
Wm. Ross	Seaman	Fistula in ano	Requires an operation.
J. Spaulding	Carpenter's mate	Intermittent	Better.
J. Makenzie	Marine	do	Much gastric disorder.
J. McCawley	Lieut. marines	Bilious remittent	Convalescent.
J. H. Little	Acting S. M.	do	Better—free from fever yesterday.
J. K. Valette	Acting Lieut.	Intermittent	Had a slight paroxysm last evening.
Levi Caywood	Carpenter	Bilious remittent	The same as yesterday.
M. Manamy	Marine	Intermittent	Convalescent.
—— Gray	Boy	do	Not so well to-day.
John Dunlap	Ordinary seaman	do	Better this morning.
S. Bills	Master-at-arms	do	Better this morning.
—— McCun	Serg't marines	do	Better this morning.
—— Rice	Corp'l marines	Remittent fever	Something better this morning.
DISCHARGED.
—— Gedley	Marine	Dysentery
Total—24.

Respectfully, (Signed) S. RAPALJE, S. Mate.

To Commodore DAVID PORTER, commanding West India Squadron, &c.

U. S. Steam Galliot Sea Gull, Matanzas, January 17, 1825.

Sir: I have the honor to inform you that I arrived here last evening in the Sea Gull, from Thompson's Island, examining, in my way, the keys to windward of Siguappa Bay, &c., but without success. I shall sail again this afternoon with the two barges Gallinipper and Diablito, with the intention of scouring the north coast of Cuba, as far to leeward as Cape Antonio, and shall endeavor to be back to Thompson's Island in time to meet the officer who, I understand, has been ordered out to relieve me.

I sent you the particulars of the murder of the crew of the brig Betsey, of Wiscasset, as given by the mate. One other of the crew who escaped, and now on board this vessel, corroborates the statement.

Lieutenant Bell, in the Beagle, accompanied by a barge, is now to windward in pursuit of the pirates; the mate of the Betsey is with him; can point out the establishment and identify the men; I have strong hopes of bringing them to punishment; I have the other man on board this vessel, and should we fall in with them to leeward, they will, no doubt, be known to him; I shall endeavor to keep them both in the squadron so long as there is a hope of the detection of the murderers.

The force under my command is so reduced and scattered, that I find it difficult to afford as much protection as I could wish to our commerce, but I shall endeavor to employ it to the best advantage. To fit out the expedition, I have been compelled to lay up the John Adams.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

(Signed) D. PORTER.

Honorable Samuel L. Southard, Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

On the 7th instant, Daniel Collins came on board this vessel, in the harbor of Matanzas, and stated as follows:

That he sailed from Wiscasset as second mate of the American brig Betsey, Captain Ellis Hilton, bound to Matanzas, on or about the 25th of November. That the brig was cast away on one of the Double Headed Shot Keys, about the 21st of December, when the officers and crew, seven in number, took the long boat and steered for the Island of Cuba, and the next day made one of the keys about twenty leagues to windward, at which place they found two fishing huts and five men, with whom the captain made an agreement to be brought with himself and crew to Matanzas. The night previous to their intended departure, which was two days after their landing, one of the fishermen was absent during the whole night; when they were on the point of shoving off, they were boarded and taken possession of by a boat having ten men on board, armed with muskets, blunderbusses and cutlasses, which the fishermen told them, when first seen, was the King's launch, who soon after tied the captain and crew of the Betsey, put them into the perogues of the fishermen, and taking them into a little lagoon about half a mile from the huts, where they left their boat, taking with them no other arms than cutlasses. They then deliberately commenced indiscriminate murder, by cutting off the head of Captain Hilton, which seemed to be the signal for dispatching the others; the informant was knocked overboard by a blow, and finding that he had broken the cord with which he was tied, ran through the water (about knee deep,) and swamps, followed by two of the murderers, but fortunately effected his escape after witnessing the murder of all his comrades with the exception of one, who had also broken his cord and was trying to escape, but presumes that he was overtaken, being very closely pursued by two or three. The informant on the sixth day got to an estate called Santa Clara, on the Rio Palma, where he received some nourishment and rest, and continued his route to Matanzas, where he arrived last evening, presented himself to Capt. Holmes of the American ship Shamrock, belonging to the same owner, (Mr. A. Wood, of Wiscasset.) Captain H. immediately recognized him, and says that he is a sober, honest and upright man.

(Signed) J. McKEEVER.

U. S. Steam Galliot Sea Gull, Matanzas, January 7, 1825.

U. S. Steam Galliot Sea Gull, Havana, January 24, 1825.

Sir: By the public prints containing your communication to the President, and his message to Congress, respecting the Foxardo affair, I perceive that orders have been issued for my return to the United States without unnecessary delay. I shall, therefore, proceed in this vessel with all dispatch to Thompson's Island, where I hope to meet on my arrival the orders alluded to.

I have sent the two barges down inside the Colorados reef on a cruise of from fifteen to twenty days.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. Sam'l L. Southard, Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

Washington, March 6, 1825.

Sir: I have the honor to transmit to you a number of original letters and depositions respecting transactions at Foxardo, and the piratical character of the place.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. Sam'l L. Southard, Secretary of the Navy.

Note.—This letter refers to certain papers which were sent on the 6th May by Commodore Porter to the Department, and on the following day sent by the Department to the court of inquiry, and by the court rejected as incompetent evidence, and returned. A part of them will be found in the proceedings of the court of inquiry, and the rest in page 74 of Commodore Porter's pamphlet, which is contained in the printed volume of his trial. The names of the writers of some of those in the pamphlet are omitted. The reason for the omission was probably that they were of a confidential nature, and the same reason now operates to prevent their being sent to Congress.

WASHINGTON, March 16, 1825.

SIR: It is now sixteen days since I had the honor to report to you my arrival here, in obedience to your orders of 27th December, and I have anxiously, since, awaited your further instructions.

I am aware, sir, of the interruptions the recent changes in government, and other circumstances, have occasioned to the transaction of public business; and however irksome and uncertain may be my present situation, and whatever anxiety I may feel on the occasion, it is not my wish to press on the Department my own affairs, in preference to those of more importance. I cannot, however, help requesting that there may be as little delay in the investigation of my conduct, both as regards the affair of Foxardo and the statements of Mr. Randall and Mountain, as is consistent with the public interests.

The state of ignorance and uncertainty in which I have been kept, as to the intentions of the government, and the desire of vindicating myself to the government and the public, and relieving myself from a species of suspension and supposed condemnation, must be my appology for now troubling you.

Officers continue to make to me their reports, and request of me orders; not knowing whether the Department still consider me in command of the West India squadron, I have been at a loss how to act. Will you be pleased to instruct me on the subject?

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

Honorable SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

WASHINGTON, March 19, 1825.

SIR: I have to ask of you that Mr. Thomas Randall may be notified of the intention of the Department to grant my request, that a court of inquiry be instituted to ascertain the truth of his statement, affecting myself and others, that he may be prepared, on the meeting of the court, to substantiate his charges against us, and to establish the truth of his reports to the State Department on the subject of piracies, &c.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,
(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

WASHINGTON, March 22, 1825.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of yesterday, which informs me that you are requested by Commodore Porter to apprise me that a court of inquiry will be held in a few days, one object of which will be to investigate his conduct in relation to the carrying of specie and neglect of his duties in the suppression of piracy.

Doubtless Commodore Porter, in requesting, and you, sir, in making this formal annunciation to me, of a fact which had already been published to the world, considered the notice of some special import to me, and designed that it should produce a correspondent effect upon my conduct; but as your letter does not state the relation in which I am considered as standing, either to Commodore Porter or the court, nor prescribe any course to be pursued by me, I am at a loss to know the object it was designed to produce. I have therefore to request that you will be pleased to state how I am particularly interested in the fact you announce, and the effect your letter was designed to produce upon my conduct, in reference to the approaching investigation.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, sir, your most obedient servant,
(Signed) THOMAS RANDALL.

SAM'L L. SOUTHARD, Esq., Secretary of the Navy.

WASHINGTON, March 24, 1825.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 23d, enclosing a copy of one from Mr. Thomas Randall, requesting to be informed how he is particularly interested in the court to be held on my account, in relation to charges exhibited by him against me and others, and the effect the information communicated to him was designed to have on his conduct. A copy of my letter of the 19th will place him in possession of the information required.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant, D. PORTER.

Honorable SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

WASHINGTON, March 25, 1825.

SIR: Having an engagement at Norfolk of a private nature, requiring my attention there on the 29th of this month, and which will keep me away until the steamboat returns, I beg leave to ask of you whether the meeting of the court, or any other circumstance, will require my presence here until the 2d or 3d of April?

As the steamboat will leave here on Sunday, an early answer is solicited.

With great respect, I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. S. L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

WASHINGTON, May 10, 1825.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 7th, informing me of the reception of mine, dated March 6th, &c., which should have been dated May 6th, the day on which it was written; the mistake originated with the clerk.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

(Signed) D. PORTER.

Honorable S. L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

WASHINGTON, May 30, 1825.

SIR: Late on Saturday night (the 28th) I received from your messenger your communication of that date, informing me that the court of inquiry had closed its examination into the matters submitted to it, and made report to the Department; also apprising me of the intentions of the Executive with regard to me. Ignorant as I am of the report of the court, I can form no idea of the nature of the charges intended to be preferred against me, the motives of the Executive, or the object of the notification; I have the honor, therefore, to ask of you the necessary information to enable me to prepare for my defence.

With great respect, your very obedient servant,

(Signed) D. PORTER.

Hon. SAM'L L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 305. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE CLAIM OF ERASTUS LOOMIS FOR A NAVAL PENSION.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 23, 1826.

Mr. STORRS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Erastus Loomis, respectfully reported:

That they have considered the subjects referred to them, and find that the petitioner was a volunteer on board one of the armed vessels of the United States, at the battle of Lake Champlain, in the year 1814; that he was wounded in the said action, though he shortly after recovered from the said wound, and his gallantry in the said action is highly spoken of by his superior officers. He alleges, in his petition, that by a disease consequent upon the said wound and produced by it, he is disabled, and prays that a pension may be granted to him. The committee are of opinion, from a careful examination of the papers, that it is not satisfactorily shown that the disorder of which the petitioner complains was the consequence of the said wound, and they recommend to the House the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petitioner have leave to withdraw his petition.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 306. [1ST SESSION.

IN RELATION TO THE PAY AND EMOLUMENTS OF THE PAYMASTER AND QUARTERMASTER OF THE MARINE CORPS IN 1824–'25.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 25, 1826.

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

In compliance with a resolution of the House, of the 14th ultimo, requesting statements of the amount of compensation allowed to the paymaster and quartermaster of the marine corps for the two years preceeding the 1st of January, 1826, and of other particulars relating to the same corps, I communicate a report from the Secretary of the Navy, with documents containing the information desired by the resolution.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

WASHINGTON, March 24, 1826.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, March 23, 1826.

The President of the United States:

The Secretary of the Navy, to whom was referred the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 14th ultimo, has the honor to transmit a copy of a letter from the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury, with a "statement showing the full amount of compensation which has been allowed to the paymaster and quartermaster of the marine corps for the two years preceding the 1st of January, 1826;" also, a copy of a letter from Lieutenant Colonel Archibald Henderson, commandant of the marine corps, with a statement of "the number and rank of the officers of the marine corps who have been allowed pay and emoluments according to their brevet rank during the two last years, ending on the 1st of January, 1826, designating the stat ons at which each was employed, and the number of marines at each station."

All which have been prepared in compliance with the aforesaid resolution, and are respectfully submitted.

SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

FOURTH AUDITOR'S OFFICE, March 17, 1826.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose a statement showing the amount of pay and emoluments received by the paymaster and quartermaster of the marine corps for the two years preceding the 1st January, 1826, and to submit, in compliance with your request, the principles which have governed this office in the allowances made to them.

The act for establishing and organizing the marine corps rendered them subject, while doing duty on shore, to the rules and regulations for the government of the army. This act has been uniformly construed to entitle them to the benefits of all laws regulating the emoluments of officers of the same rank and capacity in the army. Thus the law of 1816, "for organizing the general staff and making further provision for the army of the United States," which, in its 12th section, provides "that one additional ration be allowed to all subaltern officers of the army, was construed, by my predecessor, (and his construction was confirmed by the Comptroller and the higher officers of government having cognizance of it,) to extend to subalterns of the marine corps; and one additional ration was accordingly allowed, and has continued ever since to be allowed and paid to the subalterns of the marine corps. But though the act of 1816 was thus construed as applicable to the marine corps by my predecessor, and under that construction he did actually allow and pay one additional ration to second lieutenants of that corps, he withheld it from the first lieutenants, though the latter were equally entitled, as subalterns, to receive it. The claim of the first lieutenants, being thus supported by a construction of the law, which had been acquiesced in and sanctioned by the proper law officer of the Treasury, was considered by me as just and equitable, and was accordingly allowed. The subsequent appropriation by Congress, after explanations had been given upon the call of the Committee of Ways and Means, of an amount sufficient to cover this allowance, was regarded as still further evidence of the propriety of the construction which applied the benefit of the law of 1816 to the officers of the marine corps. It was by virtue of this application of laws regulating the army, to officers performing similar duties in the marine corps, that the present paymaster of the corps was required by the Secretary of the Navy to give bonds to the United States in the sum of $25,000 for the faithful discharge of his duties. Former paymasters had not been required to give bonds, or being required had failed to do so, there being no authority of law to enforce compliance; and the loss to the United States, in consequence, has been considerable and irremediable. The duties of the paymaster of marines are precisely of the same nature with those of the district paymasters of the army; but they are of much greater extent, consequently more laborious, and are attended with a much higher degree of responsibility. The law being applied to him, then, so far as to require of him approved securities for the correct performance of his trust, it seemed to follow, as a necessary consequence, that it should be applied to him in its benefits; and, accordingly, in the settlement of his accounts at this office, the same allowances have been made to him as are made to district paymasters in the army. The estimates upon which the appropriations for the marine corps have been founded, have embraced these allowances. The allowance to him of quarters has been founded upon the specified regulations of the Secretary of the Navy with regard to staff officers of the marine corps.

The pay, rations, servants, and fuel, allowed to the quartermaster of the corps, are in conformity with the allowances, by law, to officers of his rank in the line. In addition to his duties as quartermaster of the corps, he has acted as commissary of provisions and superintendent of the armory; for which extra services specific allowances have been made to him by the Secretary of the Navy.

Brevet Lieutenant Colonel Richard Smith is the only officer of the marine corps who has received pay and emoluments according to his brevet rank. This allowance has been made to him on the ground of his commanding a separate station, in conformity with the 3d section of the act of the 16th April, 1824.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. WATKINS.

Hon. SECRETARY of the Navy.

HEAD-QUARTERS OF THE MARINE CORPS, Washington, February 17, 1826.

SIR: The enclosed papers show the number of marine officers who have received pay agreeably to their brevet rank, and the number of men under their command while in receipt of their brevet pay. The New York station is the only one for which this pay has been allowed during the period stated in the resolution of the House of Representatives. The number of marines on that station is given during each month for which brevet pay has been allowed.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ARCH'D HENDERSON, Lt. Col. Commandant.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

HEAD-QUARTERS OF MARINES, Paymaster's Office, Washington, February 17, 1826.

SIR: In answer to the information required in relation to the amount paid to the officers of the marine corps who hold brevet rank, I have the honor to state that brevet Lt. Col. Richard Smith has received the pay of such brevet from the 3d March, 1825, to 31st December, 1825. No other officer in the corps holding brevet rank has received the pay and emoluments of such brevet, for the time specified by the resolution of the Congress of the United States.

I am, respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

JOS. L. KUHN, Paymaster Marine Corps.

Col. A. HENDERSON, Commandant of U. S. Marine Corps, Washington.

New York.

Months.	Captains.	1st Lieuts.	2d Lieuts.	Sergeants.	Corporals.	Music.	Privates.	Aggregate.
1825.
March	1	1	1	7	4	5	60	79
April	1	1	2	5	3	5	47	64
May	1	1	2	5	5	4	46	64
June	1	1	2	5	4	3	52	68
July	1	1	2	6	4	2	56	72
August	1	2	2	10	6	2	70	93
September	1	2	2	7	7	1	65	85
October	1	3	2	7	4	4	72	93
November	1	3	1	5	4	3	70	87
December	1	3	1	7	9	3	68	92
1826.
January	1	3	1	4	6	1	37	53

The above statement shows the whole number of officers, non-commissioned officers, music, and privates, who were under the command of Brevet Lieutenant Colonel Smith, in the months specified.

PARKE G. HOWLE, Adjutant and Inspector.

HEAD-QUARTERS OF THE MARINE CORPS,
Adjutant and Inspector's Office, Washington, February 17, 1826.

Statement showing the amount of pay and emoluments received by the paymaster and the quartermaster of the marine corps, for the two years preceding the 1st of January, 1826.

Names.	Rank.	Amount received for pay.	Amount received for rations.	Amount received for servants.	Amount received for fuel.	Amount received for quarters.	Amount received for forage.	Amount received as extra pay.	Amount received for superintending the armory.	Amount received as commissary of provisions.	Total.
Capt. Jos. L. Kuhn ..	Paymaster	$1,200 00	$584 00	$712 32	$408 00	$500 00	$576 00	.....	.....	.....	$3,980 32
Lieut. Elijah J. Weed	Quarterm'r	720 00	584 00	356 16	192 00	500 00	.....	$720 00	$300 00	$720 00	4,092 16

T. WATKINS.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Fourth Auditor's Office, March 10, 1826.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 307. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE CONSTRUCTION OF DOCKS FOR THE PRESERVATION AND REPAIR OF UNITED STATES VESSELS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 31, 1826.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, March 30, 1826.

SIR: In answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 18th inst., the Secretary of the Navy has the honor to submit copy of a report from this Department, dated January 3, 1825, prepared in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, which contains his opinion upon the subject; also, copy of a letter from the Commissioners of the Navy, dated February 17, 1826.

An examination of these papers, it is believed, will justify the answer to the resolution, that "docks have become absolutely necessary for the preservation, repairs, and prompt and speedy use of the vessels belonging to the navy," and that " whenever repairs are necessary they are preferable, in every point of view, to the present mode, and the most economical that can be adopted." Although it is difficult to make accurate calculations upon the subject, yet no hesitation is felt in expressing the opinion that more public money has been lost for the want of docks, than would be sufficient to erect one at each of our principal building and repairing establishments. And as we add to the number and size of our vessels, the loss will be proportionably increased.

Respectfully submitted.

SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

The SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

Accommodation wharves.

In no part of the expense of erecting extensive works is so little attention paid to economy as in providing accommodation for facilitating the delivery, preparing and moving the heavy and cumbrous materials to be used. The loss of time and labor, for want of convenient arrangements in these respects, is very great; and as it is generally imperceptible and incapable of being estimated on a large scale, it is too often overlooked by builders. To provide for these advantages, I propose covering the coffer dam with a bridge, and it makes part of the estimate under this head. In addition to this, a temporary wharf should be built on the outside, and connected with the coffer dam. Perhaps a permanent wharf may be expedient on the east side—the entrance of the dock, opposite the present ship wharf, seen in drawing No. 3. The new wharf would afterwards be joined and made level with the filling or banking on the east side of the dock.

Shops, sheds, machinery, &c.

Although the nature of the contemplated work does not require much work within shops, still a blacksmith's and a carpenter's shop, lime sheds, &c., will be wanted, and they should be erected as near the works as possible. They will, of course, be of a temporary kind, and are calculated accordingly. The expenditure for machinery, such as cranes, trucks, wagons, with other mechanical apparatus, and the scaffolds, troughs, and facilities for draining, cannot be precisely calculated. Under this item I have endeavored to fix a sum nearly correct.

Cement.

I have added Roman cement to the estimate, because there is, perhaps, no substance so perfect in its kind, or so certain and durable. Other cements are employed, but this is preferable to any I have seen used in this country. It would be worth the experiment, should the dock be undertaken, to try a new hydraulic cement, lately invented by Mr. Casius, of Utrecht. The great double locks, &c., on the North Holland canal, between the Helder and Amsterdam, have been built about four years, and the bricks are laid in this cement. It appeared almost as hard as the bricks themselves when I saw them last year. The patentee gave me some specimens, and informed me that it was made cheaper than any hitherto in use. It is made from the peculiar kind of earth or clay taken up from under the water of the Y, at Amsterdam. It is made into balls, burned in a furnace like lime, and then pulverized.

Removing coffer dam and deepening the channel to the dock.

From the position of the dock it will be perceived, by inspecting the profiles, that an additional depth, under and outside the coffer dam, must be obtained by dredging, &c., so as to admit vessels to enter. The entrance being 60 feet wide, only about 70 or 80 feet of the dam need be removed, or perhaps the removal may extend the length of the wing walls. The northeast side of the present wharf may be extended to the line of the entrance, and the angle between the wing wall of the dock and the wharf occupied by a new part, so as to leave the whole service or terra-plein, between the dock and the ship house, level, extending to the lower end of the wharf. On the opposite or northeast side of the entrance, a permanent wharf, like the one already built, may be erected on a line with the entrance, covering the angle of the dam, and connected and made level with the filling on the north side of the dock. Some considerable extension of wharf seems indispensable for a convenient use of the dock and for other purposes connected with the navy yard. Instead of confining the distance between these wharves to the breadth of the entrance, viz: 60 feet, where one large vessel might lie, it may be made 100 or 120 feet wide, so that two vessels may lie there, one to each wharf. But I will not presume to recommend, at present, any particular plan for this purpose. I make the suggestion only to show that little expense need be incurred in removing the coffer dam. As the filling and banking, level with the coping of the dock, will in great part be effected by the excavation of the dock, at least so far as will be required for its use, I do not include my estimate for additional filling; that may be done to an extent suited to the ulterior improvements in the yard.

Estimate of expense.

1.	Coffer dam covered for an accommodation bridge	$18,200 00
2.	Excavation of basin for dock, &c	12,648 00
3.	Foundation floor	25,000 00
4.	One pair of turning gates, with capstans and chains, foot bridge, &c	9,000 00
5.	Masonry of dock	79,159 00
6.	Ditto of entrance	34,000 00
7.	Stone stairs and slips	2,031 00
8.	Roman cement	8,000 00

9. Accommodation wharves, &c.	$3,000 00
10. Shops, sheds, and machinery	3,500 00
11. Steam engine of forty-horse power, and support three years, with chain pumps, &c., for draining	20,000 00
12. Removing coffer dam, and deepening the entrance	6,000 00
13. Engineer, superintendents, overseers, &c.	15,000 00
Contingencies	44,462 00
Total expense of dock	$280,000 00

NAVY COMMISSIONERS' OFFICE, February 17, 1826.

SIR: The expediency of establishing docks for the repair of our ships-of-war has been heretofore recognized by acts of the national legislature. In the year 1799, [25th February,] when we had no vessels of a class larger than frigates, a law was passed authorizing the establishment of two docks. The commissioners are uninformed as to the considerations which suspended the execution of this law, but they are fully persuaded that if it had been carried into effect at that early period an immense amount would have been saved to the treasury.

So many argumentative reports have been made, illustrating the necessity and economy of docks, that the commissioners can scarcely hope to be able to present any new lights upon the subject. It possesses, however, in itself, so much intrinsic interest, it affects so essentially the efficiency of the navy, and the present state of the service calls so imperiously for the construction of docks, that the commissioners feel themselves impelled by a high sense of duty to invite your serious attention to the subject.

If, when the navy consisted of vessels of rates inferior to ships of the line, docks were necessary, (as they certainly were,) the necessity for them is greatly increased by the fact of our now having ships of the line, and other vessels, of larger size than any then belonging to the navy. Frigates cannot be hove down without hazard; the operation (the only alternative in the absence of docks) always strains their hulls, and not unfrequently injures the forms of their bottoms, and materially affects their sailing. These objections to the process of heaving down apply with still greater force to vessels of larger size. The risk of heaving down a ship of the line is of itself, separately and distinctly considered, so serious as to justify the construction of a dock to avoid it.

The advantages of docks consist essentially of

1st. Safety in repairing and examining ships' bottoms.

2d. Economy of time.

3d. Economy in expense of repairing.

4th. The facilities they afford to examine and repair more thoroughly than can be done by any other known process.

5th. As appendages to building ways they are important.

6th. As affording the means of insuring to the ships all the advantages of sailing possessed in their construction.

Under these respective heads, the Commissioners of the Navy beg leave to observe, as regards—

1st. In docks ships are placed in positions perfectly secure, without incurring any species of risk or injury; but in heaving out large ships, however great the precaution, it is impossible to avoid straining their hulls, and injuring them in a greater or less degree, and the risk in frosty weather, when the ropes are brittle, is greatly increased.

2d. As respects economy of time, in the summer season, or during long days, the bottom of a 74, inside and out, may require 12,000 days' work to repair it. In a dock, where 400 men could be conveniently employed, the repair might be made in 30 working days; but on a ship hove down, where not more than 60 men could work to advantage on the outside, and when only one side can be worked on at a time, and then under the disadvantage of losing at least one-fifth of their working time, in heaving and righting every day, it would require 120 days to accomplish the outside work of 6,000 days. The inside work, which must necessarily be suspended during these 120 days, and until the ship be finally righted, will require, with 200 men, 30 additional days to perform it, so that while in a dock the whole work, inside and out, could be performed in 30 days, it could not be accomplished on a vessel hove down in less than 150 days: hence, a gain, in point of time, during the summer, or the most favorable season, of 120 days, in performing 12,000 days' work. To this gain considerable addition must be made from the circumstance of much time being unavoidably lost, during rainy or stormy weather, when the men cannot work on a ship hove down; when indeed it would be dangerous to suffer the ship to remain in that state; whereas, in a dock, with a roof over it, the men could work every day, wet or dry, hot or cold, calm or windy.

Suppose a ship to come into port dismasted, where there is no dock; new masts must be made for her before she can be hove down; this would require six to eight weeks. But if there was a dock she might be taken into it immediately, and the work upon her bottom and her masts might go on at the same time. Under such circumstances a dock would save six or eight weeks of time, in commencing the work upon a ship's bottom, during the winter season, particularly in situations where ice may be expected, and strong currents prevail. The risk in heaving down a large ship would be too serious to be incurred, under ordinary circumstances. If attempted, serious consequences might be apprehended. But in situations more favorable, during the short days, nearly the whole of the day would be consumed in heaving down and righting, and removing the ice and snow from the vessel, stages, and apparatus for heaving down, before the work on the ship could be commenced. This would be incurring great expense for little work.

If such losses of time are shown with single ships requiring repair, in a time of peace, what would be the injury resulting to the nation, in time of war, from a squadron coming into port dismasted, crippled in action, or from any other cause, requiring extensive repairs? In the winter season its services, though fully manned, might be wholly lost, and when the weather should permit the tedious, hazardous, and expensive operation of heaving down, it would unavoidably be detained in port a length of time incalculably greater than would be necessary, if we had the conveniences of docks to resort to.

In every view, it is highly advisable to make such arrangements, and create such facilities, as will enable workmen, in peace or in war, to perform the greatest quantum of work in a given time. Docks afford these facilities in the repair of ships, while the system of heaving down exhibits the most wasteful contrast.

3d. As to the economy of docks as a means of repairing our ships, when compared with the system at this time from necessity pursued.

To heave down a ship, a gang of riggers (unnecessary in dock) must be employed; their expense would be considerable; and with respect to ship carpenters, (whose wages are going on while the ship is heaving down and righting,) there is, in the most favorable weather, a positive loss of one-fifth of their time, or twenty per cent. of their labor, exclusively of the time lost, and dead expense incurred from rains, stormy weather, and the disadvantages under which the labor is performed. These are positive, unavoidable extra expenses, incident to and inseparable from the system of repairing large ships by heaving them down, under the most favorable circumstances. During the winter, or in short days, these expenses and disadvantages are incurred to an extent almost so great as to forbid the operation, under any circumstances. While on this branch of the subject, it would be doing injustice to omit other important considerations; without docks, we, of necessity, copper our vessels while on their ways, launching them in that state; their copper may sustain serious injury, not to be ascertained till its effects are felt. For instance, a ship under these circumstances is sent into waters where the worm attacks her timber, (exposed by her copper being injured,) and in a very short time their ravages do such injury as to involve expensive repairs, and may even compel the ship to leave her foreign station or cruising ground, to return home for repair.

A vessel hove down should have all her seams payed over before she is righted, to prevent the oakum getting out before she is coppered; a shower of rain may come on in the afternoon, and continue till it is dark; she cannot then be payed, but for safety must be righted, and her oakum thus gets wet. Hence, sunden decays and expensive repairs must follow in a short time.

4th. As to the facilities which docks afford for examining and thoroughly repairing vessels.

In a dock a vessel may, if necessary, have all her planks, inside and out, taken off, and the examination and the repair may be made completely and thoroughly, if occasion requires it; any of her timbers may, without incurring any risk, be taken out, and others substituted, and abundant time is afforded safely to examine them. But when hove down, care must be taken not to remove more planks (particularly below the water line,) than can be replaced in the course of the day, otherwise the ship would be left exposed during the night, and would incur the risk of filling and sinking. These operations are made of necessity upon a partial, if not hasty, and consequently incomplete examination of the ship. In dock a ship is placed in a secure position, effectually shored, and the whole work of repair, inside and out, on both sides, may go on at the same time, at all seasons, under every attainable advantage; but when hove down, only one side can be worked on at a time, and then under the disadvantage of frequent interruptions from rain, stormy weather, ice, strong currents, and from the necessity of heaving down every morning, and righting every night.

5th. As appendages to building ways.

No ship of any magnitude ought to be coppered on her ways; because, whatever care may be taken, she is liable to have her copper injured from launching, whence the most serious injuries may result, and however careful the carpenters and caulkers may be, leaks are frequently left. Launching a ship without having coppered her, these leaks are immediately discovered and repaired thoroughly, when she is taken into dock to be coppered. Hence, all such vessels should be first launched, and then taken into dock. When taken thence, we may be sure that their bottoms are in perfect condition, and that they proceed on service in a state of thorough repair.

6th. As affording means of securing our ships all the advantages of sailing they may possess in their construction.

Whatever advantages our ships may possess, in sailing, are liable to serious injury from heaving them down, since, as before observed, they are always more or less injured in that operation, and the oftener it is repeated, the more are they strained, and otherwise injured; we have seen, too, that from being coppered on their ways they are liable to have their copper injured in launching, and this injury (which cannot be discovered until the bottom shall be examined,) may be such as seriously to impede the sailing of a ship. If she be new, and untried, her dull sailing may be attributed to some error in her construction, and, ignorant as to the real cause, expensive and fruitless experiments may be made to remedy the supposed defect.

To secure to a ship every advantage in sailing, her form should be kept to its original state, and her bottom as smooth and clean as possible, and with that view it should be frequently examined; such an examination cannot be effected by heaving her down, without injuring her, and incurring considerable expense and loss of time; whereas, in a dock, she can be taken in, examined, and thoroughly cleansed, without any loss of time, or any material expense. If a ship comes into port for supplies of any kind, while they are procuring for her she can undergo this examination and cleansing, which, to preserve all her properties of sailing, should take place at least once a year. And while on this subject, it may be proper to observe, as the result of experience, that copper, when kept clean, will last much longer, than when left covered with barnacles and other similar substances.

It will not escape observation that the sailing of a ship-of-war, viewed in reference to attack or retreat, or manœuvring during battle, is of the first importance, since superiority in this respect enables her to approach or retire at pleasure, and in an engagement to secure the most advantageous positions. This property is obviously a desideratum in any vessel-of-war, acting singly. In a squadron of ships it becomes still more important, but each and every ship of the squadron should possess it; for should the sailing of any one of them be injured by any of the causes stated, or by any other cause, she cannot sail in line with the others, without greatly impeding and embarrassing their operations.

Upon the considerations already urged, the commissioners might possibly commit a decision upon the question of docks; but such is their anxiety upon the subject, arising from the conviction of their being indispensable to the best interests of the navy, (inseparable, they hope, from the interest of the country,) that they trust you will excuse their indulging in a few general observations, calculated, they trust, to strengthen the views already taken. We have at this time, in ordinary, six ships of the line and five frigates; on the stocks, five ships of the line and four frigates, and several others to be built, besides sloops-of-war. None of the vessels in ordinary ought to be sent to sea, without having their bottoms examined and cleansed, and, if necessary, repaired; without docks, all of them would have to be hove out. If their services should be required in winter, the operation of heaving out could not take place. It would have to be suspended until the weather should be more mild. The consequences in time of war might be disastrous; and with respect to those on the stocks and hereafter to be built, for the reasons before assigned, they should be launched before they are coppered, and then taken into dock, to be examined and coppered.

Suppose, on the eve of a war, twelve sail of the line, fifteen frigates and all our sloops-of-war, were ready for service. By having docks, their properties of sailing might be preserved without loss of time, and scarcely any expense. Coming into port, as they would be compelled to do at least twice a year for refreshment, while the necessary articles should be procured for them, they could be taken into dock and cleansed; without docks these advantages could not be secured. The ships might, to be sure, be hove down, yet not without injury, and a loss of time fully equal, under the most favorable circumstances, to one-sixth of the year, and a heavy expense arising, not only from the operation itself, but from the necessity of displacing and replacing everything necessary for them, such as ballast, provisions, stores of every kind, and, in short, of everything but their lower masts. Such a sacrifice of time would be to incur an expense of twelve months for ten months' service.

So far as respects the important facility of examining ships' bottoms, a few docks would be sufficient for a great number. Double the number of ships would not necessarily increase the number of docks for this purpose, but the expense of heaving down is a continually accruing one, proportionate in amount to the number of vessels.

It is presumed that, in time of war, our ships of the line would principally be employed as a guarda costa to repel invasion. In this view, the Chesapeake, New York and Boston may be considered the three most important points to be guarded, and at each of these points the Commissioners would recommend the construction of a dock.

It may be estimated, from the report of Mr. Baldwin, that a dock of sufficient size for a ship of the line would cost about $300,000. We probably could not complete one in less time than from two to three years, but three may be built at the same time, so that an annual appropriation for three years, of $100,000 for each dock, would probably be sufficient.

Such an expenditure would in a very few years be refunded by the expense which the docks would save; made, as they would be, of imperishable materials, they would last for ages with occasional repairs, inconsiderable in amount. On the score of economy, then, it is obviously advisable to have docks; and to enable the government to command at all times the services of our ships, and to keep them in the most efficient state, in all respects, they are indispensable.

All which is most respectfully submitted. WM. BAINBRIDGE.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

NOTE.—For the other documents communicated with the preceding report from the Secretary of the Navy, see vol. 1, Naval Affairs, State Papers No. 252, page 1032–'3.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 308. [1ST SESSION.

ON A CLAIM OF LIEUT. ISAAC M'KEEVER FOR PRIZE MONEY FOR THE CAPTURE OF TWO SLAVE VESSELS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES APRIL 3, 1826.

Mr. BARTLETT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Lieutenant Isaac M'Keever, reported:

That the petitioner represents that, on the 18th day of June, 1818, he was commanding the United States ketch Surprise, and on that day he captured, off Pensacola, the schooners named Merino and Louisa, with their cargoes, having on board twenty-five slaves, and conducted them to the port of Mobile, for prosecution for a violation of the laws of the United States. That the said vessels and cargoes were accordingly afterwards prosecuted, in the district court of the United States for the district of Alabama, and, at the end of five years' litigation, a decree of condemnation was pronounced against them, and one-half of the proceeds awarded to the United States, which decree has since been affirmed on appeal to the supreme court of the United States. The petitioner further states that the proceeds of the sale of the prizes amounted to $8,830.50, one-half of which, to wit, $4,415.25, has been distributed amongst the captors, which, by the rule of law, gave to your petitioner, for his share, $419.45. The petitioner states that the other moiety of the proceeds of the sale is not yet paid into the Treasury of the United States, but that bond is given for its payment. The petitioner further states that, from the uncommon duration of the legal controversy to effect the condemnation of said vessels, and the frequent journeys he was compelled to make himself and by his agents to the different courts, he had expended the sum of $3,000 more than was allowed to him, and he now asks, in consideration of his services and liabilities in relation to said capture, in consideration of the expenses that he has incurred in the condemnation of said vessels, and that the rule of distribution has so operated as to give him no more of the prize money than other officers under his command, who incurred no responsibility, that the United States will relinquish to him their interest in the bond securing to them the half of the proceeds of said prizes. While the services of Lieutenant M'Keever have been most active and zealous, and have resulted in important benefits to his country, they have not been of a character to carry with them pecuniary reward; and as the committee believe that the amount now asked, after defraying the charges incurred, would not give to the petitioner a share of the prize money disproportioned to the responsibility and trouble which devolved upon him; and as the committee find the principle recognized in the "Act for the relief of David Porter and his officers and crew," passed April 13, 1814, they deem the prayer of the petitioner reasonable, and accordingly report a bill.

9TH CONGRESS.] No. 309. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE CLAIM OF SETH TOWNSEND, A DISABLED SEAMAN OF THE NAVY, FOR AN INCREASE OF PENSION.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES APRIL 14, 1826.

Mr. STORRS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, who were instructed by a resolution of the House of the 5th instant to inquire into "the expediency of increasing the pension allowed to Seth Townsend, a seaman, disabled in the service of the United States, on board the Washington," reported:

That they have considered the subject referred to them by the said resolution; that the said Seth Townsend prays an increase of the pension now allowed to him as a disabled seaman under the laws of Congress. The committee are of opinion that if his disability at this time is such as to render an increase of it necessary to his subsistence, the laws already provide for increasing it on a proper application for that purpose to the Commissioners of the Pension Fund, and on furnishing to them the proof required by the regulations established for such purposes. The committee submit to the House, with this report, a letter from the Secretary of the Department of the Navy to the committee, which refers to the laws as they now exist, and in the construction of them adopted by that officer the committee concur. They recommend to the House the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the said resolution, and that the said Seth Townsend have leave to withdraw his papers.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, April 10, 1826.

SIR: I have, this morning, the honor of receiving your letter of the 7th instant, enclosing certain papers in the case of Seth Townsend, a pensioner, and inquiring "if any legislation is necessary to enable the pensioner to obtain an increase of his pension, if he is in such a situation or so disabled as to be enti tled in justice to the increase of it." By the 8th section of the act for the better government of the navy of the United States, passed 23d April, 1800, volume 3, page 351, it is enacted that the pension to officers, seamen and marines shall not exceed one-half the monthly pay.

By the 7th section of "An act in addition to an act entitled 'An act in relation to the navy pension fund,'" passed 16th April, 1816, volume 6, page 64, the Commissioners are authorized, in their discretion, to increase the allowance to any sum, not exceeding the full amount of monthly pay to which the party was by law entitled in the service, where the allowance of the half monthly pay should, in their opinion, from the nature and extent of the disability, and the situation of the party disabled, be inadequate to his necessary subsistence.

The authority given in this section is very explicit; and I do not know that any explanation can be useful, either as to the cases in which the discretion is to be applied, or the extent to which it may be carried. If satisfactory evidence be furnished in the mode prescribed by the Commissioners, they may increase the pension, provided the allowance already made "be inadequate to the necessary subsistence" of the applicant. Anything beyond what is adequate to the necessary subsistence must be allowed not by the Commissioners but by Congress.

I am, respectfully, &c.,

SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 310. [1ST SESSION.

ON AN APPLICATION OF FRANCIS HAYNE, A DISABLED SEAMAN, FOR AN INCREASE OF A NAVAL PENSION.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES APRIL 14, 1826.

Mr. STORRS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Francis Hayne, reported:

That they have considered the case of the petitioner, who states that the amount of his pension now allowed to him as a disabled seaman is insufficient for his subsistence, and he prays that it may be increased. The committee is of opinion that no legislative act is necessary for the relief of the petitioner, the existing laws entitling him to an increase of his pension if his disability is such that the amount now allowed to him is insufficient for his necessary subsistence. The committee respectfully refer the House to their report at this session in the case of Seth Townsend, and the letter of the Secretary of the Navy Department which accompanies that report, as containing the views of the committee on this subject, and the state of the pension laws, as now existing.

They recommend to the House the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petitioner have leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 311. [1ST SESSION.

ON A CLAIM FOR A NAVY PENSION.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES APRIL 15, 1826.

Mr. STORRS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Frances Gamble, widow of Francis B. Gamble, late a lieutenant in the navy of the United States, having considered the said petition, and papers accompanying the same, reported:

That the petitioner states that her late husband died in the year 1824, while engaged in the performance of his duty in the naval service, and from disease contracted by much exposure and great exertion in the performance of his duties; and she prays that a pension may be granted to her by Congress. The case of the petitioner was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, by order of this House, at the second session of the last Congress, and an unfavorable report made thereon, on the 28th day of January, 1825. The committee are of opinion that it would be inexpedient to grant the prayer of the petitioner, and respectfully refer to the report of the committee, before made on this petition, as containing the principles on which they have come to this opinion. They recommend to the House the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petitioner have leave to withdraw her petition and papers.

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 28, 1825.

Mr. CROWNINSHIELD, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Frances W. C. Gamble, widow of Francis B. Gamble, late a lieutenant commandant in the navy of the United States, reported:

That the deceased, Lieutenant Gamble, being attached to the United States squadron in the West Indies, for the protection of commerce and the suppression of piracy, &c., in command of the United States ship Decoy, was attacked by a malignant fever, of which he died on the 17th of September last, while on his passage in said vessel to the United States; and the petitioner prays for a pension equal to half the monthly pay of her deceased husband.

The petitioner's situation, in the essential circumstances, is similar to that of the widow of Lieut. Nathaniel L. Montgomery; and the law which would have afforded relief in both cases, having being repealed at the last session of Congress, the committee cannot recommend a renewal of the repealed law in favor of the petitioner, without a departure from the even and impartial course marked out for the national legislature, however deeply they may sympathize with the bereaved and destitute widows and families of the brave men who have perished in the public service. They therefore recommend the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 312. [1ST SESSION.

ON A CLAIM FOR REPAYMENT OF EXPENSES INCURRED AS PRIZE AGENT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES APRIL 29, 1826.

Mr. BARTLETT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, who were instructed by a resolution of the House, of the 22d of April, 1826, "to inquire into the expediency of providing for the payment of a sum of money, paid by Archibald McElroy for the expenses of attending the disposition of a prize vessel, which was paid by him, for which he has not been allowed in the settlement of his account," reported:

That Archibald McElroy claims payment for the sum of $189.95, alleged to have been paid by him in the disposition of the prize vessels Victory and Le Jeaune, in June, 1801. Whatever sums were rightfully paid by McElroy should have been deducted from the proceeds of the prizes before distribution was ordered, and would unquestionably have been done had he presented his claim to the court. If he has not been indemnified, it has resulted from his own neglect, and the committee do not deem it expedient, after a lapse of twenty-five years, to grant any remedy. They therefore recommend the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is not expedient to provide for the payment to Archibald McElroy of any expenses incurred by him in the disposition of the prize vessels Victory and Le Jeaune, in 1801.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 313. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE TENURE BY WHICH THE SITE OF THE NAVY YARD AT PHILADELPHIA IS HELD; AMOUNT OF TAXES PAID THEREON TO THAT CITY AND COUNTY, JURISDICTION OVER THE SAME NOT BEING GRANTED TO THE UNITED STATES BY THE LEGISLATURE OF PENNSYLVANIA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES APRIL 28, 1826.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, April 26, 1826.

To the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

In answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 1st inst., respecting the taxes which have been imposed or paid on the Navy yard near the city of Philadelphia, and what measures, if any, have been taken to obtain from the State of Pennsylvania a cession of jurisdiction over the grounds now occupied by the United States, the Secretary of the Navy has the honor to enclose a copy of a report from the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury, with several communications to and from the Department, which contain all the information called for, so far as it is in the power of the Department, at this time, to furnish it.

The ground which now forms the Navy yard in Philadelphia was purchased of several individuals, in the year 1801, for the sum of $37,000. It embraced parts of several streets, (in the plan of the district of Southwark,) which had, before that time, been established.

Attempts have been made, at different times, to have these streets opened; but they have been unsuccessful—and a law was passed by the legislature of Pennsylvania, on the 23d March, 1818, which prohibits the opening of them without the consent of the Secretary of the Navy.

During the last two sessions of the legislature of Pennsylvania, it is understood that a law was under consideration to exempt the yard from taxation, but was not passed.

The Department is not able, at this time, to furnish a copy of the proceedings of that body on the subject, nor the reasons which prevented the passage of the law. Letters have been written to the proper officers to obtain copies of the proceedings, but they have not yet been received. They will, no doubt, in due time, be forwarded. The present report has been delayed several days, in the hope of receiving them.

It does not appear that any direct application has, at any time, been ordered by Congress, or made by the Executive, to the State of Pennsylvania, to cede the jurisdiction to the United States. The applications had two objects: 1st, to prevent the streets from being run through the Navy yard; and 2d, to obtain relief from the payment of the taxes. The first was obtained by the act of the legislature of Pennsylvania before referred to.

The taxes are still called for and paid. They have been, for several years past, embraced in the estimates furnished by the Department for the support of the naval service; are provided for by the appropriation bills in the enumerated items under the head of contingencies, and are contained in the reports of the contingent expenses, communicated to Congress at the commencement of each year.

Respectfully submitted.

SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

PHILADELPHIA, April 23, 1811.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 19th, and have obtained the district attorney's opinion, which I enclose, and on which I presume the taxes claimed must be paid.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant, GEO. HARRISON.

To the SECRETARY of the Navy.

P. S.—I find on inquiry that no tax has been paid on the United States property on the Schuylkill, (the arsenal;) a tax was assessed and called for, and an appeal made to the then governor, Thomas M'Kean, Esq., who made a communication to the legislature on the subject; since, no tax has been levied or called for.

APRIL 22, 1811.

SIR: The subjoined statement was made upon an application similar to the one which is referred to me by the Secretary of the Navy's letter of the 19th instant.

I am, respectfully, your most obedient servant,

A. J. DALLAS.

Is real estate held by the United States, in the State of Pennsylvania, subject to taxes under the State laws?

If there is any exemption from such taxes, it must arise from the Constitution of the United States, from acts of Congress, or from the State laws.

By the Constitution, Congress have power to exercise exclusive jurisdiction, in all cases whatsoever, over the District of Columbia; and also over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the State, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock yards, and other needful buildings.

It is another constitutional provision, that Congress shall have power to dispose of, and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States; but nothing in the Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States, or of any particular State.

These are the only constitutional provisions that have any apparant connection with the question submitted to me, and there is no act of Congress on the subject but that which simply authorizes the purchase.

It remains to be seen whether the exemption from taxes can arise expressly, or by implication, from any State law. But the site for the Navy yard was not purchased by the consent of the legislature of Pennsylvania, so as to fall within the exclusive jurisdiction of Congress; and there is no exemption of the property of the United States from taxation, by the positive provision of any act of assembly.

I cannot therefore perceive that the lot occupied as a Navy yard is more exempt from taxes than any house or store would be, which Congress might direct to be purchased for the accommodation of the public officers.

A. J. DALLAS.

GEORGE HARRISON, Esquire.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, April 26, 1811.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 23d instant; you will pay the taxes claimed on the property of the United States.

PAUL HAMILTON.

GEORGE HARRISON, Esq., Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, December 14, 1811.

SIR: Speculators in lots adjacent to the Navy yard, and others interested, are memorializing the judges of the court of quarter sessions to open Federal street through it. The evil, as respects the establishment, will not rest here. If they are successful, they will then attempt to open other streets, which will totally destroy it. Could a compromise be made by giving them Federal street, and having the others vacated by law, the injury would be trifling; and I have little doubt this may be accomplished. Should you approve, will you be pleased to instruct Mr. Dallas? It is a very favorable moment to obtain a law from the State vacating the streets.

The drafts you can refer to, as they are in your office. I enclose, from memory, a sketch.

Be pleased to return to Mr. Dallas the petition I enclose you.

I am, respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

GEO. HARRISON.

To the SECRETARY of the Navy.

[Here, in the original, is a sketch of the property.]

Date of act authorizing the purchase Purchase was made under the act authorizing six 74 gun ships, February 25, 1799. (United States Laws, vol. iv, page 264.) Extent of ground purchased, about eleven acres. Price of purchase, $37,000. Property has risen immensely in value. The deed of conveyance from sundry individuals.

DECEMBER 14, 1811.

DEAR SIR: The enclosed petition has been left with me, and I must trouble you, as Navy agent, to state the objections to opening the proposed road through the Navy yard, as soon as you conveniently can. Perhaps you had better consult Mr. Hamilton on the subject.

Return the petition.

Yours, respectfully, A. J. DALLAS.

GEO. HARRISON, Esq.

To the honorable the president and his associate judges of the court of quarter sessions, in and for the county of Philadelphia:

The petition of the subscribers, freeholders in the district of Southwark, respectfully represents:

That the general assembly of this commonwealth, so early as the year 1787, regardful of the public improvement of the district of Southwark, and in order to prevent confusion in the building, and to preserve regularity in the several streets, which so materially contributes to that improvement, and also, in order to open a direct communication with the country adjacent to the said district, passed a law, in that year, authorizing and appointing five commissioners, any three of whom were empowered to survey and lay out such and so many new streets, lanes, and alleys, within that part of said district where proper streets were not then already laid out, as in their judgments would be necessary to accommodate all the inhabitants and landholders with convenient ways and passages to and from their respective grounds.

That, in addition to the above duties, the said commissioners, among others, were specially authorized and empowered to survey and lay out a public road from George Gray's, to run in a right line and parallel to South street, as nearly as the ground and circumstances would permit. That a plan of the said streets, so laid out, was by the said act directed to be returned to the supreme executive council for their adjudication, which said adjudication, together with the draft or plan of the streets approved of, was ordered to be recorded.

That the said act further provided that, upon application to open any of the said streets so laid out, by the petition of more than seven freeholders of the said district, whose lands lie near to or adjoining the same, that it should be lawful for the supreme executive council, if they should be of opinion that the state of improvement in the neighborhood should require it, to issue their warrant, directed to the supervisors of the public streets or highways, requiring them to open and keep in repair such street, as other public highways, laid out and opened according to law, which said powers and authorities were, by an act of the first of April, 1811, exclusively vested in the court of quarter sessions for the county of Philadelphia, subject to removal and revision in the supreme court. That, in conformity to the provisions of the said act, Federal street was laid out, by the said commissioners, of the width of fifty feet from Gray's Ferry road to Swanson street, from which place it is of the width of one hundred feet to the Delaware; that the report was duly approved of, and the adjudication of the supreme executive council, together with the plan of the road or street, was recorded in the proper office.

That part of the said Federal street, viz: from Gray's Ferry road to Front street, has been opened as a public street, in pursuance of the aforesaid act, and an act of the 28th of November, 1796, which gave the powers for that purpose, vested in the supreme executive council by the former act of the governor, and which authorized and directed the commissioners of the county to defray the expense of opening the said roads.

Your petitioners, therefore, under a firm conviction that the continuing it to the Delaware, agreeably to the original intention and design of the commissioners, would at this time be of great public utility, have thought it expedient to petition your honorable court for that purpose.

Your petitioners think proper to state further, that the ground through which Federal street, continued, will pass, has been purchased since the laying out of the said street, as aforesaid, after an application was made to the legislature for vacating the streets passing through the same, and was by them rejected, and is now occupied by the United States as a Navy yard; but they apprehend that, when the premises are duly considered, and it is found that, on the one hand, no material injury will accrue to the United States, whilst, on the other hand, a great benefit will be derived by the city of Southwark in consequence of extending the said street, that the United States cannot have any objection to the original design of the commissioners and of the general assembly being carried into execution. Your petitioners, therefore, pray your honors to issue a warrant, (directed to the supervisors, superintendent of public roads and highways in the district of Southwark,) requiring them to open the said Federal street, from Front street to the Delaware aforesaid, and to keep the same in repair as other public streets in the said district are kept.

And your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

October 10th, 1811. Read, and rule to show cause, at the next sessions, why the warrant prayed for should not issue. Notice to be given to the Navy agent and the district attorney of the United States.

I certify the above to be a true copy from the record. In witness whereof I hereunto set my hand, and seal of said court, this 12th of December, 1811.

RICH. BACHE, Clerk.

Abstract of the sums paid by the Navy agent at Philadelphia for taxes on the Navy yard property at that place.

To whom paid.	For what period.	Poor tax.	Taxes for lamps, paving, &c.	County tax.	Health tax.	Total.
Alexander Urquhart, collector.	1802 to 1810 inclusive.	.....	.....	$371 00	$180 00	$551 00
Alexander Urquhart, collector.	1811 and 1812	.....	.....	.....	.....	624 00	The statement and vouchers being burnt, the several descriptions of taxes cannot be ascertained.
Alexander Urquhart, collector.	1813.....	$116 00	$160 00	64 00	.....	340 00
Alexander Urquhart, collector.	1814.....	125 00	250 00	80 00	25 00	480 00
George C. Snyder, collector...	1815.....	130 00	250 00	100 00	.....	480 00
George C. Snyder, collector...	1816.....	130 00	250 00	100 00	.....	480 00
George C. Snyder, collector...	1817.....	216 67	325 00	227 50	.....	769 17
George C. Snyder, collector...	1818.....	195 00	325 00	162 50	.....	682 50
George C. Snyder, collector...	1819.....	195 00	325 00	162 50	.....	682 50
George C. Snyder, collector...	1820.....	240 50	195 00	227 50	.....	663 00
George C. Snyder, collector...	1821.....	216 67	195 00	162 50	.....	574 17
George C. Snyder, collector...	1822.....	175 50	195 00	162 50	.....	533 00
George C. Snyder, collector...	1823.....	234 50	.....	201 00	33 50	469 00
John McLeod, collector.....	1823.....	.....	234 50	.....	.....	234 50
George C. Snyder, collector...	1824.....	274 70	.....	201 00	.....	475 70
John McLeod, collector.....	1824.....	.....	234 50	.....	.....	234 50
John McLeod, collector.....	1825.....	268 00	234 50	201 00	.....	703 50
		$2,517 54	$3,173 50	$2,423 00	$238 50	$8,976 54

T. WATKINS.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Fourth Auditor's Office, April 7, 1826.

[Extract.]

PHILADELAHIA, January 8, 1812.

SIR: I had the honor of addressing you on the 14th ult., relative to the Navy yard. Being without reply, and totally ignorant of your view of the subject, I pressed Mr. Dallas to obtain a postponement, which he has succeeded in till March term.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant, GEO. HARRISON.

To the SECRETARY of the Navy.

PHILADELPHIA, March 16, 1823.

SIR: On the last of this, or beginning of the ensuing week, the application, by the commissioners of Southwark, for the opening of Federal street through the northwest angle of the Navy yard, is to be heard by the court. I am still without your orders or instructions on this subject.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

GEO. HARRISON.

To the SECRETARY of the Navy.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, March 18, 1812.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 16th instant. You will be pleased to consult with Mr. Dallas, the district attorney, upon the subject of the proposition to open a street through the Navy yard, and to request him to appear in court on the occasion, should he judge it expedient. Although, at this particular time, it might not be very inconvenient to the public to have the street opened, yet, if ever the yard shall be extensively improved, it would be serious public injury to have it opened.

PAUL HAMILTON.

GEO. HARRISON, Esq., Philadelphia.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Accountant's Office, September 11, 1812.

SIR: County and health taxes are claimed on the Navy yard property belonging to the United States at Philadelphia, and for several years the taxes have been paid, under authority from the Secretary of the Navy; but upon application made to me, in January last, relative to the mode in which the claim should be authenticated and exhibited, I, upon reflection, (having serious doubts whether, under existing provisions, there was any legel authority for the payment,) was induced to write to the Navy agent, a copy of which letter you will receive herewith, and, in consequence of which, the agent has declined paying the taxes, which are now claimed and insisted upon by the commissioners; and as it is of some importance, permit me to request you to take the subject under consideration, and communicate your opinion to me in relation thereto. That you may understand the nature of the claims, I send you copies of the accounts that have been paid.

Respectfully, &c., THOMAS TURNER.

RICHARD RUSH, Esq.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Comptroller's Office, September 12, 1812.

SIR: I have had under consideration your letter of yesterday's date on the subject of the claim made by the county commissioners for the county of Philadelphia, for taxes on the Navy yard property at that place. The right to tax, under State authority, property belonging to the United States, situated as that is at Philadelphia, does, I think, legally exist That property was, as I happen to have been informed, obtained by the United States through individual deeds or grants, or at least without any intervention or act of cession on the part of the State of Pennsylvania. In this important point, therefore, the case differs from that of the Navy yard at this place, to which you have referred; the latter having been included in the deed of cession made by the State of Maryland to the United States of all that part of the District of Columbia lying east of the Potomac. The papers which accompanied your letter are herewith returned.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant, RICHARD RUSH.

THOMAS TURNER, Esq., Accountant, Navy Department.

OCTOBER 7, 1812.

SIR: By an act of the legislature of Pennsylvania, passed in the year 1787, commissioners were appointed to lay out roads, streets, and alleys, in the district of Southwark, for the accommodation of the inhabitants, to be afterwards opened as the population and improvements in the neighborhood should, from time to time, require. The duty was performed; the report of the commissioners was confirmed by the proper authority, and parts of several of the streets have been since opened.

During Mr. Adams' administration, a site, intersected by five or six of the streets so laid out, was purchased for the Navy yard, without the consent of the legislature of the State. Attempts have been repeatedly made to open one of these streets through the Navy yard; and the applicants have at last succeeded in obtaining an order for that purpose from the court in which the competent jurisdiction is vested. I opposed the granting of the order at the last session, and the court deliberated upon the subject until yesterday. The part of the street which is now ordered to be opened will cut off a considerable angle from the Navy yard, and some of the shed in which the naval stores are deposited. If, however, the inconvenience were to cease here, the sacrifice would not perhaps be important; but as future applications will probably be made to open, in succession, all the streets, to the utter destruction of the public establishment, it is proper to suggest the expediency of selling the present site of the Navy yard, and procuring another in Kensington; a change which offers many advantages, besides the security of possession.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, sir, your most obedient servant,

A. J. DALLAS.

The SECRETARY of the Navy.

SOUTHWARK, March 2, 1813.

SIR: In conversing with some of the inhabitants of Southwark on the subject of the Navy yard, I find them opposed to vacating all the streets that run through it. But I believe if the Navy Department will open Federal street and Swanson street when wanted, (the latter street will not probably be called for in thirty years or more, and the opening of the former does no great injury to the yard,) they will agree to vacate the rest.

The legislature will continue in session until the 20th or 25th of this month, and I think an application from the Secretary of the Navy to the governor might effect the object.

North and south streets, that run through the Navy yard—Church street, Swanson street, Meadow street, and Wharf street, making 4; east and west streets, that run through the Navy yard—Federal street, Wharton street, making 2. Total, 6.

I am, respectfully,

SAMUEL HUMPHREYS.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, March 10, 1813.

SIR: The object of the enclosed letter is so familiar to you as to require no explanation. I have, therefore, only to request that you will accompany my letter to the governor with such explanations, of the particular object intended by the application, as may be necessary.

Mr. C. Penrose and Mr. S. Humphreys, who I intend shall build the 74, will give you all the local information necessary; they may, however, have an interest adverse to the vacating of the streets: one or both of them are commissioners of the district of Southwark, and know the disposition of the neighborhood. If nothing better can be done, I would consent to open Federal street, and even Swanson street; the latter they say will not be called for probably in thirty years. Can a stipulation be had to that effect? If all the other streets and alleys are not vacated immediately, I shall abandon all idea of improvement, and the building of the 74 will be suspended until another site can be procured. I have desired Mr. Harrison to call on you, with Penrose and Humphreys, for the purpose of forwarding the application without delay.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient,

W. JONES.

A. J. DALLAS, Esq., U. S. District Attorney of the State of Pennsylvania.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, March 10, 1813.

SIR: Intending to construct one of the 74 gun ships, for the navy of the United States, at the Navy yard in the district of Southwark and county of Philadelphia, it is ascertained that the several streets and alleys originally laid out, but not opened, were not vacated when the purchase was made by the United States; and, as the opening of those streets and alleys would render the site altogether unfit for the purposes of a Navy yard, I am directed by the President to solicit such representation, to the legislature of Pennsylvania, as to your wisdom may appear proper, in support of the expediency of passing an act vacating the streets and alleys which intersect the property held by the United States, as a Navy yard, in the district aforesaid.

An early decision is very desirable, in order that the preparatory measures may be immediately commenced, or, in the event of delay or adverse determination, abandoned in favor of some more eligible site; which, however, would be attended with considerable inconvenience and expense to the public.

The attorney for the district of Pennsylvania will accompany this application with a representation of the peculiar objects required, in order to carry into effect the intention of the Government of the United States; the importance of which will, no doubt, be duly appreciated.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

W. JONES.

The GOVERNOR of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

MARCH 18, 1813.

SIR: After receiving your letters relative to the Navy yard, I waited several days, in hopes of a visit from Mr. Harrison, Mr. Humphreys, and Mr. Penrose. As they did not call on me, (Mr. Harrison was sick, and Mr. Humphreys was absent,) I prepared a representation to the governor, agreeably to your request, (conceiving that no time should be lost in obtaining a decision of the legislature, at the present session,) and all the gentlemen have seen it. Mr. Penrose thinks that there is no chance of success, without the concurrence of the freeholders in the neighborhood of the Navy yard; and that there is no chance of obtaining their concurrence, without excepting both Federal and Swanson streets from the operation of the proposed vacating law. The representation (of which a copy is enclosed) will show the footing on which I have placed the subject before the governor. I did not think myself authorized to go further, by the terms of your letter.

The opening of Swanson street will be so very injurious, (dividing the site of the Navy yard into two distinct lots, and separating, by a wide thoroughfare, a comparatively scanty water lot from the main lot,) that, unless the legislature makes it an indispensable condition of passing a law to vacate the other streets, your reluctance to yield the point, must, I think, continue. In the form in which the question will be submitted, upon my representation to the governor, the legislature can reject, or adopt, or modify the proposition; and, if it is modified, you will afterwards have an opportunity to decide upon the expediency of improving the present Navy yard, on the legislative terms, or of procuring another site for the establishment.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

A. J. DALLAS.

WM. JONES, Esq., Secretary of the Navy.

PHILADELPHIA, March 16, 1813.

The attorney of the United States for the district of Pennsylvania, in compliance with the request of the Secretary of the Navy, respectfully represents to the Governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania:

That, on the 29th of September, 1787, the general assembly of Pennsylvania passed an act to appoint commissioners to regulate the streets, lanes, and alleys in the district of Southwark, and to lay out new streets, lanes, and alleys therein, for the accommodation of the inhabitants. The act provided that the commissioners should return to the executive a correct draft or plan of the streets, lanes, and alleys which they should lay out; that the executive (after hearing the objections of any person aggrieved) should adjudge and determine, upon such return, how many, and which of the said streets, lanes, and alleys should be public; and that, after recording the adjudication, "from thenceforth all the said streets, lanes, alleys, and roads, so adjudged, should be forever thereafter deemed, adjudged, and taken to be public highways, for the use of the inhabitants of this State." To these regulations, it was added, that although it would not be necessary immediately to open the specified streets, lanes, alleys, and roads, yet, in order to provide for opening the same, from time to time, as the increasing improvements should require, it should be lawful for the executive, upon the petition of at least seven freeholders of the district, to direct any one or more of said streets, lanes, alleys, and roads to be opened. The authority of the commissioners was executed; their plan was confirmed and recorded by the executive; but the power to direct the streets, lanes, alleys, and roads to be opened, has lately been transferred to the court of quarter sessions for the city and county of Philadelphia. (See Smith's Laws, 2d vol., 435, 5th vol., 259.)

That on the day of 1800, the United States, being desirous to establish a Navy yard in the district of Southwark, purchased the present site from the owners of the soil, for a full and valuable consideration; and although the agents of the United States, who were employed to make the purchase, were aware that several of the streets, lanes, and alleys, which had been laid out in pursuance of the act of the 29th of September, 1787, would, if opened, run through the Navy yard, they were encouraged to rely for relief, in that respect, on the great benefit of the establishment to the neighborhood, and on the known disposition of the legislature of Pennsylvania to facilitate the public measures of the national government.

That, under these circumstances, the Navy yard was located in the district of Southwark, without previously obtaining the consent of the legislature of the State to vacate such parts of the projected streets, lanes, alleys, and roads as would, if opened, intersect the ground; but the establishment being publicly made, and the effect of opening the streets, lanes, alleys, and roads, to destroy the establishment, being obvious, the agent of the United States must, it is presumed, have considered an application for opening the roads, as improbable, and the interposition of the legislature, if necessary, at all times attainable.

That it appears, from the executive records, that some years ago application was made to Governor McKean for opening Federal street, (one of the projected streets,) but that the governor did not then deem it expedient to authorize that part of the street to be opened which would pass through the Navy yard. An application has, however, been lately made, with success, to the court of general quarter sessions of Philadelphia county, for opening the whole of Federal street; and it is understood that other applications are contemplated for opening other streets, lanes, alleys, and roads, by which all the uses of the Navy yard must be destroyed.

That the attention of the government has been drawn to the present subject by the demands of the war for naval accommodation, and more particularly by the design of constructing two public ships, (a seventy-four and a frigate) at Philadelphia. If, however, the plan of opening streets, lanes, alleys, and roads is not modified, so as to leave the Navy yard entire, it would be thought a waste of public money to make improvement there; and another site will probably be sought for the construction of the ships-of-war.

Hence it becomes of importance to the Government of the United States, as well as to the inhabitants of the district of Southwark, to ascertain, without delay, how far the legislature of Pennsylania shall deem it expedient to interpose.

That the communication from the Secretary of the Navy to the district attorney expresses a just solicitude for the interests and accommodation of the inhabitatants of the district of Southwark, and aims to render them compatible with the interests and accommodation of the United States. Upon his suggestion, therefore, in order to obviate the necessity of changing the site of the Navy yard, it is respectfully proposed, for the consideration of the governor, and for the benefit of his recommendation to the legislature, whose wisdom will adopt or modify the propositions:

1. That the order of the court of general quarter sessions to open Federal street through the Navy yard be suspended during the war; and that the same be afterwards executed upon the terms of the act of assembly, without opposition by the United States.

2. That such parts of the projected streets, lanes, alleys, and roads, respectively, as run through the Navy yard, be vacated.

A. J. DALLAS, Attorney.

PENNSYLVANIA, Secretary's Office, March 31, 1813.

SIR: In obedience to the direction of the governor, I have the honor to enclose to you an authentic copy of an act of the legislature of this commonwealth, passed at their last session.

With high respect and consideration, sir, your obedient servant,

N. B. BOILEAU, Secretary.

W. JONES, Esq., Secretary of the Navy of the United States.

An act to suspend the opening of certain streets, lanes and alleys, in the district of Southwark.

SEC. 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in general assembly met, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, That so much of an act, entitled "An act to appoint commissioners to regulate the streets, lanes, and alleys in the district of Southwark, and to lay out new streets, lanes and alleys therein, for the accommodation of the inhabitants, and to lay out the roads therein mentioned through the said district and parts of the township of Moyamensing and Passyunk, passed on the twenty-ninth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and eighty-seven, and of the supplement thereto, passed on the first of April, one thousand eight hundred and eleven, as authorizes the opening of any street, lane, or alley through the ground now occupied as a Navy yard in the said district, and no more, be, and the same hereby is, suspended during the term of six years from and after the passage of this act, or until such ships or vessels-of-war, the building whereof shall be commenced during the continuance of the existing war between the United States and Great Britain, shall have been completed, launched, and equipped.

JOHN TOD, Speaker of the House of Representatives.
P. C. LANE, Speaker of the Senate.

Approved the 29th day of March, one thousand eight hundred and thirteen.

SIMON SNYDER.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF THE COMMONWEALTH, Harrisburg, March 31, 1813.

I do hereby certify that the foregoing is a correct copy from the original law, remaining amongst the rolls of this office.

Witness my hand and seal, the day and year last above mentioned.

N. B. BOILEAU, Secretary.

PENNSYLVANIA, sct.:

In the name and by the authority of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, Simon Snyder, governor of the said Commonwealth, to all to whom these presents shall come, sends greeting:

Know ye, that Nathaniel B. Boileau, Esq., whose name is subscribed to the foregoing certificate, is secretary of the said Commonwealth, duly appointed and commissioned; and full credit is, and ought to be, given to his official acts accordingly.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State, at Harrisburg, this thirty-first day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirteen, and of the Commonwealth the thirthy-seventh.

SIMON SNYDER.

By the governor.

N. B. BOILEAU, Secretary.

Extract of a letter from the Secretary of the Navy to George Harrison, Esq., dated—

APRIL 9, 1813.

I have several of your letters to reply to, which urgent business has postponed. The act of the Pennsylvania legislature relative to the Navy yard is worse than nothing; but I have determined to go on with the improvements and building of the 74, provided a street called Wharf street, east of Swanson street, is not laid out through it. If it is not, you will immediately proceed to contract for the materials, and engage Mr. Davis to build the wharf, &c.

Extracts of letters from George Harrison, Navy agent, to the Secretary of the Navy.

MARCH 26, 1813.

I have heard, through Mr. Biddle, that your application has met with success, and the streets intended to be run through the Navy yard vacated.

APRIL 6, 1813.

The secretary, Boileau, informed Mr. Dallas by letter, under date 1st instant, that he had forwarded to you a copy of the act passed the 29th ultimo, relating to the Navy yard, which, I presume, has reached you ere this.

APRIL 12, 1813.

From the information I have received, Wharf street will run east of the proposed new wharf 30 feet; but Mr. Dallas is of opinion that you may have these streets vacated for 100 years, on application to the legislature early the next session.

PHILADELPHIA, September 2, 1813.

SIR: The enclosed bill for taxes, assessed on the United States Navy yard, and claimed by the commissioners, has this day been presented for payment by the collector, Alexander Urquhart. Must it be paid?

Very respectfully, your obedient servant, GEORGE HARRISON.

To the ACCOUNTANT of the Navy Department, Washington.

United States,

To Alexander Urquhart, Dr.

For taxes of the Navy yard in the district of Southwark, for the year 1813.

Pump and paving	$160 00
County	64 00
Poor	96 00
Health	20 00
	$340 00

We, the undersigned, do certify that Alexander Urquhart is collector of East and West Southwark.

JACOB FITLER,
ROBERT TAYLOR,
ISAAC JOHNSON,
Commissioners.

PHILADELPHIA, September 1, 1813.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, September 4, 1813.

SIR: I have received your letter covering bills of taxes for the Navy yard. I wish to know what the former assessments for two or three years back amounted to.

I am, respectfully, W. JONES.

GEORGE HARRISON, Esq., Navy Agent, Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, September 10, 1813.

SIR: At a meeting of the board of commissioners of the district of Southwark, held on the 9th instant, the following resolution was adopted, viz.:

"Resolved, That this board do not consider themselves justified in exonerating the officer of the general government, having the care of the Navy yard, from such improvements as are essentially necessary in this district."

(Extract from the minutes.) JOHN HUTTON, Clerk.

PHILADELPHIA NAVY YARD, December 12, 1817.

SIR: As there are some circumstances relating to this yard with which, probably, you are not acquainted, I deem it my duty to subjoin the following statement and remarks, for your consideration:

The Navy yard in this port was bought under the full impression that the streets intended to be run through it would be vacated; and a condition was made, between the purchaser and seller, that, if the streets should not be vacated, the sale was to be void and of no effect. Nineteen-twentieths of the inhabitants of Southwark signed a memorial to the legislature of this State, praying for an absolute vacation of the streets, and, for a time, there seemed to be no disapprobation. As soon, however, as it was ascertained that the purchase money was paid, and the title vested in the Navy Department, an opposition was created to the vacation of the streets, and interest sufficient was raised to prevent the legislature from complying with the wishes of a very large majority of the inhabitants of Southwark. The matter thus rested until March, 1813, when, at the instance of the general government, the legislature of Pennsylvania passed an act (a copy of which is here enclosed,) authorizing the vacation of the streets for a limited period. This act has nearly expired, and it becomes necessary to have a renewal. It will be advisable that a communication be made from the Navy Department to the governor of the Commonwealth requesting the absolute vacation of all streets that are intended to be run through this yard, excepting Federal street, which street will not materially affect the property, and by giving it up freely it may have a tendency to lessen the opposition which may be made to the vacation of the other streets. I am, by no means, sanguine that such a proposition will meet with the approbation of the legislature, but it may be as well to ask for what, if taken away, would render this yard inconvenient and incomplete. At the present time, Federal street is the only one which is asked for, the state of improvement where the remaining streets intersect not being in sufficient forwardness to warrant the opening of them.

Accompanying this letter you will receive a plan of the Navy yard, with the different streets marked thereon. I earnestly recommend a purchase of a lot adjoining the Navy yard, now occupied as a rope walk, which may otherwise endanger the buildings on that line; for, in a late instance of a serious fire which took place in a rope walk next beyond it, our buildings were in great danger. This would add great value to the property, and enlarge our space, and, I presume, it might be had at a moderate sum.

Very respectfully, sir, your most obedient,

A. MURRAY.

Hon. SECRETARY of the Navy.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, December 20, 1817.

SIR: Your letter of the 12th instant, with the plan of the Navy yard and copy of the act of the legislature of Pennsylvania, are received.

In examining the original deed to the United States, I do not perceive any condition annexed to the sale in addition to the running of the contemplated streets, the right to do which, if interfering with the improvements and advantages of the Navy yard, must and will be disputed by the United States Government. I wish you to inform me whether the legislature of Pennsylvania has ever ceded to the United States the jurisdiction of the land acquired by purchase; and to state more explicitly what you know of the condition in the sale, to render it void in a certain event taking place. After hearing further from you upon the subject, I will write to Mr. Ingersoll, the United States district attorney, for his advice and opinion.

I am, very respectfully, &c., B. W. CROWNINSHIELD.

Com. ALEXANDER MURRAY, Commandant Navy Yard, Philadelphia.

NAVY YARD, Philadelphia, December 23, 1817.

SIR: I lose no time in replying to your letter of the 20th instant, and I applied to Mr. Joshua Humphreys, who negotiated the purchase of this property for the Navy Department.

The condition stated in my letter of the 12th instant was a fact, and I believe this condition was made in consequence of doubts being entertained whether the legislature would vacate the streets or not.

The streets were laid out by commissioners appointed under the act of assembly, 29th September, 1787, fourteen years before the purchase of the Navy yard.

The legislature of Pennsylvania have never, to my knowledge, ceded to the United States the jurisdiction of this yard.

Very respectfully, your most obedient servant, A. MURRAY.

The SECRETARY of the Navy.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, January 10, 1818.

SIR: I regret the necessity of troubling you with the enclosed papers in relation to the Navy yard at Philadelphia. Upon examination of the deeds, there does not appear to be a condition annexed to the sale, as stated by Commodore Murray; and should the legislature of Pennsylvania refuse to cede the jurisdiction to the United States, the property, by having the streets continued through it, will be rendered useless for the purposes of a Navy yard. The original proprietors cannot reasonably expect a restitution of the property by refunding the amount of purchase, as its value must be very much increased. I therefore request you to examine into the subject, so far as to give me your opinion of the actual state of the property, the prospect of obtaining an act of cession from the State, and how far the original proprietors can claim to annul the sale and deeds given by them, if unconditional.

I am, respectfully, &c.,

B. W. CROWNINSHIELD.

CHARLES J. INGERSOLL, ESQ., U. S. District Attorney, Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, January 19, 1818.

SIR: I have received and read the papers enclosed in your letter dated the 10th inst., concerning the Navy yard. But, as it is impossible for me to give the opinion you require, without having either an original or complete copy of the deed of conveyance, on which I apprehend the question of law will depend, I must defer complying with your request until you favor me with that document.

In the meanwhile, I beg leave to state that, as it appears to me at present that all difficulties may be obviated by an act of the legislature of Pennsylvania, and, as the passage of such an act may depend, in a great measure, on the personal presence and assistance of some agent on the spot, at the seat of the State government, it is desirable to know whether the Navy Department would pay the expenses and compensation of such an agent.

Without State cession to the United States, I fear, from my present incomplete view of this subject, it will be involved in considerable embarrassment; and in case of a recession of the contract of sale, no allowance will be made for intermediate enhancement and improvements of the property.

You will at once perceive, therefore, sir, that a legislative grant, if to be obtained, is the shortest and cheapest, if not the only effectual and satisfactory mode of arranging the matter.

I have the honor to remain, sir, your obedient servant,

C. J. INGERSOLL.

The Hon. B. W. CROWNINSHIELD, Secretary of the Navy.

PHILADELPHIA, March 23, 1818.

SIR: I have the pleasure to enclose a copy of the act of assembly, which, having been introduced in the senate, passed the house of representatives of the general assembly of Pennsylvania, on the 20th inst., suspending indefinitely the former arrangements for opening through the Navy yard, which is not to be done without written consent from the Secretary of the Navy. I have reason to believe that there is no doubt of the governor's having signed this bill, which, when a law, will, I trust, answer the purpose desired as to this business. Should it be deemed important that an act of cession should still be obtained from the State to the United States, application for that purpose can be made to the next legislature with all the advantages of deliberate preparation.

Their present session ends to-morrow, which left no time for the attempt this year. It would, moreover, have hazarded the measure already accomplished to have embarrassed it by connection with the other.

I beg leave to request your order on the Treasury for the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars, for my extra professional services in this transaction; and remain,

Very respectfully, your obedient servant, C. J. INGERSOLL.

The SECRETARY of the Navy.

Extract of a letter addressed to C. J. Ingersoll, Esq., United States district attorney, Philadelphia, by the Secretary of the Navy, dated—

MARCH 28, 1818.

I have had the honor to receive your letter of the 23d inst., enclosing a copy of the act of the legislature of Pennsylvania, suspending the former arrangements for opening streets through the Navy yard, at Philadelphia.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, April 21, 1818.

SIR: I transmit to you, herewith, the papers received from a committee of the district of Southwark, relative to the continuation of Federal street to the water, which, it appears, will take off from the Navy yard an angle of the land on the northwest corner.

I request you to ascertain correctly the quantity of ground, in square feet, thus to be separated, and to state to me fully the effects which it will produce upon the general accommodation and convenience of the Navy yard; and how far, in your opinion, and the joint opinion of others, whom you may think proper to call upon, it would be expedient to comply with the request, and the injury, if any, which may affect the public interest. In addition to which, I wish to know the estimated value of the ground; how it is proposed to pay for it; and the increased necessity arising therefrom to build the wall on that side the whole extent of the Navy yard; and how far the proceeds of the land to be disposed of will cover the expense of building the whole wall around the Navy yard. You will be pleased to communicate the object to the gentlemen of the committee, in order that the subject may be fairly understood before a definite answer be given to their application.

By order of the Secretary of the Navy. B. HOMANS.

Commodore ALEXANDER MURRAY, Commanding Naval Officer, Philadelphia.

NAVY YARD, Philadelphia, April 29, 1818.

SIR: I should have replied earlier to your letter of the 21st, respecting this Navy yard, as relates to the communications enclosed therein from the committee appointed by the corporation to solicit of you the grant of a continuance of Federal street through this yard.

I have had a meeting with the committee yesterday, and also some respectable citizens, to examine the premises, and, I believe, I fully convinced the gentlemen that, should that street be continued, it would most materially cramp us as to the remaining space, and nearly ruin the yard; but, to deal with them in the spirit of accommodation, to make the district some recompense for the streets which they have lost, and to prevent all future collision or disquietude on the subjeet, I have proposed to grant them, with your approbation, ten or twelve feet to widen Prime street, which is too narrow at present, for, in case of fire on the opposite side, our buildings might be in danger; and in order to give an easier entrance from Federal street into Prime street, we have proposed to take off the corner of that and Front street, fifty feet each way, as will appear by the returned draft. These arrangements will not prejudice the property, as you will observe by the dotted lines on the draft, and be satisfactory to the parties concerned.

To open Federal street would take off 25,000 feet. The gore left between the northern side of Federal and south side of Prime street would contain 12,500; to widen Prime street twelve feet, and to take off the northwest corner each way, that is, fifty feet on Front, fifty feet on Prime street, would take off 7,670 feet. As to the value of the ground yielded, that must be assessed by a jury.

Should this arrangement meet your concurrence, it would be of great importance to the yard if you will consent that a wall should be built without delay, at least on Prime street, as the old fence is quite decayed, and no security against intruders.

Very respectfully, sir, your most obedient, A. MURRAY.

Hon. SECRETARY of the Navy.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, May 8, 1818.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 29th ultimo, with a sketch of the strip of land on the plot of the Navy yard, which it was considered advisable to cede to the committee appointed by the corporation, to enable them to widen Prime street, I agree to the proposition, and authorize you to take the proper measures to have the said strip of land valued by a jury, and make such terms for the payment as will enable you to run a brick wall of —— feet in height the whole length of Prime street, from the water to Front street. The fence on Front street may be so repaired for the present as to keep out intruders and others from the Navy yard. When the value of the ground to be ceded shall be fairly estimated, I request you to ascertain the amount of cost for the brick wall, in order to see how far the land will pay for it, or how far exceed the value.

I am, respectfully, &c., B. W. CROWNINSHIELD.

Commodore ALEXANDER MURRAY, Commanding Naval Officer, Philadelphia.

NAVY YARD, Philadelphia, June 25, 1818.

SIR: Having written several times on the subject of necessary improvements to this yard, which has, in some measure, been delayed for want of information from the board of commissioners of this district, I have at last received their letter on the subject, which I beg leave to lay before you for consideration. The sentiments therein expressed, I think, are liberal and just, and hope you will decide in favor of them, and that you will direct us to commence the operation without delay, as the old enclosure affords us no security, and giving up the small slip of ten feet on Prime street is of no moment or loss to the yard, but adds to its security by giving us a wider street, and separation from the opposite buildings, in case of fire, and will be the means of preventing all future collision of parties; I trust you will accede to this proposition.

It is true, that the other sides of this site are, in some measure, in better repair, but there is a necessity for an entire wall all round the premises; we shall then be secure, and ultimately it will be a saving to the United States.

Very respectfully, your most obedient servant, A. MURRAY.

Hon. SECRETARY of the Navy.

PHILADELPHIA June 20, 1818.

SIR: Having seen a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Navy to you, which has arisen from one we did ourselves the honor to write to him by direction of the board of commissioners of the district of Southwark, and supposing one of the objects for which we were appointed can be obtained through you, we take the liberty of stating to you the purpose for which we were appointed, and the justice and equity of our request. On the application to the legislature of this State, by the agents of the United States, for the vacation of the streets that run through and intersect the Navy yard, the corporation of the district, with a liberality and zeal that at that time was thought praiseworthy, unanimously forwarded to the legislature a recommendation of the application, and requested their immediate representatives in that body to forward the views of the United States with their votes and influence, under the impression that Federal street would not be included in the vacation. The commissioners, finding the street (which is of most importance to the district, and, as they thought, least important to the Navy yard) vacated, could see no prospect of redress but in the justice and liberality of the general government, and directed the undersigned to address the honorable the Secretary of the Navy, and endeavor to obtain the opening of Federal street, and, if we failed in that, to procure the widening of Prime street. In pursuance of this duty, we addressed a letter to the honorable Secretary, to which we have received no answer, but which we presume has produced his communication to you on that subject.

We conceive the United States are bound in justice to open Federal street, it being so very important to the district, unless it is of such vital importance to the naval establishment that it must not be done. If so, we must submit, particularly as the arm of law is (by our confidence) taken from us, and placed in the power of the general government. You will please, sir, to recollect that, at the time the commissioners recommended the vacating the streets through the Navy yard, the district had the legal right to said streets, without making any compensation, and that the purchase was made for the United States, subject to the district having this right, yet the commissioners never once thought of asking compensation for giving up said streets; this was from a desire to aid the general government, as well as from a belief that the location of the Navy yard would be an advantage to this district. It has been intimated to us that the honorable Secretary of the Navy is willing to widen Prime street, as a compromise for Federal street, on condition the ground should be valued and paid for; how very different this, from the act of the commissioners! We can only reply to this, that the commissioners have no funds that they can appropriate to such purposes, without a breach of the act of incorporation. As all appropriations for opening new streets, roads, &c., by law fall on the county commissioners, they, not being interested, and perhaps not bound by law, will refuse to pay for widening this street. Now, sir, from your knowledge of how much more importance Federal street would be to this district than the widening of Prime street, and when you consider the conduct of the commissioners in this business, we confidently trust that your interest with the honorable Secretary of the Navy will be used for the widening Prime street without requiring any compensation.

We are, sir, very respectfully, your obedient, humble servants,

J. M. LINNARD,
PHINEAS ELDRIGE,
JOHN TURNER, Jr.,
Committee.

Alexander Murray, Esq., U. S. Navy, Philadelphia.

Navy Department, July 14, 1818.

Sir: In the letter addressed to you on the 8th day of May last, authority was given to you to cede to the committee, appointed by the board of commissioners of the district of Southwark, a strip of land for the purpose of widening Prime street, on condition that the value of the land to be ceded as aforesaid should be ascertained, and the amount thereof paid to this Department. Since that time, your letter of the 25th ultimo, enclosing a communication from the said committee, has been received; and the Secretary of the Navy, after proper deliberation upon the subject, and considering the liberal course pursued by the corporation of Southwark, has given his assent to the cession of the said strip of land, for the purpose of widening Prime street, without requiring from the corporation any compensation; and you are hereby authorized to take the necessary measures for the accomplishment of this object. The state of our appropriations will not justify at this time the erection of a wall around the whole premises, but you will please to furnish an estimate of the length, height, and probable cost of a wall of brick, running the entire length of Prime street, from the water to Front street, and it will be decided whether the same shall be built during the present season.

By order of the Secretary of the Navy.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

BENJ. HOMANS.

Com. Alex. Murray, Commandant U. S. Navy Yard, Philadelphia.

Navy Department, August 23, 1823.

Sir: The item of $703.50, in your requisition of the 19th instant, to pay bills rendered by the collector of taxes, requires explanation. The claim is entirely new to me, and I request that you will furnish me with information as to the grounds on which such a charge is made against property belonging to the United States.

I am, respectfully, &c., SMITH THOMPSON.

Geo. Harrison, Esq., Navy Agent, Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, August 25, 1823.

Sir: So many years have elapsed since taxes were assessed and paid by me by order of the Department that I cannot immediately lay my hand on my early vouchers, but they shall be forwarded to you with as little delay as possible. I well recollect to have resisted the payment for a long time, when it was finally ordered they should be paid.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant, GEO. HARRISON.

To the honorable Smith Thompson.

Navy Department, March 15, 1824.

Sir: Let the taxes assessed on the United States Navy yard at Philadelphia be paid, but with an explicit statement that the payment is not to be considered as an admission of the right or propriety of demanding it. This subject will be investigated as soon as leisure will permit.

We are not subject to the same inconveniences elsewhere, and it would be better to abandon the yard and station altogether than to submit to it much longer.

I am, very, &c., SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

George Harrison, Esq., Navy Agent, Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, October 26, 1824.

SIR: I have received your circular of the 21st, and its enclosure; and, in compliance with your order, I submit the following in relation to the several inquiries embraced in the resolution.

By an act of Congress, 25th February, 1799, provision was made for constructing docks for the convenience of repairing the public ships and vessels, under the direction of the President. In pursuance of this act a site was purchased in the district of Southwark, and conveyances were executed, vesting the property in the United States. It does not appear that the executive of this State was consulted, consent asked, or obtained. The conveyances were made from several individuals direct to the United States, as will appear from the following:

One deed is dated 20th January, 1801, from William and John Allen, of the State of New Jersey, of one lot or piece of ground containing in breadth, on Front street, 9 perches 4½ feet, and in length or depth about 46 perches, to the river Delaware.

One other deed, dated 20th February, 1801, from Anthony Morris, of this city, conveying a piece of ground containing, on Front street, and adjoining the above, 14 perches 10 feet, and in length or depth 676 feet, into the river Delaware.

One other deed, dated 20th February, 1801, from Luke Morris, of New Jersey, conveying a lot containing, on Front street, and adjoining the above, 9 perches 17 feet, and extending into the Delaware.

The foregoing three lots being on Front street 33 perches and 5½ feet north and south, and extending from east to west into the Delaware.

Application was made in the year 1801, to the legislature of this State, to vacate Swanson street, a street running north and south, and to be extended through the Navy yard, but it was rejected. A second application was made in 1818, when a law was passed on the 23d of March, suspending the previous laws relative to the laying out of the streets in the district of Southwark, and declaring that no street, lane or alley shall at any time be opened within the said Navy yard, without the consent, in writing, of the Secretary of the Navy for the time being, first had and obtained.

This embraces all the circumstances, relative to the real estate held for naval purposes within the limits of this State, that it is in my power to communicate.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient, GEORGE HARRISON.

To the Hon. S. L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, January 28, 1825.

SIR: The Navy yard at Philadelphia is regularly taxed by the State, or corporation of the city, every year, and the government is obliged to pay from $400 to $700 on that account.

This is a grievance which has already done much injury to the establishment, and will hereafter do more. It is the only instance in which the same inconvenience exists.

Is it not possible, through your instrumentality, to obtain such a law from the legislature of Pennsylvania, now in session, as will avoid it for the future?

I am, very respectfully, &c., SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Hon. JOSEPH HEMPHILL, in Congress.

A similar letter was, on the same day, addressed to the Hon. D. H. Miller and Hon. S. Breck.

WASHINGTON CITY, January 29, 1825.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of yesterday, on the subject of the tax paid on the Navy yard at Philadelphia.

We have no State tax in Pennsylvania; nor does the authority of the corporation of Philadelphia extend so far south.

I presume the tax to which you refer must be levied in pursuance of a regulation of the "district of Southwark," under authority derived from the State legislature, which, of course, cannot be annulled without the consent of that "district." Unfortunately, the people of Southwark at present entertain unfriendly feelings toward both the Navy yard and State legislature, in consequence of a refusal on the part of the latter to pass a law authorizing a street or streets to be opened through the former, for the purpose of extending improvements along the river Delaware, below the Navy yard. I will, however, with pleasure, use my best exertions to effect a remedy of the grievance of which you complain. If you are certain that no tax is imposed on either of the other Navy yards, I presume it will go far toward effecting the object in respect to that at Philadelphia.

I am, with great respect, your most obedient servant, D. H. MILLER.

Hon. SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

WASHINGTON, January 31, 1825.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 28th of this month, stating that the Navy yard at Philadelphia is regularly taxed, and asking whether, through the instrumentality of the State legislature, this property may not be exempted from taxation.

The taxes in question are altogether of a municipal character, because we have no State tax; and there are, on our statute book, laws exempting certain real estate from corporation and other taxation.

I have sent to the legislature six copies of your letter, with a request that the gentlemen to whom they were addressed would take the subject into immediate consideration.

I am, sir, with great respect, your most obedient, SAMUEL BRECK.

Hon. SECRETARY of the Navy.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 7, 1825.

DEAR SIR: I forwarded the note you sent me, relating to the taxation of the ground at the navy yard in Philadelphia, to the members of assembly from the city of Philadelphia, at Harrisburgh.

I remain, your obedient servant,

JOS. HEMPHILL.

SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

PHILADEDPHIA, March 12, 1825.

SIR: I received the enclosed notice this day. Mr. Collector Snyder is anxious to touch his commissions.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient,

GEORGE HARRISON.

To the honorable SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

"FEBRUARY, 14, 1825.

"In conformity with the provisions of the act of assembly, entitled 'An act relating to taxes on certain real estate in the city and county of Philadelphia,'

"NOTICE.

"You are hereby notified that the following taxes are due and unpaid on certain real estate, situate in the district of Southwark, in the county of Philadelphia, assessed in the name of the United States, to wit, the navy yard and buildings:

County	$201 00
Poor	274 70
	$475 70

"And that, if the said taxes are not paid to me before the first day of April next, the same will be registered, and that an addition of six per centum will be charged thereon until paid, according to the provisions of the act of assembly, passed on the third day of February, 1824, entitled 'An act relating to taxes on certain real estate in the city and county of Philadelphia.'

"My residence is No. 271 South Second street, county of Philadelphia.

"GEORGE C. SNYDER, Collector.

"GEORGE HARRISON, Esq., Navy Agent.

"Received Saturday morning, March 12, 1825."

NAVY DEPARTMENT, March 16, 1825.

SIR: You are hereby authorized to pay the taxes due on the United States Navy yard and buildings, as per notice enclosed in your communication of the 12th instant.

I am, respectfully, &c.,

SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

GEORGE HARRISON, Esq., Navy Agent, Philadelphia.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, April 4, 1826.

SIR: By a letter from you, dated January 29th, 1825, I was informed that you would use your best exertions to relieve the Navy yard at Philadelphia from taxation. May I beg the favor of you, to inform me what means were used and the result.

I wish the information to enable me to answer the resolution of the House of Representatives on the subject.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Honorable D. H. MILLER, House of Representatives.

WASHINGTON CITY, April 5, 1826.

SIR: In reply to your note of yesterday, I have to state that, in conformity with your request that I would use my exertions to have the Navy yard at Philadelphia exempted from taxation, I enclosed a copy of your note to me to the speaker of the house of representatives of Pennsylvania, and also wrote to several other members of the legislature, recommending a compliance with your wishes, but am not informed what measures were taken in relation thereto. I am, however, inclined to believe that if the subject was brought before the legislature, it was not finally acted upon.

I am, with great respect, your obedient servant,

D. H. MILLER.

Hon. S. L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

PHILADELPHIA, April 20, 1826.

SIR: The Philadelphia chamber of commerce, having observed a proceed ng in the House of Representatives of the United States instituting an inquiry "whether taxes have been imposed or paid on the Navy yard near the city of Philadelphia," conceived it a duty to express an opinion on the impropriety of this property being subject to taxation under the authority of the State; this opinion, together with an assurance that so far as the influence of the chamber extends there will be an exertion to prevent it, I have the honor to enclose in an official copy of a resolution which passed the chamber this day.

With sentiments of the highest respect, I have the honor to be, sir,

Your most obedient and very humble servant,

ROBERT RALSTON, President of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce.

Honorable SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

PHILADELPHIA, April 20, 1826.

The chamber having reason to believe that the establishment of a Navy yard in the port of Philadelphia is calculated to promote not only the general interests of the city, but also its commerce, have observed with solicitude that an assessment for taxes has been made or contemplated to be made on the property belonging to the United States in this establishment, a measure which may lead to injurious consequences; it is, therefore,

Re olved, That in the opinion of this chamber there will be a great propriety in exempting from taxation the grounds, with the improvements thereon, occupied by the United States, within the enclosure of the Navy yard, and that so far as the influence of this chamber extends it will be exerted with the State authorities to procure such exemption.

True extract from the minutes of the chamber of commerce, of the city of Philadelphia, at a meeting held this day.

JOHN VAUGHAN, Secretary.

19TH CONGRESS.] No 314. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE PROPRIETY OF CAUSING THE REMAINS OF THE LATE CAPTAIN O. H. PERRY TO BE REMOVED TO THE UNITED STATES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MAY 4, 1826.

Mr. STORRS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, who were directed by a resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 6th day of February last, to inquire into the propriety of causing the remains of the late Captain O. H. Perry to be removed to the United States, reported:

That they have considered the subject referred to them by the said resolution, and they are of opinion that no legislative act whatever is necessary to accomplish the object of the resolution. It does not appear that any application has been made, on behalf of the relatives of the late Captain Perry, to the Navy Department, for the purpose of removing his remains, and the committee do not doubt that, whenever any such request shall be made, it will be promptly complied with. As no appropriation can be required for effecting the object of the resolution, it being within the power and discretion of the government already, whenever an application for the purpose shall be made from, or on behalf of, his relatives, (and whose wishes on this subject should, in the opinion of the committee, be expressed or known, before the Navy Department could, with propriety, take any step for the purpose,) they are of opinion that it is inexpedient to act further on the subject of the resolution, and recommend that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject referred to them by the said resolution.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 315. [1ST SESSION.

ON A CLAIM TO COMPENSATION FOR THE USE OF CERTAIN PATENTED IMPROVEMENTS IN SHIP BUILDING.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MAY 6, 1826.

Mr. STORRS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of John Thomas and John L. Sullivan, reported:

That the said John Thomas represents in the said petition that he has invented certain improvements in the building of ships—in framing them so as to prevent decay, in planking, and in various other respects, and that he is also the inventor of certain labor-saving machines, and of improvements in railway docks, for many of which said inventions and improvements he alleges that he has obtained patents from the United States. He further states that some of these inventions and improvements have been used in the naval service of the United States, and that they are all of great utility, and deserving of the patronage of Congress. He prays that Congress would grant him some equitable compensation for the use and benefit of his patented improvements, and for the remainder of the term to which his exclusive privileges extend, if they shall be found from experience to be of utility; and the said John L. Sullivan, who alleges that he is interested in the said application, joins with the said Thomas in the said petition.

The said petition is unaccompanied with any proofs or authentic documents relative to the allegations therein contained, and the committee recommend to the House the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the said petition, and that the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 316. [1ST SESSION.

ON A CLAIM TO PAY AS A SEAMAN, WITHHELD FOR ALLEGED DESERTION.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MAY 6, 1826.

Mr. STORRS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition and papers of James P. Durand, reported:

That the said James P. Durand represents that he was a seaman, enlisted into the service of the United States in the year 1804 for the term of two years; that he served out the said time, and for some months afterwards, and returned from the Mediterranean service to the United States in the ship Constitution, in the fall of the year 1807, the said ship having then arrived at the port of Boston; that she was ordered round to New York, and the petitioner went on shore the day before she sailed and did not return to the ship before she left Boston, on the next day; that he took passage on board a brig (the Betsy) bound to France, but intending to touch at New York; that she was blown off the coast, and went direct to France. The petitioner now alleges that he did not intend to desert from the Constitution, but that on the night before the ship sailed he was engaged in a frolic, overslept himself next morning, and in consequence thereof the Constitution sailed without him.

The committee are of opinion that it is not satisfactorily shown what the intention of the petitioner was in going ashore and absenting himself from the ship, and that it is not expedient to give any relief in this case by act of Congress, and recommend to the House the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petitioner have leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 317. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE EXPEDIENCY OF INCREASING AND REORGANIZING THE MARINE CORPS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MAY 6, 1826.

Mr. STORRS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, who were directed to inquire into the expediency of increasing and reorganizing the marine corps, reported:

That the present number of privates in the marine corps, authorized by law, (act of 3d March, 1817,) is seven hundred and fifty, and the distribution of the corps is exhibited in the document accompanying this report, marked No. 1, C. Since this return was furnished, requisitions have been further made on the said corps for men to serve in the Macedonian, Vincennes, and Lexington, which are ordered to be fitted for sea. The committee are of opinion that the public service indispensably requires that the number of privates in the said corps should be augmented. The marines now serving at the Navy yard cannot be withdrawn from their duties without serious inconvenience and injury to the service, and the number of them now on duty at the said yard is not more than adequate to the duties required of and necessary to be performed there. The committee respectfully refer the House to the communication of the Secretary of the Department of the Navy, of the 3d of May, instant, and the correspondence accompanying the same, as showing the urgent necessity of increasing the number of privates in the said corps at this time. It does not appear to the committee that the public interest requires any augmentation to the number of officers. They are of opinion that the additional number of 200 privates will be fully adequate to the demands of the service, and have directed a bill to be reported for that purpose.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, May 3, 1826.

SIR: That you may be fully apprised of the situation of the marine corps at the present time, I have the honor to transmit to you copy of a letter received from the commandant of that corps, and also of my reply to the same.

I am, respectfully, &c., SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Hon. HENRY R. STORRS, Chairman Naval Committee, House of Representatives.

HEAD-QUARTERS OF THE MARINE CORPS, Washington, May 2, 1826.

SIR: I have to report that the marine corps has now rather more than its legal strength, and that guards are to be furnished for the Macedonian and Vincennes, and the guard of the Brandywine to be completed, fifteen of her guard having been detained in the Mediterranean to supply deficiencies in the squadron, by order of Commodore Rodgers. You are already acquainted with the condition of the guards at the different navy yards, and of their inadequacy to the protection of the public property within them.

It is a duty I owe to myself, as well as to the public service, to make this statement, in order that no responsibility may rest on me in case of any public loss from this cause.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ARCHIBALD HENDERSON, Lieut. Colonel Commandant.

The Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

P. S.—I received a letter yesterday from Colonel Smith, saying that the Vincennes would require a guard in a few days. I am unable to furnish it, as the corps is now distributed. Unless one of the guards at the yard is removed, it is impossible to supply the guard.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, May 3, 1826.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 2d inst., reporting the situation of the corps, and the difficulty of supplying the guards required by the vessels now fitting for sea. Should no provision be made for the increase of the corps before the end of the session of Congress, I shall direct two or more of the guards at our Navy yard to be broken up, and supply their places by watchmen.

In the meantime, no order can well be given on the subject. You will delay furnishing a guard for the Vincennes, and may, if necessary to provide for the Lexington and Macedonian, take part of those in the Brandywine. Their places may be supplied before that vessel is ready for sea.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Lieut. Colonel A. HENDERSON, Commandant Marine Corps, Head-Quarters.

No. 1.—C.

Distribution of the marine corps.

AT SEA.

	Captains.	1st Lieutenants.	2d Lieutenants.	Sergeants.	Corporals.	Musicians.	Privates.
North Carolina, 74	1	1	1	4	4	4	77
Frigate Brandywine	.....	1	1	3	3	4	39
Frigate United States	.....	1	.....	3	2	2	38
Frigate Constitution	.....	1	.....	3	3	2	41
Frigate Constellation	.....	1	1	3	2	3	33
Corvette John Adams	.....	1	.....	2	2	2	20
Sloop Hornet	.....	1	.....	1	1	.....	15
Sloop Peacock	.....	1	.....	2	2	2	12
Sloop Cyane	.....	.....	1	1	1	1	25
Sloop Erie	.....	1	.....	1	1	1	19
Sloop Ontario	.....	.....	1	1	2	1	20
Brig Spark	.....	.....	.....	.....	2	.....	12
Schooner Grampus	.....	.....	.....	1	2	.....	6
Schooner Shark	.....	.....	.....	1	2	.....	12
Schooner Porpoise	.....	.....	.....	1	1	.....	10
Schooner Fulton	.....	.....	.....	2	2	.....	12
Schooner Alert	.....	.....	.....	1	2	.....	8
Sloop Boston	.....	1	.....	2	2	.....	20
Total at sea	1	10	5	32	37	22	419

No. 1.—C—Continued.

ON SHORE.

	Captains.	1st Lieutenants.	2d Lieutenants.	Sergeants.	Corporals.	Musicians.	Privates.
Head-quarters	.....	1	3	5	5	10	14
Employed as armorers, carpenters, &c	.....	.....	.....	.....	1	.....	13
Clerks to the commandant and staff	.....	.....	.....	5	1	.....
Capitol and magazine guard	.....	.....	.....	2	1	.....	11
Navy yard, Washington	1	.....	1	1	3	1	27
New Orleans	.....	.....	.....	.....	1	.....	5
Gosport	1	2	2	5	5	2	42
Small vessels	.....	.....	.....	.....	4	.....	15
Philadelphia	1	2	1	5	6	1	46
New York	2	3	1	4	4	1	33
Boston	1	2	1	4	6	2	36
Portsmouth, N. H.	1	1	2	3	4	2	29
On furlough	.....	1	.....	.....	.....	.....
Staff	1	2	.....	.....	.....	.....
Learning music	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	18
Waiters, and commutation for waiters	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	36
Total	8	14	11	34	41	19	325

RECAPITULATION.

	Captains.	1st Lieutenants.	2d Lieutenants.	Sergeants.	Corporals.	Musicians.	Privates.
At sea	1	10	5	32	37	22	419
On shore	8	14	11	34	41	19	325
Total	9	24	16	66	78	41	744

At head-quarters.

One sergeant major, one quartermaster's sergeant, one drum major, one fife major.

A general return of the officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates of the United States marine corps, for the month of January, 1826.

Stations.	Lieut. Cols.	Captains.	1st Lieuts.	2d Lieuts.	Non-com'd staff.	Sergeants.	Corporals.	Musicians.	Privates.	Aggregate.	Remarks.
Head-quarters	1	1	4	3	4	12	7	10	60	102	1 captain and 2 first lieutenants in the staff. Lieut. Auchmuty on furlough for 12 months, from April 1, 1825. 17 privates returned here, are learning music. 5 sergeants, 3 corporals, 9 privates, on daily duty. 1 sergeant, 1 corporal, 6 privates, detailed as a guard, (at night,) during this month, for the capitol.
Navy yard, D. C.....	....	1	....	1	....	1	3	1	27	34	Lieut. Crabb, who was ordered to Philadelphia on the 22d ult., as a member of the general court-martial, returned to this post on the 9th inst.
Magazine guard, D. C..	....	....	....	....	....	1	1	....	5	7
New Orleans.....	....	....	....	....	....	....	1	....	5	6	June 30, 1825.
Gosport, Va.....	....	1	2	2	....	5	5	2	42	59	Lieut. Smith joined this post on the 11th inst. from head-quarters; Lieut. Grimes, ordered to head-quarters on the 27th ult., reported himself at head-quarters on the 9th inst., and on the 11th, absent, with leave, till March 1st, 1826, when he is to report himself at Norfolk, Va., for duty.
West India station	....	....	....	....	....	....	3	....	6	9	See remarks in relation to these men on the last general return, since which a letter has been received from Lieut. Bloodgood, in which he says he cannot account for them. A size roll of them has been sent to Capt. Twiggs, with a request that he will apply to the purser of the station to know if he can account for them.
Barrancas, West Florida	....	....	....	....	....	....	1	....	9	10	See remarks on the general return for November, 1825.
Philadelphia.....	....	1	2	1	....	6	7	1	66	84	Privates Green and Hunter are still in charge of the civil authority. Corporal Ira Hill joined this post, from the Mediterranean, this month.
New York	....	2	3	1	....	4	5	1	33	49	See remarks on the general return for last month in relation to Capt. Freeman and Sergeant Meyers. Lieut. Ross ordered to the John Adams on the 25th inst.
Charlestown, Mass.....	....	1	2	1	....	4	6	2	36	52	See remarks on the general return for last month in relation to Captain Harris.
Portsmouth, N. H.....	....	1	1	2	....	3	4	2	29	42	Lieut. Reynolds ordered to Charlestown, Mass., on the 3d inst., as a member of a general court-martial.
North Carolina 74	....	1	1	....	....	4	4	4	76	90	October 31, 1825.
Frigate Brandywine	....	....	1	1	....	3	3	4	37	49	October 31, 1825.
Frigate United States...	....	....	1	....	....	3	2	2	38	46	December 31, 1824.
Frigate Constellation ...	....	....	1	1	....	3	2	3	33	43	December 31, 1825.
Frigate Constitution	....	....	1	....	....	3	3	2	40	49	October 31, 1825.
Ship John Adams	....	....	1	....	....	1	2	1	10	15
Ship Hornet	....	....	....	1	....	1	1	....	15	18	December 31, 1825.
Ship Peacock	....	....	1	....	....	2	2	2	12	19	December 31, 1824.
Ship Cyane	....	....	....	1	....	2	2	1	25	31	December 31, 1825, muster roll furnished by Lieut. Col. Smith.
Ship Erie.....	....	....	....	1	....	1	2	1	19	24	October 31, 1825.
Sloop-of-war Ontario ...	....	....	....	1	....	1	2	1	20	25	August 31, 1825.
Brig Spark	....	....	....	....	....	....	2	....	12	14	July 31, 1825. See remarks on the general return for August, 1825.
Schooner Grampus.....	....	....	....	....	....	1	2	....	6	9	December 31, 1825.
Schooner Shark	....	....	....	....	....	1	2	....	12	15	July 31, 1825. See remarks on the general return for September, 1825.
Schooner Porpoise	....	....	....	....	....	1	1	....	10	12
Receiving ship Fulton ..	....	....	....	....	....	2	2	....	12	16
Receiving ship Alert....	....	....	....	....	....	1	2	....	8	11	Sergeant Ryan sick in the hospital, Gosport, Va.
On furlough	....	....	1	....	....	....	....	....	....	1	Lieut. Tupper. See remarks on the general return for November, 1825, in relation to him.
Under orders.....	....	....	1	....	....	....	....	....	....	1	Lieut. Delany. See remarks on the general return for November, 1825, in relation to him.
Total.	1	9	23	17	4	66	79	40	703	942

Lieut. Douglass entitled to promotion from April 26, 1825, vice Lieut. Gardner, deceased. The men on board the Sea Gull, Weasel, Beagle, and Fox, as well as the small vessels attached to the West India squadron, are returned at the West India station.

PARKE G. HOWLE, Adjutant and Inspector.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 318. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE EXPEDIENCY OF CONSTRUCTING DRY DOCKS FOR REPAIRING SHIPS-OF-WAR.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MAY 8, 1826.

Mr. BARTLETT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the communication from the Secretary of the Navy, of the 30th of March last, relative to the expediency of constructing at one or more of the navy yards of the United States, a dry dock, for receiving, examining, and repairing ships-of-war, reported:

That they deem the subject one of very great importance to the interests of the nation. They coincide fully with the views of the Department as to the necessity of the construction of dry docks, as well for convenience, as economy in the repairs and preservation of our navy. But the committee are of opinion that such work cannot, with propriety, be commenced, until more accurate and minute information shall be obtained of the proper location, extent, and cost of such docks as our service may require. They, therefore, recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolution directing surveys and estimates for dry docks.

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States cause an examination and accurate survey to be made, by a skillful engineer, of a site for a dry dock, at the Navy yard at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, Charlestown, Massachusetts, Brooklyn, New York, and Gosport, Virginia, and that such engineer be required to state the dimensions necessary for such docks, the advantages of each of the above named places for such establishment, the objections that apply to either, with a detailed estimate of the expense of a suitable site, and of constructing a dock at each of said places; and that the President be requested to communicate the same to Congress in the first week of the next session.

(This resolution passed both Houses of Congress, and was approved by the President the 22d of May, 1826.)

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 319. [2D SESSION.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY, SHOWING THE CONDITION OF THE NAVY IN THE YEAR 1826.

COMMUNICATED, WITH THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE, DECEMBER 5, 1826.

The following report is respectfully submitted to the President of the United States by the Secretary of the Navy:

On the 2d January, 1823, the law entitled "An act to increase the navy of the United States" authorized the building of four ships, to rate not less than 74 guns each, and six ships to rate 44 guns each.

On the 29th of April, 1816, the law entitled "An act for the gradual increase of the navy of the United States" was passed, and authorized the building of nine ships, to rate not less than 74 guns each, and twelve ships to rate not less than 44 guns each, including within these numbers one 74 and three 44 gun ships, authorized by the preceding act. By these two laws, therefore, twelve ships of not less than 74 guns, and fifteen ships of not less than 44 guns, were directed te be built.

Of these twelve 74s, seven have been launched, and five are in various stages of forwardness. Of the fifteen 44s, one was burnt on the stocks in the Navy yard at Washington, in the year 1814, and may be considered as replaced by the one lately purchased; four have been launched; seven are on the stocks; and the frames of the remaining three have been contracted for. (See paper I, accompanying the report of the Navy Commissioners.)

By the law of the 2d January, 1813, $2,500,000 were appropriated; by that of 29th April, 1816, and a subsequent law of 3d March, 1821, $8,000,000 were appropriated to carry the object of those laws into execution, amounting in all to $10,500,000. The appropriation of $8,000,000 included a previous sum of $600,000 for "the purchase and supply of a stock of every description of timber required for ship building and other naval purposes." This appropriation expires with the present year. It was not founded on any specific estimate of the cost of building and equipping the number of vessels authorized, and is not sufficient to accomplish the object. What addition may be necessary, there are not competent means within the reach of the Department at this time to ascertain with accuracy. Nothing more, however, will be required during the next year, as there remain, of the former appropriations, about $800,000, which is more than can be usefully expended.

At the time of the passage of the law of 1816, there were three ships of the line, the Independence, Washington, and Franklin; four frigates of the 1st class, the Constitution, United States, Guerriere, and Java; and three of the 2d class, the Congress, Constellation, and Macedonian. These, added to the number authorized by the law before mentioned, and the frigate purchased in August last, under the authority of the law of 17th May, 1826, will give, when they are all completed, twelve ships of the line, seventeen frigates of the 1st class, and three frigates of the 2d class; to which may be added the Fulton, which is used at present as a receiving ship at New York.

There are also in our navy two ships of 24 guns each, the Cyane, captured in 1815, and the John Adams; and four sloops-of-war of 18 guns; to these were added, by the law of 3d March, 1825, ten sloopsof-war, to carry not less than twenty guns; making, when completed, sixteen vessels of nearly the same class, and which may be ranked under the denomination of sloops-of-war. There are also four schooners of 12 guns, and three other vessels used as receiving ships.

In the report from this Department, of the 2d December, 1825, it was stated that three of the sloops-of-war authorized by the act of the 3d March, 1825, would be completed within the year. Since that time those three have been finished, and are now at sea. One has been recently launched; will be immediately put in commission. The others are far advanced, and the whole would have been entirely completed if the contractors for certain portions of the materials had not produced disappointment, by failing to comply with their contracts within the times specified. They will all be launched during the next year, and may be ready for sea in six weeks after launching, if no difficulty should be experienced in procuring seamen. (See paper I.)

From this statement it will appear that the whole naval force, authorized by law, consists of twelve ships of the line, (exclusive of two on Lake Ontario,) seventeen frigates of the 1st class, three frigates of the 2d class, sixteen sloops-of-war, four schooners of 12 guns, and 3 other vessels. The whole of these, with the exception of three of the frigates, could be prepared for active service at sea in a few months, should the situation and interests of the nation demand their employment. For their names and other particulars I refer to paper I, and Naval Register of 1827.

By the law of 9th March, 1814, ths sum of $500,000 was appropriated "for the purpose of building, equipping, and putting into service one or more floating batteries, adapted to attack, repel, or destroy ships of the enemy which might approach the shores or enter the waters of the United States." This law was executed in part by the purchase of one steam engine, and the building of one vessel, the Fulton. In other respects it has been unexecuted, in consequence, it is presumed, of the peace which soon succeeded its enactment.

By the 3d section of the law for the gradual increase of the navy, passed in April, 1816, the President was authorized to cause to be procured the steam engines and all the imperishable materials necessary for building and equipping three steam batteries on the most approved plan, and best calculated for the defence of the ports and harbors of the United States. The frames of the three vessels have been procured; two of the engines with all their appurtenances, and part of the third engine purchased.

The steam engines and vessels procured were of the best construction known at the time; it is probable that others, of more approved form, both for economy and power, might now be obtained.

This is a subject to which it is presumed legislative attention will, before long, be directed. By the law just referred to, it is manifest that Congress, at the time of its passage, looked to this species of vessels as an efficient means of protection for our ports and harbors; and subsequent experience and improvements have justified the opinion.

The powerful agency of steam has been constantly yielding, both in point of economy and skill, to the improvements of the age, and there can now be little hazard in anticipating that, at no very distant period, it will be employed in propelling a large number of the vessels used for the protection of the maritime frontiers of all countries; and in none can they be used with more advantage than in this. The peculiar formation of our coast, harbors, and estuaries renders them an indispensable addition to the line of fortifications and defences which the nation is constructing with such prudent forecast.

A minute detail of the employments and services of our armed vessels at sea does not seem to be required. The year has presented few incidents which are uncommon, of deep interest, or requiring legislative action. It may be truly said of all our squadrons, that they have enjoyed good health, have faithfully performed the duties entrusted to them, doing credit to the skill and patriotism of our officers, and justifying the expense to which the nation is subjected in supporting them. Paper M furnishes a list of the vessels in commission, with their stations. It will be perceived that few changes have been made in the vessels employed in active service.

The frigate Brandywine and sloop-of-war Erie have returned from the Mediterranean; the former to relieve the frigate United States; the latter is in ordinary, and her place will in a few days be supplied by the new sloop-of-war Warren, Master Commandant L. Kearny.

The West India squadron has been diminished: 1st. By the sale of the brig Spark, she being so far decayed that it "was not for the interest of the United States to repair her;" 2d. By placing the schooner Fox at Baltimore as a receiving vessel, she being in such a state that she could not any longer be profitably employed as a cruising vessel; and, 3dly. The store ship Decoy has been sold, such arrangements having been made as rendered her no longer useful.

The Brazilian squadron remains the same as at the close of the last session of Congress, consisting of the Macedonian, Cyane, and Boston.

The Pacific squadron has not in any respect been changed, but the Brandywine and Vincennes are on their passage to relieve the frigate United States and sloop-of-war Peacock. It was the purpose of the Department to add to the relief squadron the sloop-of-war Lexington, but other employment became necessary for her, under the resolutions of Congress. That vessel has been employed in a cruise among the fisheries, and in the melancholy, yet grateful duty of removing the remains of Commodore Perry, and will now be sent, for a time, to the West Indies.

In obedience to the resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 18th of May last, directing "that the Secretary of the Navy be instructed to 'cause the remains of Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry to be removed from the Island of Trindad, in a public vessel of the United States, and to have the same conveyed to Newport, State of Rhode Island,'" the Secretary of the Navy, as soon as a vessel could be commissioned for that purpose, and at as early a day as the safety of those employed would permit, dispatched the sloop-of-war Lexington, under the command of Master Commandant William B. Shubrick, with such instructions as were supposed proper on an occasion so interesting to the national feeling, and with a letter from Mr. Vaughan, the British minister in this country, to the Governor of Trindad, to both of whom the thanks of the Department are due for the facilities afforded in accomplishing the object. Master Commandant Turner, who was with Commodore Perry at the moment of his death, and attended his funeral, was directed to accompany Master Commandant Shubrick. Information was also given to the relatives and friends of Commodore Perry, in Rhode Island, that they might be enabled to make suitable preparations for receiving and paying funeral honors to his remains. The Lexington sailed from New York on the 12th of October, and I am this moment apprised that she reached Newport on the 27th of November. The instructions and correspondence of the Department on this subject, with the report of Master Commandant Shubrick, are annexed, marked N.

The squadron in the Mediterranean has remained under the command of Commodore Rodgers, and been actively and usefully employed in cultivating the friendship of the powers bordering on that sea, and in affording protection to our commerce and interests. Some extracts from his correspondence, marked O, will explain the nature of the services of the squadron, and the manner in which they have been performed.

The presence of a respectable naval force in that quarter is demanded by our growing commerce, and by the continued and perhaps increasing dangers to which it is subjected by the present state of the contest between Greece and Turkey. Several of the vessels will return home in the course of the year, but their places will be supplied by others. Private letters just received prove that piracies of the worst kind are daily increasing, and that our force cannot safely be diminished.

The squadron in the Pacific has continued to be useful to the interests of the nation. The termination of active war between Spain and the South American governments bordering on that ocean has relieved our commerce from some of the evils under which it suffered; but, the unsettled state of the governments and people, with the mass of individuals who have been thrown out of employment on the land and the water, expose it to others which require the presence and active exertions of a competent naval force on the whole coast, from California to Cape Horn.

Commodore Jones, one of our most experienced and prudent officers, has been ordered to succeed Commodore Hull in the command of the squadron, and, should the force already sent not be sufficient to protect our interests, an addition to it will be made if practicable.

Our extensive interests in every part of the Pacific, and the difficulties which not unfrequently occur in the neighborhood of many of the islands, render the occasional presence of a public force among them very important It was the intention of the Department that Commodore Hull should, previous to his return, visit the Society and Sandwich Islands, look to the interests of our commerce there, acquire a better knowledge than is now possessed, both of its extent and necessities, and of the best means and mode of defending and promoting it. But his duties on the coast have forbidden him to be absent; he has, however, under the orders of the Department, dispatched, at different times, the Dolphin and Peacock, to accomplish those objects as far as practicable. The report of their cruises has not yet reached the Department.

Information was received of war between Brazil and Buenos Ayres, soon after the Cyane sailed, in December last, which rendered an additional number of vessels there necessary. These were provided under the act of appropriation of 5th April, 1826, and the new sloop-of-war Boston, Master Commandant B. V. Hoffman, sailed on the 11th April; the frigate Macedonian, Commodore Biddle, on the 13th June.

The presence of this force in that quarter has been essentially useful, by the relief which it has afforded to our vessels and fellow-citizens in many cases, and by the impression which it has produced, that, if assailed, protection was at hand.

The Emperor of Brazil established a blockade of an extensive coast, resting solely upon principles which have been uniformly resisted by our government; its operation has, to a great degree, been counteracted by the interposition of our officers, as will be seen by the accompanying correspondence, marked Q and R.

The view of our interests in the West Indies, so far as they are connected with the services of the navy, is more gratifying than at any time during the last four years. The zeal, enterprise, and skill of our officers, which received commendation in the last annual report, have continued to merit it; and it is satisfactory to add that not one case of piracy, within the range of the cruising grounds of our squadron, has been brought to the knowledge of the Department. The health of the officers and men has also received strict attention, and has been preserved to as great an extent as on any other station. (See paper S.) Commodore Warrington has been invited to the Navy Board, and Captain Ridgley appointed to succeed him.

The benefits resulting from the cruise of the schooner Porpoise over the fishing grounds at the northward, during the last year, confirmed the propriety of sending a vessel, during the late fishing season, to perform a like service. Master Commandant Shubrick, sailed in the Lexington for that purpose, from New York, on the 12th June, and returned on the 4th September; having in the meantime examined the greater part of the coasts and shores frequented by our fishermen. His reports, a copy of some of which accompany this communication, show that much good has resulted from the attention of government to this important interest of the nation, and that it will be well not to relax on this subject. More diversified and extensive benefits are not produced by the employment of any one of our public vessels. (See paper T.)

A law of 3d March, 1825, appropriated $100,000 for the establishment of a Navy yard and depot on the coast of Florida. By the report from this Department, of 2d December, 1825, Congress was informed of the measures which had been taken to execute the law, and of the selection which had been made. Since that time the yard has been laid out, the wharves, buildings, &c., located, and the whole are satisfactorily progressing under the superintendence of the Commissioners of the Navy. There still remain unexpended about $60,000, which will be insufficient to complete the whole, as the erection of works in that portion of the Union is very expensive.

On the 10th day of May last a letter was directed by the chairman of the Naval Committee of the House of Representatives to the Secretary of the Navy, inquiring "whether the arrangements made by the Department for executing the act of the 29th April, 1816, for the gradual increase of the navy, would be injuriously interfered with if the building of one of the frigates authorized by that act should be suspended for the present, and the timber for her frame secured, and the government be authorized to purchase, in lieu of such frigate, for the naval service, a ship of equal or rather superior force, if the same can be procured for the United States on advantageous terms." This letter was received and answered the 12th of that month. On the 17th May a law was passed, authorizing the President "to cause the building of one of the ships to be suspended, and to cause to be purchased a ship of not less than the smallest class authorized to be built."

In the execution of this law, the Secretary of the Navy, on the 29th of May, appointed Commodores Bainbridge, Chauncey, and Jones to examine two vessels, then lying at New York, with as little delay as practicable, and furnish a full report of their state and qualities, with an estimate of their value. On the 21st of June they reported that they had examined the two ships, and thought the one called the Liberator the best adapted to the public service of the United States; that from her form and dimensions they should judge favorably of her qualities, and estimating her value at $233,570.97.

Controversies having arisen between the persons interested in the vessel, which were submitted to arbitration, some delay took place in making the purchase, but instructions were eventually given to the Navy agent at New York to lay the papers before the district attorney, and obtain from him an opinion as to the right and power of the arbitrators to transfer the title to the United States. In obedience to instructions, and with the approbation of all persons concerned and interested in it, he made the purchase for the sum estimated as the value, and the vessel is now at the Navy yard in Brooklyn, N. Y. She is a valuable ship, calculated to perform much service, and will be fitted for sea in a short time. The papers relating to the execution of this law will be found annexed, and marked U.

In compliance with the joint resolution of the 22d May, requesting the President to cause an examination and accurate survey to be made by a skillful engineer of a site for a dry dock at the Navy yard, at Portsmouth, N. H., Charlestown, Mass., Brooklyn, N. Y., and Gosport, Va. Loami Baldwin, Esq., was employed to make the necessary surveys and examinations. He has been diligently engaged in the work, and it is hoped that he will be able to make his report in a few days. As soon as it is received, it will be communicated, together with the instructions under which he acted, and the views of the Department on the subject.

In the act making appropriations for the support of the navy for the year 1826, there is an item of of $10,000 for a survey of the harbors of Savannah and Brunswick, in Georgia, Beaufort, in South Carolina, and Baltimore, in Maryland, "with a view to ascertain the practical facilities of those places for naval purposes." In the execution of this law, a survey was commenced, under the superintendence of Captain R. T. Spence, and, after his unexpected and lamented death, was committed to Master Commandant Claxton, then upon the Baltimore station, with the aid of Lieut. Sherburne and other officers.

A report upon the subject, accompanied by a chart, has been made to the Department, but is not now communicated, because the surveys of the other places mentioned in the law have not been completed; and it is believed to be more correct to present the whole at one view.

The remaining surveys are progressing, under the superintendence of Lieut. R. F. Stockton, and will be finished with the least practicable delay, when they will be presented, with that of Baltimore.

The correspondence marked W will show the situation of the African agency and slave trade.

It was anticipated, at the commencement of the year, that a large number of Africans would be sent to the agency, but a delay in the decision of the claim to a part of them has hitherto prevented. This delay has occasioned a great expense to the United States, but no remedy is perceived. Brought to this country by no act of their own, there is no principle of justice on which they can either be made slaves by the government, or turned loose among our fellow-citizens to suffer. They must be carried somewhere out of the limits of the United States, and a more economical mode does not seem practicable.

On the 1st of January, 1826, a balance of $32,401.63 remained of the appropriation of $100,000 made in 1823, which was carried to the surplus fund; but a reappropriation of $32,000 was made during the last session; of this sum $22,220.81 have been expended, leaving a balance at this time of only $9,779.19, which it is believed will not be sufficient to meet the existing and necessary claims upon the fund during the ensuing year. Another appropriation will therefore be required.

It is probable that, in a few weeks, the question respecting the Africans in Georgia will be determined, in which event there will be from 100 to 160 in that State, and about 15 from Louisiana, to be sent to the agency, for whose reception provision has been made.

No vessel has been dispatched to the coast of Africa for several months, until within a few days. It was the purpose of the Department to order the brig Spark on that service; but, upon her arrival from the West Indies, she was found too much out of repair, and consequently sold. The schooner Shark, Lieut. Otho Norris, left Norfolk about a week since, with orders to remain one or two months, as occasion may require, and afford such protection to the agency as its situation shall demand. After performing this duty, the Shark will cruise a short time in the neighborhood of La Guayra, and then resume her station in the West India squadron.

In the report of the President at the commencement of the last session of Congress, and in other communications from the Department, several evils under which the marine corps and the naval service labored, and which could only be relieved by legislative interference, were exhibited, in the hope that a remedy would be provided. It would be unnecessary, and perhaps improper, to renew the representations respecting them. Reference is made to the views and opinions heretofore expressed, and it is respectfully added that the marine corps and the service still continue to feel, sensibly, the necessity of a remedy for some of the inconveniences there suggested.

A few subjects of importance are not mentioned in this report, because they must hereafter be presented to Congress, in answer to resolutions passed, and calls made, during the last session.

Paper X contains a list of the officers of the navy and marine corps who have died since the 2d December, 1825.

Paper Y contains a list of resignations during the same period.

Paper Z contains estimates for the service of the navy and marine corps for the year 1827.

Respectfully submitted.

SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, December 2, 1826.

M.

List of vessels of the United States navy in commission, their commanders, and stations.

IN THE MEDITERRANEAN.

North Carolina, 74 guns	Commodore John Rodgers.
Constitution, 44 guns	Captain D. T. Patterson.
Ontario, 18 guns	Master Commandant J. B. Nicholson.
Warren, 18 guns	Master Commandant L. Kearney.
Porpoise, 12 guns	Lieut. Commanding Benjamin Cooper.

IN THE WEST INDIES.

Constellation, 36 guns	Commodore Charles G. Ridgley.
John Adams, 24 guns	Master Commandant J. Wilkinson.
Hornet, 18 guns	Master Commandant A. Claxton.
Grampus, 12 guns	Lieutenant Commanding W. K. Latimer.

IN THE BRAZILS.

Macedonian, 36 guns	Commodore James Biddle.
Cyane, 24 guns	Captain Jesse D. Elliott.
Boston, 18 guns	Master Commandant B. V. Hoffman.

IN THE PACIFIC.

United States, 44 guns	Commodore Isaac Hull.
Peacock, 18 guns	Master Commandant Thomas Ap Catesby Jones.
Dolphin, 12 guns	Lieutenant Commanding John Percivial.
Brandywine, 44 guns	Commodore Jacob Jones, to relieve the frigate United States.
Vincennes, 18 guns	Master Commandant William B. Finch, to relieve the Peacock.

ON SPECIAL SERVICE.

Lexington, 18 guns	Master Commandant William B. Shubrick.
Shark, 12 guns	Lieutenant Commanding Otho Norris.

N.

CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING THE REMOVAL OF THE REMAINS OF COMMODORE OLIVER H. PERRY.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, September 8, 1826.

SIR: As soon as the U. S. sloop Lexington, under your command, can be prepared for a cruise of two months, you will proceed to the Island of Trinidad, to perform the duty prescribed by the resolution of the House of Representatives, of which I enclose a copy.

On your arrival at Port Spain, you will communicate to the proper authority in the island the object of your government in sending you, and request permission to remove the remains of Commodore Perry.

Having obtained the permission, you will receive them on board the Lexington, with your colors half-mast, and a salute suited to the rank which Commodore Perry held in the navy of the United States. Your colors will remain half-mast so long as you continue in the harbor.

His friends at Newport, R. I., have been apprised of your departure, and will be ready to receive the body.

On your arrival at that place you will again wear your colors half-mast, and when the body is taken from the vessel fire another salute, and, with your officers and men, unite in such funeral services as may be performed by the citizens of that place; after which you will return to New York.

In selecting you for this deeply interesting duty, the Department relies with confidence on the exercise of your correct judgment and feelings, and expect that you will discharge it in a manner suited to the respect due to the memory of Commodore Perry—to the feelings of his friends—and to the national gratitude for his patriotic services, and the national pride in his pure fame.

I enclose to you extracts of a letter from an officer in the navy, who was present at the burial of Commodore Perry, which may be useful to you.

I am, respectfully, &c.,

SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Captain WILLIAM B. SHUBRICK, commanding U. S. Sloop-of-War Lexington, New York.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, October 17, 1826.

SIR: I beg the favor of you to have the enclosed letters delivered to the mother and widow of Commodore Perry. Their object is to announce to them the time when the resolution of the House of Representatives will probably be executed.

Captain Shubrick, in the Lexington, has sailed to Trinidad, and will probably arrive in Newport, with the remains, in about 40 or 50 days. He is commanded to deliver them to the friends of Commodore Perry, and to unite in the funeral services which may be performed by the citizens of that place. Will you do me the favor to give such information as may be proper and necessary on the subject?

I am, respectfully, &c.,

SAMUEL. L. SOUTHARD.

Hon. DUTEE J. PEARCE, Newport, R. I.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, October 17, 1826.

MADAM: The House of Representatives of the United States, on the 18th May last, passed a resolution, instructing the Secretary of the Navy to cause the remains of Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry to be removed from the Island of Trinidad, in a public vessel of the United States, and to have the same conveyed to Newport, State of Rhode Island.

The duty to be performed was of a character not to be unnecessarily postponed; and I have at the earliest moment in my power devoted the Lexington, commanded by Captain Shubrick, to its discharge.

He is directed to bring the remains to Newport, and deliver them to the friends of Commodore Perry, and will probably arrive there in forty or fifty days from this time.

I rely with confidence on the correct judgment and feelings of Captain Shubrick, to discharge this service in a manner suited to its interesting character; and I rejoice that the remains will be received by those who will best know how to pay that respect which private affection and public gratitude demand.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Mrs. ELIZABETH PERRY, Newport, R. I.

Captain Wm. B. Shubrick to the Secretary of the Navy.

NEWPORT, November 27, 1826.

I have had the honor to announce to you my arrival in this harbor, with the remains of the late Commodore Perry.

My letter of the 13th ult. informed you of my departure from New York.

I anchored in the Gulf of Paria, after a passage of seventeen days, on the evening of the 31st, and on the 1st of November got up to Port of Spain. On anchoring, I addressed a letter (a copy of which accompanies this, marked A) to the governor, and, that evening, received the answer marked B. On the morning of the 2d, after exchanging salutes with the fort, I waited on the governor, who expressed his readiness to afford me every facility in the execution of my commission, and his wish to have the remains attended, on removal, with such military honors as I might think proper. As the commodore had been interred in the most splendid manner, by the same governor, I thought it most proper to decline any further parade, which I did in the most delicate manner. The governor, however, caused a car to be prepared especially for the purpose, and to be drawn from the cemetery to the wharf by his own carriage horses; his secretary, and other members of his family, giving their personal attendance.

At the wharf, the remains were received by the boats, with a proportion of the officers and crew of this ship. During the time they were rowing off, I caused minute guns to be fired, half-masting the colors at the firing of the first gun.

The remains were received on board under a salute from the marine guard, the officers and men uncovered, and the music playing a dead march.

On the afternoon of the 3d, I addressed a letter (copy marked C) to the governor, and at 10 o'clock, on the morning of the 4th, the wind being favorable, I got under way, and made sail from the harbor, the fort saluting me with 17 guns, which I returned with a like number.

I received from Captain Turner the most ready and important assistance, in disinterring and getting on board the remains; and it is, in a manner, owing to his exertions, that I was enabled to leave Trinadad in so short a time, which was very desirable, the rainy season not being over, and the place, consequently, sickly. My return passage has been longer than I expected, owing to frequent calms in the Caribbean sea, and a succesion of northwest gales on the coast.

The Lexington having, for the last six months, been almost constantly at sea, and in every variety of climate, requires to be thoroughly overhauled before going on another cruise.

A.

Captain Shubrick to Sir Ralph James Woodford, Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Island of Trinidad.

UNITED STATES SHIP LEXINGTON, November 1, 1826.

I have the honor to make known to your excellency the arrival in the harbor of Port Spain of the United States ship Lexington, under my command.

Having being charged by my government with the melancholy duty of conveying to his native country the remains of Commodore Perry, I have anchored in this harbor for that purpose; and I pray that your excellency will enable me to carry into execution the views of my government, by granting me permission to disinter and take from the island the said remains.

I have the honor to forward herewith a letter for your excellency, entrusted to my charge by his Majesty's minister near the Government of the United States.

B.

Copy of a letter from Sir Ralph Woodford, Governor of the Island of Trinidad, to Captain William C. Shubrick.

ST. ANN, November 2, 1826.

I have had the honor to receive your letter of the 1st instant, acquainting me of your arrival, in the United States ship Lexington, for the purpose of receiving and conveying to his native country the remains of the late Commodore Perry.

In conceding the request, made in the name of your government, I have to assure you of my readiness to afford every assistance to the object of your commission that you may consider to depend upon me.

I have also to acknowledge the receipt of the letter of his Majesty's minister at Washington, entrusted to your care, and to express the satisfaction it will afford me to receive you at my residence during your stay in the island.

C.

Captain William B. Shubrick to Governor Ralph James Woodford.

U. S. SHIP LEXINGTON, November 3, 1826.

Having received the remains of the late Commodore Porter on board, I am about to leave the harbor of Port Spain, and I avail myself of this occasion to express to your excellency my sense of, and to tender my thanks for, your kind attentions during my stay at the island under your excellency's government.

I shall take great pleasure in making known to my goverment the generous facilities afforded me by your excellency in the execution of my melancholy commission.

O.

COPIES AND EXTRACTS FROM THE CORRESPONDENCE OF COMMODORE JOHN RODGERS.

Extract of instructions from Commodore John Rodgers to David Deacon, Esq., commanding United States sloop Erie, dated—

U. S. SHIP NORTH CAROLINA, Port Mahon, February 18, 1826.

The United States Ship Erie, under your command, being ready for sea, I have to desire that you proceed with her to the Archipelago for the protection of our commerce in that sea, and particularly that to and from Smyrna, which is so important as to forbid its being neglected, in the present state of the war subsisting between the Turks and Greeks, for a single day. The season of the year is rapidly approaching when danger is most to be apprehended from such small craft as have hitherto committed piracies among the islands of the Archipelago, under the Greek flag.

On leaving this, in order to obtain such information as will enable you to afford the most effectual protection to our trade, you will proceed direct to Smyrna, where, on your arrival, I would recommend your consulting our consul, Mr. Offley, by whose advice and information you will be able to afford it the most ample and extensive protection.

In the performance of your duties your own judgment will point out to you the necessity of abstaining from, yourself, and preventing in all others under your command, the commission of any act which might tend in the slightest degree to compromit the neutrality of the United States.

Should it be found unsafe to permit vessels to leave Smyrna without convoy, you will afford it to such a distance west of the Island of Serigo as to ensure their safety, returning again to Smyrna as soon as the nature of the service you are on, and the information you may receive from any other quarter requiring your attention, will permit.

Extracts of a letter from Captain David Deacon to Commodore John Rodgers, dated—

U. S. SHIP ERIE, Smyrna, March 18, 1826.

In compliance with your order, bearing date 18th February, 1826, I proceeded with this ship for the Archipelago, and have great pleasure of informing you of my safe arrival, with all the American vessels I have met with, at this anchorage.

On the 1st of March, fell in with, supplied with fuel, and took under convoy the American brig Seaman, belonging to New York, bound to Smyrna.

On the 7th, fell in with, supplied with water, and took under convoy the American brig Smyrna, bound to Smyrna.

The Greeks have retaliated on the Austrians by capturing three vessels said to be loaded with stores for the Turks; this happened a few days ago, at Milo; two Greek brigs boarded the convoy under two Austrian brigs; the Austrians told the Greeks that if they persisted they should fire into them; the Greeks answered, very well, they were ready to return it; the Austrians then called on a Dutch frigate for assistance, but the Dutchman declined interfering; in the meantime the Greeks carried the Austrian merchantmen over to Napoli di Romania. I overhauled one of the Hydra cruisers in the Bay of Smyrna; he had boats out capturing everything Turkish; I observed to him the vessels astern were my convoy, and Americans; he said we were then good friends, and he would always treat them well.

Extract of a letter from Commodore John Rodgers to the Secretary of the Navy, dated—

U. S. SHIP NORTH CAROLINA, Gibraltar Bay, May 13, 1826.

The Erie, if her crew will not consent to re-enter for a longer term, and which I am led to think very doubtful, I shall be obliged to send to the United States, the necessity of which I shall regret, particularly at this time, as the war between Greece and the Porte seems now to be drawing to a crisis; and unless Russia declares war against the latter, (as some think she will,) or England and the principal continental powers interpose as mediators between her and the Ottoman government, (as others seem inclined to believe they will do,) the unfortunate Greeks will be obliged, it is thought, to have recourse to increased acts of piracy, and, in this event, that the commission of such acts will not be, as heretofore, confined to small boats only.

Should such a change take place prior to my departure for the Archipelago (for which I shall depart to-morrow) as to render the presence of more than a sloop-of-war necessary, I shall leave the Constitution there, with the Ontario, until the affairs of Greece assume such a shape as to permit one or both of these vessels to be drawn from that quarter, without risk. It is confidently believed, if the Greeks lose Missolonghi, that they cannot maintain themselves in the Morea, and that, in such an event taking place, they will be obliged to seek refuge among the barren islands of the Archipelago, where, to avoid starvation, a large portion of the population will necessarily be forced to turn pirates.

Copy of instructions to Master Commandant John R. Nicholson, United States ship Ontario, from Commodore John Rodgers, dated—

U. S. SHIP NORTH CAROLINA, Harbor of Milo, August 21, 1826.

In the present state of the war between the Porte and Greece, it has become absolutely necessary that one vessel-of-war, at least, should be kept in the Archipelago, for the protection of our commerce; and, in consequence thereof, I am induced to assign to the Ontario, under your command, that duty.

In the performance of this service you will have a delicate part to act. It will be expected of you to exercise much vigilance, and, at the same time, much discretion; for whilst, on the one hand, you will be required to afford to our merchant vessels trading in those seas the most ample protection the force under your command will admit of, it will be equally expected that you abstain from meddling with the affairs of either of the parties at war, from giving to other nations (beyond what your duty requires in the suppression of piracy) the protection of our flag, and from intermingling its name, or identifying its character or our commercial interests, with those of any nation, in any way that might compromit ourselves by affecting the neutral position we have hitherto sustained, and which it is the desire of our government most earnestly still to maintain. You will keep me informed of your own proceedings, by every opportunity that offers, as well as of everything of a political nature that may transpire in this quarter, which you may think it desirable for me to be apprised of.

Mr. Offley, our consul at Smyrna, with whom you will confer from time to time as to the mode most likely to ensure to our commerce the necessary protection, will, on your requisitions, furnish such few stores and provisions as you may stand in need of, to pay for which, and to meet the other necessary disbursements of the ship, I have furnished your purser with bills on London to the amount of £1,000 sterling—calculated to produce about $5,000—and $4,000 loaned him by my authority, by the purser of this ship, together making about $9,000, exclusive of the funds previously remaining in his hands. When there are no American vessels at Smyrna requiring convoy, you will do well by spending a portion of your time at Milo, and occasionally running out as far as Cape St. Angelo and Cerigo, to meet and afford protection to such as may be bound to Smyrna. Until the warm weather is over, I would advise your not remaining at Smyrna for any length of time.

Copy of a letter from Commodore John Rodgers to the Hon. the Secretary of the Navy, dated—

U. S. Ship North Carolina, Port Mahon, September 11, 1826.

My letters of the 25th and 28th June last, from Smyrna, by the brig General Boliver, bound to Boston, will have made you acquainted with the movements and proceedings of the squadron, up to that time, and this, together with the accompanying communication, dated at Vourla, the 18th of July, (marked A,) but which I have had no opportunity of sending until now, will put you in possession of its movements and employment subsequently to that date. On the 22d of July, three days after my return to Vourla from an excursion to the Dardanelles, with this ship, the Constitution, Ontario, and Porpoise, (for the particulars of which permit me to refer you to the accompanying letter of the 18th of July,) the Erie joined me, having been employed, during her separation from the other vessels of the squadron, in convoying the brig General Bolivar clear of the islands. On the 10th of last month, finding the term of service of the crew of the Erie was about to expire, I dispatched her under orders to communicate with the consulates of Tripoli and Algiers, and to proceed from the latter place to Mahon, there to replenish her provisions and water, and wait my arrival for orders to return to the United States. On the 11th, the day after the departure of the Erie, I sailed with this ship, the Constitution, Ontario, and Porpoise, for the Island of Milo, and taking a circuitous route, by Mytilene, Scio, Negropont, and Cape Colonna, arrived and anchored at Milo on the 15th, at which, as the communication between the Morea and it is more frequent than with any other island in the Archipelago, I continued until the 21st ultimo, for the purpose of obtaining the latest and most correct information possible, in regard to the actual situation of Greece, before my final departure from that sea. The day I left Milo, after getting to sea, I parted company with the Ontario, which vessel I have stationed in the Archipelgo, with instructions to her commander, of which the enclosed is a copy, marked B, to protect our commerce in that quarter. On leaving the Archipelago, I shaped a course for Malta, having directed Mr. Henry, our consul at Gibraltar, to send all letters for the squadron, that might come to his hands, in time to reach that place by the first of September. On arriving off Malta, which was on the 29th ultimo, I sent a boat in to communicate with Mr. Pulis, our consul, and bring off any letters which might have reached him.

I now learnt from him that the mail of the August packet, which usually arrives between the 25th and 31st of the month, was still due, and thinking it probable that Mr. Henry might have received letters from the Department for me, during my absence, and have forwarded them by the packet, I made sail for Mahon, accompanied by the Constitution, leaving the Porpoise to wait the arrival of the packet, until the 8th instant, to bring such letters as might have been forwarded by her from Gibraltar.

I reached this port yesterday, in company with the Constitution, where I found the Erie, she having arrived here six days before.

The enclosed copies of Captain Deacon's letter, and the letters of Mr. Shaler and Mr. Morillo, Nos. 1, 2, 3, (the latter left by Mr. Anderson in charge of the affairs of the American consulate at Tripoli) will show the peaceable footing on which we stand with those two regencies.

The Erie is now replenishing her water and provisions, and as soon as she is ready for sea I shall dispatch her for New York, to receive your orders for the discharge of her crew.

She is a fine ship, and will require but little expense to equip again for sea; and as the services of more than one vessel of her class will be necessary for the protection of our trade in the Archipelago, so long as that sea continues infested, as it now is, by pirates, I hope you may find it soon convenient to send her, or some other sloop to supply her place, on this station.

No robberies have, as yet, been committed upon any American vessels since the first appearance of the squadron in the Archipelago, notwithstanding those of every other nation have suffered more or less; even the English and French, of late, have had several vessels plundered, and some of very valuable cargoes, notwithstanding the former has six or seven vessels-of-war, and the latter nine or ten in that sea.

The Austrians, although they keep as many as ten or twelve sail constantly at Smyrna and among the islands, have had upwards of fifty vessels plundered during the last six months; in one or two instances the crew of the vessel has been murdered.

After dispatching the Erie for the United States, I shall leave here (on the arrival of the Porpoise from Malta) for Gibraltar, to supply the pursers of the several vessels with the necessary sums of money, on account of pay for the next six months, and to purchase such few articles of stores as are not sent from the United States.

The officers and crews of the vessels of the squadron have been peculiarly healthy during the past summer, there not having been a single death among the officers, and only four, out of upwards of 1,800 men, since we left Gibraltar.

Copy of a letter of Wm. Shaler, Esq., enclosing extract from journal of consulate at Algiers, to Commodore John Rodgers, commanding U. S. naval forces in the Mediterranean.

Algiers, August 30, 1826.

I had the honor to receive your letter of the 10th inst., by Captain Deacon. I, herewith enclosed, send you a transcript of the journal of this consulate, which contains everything of any moment since your departure from Algiers. I also send, by Captain Deacon, a copy of a book which I lately published in the United States, on this country, which please to accept as a mark of my friendly consideration.

Extract from the journal kept in the consulate of the United States in Algiers, from the 1st to the 25th, inclusive, of August, 1826.

August 3. Sailed the Algerine squadron on a cruise, consisting of five schooners of 22, 14, and 6 guns. It is believed they are destined against Spanish commerce.

August 18. Arrived this morning an Algerine cruiser accompanied by a large ship, supposed to be her prize. The Dutch consul was early informed that this vessel was of his nation, and at 9 o'clock he visited the minister of marine and conversed with the captain of the ship. He informed the consul that this vessel, measuring 500 tons, belonged to Curacoa, was owned by himself, a citizen of that island, and that her cargo was principally American; that she had sailed from Curacoa to Campeachy in Mexico, where she was laden with Campeachy wood, her present cargo, and was bound for Marseilles; and that when within 60 miles of that port was captured by the Algerine squadron because she was not provided with a Mediterranean pass. The minister remarked to the consul that, according to the ancient usages of Algiers, a vessel found navigating the Mediterranean, without this passport, was liable to confiscation. The consul replied that the absence of this passport might be reason for bringing in a friendly vessel for examination, but furnished no right to condemn. He had examined the ship's papers, had found her to be the property of a Dutch citizen, and he therefore formally demanded restitution.

The minister deferred his decision.

August 19. All the dragomans were called to the marine and directed to invite their respective consuls to a divan, to be held to-morrow, to decide upon the legality of the prize, and to be composed of the raises, or captains of the Algerine navy and the corps consulaire.

August 20. At eleven o'clock this morning the consular corps assembled at the marine, where were also present the Algerine captains, The minister, addressing the Dutch consul, said the subject of the prize ship would now be discussed.

The consul premised, by formally declaring that the legality of a Dutch prize was a question which in nowise affected the representatives of other powers, and to a decision of which they were not competent. But, denying their jurisdiction, the consul did not object to the expression of their opinions, as to the nationality of the vessel. Her papers being found to be in the usual form, the consul formally demanded restitution. The treaty of Holland with the regency was then read, which stipulates that, in such cases as the present, the vessel should be liberated, but the cargo confiscated. This brought the cargo into discussion, a part of which appeared to be the property of citizens of the United States. The United States consul made a like preliminary declaration as the Dutch consul, of the incompetency of the divan to judge a case between the regency and the United States.

The bills of lading having been examined, the larger part of the cargo was found to have been shipped on account of merchants in Boston. This the consul formally claimed as American property. For the lesser part of the cargo he made no demands, as the evidence of its being American property was not sufficient, but said that he would write for information, and, if proved to be such, he would claim of the regency.

To the demand of the consul upon the larger part of the cargo, the minister made two objections: 1st. Informality; as the bill of lading did not declare the owners to be citizens of the United States. 2d. Insufficiency; because this paper did not prove the property to be American. The cargo must therefore be detained, till it could be verified by more abundant proof.

To the first objection the consul replied, that it was not usual or necessary to identify the owners' citizenship; that, in the present case, being merchants of Boston, they were protected by our laws. To the second he answered, that commercial usages knew of no other proofs of property laden on vessels; that no greater was now required or would be sought. He therefore demanded the restitution of that part of the cargo, as being absolutely American property. The minister rejoined, we have suspicions of its being Spanish property; if you are assured of its American ownership, give us your personal responsibility for it, if, eventually, it should be ascertained to be Spanish; otherwise the cargo must be confiscated. The consul declined this proposition peremptorily. He could not consent to personal responsibility for what he was bound to protect from official duty, but was willing to give his receipt for the property, which by the bill of lading appeared to be bona fide American.

This being refused, he warned the minister not to confiscate this part of the cargo, as it would become his duty to claim it with damages. The minister then requested the Danish consul to pronounce the confiscation of the property. It was accordingly declared. The consul at a late hour dispatched his dragoman to the palace, to demand an audience of the Dey, which was granted, with the request of his highness that it should be held the same evening.

The consul, accompanied by the secretary of the consulate, repaired to the palace at 4 o'clock P. M. The consul addressing the Dey said, he was doubtless well informed of all the circumstances connected with the prize ship lately brought to this port, and of the grounds upon which a part of her cargo was claimed as American. His highness replied, that the only difficulty presented to the restitution of the American part of the cargo was the insufficiency of proof to verify it; that he well knew the stipulations of the late treaty of Algiers with the United States, for he was not, as other Deys, unable to read, and would most scrupulously observe them. If the most precious cargo of the Indies were brought here, and proved to be American, it should be esteemed sacred, and immediately restored. But in the present case there exist suspicions of the truth of the bill of lading, and which of itself is not sufficient evidence of ownership. To assure ourselves, we require of you, as an act of official duty, to give us your personal obligation to answer our demands, if the cargo be ultimately proved not to be American.

To the arguments and demands of his highness the consul replied, that no property floating on the seas was accompanied by other or more explicit papers than was the cargo in question; it was fully identified as American, and, as such, he claimed it.

The present controversy of the regency with Spain created no right to vex the property of friends, under pretext of searching for that of the enemy. Whatever suspicions his highness might entertain of the ownership, it was not for the consul to remove them, but by declaring the proof to be legal and regular.

The demand of his highness for the personal guaranty of the consul was inconsistent with the nature and dignity of his office. If the property were detained, it would become his duty to report to his government, and to the United States naval commander in the Mediterranean, when he would be required to claim it with damages. After some further conversation, in which the Dey expressed the elevated sentiments of a just and magnanimous prince, he agreed to liberate the property named, and accept the receipt which was this morning proposed to the minister of marine.

August 21. The minister determined this morning to unload the ship in search of any articles not expressed in the manifest. He had actually taken off one lighter load, when, upon the representation of the Dutch consul, he was satisfied to receive the captain's declarations to the truth of his manifest.

The vessel and cargo being liberated, they will sail on the 24th instant.

Copy of the receipt given by the consul to the minister of marine.

I, William Shaler, consul general of the United States in Algiers, declare that a portion of the cargo of the Dutch vessel, the Curacoa, captured and brought into this port by cruisers of the regency, which, according to the bill of lading copied below, appears to be bona fide the property of American citizens, has, by order of his highness, the Bashaw, been delivered over to me, in conformity with the sixth article of the treaty subsisting between the United States and Algiers.

BILL OF LADING.

Shipped, in good order, and well conditioned, by John L. McGregor, per order of Cushing Stetson, on board the Dutch ship called the Curacoa, whereof Cushing Stetson is master, now lying in the port of Campeachy, and bound for Gibraltar, and a market, to say: Six thousand seven hundred and twenty pounds logwood, for account of Messrs. William Thompson & Co. and Z. G. Lamsen, Boston, being marked and numbered as in the margin, and are to be delivered in like good order and condition, at the port of discharge, (the dangers of the sea excepted) unto order, or assigns, he or they paying freight for the said logwood, with primage and average accustomed. In witness whereof, the master or purser of said vessel hath affirmed to twelve bills of lading, all of this tenor and date, one of which being accomplished, the others to remain void. Dated in Campeachy, the 18th of May, 1826. Weight not accountable; all on board to be delived.

CUSHING STETSON.

ENDORSEMENT.

CAMPECHY, May 17, 1826.

The within logwood is to be held subject to the order of Messrs. Henry & McCall, merchants, Gibraltar, until payment be made of two thousand nine hundred and five dollars and eighteen and three-fourth cents, being amount advanced by John L. McGregor on said logwood.

CUSHING STETSON.

JOHN L. MCGREGOR.

In testimony of which I have hereunto affixed my hand and seal of office, in the city of Algiers, this 23d day August, 1826.

WILLIAM SHALER.

Copy of a letter from J. Morillo, Esq., chargé d'affaires of the United States consulate, to Captain Deacon, United States ship Erie, dated—

TRIPOLI, August 18, 1826.

I have received your communication of yesterday's date, requesting to know the actual state of our political relations with this regency.

In answer to which, I have the pleasure to assure you that our interests continue in the most favorable state with the Bashaw and his government. His highness has at all times shown the most friendly disposition towards the United States, as well as to me individually, and to every one connected with the consulate.

P.

COPIES AND EXTRACTS FROM THE CORRESPONDENCE OF COMMODORE ISAAC HULL.

Extract of a letter from Commodore Isaac Hull to the Secretary of the Navy, dated—

U. S. FRIGATE UNITED STATES, Chorillos, Peru, December 21, 1825.

The Dolphin having been dispatched on a long cruise to the Mulgrave Islands, and the Peacock having been constantly on service, and it appearing to me of the first importance that the commerce and citizens of the United States should not be left without proper protection, whilst our ships are compelled to discharge their valuable cargoes in an open roadstead, such as Chorillos, where they are exposed to many difficulties from the heavy swell that is constantly setting in, and scarcely a day passes, but some of the ships require assistance of some kind.

For the last eight or ten months there have been constantly in the Bay of Chorillos from ten to thirty valuable American merchant ships, with valuable cargoes, lying in a situation where they had no protection from the shore, as there is not a gun mounted in the place.

Situated as our commerce has been on this station, and it having been generally believed that a Spanish force would be sent out to relieve the garrison at Callao, and in the event of which, our ships would be still more exposed, I hope you will consider sufficient reasons for my remaining here, and not having left the station for the purpose directed in your letter.

The moment the castles of Callao are given up, and our ships can lie in safety in the bay, I shall lose no time in visiting Chili, for the purpose of executing your instructions, or before, if it can be done consistently with the public interest.

Extract of a letter from Commodore Isaac Hull to the Secretary of the Navy, dated—

U. S. Frigate United States, Callao Bay, December 30, 1825.

Our commerce is very much exposed, and would be more so in the event of an attempt being made by the Spanish government to relieve the garrison at Callao, by sending out a force for that purpose; nor should I consider it proper to leave the coast, at the moment the English and French are increasing their forces. The French have now eight sail of ships-of-war at Valparaiso, consisting of frigates, sloops-of-war and schooners. The British have one line of battle ship, and several frigates and sloops-of-war—in all, six or eight sail, and neither England or France have as many merchant ships on the coast as we have; under all these circumstances, my present intention is to send the Peacock to the Sandwich Islands. Captain Jones is an excellent and humane man, and an intelligent officer; and I am sure will do all that can be required of him.

In the event of his going, I shall furnish him with a copy of your letter, and call his particular attention to your wishes.

The Peacock is now at Valparaiso. By the time she returns, and the Dolphin joins me, some changes may take place, that will allow this ship to leave the coast without injury to the service.

General La Mar arrived last evening from Guayaquil, to take the command of Lima. He is said to be an excellent man, and much good is anticipated from his government. I had the pleasure of landing him and his family with my boats; and, I have great pleasure in saying, that I am on the best terms, not only with the officers of government here, but with the commanders of the foreign ships that are on this station; they invariably treat our officers with attention and great respect. As yet, not the slightest unpleasant occurrence has taken place between our officers and those of other ships-of-war.

Copy of a letter from Commodore Isaac Hull to the Secretary of the Navy, dated—

U. S. Frigate United States, Callao Bay, December 31, 1825.

I have the honor to forward herewith a copy of the boarding book of this ship, which will show, in an imperfect manner, the number and description of vessels that have been boarded.

Soon after I arrived in this sea, I endeavored to get at, not only the number and description of vessels arriving at the different ports, but the amount of their cargoes, and every particular relating to them, agreeably to the form of the boarding book, but I found it impracticable; for the captains and the supercargoes would not give the information required; indeed, many of them took offence, on being asked many of the questions by the boarding officer, and wanted to know what business I had to inquire about the cost of their cargoes; and it frequently happened that they would not inform the officer what the cargo consisted of; indeed, very few of them would give the information asked.

The list, however, imperfect as it is, will give you some idea of the extent of our commerce on this coast; and have to regret that it has not been in my power to furnish you with a more correct view of it.

A list of merchant vessels boarded by the United States frigate United States, Isaac Hull, commander, during the period from March 30, 1824, to December, 1825.

Where boarded.	When boarded.	Vessel's name.	Master's name.	Owners' names.	Where built or belonging.	Lading.	Number of—			Where from.	Whither bound.
							Tons.	Men.	Guns.
	1824.
Valparaiso	March 30	Ship Eagle	Kelly	Starbuck	Nantucket	Sperm oil	250	22	.....	Whale voyage	Nantucket.
do	do	Potosi	R. Baldwin	.....	New York	Flour and sundries	300	.....	.....	New York
do	do	Tartar	Thos. R. Gerry	Bryant & Sturgis	Boston	Flour and dry goods	300	.....	.....	Boston
Callao	May 2	Potosi	R. Baldwin	.....	New York	Flour and sundries	370	11	.....	Valparaiso
do	May 3	Brig Gratitude	.....	.....	Liverpool	Whiskey	.....	.....	.....	do	Callao.
do	May 8	Ship Providence	Bowers	E. Carrington & Co	Providence	Ballast	350	15	2	Coquimbo	do do	May 10	China	Wm. Putnam	Jos. Peabody	Salem	Flour and dry goods	370	.....	.....	.....
do	do	Brig Winifred	C. W. Gelston	C. W. Gelston	Alexandria	Ballast	.....	.....	.....	.....
do	do	Peru	W. Johnson, jr	Steph & Philips	Salem	Flour and dry goods	187	6	2	Quilca	Callao.
do	do	G. P. Stephenson	W. Pacill	Isaac Mann	Baltimore	.....	240	8	.....	Baltimore	do do	do	Ship America	Dickoven	Tibbitts & Whitney	New York	Flour and dry goods	447	28	4	New York	do do	do	Brig Frederick	James Penney	Tudor	Stonington	Ballast	147	10	.....	do	Pisco.
do	May 11	Ship Clara	John Jones	James Bosley	Baltimore	Flour, bread, &c.	297	16	.....	Baltimore	Callao.
do	May 14	Brig Dragon	Chiswell	Pat. Mulleston	do	Rice and cocoa	167	.....	.....	Huanchaco	do do	May 19	Hebe	Nickson	Wm. Guthrie	London	Tallow	229	13	2	California	do do	May 21	Col. Young	Henry Potter	James Goldia	Calcutta	Ballast	200	11	4	Valparaiso	do do	May 27	Ship Tartar	Gerry	Bryan & Sturgis	Boston	Flour and dry goods	300	.....	.....	Coquimbo	do do	June 4	Brig La Pera	.....	.....	.....	Ballast	.....	.....	.....	Pisco	do do	do	Nancy	Charles Sumner	Field & Edenton	New York	do	141	.....	.....	Huasco	Valdivia.
do	do	Ship J. Beggs	John Jenkins	John Beggs	Lima	Dry goods	154	17	2	St. Blas	Callao.
do	June 11	Earl Wellington	Potts	do	do	do	130	.....	.....	Valparaiso	do do	June 14	Isabella	Lindsay	C. Silk	London	General cargo	225	14	.....	do	do do	June 20	Earl Egrement	R. Johnson	Johnson	do	Flour	230	14	2	do	do do	do	Peruvian	W. Dalling	W. Dalling	.....	Dry goods	216	15	6	do	do do	do	Andes	King	T. & J. Brockley	.....	do	208	15	.....	Quilca	do do	June 25	Grecian	Halbour	Halbour	Baltimore	Cheese and vegetables	230	13	4	Valparaiso	do do	do	Minerva	Lambert	W. & T. Roach & Co	Beaufort, S. C.	General cargo	230	12	.....	do	do do	June 26	Britannia	Lorton	Thomas Stage	England	Oil	310	24	1	do	do do	July 2	Duncan Forbes	A. Lovid	Alexander Forbes	Aberdeen	Wheat	134	8	.....	Quilca	do do	do	Antelope	Rennowsay	Dowsons	London	Produce of Mexico	157	10	6	Ct. of Mexico	do do	do	Royal Sovereign	R. H. Dare	R. H. Dare	Margate	Sugar rice and indigo	100	8	2	Sansanta	Valparaiso.
Huanchaco	July 27	Fiposhire	Robinson	Robinson	London	Rice	144	12	2	Guyaquil	Huanchaco.
do	July 28	Brig Fortuna	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	Callao	do do	do	Camden	Porter	Harrison	Calcutta	Salt	131	12	.....	Huasco	do
Callao	August 17	Liberty	N. Hurd	Jesse Hurd	Chatham, Ct.	Wine and dry goods	289	20	.....	Havre de Grace.	do do	do	Gov. Clinton	Bassett	N. L. & P. Griswold	New York	Flour and dry goods	383	20	.....	Valparaiso	do do	August 17	Cadet	Woodbury	J. Hubbot	Boston	Wax	207	12	4	do	Manilla.

A list of merchant vessels boarded—Continued.

Where boarded.	When boarded.	Vessel's name.	Master's name.	Owners' names.	Where built or belonging.	Lading.	Number of—			Where from.	Whither bound.
							Tons.	Men.	Guns.
	1824.
Callao	August 17	Ship Neptune	Land	Miff, Colhoun & Co	Philadelphia	Flour and rice	292	13	.....	Huacho	Callao
do	August 23	Canada	John H	B. Messick	Baltimore	Rice and tobacco	216	14	2	Huacho	do do	August 24	Lively	Hasting	Heath	London	Aguardiente	50	6	.....	Pisco	do do	do	America	Tibbet	S. Whitney	New York	Ballast	447	26	4	Huanchaco	do do	September 5	Tuscan	.....	....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	Samanca	do do	September 21	Livonia	Murphy	....	London	Dry goods	170	11	.....	Huacho	do do	September 24	Wabash	John M'Cay	James Bosley	Baltimore	Sundries	312	11	2	Quilca	Canton
do	September 28	Duncan Forbes	Al. Lovid	Alex. Forbes	Aberdeen	Wheat	134	7	.....	Huacho	Callao
do	October 1	Chevy Chase	Murphy	Brothers & Bogg	London	.....	53	6	.....	Huacho	Pisco
do	do	Fame	Urquhart	....	Liverpool	General cargo	167	13	.....	Liverpool	Callao
do	October 2	North Point	W. Patten	Donnell & Son	Baltimore	Sundries	480	22	4	Baltimore	do do	October 4	Brig Antelope	Reynoldson	Dowson & Co	London	Pisco	157	10	6	Pisco	To Leeward
do	October 6	James Laurence	Ford.	Henry Pratt	Philadelphia	Sundries	209	6	.....	Pisco
do	October 7	Peruvian	W. Darling	W. Darling	Liverpool	Aguardiente	248	16	4	Pisco
do	October 8	Leopold	Hunter	Cochran	Leith	Dry goods	186	9	2	Valparaiso	Callao
do	October 12	President	Whooten	A Massey & Co	Philadelphia	Sundries	177	14	2	Valparaiso	do
do	October 15	Dragon	Chiswell	Pat. Mullison	Liverpool	Pisco	167	6	.....	Pisco	Huacho
do	October 18	Erin	.....	....	.....	.....	.....	.....	....	.....
do	October 20	Ship Lion	Green	....	Portsmouth	Sundries	337	10	.....	Baltimore	Callao
Huancho	October 25	Henry	Davis	....	Portsmouth, N. H.	.....	300	11	.....	Baltimore	do do	do	Isabella	Lindsay	C. Silk	London	Salt	225	14	.....	.....	Valparaiso
Callao	October 29	Brig Bolivar	Buchanan	Cochran & Son	Glasgow	Sundries	204	14	1	St. Lorenzo	St. Lorenzo
do	do	Sloop Success	A. Liman	Geo. Ross	London	Cocoa	28	4	.....	Huacho	Pisco
do	do	Brig Erin	Mullaid	Wm. Brown	Liverpool	General cargo	188	12	.....	Huacho	Callao
do	do	Rimack	Beckford	Alsop	New York	Cocoa	113	8	.....	Huacho	do do	do	Velocity	S. Brooks	H. Stantion	London	Sundries	151	10	.....	Valparaiso	do do	November 3	Elizabeth	R. Snowden	R. Snowden	Liverpool	Flour	180	10	.....	Pisco	do do	do	Lavinia	J. Murphy	J. Murphy	Liverpool	Pisco	137	10	.....	Valparaiso	do do	November 9	America	Eldridge	....	Philadelphia	Flour and provisions	296	14	2	Philadelphia	do
Ancon	November 15	Bolivar	.....	....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
At sea	December 11	Cora	.....	....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	Pisco	Ancon
Callao	December 14	Nautilus	Cunan	Geo. Nash & Co	Salem	Provisions, &c	252	14	3	Valparaiso	do do	December 18	Snipe	Haig	....	Calcutta	Copper	223	23	6	Copiopo	Calcutta
do	December 19	Enterprise	Clark	W. Bottomly	Lynn	Sundries	184	11	.....	Ancon	Chorillos 1825.
Chorillos	January 1	Olive Branch	Hutton	P. P. Ritchie	London	Provisions	204	.....	.....	.....	do

A list of merchant vessels boarded—Continued.

Where boarded.	When boarded.	Vessel's name.	Masters' name.	Owners' name.	Where built or belonging.	Lading.	Number of—			Where from.	Whither bound.
							Tons.	Men.	Guns.
	1825.
Chorillos	January 11	Brig Livonia	Wilson	Rd. Hodge	Sunderland	Bread and fruit	216	12	.....	Valparaiso	Chorillos.
do	January 15	Packet	S. Tyler	Brown & Leg	Providence	Sundries	205	7	4	Quilca	do do	do	Ship Jane	Galager	Archer & Bispham	Philadelphia	do	327	18	2	do	do do	do	Brig Laura	Holman	John Derby	Salem	Flour and dry goods	200	12	2	do	do do	do	Ship Panther	Austin	J. C. Ellison	Boston	Flour, &c	450	29	14	Boston	Coast of Peru.
Callao	January 17	Portia	Silliman	Silliman	Charleston	Flour	272	14	.....	Valparaiso	Callao.
Chorillos	January 21	Dragon	Chiswell	G. Mollison	Liverpool	Pisco	176	10	.....	Pisco	Chorillos.
do	January 23	Rubicon	Patterson	.....	New York	Provisions	143	11	2	do	Lima.
do	February 12	Leopold	Woodbury	Wm. Cochran	.....	General cargo	196	13	2	do	Chorillos.
do	February 14	Tartar	Gerry	Bryant & Sturges	Boston	Ballast	400	9	6	Quilca	do do	do	Sereno	Hodges	Fish & Bridges	Boston	do	207	10	.....	Guayaquil	do do	February 18	Elizabeth	Rios	Peru	Chorillos	Soldiers	.....	.....	.....	Pisco	do do	do	Enterprise	Clark	Bottomly	Lynn	do	184	12	.....	do	do do	February 19	Clio	Jackson	....	Boston	Leather	.....	.....	.....	Huacho
do	February 15	Minerva	Lombard	W. Rock & Co	New Bedford	Ballast	230	.....	.....	do do	do	Heroine	Wm. Heath	Benj. Banks	Scituate, Mass	.....	337	14	4	Boston	Boston.
do	do	Brig Carlo	Hall	N. B. Gram	New York	Flour	225	8	2	Philadelphia	Uncertain.
do	do	Ship Portia	Silliman	Silliman	Charleston	do	272	15	1	Alexandria	Gibraltar.
do	do	Brig Active	Neal	W. P. Richardson	Salem	.....	211	12	2	Salem	Uncertain.
do	do	Sereno	Hodges	Fish & Bridges	Boston	Ballast	207	11	.....	Boston	do do	do	Geo. Gardner	Davidson	Messick & Johnson	Baltimore	Assorted cargo	344	16	2	Baltimore	do do	do	Ship Alfred	Zuill	Peter Harmony	New York	do	232	16	.....	New York	Unknown.
do	do	Arethusa	Merrille	Thos. Sheaf	Portsmouth	do	319	15	1	Baltimore	Uncertain.
do	do	Brig Colon	Ford	I. Thorndike	Boston	do	208	12	2	do	Arica.
do	do	Nautilus	Curren	Nichols & Co	Salem	Flour	268	10	3	do	Uncertain.
do	do	Ship Wm. Penn	Smith	W. Patterson & Co	Baltimore	do	305	11	4	do	do do	do	Jane	Galager	Archer & Bispham	Philadelphia	Sundries	327	18	2	Philadelphia	do do	do	Gen. Brown	Copland	Eckford & Harmony	New York	Assorted	550	26	2	New York	do do	do	Tartar	Gerry	Bryant & Sturges	Boston	Ballast	402	13	6	Canton	Canton.
do	do	Brig Garnet	Lewis	Ross & Brintnall	Boston	do	215	.....	.....	Boston	Uncertain.
do	February 21	Sch. Britannia	Brown	Weeks & Birch	Southampton	General cargo	106	8	4	Quilca	Chorillos.
do	February 24	Gen. Carreno	J. Bap. Ferand	.....	Panama	do	47	6	.....	Panama	do do	February 27	Fipshire	Frero	Robinson	London	do	145	14	2	Huacho	do do	do	Sarah and George	Gordon	E. Merrill	Portland	do	156	11	.....	Valparaiso	do do	do	Brig Nero	Herning	Nicholson	Liverpool	Jerk beef, &c	124	8	.....	do	do
Valparaiso	March 26	Olive Branch	.....	.....	.....	Salt	.....	.....	.....	Huacho	Valparaiso.
do	do	Columbia	.....	.....	Liverpool	Dry goods	.....	.....	6	Liverpool	do

A list of merchant vessels boarded—Continued.

Where boarded.	When boarded.	Vessel's name.	Master's name.	Owners' names.	Where built or belonging.	Lading.	Number of—			Where from.	Whither bound.
							Tons.	Men.	Guns.
	1825.
Valparaiso	March 29	Brig Pacific	Scott	Bacon & Richardson	Duxbury		127	11		Boston	Valparaiso
do	do	Stranger	Sumner	Ml. Hogan	New York.	Salt	230	11	3	Valdivia and	do
Coquimbo	May 18	Ship Cadmus	N. O. Carey	Israel Thorndike	Boston	Oil, 1,600 bbls	319	26	7	Eimeo..[Chiloe.	Boston.
do	May 9	Hydaspe	Paddock	Flenning	Stonington	Oil, 1,650 bbls	315	23		Wahoo	Stonington.
do	May 12	Tarquin	Banker	D. Elkin	Nantucket	Oil, 1,700 bbls	310	19		Valparaiso	Edgarton.
do	May 6	Rose	S. Cottle	J. Starbuck	do	Oil, 2,100 bbls	379	22	1	do	Nantucket.
do	May 27	Brig Carlo	Hall			Flour				Chorillos
Chorillos	June 7	Ship Superior	Andrews	Brown & Jones	Providence	Sundries	375	20	4	Valparaiso	A market.
do	do	Brig Catalina	Walters	Fanning	Peru	Rice, &c.				Lumbraco	do
do	June 8	Ship Caroline	Cheever	Jos. Roops	Salem	Flour	321	16	4	Arica	Chorillos.
do	June 9	Brig Charlotte	Gambier							Callao
do	June 11	Ellen	Simpson	D. Hollion	London	Wine	134	9	4
do	June 19	Britomart	White	S. J. & J. Somer	do	Ballast	243	14	2	Callao	do do	June 17	Adventure	Smith	Warrel	Liverpool	Merchandise	163	10		Quilca
do	June 18	Naiad	McClunie		Philadelphia	Assorted cargo	259	13	4	Arica	do do	June 23	Divan	Wm. Whatson		Liverpool	Cocoa	180	10		Guayaquil	do do	June 24	Stranger	G. White	O'Brian	New York	General cargo	225	9	1	Valparaiso	do do	do	Winifred	Wm. Burry	Esquabourn	Alexandria	Ballast	200	7		Guayaquil	do
do	June 28	Sch. Four Brothers	Anto. Frera							Pisco
do	June 29	Thalia	R. Hazzard	Hazzard	London	Spars, &c.	206	10		Arica	do do	July 1	Basteracha	Murphy				45	10		Quilca	do do	do	Brig Livonia	P. Goodlet	Patriots	London	Officers	137	6		Huacho	do do	do	Gratitude	Ml. Ariato	D. Mills	Sunderland	Sundries	155	9		Labraque	do do	July 2	Ladiago	Wm. Quick	Patriots	Guayaquil	General cargo	196	10		Guayaquil	do do	do	Jane	Kain	do		Timber, &c.				Quilca	do do	do	Antelope	Reynoldson	Dawson	South America	Indigo	157	9	6		Lima.
do	July 4	Pelica	R. McClunie	Bishenter	Liverpool	Sundries	185	14	2	Liverpool	Chorillos.
do	do	San Pedro	Roberts		Valparaiso			10		Pisco	do do	July 7	Potomac	Dexter	John H. Howland	New York.	Provisions	200	9	2	Guanchaco	do do	July 8	Lincoln	Thomas	Lincoln	Boston	Wine	210	10		St. Lorenzo	do do	do	Sch. James Monroe	Forbes	Baltimore		Sundries	171	12		Valparaiso	do do	do	Brig Sarah & Eliza	Plaskett	New York		Provisions		7		do	do do	July 11	Ship Panther	Austin	Elery	New York	do				do	do do	do	Brazilian	Hatch	Griswold	do	Sundries	240	7		Rio Janeiro	do do	do	Midas	Hutchins	Messicks	Baltimore	do	265	2		Arica	do do	July 14	Young Caledonia	McCanley	Robinson	Lima	Pisco	30	5		Pisco	do
do	July 15	Peruvian	Buckanam	Robins	do	do				do	do

A list of merchant vessels boarded—Continued.

Where boarded.	When boarded.	Vessel's name.	Master's name.	Owners' names.	Where built or belonging.	Lading.	Number of—			Where from.	Whither bound.
							Tons.	Men.	Guns.
	1825.
Chorillos	July 15	Ship Lovely Frances	Sullivan	....	London	Cococa	120	9	.....	Guayaquil	Chorillos.
do	do	Herald	Brown	Nichols	Salem	Sundries	240	16	2	Arica	do
do	July 17	Brig Merope	Weiddy	Howland	New York	do	325	20	4	Guanchaco	do do	July 21	Fatima	Christall	Ramsay	Philadelphia	do	170	10	2	do	do do	July 25	Sch. America	Eldridge	Evans	do	Rice	.....	.....	.....	do	do do	July 27	Sea Serpent	Marshall	Gomes	New York	Cocoa	.....	10	2	Guayaquil	do do	do	Clyde	Vesterham	do	Liverpool	Provisions	220	.....	.....	Valparaiso	do do	July 28	Friendship	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	do do	do	Nautilus	Curran	G. Nicholson	Salem	Ballast	.....	.....	.....	San Lorenzo	do do	July 30	Scotland	do	Findell	do	Sundries	252	13	2	Payta	do do	do	Armada	do	Gibson	Scarborough	do	146	8	.....	Quilca	do do	do	Ship London	Edwards	Edwards & Stewart	New York	do	407	32	8	Arica	do do	August 4	Brig Bolivar	Burton	.....	Liverpool	do	200	15	2	St. Blas	do do	do	Blutcher	Neil	....	do	do	200	15	2	do	do do	do	Junius	Carter	F. Bage	Greenock	Firewood	115	10	2	California	do do	August 8	Earl Wellington	Potts	W. Pottes	London	Sundries	132	11	2	Valparaiso	do do	August 9	Gen. Sucre	.....	.....	Peru	Pisco	141	8	.....	Pisco	do do	August 10	Sta. Teresa	.....	Matled	Paita	Cocoa	90	11	.....	Guayaquil	do do	do	Ed. Francis	.....	John Green	Guayaquil	.....	100	6	.....	Callao	do do	August 13	Caledonian	Holman	Bagg	Liverpool	Sundries	355	23	14	Valparaiso	do do	August 18	Sacrament	Manuel	Limbraco	.....	do	100	9	.....	.....	do do	August 21	Frederick	Penney	Nixon McCall	Connecticut	Ballast	140	10	.....	Guayaquil	do do	August 25	Rimac	Wm. Barney	Alsop	New York	Sundries	114	8	.....	Guanchaco	do do	August 29	Gov. Clinton	Hepburn	Griswold & Co	do	do	350	17	2	New York	do do	August 30	Dragon	Chiswell	Molison	Liverpool	do	176	9	.....	Lambeaque	do do	do	Eth. Ann	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	Guanchaco	do do	September 2	Mary	Laird	Scott	St. Andrew's	Sundries	190	12	1	Glasgow	do do	September 8	Fortune	Cristall	Aguya	Lima	Ballast	177	11	2	Pisco	do do	September 12	Ship Portia	Tripp	Hathaway	Valparaiso	Wheat	160	11	.....	Valparaiso	do do	September 19	Gamo	Mackey	Punster	do	Provisions	.....	6	.....	Arica	do do	September 22	Anglo Gardiner	Blanc	.....	St. Marlo	Sundries	358	18	.....	Quilca	do do	do	Brig Garnet	Lewis	Brumhall & Ross	Boston	Chili produce	195	.....	.....	Valparaiso	do do	September 26	Sch. Conception	Baker	Fernando Amito	Valparaiso	Pisco	85	7	.....	Pisco	do do	September 27	Britannia	Humphreys	.....	St. Brieux	Linen	207	9	4	Arica	do do	September 29	Cora	Dott	John Bayarbo	Chorillos	General cargo	197	10	.....	do	do do	October 3	Jane Corim	B. Junca	Ildondo & Ork	Bordeaux	Ballast	350	24	4	California	do do	October 5	Brig Active	Neale	W. P. Richard	Salem	do	211	12	2	Guayaquil	do

A list of merchant vessels boarded—Continued.

Where boarded.	When boarded.	Vessel's name.	Master's name.	Owners' name.	Where built or belonging.	Lading.	Number of—			Where from.	Whither bound.
							Tons.	Men.	Guns.
	1825.
Chorillos	October 7	Sch. Ariel	Dixon	Brookbind	Whitehaven	General cargo	114	10	2	Arica	Chorillos.
do	October 10	Sea Serpent	Marshall	Fabian Gomes	Chili	Cocoa	100	9	2	Guayaquil	do
Callao	November 3	Rio	Smith	Smith & Co		Sugar, rice, &c	250	10	4	Lambeaque	do
Chorillos	November 10	Macon	Smith	Smith	Antwerp	General cargo	200	11	2	Rio	do do	November 18	North Point	Patten	J. Donnelson	Baltimore	do	480	21	4	Arica	do do	November 20	Almado	Cross	Wm. Robinet	Guayaquil	Sundries	160	11		Guayaquil	do do	November 24	Peru	Johnson	S. C. Philips	Salem	Flour, &c	200			Valparaiso	do do	December 1	Pomona	Chas. Gaspar	Holands	London	Timber	57	6		Chiloe	do do	December 3	Sarah George	Hordon	Merrit	Portland	Cocoa	106	11	2	Guayaquil	do do	do	Flor. del Mar	Rodriguez	do	Guayaquil	Wheat				Valparaiso	do
do	December 4	Tersiana	Jenning	Gomes	Lima	Pisco				Pisco	do do	do	Rubicano	Obejo	Loro	do	Pisco	257	15		do	do do	December 6	Emerald	Salverson	Bunster	N. America		100			Valparaiso	do do	do	Fermina	Baker	Beacha	Guayaquil	Sundries	220	10		Aricon	do do	December 7	Peruvian	Prunier	Brunner	London	Wheat	121	8		Valparaiso	do do	do	Franco. Isabella	Usher	Whitehouse	do	Rice	29	4		Huanchaco	do
Salinas Bay	December 8	Success	Ross	Ross	do	Salt	75			Chorillos	Coquimbo.
do	December 11	Olive Branch									do
do	do	Diligent	Pettit		Antwerp	Salt	75			Huanchaco	Chorillos.
do	do	Thalia	Hazard		London	Salt	200				do
Huacho	December 12	Ship Peruvian	Mary	Christopher & Sons	North river	110 bbls. oil	331	22		Nantucket	Uncertain.
do	do	Gelgond	Brock	G. Howland	Scituate	10 bbls. oil	333	22		New Bedford	New Japan.
do	December 21	Elizabeth	Snow	Douglas	Baltimore	Sundries	300	11	4	Valparaiso	Chorillos.
do	December 23	Laura	Centre	Hollings	New York	do	234	13	4	do	do do	December 27	Cherub	Casson	Clint	New Castle	Wheat	200	12		Talcahuana	do do	December 28	Porter	Callan	Porter		Sundries	106	12		Arica	do do	do	Ayachuco	Murphy	Begg	Lima	do	100	12		do	do do	do	Peruvian	Salis	Pettretan & Sons		do	329	21	6	Quilca	do

Copy of a letter from Commodore Isaac Hull to the Secretary of the Navy, dated—

U. S. Frigate United States, Callao Bay, December 31, 1825.

I have had the honor to receive your two letters of 24th May last, relative to the state of affairs on this coast, and expressing a hope that, from the changes that have taken place since I have been in this sea, I could be enabled to leave the coast for the purpose of visiting the neighborhood of the Sandwich and Friendly Islands, and return by the way of the coast of California and Mexico.

I regret to state that the changes, though great, that have taken place, are not such as, at the time you wrote, might have been supposed; as, in consequence of the holding out of the castles of Callao, contrary to the expectations of every one, and directly contrary to the articles of capitulation, the situation of our commerce has not received all the benefit that we had reason to hope and believe it would, when we were first made acquainted with the surrender of the Spanish army, and the articles of capitulation that followed, as it was confidently believed that the castles of Callao would be given up, and that our ships would immediately have the benefit of the fine Bay of Callao, and the protection of the castles, when in the possession of the patriots, and that, within a very few months, there would be a settled and permanent government in Peru.

In consequence, however, of the obstinacy of General Rodil, in holding the castles of Callao, our ships have been driven from the bay, and have been compelled to discharge their cargoes in an open roadstead at Chorillos, for the last twelve months, where there is constantly a heavy swell setting in, which causes them to roll very heavy, and frequently for several days in succession boats cannot land without great danger; many boats have been stove by the violence of the surf, and many lives have been lost; and in many instances great damage has been done to the cargoes when landing, and in transporting the goods to Lima; nor have the changes in the affairs of the government of Peru been such as was anticipated, indeed it can hardly be called a government. General Bolivar has been called to the interior, and has been absent many months, and little has been done by those left in charge of the government to establish a permanent and regular form for one; little has been done but to keep up a close siege and blockade of Callao, which has been done at an immense expense, and has caused the patriots to keep up a large force before Callao, and in the neighborhood of Lima.

The congress is soon to meet at Lima, and General Le Mar arrived the day before yesterday to take the command, it is believed, civil and military, and it is believed much good will result from the changes that are about to take place.

Such has been the state of affairs for the last six months, I have considered it proper to remain at Chorillos for the protection of our merchant ships, to give them such aid as they might require, in the event of the surrender of the castles, which has been expected from day to day for the last ten or eleven months.

Should the situation of affairs in Peru and Chili remain as they now are, and have been for many months past, I shall deem it improper for this ship to leave the coast to visit the islands as directed, and as I have, in part, anticipated your wishes by sending the Dolphin the precise route pointed out by you, my present intention is, to wait her return, as she may be expected in about six weeks or two months, and ascertain the result of her cruise, and immediately dispatch the Peacock or this ship in furtherance of your orders of the 24th; much, however, will depend on the state of Peru and Chili, and the report of the Dolphin on her return, which vessel goes, this ship or the Peacock; and I most earnestly hope that, in using my best judgment and discretion, I shall decide in a way that will meet your approbation."

Copy of a letter from Commodore Isaac Hull to the Secretary of the Navy, dated—

United States Frigate United States, Callao Bay, January 24, 1826.

I have the honor herewith to forward the articles of capitulation of the castles of Callao, which have this moment been furnished to me by the politeness of Sir Murray Maxwell, commander of the Briton, now at anchor under the castles.

My officers that landed at Callao represent the town as being in a most deplorable state; many houses are entirely destroyed, and the patriots are now burying the dead from their dwellings, where they have perished for want of food; some of them appear to have been dead many days.

The Peacock is now in sight, standing for this bay, and I hope she will arrive in time for me to forward any letters or news that Captain Jones may have from Valparaiso.

The merchant ships are all at Chorillos, and will remain there until the town of Callao is in a state to open a communication with the shipping and Lima. I shall send the Peacock to Chorrills, to give our ships such aid as they may require in coming to this bay. They will all be down in three or four days."

Extract of a letter from Commodore Isaac Hull to the Secretary of the Navy, dated—

United States Frigate United States, Callao Bay, January 21, 1826.

"As the war is now at an end on this side of Cape Horn, and as, in all probability, the Spanish government will despair of ever getting a foothold, either in Chili or Peru again, I respectfully submit to you my opinion as to the force that appears to me best calculated to give protection to our commerce on this coast, in a state of peace, or until regular governments are established in Chili and Peru; for, until regular governments are established, it appears to me absolutely necessary that we should have a naval force in this sea, as, in all probability, the governments of Chili and Peru will now lay up their ships of war and discharge their crews; and as there will be no employment for them, and as the service they have been employed in for years past has been such as to give them the worst habits, and the most of them, officers as well as men, totally devoid of principle, I have no doubt but they will resort to plunder and piracy for a living, unless a force is kept on the coast to prevent it. I should, therefore, recommend one or two large sloops, and one schooner, on the coasts of Chili and Peru, and two schooners to the northward; one of them stationed on the coast of Mexico, and the other still further north. These vessels to be kept constantly moving up and down the coast, by which means our commerce would be protected, and our merchants would have a constant and safe communication with the United States, by way of Panama, and the commanding officer on the station would receive intelligence from home, by that route, much sooner than by Cape Horn.

Our commerce is daily increasing on the whole coast, and particularly by the way of Panama to Guayaquil, and along the coast to the northward; and heretofore, the state of this part of the trade has been such, and our force so limited, that a vessel could not be spared to give protection to our commerce on that coast, although frequent applications have been made by the merchants for a vessel to be sent there.

Extract of a letter from Commodore Isaac Hull to the Secretary of the Navy, dated—

UNITED STATES' FRIGATE UNITED STATES, Coquimbo, March 28, 1826.

I am convinced that our commerce has been heretofore, and will be for many months, more exposed on the coast of Peru, than at Valparaiso or on the coast of Chili. I remained at Valparaiso twenty-six days, which enabled me to accomplish the object of my visit there; and as there was no necessity for my remaining there longer, everything relating to our commerce being quiet where this ship would be of use, I sailed for this port on my way to Lima, intending to call in at all the intermediate ports, between here and that place, where our merchant ships visit.

Extract of a letter from Commodore Isaac Hull to the Secretary of the Navy, dated—

U. S. FRIGATE UNITED STATES, Callao Bay, Peru, April 25, 1826.

"I have the honor to report to you my return to this port, after an absence of nearly three months. I remained four weeks at Valparaiso; touched for a few days at the intermediate posts, (Coquimbo, Huasco, Arica and Quilca.) The three last-mentioned places I never before had it in my power to visit; they are each much frequented by our merchant vessels, and I was happy to find that our countrymen were there treated with respect.

I received every mark of civility from the authorities of the government at each place, and having visited them in this ship, will, I think, have a favorable effect.

Extract of a letter from Commodore Isaac Hull to the Secretary of the Navy, dated—

U. S. FRIGATE UNITED STATES, Callao Bay, May 26, 1826.

As this vessel sails immediately, I have only a moment to inform you that the officers and crews of this ship and the Peacock are in good health, and that nothing of recent date has taken place to interrupt our commerce on this side of the Cape. We have now a large number of valuable ships on this coast, with valuable cargoes, and I am sorry to say they have come to a bad market, and must suffer great loss.

The Peacock is under orders to proceed in execution of that part of your instructions directing me to go with this ship, or dispatch one of the vessels under my command, to the Sandwich and other islands in the Pacific ocean, for the protection of our commerce. Captain Jones is directed to run down the coast as far as Paita, for the purpose of laying in stock and other articles for his crew, which are absolutely necessary, and cannot be purchased here. From Paita he will proceed direct to the Marquesas, and remain there as long as in his judgment is necessary; and from the Marquesas he is directed to visit Otaheite and such other of the Society Islands as to him may appear necessary in furtherance of the object of his cruise; he is then to visit the Sandwich Islands, and after remaining there as long as may be necessary to accomplish the object of his visit, he is to use his discretion as to going to the coasts of California and Mexico. Should he arrive at the Sandwich Islands in time to visit the coasts of California and Mexico before the term of service of his crew shall have expired, and his ship in every other way in a condition to perform the cruise, he is ordered to do so; but should there be any uneasiness among his crew on account of their time being out, or any other circumstance that, in his opinion, the good of the service requires it, he is to return to this port from the Sandwich Islands, touching in at the ports to the northward, on the coast of Peru, to give protection to our ships that are daily leaving here for ports to the northward.

The Peacock has a healthy and fine crew, and no pains have been spared to fit her in the best possible manner for the cruise she is to perform.

(Here follows in the original documents a correspondence of Captain J. D. Elliot, of the navy, and others, relating to affairs with Brazil, which will be found in volume 6, on Foreign Relations, No. 238, from page 277 to 293, inclusive.)

Extracts from a letter from Commodore James Biddle, dated—

UNITED STATES FRIGATE MACEDONIAN, Rio Janeiro, September 11, 1826.

Your general order of 10th July last, making known the lamented death of our venerable and venerated fellow-citizen, John Adams, was received last evening by an arrival from Baltimore. Your general order of the 7th of the same month, to which it refers, has not yet been received; and I could not, therefore, know the funeral honors, as they had been prescribed by the Department. At sunrise, this ship and the Boston displayed their colors half-mast, and so continued them throughout the day. Each ship fired thirteen minute guns at sunrise, at noon, and at sundown.

The death of the illustrious patriots, John Adams and Thomas Jefferson, will be lamented by the enlightened and the good in every part of the world, without regard to the distinctions of climate or nation. The British men-of-war in this harbor testified their respect on the occasion, by displaying their colors at half-mast; and I wrote a note to Captain King, the senior officer, expressive of my thanks for the respectful manner in which the ships under his command had noticed this mournful dispensation of Providence.

I shall leave orders here for Captain Elliot to testify the national respect for the character and services of these illustrious citizens, and the national sorrow for their loss, in like manner with ourselves, should he not have previously paid funeral honors at some other port.

S.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM COMMODORE WARRINGTON.

Commodore Lewis Warrington to the Secretary of the Navy.

U. S. SHIP CONSTELLATION, Pensacola, August 10, 1826.

The John Adams is on the south side of Cuba: the Hornet is on the north side, watching the old Bahama Straits, Matanzas, and the Double Headed Shot Keys.

No piracies have been committed since my last letters. Depredations on our commerce are fortunately unheard of where they were formerly so frequent, and no interruption has been experienced by it.

I shall be off Cuba in a few days. The squadron enjoys health, and this ship to an uncommon extent.

T.

CORRESPONDENCE IN RELATION TO THE CRUISE OF THE SLOOP-OF-WAR LEXINGTON FOR THE PROTECTION OF THE FISHERIES.

Copy of a letter from W. B. Shubrick to Stephen Thacher, Esq., collector at Eastport, dated—

U. S. SHIP LEXINGTON, June 19, 1826.

I have arrived in this harbor, on my way to the fishing grounds frequented by the citizens of the United States, for the purpose of protecting the said citizens in their rights; and, at the same time, observing that they do not, on their part, give any just cause of complaint by trespassing on the rights of others.

I request that you will have the goodness to give me any information that you may have received on these subjects, and point out to me the fishing grounds most frequented by our citizens during this and the two ensuing months.

S. Thayer, deputy collector, to Master Commandant W. B. Shubrick.

CUSTOM HOUSE, Lubec, June 24, 1826.

In answer to your letter of the 19th instant, I beg leave, in the absence of Mr. Thacher, to observe, that no information, which ultimately proved to be true, has been received the present year, that the rights of our citizens engaged in the fisheries have been infringed. The presence of an armed vessel of the United States on this station, the past fishing season, with the expectation that one would be sent, the present year, to protect our rights, has had, without doubt, a most salutary effect.

The places most frequented by our citizens engaged in the fisheries, during the present and two succeeding months, are the Grand Menan banks; the Nova Scotia shore, from Annapolis to Cape Sable; the Bay Chaleur, round the Magdalen Islands; the Straits of Belleisle, and the Labrador coast, as far as the Great Bay of Esquimaux.

Master Commandant W. B. Shubrick to the Secretary of the Navy.

U. S. SHIP LEXINGTON, Eastport, June 26, 1826.

Since my letter of the 13th instant, in which I had the honor to announce to you my arrival at this place, I have conversed with the deputy collectors for Eastport and Lubec, and have the satisfaction to say that I cannot learn from them, or from any other source, that any interruption has been given to the pursuits of the citizens of the United States engaged in the fisheries, this season.

U. S. SHIP LEXINGTON, New York, September 5, 1826.

SIR: In my letters of the 18th and 20th June, and the 6th of July, I had the honor to make you acquainted with my proceedings up to the last date.

After leaving Eastport, I passed south of the North Seal Island, west of the Island of Grand Menan, and along the coast of Nova Scotia, as far as Cape Canso. Passing through the Gut of Canso, I anchored at Entry Island, one of the Magdalen groupe. Leaving the Magdalen Islands, I made the Island of Newfoundland at Cape Ray, run down the northeast coast of the island, and anchored at the Bay of Islands. From the Bay of Islands, I continued down the coast of Newfoundland as far as Cape Rich, from which I crossed over to the coast of Labrador, and anchored at Blanche Sablon, and coasted from thence as far as 54 deg. 45 min. north, visiting, either with the ship or boats, all the harbors most resorted to by American fishermen.

I did not go farther north, because the navigation had become very unsafe, from the immense quantities of ice on the coast, and I could not learn that any fishermen had gone beyond Greedy Island, in 53 deg. 45 min. north.

On the 1st of August, being then in 54 deg. and 45 min. north, the ice extended, in apparently a solid body, from northwest to southeast. Returning through the Straits of Belleisle, I met, on the 9th of August, the British sloop-of-war Orestes, Captain William Jones, and we anchored nearly at the same time, at Isle au Bois. After exchanging civilities in the most cordial manner, Captain Jones and myself visited, together, the fishing establishments of Blanche Sablon and Brasdor.

A few days before I fell in with the Orestes, she had run against an island of ice, and lost her bowsprit. Fogs and strong southwest winds kept us together for a week, during which time the most friendly intercourse was kept up between the officers of the two ships.

After leaving Isle au Bois, I passed again along the north coast of Newfoundland, to Cape Ray, between Cape Ray and Cape North, and along the coasts of Cape Breton Island and Nova Scotia, with the intention of going again to Eastport; but, in consequence of light winds and thick fogs, I did not get to Cape Sable until the 29th ult.; when, finding I could not go into the Bay of Fundy without a very great probability of being detained after the 15th of September, I determined to make the best of my way to this place.

The American fishermen in the Bay of Fundy have not experienced any interruption in their pursuits this season, nor have any complaints, so far as I could learn, been made against them. They, as well as the inhabitants of Eastport, speak in terms of approbation of the conduct of the present commander of the English brig-of-war Dotterel. Many of the difficulties complained of hitherto in the Bay of Fundy, have arisen from the circumstance of our fishermen, belonging to Eastport, Machias, and Lubec, having formed matrimonial connections with the inhabitants of Grand Menan, and being induced thereby to visit the harbors of that island for other purposes than "for shelter," "repairing damages," "purchasing wood," or "obtaining water."

While in the Bay of Fundy I saw no British cruiser, except the one mentioned in my letter of the 6th of July. On the coast of Nova Scotia I saw not one American fisherman. I spoke almost every schooner that I saw, but they all proved to be from the small settlements on the coast, except an English schooner from Quebec, bound to Jamaica.

The American fishermen who have resorted to the Magdalen Islands, have not, that I could learn, at any time experienced any interruption, either from the cruisers or from citizens of any nation. They have taken their fish on the shoals around the islands, and, by agreement with the inhabitants, made (or cured) them on Amherst Isle, one of the group, loaded their vessels, and gone home; mutual harmony subsisting all the time.

On the northwest coast of Newfoundland, not one American fisherman is to be found: they have been obliged to abandon all the fishing grounds around the islands, in consequence of the vexatious conduct of the French cruisers, and the agents for the French fishing establishments on the coast, who have driven them from the harbors, at times when shelter, if not absolutely necessary, was very desirable; not allowing them to procure wood or water, or even to take fish enough for their immediate use. This conduct operates with great severity on our citizens, as the best harbors in the Straits of Belleisle are on the Newfoundland side, abounding in fish and bait, and affording great facilities for procuring wood and water. From this coast the ice clears at least a fortnight earlier than from the opposite one of Labrador, and hence, fish are to be taken here so much earlier. It was the custom of our fishermen, formerly, to take one-third, and sometimes one-half of their fares on the Newfoundland side, and thence cross to Labrador at as early a period as they can now commence their fishing. On crossing over to the coast of Labrador, American fishermen are to be found in great numbers, from Phillipian Bay to Cape Charles; they have uninterruptedly pursued their occupation of taking fish, and only in one instance, that I could learn, has there been any demands made on them for the privilege of drying them on shore.

At Brasdor, a Mr. Jones, who claims to be proprietor of the surrounding rocks, has demanded from each American vessel, one, and sometimes two quintals of fish, for the privilege of drying them on shore; this has generally been acquiesced in cheerfully; some of the fishermen, however, complained to me, that they thought it an unjust exaction, because they doubted if Jones could prove his ownership in the rocks, they being separated from the main land. I conversed with Jones on the subject, and he promised me that he would procure from the proper office at St. Johns a copy of an official record, which would satisfy any doubts that might be entertained by the fishermen, or by any American officer who might visit that place hereafter. My own opinion is, that Jones only exercises a right that is clearly his; he resides at this place all the year, and is, therefore, an inhabitant, as well as proprietor of the soil.

There have not been so many vessels employed in fishing this season as for several seasons past, and very few have gone further north than Cape Charles. At Greedy Island, where Captain Parker found twenty or thirty sail, I found but one; at Indian Island none, and not more than six altogether; have gone as far as 53 deg. 30 min. north.

In all my intercourse with the fishermen, I have been at great pains to impress on their minds that, while it is the intention of the government to protect them in all their rights, it is, at the same time, bound to prevent them from trespassing on the rights of others; and that I should feel it equally my duty to report any misconduct on their part, as to resent any injury done to them.

It gives me great pleasure to be able to say, that the conduct of all my officers has been perfectly satisfactory. I have, during a cruise made perilous by immense quantities of ice, thick, and almost constant fogs, inaccurate charts, and pilots unused to any vessel larger than a fishing smack, received from each, in his respective situation, the most zealous and efficient assistance.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. B. SHUBRICK.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

U.

PAPERS IN RELATION TO THE GREEK SHIP LIBERATOR.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, May 10, 1826.

SIR: The Committee on Naval Affairs have instructed me to inquire of the Department of the Navy whether the arrangements made by the Department, for executing the act of the 29th April, 1816, for the gradual increase of the navy, would be injuriously interfered with if the building of one of the frigates authorized by that act should be suspended for the present, and the timber for her frame secured, and the government be authorized to purchase, in lieu of such frigate, for the naval service, a ship of equal, or rather superior force, if the same can be procured for the United States on advantageous terms.

Your respectful and obedient servant,

H. R. STORRS, Chairman Naval Committee.

Hon. SAM'L L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

Copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Navy to the Hon. Henry R. Storrs, chairman of Naval Committee, House of Representatives, dated—

MAY 12, 1826.

In answer to your letter of the 10th, I have the honor to state that I do not perceive that the arrangements made by the Navy Department, for executing the law of the 29th April, 1816, for the gradual increase of the navy, would be, in any respect, injuriously interfered with, if the building of one of the frigates authorized by that act should be suspended for the present, and the timber for her frame secured, and the Executive be authorized to purchase, in lieu of such frigate, a ship of equal or superior force. The timber may be so secured as to prevent any injury to it, and it will be necessary either for building or repairs at some future period.

Copy of instructions from the Secretary of the Navy to Commodores William Bainbridge, Isaac Chauncy, and Jacob Jones, dated—

MAY 29, 1826.

At the late session of Congress a law was passed, of which I enclose a copy.

It is understood that there are now lying at New York two vessels coming within the description contained in the law, built by or under the agency of G. G. & S. Howland, and of Le Roy, Bayard & Co.

It is the wish of the Department that you examine those vessels, with as little delay as practicable, and furnish a full report of their state and qualities, with an estimate of their value.

Copy of a letter from Commodores William Bainbridge, Jacob Jones, and I. Chauncy, to the Secretary of the Navy, dated—

WASHINGTON, June 21, 1826.

We have had the honor of receiving your letter of the 26th ultimo. We examined the ships therein referred to, and think the one called the Liberator the best adapted for the public service of the United States. Her size is that of a forty-four of the first class. She appears to have been faithfully built, though her frame, being of white oak, is, as respects the material, greatly inferior to that of the ships building under the law for the gradual increase of the navy.

With respect to the "state and qualities" of this ship, we can only observe that she is new, and appears to be sound throughout; and from her form and dimensions, we should judge favorably of her qualities.

We have carefully prepared, and now respectfully submit, the accompanying estimate (A) as to her value, including her cannon and carronades, and such quantity of shot (particularly mentioned in the estimate) as is allowed to a vessel of her class about to proceed on a cruise, of the kind stated in the inventory.

Copy of instructions from the Secretary of the Navy to J. K. Paulding, Esq., Navy agent, New York, dated—

AUGUST 12, 1826.

I enclose to you an estimate of the value of the sixty gun ship, now lying at New York, said to have been built by Le Roy, Bayard & Co., and G. G. & I. S. Howland, for the agents of the Greek government. By this estimate you will perceive that certain materials for its equipment are embraced in the general amount. The legal title of the ship is now said to be in the arbitrators who were selected to setttle the controversy between the builders and the Greek agents.

You are hereby instructed to place the papers before the district attorney of the United States for the State of New York, and obtain from him an opinion as to the right and power of the arbitrators to transfer the title to the United States, should a purchase be made; and if it be his opinion that a good title can be made, you will obtain from him the papers necessary and proper to make the conveyance legal, and purchase said vessel from those authorized to sell it for the amount of said estimate, viz: $230,570.97.

You may permit the agents or owners of the other Greek vessels to take from this any articles which are on board, designed for its equipment, deducting from the amount of the estimate the estimated value of such articles as are taken.

Should you make the purchase, let the vessel be delivered immediately to Commodore Chauncy. The amount of the purchase money has been remitted to you by this day's mail.

It is desired that not the least delay be permitted in concluding this transaction.

A.

Estimate of the value of the ship-of-war, the Liberator.

Wood of every description for the hull, with a live oak frame, would cost $65,000. In this frame there are about 24,000 cubical feet. Live oak costs $1.42½, and white oak is estimated at 60 cents; difference 82½ cents per cubical foot, $19,800, deducted from the $65,000, leaves	$45,200 00
Iron	9,795 00
Copper and composition	27,140 00
Standing and running rigging, cables, hawsers, and messengers, per inventory	12,698 00
Chain cables, { 75 fathoms of 1 5/8 / 45 do 1¾ }	1,822 80
Boats, with oars complete	1,885 00
Water casks, 33,300 gallons	3,330 00
Blocks	5,000 00
Sails	17,000 00
Anchors	4,474 00
Labor of every description	55,000 00
Kentlege, 100 tons	4,000 00
Galley	2,000 00

Armament; 32 34-pound cannon	$13,566 00
3,000 32-pound shot, and 900 32-pound grape	7,004 00
30 42-pound carronades	5,550 00
1,275 42-pound shot, and 500 42-pound grape	1,680 00
Gun carriages, and all the apparatus belonging to the armament, including the stores in the gunner's department, the magazine furniture, the forge, bellows, and all the articles belonging to the blacksmith's department, per inventory	13,426 17
	$230,570 97

Copy of a letter from Commodore Bainbridge to the Secretary of the Navy, dated—

AUGUST 25, 1826.

We have had the honor of receiving your letter of the 25th instant, with Mr. Constavlo's, in which he claims an allowance for the masts and spars of the Liberator, as not having been included in the general estimate as to her cost.

On referring to the estimate, it appears that the wood of the masts and spars was included in the item of $65,000; the terms "masts and spars" were inadvertently omitted in the heading of that item: that the iron, as stated by Captain Chauncey, was also included, but it appears that the labor of making the masts and spars was not included in the general estimate for labor; we therefore think that the value of this labor should be allowed in addition to the amount of the general estimate. There is some difficulty in forming a precise estimate as to the cost of this labor, but we think that $3,000 would be a liberal allowance—say three thousand dollars.

Copy of a letter from R. Tillotson, Esq., to James K. Paulding, Esq., dated—

NEW YORK, August 22, 1826.

I have examined the papers submitted to me in relation to the purchase of the ship Liberator. I find that the ownership of the property was legally acquired by the arbitrators, who propose to convey, and are of opinion they are entitled to give a good title. The bill of sale to be executed by the arbitrators will of course be accompanied by delivery, and the register surrendered at the custom house by the parties.

Copy of a letter from Commodore Isaac Chauncey to the Secretary of the Navy, dated—

U. S. NAVY YARD, New York, August 28, 1826.

In pursuance of your order of the 12th instant I took possession of the frigate called the Liberator, on the 23d inst., purchased by the Navy agent, and this morning she was brought to the Navy yard, where she is now moored.

W.

COPIES AND EXTRACTS RESPECTING THE AFRICAN AGENCY.

Secretary of the Navy to Dr. John W. Peaco, principal agent of the United States for liberated Africans, Washington.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, December 28, 1825.

In virtue of the authority vested in him by the act of Congress, approved 3d March, 1819, the President of the United States has appointed you the principal agent of this government "upon the coast of Africa, for receiving the negroes, mulattoes, or persons of color, delivered from on board vessels seized in the prosecution of the slave trade, by the commanders of the United States armed vessels."

Your commission has been already prepared and delivered; and you will receive herewith a printed copy of the laws in relation to the slave trade, for your guidance.

The instructions heretofore given to those who have preceded you in the discharge of this duty, copies of which accompany this, will exhibit the views entertained by the Executive respecting the general concerns of the agency, at the various periods at which those instructions were written, and you will regard them as a guide to yourself on those points in which they have not been executed or altered, and in which the situation of the agency has not been changed since they were given. Time, and the progress made in improvements, since its first establishment, have lessened many of its wants, and in some respects varied its character.

You will perceive that all the agents have been particularly directed not to connect their views, or in any way to interfere with those of the Colonization Society. From the circumstance that they have been simultaneously clothed with powers, both from the government and the society, it has been found difficult rigidly to adhere to this part of their instructions, located at the same place, for mutual defence and accommodation: and the resources of the society sometimes falling short of the benevolent intentions of its supporters, the colonists have frequently been dependent on the supplies furnished by the government, for the use of the liberated Africans, for their own sustenance; and the agents, from motives of prudence and humanity, distributed provisions among the settlers, to preserve them from want and dispersion; but in this the government has probably sustained no loss. In return, the colonists have contributed their labor, in the erection of buildings and other improvements, and to the defence of the establishment from attacks, which, without their aid, might have proved fatal, and would certainly have required larger expenditures of money.

A question has recently been submitted, how far the government is disposed to sanction such a practice in future. The original instructions contemplated and authorized the employment of a certain number of persons as mechanics, laborers, nurses, washers, &c., as a means of affording some stimulus and encouragement to the colonists in the infancy of the establishment, and the colonists were properly used in that way. How far a continuance of this course will be found necessary, or may be justified, must depend on the condition of the agency, and be determined by the discretion of the agent.

It is probable that Congress, in passing the law, and making appropriations for carrying it into effect, did not anticipate that the expense of the colony would rest upon the government. It was presumed that the society would furnish the means to meet the necessities of its own establishment. Such, however, has not been the case; but it is believed that they have gone to the extent of their funds, and it is probable that they have not now the ability to afford much further succor, should it be necessary. But, as the agency cannot be sustained without the aid of the colonists—as they will be found indispensable auxiliaries in case of attack—and as their services, both in labor and defence, will merit compensation, you are authorized, until further orders, to employ them in both, as you shall find expedient and proper, and to make them a fit allowance of provisions and supplies, as their necessities may require, and the interest of the agency demand; but in doing this, you will use the strictest economy.

Supplies from this country must always be precarious; and you will not fail, on all proper occasions, to impress upon their minds the necessity of their utmost endeavors to support themselves by labor and the products of the soil, and of not being dependent upon your assistance, or any other resources.

For the purpose of protection against attacks from the natives, should any of them manifest a disposition to be hostile, it would be prudent, as a measure of precaution, to teach both the colonists and the liberated Africans the use of small arms. From their remote and insulated situation, they must rely on their own exertions for defence by land. It is to be hoped, however, that the increase of numbers in the settlement, their preparations and constant readiness to repel invasion, together with the occasional presence of a vessel-of-war, will deter the natives from any future attempts to molest them.

The necessity of keeping a military force, in the pay of the government, is not sufficiently apparent to authorize such a step, in the present condition of the colony, or without farther evidence of its utility. It is believed that the residents can be more profitably employed in the cultivation of the soil, and the erection of buildings, and other improvements, required by an augmented population. By organizing themselves into a local militia, for occasional drill, at stated periods, all the purposes of a military force will be obtained, without incurring the expense. It should not be forgotten by them, that, while they are acquiring knowledge in the science of war, they are creating a safeguard for their own protection, as well as for that of the interests of the government. Heretofore the agency and colony have been mutually beneficial in this respect; without the presence of the colonists, the United States would have been subjected to greater charge for military protection, but without the assistance afforded by the government, in maintaining the colonists, they could not have succeeded in their plans. It is very desirable that the recaptured Africans should remain at the agency, so long as to acquire some knowledge of the arts and comforts of civilized life; but should any of them discover their nation and country, and desire to return to their homes, you will not oppose their wishes, but facilitate and promote them. For the large number of Africans now in Georgia, who have been decreed to be restored to liberty, and whom it is intended to remove to the agency, as soon as some preliminary steps are completed, it will be necessary to provide shelter and means of comfort on their arrival. It will be your duty to take immediate measures to prepare for their reception, as they will probably reach the colony by the time you are ready for them. Various buildings have, from time to time, been authorized, but their capacity for the accomodations of these Africans, in addition to those already there, cannot be determined, except by personal observation. A quantity of lumber and other articles has been purchased and shipped on board the Georgiana, and buildings have recently been erected with such materials as were on the spot. The plan fixed upon by the acting agent has no doubt been adopted, as most suitable to the climate. The buildings must be finished in the simplest and cheapest manner.

It is understood to be the intention of the Colonization Society to appoint Mr. Ashmun their principal agent on the coast. He has had the active charge of the agency of the government constantly since the resignation of Dr. Ayres, and occasionally previous to that event. He will be continued as your assistant agent. His salary was, heretofore, fixed at 1,500 dollars, until the further orders of the Department, and will cease upon your arrival. He will be allowed, from that time, at the rate of 1,200 dollars per annum. From his long residence in Africa, his experience in the affairs of the agency, and acquaintance with the manners and habits of the natives, you will derive advantage, and, it is not doubted, that his cordial co-operation will be promptly afforded in all matters tending to promote the interest of the establishment.

You will keep very exact and minute accounts of all expenses of the agency, of every description, and, as far as it is in your power, separate those which arise from the provisions and support given to the colonists, from the other expenditures for the agency for recaptured Africans. You will prepare quarterly statements of the condition of the settlement, its general health, and the progress made in the various departments, together with estimates of the wants of the agency, in advance, and care will be taken to supply those wants as early as practicable. Your accounts of expenditures must also be made out quarterly, and forwarded to the Fourth Auditor, for examination and settlement; prudence will dictate to you the necessity of taking duplicate or triplicate receipts for all payments. These you will transmit by the earliest conveyances. Whenever opportunities occur, by circuitous routes, for communicating with the Department, it would be well to avail of them, as direct ones are not frequent, and to send duplicates and even triplicates of all your communications, by different conveyances; and that no opportunity may be lost, you will be careful to have them regularly prepared, to take advantage of any conveyance that may offer. Commence your quarters with January, April, July, and October.

For the disbursements of the agency, and the purchase of supplies from transient traders, you will negotiate drafts upon the Department; and if it will facilitate the operation, or be any accommodation to the holders, you are authorized to make them payable wherever branches of the United States Bank are located. The sum of five thousand dollars, it is presumed, will be sufficient for the ensuing year. Should it be found more for the interest of the government, or impracticable to dispose of drafts on the United States, you are permitted to draw to the amount of five hundred pounds sterling on Messrs. Baring, Brothers & Co., bankers of the United States, London, with whom a credit will be established in your favor. For every bill you will transmit a letter of advice to the Department, stating the amount, rate of exchange, and necessity for drawing; and you will also advise Messrs. Baring, Brothers & Co., of every draft on them.

A claim of long standing has been preferred by K. Macauly, of Sierra Leone, which you will receive separate instructions to liquidate. In the event of your having to draw on London for the amount which may be due to him, your credit there will be extended to one thousand pounds.

The Navy agent at Norfolk has been directed to pay, upon your requisition, for two boats, with the necessary appendages. The small arms, and other military stores mentioned, will be provided from the Navy yard at Gosport. The hospital stores mentioned in the list furnished by you, you will purchase in Baltimore or Norfolk, on the best possible terms, and draw a requisition upon the agent there for the cost.

Your compensation has been fixed at $1,600 per annum, to commence from the first day of February last, and the further sum of $500, which will be allowed for providing the small stores requisite for your convenience on the passage, and on your arrival.

It is intended, in a short time, to send to the coast of Africa, for a cruise, one of the vessels-of-war, and hereafter to send one at intervals of three or four months, should the situation of the service permit it. In this there will be two objects—to give countenance to the agency, and to repress the slave trade. Your duty in reference to them will be, to acquire and furnish to the commanding officers all useful information in relation to these objects, and to give to our vessels all the assistance, especially in the medical branch of the service, in your power. Your skill may often be useful in advising and aiding the medical officers, in cases of sickness.

You will proceed, as early as practicable, to Norfolk, in the execution of the trust reposed in you by your appointment, and the duties enjoined by these instructions, to take passage on board the ship Georgiana, Capt. Cornick, which vessel has been chartered by the Colonization Society for the purpose of taking a number of emigrants, stores, &c., to Cape Mesurado.

The remoteness of the settlement from this country, the difficulty and tardiness of communications, render it necessary to trust much to the discretion of the agent. Relying with confidence upon the exercise of a sound judgment, a strict attention to economy, and unremitted endeavors for the improvement of those placed under your care, my best wishes for your individual welfare are united to those of a large portion of this nation, who look forward with earnest hope for the success of this beneficent undertaking.

Secretary of the Navy to Jehudi Ashmun, Esq., Cape Mesurado, Africa.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, December 31, 1825.

Since my letter to you of 25th January last, I have received your several communications, 15th, 20th and 25th January; 11th and 22d February; 1st and 5th April; 15th June and 22d August, with their respective enclosures, the contents of all which have been duly noted.

Your representations of the situation of the agency and colony afford a pleasing proof of the increasing strength and improvement of the establishment, creditable to your zeal and the industry of those under your charge. The recent appointment of Dr. Peaco, as principal agent of the United States, will supersede that previously conferred on you, and your salary, as such, will cease from the time of his arrival. You will, however, be continued as his assistant agent, and allowed a compensation at the rate of $1,200 per annum.

I have no doubt that you will render Dr. Peaco all the assistance in your power, and that from your long residence in Africa, and acquaintance with the natives, you will be essentially useful to him.

I have directed the Fourth Auditor to furnish a statement of your account, which will accompany this; your salary has been calculated to the present day, and the balance that may be due will be paid to the Rev. Wm. Hawley, as your attorney, or in any other manner you may direct.

Secretary of the Navy to Hon. John Marshall, Chief Justice of Supreme Court, Richmond, Virginia.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, January 5, 1826.

I have received your letter of the 1st instant, requesting information concerning the negroes in Georgia, which were on board the Gen. Ramirez. Arrangements were made last summer for carrying into effect the decision of the Supreme Court, by transmitting its mandate to the United States district attorney in Georgia. Some difficulty has arisen in consequence of the Spanish claimant insisting that those decreed to be delivered to him should be determined by lot, instead of by proof on each individual negro. On a reference of the question to the circuit court, there was a division of opinion, and it was determined to submit it to the Supreme Court. This will cause some delay in the delivery of the Africans to the United States; many of them had been brought into Savannah, by those to whom they were hired, and put into the custody of the marshal, and the rest were soon expected.

Dr. Peaco, the agent appointed by the government, will take passage in the vessel chartered by the Colonization Society, which it is supposed will sail soon, and has been instructed to prepare for their reception. Immediately on his arrival, no time will be lost in sending these negroes to the agency, after the Supreme Court shall have decided upon the mode in which they are to be allotted.

Secretary of the Navy to R. W. Habersham, Esq., United States attorney, Savannah, Georgia.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, January 3, 1826.

I have received your letter of the 22d ultimo, respecting the proceedings in the case of the negroes of the Ramirez. That portion of it which related to the decision of the Spanish rights, by lot, created surprise, as it was supposed that the question had been clearly settled by the opinion of the Supreme Court. But, in the present situation of the case, all that can be done is to expedite the settlement of the question, and the collection of the negroes, as much as possible; and I have only to request the favor of your active attention to every part of the case, and that I be constantly advised of the progress which you make.

Secretary of the Navy to John Nicholson, Esq., marshal of the district of Louisiana, New Orleans.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, January 10, 1826.

I have received your letter of the 7th ultimo, enclosing a copy of one of 23d July, the original of which was also received in due time; but no directions were given at the moment, presuming that the necessary steps would have been taken to have the Africans brought to trial before the answer could have reached you.

I have written to the district attorney of the United States to adopt such measures as may seem proper to bring the subject before the court for decision, and to consult with you upon the course to be pursued. In the meantime, if the Africans can be hired out to humane and discreet persons, giving bond for their appearance when called for, it would be best to do so, to avoid the expense of their maintenance; otherwise they must be provided for, and taken care of, until the decision of the court.

In the event of their being hired, you will submit to the Department an account of such moneys as may be received for their labor, and the cost of their support from the time of seizure; also, a statement of your other proceedings in relation to them.

Secretary of the Navy to J. W. Smith, Esq., United States district attorney, New Orleans.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, January 10, 1826.

I am informed by the marshal at New Orleans that a number of Africans have been seized by the revenue officers, in an attempt to introduce them into the United States contrary to law, on board a schooner called the Fell's Point.

I have to request that you will take such measures, in conjunction with the marshal, as may seem necessary and proper, to have the Africans brought to trial before the United States district court, and inform me of its decision as soon as it may be made known.

Nothing can be done, as to their final disposition, until the decree of court determines to whom they are to be delivered. Your early attention to the subject is particularly desirable.

Secretary of the Navy to R. W. Habersham, Esq., United States district attorney, Savannah, Georgia.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, August 10, 1826.

It is extremely desirable that something should be done towards removing the Africans of the General Ramirez out of the country, as the expense of their maintenance will soon absorb the amount appropriated by Congress.

It is understood that the Supreme Court determined the mode in which the division was to be made among the claimants, and it can only remain for the circuit court to give the necessary order.

Will you be pleased to inform me what has been done since the last term of the Supreme Court, and whether there is anything absolutely to prevent the delivery of the Africans? If only a part of them could be sent off, it would reduce the expense of their support. I also wish to ascertain what is their present situation, and if an arrangement cannot be made with the Portuguese claimant for the delivery of a portion, or the whole, without an order of court, should it be impracticable to obtain it immediately.

UNITED STATES AGENCY FOR LIBERATED AFRICANS, Cape Mesurado, October 14, 1825.

SIR: I have the honor to state that an unexpected event has augmented considerably the number of liberated Africans connected with this agency.

The Spanish schooner Clarida, of about eighty tons, Captain ———, master and supercargo, with an assorted cargo, adapted to the slave traffic of this coast, owned by several merchants of Havana, names unknown, sailed from that port on the 30th of May last, having on board a crew, including officers, of twenty to twenty-five men. Ostensibly she was, in all respects, regularly documented, except the specification in her clearance of the objects of her voyage, which is disguised under the general phraseology of "trade in the productions of the country."

This vessel arrived in Liberia Bay early in July, and about the 20th of that month, having contracted with several native slave dealers of the neighborhood for 140 slaves, to be delivered in three months, commenced landing her cargo, at a town sixteen miles to the northward of this cape, belonging to an intelligent headman, who passed by the name of Yellow Will, in the territory and subject to the jurisdiction of King Bristol.

About the first of September, merchandise, equal in value to the purchase of one hundred slaves, had been sent ashore, and nearly all distributed under the direction of the two chiefs already mentioned. Before the 20th she had lost both her anchors; and to sustain her ground was obliged constantly to stand off and on, under easy sail, at about two leagues from the shore.

The captain had remained at the factory from the first; but falling sick late in September, went on board on the 30th of that month, leaving in his place, to conduct the business of the factory, his mate, Zugaste, assisted by two seamen of the names of Juliana and Baptiste. The captain, who had been some time ashore, preparing light spars to accelerate the return voyage of the schooner, also remained.

On the 5th of October inst., the English merchant hermaphrodite brig Tom Cod, of Bristol, England, Captain Potter, a well known trader on the coast, standing down the bay from Cape Mount, fell in with the Clarida, off Digby.* The schooner, after standing along a short time in the track of the Englishman, hailed and demanded, "where bound?" was answered, "to Mesurado," and continued on about half a mile astern of the Tom Cod, until the latter vessel cast anchor in our roads, at one o'clock on the same day. The Englishman running up his ensign on coming to an anchor, was answered by the hoisting of the Spanish flag on board the Clarida.

The Spaniard lay by until half-past six, P. M., when, approaching the Tom Cod, under cover of the night, (which here commences at that hour) sent her boat with twelve armed men alongside, who instantly boarded, but without offering any violence.

They inquired if they could be furnished with an anchor, and stated that they had had the misfortune to lose their own. On receiving a negative answer, and having accurately examined the force of the brig, they all went on board their own vessel, declaring, at the same time, that "an anchor they must have, and might as well perish, in fighting for it, if they could not obtain it by other means, as to be lost for the want of one."

At seven, the Spaniards came abreast of the brig, at half pistol shot distance, and ordered the officer of the latter to weigh his anchor. With this order, the mate, who, in the absence of Captain Potter ashore, had charge of the vessel, refused to comply; when the Clarida fired two shots in succession into the Tom Cod from a long revolving nine-pounder; and, immediately after, sent eighteen armed men on board of her, who took possession, driving her crew forward, and forcing them to weigh their anchor and make sail. Both vessels then stood out together two leagues, when the anchor of the brig was let go in 18 fathoms. All these operations were directed by the Spaniard, who had taken his station on the quarter deck of the brig. The vessel was also steered by a Spaniard; but worked by their own crew, who acted from compulsion; the pirates being ranged fore and aft, with their arms in their hands.

* Bristol's territory, commencing ten miles, and extending twenty, from Cape Mesurado, is distinguished by this name.

A communication was now formed, by means of a strong rope bent to the bight of the Englishman's chain cable, and taken on board of the Spaniard. The end of the chain thus secured was then slipped, roused aboard of the Clarida, and bent to her windlass.

The Tom Cod was detained by another anchor, let go for the purpose, till four o'clock on the morning of the sixth; when the pirates, after plundering her cabin and deck of a variety of articles, left her, went aboard of their own vessel, weighed the anchor which they had taken from the brig, and made sail. The brig being thus liberated, weighed her anchor, stood back to Mesurado roads, and made the agent acquainted with the transaction, at four o'clock on the same evening.

Having received the testimony of six individuals, all going to prove the piracy and identify the Clarida, and obtained of Captain Potter the use of his brig to punish the pirate, I dispatched a messenger, on the morning of the 7th, to all the native chiefs to the northward of the Mesurado, to assure them that whatever military movements might be necessary for me to make along the beach, none was to be directed against them, and that it was expected, on their part, that they were to interfere with those movements in no way whatever.

The military of this colony is organized into a corps of independent infantry, consisting of thirty-six young men, and a corps of artillerists, consisting of forty-eight. From the former I made a requisition of twenty-five men to act under Captain James C. Barbour, their commander, and their other officers. Twenty-two artillerists, under Captain F. James, the commanding officer of their corps, at my request, volunteered to attend me on board the Tom Cod.

I then gave Captain Barbour written instructions to proceed the same evening with his force, taking two days' provisions, to the mouth of the St. Paul, five miles, send one division by the Stockton, in boats, and conduct the other along the beach, encamp at the place of rendezvous till daylight on the 8th, and then advance by the beach upon Digby, awaiting further orders, which I was to send him from the brig.

But should the brig, by any accident, fall into the hands of the pirates, or be pursued out to sea, he was to seize upon the factory at Yellow Will's, and make the best of his way back with the prisoners, slaves, and property captured in it. In this young officer's prudence and intrepidity, and in the exact discipline and firmness of his men, I knew I could entirely confide.

With the twenty-two volunteers under Captain James, I went on board the Tom Cod at four o'clock, taking along two carriage guns, and a suitable provision of ammunition belonging to the agency. Of these brave fellows, eight had, on two former occasions, fought at my side for nearly three hours in our bloody conflicts with the natives; and I knew they would all follow wherever it might be necessary for me to lead them. Their number was greater than the crew of the Spaniard by six men, and our weight of metal considerably superior; so that there is little doubt, had we fallen in with the pirate, that she must have been taken. But it was not our lot to engage him.

During the night I had brought the brig to the windward of Digby, upon which we bore down under the American flag at daylight on the morning of the 8th, ready for action. The morning was thick, and it was not until half-past one o'clock that I was able to ascertain the absence of the Clarida, which, I afterwards learned, had not communicated with the shore, nor been seen from Digby, since the robbery of the brig.

Captain Barbour's division having now arrived, I landed with five men through the surf, ordering the brig to lie off and on till she should receive a signal to return to Mesurado; and at a few minutes past nine entered Yellow Will's town, but found the factory abandoned, and the slaves and nearly all the property gone. I soon learned that the whole had been conveyed across Poor river, a broad and deep stream, which has its course parallel with this part of the coast, and at only two miles distant from it.

Messengers were immediately dispatched to King Bristol and Will, conveying my friendly assurances, but insisting on the immediate delivery of the Spaniards, and all the slaves and property belonging to the factory, into my hands. In reply I was openly informed that both refused to comply with the demand, but assured, secretly, by one of the headmen, that the King was willing to see me seize upon the concern, provided the business could be so managed as to save the appearance of treachery to their customers on the part of himself and his people. I perceived the force and intention of this hint at once, and took my measures accordingly.

After a personal interview with Bristol and Will, I returned, and with twelve men, crossing the Poor river in a small canoe which could carry but four men at a time, soon obtained possession of the Spaniards at a town situated a short distance from that in which the wreck of the factory was concealed.

In the meantime I had perfectly informed myself of the exact state of the concern at that time.

Two of the four Spaniards left ashore were ill. Goods of the value of ninety slaves had been already advanced to the country dealers, on which only fourteen had yet been received at the factory. Goods equal in value to about six hundred dollars only remained in the factory on the morning of the 8th, when, in the confusion caused by the alarm at daylight, nearly the whole had fallen into the hands of the country people, who, under color of assisting the Spaniards to secure their goods, had carried them off. But the fourteen slaves had been preserved.

None of the four Spaniards now in my custody were on board the Clarida at the time of her committing the piracy of the 5th, nor had communicated with her since that act: and there was not even presumptive proof that the character of the vessel was piratical by the laws of Spain previous to the perpetration of the robbery of that date.

The slaves, and all the property remaining, were surrendered into my hands by the mate, Zugaste, at three o'clock on the 9th, and the four Spaniards discharged from custody on the grounds just stated.

A part of the goods, as per the accompanying statement, amounting to forty-three dollars, was restored to the mate for the purpose of subsisting himself and his companions till an opportunity should offer to take passage for some other part of the world.

After several other deductions for expense, as per the same statement, the residue, amounting to $91.50, was equally divided between the captors and the United States, as had been promised to the people previous to their engaging in the expedition. The net balance remaining to the agency, after all charges and demands paid, is $5.34½ cents, which has been deposited in the public store to be applied to the expenses of the agency for liberated Africans.

The English brig was restored to her own captain, and, after landing the guns and colonists at Monrovia, proceeded on her voyage in the night of the 8th, and myself, with the detachment of infantry, bringing in safety the liberated slaves and merchandise, arrived in town on the 10th. The weather had been exceedingly rainy, and the return of the detachment was delayed a day, in consequence of two of the poor slaves, unable to comprehend the intention of the interposition, which had so suddenly broken their irons and given them their freedom, having absconded under cover of the night, and secreted themselves in the woods. But I have the satisfaction of announcing their speedy recovery; and that the whole number, consisting of one boy of eleven years, eleven youths between fifteen and twenty-two, one man of thirty-eight, and one woman of about twenty years, in all fourteen persons, are now, through the munificence of the United States Government, and the active zeal of the settlers, decently clothed, comfortably fed, and introduced at once to the blessings of liberty, Christianity, affectionate friends, civilized life, and a permanent and peaceful home. I procured an engagement to be entered into between the country authorities, the observance of which may be depended upon, to suffer their people to communicate no more with the Clarida, in the event of her returning; and in no case whatever to furnish her with a single slave. That vessel may indeed escape capture, as I have no craft large enough to take her, but she is thus sure to lose her cargo and voyage.

A quantity of spars belonging to the schooner, found at Will's place, were burnt; and the rice collected at the factory, which could not be conveniently brought off, was distributed among the natives.

Most of the poor beings restored on this occasion to liberty, are natives of countries situated at a distance in the interior of Africa; had been several months in irons when liberated, and are in a very emaciated and miserable state. Their gratitude to their deliverers is unbounded, which they delight to testify by every mode of expression in their power. I have, by a temporary disposition, connected them in couples with the families of the most humane and respectable of the settlers, where they will remain until their health shall have been re-established, and they have acquired some knowledge of our language, and of domestic life among a civilized people. Before these objects shall be accomplished, I hope to have prepared a new range of houses, already considerably advanced, at Thompson's Town, for their reception.

In this little expedition, it gives me great pleasure to state that not a musket was fired, not one untoward accident occurred, not a point of duty was neglected, or otherwise than most handsomely performed by the officers; not an instance of disorderly conduct was observed among the 54 men who composed the force employed on the occasion. The order for respecting the persons and property of the natives was so punctually obeyed, that by their own declaration, and to their utter astonishment, not a fowl nor a plantain was taken, nor even a hut entered, except with consent, by the people, even in Will's town, which was entirely deserted of its inhabitants, and in which the whole body encamped for forty-eight hours.

I have, since my return, already received from the country princes, deputations conveying their thanks for these substantial proofs of my friendly disposition towards themselves, even where it became necessary to carry the arms of the settlement into the heart of their country. The policy which, in the face of some opposition, and much misrepresentation from such as were incapable of understanding it, I have for four years most scrupulously observed, in all my intercourse with the people of this country, has been that of justice, sincerity, mildness, and firmness; and its success has on this occasion appeared to be complete. I never menaced them with an empty or unnecessary threat; never failed to carry into full effect an intention once announced, and never forfeited my word. While a similar policy is persisted in on the part of this establishment, I do not hesitate to assert that no reasonable demand made by it on the native authorities will be refused.

In these remarks, I have in view the introduction of a measure, on the part of the United States, for which, I believe, the time has arrived, of which the object shall be, entirely to abolish the slave trade, with the concurrence of the native authorities, along a given line of coast contiguous to this agency. But the particulars of this plan it is proper to defer to a distinct communication. The object, if it can but obtain the sanction of the United States Government, is practicable; and all the means necessary to effect it are on the spot.

Nor can I, in closing this communication, suppress the mortifying fact that, whenever the American flag is displayed at this agency, it literally waves over, and, I can add, affords protection to a slave factory, established in the immediate neighborhood. In the short expedition just terminated, it was with emotions of indignation, which it was impossible to repress and idle to indulge, that I was obliged to conduct the little force under my command past two slave factories, of which the most distant is only five miles from the Cape. We heard the clanking of fetters as we marched along, and were annoyed with the groans of human beings who had lost their freedom without their fault; but, as their tyrants, who regarded us with folded arms, and a leer of barbarous exultation, had not committed piracy, according to the Spanish definition of the crime, it was not in my power to interfere for the relief of the one or the punishment of the other.

Respectfully, sir, I have the honor to remain, your obedient and humble servant,

J. ASHMUN.

To the Hon. S. L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the U. S. Navy, Washington.

U. S. AGENCY FOR LIBERATED AFRICANS, Cape Mesurado, October 25, 1826.

SIR: I had the honor, in my last, of the 14th instant, to detail the circumstances connected with the capture of the slave factory belonging to the piratical schooner Clarida, at Digby, and the liberation of fourteen miserable slaves found in that iniquitous establishment. It is with pleasure that I have to subjoin to the communication of that event that of the liberation and safe arrival at this agency of six more unfortunate persons of the same description, all men, and, except a single child of nine years, between the ages of eighteen and thirty years, who appear to have belonged to the same concern.

It will probably be in the recollection of the honorable Secretary that the Clarida, after perpetrating the robbery of the 5th inst., immediately disappeared from this part of the coast. She has not since been heard from, having abandoned her factory, and three men left on shore at Digby, as stated in my letter of the 14th. These persons, I had, in the exercise of my duty, entirely deprived of the power of effecting any further purchases in the line of their inhuman traffic, but did not consider myself authorized to take them into custody. They have accordingly since remained at Will's place, under the pretext of awaiting an opportunity to return to Spanish America.

But, on the 20th, information was brought me of the delivery of several slaves at the factory, by dealers living at a distance in the interior. On strict inquiry, I soon ascertained the fact to be as reported, with the additional circumstance that a collusion was carrying on between Yellow Will and the Spanish factor, having for its object the sale of the slaves in the name and right of the former, who was to share the proceeds, at a French factory on the St. Paul.* To the practice of this deception the parties had been induced in the hope of evading an engagement by which I had previously obliged them to be in no way assisting in the collecting and transportation out of the country of any of the slaves bargained for, or that might be bargained for, by the Clarida. No time was, accordingly, lost in concerting the means of preventing the probable effects of this unprincipled combination, and rescue its intended victims from the power of their mercenary oppressors.

On the 25th instant I ordered Captain Barbour to make a requisition for twenty-five men, or accept a voluntary tender of that number from his corps of infantry. Then he was, at sunset of the same day, to march under arms to the mouth of the St. Paul, where he was to arrive at eight o'clock the same evening and expect further orders. The object of the expedition was not divulged.

At two o'clock P. M., taking a boat's crew of natives, with a guard of three men only, in a plain dress, I proceeded by way of the Stockton to the St. Paul, and, after calling at the town in which the French factory is established, and familiarly paying my respects, as I had often done before, to the proprietress of the place, with a view to allay any excitement which might grow out of the subsequent movements, I dropped down to the place of rendezvous at the mouth of the river, at half-past six. Captain Barbour and his followers arrived punctually at eight. At ten o'clock, having fresh instructions, he passed the river and conducted his men without halting to the place of destination, where he arrived at two on the morning of the 26th, and had posted the sentries on all the avenues communicating with the town before the inhabitants were apprised of their situation. The slaves, seven in number, had been conveyed away to a place of concealment two hours before, in consequence of information of our movement having reached the place at that time, which, I regret to add, had been communicated to a native through the officiousness of some misguided member of the colony.

In consequence of this accident, and of the various obstacles to the recovery of the slaves which it gave the ingenuity of the interested native chief occasion to throw in the way of the spirited young officer who conducted the party, one of the captives escaped into the bush from the hands of his unknown liberators and friends, and the surrender of the other six did not take place till ten o'clock on the same morning. They were at the time cruelly pinioned, and several of them enduring, from the inflamed and swollen limbs, the severest torture. The child was in so emaciated a state as to make it necessary for one of his most robust fellow sufferers to carry him on his shoulders.

The whole party returning, arrived at Monrovia in safety, after a most fatiguing expedition of twenty-five hours, in which all except myself and a guard of seven men only, including the boatmen, had, without sleep, performed a forced march of thirty-five miles through a pathless country, of which one-half was traversed in the depth of night and the other under the full power of an African sun.

It gives me pleasure to add that such a cheerful zeal in the cause of African emancipation animates this little corps that not a murmur of impatience was, during the whole time, heard in the ranks. So enured are the men to the climate of their adopted country, that not an individual has suffered in his health from the extreme exposure and fatigue of the expedition; and in such handsome military style was the affair conducted, that the very inhabitants of the country, through which the route of the party lay, were scarcely apprised of the movement before its termination and the return of the people to their homes.

Respectfully, sir, I have the honor to be, your most obedient and humble servant,

J. ASHMUN.

The Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the U. S. Navy.

AGENCY, October 28, 1825.

SIR: Having this morning renewed an agreement with the principal native slave dealers, among whom the cargo of the "Clarida" has been distributed on credit, of which the object is—to prevent the sale and transportation out of the country of the slaves due to that concern, I hasten to communicate the particulars, in the hope that the part I have taken may be considered as within the spirit of the instructions under which I have the honor to act.

I am far from regarding myself as authorized to interfere, in ordinary cases, in that branch of the naval service of the United States, which is directed by express acts of Congress and under specific instructions from the supreme Executive against the slave trade. From such interference I have carefully abstained, even when it has been in my power to operate against the traffic as carried on by Americans, and with every prospect of success.

I justify the recent exertion of the military force under my control in the affair of the "Clarida," on the broad principles of natural law, which confer, even on private individuals, the right of self-defence against the violence of the outlaws and enemies of the human race. In the exercise of this right, which, in the actual situation of the settlement, I cannot help considering rather in the light of a serious duty, twenty slaves, without legal owners, have been thrown in my way, together with the right of controlling the purchase of from forty to eighty more: the number actually bargained and paid for by the piratical schooner being one hundred.

I regard myself as undoubtedly possessed of the right to control these purchases, but, without resorting to expedients, my actual power to do so is extremely limited; for the dealers in the interior, hearing of the destruction of the factory, and under a strong temptation, after converting the goods received into slaves, according to the contract, to send them singly to Cape Mount, Gallinas, and other slaving stations, and there dispose of them for their own benefit.

The coast dealers, over whom I can exercise some control, are under an equal temptation to violate their engagements just entered into with myself, to deliver the slaves to the agent at this place; and by collusion with inland dealers, have it in their power so effectually to cover any indirect practices in the matter as to prevent their detection. And this, in my opinion, they are certain to do, if the motives employed to assure their honesty are addressed only to their fears.

* Distant 15 miles from Cape Mesurado.

Hence, I am reduced to the alternative either to relinquish the hope of rescuing from perpetual bondage the whole of the eighty slaves purchased, or to be purchased, with the cargo of the schooner, and who are not yet delivered, or to engage to pay, on their safe arrival and surrender to the United States, at this agency, a small reward.

The latter is the course pursued. I have fixed the reward at ten dollars each, the lowest sum which, after paying for the safe keeping and conveyance of the slaves to the cape, will offer an inducement sufficient to counteract the temptation to send them off to a market where their full value may be realized the second time.

Under all the circumstances of this case, I beg leave to state that, in stipulating the payment of this small sum, I have acted in the confidence that the object is virtually embraced in the appropriations made under the act of Congress of "March 3d, 1818, in addition to the acts prohibiting the slave trade." The sums necessary to be advanced for these ransoms I shall, however, pay, in the first instance, out of my own pocket, and present an account of the same, which I trust will be refunded by the Government of the United States.

I have also to submit whether the bounty allowed by the fourth section of the same act, to such as aid in the liberation of the slaves unlawfully detained in bondage, of fifty dollars for every negro, mulatto, &c., who shall be delivered to the marshal or agent duly appointed to receive them, is not, in substantial justice, and may not be considered as legally due to the captors of the twenty individuals whose liberation is the subject of this communication. In my opinion, effects much more important than the value of the money itself might follow from the payment of this bounty, either to the managers of the American Colonization Society, or to the militia employed in the rescue of the slaves.

Respectfully, sir, I have the honor to be, your obedient, humble servant,

J. ASHMUN.

The Hon. Mr. SOUTHARD, Secretary United States Navy.

U. S. AGENCY FOR RECAPTURED AFRICANS, Cape Mesurado, December 8, 1825.

SIR: I have the honor to state that another unforeseen occurrence has placed at my disposal the large additional number of ninety-nine Africans, whom I caused to be released from their irons this morning at eight o'clock, and whom I judge to be proper objects of the beneficent provisions made by the Government of the United States for persons liberated from illegal bondage, under the laws for suppressing the slave trade.

On the fourth of November four of the men liberated at Digby on the ninth of the preceding month, impelled by that innate love of country which none of the vicissitudes of life can extinguish in the human bosom, deserted from the establishment, passed the Mesurado river and disappeared in the boundless woody region which extends to an unknown distance in the interior.

Knowing that, if not speedily brought back, they must inevitably terminate their desperate enterprise in hopeless slavery, I had recourse, without delay, to every means for their recovery which promised to succeed, but to no purpose. Intelligence of their desertion, with the offer of reward for their restoration, was immediately conveyed to the different tribes in friendly correspondence with the settlement, but no information was had of the fugitives before the fifth inst., when I received, from a source entitled to credit, intelligence that three of their number had been reduced to slavery and loaded with chains at the French slave factory, on the St. Paul, five miles (direct distance) from the cape.

On the morning of the 6th, I dispatched three men to demand the deserters in the name of the United States; and to inquire by what means they had fallen into the hands of the factors.

The demand was evasively replied to; but, in answer to the inquiry, it was stated that two Frenchmen, agents resident at the factory, had bought them. I then instructed the messengers charged with the order, to repeat it; they did so, but with no other effect than to draw from the two factors a written declaration of their purpose to detain the people indefinitely.

Finding the recovery of the men by mere rational methods too doubtful to justify any further delay, which, as a French schooner was lying near, ready to receive slaves, might subject them to be transported in a very few hours forever beyond the reach of the Government of the United States; and obliged to regard the ground taken by the factory as that of virtual defiance, which justified, from a growing concern founded in avarice and iniquity, the apprehension of eventual consequences fatal to the benevolent objects of this agency, I had no hesitation in resolving upon the unpleasant duty of forcibly subverting the establishment altogether.

Captain James C. Barbour, of the infantry, with eighteen men, was accordingly charged last night, at 9 o'clock, with the accomplishment of this service. Two boats were provided, in which this little force embarked at two o'clock this morning.

Ascending the Stockton, they arrived on the St. Paul at daybreak; twenty minutes afterwards the men were landed at the factory. In ten minutes the slaves, to the number of forty-three men, thirteen women, and forty-three children of both sexes, (in all ninety-nine) were in the custody of the officer, and in full march along the beach for Monrovia. The boats received the invalids and feeblest of the children, and stood along shore, at musket shot distance, abreast of the party advancing by land. The whole arrived safely at Monrovia at eight o'clock the same morning, just six hours after the setting out of the party, and eleven only after the first intimation given to the officer who so handsomely conducted it that its services would be required.

Of these people, ninety-seven are in perfect health, two only in a feeble condition, caused apparently by rigorous treatment.

Respectfully, sir, I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

J. ASHMUN.

P. S.—In the number of persons rescued are included the three deserters.

The Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the United States Navy, Washington City, U. S.

DECEMBER 11, 1825.

SIR: Subjoined to my letter of the evening of the 8th instant, I beg leave to communicate certain facts relative to the French slave trade, as carried on at the present time from this coast, and of which without a vigorous influence exerted by other governments, no hope of a speedy termination can be rationally entertained. My situation every month throws in my way some intelligent subjects of France, of whom some are interested in the continuance, and others actually engaged in the suppression of the slave trade; and, I regret to say, that both concur in the opinion that the true point of policy in their government, at present, requires a regulated continuance of the trade, and which the ministers of government are too wise not to perceive; that the demand for the products of tropical countries in France is much greater than can be supplied from their inconsiderable colonies, either in America or the East Indies; that, without foreign colonies, the nation can never have a productive foreign commerce, nor come to realize the various objects of advantage growing out of it.

The province of Cayenne offers a boundless extent of fertile territory, but thinly peopled, and, in consequence, uncultivated and unproductive. According to the ancient prejudices, laborers can only be obtained, to subdue and bring out the resources of this country, from the coast of Africa. But how to evade the stipulations of the solemn treaties of the government, so as to save appearances, and at the same time subject the trade in which those laborers are to be procured to that perfect surveillance for which the police and revenue system of France, beyond those of almost any other nation, are distinguished—to combine these conflicting objects in one system, is the result of some political inquiry, and is thus attempted. All outfits to the coast for this trade are understood by the merchants of France to be prohibited by particular injunction, and absolutely impossible to be made from any other ports of the empire, except St. Malois and Nantz; vessels cannot obtain clearances for these voyages elsewhere. But no difficulty, it is equally understood, is ever to be encountered at the custom houses of these ports, particularly of the latter, where it is reciprocally understood that clearances given to vessels to proceed to Africa for general cargoes, and thence to the colonies, authorize such vessels to traffic for, and transport to the latter, cargoes of slaves, and nothing else. The colonial authorities of Gaudaloupe, Martinique, Cayenne, &c., observe a perfect concert of action with the officers of the two ports in France already named; and, by admitting slave cargoes to entry, duty free, in effect pay the merchants a bounty on such cargoes.

The extent of the trade is, by this arrangement, better known in France itself, and prevented from being even suspected by the other governments of Europe, except as ascertained by its operations, observed on the coast of Africa and in America, and comes to be as exactly controlled and regulated by the ministry as any other branch of commerce carried on from French ports But, still further to save appearances, and guard the trade against interruption by foreign powers, France makes the coast of Africa one of her important naval stations. From four to eight of her vessels-of-war, mostly corvettes and brigs, rendezvous every year at Goré, with instructions to their commanders to pursue and suppress the slave trade. The interference of any foreign power in the service somewhat ostentatiously assigned to this naval force, it is but too well known that France utterly declines in any degree to consent to or tolerate. It is refused, not only as impolitic, but as unnecessary. It might, indeed, be both, were not the instructions under which her commanders act, in all cases, carefully made out in exact accommodation to other parts of the artificial system of which it is certain that this display of force forms a part. No cruiser is authorized even to subject to detention a slaver found on the coast, in whatever stage of his voyage, unless slaves are actually found on board the latter vessel at the time of her examination.

M. L'Achelier, the intelligent commandant of a detachment of the Goré station, assured me, in January, 1825, that between Cazamanca and Cape Palomas, in the short period of six weeks, he had visited forty-five vessels, of whose bad character the testimonies seen on board of them were conclusive; of these forty-five, twenty-two were Frenchmen, from Nantz and the colonies, of which his instructions clearly forbade the detention of more than five.

In April ensuing, I received the information from a perfectly authentic source that, of the five vessels sent under these circumstances for adjudication before the naval tribunal at Goré, only one was condemned; and M. L'Achelier amerced in damages, for the detention of the others, to three times the amount of his property.

The factors Vieux Pierre & Millot, whose establishment on the St. Paul was broken up on the 8th, have announced their intention to appeal to the government for redress, resting their claims on the principle which it has set up, never to suffer the inteference of a foreign power, either in the measures which she has thought proper to take for suppressing the trade, or in the punishment of her subjects for any supposed infraction of the municipal and commercial laws of France.

But, as I have assumed in justification of my procedure neither of these grounds, but the necessity of rescuing immediately from slavery, for the prevention of a greater and absolutely remediless injury, the subjects and protégées of the United States unlawfully sold and detained in bondage, and of abating a nuisance which foreigners, without the color of authority, had obtruded upon our own territory, (for the lands actually purchased of the nation comprehend the whole left bank of the St. Paul, on which the factory stood) I am confident that such a claim will never be prosecuted to my own government; or, if so urged, must be forthwith discontinued as soon as it merits an investigation.

Any testimony necessary to elucidate or establish the facts contained in my official report of the transaction, in my power to obtain, shall be cheerfully furnished, on a requisition from his excellency the President of the United States, or the honorable Secretary of the Navy.

Respectfully, sir, I have the honor to remain, your obedient servant,

J. ASHMUN.

The Hon. S. L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the U. S. Navy.

U. S. AGENCY FOR RECAPTURED AFRICANS, Cape Mesurado, January 22, 1826.

As an integral part of my dispatches by this conveyance, I have the honor to refer you to my letter dated October 14, detailing the circumstances connected with the punishment of the Spanish piratical schooner Clarida, to the plan of the coast accompanying it, as illustrative of the transaction; and to the statement of expenses incurred and property seized in the same expedition. It will be seen from these papers that fourteen miserable slaves fell into my hands on that occasion, who have been provided for agreeably to the instructions under which I have the honor to act.

I have also the honor to refer, as a part of my present communication, to my letter of the 27*th of October*, also enclosed, and a note explanatory, of the 28*th*, from which you will learn that an additiona number of six men, making in all, to that date, twenty persons, were cast for protection upon the United States establishment at this place, and have accordingly been provided for at the public expense.

I have also very particularly to solicit your attention to my letter of December 8, 1825, and the private note of the 11*th of the same month*, from which it will be perceived that still another addition of ninety-nine persons has been made to the number of liberated Africans connected with the agency.

The papers referred to are too minute, I trust, to require, on the subject to which they relate, any additional explanations. The whole number of persons placed at the disposal of the agency by these three several accessions, is 116, (to say one hundred and sixteen) making, with the fourteen previously in charge, one hundred and thirty. Many of the children are, by a temporary disposition, situated in the most respectable families of the colony, under indentures securing to them instruction at the common schools of the place, and every other advantage of which their age and circumstances render them capable. I have engaged a prudent young man to attend constantly on the remainder, at their daily labors, and bring the economy of the little community into which they are formed, into a gradual assimilation to the ideas of civilized life. They have nearly completed a village of dwellings, built in your own style, on a pleasant elevation of Cape Mesurado, about one-third of a mile distant from Thompson Town. Every individual of their number is in perfect health, and as an assemblage of rude and ignorant people, gathered out of nearly twenty different tribes of the country, pursue their labors with a good degree of spirit, union, and success.

For some months to come, it must remain necessary to afford them their entire support, or expose them to the certain danger of being seduced, or kidnapped, by the unprincipled slave dealers of the country, who wait their opportunity to bring them the second time under the chain, and dispose of them at the factories of Gallinas, or Trade Town.

The expense of clothing, providing with the first conveniences of civilized life, furnishing with tools and implements of industry, after our modes, and subsisting so considerable a number of people, thrown upon my hands without previous preparation for their reception, has already proved considerable, and has reduced me to the necessity of making purchases, and advances out of my own pocket, since the 10th day of October, to the amount of the several sums of $366.87\frac{1}{2}$, $260.35\frac{1}{2}$, $330.12, $462.42, $115.03*, $65.62†, $1,187.75. Total, $2,788.17.

The accounts of all these purchases are forwarded, with advices of the drafts given on the Navy Department in payment.

A few of these stores have been purchased at disadvantage; but most of them on very advantageous terms.

These purchases have given me the means of securing, in advance, rice necessary for several months' consumption, a precaution necessary to be taken early every dry season, as the country furnishes very little of that grain, and that little at very enhanced prices after the 1st of February, until the return of the ensuing harvest in September.

The lands of Cape Mesurado being wholly appropriated to settlers, and the former protégée of the government, who have been placed on the footing with settlers, it will be necessary, finally, to fix a large proportion of the last accessions on farms provided in the new settlements of the colony. But at present it would be the height of imprudence to suffer them to want the constant guardianship of their superintendents. Several have alredy been driven by their fears to attempt, and a few have, it is thought, effected their escape. No means in my power to employ for their recovery have been neglected, as their separation from the asylum is sure to be followed by their apprehension and sale, as soon as their lurking places shall be discovered by the natives of the country.

Vieux Pierre and Millot, the factors whose establishment on the St. Paul has been destroyed, were soon after reduced to extreme distress by the natives, who, believing those unfortunate men without the protection of the settlement, assembled in force, evidently with a design to rob them of the small remainder of their property. In this distress, they appealed to my humanity for protection. I consented to afford it, on condition of their abandoning their voyage, and instead of proceeding to the colonies, returning directly to France, as soon as the necessary preparations could be made for the voyage. To this condition they assented. I immediately sent a guard to bring them and their merchandise to Monrovia, where I have since furnished them and their five seamen with whatever necessaries and comforts the laws of hospitality require.

The schooner attached to the factory, after waiting in the offing several days, and receiving intelligence of the accident which had befallen the factory, made sail for France, without communicating with the factors ashore, otherwise than by billets, leaving seven Frenchmen on my hands. Three of these were shipped the first of January, from Cape Mount, on board of a French vessel bound to Martinique. Millot obtained a passage to a distant part of the coast, with a view to some profitable employment; and Captain Vieux Pierre, with a white servant, takes passage, in the vessel which conveys these dispatches, for the United States, whence he intends to return to his family in France. An industrious young man belonging to the concern has found employment in this colony.

J. ASHMUN.

The Hon. S. L. SOUTHARD, Secretary U. S. Navy, Washington City.

MONROVIA, April 19, 1826.

SIR: The extraordinary labors consequent on the new arrangements required by the arrival of Dr. Peaco, the United States agent for recaptured Africans, and who was the bearer of your favor of the 31st December, 1825, together with the expedition against Trade Town, from which I have just returned with the troops of the colony in safety, render it impossible to prepare the accounts of the agency, for the first quarter of the year, in time to forward them by the "Indian Chief." I hope to send them by the very next conveyance.

In my accounts from the Treasury Department, I perceive myself charged with a requisition for $220, in favor of Thomes Tyson, for which I shall probably be able to show myself entitled to a credit of the same amount.

I have the honor to state that I delivered over, to the hands of Dr. Peaco, on the 17th instant, fifty-three Africans, taken from the piratical establishment at Trade Town, on the 13th and 14th, making the whole number delivered over to the United States agency, since the 10th of October, 1825, one hundred and seventy-two; and which, with the aid of Heaven, and two Colombian armed vessels, the forces of the colony under my direction razed to the ground on the 15th instant.

* By way of Boston, under another enclosure. † Forwarded through Rev. Mr. Hawley.

Three vessels attached to the factories of Trade Town have fallen into the hands of French and Colombian cruisers on this station; and the catastrophe of that mart of human flesh, now the last on the whole windward coast of western Africa, is confidently believed to have annihilated, finally, the slave trade within five hundred miles of this settlement.

Dr. Woodside, the bearer of these dispatches to the United States, and who returns in consequence of a severe wound received in the late expedition, for which he had generously volunteered his services, has also an abstract of the journal, detailing all the circumstances of the affair; and will be able to communicate, verbally or otherwise, all the information relating to it that may be called for.

Captain John Chase, commander of the Colombian armed schooner Jacinta, well known in the United States, of which he is a native, as a gentleman of the most honorable principles, and consummate bravery, has rendered us services in this affair, without which success could not have been obtained. His vessel, his marines, arms, ammunition, and personal exertions were, in the entire spirit of the late convention between the Colombian and United States Governments for co-operating against the slave trade, wholly at our devotion; and as long as the heavy curse of this traffic shall, as the fruit of the late expedition, cease to be felt in western Africa, will the services of this gallant commander and his spirited crew be entitled to the gratitude and applause of the world.

The character of nearly all the late transactions of Europeans at Trade Town having been notoriously piratical, it will become a duty of the first obligation to direct against it, and against every attempt to restore it, the little floating force preparing in the colony to be placed under the command of Lieutenant McKean. The arrival of that officer on the coast is expected with particular anxiety.

Associated with Captain Chase, in the affair of Trade Town, is to be mentioned with a particular sense of obligation for his active co-operation, Captain Cottrell, of the Colombian brig-of-war El Vencedor, who covered our landing under a dangerous fire from the piratical Europeans ashore, and brought the guns of his vessels to bear upon the enemy's lines in our rear, during the 36 hours we were hotly engaged with him, after obtaining possession of the town. He supplied our little force ashore with 3,000 rounds of musket ammunition; placed under my command his captain of marines, with twenty men, and expended 130 rounds of cannon shot upon the enemy.

Dr. Peaco's health was thought to be not sufficiently braced, by previous exposure in an African climate, to admit of his accompanying the expedition; and it is feared the few hours which remain before the sailing of the Indian Chief, will hardly allow of his writing in detail by this conveyance. This circumstance will apologize for the otherwise unnecessary length and minuteness of this letter, in the conclusion of which I beg only to add, that the first class of Africans are nearly off the hands of the government, several having finished their terms of apprenticeship, and being now established in business for themselves.

About one hundred and sixty of the newly liberated remain, of whom fifty are so situated, in respectable families, as to be a slight charge on the public fund.

The passengers by the Indian Chief, one hundred and fifty-four in number, are all on the sick list, but the character of the disease under which they suffer is favorable beyond any former example, and gives hope of its speedy termination.

Respectfully, &c., J. ASHMUN.

The Hon. S. L. SOUTHARD, Secretary United States Navy.

BALTIMORE, July 31, 1826.

The visit of Mr. Ashmun to Trade Town was in consequence of the inhabitants of that place having seduced away from the colony about thirty free blacks belonging to it, and selling them to the Spanish and French slave traders. Mr. Ashmun had frequently demanded those blacks from King West, threatening him with an armed force if he did not give them up, which threat he altogether disregarded, and continued his depredations on the inhabitants of the colony.

On my arrival at Mesurado, Mr. Ashmun communicated the above intelligence to me, and requested that I would accompany him in the expedition to Trade Town, which I consented to, and took Mr. Ashmun, with about thirty troops, on board, and proceeded for that place, which we reached the day following, and found at anchor off the town the Colombian brig El Vencedor, having with her a Spanish brig captured the day before. I communicated the object of our visit to the commander of that vessel, who cheerfully agreed to accompany us.

As we approached the shore, the Spanish and French slaves, occupying three factories, commenced firing on our boats, notwithstanding the boat in which Mr. Ashmun was had the colonial flag hoisted. We however succeeded in landing and taking possession of the factories. Mr. Ashmun addressed a note to King West, stating that the object of his visit was to reclaim the people of the colony, and if he gave them up peaceably, all other hostilities would cease, threatening him with the destruction of the town if he did not immediately comply with the demand. King West acknowledged that the blacks had been seduced away, and sold to the Spaniards, but pleaded inability to get them within two or three days, as they, with four or five hundred others, had been released on our approach to the shore, and had run into the woods. He stated, through his messenger to Mr. Ashmun, that he wished to be on the most friendly terms with the colony, and that he would have all the slaves belonging to the Spaniards, as well as those of the colony, delivered up to us.

On the first day he sent in fifteen or twenty, on the second as many more, and on the third day, a quantity making altogether fifty-two. But it was evident from his tardy movements, and the miserable appearance of the blacks, that his object was to divert our attention until he could rally his forces.

On the third day, as was anticipated, they commenced hostilities with a number not less than two or three thousand men, well armed, and it was not until the vessels were brought near the shore, and several broadsides fired on them, that we succeeded in driving them into the woods. We then put fire to the town, which contained about one hundred and fifty houses, and destroyed it. The factories were occupied by us two days after, during which time we had some little skirmishing.

Finding no prospect of getting the slaves, we re-embarked our troops, putting fire to the factories, which contained a large quantity of powder, arms, munitions of war, and sundry articles of merchandise belonging to the Spaniards. Mr. Ashmun conducted himself strictly neutral towards the Spaniards, notwithstanding it was pretty well ascertained that some of them had committed acts of piracy in the waters of Mesurado, a short time previous. The fifty-two blacks were landed at the colony, and before I left the Cape, Mr. Ashmun informed me that King West had sent to him to treat for peace.

JOHN CHASE.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, August 10, 1826.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of communications from Mr. Ashmun, of 14th, 27th and 28th October; 8th and 11th December; 5th and 22d January, and 19th April, together with their several enclosures, which shall be noticed in the order of their dates. The accounts have been deposited with the Fourth Auditor, to whom they should be transmitted for examination and settlement.

The first letter, of 14th October, relates to the transactions of the Spanish schooner Clarida; the depredations committed by her on the British brig Tom Cod; and the means pursued to punish the conduct of the crew of the Spanish vessel, which resulted in the release of fourteen slaves, at Poor river. The next, dated 17th October, is a continuation of transactions respecting the Clarida, and a narrative of an expedition to the St. Paul, which terminated in the release of six more slaves. The third letter, dated 28th October, assigns the reason for, and justification of his conduct, and proposes a method for redeeming such persons as may be held in bondage in the neighborhood of the settlement. The fourth letter, 8th December, announces an addition of ninety-nine persons to the agency, released in an expedition undertaken to recover four of those previously taken, who had fled from the protection of the agency. The fifth and next, is a private letter, dated 11th December, giving a view of the manner in which the trade is now carried on by the French and others, and the means resorted to, to save appearances and an open evasion or violation of their treaties. The sixth letter is dated 5th January, and contains a review of his past conduct and transactions at the agency. The next, 22d January, is a continuation of occurrences at the agency, the measures adopted to provide for the addition to the numbers occasioned by the excursions to the neighboring factories, and refers to a part of a communication to the Colonization Society, for the reasons for Mr. Ashmun's wishing to return to the United States, which he intends to accomplish, should the situation of affairs permit. The last letter received is dated 19th April, by the Indian Chief, and informs of his return from an expedition against Trade Town, and your arrival. The cause and object of the expedition not being stated in the letter, it is presumed that one must have been written of an earlier date, which has not been received. In the absence of this explanation, I have sought light from other sources, and have been permitted by the Colonization Society to read some of his letters to it; and have also received a letter from Captain Chase, which furnished the probable causes and objects of the expedition. Upon them, it is not the intention now to express a decided opinion.

Should it appear hereafter that some of the recaptured Africans had been taken to Trade Town, confined, and were about to be sold again into slavery, and that Mr. Ashmun went no farther than was found necessary to rescue them, his conduct, as the agent of the government, will not be condemned. So far as he has acted for the Colonization Society, in recapturing the colonists, he will look to that society, both to explain his conduct, and be justified or condemned by it.

The same remark is applicable to the previous expeditions. So far as he acted as agent of the society, the government does not mean to intefere with his responsibility to it. But the President thinks it necessary to disapprove of his conduct in those expeditions, so far as it has any connection with the government. As agent of the United States, for a specified object, he had no justifiable cause to break up establishments supposed to belong to the owners of the Clarida, or any other persons, and to take the people from there to the agency, to be maintained at the public expense. Our government, in establishing the agency, had one object only in view—to provide a place to which Africans, illegally brought into the United States, or lawfully captured by our cruisers upon the ocean, might be carried and taken care of, until they could, with propriety, be restored to their own country, tribe, or nation. It has not intended to authorize, nor has it authorized, a forcible and warlike attack upon the citizens or subjects of any nation with a view to suppress the slave trade, or to accomplish any other object, no matter how desirable, to advance the cause of humanity. You will therefore furnish to Mr. Ashmun a copy of this letter, that he may see the light in which his conduct is viewed by the government.

He has made a claim for the bounty allowed by the 3d and 4th sections of the act of 3d March, 1819; but it cannot be granted. The case of Africans liberated from their captors, on the shores of Africa, does not come within the provisions of that act. It is understood, from his several letters, that about 170 Africans were liberated in his various expeditions, and brought to the agency, and are now on expense there; the accounts for their support to this time will perhaps be paid; but they must cease to be a charge to the government, and restored to their tribes as speedily as possible, or supported in some other mode. The fund devoted to this object is now much reduced, and, unless increased by Congress, will not bear a continuance of the burden. Should captures be made during the year, recourse must be had to another appropriation to enable the Department to comply with the law.

For the same reason, the reward of $10, offered by him for each negro delivered, is not approved; it was not prudent, nor authorized by his instructions from the government.

In censuring the course of Mr. Ashmun, it is not intended to convey an idea that he was actuated by improper motives, or to regret the effect which seems to have been produced upon the slave trade itself. His motives were probably of the purest kind, and his zeal excited and confirmed by his humanity. Everything which represses that trade appeals strongly to our best feelings for excuse and approbation. All that is intended by the Executive, is, to disapprove the act in him, as its special agent for other objects.

In other respects, the conduct and policy of Mr. Ashmun seem to merit commendation; and his intercourse with the surrounding tribes to be dicta ed by sound discretion, and calculated to insure permanent success and respect. By conveying these opinions through you, you will be informed of the views of the Department as to the proper conduct of your agency, and govern yourself accordingly.

Two additional considerations seem proper to be repeated to you: to preserve the utmost economy, and to keep the business and accounts of the society, and the agency, as much separated as possible. These duties have become even more important than they were when your instructions were prepared, and when they were pressed upon you.

It was the intention of the Department to have sent, before this, the recaptured Africans, now in Georgia, to the agency; but questions are still pending undecided in the court, respecting a part of them, which render it still impossible to send any of the number. They will be dispatched without the least unnecessary delay, when these questions are decided.

I believe I informed you that the Spark would be sent to the agency, as soon as she returned from the West Indies. On her return, however, she was found so much decayed, that it was necessary to sell her. Since that time, no vessel fit for the purpose has returned: I am daily looking for the arrival of one.

I am, respectfully, &c.,

SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Doctor JOHN W. PEACO, United States Agent for Liberated Africans, Cape Mesurado.

Extract of a letter from Doctor John W. Peaco to the Secretary of the Navy, dated—

HOLMES HOLE, October 30, 1826.

On my arrival at the Cape, I found the number of recaptured Africans considerably increased, to which were afterwards added several who were liberated and brought up from Trade Town; the expenses for the sustenance of this class of settlers will, therefore, be proportionably greater, and I would respectfully request that supplies for their support and comfort be sent out, as what have been heretofore sent were intended for a much smaller number. Tobacco and other trading articles can be exchanged to great advantage, and should be provided for them in proportionably larger quantities. It is calculated, from the quantity of land which they have cleared and are continuing to clear for cultivation, and the cassada and other articles they are raising, that the expenses for the support of the present number will, in the course of a year or two, be comparatively trifling.

We find those a very useful set of people at the settlement, and much expense is saved, both to the government and to the Colonization Society, by employing them as laborers, and in clearing the land, when natives from the vicinity must otherwise be hired, the cost for which would be much greater than all the expenses for the support of those people, as, in addition to their pay, we should have to supply them with provisions; whereas the recaptured African is satisfied with his rations and clothing, with a little tobacco. The articles of diet with which we furnish them, and for which they in general give a preference, are rice, cassada, and palm oil, which we procure from the natives in exchange for tobacco, rum, cotton cloths, &c., supplies of which should be always on hand.

The liberated Africans who were sent out from the United States, and the colonists who have been there more than a year, support themselves, and are no longer much expense to us, and the balance will in a short time be able to provide for their own maintenance; we are obliged, however, to employ many of them as laborers, mechanics, &c., who draw their pay from the public stores; it will therefore be necessary to keep a supply of provisions, trading articles, &c., to furnish them; it is found to be the cheapest mode of compensating them, and they have no means while thus employed of procuring them elsewhere.

As to the defensive state of the settlement, I would respectfully observe, that the uniform companies and local militia are sufficient, provided they are furnished with the means; there is, however, in my opinion, a necessity for a small military force to guard the public property, and prevent surprise. Since the affair of Trade Town, the slave traders who traffic there have shown every disposition to distress the colonists and others at the Cape, which they can do and have done with impunity, in consequence of our not having the aid of a naval force here, by which we might prevent them. It is dangerous for a merchant vessel to approach our roadstead, as information is immediately conveyed down the coast to Trade Town, (a distance of less than one hundred miles.) A vessel is immediately selected for the purpose, which is manned, and proceeds to Mesurado, where, in full view of us all, they plunder any vessels which may be lying there, without our having any means of preventing them. A daring outrage to this effect took place the 27th of July last, an account of which has been lately published in the newspapers. After robbing the vessel and abusing the officers and crew, they proceeded very deliberately to a trading factory in the vicinity, where we understood they were collecting slaves when I left the coast. There are other cases, though not so flagrant, and we are threatened with a repetition of them. We have endeavored to make terms with King West, of Trade Town, but he will not listen to any; and nothing but the appearance of a naval force will bring him to terms. The necessity of having and keeping constantly on the coast of Africa a naval force, is daily more evident. Trade Town could be effectually blockaded by a sloop-of-war, by which means the slave trade would be abolished as far as four degrees north of the Equator. Our recaptured Africans are enticed away, and sold there to slave dealers and we cannot recover them. It is at considerable risk that our boats venture out for the purpose of procuring supplies for the settlement; our commerce is entirely unprotected; the petty kings insult us and threaten us with war; and we had it in contemplation, when I left Monrovia, to break up one of our factories down the coast, from which we were regulary supplied with palm oil, rice, and other articles of diet, on account of the hostile disposition shown by the natives in its vicinity to the factors, and the threats of King West, which we have no means of preventing him from executing. A naval force, sir, is indispensable, if it is the determination of government and the society to continue the establishment. The colonists and liberated Africans cannot be considered safe without it, and there is no protection for any vessel which may arrive there with either emigrants or freight.

With some of the lumber which was sent out by government a large house has been erected, intended as a receptacle for the Africans expected there from Georgia, where they can be made comfortable until they clear away lands and build houses for themselves; provision should be made for their support for twelve months, after which they can maintain themselves.

X.

List of deaths in the navy of the United States, since December 2, 1825.

Names.	Date of death.	Cause of death.	Place of death.
CAPTAIN.
Robert T. Spence	September 26, 1826..	Bilious fever	Near Baltimore.
LIEUTENANTS.
Raymond H. Perry	March 12, 1826..	.....	New York.
James M'Gowan	February 19, 1826..	Steamboat accident..	Fredonia, Indiana.
William Lowe	May 2, 1826..	.....	Baltimore.
T. S. Browne	September 6, 1826..	.....	Austerlitz, N. Y.
SURGEONS AND MATES.
Robert S. Kearney	June 7, 1826..	Consumption	Washington.
William D. Babbitt	May 24, 1826..	Small-pox	Rio de Janeiro.
John Fitzhugh	July 6, 1826..	Effects of fever	Off Baltimore.
Samuel Biddle	February 14, 1826..	Fever	Thompson's Island.
De Witt Birch	May 1, 1826..	Typhus fever	Mediterranean.
PURSERS.
R. C. Ludlow	May 15, 1826..	.....	New York.
A. Y. Humphreys	February 6, 1826..	Pulmonary disease...	Callao.
CHAPLAIN.
N. Andrews	.....	.....
MIDSHIPMEN.
Samuel Renshaw	October 11, 1826..	Rupt. of blood vessel	Philadelphia.
Edward S. Lewis	July 25, 1826..	.....	Baltimore.
J. Hansford	September 10, 1826..	.....	Boston.
P. M. Hail	June 4, 1826..	.....	Salisbury, N. C.
Henry Skinner	March 31, 1826..	Peritonial inflammation	Norfolk.
SAILINGMASTERS.
Daniel Jones	May 21, 1826..	.....	New York.
Joseph Lindsay	May 19, 1826..	.....	Marblehead.
Lewis B. Page	September 16, 1826..	.....	Gosport, Va.
NAVY AGENT.
John Randall	June 10, 1826..	.....	Annapolis.
LIEUTENANTS OF MARINES.
S. J. Coejeman	December 26, 1825..	Typhus fever	Pacific.
William T. Bourne	March 4, 1826..	In a duel	Norfolk.

Y.

List of resignations in the navy of the United States, since December 2, 1825.

Names.	Date of resignation.
CAPTAIN.
David Porter	August 18, 1826.
LIEUTENANTS.
Francis J. Mitchell	November 27, 1826.
Zachariah W. Nixon	March 21, 1826.
David H. Porter	July 26, 1826.
SURGEONS AND MATES.
Samuel D. Heap	December 27, 1825.
Charles B. Hamilton	April 12, 1826.
Charles B. Jaudon	May 4, 1826.
Richard Stevens	May 11, 1826.
James Norris	June 20, 1826.
CHAPLAIN.
John McCarty	April 21, 1826.
MIDSHIPMEN.
Horatio N. Russell	January 14, 1826.
Lucius C. Heylin	January 16, 1826.
Francis Mallory	January 17, 1826.

Y.—List of resignations—Continued.

Names.	Date of resignation.
James A. Hemphill	January 24, 1826.
C. S. Whittington	February 17, 1826.
Alfred Cutler	March 8, 1826.
Alexander Van Dyke	March 10, 1826.
James W. Abbott	March 23, 1826.
John M. Doyle	April 6, 1826.
William Leggett	April 17, 1826.
Richard S. Clinton	April 20, 1826.
James W. Marshall	May 19, 1826.
Griffen Tompkins	May 22, 1826.
William B. G. Taylor	June 9, 1826.
Henry A. Chambers	June 23, 1826.
William D. B. Trotter	July 12, 1826.
Dudley Walker	August 21, 1826.
Alexander Thompson	August 8, 1826.
Charles E. Hawkins	October 17, 1826.
James S. Cosby	August 28, 1826.
Henry Etting	November 7, 1826.
SAILINGMASTERS.
Alexander W. Macomb	May 19, 1826.
Daniel Dobbins	June 5, 1826.
Richard Dealy	October 18, 1826.
BOATSWAIN.
C. P. Gideon, acting	June 3, 1826.
GUNNERS.
James Bogman	October 17, 1826.
Thomas Barry	November 9, 1826.
CARPENTERS.
John Justice	July 6, 1826.
William E. Sheffield	October 17, 1826.
SAILMAKERS.
William Baldwin	April 21, 1826.
Nathan S. Angell	May 3, 1826.
LIEUTENANTS OF MARINES.
Frederick Thomas	July 18, 1826.
James D. Burnham	July 24, 1826.

Z.

Copy of the estimates for the naval service for the year 1827.

NAVY COMMISSIONERS' OFFICE, November 9, 1826.

The Commissioners of the Navy, in obedience to your directions, have the honor to hand you herewith—

An estimate of the expenses of the navy for the year 1827, marked A.

Statements explanatory thereof, marked B, C, D, E, F, G, H.

Exhibit showing the disposition and force of the ships and vessels of the United States navy, built and building, marked I, and an estimate of the expense of the office of the Commissioners of the Navy for the ensuing year, marked K.

In further explanation of the 6th item of the estimates on paper A, the Commissioners would respectfully observe that the security and preservation of the public property, necessarily of great amount, render it indispensably necessary, in their opinion, that the navy yards should be enclosed by walls substantially built of brick or stone. Without such enclosures, no vigilance of the sentinels, however their numbers may be extended, can protect the property from depredators and incendiaries.

The large amount and great variety of stores indispensably necessary to be kept on hand, require that buildings should be erected to protect them against pilferers, and from destruction by fire, &c., &c.

The buildings for officers' quarters are required for the accommodation of those attached to the yards, in order that they may be conveniently situated to perform the duties required of them, and by their presence add to the security of the public property, and, at all times, contribute to the prompt suppression of any improper conduct on the part of the numerous persons connected with the establishment. In the opinion of the board it would be true economy to erect suitable buildings for this object, at each yard not already provided with them. The annual allowances made to officers for house rent, &c., would, in a short time, repay the cost of their construction.

The receiving and shipping stores, and the dispatch and economy so all-important in fitting out our vessels, make the wharves estimated for highly necessary.

The judicious selection of sites for the erection of buildings necessary for the yards, and for building and repairing the vessels of the United States, requires, that certain parts of the respective yards should be leveled and filled up.

The covering the roofs of the ship houses with slate, copper, or tin, is not only to protect them from accident by fire, and prevent loss or injury to the ships within them, but the immense loss of other property also within the yard. So extensive a fire as one or more of those large buildings would make can readily be conceived as carrying destruction to all within its influence. It is presumed that views of economy, or a disposition to lessen the expense as much as possible, led to the practice of covering the roofs of those buildings with shingles. Inventions were afterwards made of reservoirs, spouts, forcing pumps, &c., &c., to give protection to the roofs against that destructive element, fire, but without success, and the Commissioners, under a sense of official duty, earnestly recommend the appropriation.

A very serious alarm was experienced on the 31st of May last, at the Boston yard. Captain Crane, under date of the 1st June, writes to the Commissioners, "that he deemed it his duty to acquaint them with a very alarming circumstance that yesterday threatened ship house No. 1, ships Virginia, Independence, Columbus, and Java, besides endangering the public storehouses and other buildings."

"A fire broke out about 4 P. M. in the upper part of Main street, Charlestown, the wind fresh to the northward and westward; our engines, &c., were immediately got in readiness; burning shingles were shortly driven into the yard and on board the ships: owing to the great drought, a small brand communicated to the roof of ship house No. 1, and it blazed; to the precautions taken, and to the activity of our own people, I attribute the safety of a vast amount of public property; the tide had just begun to make, and the water in the wells was low; had it occurred in the night, I fear the consequences would have proved serious; our engines are incapable of throwing water on the roofs of the ship houses."

The preceding extract will serve to show the great danger to be apprehended from fire within the yard, when so great an amount of property was jeopardized from one originating without the limits of the yard, and would seem to warn us to use every precaution against so destructive an enemy. Had the occurrence stated by Capt. Crane taken place in the night, property to the amount of more than a million of dollars would probably have been destroyed within the yard; whereas, had the roof of the ship house been of incombustible materials, no loss could have resulted from the occurrence.

The land recommended to be purchased for the extension of the Norfolk yard would be a valuable acquisition to the government, as well as to that yard; and as it is contemplated to secure it by a permanent enclosure, it would be desirable that provision for the purchase of the land should be made, previous to putting up the wall; if afterwards purchased, it would cost an extra expense, probably equivalent to the cost of the land.

The Pensacola Navy yard being a new establishment, where accommodations of every description are required, the estimates must necessarily be considerable, and may appear high; but the amount is, in the opinion of the Commissioners, indispensable to make the improvements necessary to render it a useful establishment.

Whilst on the subject of navy yard improvements, the board, with great deference, respectfully suggest the expediency of again urging, in the strongest manner upon Congress, to make provision to defray the expenses of a board of commissioners, to be composed of three naval officers and two civil engineers, to examine the different yards, and fix upon the plan best adapted to the arrangement of all the docks, building ships, and other establishments proper to be erected within them; which plans, when once approved by the President of the United States, shall be rigidly adhered to in all future improvements, unless deviations therefrom should be specially authorized by him.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, sir, your most obedient servant,

WM. BAINBRIDGE.

Hon. SAM'L L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

A.

There will be required for the navy, during the year 1827, three millions and fourteen thousand eight hundred and two dollars and ninety-two cents, in addition to any balances which may remain unexpended on the 1st January, 1827.

1.	Pay, subsistence, and established allowances for all officers, seamen, and others, belonging to the navy, and for all persons attached to the civil establishment of the yards	$1,343,348 00
2.	For provisions	579,148 54
3.	For the repairs of vessels in ordinary, and for the wear and tear of vessels in commission	450,000 00
4.	For medicines, surgical instruments, hospital stores, and all other expenses on account of the sick	50,000 00
5.	Ordnance and ordnance stores	35,000 00
6.	For improvements and repairs of navy yards	332,306 38
7.	For defraying the expenses which may accrue during the year 1827, for the following purposes: for freight and transportation of materials and stores of every description; for wharfage and dockage; for storage and rent; for traveling expenses of officers, and transportation of seamen; for house rent or chamber money, and for fuel and candles, to officers, other than those attached to navy yards and shore stations; for commissions, clerk hire, office rent, stationery and fuel to Navy agents; for premiums and incidental expenses of recruiting; for apprehending deserters; for compensation to judge advocates; for per diem allowance to persons attending courts-martial and courts of inquiry, and to officers engaged on extra service beyond the limits of their stations; for printing and for stationery of every description; for books, charts, nautical and mathematical instruments, chronometers, models, and drawings; for purchase and repairs of steam and fire engines, and for machinery; for purchase and maintenance of oxen and horses, and for carts, wheels, and workmen's tools of every description; for postage of letters on public service; for pilotage; for cabin furniture of vessels in commission; for taxes on navy yards and public property; for assistance rendered to public vessels in distress; for incidental labor at navy yards, not applicable to any other appropriation; for coal and other fuel for forges, foundries, steam engines; and for candles, oil and fuel, for vessels in commission, and in ordinary, and for no other object or purpose whatever $220,000 00

8. For contingent expenses for objects arising in the year 1827, and not hereinbefore enumerated 5,000 00

$3,014,802 92

B.

Estimate of the pay and subsistence of all persons of the navy, attached to vessels in commission.

	Ships of the line.	Frigates.		Sloops.		Schooners.	Total each grade.	Amount of pay and subsistence.
		First class.	Second class.	First class.	Second class.
Number of each class	1	3	2	8	3	4
Captains	2	3	2	1	.....	...	8	$17,630 00
Masters commandant	.....	.....	.....	7	3	1	11	11,935 00
Lieutenants commandant	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	3	3	4,068 75
Lieutenants	9	15	8	24	9	12	77	51,012 50
Masters	1	3	2	8	3	1	18	10,282 50
Pursers	1	3	2	8	3	4	21	11,996 25
Surgeons	1	3	2	8	3	...	17	11,751 25
Surgeons' mates	3	6	4	8	3	4	28	12,635 00
Chaplains	1	3	2	.....	.....	...	6	3,427 50
Midshipmen	30	54	28	80	24	21	237	54,036 00
Secretaries	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	...	1	1,000 00
Schoolmasters	1	3	2	8	.....	...	14	5,477 50
Clerks	1	3	2	8	3	4	21	6,300 00
Boatswains	1	3	2	8	3	...	17	5,631 25
Gunners	1	3	2	8	3	4	21	6,956 25
Carpenters	1	3	2	8	3	...	17	5,631 25
Sailmakers	1	3	2	8	3	...	17	5,631 25
Boatswains' mates	6	9	6	16	6	8	51	11,628 00
Gunners' mates	3	6	4	8	3	...	24	5,472 00
Carpenters' mates	3	6	4	8	3	5	29	6,612 00
Sailmakers' mates	1	3	2	.....	.....	1	7	1,596 00
Quartermasters	10	24	16	40	12	16	118	25,428 00
Quartergunners	22	36	16	64	18	13	169	36,504 00
Yeomen	3	9	6	24	9	5	56	12,096 00
Captains' stewards	1	3	2	8	3	4	21	4,536 00
Cooks' stewards	1	3	2	8	3	4	21	4,536 00
Coopers	1	3	8	8	3	...	17	3,672 00
Armorers	1	3	2	8	3	...	17	3,672 00
Armorers' mates	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	4	4	720 00
Masters-at-arms	1	3	2	8	3	...	17	3,672 00
Ships' corporals	5	6	4	.....	.....	...	15	2,520 00
Cooks	1	3	2	8	3	4	21	4,536 00
Cooks' mates	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	...	1	144 00
Master of the band	1	3	2	.....	.....	...	6	1,296 00
Musicians, 1st class	6	12	6	.....	.....	...	24	3,456 00
Musicians, 2d class	5	9	4	.....	.....	...	18	2,160 00
Seamen	280	450	240	480	150	56	1,656	238,464 00
Ordinary seamen	260	510	260	400	120	40	1,590	190,800 00
Boys	40	45	20	80	30	17	232	16,704 00
Pay and subsistence for six months, for							4,648	$805,686 25
returning from the Mediterranean ...	3	1	.....	2	.....	...	.....	132,040 25
Pay and subsistence for four months, for returning from the Pacific	.....	1	.....	.....	1	...	.....	30,817 50
Total	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	...	.....	$968,544 00

C.

Statement of the pay and rations, and all other allowances of officers and others, at the navy yards and hospitals.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H.

	Number.	Pay per month.	Rations per day.	House rent per annum.	Candles per annum.	Cords of wood per annum.	Servants at $8.	Servants at $6.	Amount of pay, rations, and allowances per annum.
Yard.
Captain	1	$100	16	.....	65	30	3	.....	$3,466 75
Master commandant	1	60	5	$300	40	20	2	.....	2,010 75
Lieutenant	1	40	3	.....	20	20	1	.....	1,081 00
Master	1	40	2	200	20	12	1	.....	1,141 75
Surgeon	1	50	2	200	20	20	1	.....	1,309 75
Purser	1	40	2	200	20	12	1	.....	1,141 75
Midshipmen	2	19	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	638 50
Boatswain	1	20	2	.....	12	9	.....	1	651 75
Gunner	1	20	2	.....	12	9	.....	1	651 75
Carpenter's mate	1	19	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	319 25
Steward	1	18	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	307 25
									$12,720 25
Ordinary.
Able seamen	4	12	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	$941 00
Ordinary seamen	6	10	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	1,267 50
									$2,208 50
Civil department.
Storekeeper	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	$1,700 00
Clerk to storekeeper	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	250 00
Clerk of the yard	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	600 00
Naval constructor	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	2,000 00
Clerk to constructor	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	240 00
Porter	1	25	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	300 00
									$5,090 00
Whole amount	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	$20,018 75

BOSTON.

Yard.
Captain	1	$100	16	.....	65	30	3	.....	$3,466 75
Master commandant	1	60	5	.....	40	20	2	.....	1,710 75
Lieutenant	1	40	3	.....	20	20	1	.....	1,080 00
Master	1	40	2	.....	20	12	1	.....	941 75
Master	1	40	2	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	662 50
Surgeon	1	50	2	.....	20	20	1	.....	1,109 75
Surgeon's mate	1	30	2	$145	16	14	.....	1	950 75
Purser	1	40	2	200	20	12	1	.....	1,141 75
Chaplain	1	40	2	250	.....	.....	.....	.....	912 50
Midshipman	4	19	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	1,277 00
Boatswain	1	20	2	90	12	9	.....	1	741 75
Gunner	1	20	2	.....	12	9	.....	1	651 75
Carpenter's mate, qualified as caulker	1	19	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	319 25
Steward	1	18	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	307 25
									$15,274 50
Ordinary.
Lieutenant	1	40	3	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	$753 75
Master	1	40	2	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	662 50
Carpenter	1	20	2	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	422 50
Carpenter's mate	1	19	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	319 25
Boatswain's mate	1	19	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	319 25
Able seamen	12	12	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	2,823 00
Ordinary seamen	24	10	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	5,070 00
									$10,370 25

C.—Statement of pay and rations—Continued.

	Number.	Pay per month.	Rations per day.	House rent per annum.	Candles per annum.	Cords of wood per annum.	Servants at $8.	Servants at $6.	Amount of pay, rations, and allowances per annum.
Hospital.
Surgeon	1	$50	2	$200	20	20	1	.....	$1,309 75
Surgeon's mate	1	30	2	145	16	14	.....	.....	950 75
Steward	1	18	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	307 25
Nurses	2	10	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	422 50
Washers	2	8	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	374 50
Cook	1	12	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	235 25
									$3,600 00
Civil department.
Storekeeper	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	$1,700 00
Clerk to storekeeper	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	450 00
Clerk to the yard	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	900 00
Clerk to commandant	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	750 00
Clerk to commandant	1	30	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	360 00
Naval constructor	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	2,300 00
Clerk to naval constructor	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	420 00
Inspector and meas. of timber	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	900 00
Porter	1	25	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	300 00
									$8,080 00
Whole amount	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	$37,324 75

NEW YORK.

Yard.
Captain	1	$100	16	.....	65	30	3	.....	$3,466 75
Master commandant	1	60	5	$300	40	20	2	.....	2,010 75
Lieutenant	1	40	3	200	20	20	1	.....	1,281 00
Master	1	40	2	200	20	12	1	.....	1,141 75
Surgeon	1	50	2	200	20	20	1	.....	1,309 75
Surgeon's mate	1	30	2	145	16	14	.....	1	950 75
Purser	1	40	2	200	20	12	1	.....	1,141 75
Chaplain	1	40	2	250	.....	.....	.....	.....	912 50
Midshipmen	4	19	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	1,277 00
Boatswain	1	20	2	90	12	9	.....	1	741 75
Gunner	1	20	2	90	12	9	.....	1	741 75
Carpenter's mate, qualified as caulker	1	19	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	319 25
Steward	1	18	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	307 25
									$15,602 00
Ordinary.
Lieutenant	1	40	3	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	$753 75
Master	1	40	2	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	662 50
Carpenter	1	20	2	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	422 50
Carpenter's mate	1	19	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	319 25
Boatswain's mate	1	19	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	319 25
Able seamen	12	12	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	2,823 00
Ordinary seamen	24	10	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	5,070 00
									$10,370 25
Hospital.
Surgeon	1	50	2	200	20	20	1	.....	$1,309 75
Surgeon's mate	1	30	2	145	16	14	.....	1	950 75
Steward	1	18	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	307 25
Nurses	2	10	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	422 50
Washers	2	8	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	374 50
Cook	1	12	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	235 25
									$3,600 00

C.—Statement of pay and rations—Continued.

	Number.	Pay per month.	Rations per day.	House rent per annum.	Candles per annum.	Cords of wood per annum.	Servants at $8.	Servants at $6.	Amount of pay, rations, and allowances per annum.
Civil department.
Storekeeper	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	$1,700 00
Clerk to storekeeper	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	450 00
Clerk of the yard	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	900 00
Clerk to commandant	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	750 00
Clerk to commandant	1	$30	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	360 00
Naval constructor	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	2,000 00
Clerk to naval constructor	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	420 00
Inspector and meas. of timber	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	900 00
Porter	1	25	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	300 00
									$7,780 00
Whole amount	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	$37,352 25

PHILADELPHIA.

Yard.
Captain	1	$100	16	$600	65	30	3	.....	$4,066 75
Master commandant	1	60	5	300	40	20	2	.....	2,010 75
Lieutenant	1	40	3	200	20	20	1	.....	1,281 00
Master	1	40	2	200	20	12	1	.....	1,141 75
Surgeon	1	50	2	200	20	20	1	.....	1,309 75
Purser	1	40	2	200	20	12	1	.....	1,141 75
Boatswain	1	20	2	90	12	9	.....	1	741 75
Gunner	1	20	2	90	12	9	.....	1	741 75
Carpenter's mate, qualified as caulker	1	19	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	319 25
Steward	1	18	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	307 25
									$13,061 75
Ordinary.
Able seamen	4	12	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	$941 00
Ordinary seamen	6	10	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	1,267 50
									$2,208 50
Hospital.
Surgeon	1	50	2	200	20	20	1	.....	$1,309 75
Surgeon's mate	1	30	2	145	16	14	.....	1	950 75
Steward	1	18	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	307 25
Nurses	2	10	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	422 50
Washers	2	8	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	374 50
Cook	1	12	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	235 25
									$3,600 00
Civil department.
Storekeeper	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	$1,200 00
Clerk to storekeeper	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	300 00
Clerk of the yard	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	600 00
Clerk to commandant	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	600 00
Naval constructor	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	2,300 00
Master joiner, and foreman of carpenters	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	1,200 00
Clerk to constructor	1	25	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	300 00
Inspector and meas. of timber	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	700 00
Porter	1	25	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	300 00
									$7,500 00
Whole amount	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	$26,370 25

C.—Statement of pay and rations—Continued.

WASHINGTON.

	Number.	Pay per month.	Rations per day.	House rent per annum.	Candles per annum.	Cords of wood per annum.	Servants at $8.	Servants at $6.	Amount of pay, rations, and allowances per annum.
Yard.
Captain	1	$100	16	.....	65	30	3	.....	$3,466 75
Master commandant	1	60	5	.....	40	20	2	.....	1,710 75
Lieutenant	1	40	3	.....	20	20	1	.....	1,081 00
Master	1	40	2	.....	20	12	1	.....	941 75
Master in charge of ordnance	1	40	2	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	662 50
Master keeper of magazine	1	40	2	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	662 50
Surgeon	1	50	2	$200	20	20	1	.....	1,309 50
Surgeon's mate	1	30	2	145	16	14	.....	1	950 75
Purser	1	40	2	200	20	12	1	.....	1,141 75
Boatswain	1	20	2	90	12	9	.....	1	741 75
Gunner as laboratory officer	1	20	2	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	422 50
Carpenter's mate, qualified as caulker	1	19	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	319 25
Steward	1	18	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	307 25
									$13,718 00
Ordinary.
Boatswain's mate	1	19	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	$319 25
Able seamen	6	12	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	1,411 50
Ordinary seamen	8	10	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	1,690 00
									$3,420 75
Hospital.
Surgeon	1	50	2	200	20	20	1	.....	$1,309 75
Surgeon's mate	1	30	2	145	16	14	.....	1	950 75
Steward	1	18	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	307 25
Nurses	2	10	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	422 50
Washers	2	8	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	374 50
Cook	1	12	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	235 25
									$3,600 00
Civil department.
Storekeeper	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	$1,700 00
Clerk to storekeeper	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	450 00
Clerk of yard	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	900 00
Clerk to commandant	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	1,000 00
Clerk to commandant	1	40	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	480 00
Naval constructor	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	2,300 00
Clerk to naval constructor	1	35	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	420 00
Inspector and meas. of timber	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	900 00
Master chain cable and caboose maker	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	1,500 00
Machinist	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	1,500 00
Engineer	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	782 50
Master builder	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	1,500 00
Master plumber	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	1,200 00
Porter	1	25	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	300 00
									$14,932 50
Whole amount	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	$25,671 25

NORFOLK.

Yard.
Captain	1	$100	16	.....	65	30	3	.....	$3,466 75
Master commandant	1	60	5	$300	40	20	2	.....	2,010 75
Lieutenant	1	40	3	200	20	20	1	.....	1,281 00
Master	1	40	2	200	20	12	1	.....	1,141 75
Surgeon	1	50	2	200	20	20	1	.....	1,309 75

C.—Statement of pay and rations—Continued.

	Number.	Pay per month.	Rations per day.	House rent per annum.	Candles per annum.	Cords of wood per annum.	Servants at $8.	Servants at $6.	Amount of pay, rations, and allowances per annum.
Surgeon's mate	1	$30	2	$145	16	14	.....	1	$950 75
Purser	1	40	2	200	20	12	1	.....	1,141 75
Chaplain	1	40	2	250	.....	.....	.....	.....	912 50
Midshipmen	4	19	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	1,277 00
Boatswain	1	20	2	90	12	9	1	.....	741 75
Gunner	1	20	2	90	12	9	1	.....	741 75
Carpenter's mate, as caulker	1	19	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	319 25
Steward	1	18	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	307 25
									$15,602 00
Ordinary.
Lieutenant	1	40	3	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	$753 75
Master	1	40	2	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	662 50
Carpenter	1	20	2	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	422 50
Carpenter's mate	1	19	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	319 25
Boatswain's mate	1	19	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	319 25
Able seamen	12	12	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	2,823 00
Ordinary seamen	24	10	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	5,070 00
									$10,370 25
Hospital.
Surgeon	1	50	2	200	20	20	1	.....	$1,309 75
Surgeon's mate	1	30	2	145	16	14	.....	1	950 75
Steward	1	18	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	307 25
Nurses	2	10	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	422 50
Washers	2	8	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	374 50
Cook	1	12	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	235 25
									$3,600 00
Civil department.
Storekeeper	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	$1,700 00
Clerk to storekeeper	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	450 00
Clerk to yard	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	900 00
Clerk to commandant	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	750 00
Clerk to commandant	1	30	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	360 00
Naval constructor	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	2,000 00
Clerk to naval constructor	1	35	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	420 00
Inspector and meas. of timber	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	900 00
Keeper of magazine	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	480 00
Porter	1	25	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	300 00
									$8,260 00
Whole amount	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	$37,832 25
PENSACOLA.
Yard.
Captain	1	$100	16	$600	65	30	3	.....	$4,066 75
Master commandant	1	60	5	300	40	20	2	.....	2,010 75
Lieutenant	1	40	3	200	20	20	1	.....	1,281 00
Master	1	40	2	200	20	12	1	.....	1,141 75
Purser	1	40	2	200	20	12	1	.....	1,141 75
Midshipmen	4	19	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	1,277 00
Boatswain	1	20	2	90	12	9	.....	1	741 75
Gunner	1	20	2	90	12	9	.....	1	741 75
Carpenter's mate, as caulker	1	19	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	319 25
Steward	1	18	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	307 25
									$13,029 00

C.—Statement of pay and rations—Continued.

	Number.	Pay per month.	Rations per day.	House rent per annum.	Candles per annum.	Cords of wood per annum.	Servants at $8.	Servants at $6.	Amount of pay, rations, and allowances per annum.
Ordinary.
Able seamen	4	$12	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	$941 00
Ordinary seamen	6	10	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	1,267 50
									$2,208 50
Hospital.
Surgeon	1	50	2	$200	20	20	1	.....	$1,309 75
Surgeon's mate	1	30	2	145	16	14	.....	1	950 75
Steward	1	18	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	307 25
Nurses	2	10	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	422 50
Washers	2	8	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	374 50
Cook	1	12	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	235 25
									$3,600 00
Civil department.
Storekeeper	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	$1,700 00
Clerk to storekeeper	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	250 00
Clerk of yard	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	900 00
Master joiner	1	$3 per	day.	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	939 00
Master builder	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	2,000 00
Clerk to master builder	1	25	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	300 00
Porter	1	25	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	300 00
									$6,389 00
Whole amount	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	$25,226 50
SACKETTS.
Master	1	$40	2	$200	12	20	1	.....	$1,141 75
BALTIMORE STATION.
Captain	1	$100	8	$300	65	30	3	.....	$3,036 75
Surgeon	1	50	2	200	20	20	1	.....	1,309 75
Purser	1	40	2	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	662 50
									$5,009 00
CHARLESTON, S. C., STATION.
Captain	1	$100	8	$300	65	30	3	.....	$3,036 75
Surgeon	1	50	2	200	20	20	1	.....	1,309 75
Purser	1	40	2	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	662 50
									$5,009 00

Recapitulation.

	Yard, naval.	Yard, ordinary.	Yard, civil.	Hospital.	Total amount.
Portsmouth, N. H.	$12,720 25	$2,208 50	$5,090 00	.....	$20,018 75
Boston	15,274 50	10,370 25	8,080 00	$3,600 00	37,324 75
New York	15,602 00	10,370 25	7,780 00	3,600 00	37,352 25
Philadelphia	13,061 75	2,208 50	7,500 00	3,600 00	26,370 25
Washington	13,718 00	3,420 75	14,932 50	3,600 00	35,671 25
Norfolk	15,602 00	10,370 25	8,260 00	3,600 00	37,832 25
Pensacola	13,029 00	2,208 50	6,389 00	3,600 00	25,226 50
Sacketts	1,141 75	.....	.....	.....	1,141 75
	$100,149 25	$41,157 00	$58,031 50	$21,600 00	$220,937 75
Baltimore	$5,009 00	.....	.....	.....	$5,009 00
Charleston	5,009 00	.....	.....	.....	5,009 00
	$10,018 00	.....	.....	.....	$10,018 00

D.

Statement of the number, pay, &c., of officers, &c., required for five receiving vessels, for the year 1827, explanatory of part of the first item of appropriation.

	Boston.	New York.	Philadelphia.	Norfolk.	Baltimore.	Total number.	Amount.
Masters commandant	1	1	1	1	....	4	$4,340 00
Lieutenants	3	3	2	3	2	13	8,612 50
Pursers	1	1	....	1	....	3	1,713 75
Masters	1	1	....	1	....	3	1,713 75
Surgeons' mates	1	1	....	1	....	3	1,353 75
Midshipmen	3	3	2	3	2	13	2,964 00
Boatswains' mates	1	1	1	1	1	5	1,140 00
Carpenters' mates	1	1	1	1	....	4	912 00
Stewards	1	1	1	1	1	5	1,080 00
Cooks	1	1	1	1	1	5	1,080 00
Able seamen	2	2	2	2	2	10	1,440 00
Ordinary seamen	6	6	4	6	2	24	2,880 00
Boys	4	4	2	4	2	16	1,152 00
						108	$30,381 75

E.

Statement of the pay, &c., of officers attached to recruiting stations, together with one captain, as ordnance officer, explanatory of part of the first item of appropriation.

	Boston.	New York.	Philadelphia.	Norfolk.	Baltimore.	Total number.	Amount.
Masters commandant	1	1	1	1	1	5	$5,881 25
Lieutenants	1	1	1	1	1	5	3,768 75
Midshipmen	1	1	1	1	1	5	1,596 25
Surgeons	1	1	1	1	....	4	3,130 00
Surgeons' mates	....	....	....	....	1	1	542 50
						20	$14,918 75
ORDNANCE DUTY.
Captain	....	....	....	....	....	1	$1,930 00

F.

Exhibit of the officers, &c., awaiting orders and on furlough, explanatory of part of the first item of appropriation.

	Captains.	Masters commandant.	Lieutenants.	Masters.	Pursers.	Midshipmen.	Total number.	Amount.
Awaiting orders	9	....	83	....	4	20	116	$88,966 25
On furlough	....	2	15	2	....	1	20	7,651 50
	9	2	98	2	4	21	136	$96,617 75

Recapitulation, showing the sums composing the first item of appropriation.

Pay, &c., in commission	$968,544 00
Pay, &c., in yards	220,937 75
Pay, &c., in stations	10,018 00
Pay, &c., in receiving vessels	30,381 75
Pay, &c., in recruiting stations	14,918 75
Pay, &c., in ordnance duty	1,930 00
Pay, &c., in awaiting orders	96,617 75
	$1,343,348 00

G.

Estimate of provisions required for the navy for the year 1827.

For vessels in commission during the whole year	4,648
For marines for ditto	666
For receiving vessels	108
	5,422	persons,
At one ration per day, makes	1,979,030	rations.
Estimated at 25 cents, is		$494,757	50
Add one ship of the line, one frigate, first class, two sloops, for six months, 1,475 persons.		67,296	87½
Also one frigate, first class, one sloop, second class, for four months, 562 persons		17,094	16⅔
Amount		579,148	54

H.

Estimates for the improvements and repairs of navy yards, explanatory of the sixth item of appropriation.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
For accommodations for officers, blacksmith shop, covering roofs of ship houses with two-thirds slate and one-third copper, leveling and repairing	$17,412 55
BOSTON.
For completing the yard wall, launching ways for 74 and frigate, causeway to connect blacksmith shop with ship house, warrant officers' quarters, repairs of wharves and buildings, covering the roofs of ship houses with one-third copper and two-thirds slate, leveling the yard	50,657 70
NEW YORK.
For commencement of wall, completing mast and boat houses, making new front to wharves, stone work, repairs of buildings, covering roof of ship houses one-third copper and two-thirds slate, leveling and filling yard	55,160 28
PHILADELPHIA.
For building storehouses, building mast houses, completing wharf, covering roof of ship houses with tin, repairs of buildings, &c., conveying water to the yard, and privilege of using the same	60,635 22
WASHINGTON.
For warrant officers' houses, tinning ship house, repairs and filling in wharves	16,561 04
NORFOLK.
For extension of yard wall, officers' quarters, mast house, timber sheds, boat houses, facing wharves with stone, covering roofs of ship houses one-third copper two-thirds slate	82,004 09
PENSACOLA.
For officers' quarters, storehouses, work shops, wharves	49,875 50
	$332,306 38

I.

Exhibit showing the disposition and force of the vessels of the United States navy, and of the vessels building under the laws for the gradual increase of the navy, and for building ten sloops-of-war.

Independence, 74	Boston	In ordinary.
Franklin, 74	New York	In ordinary.
Washington, 74	New York	In ordinary.
Columbus, 74	Boston	In ordinary.
Delaware, 74	Norfolk	In ordinary.
North Carolina, 74	Mediterranean	In service.
Ohio, 74	New York	In ordinary.
Chippewa, 74	Sackett's Harbor	Under cover.
New Orleans, 74	Sackett's Harbor
United States, 44	Pacific	In service.
Constitution, 44	Mediterranean	In service.
Guerriere, 44	Norfolk	Repairing.

Java, 44	Boston	Repairing.
Potomac, 44	Washington	In ordinary.
Brandywine, 44	Pacific	In service.
Congress, 36	Washington	Repairing.
Constellation, 36	West Indies and Gulf of Mexico	In service.
Macedonian, 36	Coast of Brazil	In service.
Cyane, 24	Coast of Brazil	In service.
John Adams, 24	West Indies, &c	In service.
Boston, 24	Coast of Brazil	In service.
Vincennes, 24	Pacific	In service.
Lexington, 24	West Indies, &c	In service.
Ontario, 18	Mediterranean	In service.
Erie, 18	Mediterranean	In service.
Peacock, 18	Pacific	In service.
Hornet, 18	West Indies	In service.
Porpoise, 12	Mediterranean	In service.
Dolphin, 12	Pacific	In service.
Frigate of the 1st class, lately purchased, and in ordinary at New York.
Grampns, 12	West Indies and Gulf of Mexico	In service.
Shark, 12	West Indies and Gulf of Mexico	In service.
Fox, 3	Baltimore	Receiving vessel.
Alert	Norfolk	Receiving vessel.
Sea Gull	Philadelphia	Receiving vessel.
Fulton, steam frigate	New York	Receiving vessel.

BUILDING.

Ships of the line.—Alabama, at Portsmouth; Virginia and Vermont, at Boston; Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia; and New York, at Norfolk.

Frigates, first class.—Santee, at Portsmouth; Savannah and Sabine, at New York; Raritan, at Philadelphia; Cumberland, at Boston; Columbia, at Washington; and St. Lawrence, at Norfolk.

Sloops, first class.—Concord, at Portsmouth; Warren and Falmouth, at Boston; Fairfield, at New York; Vandalia, at Philadelphia; St. Louis, at Washington; and Natchez, at Norfolk.

Frames for three frigates of the first class contracted for.

K.

Estimate of the sums required for the support of the office of the Navy Commissioners, for the year 1827.

Commissioners of the Navy Board	$10,500
Secretary	2,000
Clerks, per act of April 20, 1818	3,550
Clerks and draftsman, per act of May 26, 1824	4,000
Messenger	700
Contingent expenses	1,800
	$22,550

NAVY COMMISSIONERS' OFFICE, November 9, 1826.

Estimate of the sums required for the support of the office of the Secretary of the Navy, for the year 1827.

Salary of the Secretary of the Navy, per act of Congress of February 20, 1819	$6,000
Compensation to the clerks, authorized per act of April 20, 1818	8,200
Compensation to one additional clerk, per act of May 26, 1824	1,000
Compensation to the messenger and assistant messenger	1,050
Contingent expenses	3,000
	$19,250

Submitted.

Additional compensation to the clerk whose salary is now $800, which is proposed to be increased to $1,000 per annum	200
Compensation to one additional clerk,	1,000
	$20,450

The necessity for the two last items was fully explained in a letter to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, dated 21st January, 1826.

NOTE.—Of the sum estimated for contingent expenses, $2,000 will be required for the current expenses of 1827, the other $1,000 for arrearages of and prior to 1826, to repay the amount heretofore expended for extra clerk hire during the session of Congress, and for similar expenses during the ensuing session.

Estimate of the sum required for the improvement and repairs of the two Executive buildings west of the President's house, occupied by the War and Navy Departments, in addition to what is now granted, submitted by the Superintendent.

For repairing the wells and pumps, which are considerably out of order	$120
For painting the passages, outside walls, and window frames,	500
For planting trees and making pavement	200
	$880

Z.

Estimate for the marine corps, for the year 1827.

HEAD-QUARTERS OF THE MARINE CORPS, Washington, November 13, 1826.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit to the Department the estimates for the marine corps for the year 1827, together with a letter from the quartermaster, explanatory of them.

I remain, with great respect, your most obedient servant,

ARCH'D HENDERSON, Lieut. Colonel Commandant.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

Estimate of pay for officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians and privates, and subsistence for the officers of the United States marine corps, for the year 1827.

HEAD-QUARTERS OF MARINES, Paymaster's Office, Washington, November 13, 1826.

PAY.

One lieutenant colonel commandant, at $75 per month	$900
One lieutenant colonel, at $60 per month	720
One paymaster, at $50 per month	600
One quartermaster, at $60 per month	720
Seven captains, at $40 per month	3,360
Twenty-three first lieutenants, at $30 per month	8,280
Sixteen second lieutenants, at $25 per month	4,800
One surgeon, at $50 per month	600
One surgeon's mate, at $40 per month	480
One sergeant major, at $10 per month	120
One quartermaster sergeant, at $10 per month	120
One drum major, at $9 per month	108
One fife major, at $9 per month	108
Seventy-one sergeants, at $9 per month	7,668
Seventy-three corporals, at $8 per month	7,008
Twenty drummers, at $7 per month	1,680
Twenty fifers, at $7 per month	1,680
Seven hundred and fifty privates, at $6 per month	54,000
Extra pay to adjutant and inspector, at $30 per month	360
		$93,312

SUBSISTENCE.

One lieutenant colonel, six rations per day, and six as commandant, twelve rations per day, is 4,380, at 20 cents each	$876
One lieutenant colonel, five rations per day, is 1,825, at 20 cents	365
One paymaster, four rations per day, is 1,460, at 20 cents	292
One quartermaster, four rations per day, is 1,460, at 20 cents	292
Seven captains, three rations per day, is 7,665, at 20 cents	1,533
Twenty-three first lieutenants, four rations per day, is 33,580, at 20 cents	6,716
Sixteen second lieutenants, three rations per day, is 17,520, at 20 cents	3,504
One surgeon, two rations per day, is 720, at 25 cents	180
One surgeon's mate, two rations per day, is 720, at 20 cents	146
		13,904
		$107,216

JOS. L. KUHN, Paymaster M. C.

HEAD-QUARTERS MARINE CORPS, Quartermaster's Office, Washington City, November 1, 1826.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit an estimate of appropriation required for the quartermaster's department of the marine corps, for the year 1827.

The limits defined by the Commissioners of the Navy for the marine enclosure in the Navy yard at Philadelphia, render it necessary, in order to properly locate the officers' quarters, (for which an apropriation was made last year,) that the barracks occupied by the men should be removed, and as they are old, and the expense of repairing them would be considerable, it was deemed advisable to suspend the building of the officers' quarters until the additional sum of $11,000, in the present estimate, could be obtained for the erection of new barracks for the men.

Explanatory of the necessity of the appropriation for barracks at New York, I enclose herewith a certificate, forwarded to this office by Lieutenant Col. R. Smith, showing the present barracks to be untenantable and unworthy of repair.

I would further state that from personal inspection I agree in opinion with the signers of the certificate.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

E. J. WEED, Quartermaster Marine Corps.

To Col. A. HENDERSON, Commandant Marine Corps.

MARINE BARRACKS, Brooklyn, N. Y., October 12, 1826.

SIR: In obedience to your request, we have taken a survey of the quarters occupied by the troops under your command, and have the honor to make the following statement:

That, on examination of the left wing of the barracks, we find that the dilapidated condition of the roof and the rottenness of the timbers render it entirely unfit to be occupied. The condition of the roof is such, that, in bad or wet weather, the rain is admitted in many parts; and we find, on inspection this day, that the floor of a room occupied by one of the officers is completely overflowed by water, admitted through the roof.

That the rooms occupied by the non-commissioned officers and privates are not in a fit state to live in; they all leak, and it is our opinion, it would be dangerous to attempt a repair of the roof, from the rottenness of the rafters: besides a repair might be attended with more expense than the buildings are worth.

That one of the barrack rooms is occupied as a hospital, and is entirely unfit for the accommodation or comfort of the sick.

That the room occupied as the commanding officer's office is in a very leaky condition, and it appears impossible for the clerk to keep the books and papers in a proper state of preservation.

That the guard room is very bad, and the cells above it so entirely insecure, that the safe keeping of the prisoners is rendered doubtful, even with the most constant vigilance.

That the quarters occupied by the commanding officer, in wet weather are entirely untenantable.

That, in fact, the money it would require to put the barracks in good repair would be more than the buildings in their present condition are worth.

That the building occupied as a store, for arms, accoutrements and clothing, is a mere shell, and admits the rain in almost every part; in consequence, the articles receive much injury from such exposure.

We are, sir, respectfully, your obedient servants,

BENJ. MACOMBER, Lieutenant of Marines.
G. F. LINDSAY, Lieutenant of Marines.
JOHN F. WALTON, Master Joiner, Navy Yard.

Colonel RICHARD SMITH, Commanding Marines, New York.

Estimate for expenditures in the quartermaster's department of the United States marine corps, for the year 1827.

SUBSISTENCE.

For 297 non-commissioned officers, musicians, privates and washerwomen, serving on shore, at one ration per day each, is 108,405 rations, at 12 cents per ration, is.....		$13,008 60

CLOTHING.

For 938 non-commissioned officers, musicians and privates, at 30 dollars each.	$28,140 00
For 100 watch coats, at $6.25 each.....	625 00
		28,765 00

FUEL.

For the officers, non-commissionnd officers, musicians, privates and washerwomen, and for the public offices and armory.....		9,098 00

CONTINGENCIES.

For traveling expenses for officers, and transportation of men, freight of stores from one station to another, toll, ferriage, wharfage and cartage, expenses of recruiting, per diem allowance for attending courts-martial and courts of inquiry, and for officers on extra duty, compensation to judge advocates, house rent and chamber money, where there are no quarters assigned, incidental labor in the quartermaster's department, expenses for burying deceased persons belonging to the marine corps, printing and stationery, postage on public letters, forage, expenses of pursuing deserters, keeping in repair the barracks at the different stations, straw for the men, barrack furniture, spades, shovels, axes, picks and carpenters' tools, and for no other purpose whatever	$13,500 00
For sundry expenses arising in the current year, and not hereinbefore mentioned.....	500 00
		14,000 00

MEDICINES.

For medicines, hospital stores, and instruments for the officers and marines (on shore)....		2,369 71

BARRACKS.

For completing the barracks at Philadelphia.....	$11,000 00
For erecting new barracks at New York.....	30,000 00
		41,000 00
		$108,241 31

E. J. WEED, Quartermaster Marine Corps.

HEAD-QUARTERS MARINE CORPS, Quartermaster's Office, Washington City, Nov. 14, 1826.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 320. [2D SESSION.

NAMES OF THE OFFICERS AND SEAMEN OF THE KETCH INTREPID, IN THE ATTACK ON THE FRIGATE PHILADELPHIA, AT TRIPOLI, IN 1804.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 8, 1826.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, December 6, 1826.

In compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 20th of May last, "That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to report, during the first week of the next session of Congress, the number and names of the officers and seamen who were on board the ketch Intrepid, on the sixteenth of February, one thousand eight hundred and six, [1804] in the attack made on the frigate Philadelphia, and now surviving, so far as the same can be ascertained in his Department; and that he, at the same time, report the number and names of the widows of such of said officers and seamen as have deceased; and that he state what proportion of the officers and seamen on board of the navy are married, so far as the same may be practicable," the Secretary of the Navy has the honor to report: That there were on board the ketch Intrepid, on the 16th of February, 1804, (that being the year in which the attack on the frigate Philadelphia was made):

Fourteen commissioned and warrant officers, twelve petty officers, twenty-eight able seamen, eight ordinary seamen, and eight marines: the names of all of whom will be found in paper marked A.

The remarks in the third column of this paper are not on the original, on file, but are added by the Fourth Auditor, from information furnished by his office. It is also proper to state that the name of Salvador Catalano does not appear in this list. He was a Sicilian, specially employed as a pilot for this service, and, having satisfactorily performed his duty, has been since retained in the public employment, and is now acting as sailingmaster at the Navy yard in this city.

Paper B contains the names of those officers who now survive, as far as the facts are known.

Paper C contains the names of those who have died, together with such information as the Department has been able to procure respecting the names of the widows of such as were married, and the number of children left by each.

Of the seamen and marines on board the Intrepid at the time, the records of this Department furnish no other information than is contained in paper A. They were selected from the different ships composing the squadron in the Mediterranean, and, on their return from Tripoli, were restored to their respective stations in those ships, and have since, doubtless, been scattered in every direction. The surviving officers, who then commanded them, can give no satisfactory accounts of their lives or deaths. As they were a select crew, in the vigor of life at that period, now twenty-two years ago, it is probable that very few, if any, are living. Should Congress make an appropriation for their benefit, the agent appointed to attend to its distribution will be able to discover them, by means of advertisements explaining his object, if indeed any of them are still living.

In the paper D will be found so much of the correspondence of the Department, in relation to this subject, as is supposed necessary to show the nature of the information on which the facts are stated.

Respectfully submitted.

SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

The SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

A.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Fourth Auditor's Office, May 29, 1826.

SIR: In compliance with the request contained in your letter of the 26th instant, enclosing a resolution of the House of Representatives, passed on the 20th of this month, I have the honor to transmit to you a copy of the original list of the officers, seamen, and marines, who volunteered on board the ketch Intrepid, for the destruction of the frigate Philadelphia, in the harbor of Tripoli. I have inserted, in the column of remarks, the only additional information called for by the resolution, that is in the possession of this office.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

T. WATKINS.

Hon. SECRETARY of the Navy.

List of officers and seamen who volunteered their services for the destruction of the frigate Philadelphia.

Names.	Stations.	Remarks.
Stephen Decatur, jr	Commander	Dead: left a widow.
James Lawrence	Lieutenant	Dead: left a widow and child.
Joseph Bainbridge	do	Dead: left a child.
Jonathan Thorn	do	Dead.
Lewis Heermann	Surgeon	At New Orleans.
Thomas McDonough	Midshipman	Dead: left children.
John Rowe	do
Ralph Izard	do
Alexander Laws	do
Charles Morris	do	Now Navy Commissioner.
John Davis	do

List of officers and seamen—Continued.

Names.	Stations.	Remarks.
Thomas O. Anderson	Midshipman
William Wiley	Boatswain
William Hook	Gunner
George Crawford	Quartermaster
George Brown	do
John Newman	do
Paul Frazier	do
James Metcalf	Boatswain's mate
Nicholas Brown	do
Edward Burk	Seaman
Edward Kellen	Master's mate
Samuel Endicott	Quartergunner
James Wilson	do
John Ford	do
Richard Doyles	do
Peter Munell	Seaman
Richard Ormond	do
Samuel Jackson	do
James Pasgrove	do
Joseph Goodwin	do
John Boyles	do
Augustus C. Fleur	do
Charles Berryman	do
Daniel Frazier	do
William Graham	do
Reuben James	do
Robert Love	do
John Williams	do
Joseph Fairfield	do
George Fudge	do
James Robinson	do
Matthew Yeates	do
William Ducket	do
Andrew Espey	do
William Tumbo	do
Thomas James	do
Joseph Numond	do
George Murray	do
Robert M'Knight	do
William Dixon	do
Henry Davenport	do
Joseph Parker	do
Joseph Boyd	Ship's steward
Dennis O'Brian	Ordinary seaman
Jacob Kurgen	do
John Burtson	do
William Rodgers	do
Charles Robinson	do
William Trippet	do
John Joseph	do
Michael Williams	do
Marines.
Solomon Wren	Sergeant
Duncan Mansfield	Corporal
Noble James	Private
John Quin	do
Isaac Camfield	do
Reuben O'Brian	do
William Pepper	do
John Wolsfrandorf	do

The within and foregoing is a correct list of the officers, seamen, &c., that assisted in destroying the frigate Philadelphia, in the harbor of Tripoli.

STEPHEN DECATUR, JR.

B.

List of officers on board the ketch Intrepid, on the 16th of February, 1804, in the attack on the frigate Philadelphia, in the harbor of Tripoli, who are living in December, 1826.

Lewis Heermann, surgeon; Charles Morris, midshipman; Thomas O. Anderson; all married.

C.

List of officers on board the ketch Intrepid, on the 16th of February, 1804, in the attack on the frigate Philadelphia, in the harbor of Tripoli, who have since died, with the names of the widows of such as were married, and the number of children left by each.

Name of officer.	Rank.	Name of widow.	Number of children.
Stephen Decatur, jr...	Lieut. commanding ..	Susan Decatur.....	None.
James Lawrence.....	Lieutenant	Julia M. Lawrence.....	One daughter.
Joseph Bainbridge....	Lieutenant	None	One daughter.
Jonathan Thorn.....	Lieutenant	Never married.....
Thomas McDonough ..	Midshipman	None	Five (4 sons and 1 daughter.)
Ralph Izard*.....	Midshipman	Widow alive; name not known.....	Four (1 son and 3 daughters.)
John Rowe.....	Midshipman	Not married and believed to be dead.....
Alexander Laws.....	Midshipman	Not known.....	None.

D.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, May 26, 1826.

SIR: You will be pleased to furnish a copy of the original list of officers and men on board the ketch Intrepid, at the burning of the frigate Philadelphia.

I have also to request any other information in your office which will enable me to answer the resolution of the House of Representatives, copy of which is enclosed.

I am, respectfully, &c., SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

TOBIAS WATKINS, Esq., Fourth Auditor of the Treasury.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, May 26, 1826.

SIR: I enclose a copy of a resolution of the House of Representatives, directing the Secretary of the Navy to furnish certain information respecting the officers and men who were on board the ketch Intrepid at the destruction of the frigate Philadelphia.

Your participation in that brilliant achievement, and consequent acquaintance with the persons who were engaged in it, may enable you to communicate facts not within the knowledge of the Department; and I therefore have to request the favor of you to furnish any information that may be useful in preparing an answer to the resolution.

I am, very respectfully, &c., SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

CHARLES MORRIS, Esq., Commissioner of the Navy.
THOMAS O. ANDERSON, Esq., Newtown, N. J.
Dr. LEWIS HEERMANN, Surgeon U. S. Navy, New Orleans.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, May 30, 1826.

SIR: By a resolution of Congress, passed during the recent session, I am directed to communicate all the information I can obtain respecting the families of those persons who were on board the ketch Intrepid at the destruction of the frigate Philadelphia.

Among the officers engaged in that brilliant achievement was Ralph Izard, a native of South Carolina, who served as a midshipman. I have to request that you will endeavor to ascertain from his relatives, or any one else, the name of his widow, and the names and number of his children, should any of them still survive.

I am, respectfully, &c.,

SAM'L. L. SOUTHARD.

Captain JOHN D. HENLEY, Commanding Naval Officer, Charleston, S. C.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, May 30, 1826.

SIR: Being called upon by a resolution of Congress to communicate, at the next session, certain information respecting the families of those persons who were on board the ketch Intrepid at the destruction of the frigate Philadelphia, I have to request the favor of you to state the number and names of the orphan children of the late Commodore Thomas McDonough, who was a midshipman in that expedition.

I am, very respectfully, &c., SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

Rev. EDWARD RUTLEDGE, Middletown, Connecticut.

---

* R. Izard was rated as master's mate on board the frigate Constitution.

WASHINGTON, May 29, 1826.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 26th instant, covering a resolution of the House of Representatives, requesting certain information relative to the persons who were on board the ketch Intrepid, at the destruction of the frigate Philadelphia.

A list of the names of the officers and others engaged in that enterprise is on file in the office of the Fourth Auditor.

What number of the seamen and marines are alive at this time I have no means of ascertaining, but presume there are but few, some years having elapsed since I met with any of them; nor can I communicate any information of the names or number of their widows.

The commander, then Lieutenant Decatur, and the Lieutenants Lawrence, Bainbridge, and Thorn, are all dead. The surgeon, Dr. Heermann, is still living. Of the midshipmen, Izard, McDonorgh, and Davis are deceased. I believe Rowe to be dead, and Laws to be living, but am not certain. Anderson and myself still survive. The pilot is also still living.

Commodore Decatur left a widow; Captain Lawrence a widow and one daughter; Captain Bainbridge an orphan daughter; Captain McDonough left several orphan children, and Lieutenant Izard a widow, and several children by a former wife.

With much respect, I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

C. MORRIS.

Hon. SAM'L L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

CHARLESTON, S. C., June 13, 1826.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter under date of the 30th ultimo. In reply I have to say, that I have endeavored to ascertain correctly the number of children left by Mr. Ralph Izard, and find, by information received from Mr. John Middleton, brother to Mr. Izard's first wife, that there are four now living. Their names are as follows:

Ann Middleton Izard, Alice Delancy Izard, Charlotte Georgiana Izard, Ralph Delancy Izard.

Mr. Izard afterwards married the daughter of the late General Charles Cotesworth Pinckney; by her he had no children. The children now reside in Philadelphia, with their grandmother, Mrs. Izard. His widow left here some time since for the north.

I have the honor to be, most respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. D. HENLEY.

Hon. SAM'L L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

NEW ORLEANS, September 10, 1826.

SIR: In compliance with your order of 26th May, covering a copy of a resolution of the House of Representatives, requesting information of the officers and men who were on board the ketch Intrepid, at the destruction of the frigate Philadelphia, &c., I offer a mere skeleton, as the only remains of the body of information once in my possession.

The lapse of two and twenty years, capable of weakening more durable impressions than those generally made by the names and personal identities of a ship's crew, will excuse, I trust, the very imperfect and perhaps unsatisfactory report I have rendered. As a possible source, however, of more extensive information on the subject, I beg leave to point out to the Department, Mr. Boyd,* who is a brother, I am informed, to Joseph Boyd, then the purser's steward on board. Commodore Morris, also on board, and a midshipman, at the time, of the Constitution, may be able to give information in respect to the junior officers of his class, and of circumstances and facts not known to me, or no longer within the reach of my recollection.

The reminiscences connected with the expedition, in detail, I believe to be in substance correct and true, and are respectfully placed at the disposal of the honorable the Secretary of the Navy, in furtherance of any information that might be useful, and not in the possession of the Department.

I have the honor to be, with great respect and high consideration,

Sir, your very obedient servant,

LEWIS HEERMANN.

The Hon. SAM'L L. SOUTHARD, Secretary U. S. Navy, Washington.

STRATFORD, Connecticut, June 18, 1826.

SIR: In compliance with your request, I transmit you the names of the children of the late Captain Thomas McDonough.

J. Edward F. McDonough, aged 10 years; Charles Shaler McDonough, aged 8 years; Augustus Rodney McDonough, aged 6 years; Thomas McDonough, aged 4 years, and Charlotte Rosella McDonough, aged 1 year.

Any further information necessary, I shall be happy to communicate.

With very great respect, I remain, your obedient servant,

EDWARD RUTLEDGE, Legal Guardian to said Orphans.

Hon. SAM'L L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

* Auctioneer at Norfolk, Va.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 321. [2D SESSION.

ON CLAIM OF A NAVY PENSIONER TO A PENSION FROM THE NAVY PENSION FUND, FROM DATE OF HIS DISABILITY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 27, 1826.

Mr. STORRS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred, on the 18th December, 1826, the petition of William Thompson, reported:

That the petitioner was, by an act of the last session of Congress, placed on the pension list of the navy pension fund, in consequence of a disability incurred from wounds while he was engaged on board the revenue cutter Louisiana; that by the construction given to that act at the Navy Department, the pension of the petitioner is construed to commence from the date of the passage of the law for his relief. He now prays that a law may be passed granting him his pension, to commence from the time of his disability. The committee are of opinion that the construction which has been put on the act of the last session is correct, and that it would be inexpedient to grant the prayer of the petitioner. They therefore recommend to the House the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petitioner have leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 322. [2D SESSION.

NAVAL REGISTER FOR 1827.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 3, 1827.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, December 30, 1826.

SIR: I have the honor herewith to transmit to you, for the use of the members of the Senate, fifty copies of the Naval Register for the year 1827, prepared in obedience to a resolution of Congress, passed on the 13th day of December, 1815.

I am, sir, very respectfully, &c.,

SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

To the PRESIDENT of the Senate of the United States.

Naval register for 1827.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

Names.	Duty.	Place of birth.	Salary.
Samuel L. Southard	Secretary	New Jersey	$6,000
Charles Hay	Chief clerk	Virginia	2,000
John Boyle	Corresponding clerk	Ireland	1,600
Benjamin Homans	Corresponding clerk	Massachusetts	1,400
Richard B. Maury	Register	Virginia	1,400
William Cottringer	Warrant clerk	Pennsylvania	1,000
Thomas Fillebrown, jr.	Recording and copying clerk	Maine	1,000
Thomas Miller	Recording and copying clerk	Virginia	800
Nathan Eaton	Messenger	Massachusetts	700
Frederick Lewis	Assistant messenger	Maryland	350
OFFICE OF THE NAVY COMMISSIONERS.
William Bainbridge, president	Commissioner	New Jersey	$3,500
Charles Morris	Commissioner	Connecticut	3,500
Lewis Warrington	Commissioner	Virginia	3,500
C. W. Goldsborough	Secretary	Maryland	2,000
William G. Ridgely	Chief clerk	Maryland	1,600
John Green	Clerk	Maryland	1,150
Joseph P. M'Corkle	Clerk	Delaware	1,000
James Hutton	Clerk	Pennsylvania	1,000
Robert A. Slye	Clerk	Maryland	1,000
B. S. Randolph	Clerk	Virginia	800
C. Schwarz	Draftsman	Germany	1,000
Benjamin G. Bowen	Messenger	Maryland	700

Naval register for 1827—Continued.

CAPTAINS.

Names.	Original entry into the service.	Date of present commission.	Where born.	State from which appointed.	State of which a citizen.	Duty or station.
John Rodgers	Lieutenant, March 9, 1798.	March 5, 1799.	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Commanding Mediterranean squadron.
James Barron	do March 9, 1798.	May 22, 1799.	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Commandant Navy yard, Gosport.
Wm. Bainbridge	Lieut. and commander, August 3, 1798.	May 20, 1800.	New Jersey	Pennsylvania	New Jersey	President Navy Board.
Thomas Tingey*	Captain, Sept. 3, 1798.	Nov. 22, 1804.	England	New Jersey	Dist. Columbia.	Commandant Navy yard, Washington.
Charles Stewart	Lieutenant, March 9, 1798.	April 22, 1806.	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	New Jersey	Waiting orders.
Isaac Hull	do March 9, 1798.	April 23, 1806.	Connecticut	Connecticut	Connecticut	Pacific squadron.
Isaac Chauncy	do Sept. 17, 1798.	April 24, 1806.	Connecticut	New York	New York	Commandant Navy yard, New York.
Jacob Jones	Midshipman, April 10, 1799.	March 3, 1813.	Delaware	Delaware	Delaware	Commanding Pacific squadron.
Charles Morris	Acting midshipman, July 1, 1799.	March 5, 1813.	Connecticut	Connecticut	Connecticut	Commissioner Navy Board.
Arthur Sinclair	Midshipman Nov. 15, 1798.	July 24, 1813.	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Commanding afloat, Norfolk.
Lewis Warrington	do Jan. 6, 1800.	Nov. 22, 1814.	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Commissioner Navy Board.
William M. Crane	do May 22, 1799.	Nov. 24, 1814.	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	Commandant Navy yard, Charlestown.
James T. Leonard	do Feb. 26, 1799.	Feb. 4, 1815.	New York	New York	New York	Waiting orders.
James Biddle	do Feb. 12, 1800.	Feb. 28, 1815.	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Commanding Brazilian squadron.
Charles D. Ridgeley	do Oct. 17, 1799.	Feb. 28, 1815.	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Commanding West India squadron.
Daniel T. Patterson	do Aug. 20, 1800.	Feb. 28, 1815.	New York	New York	Louisiana	Commanding frigate Constitution.
Melan. T. Woolsey	do April 9, 1800.	April 27, 1816.	New York	New York	New York	Commandant Navy yard, Pensacola.
John O. Creighton	do June 25, 1800.	April 27, 1816.	New York	New York	New York	Commandant Navy yard, Portsmouth.
John Downes	do June 1, 1802.	March 5, 1817.	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Waiting orders.
John D. Henley	do Oct. 14, 1799.	March 5, 1817.	Virginia	Virginia	Maryland	Commanding naval officer, Baltimore.
Jesse D. Elliott	do April 2, 1804.	March 27, 1818.	Maryland	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Commanding corvette Cyane.
Robert Henley	do April 8, 1799.	March 3, 1825.	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Commanding naval officer, Charleston.
Stephen Cassin	do Feb. 21, 1800.	March 3, 1825.	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Dist. Columbia.	Waiting orders.
James Renshaw	do July 7, 1800.	March 3, 1825.	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Commandant Navy yard, Philadelphia.
Thomas Brown	do April 28, 1801.	March 3, 1825.	Delaware	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Waiting orders.
C. C. B. Thompson	do Dec. 22, 1802.	March 3, 1825.	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Waiting orders.
Alex. S. Wadsworth	do April 2, 1804.	March 3, 1825.	Maine	Maine	Maine	Inspector of ordnance and ammunition.
George W. Rodgers	do April 2, 1804.	March 3, 1825.	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Waiting orders.
George C. Read	do April 2, 1804.	March 3, 1825.	Ireland	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Waiting orders.
Henry E. Ballard	do April 24, 1804.	March 3, 1825.	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Waiting orders.
David Deacon	do Oct. 10, 1799.	Jan. 24, 1826.	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	On leave of absence.
Captains—31.

* Left out under peace establishment. Re-appointed a captain November 22, 1804.

☞ For changes, see Supplement.

NOTE.—Those officers "on leave of absence" have generally returned from long cruises, and are subject to immediate orders. Some of them are in ill health.

Naval register for 1827—Continued.

MASTERS COMMANDANT.

Names.	Original entry into the service.	Date of present commission.	Where born.	State from which appointed.	State of which a citizen.	Duty or station.
Louis Alexis	July 15, 1798	Dec. 10, 1814	France	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Furlough.
Sidney Smith	July 26, 1800	Feb. 28, 1815	New York	New York	New York	Waiting orders.
Samuel Woodhouse	May 2, 1801	April 27, 1816	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Leave of absence.
William Carter	Dec. 20, 1804	do	North Carolina	North Carolina	North Carolina	Not on duty.
Joseph J. Nicholson	April 2, 1804	March 5, 1817	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Rendezvous, Baltimore.
Wolcott Chauncey	June 28, 1804	do	Connecticut	New York	New York	Receiving ship at Boston.
E. P. Kennedy	Nov. 22, 1805	do	Maryland	District of Columbia	Virginia	Receiving ship at Norfolk.
Alexander J. Dallas	do	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Navy yard, Philadelphia.
John B. Nicolson	July 4, 1805	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Sloop Ontario.
B. V. Hoffman	do	do	New York	New York	New York	Sloop Boston.
Jesse Wilkinson	July 10, 1805	April 18, 1818	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Corvette John Adams.
George Budd	Nov. 22, 1805	March 28, 1820	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Receiving ship at New York.
T. Ap Catesby Jones	do	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Sloop Peacock.
John Porter	June 20, 1806	do	Maryland	Maryland	.....	Leave of absence.
William B. Finch	do	do	England	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	Sloop Vincennes.
William B. Shubrick	Aug. 16, 1806	do	South Carolina	South Carolina	South Carolina	Sloop Lexington.
Benjamin W. Booth	June 20, 1806	do	Virginia	Virginia	Connecticut	Navy yard, Washington.
Alexander Claxton	do	do	Pennsylvania	District of Columbia.	Pennsylvania	Sloop Hornet.
Charles W. Morgan	Jan. 1, 1808	April 15, 1820	Virginia	Virginia	New York.	Rendezvous, New York.
Lawrence Kearny	July 24, 1807	March 3, 1825	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	Sloop Warren.
Foxhall A. Parker	Jan. 1, 1808	do	Virginia	Virginia	New York	Navy yard, New York.
Edward R. M'Call	do	do	South Carolina	South Carolina	South Carolina	Navy yard, Pensacola.
Daniel Turner	do	do	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Rendezvous, Boston.
David Conner	Jan. 16, 1809	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Rendezvous, Philadelphia.
John Gallagher, sailingmaster	do	do	do	Maryland	Maryland	Navy yard, Gosport.
Thomas H. Stevens	Feb. 8, 1808	do	South Carolina	South Carolina	Connecticut	Navy yard, Boston.
William M. Hunter	Jan. 16, 1809	March 21, 1826	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Receiving ship, Philadelphia.
John D. Sloat*	Feb. 12, 1800	do	New York	New York	New York	Waiting orders.
Matthew C. Perry	March 1, 1809	do	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	do	North Carolina 74.
Masters commandant—29.

LIEUTENANTS.

James P. Oellers, sailingmaster	Feb. 28, 1809	July 24, 1813	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Not on duty.
Charles W. Skinner, midshipman	Jan. 16, 1809	do	Maine	do	Virginia	Rendezvous, Norfolk.
Samuel W. Adams	Jan. 1, 1808	do	New Hampshire	New Hampshire	New Hampshire	Receiving ship, New York.
Frederick W. Smith	do	do	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	Waiting orders.
Otho Norris	Jan. 16, 1809	do	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Commanding schooner Shark.
John T. Newton	do	do	Virginia	Virginia	New York	Navy yard, Philadelphia.

* Left out May 21, 1801. Re-appointed a sailingmaster January 10, 1812.

Naval register for 1827—LIEUTENANTS—Continued.

Names.	Original entry into the service.	Date of present commission.	Where born.	State from which appointed.	State of which a citizen.	Duty or station.
Joseph Smith	Jan. 16, 1809	July 24, 1813	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Maine	Leave of absence.
Lawrence Rousseau	do	do	Louisiana	Louisiana	Louisiana	Dolphin.
George W. Storer	do	do	New Hampshire	Maine	New Hampshire	Navy yard, Portsmouth, New Hampshire.
Joseph Cassin	do	do	Pennsylvania	District of Columbia.	Virginia	Pensacola. Sick.
Robert M. Rose	May 18, 1809	do	Virginia	Virginia	do	Navy yard, Gosport.
Beverly Kennon	do	do				Frigate United States.
Edward R. Shubrick	Jan. 16, 1809	Oct. 9, 1813	South Carolina	South Carolina	South Carolina	Navy yard, Pensacola.
1814.
Charles A. Budd	Nov. 22, 1805	June 18, 1814	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	New York	Not on duty.
Francis H. Gregory	Jan. 16, 1809	June 28, 1814	Connecticut	Connecticut	Connecticut	Furlough.
John H. Clack	Nov. 15, 1809	Dec. 9, 1814	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Furlough.
Philip F. Voorhees	do	do	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	North Carolina 74.
Benjamin Cooper	Jan. 16, 1809	do	do	do	New York	Commanding schooner Porpoise.
William L. Gordon	Nov. 15, 1809	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Leave of absence.
Silas Duncan	do	do	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	Waiting orders.
James Ramage, sailingmaster	June 1, 1813	do	Ireland	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Waiting orders.
David Geisinger	Nov. 15, 1809	do	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Receiving ship, Philadelphia.
Robert F. Stockton	Sept. 1, 1811	do	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	Surveying.
T. S. Cunningham	Nov. 15, 1809	do	Nova Scotia	Louisiana	Louisiana	Navy yard, Pensacola.
Isaac M'Keever	Feb. 1, 1809	do	Pennsylvania	do	United States	Receiving ship, Baltimore.
John P. Zantzinger	Nov. 15, 1809	do	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Cyane.
Charles E. Crowly	Jan. 16, 1809	do	South Carolina	South Carolina	South Carolina	Pensacola. Sick.
William D. Salter	Nov. 15, 1809	do	New York	New Jersey	New Jersey	Macedonian.
Charles S. M'Cauley	Jan. 16, 1809	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Sloop Boston.
John H. Bell	do	do	North Carolina	North Carolina	North Carolina	Leave of absence.
Thomas M. Newell, sailingmaster	Sept. 11, 1813	do	Georgia	Georgia	Georgia	Leave of absence.
Elie A. F. Valette, sailingmaster	Jan. 25, 1812	do	Virginia	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Constitution.
William A. Spencer	Nov. 15, 1809	do	New York	New York	New York	Leave of absence.
Thomas T. Webb	Jan. 1, 1808	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	John Adams.
John Percival	March 6, 1809	do	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Pacific squadron.
John H. Aulick	Nov. 15, 1809	do	Virginia	Maryland	Virginia	Brandywine.
William V. Taylor, sailingmaster	April 28, 1813	do	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Navy yard, Charlestown.
Mervine P. Mix, sailingmaster	July 3, 1813	do	Connecticut	New York	Connecticut	Sloop Lexington.
Bladen Dulany	May 18, 1809	do	Virginia	District of Columbia.	Virginia	Waiting orders.
Silas H. Stringham	Nov. 15, 1809	do	New York	New York	New York	Navy yard, New York.
Wm. A. C. Farragut	Jan. 16, 1809	do	Tennessee	Louisiana	Mississippi	Navy yard, Pensacola.
George B. M'Culloh, sailingmaster	July 27, 1813	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Mediterranean.
Stephen Champlin, sailingmaster	May 22, 1812	do	Rhode Island	Connecticut	Connecticut	Leave of absence.

Navy register for 1827—LIEUTENANTS—Continued.

Names.	Original entry into the service.	Date of present commission.	Where born.	State from which appointed.	State of which a citizen.	Duty or station.
1815.
Isaac Mayo	Nov. 15, 1809	Feb. 4, 1815	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	North Carolina 74.
William K. Latimer	do	do	do	do	do	Commanding Grampus.
William Mervine	Jan. 16, 1809	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	New York	Navy yard, Charlestown.
Thomas Crabb	Nov. 15, 1809	do	Maryland	do	Pennsylvania	Navy yard, Washington.
Edward B. Babbit	do	May 1, 1815	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Sloop Boston.
Thomas Paine, jr., sailingmaster	Oct. 10, 1812	Dec. 1, 1815	Rhode Island	South Carolina	Georgia	Furlough.
1816.
James Armstrong	Nov. 15, 1809	April 27, 1816				Frigate United States.
Joseph Smoot	Dec. 1, 1809	do				Sloop Peacock.
Robert B. Randolph	Aug. 15, 1810	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	North Carolina 74.
Samuel L. Breese	Dec. 17, 1810	do	New York	New York	New York	Waiting orders.
John Evans	do	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Leave of absence.
Benjamin Page, jr.	do	do	England	New York	New York	Leave of absence.
John T. Ritchie	do	do	Maryland	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	Waiting orders.
John A. Wish	do	do	South Carolina	South Carolina	South Carolina	Receiving ship, Norfolk.
John Gwinn	May 18, 1809	do	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Macedonian.
Thomas W. Wyman	Dec. 17, 1810	do	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Constitution.
James L. Morris	June 9, 1811	do	New York	New York	New York	Sloop Hornet.
Andrew Fitzhugh	do	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	North Carolina 74.
John K. Carter, sailingmaster	May 9, 1812	do	New York	New York	New York	Receiving ship, New York.
Joseph Cross	June 9, 1811	do	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Brandywine.
Abraham S. Ten Eick	Sept. 1, 1811	do	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	Receiving ship, New York.
Thomas S. Hammersley, sailingmaster	Jan. 14, 1812	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Waiting orders.
John White, sailingmaster	Dec. 2, 1813	do	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Receiving ship, Charlestown.
William M. Robins	May 6, 1812	do	Maryland	New York	Maryland	Receiving ship, Norfolk.
Hiram Paulding	Sept. 1, 1811	do				Frigate United States.
Jonathan D. Williamson	do	do	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	North Carolina 74.
1817.
Uriah P Levy, sailingmaster	March 21, 1812	March 5, 1817	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Cyane.
Enoch H. Johns	Jan. 16, 1809	do	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Receiving ship, Norfolk.
Charles Boarman	June 9, 1811	do	do	District of Columbia	Virginia	Waiting orders.
French Forrest	do	do	do	do	District of Columbia	Waiting orders.
Edgar Freeman	do	do	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	Receiving ship, New York.
William E. McKenney	do	do	New York	New York	New York	Sloop Ontario.
William J. Belt	Sept. 1, 1811	do	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Leave of absence.
Charles H. Caldwell	do	do	England	Massachusetts	Connecticut	Constellation.
William Jamesson	do	do	Virginia	District of Columbia	Virginia	Waiting orders.
William Boerum	do	do	New York	New York	New York	Macedonian.
Charles L. Williamson	do	do	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	Leave of absence.

Naval register for 1827—LIEUTENANTS—Continued.

Names.	Original entry into the service.	Date of present commission.	Where born	State from which appointed.	State of which a citizen.	Duty or station.
Charles Gauntt	Sept. 1, 1811	March 5, 1817	New Jersey	New Jersey	Pennsylvania	Sloop Warren.
William W. Ramsay	do	do	Virginia	Virginia	District of Columbia.	Pacific squadron.
Ralph Voorhees	do	do	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	Leave of absence.
Henry Henry, sailingmaster	July 1, 1812	do	Maryland	Virginia	Pennsylvania	Waiting orders.
Samuel W. Downing	Sept. 1, 1811	do	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	Waiting orders.
William Pottenger	do	do	Maryland	Maryland	New York	Waiting orders.
Henry W. Ogden	do	do	New Jersey	Pennsylvania	New Jersey	Sloop Vincennes.
Alexander Eskridge	Jan. 1, 1812	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Leave of absence.
Ebenezer Ridgeway	do	do	Massachusetts	New Hampshire	New Hampshire	Leave of absence.
Thomas A. Conover	do	do	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	Waiting orders.
Archibald S. Campbell	do	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Pensacola.
William Taylor	do	do	do	do	do	North Carolina.
John C. Long	June 18, 1812	do	.....	.....	.....	Sloop Peacock.
John H. Graham	do	do	Vermont	New York	New York	Rendezvous, New York.
John H. Lee	do	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Rendezvous, Norfolk.
1818.
James M. McIntosh	Sept. 1, 1811	April 1, 1818	Georgia	Georgia	Georgia	Leave of absence.
Josiah Tatnall	Jan. 1, 1812	do	do	do	do	Leave of absence.
William T. Temple	Sept. 1, 1811	do	Virginia	Virginia	.....	Receiving ship, Baltimore.
George McCauley	do	do	Pennsylvania	District of Columbia.	Pennsylvania	Leave of absence.
Hugh N. Page	do	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Sloop Peacock.
John A. Cook	Jan. 1, 1812	do	District of Columbia.	District of Columbia.	District of Columbia.	Schooner Porpoise.
William Inman	do	do	New York	New York	New Jersey	Leave of absence.
Joel Abbot	June 18, 1812	do	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Rhode Island	Sloop Warren.
Lewis E. Simonds	Jan. 1, 1812	do	.....	.....	.....	Frigate United States.
John M. Dale	June 18, 1812	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Waiting orders.
H. H. Cocke	do	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Waiting orders.
William J. McCluney	Jan. 1, 1812	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Constellation.
E. D. Whitlock	do	do	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	Suspended.
James Goodrum	June 18, 1812	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Waiting orders.
J. B. Montgomery	June 4, 1812	do	New Jersey	New York	New Jersey	Leave of absence.
Horace B. Sawyer	Jan. 1, 1812	do	Vermont	Vermont	Vermont	Sloop Warren.
C. K. Stribling	June 18, 1812	do	South Carolina	South Carolina	Virginia	Brandywine.
James E. Legare	do	do	do	do	South Carolina	John Adams.
Joshua R. Sands	do	do	New York	New York	New York	New York station.
Allen Griffin	Jan. 1, 1812	do	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	North Carolina 74.
1820.
John J. Young	Jan. 1, 1812	March 28, 1820	New York	New York	New York	Leave of absence.
Charles H. Bell	June 18, 1812	do	do	do	do	Waiting orders.
Abraham Bigelow	do	do	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Macedonian.

Naval register for 1827—LIEUTENANTS—Continued.

Names.	Original entry into the service.	Date of present commission.	Where born.	State from which appointed.	State of which a citizen.	Duty or station.
Henry C. Newton	June 18, 1812	March 28, 1820	Virginia	District of Columbia.	District of Columbia.	Schooner Dolphin.
Frank Ellery	Jan. 1, 1812	do	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Cyane.
Frederick Varnum	June 18, 1812	do	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Sloop Vincennes.
Joseph R. Jarvis	do	do	do	Maine	Maine	Frigate Constellation.
Thomas W. Freelon	do	do	New York	New York	Vermont	Waiting orders.
Pardon M. Whipple	do	do	do	Rhode Island		Waiting orders.
James Williams	Sept. 1, 1811	do				Frigate United States.
Samuel W. Le Compte	June 4, 1812	do	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Leave of absence.
Charles T. Platt	June 18, 1812	do	New York	New York	New York	Leave of absence.
1821.
Wm. M. Armstrong	Nov. 30, 1814	March 3, 1821	Kentucky	Mississippi	Kentucky	Constitution.
Wm. F. Shields	Feb. 2, 1814	do	Georgia	Louisiana	Georgia	Mediterranean.
G. J. Pendergrast	Jan. 1, 1812	do	Kentucky	Kentucky	Kentucky	Sloop Lexington.
Wm. C. Nicholson	June 18, 1812	do				Frigate United States.
1822.
James B. Cooper, sailingmaster	July 9, 1812	April 22, 1822	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	Navy yard, Philadelphia.
1825.
Daniel H. Mackey	April 16, 1813	Jan. 13, 1825	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	North Carolina 74.
E. W. Carpender	July 10, 1813	do	New York	New York	New York	Mediterranean.
John L. Saunders	Nov. 15, 1809	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Leave of absence.
Joseph B. Hull, jr	Nov. 9, 1813	do	New York	Connecticut	Connecticut	Constellation.
Jott Stone Paine	do	do	Maine	Maine	Maine	Leave of absence.
John E. Prentiss	do	do	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Rendezvous, Boston.
John M. Sullivan	March 1, 1813	do	New York	New York	New York	Sloop Vincennes.
Joseph Morehead	Nov. 9, 1813	do	Maryland	Ohio	Ohio	Receiving ship, Philadelphia.
Samuel B. Phelps	May 20, 1813	do	Connecticut	New York	New York	Cyane.
William T. Rodgers	Nov. 9, 1813	do	New York	do	New Jersey	Furlough.
Thomas Pettigru	Jan. 1, 1812	do	South Carolina	South Carolina	South Carolina	Waiting orders.
Augustus Cutts, jr	Nov. 9, 1813	do	Maine	Maine	Maine	Cyane.
John S. Chauncey	Jan. 1, 1812	do	New York	New York	New York	Leave of absence.
Irvine Shubrick	May 12, 1814	do	South Carolina	South Carolina	Delaware	Waiting orders.
Charles Ellery	March 8, 1814	do	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Sloop Boston.
Thomas R. Gerry	Dec. 6, 1814	do	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Leave of absence.
John Kelly	Feb. 1, 1814	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Waiting orders.
Hugh Dulany	Nov. 30, 1814	do	South Carolina	South Carolina	do	Waiting orders.
Edmund Byrne	Feb. 1, 1814	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	do	Waiting orders.
Edward S. Johnson	Nov. 30, 1814	do	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Leave of absence.
William H. Gardner	Dec. 6, 1814	do	Maryland	Maryland	Virginia	Rendezvous, Baltimore.
David G. Farragut	Dec. 17, 1810	do	Tennessee.	Tennessee	Tennessee	Receiving ship, Norfolk.
Richard S. Pinckney	August 3, 1814	do	South Carolina	South Carolina	South Carolina	Leave of absence.

Naval register for 1827—LIEUTENANTS—Continued.

Names.	Original entry into the service.	Date of present commission.	Where born.	State from which appointed.	State of which a citizen.	Duty or station.
Stephen B. Wilson	Jan. 1, 1812	Jan. 13, 1825	New York	New York	New York	West India squadron.
Edward C. Rutledge	Nov. 30, 1814	do	South Carolina	South Carolina	South Carolina	Cyane.
William S. Harris	do	do	Kentucky	Kentucky	Kentucky	Waiting orders.
Thomas Dornin	May 2, 1815	do	Ireland	Maryland	Maryland	Brandywine.
John P. Tuttle	Nov. 30, 1814	do	Connecticut	Connecticut	Connecticut	John Adams.
Robert B. Cunningham	do	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Brandywine.
James Glynn	March 4, 1815	do	Pennsylvania	do	Connecticut	Waiting orders.
Joseph Myers	Dec. 6, 1814	do	North Carolina	do	North Carolina	Mediterranean.
William C. Wetmore	June 18, 1812	do	New York	New York	New York	Leave of absence.
William B. Nicholson	March 17, 1814	do	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Leave of absence.
Thomas R. Gedney	March 4, 1815	do	South Carolina	South Carolina	South Carolina	North Carolina 74.
John Bubier	Nov. 9, 1813	do	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Leave of absence.
Victor M. Randolph	June 11, 1814	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Waiting orders.
Joseph Cutts, jr	Dec. 6, 1814	do	Maine	Maine	Maine	Leave of absence.
Jacob Crowninshield	March 11, 1815	do	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Leave of absence.
Frederick Engle	Dec. 6, 1814	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Brandywine.
A. J. D. Browne	Dec. 17, 1810	do	Connecticut	Connecticut	Massachusetts	Sloop Boston.
Jesse Smith	March 11, 1815	do	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	do	Waiting orders.
John H. Smith	Jan. 1, 1815	do	New York	New York	New York	Furlough.
Francis Sanderson	Feb. 3, 1815	do	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Navy yard, New York.
John Rudd	Nov. 30, 1814	do	Rhode Island	Virginia	Virginia	Brandywine.
Russell Baldwin	May 17, 1813	do	Massachusetts	New York	New York	Furlough.
Jonathan W. Sherburne	Nov. 30, 1814	do	New Hampshire	New Hampshire	New Hampshire	Surveying.
Robert Ritchie	Feb. 1, 1814	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Grampus.
David R. Stewart	do	do	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Shark.
William W. M'Kean	Nov. 30, 1814	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Rendezvous, Philadelphia.
Benjamin Tallmadge, jr	Jan. 24, 1815	do	Connecticut	Connecticut	Connecticut	Constitution.
Franklin Buchanan	Jan. 28, 1815	do	Maryland	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Furlough.
Hubbard H. Hobbs	March 4, 1815	do	Virginia	Virginia	Alabama	Waiting orders.
Samuel Mercer	do	do	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Waiting orders.
Charles Lowndes	March 18, 1815	do	do	do	Virginia	Waiting orders.
L. M. Goldsborough	June 18, 1812	do	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	Maryland	Mediterranean.
George N. Hollins	Feb. 1, 1814	do	Maryland	Maryland	do	Grampus.
D. N. Ingraham	June 18, 1812	do	South Carolina	South Carolina	South Carolina	Sloop Lexington.
John Marston, jr	April 15, 1813	do	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Brandywine.
Henry Bruce	Nov. 9, 1813	do	Maine	do	do	Receiving ship at Boston.
William D. Newman	Feb. 1, 1814	do	New York	New York	New York	Leave of absence.
Henry A. Adams	March 14, 1814	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Leave of absence.
Alexander B. Pinkman	June 17, 1814	do	Massachusetts	Ohio	Massachusetts	John Adams.

Naval register for 1827—LIEUTENANTS—Continued.

Names.	Original entry into the service.	Date of present commission.	Where born.	State from which appointed.	State of which a citizen.	Duty or station.
William H. Homer	Nov. 30, 1814	Jan. 13, 1825				Frigate United States.
James D. Knight	do	do	South Carolina	South Carolina	South Carolina	Furlough.
Joseph Mattison	do	do				Leave of absence.
William S. Walker	do	do	New Hampshire	New Hampshire	Massachusetts	Receiving ship at Boston.
Alexander Slidell	Jan. 1, 1815	do				Mediterranean.
James G. Bougham	Jan. 11, 1815	do	Virginia	Maryland	Virginia	Constellation.
George E. Pearson	March 11, 1815	do	New Hampshire	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Porpoise.
1826.
James T. Gerry	Dec. 20, 1815	April 28, 1826	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Leave of absence.
John S. Nicholas	June 6, 1815	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Dolphin.
Samuel F. Dupont	Dec. 19, 1815	do	New Jersey	Delaware	Delaware	North Carolina 74.
William L. Hudson	Jan. 1, 1816	do	New York	New York	New York	Sloop Warren.
William H. Campbell	May 30, 1816	do	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	West India squadron.
Joseph M. Nicholson	Jan. 1, 1817	do	do	do	do	Waiting orders.
James P. Wilson	do	do	do	do	do	Waiting orders.
George A. Magruder	do	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Sloop Vincennes.
J. Edward Calhoun	May 30, 1816	do	South Carolina	South Carolina	South Carolina	Macedonian.
John Pope	do	do	Massachusetts	Maine	Maine	Constitution.
Henry D. Scott	do	do	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Gosport ordinary.
Levin M. Powell	March 1, 1817	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Waiting orders.
Charles Wilkes	Jan. 1, 1818	do	New York	New York	New York	Waiting orders.
Elisha Peck	March 4, 1817	do	Connecticut	Connecticut	Connecticut	On leave of absence.
John R. Coxe, jr	July 4, 1817	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Sloop Hornet.
William Seton	do	do	New York	New York	New York	Sloop Hornet.
John A. Carr	do	do	Maryland	Virginia	Virginia	North Carolina 74.
Alex. H. Hopkinson	Sept. 25, 1817	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Sloop Lexington.
Thomas J. Manning	Jan. 1, 1817	do	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	Porpoise.
William Pearson	Jan. 1, 1818	do	do	do	do	Sloop Hornet.
William Foster	Jan. 1, 1817	do	do	do	do	Not on duty.
William L. Howard	Jan. 10, 1815	do	do	New York	do	Waiting orders.
William P. Piercy	March 15, 1815	do	Pennsylvania	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	Surveying.
Richard A. Jones	June 18, 1812	do	New York	New York	New York	Brandywine.
Arch. R. Bogardus	Jan. 1, 1817	do	do	do	do	Navy yard, New York.
John Swartwout	Nov. 9, 1813	do	do	do	do	Waiting orders.
Thomas J. Leib	Sept. 1, 1811	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Shark.

Lieutenants, 228

Naval register for 1827—Continued.

SURGEONS.

Names.	Original entry into the service.	Date of present commission.	Where born.	State from which appointed.	State of which a citizen.	Duty or station.
Edward Cutbush, surgeon	June 24, 1799	June 24, 1799	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Navy hospital, Washington.
Sam. R. Marshall, surgeon	May 14, 1799	Jan. 16, 1800	Barbadoes	do	do	Navy hospital, New York.
Lewis Heermann	Feb. 8, 1802	Nov. 27, 1804	Germany	Virginia	Louisiana	Leave of absence.
Jonathan Cowdery	Jan. 1, 1800	do	Massachusetts	New York	Virginia	Norfolk station.
Robert L. Thorn	March 3, 1809	March 3, 1809				Constellation.
William P. C. Barton	June 28, 1809	June 28, 1809	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Navy yard, Philadelphia.
George Logan, surgeon	April 21, 1810	April 21, 1810	South Carolina	South Carolina	South Carolina	Charleston, South Carolina. Unwell.
Thomas Harris, surgeon	July 6, 1812	July 6, 1812	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Navy hospital, Philadelphia.
William Turk, surgeon	July 24, 1813	July 24, 1813	New York	New York	New York	Navy hospital, Boston.
Hyde Ray, surgeon's mate	July 20, 1809	do	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Waiting orders.
W. W. Buchanan, surgeon*	October, 1800	Dec. 21, 1812	New Jersey	New York	New York	Receiving ship at New York.
Gerard Dayers		July 24, 1813	Flanders	District of Columbia.	Virginia	Brandywine.
Benjamin P. Kissam, surgeon	July 24, 1813	do	New York	New York	New York	Leave of absence.
John A. Kearny, surgeon's mate	March 3, 1809	do	Ireland	District of Columbia.	District of Columbia.	Navy yard, Boston.
Bailey Washington	May 19, 1810	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	North Carolina 74.
William Swift	May 14, 1813	April 15, 1814	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Leave of absence.
Thomas B. Salter	May 19, 1813	May 22, 1815	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	Navy yard, Pensacola.
Peter Christie	July 8, 1812	April 27, 1816	do	do	Pennsylvania	Leave of absence.
Samuel Jackson	July 10, 1812	March 27, 1818	New York	New York	New York	Leave of absence.
Andrew B. Cooke	Dec. 21, 1812	do	do	do	do	Navy yard, New York.
John H. Gordon	March 9, 1813	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Rendezvous, Philadelphia.
Leonard Osborne	April 29, 1813	do	England	District of Columbia.	Maryland	Leave of absence.
Thomas Williamson	May 13, 1813	do	Maryland	Maryland	do	Navy yard, Gosport.
George S. Sproston	Nov. 8, 1813	do	do	do	do	Rendezvous, Baltimore.
Elnathan Judson	Aug. 8, 1815	do	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	District of Columbia.	Cyane.
Benajah Ticknor	Dec. 10, 1814	July 10, 1824	Vermont	Connecticut	Connecticut	Macedonian.
Mordecai Morgan	Dec. 28, 1818	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Marine barracks, Washington.
Thomas J. Boyd	March 28, 1820	do	Delaware	Delaware	Delaware	Sloop Vincennes.
John W. Peaco	May 20, 1814	do	Maryland	Maryland	Pennsylvania	At Mesurado.
William Birchmore	Jan. 10, 1815	do	England	Massachusetts	Maine	Rendezvous, Boston.
James Cornick	Sept. 11, 1819	May 2, 1825	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Mediterranean.
Charles Chase	Dec. 10, 1814	May 3, 1825	Maine	Maine	Maine	Navy yard, Portsmouth.
D. S. Edwards	July 30, 1818	May 5, 1825	Connecticut	Connecticut	Connecticut	Sloop Boston.
Isaac Hulse	May 12, 1823	May 6, 1825	New York	New York	Maryland	Pensacola.
A. M. Montgomery	July 16, 1814	May 7, 1825	New Jersey	do	New Jersey	Navy hospital, New York.
John S. Wiley	Dec. 20, 1815	May 9, 1825				Mediterranean.
George Terrill	March 28, 1820	May 22, 1826	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Sloop Warren.

* Discharged under peace establishment, August 4, 1801. Reappointed December 21, 1812.

Naval register for 1827—SURGEONS—Continued.

Names.	Original entry into the service.	Date of present commission.	Where born.	State from which appointed.	State of which a citizen.	Duty or station.
John Haslett	June 30, 1823	May 23, 1826	South Carolina	South Carolina	South Carolina	Sloop Lexington.
E. L. Dubarry	do	May 24, 1826	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Sloop Hornet.
Henry W. Bassett	Dec. 24, 1822	May 25, 1826	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Not on duty.
Surgeons—40.
SURGEONS' MATES.
William Belt	Sept. 23, 1811	Sept. 23, 1811				Sloop Peacock.
Benjamin A. Wells	Dec. 10, 1814	Dec. 10, 1814				Sloop Peacock.
T. V. Wiesenthal	do	do	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Navy hospital, Gosport.
James R. Boyce	Jan. 31, 1815	April 27, 1816	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Sloop Vincennes.
William Williamson	March 28, 1820	March 28, 1820	New Jersey	New York	New York	Gosport ordinary, &c.
Stephen Rapalje	June 36, 1823	May 26, 1824				John Adams.
Benjamin R. Tinslar	Feb. 1, 1823	do				Frigate United States.
Waters Smith	June 5, 1820	do	New York	Florida	Florida	Mediterranean.
Cornelius Moore	May 26, 1824	do	do	New York	New York	Cyane.
Thomas J. Bradner	Dec. 23, 1823	do				Frigate United States.
Benjamin F. Bache	July 9, 1824	July 9, 1824	Virginia	Pennsylvania	New Jersey	Sloop Ontario.
R. P. Macomber	July 13, 1824	July 13, 1824	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	New York	Porpoise.
Augustus A. Adee	July 15, 1824	July 15, 1824	New York	New York	do	Shark.
John R. Chandler	Nov. 14, 1824	Nov. 14, 1824	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	North Carolina 74.
Thomas Dillard	Nov. 15, 1824	Nov. 15, 1824	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Grampus.
Augustin P. Beers	Nov. 16, 1824	Nov. 16, 1824	New York	Connecticut	Connecticut	North Carolina 74.
Richard Kennon	Nov. 17, 1824	Nov. 17, 1824	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Navy yard, Boston.
John H. Imlay	Nov. 16, 1824	Nov. 16, 1824	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	Sloop Boston.
James M. Greene	April 20, 1825	April 20, 1825	Ireland	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	John Adams.
Gideon White, jr	May 2, 1825	May 2, 1825	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Sloop Warren.
William Plumstead	May 13, 1825	May 13, 1825	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Rendezvous, Philadelphia.
George W. Codwise	May 14, 1825	May 14, 1825	West Indies	New York	New York	Navy yard, New York.
John F. Brooke	May 16, 1825	May 16, 1825	Virginia	Pennsylvania	Virginia	Constitution.
Charles Wayne	Aug. 29, 1825	Aug. 29, 1825	Pennsylvania	do	Pennsylvania	Constellation.
Henry S. Coulter	May 26, 1826	May 26, 1826	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Macedonian.
G. R. B. Horner	do	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Macedonian.
Robert J. Dood	May 29, 1826	May 29, 1826	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Sloop Lexington.
William Seal	June 24, 1826	June 24, 1826	Delaware	do	Delaware	Brandywine.
Samuel G. Clarkson	Aug. 8, 1826	Aug. 8, 1826	Pennsylvania	do	Pennsylvania	Navy hospital, Philadelphia.
Henry C. Pratt	Aug. 9, 1826	Aug. 9, 1826	do	do	do	Pacific.
W. S. W. Ruschenberger	Aug. 10, 1826	Aug. 10, 1826	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	Pacific.
Samuel B. Malone	Aug. 11, 1826	Aug. 11, 1826	Virginia	Alabama	Alabama	Pacific.
Samuel W. Ruff	Aug. 12, 1826	Aug. 12, 1826	do	Virginia	Virginia	Leave of absence.
William C. McCall	Aug. 14, 1826	Aug. 14, 1826	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pacific.

Naval register for 1827—SURGEONS' MATES—Continued.

Names.	Original entry into the service.	Date of present commission.	Where born.	State from which appointed.	State of which a citizen.	Duty or station.
Mifflin Coulter	Aug. 15, 1826	Aug. 15, 1826	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Receiving ship, New York.
William Johnson	Aug. 16, 1826	Aug. 16, 1826	Delaware	Delaware	Delaware	Sloop Hornet.
John Denny	Aug. 17, 1826	Aug. 17, 1826	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Navy yard, Washington.
Samuel Mosely	do	do				Mediterranean.
Wm. Fairlie Patton	do	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Brandywine.
George W. Palmer	Aug. 18, 1826	Aug. 18, 1826				Navy hospital, Boston.
Surgeons' mates—43
		PURSERS.
Isaac Garretson	March 9, 1798	April 25, 1812	Pennsylvania	Maryland	Virginia	Baltimore station.
Clement S. Huntt	June 7, 1803	do	Maryland	do	Rhode Island	Navy yard, Philadelphia.
Gwin Harris	April 9, 1804	do	do	District of Columbia.	Maryland	Leave of absence.
John H. Carr	June 28, 1804	do	England	Virginia	New Jersey	Philadelphia station.
Nathaniel Lyde	Dec. 10, 1805	do	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	New Hampshire	Navy yard, Portsmouth, New Hampshire.
Samuel Hambleton	Dec. 6, 1806	do	Maryland	District of Columbia.	Maryland	Navy yard, Pensacola.
John B. Timberlake	Jan. 9, 1809	do	Virginia	Virginia	District of Columbia.	Constitution.
Thomas I. Chew	March 9, 1809	do	Connecticut	Connecticut	New York	New York station.
Thomas Shields	April 14, 1809	do	Delaware	Delaware	Louisiana	Not on duty.
Lewis Deblois	March 22, 1810	do	Massachusetts	District of Columbia.	Massachusetts	Not on duty.
Fras. A. Thornton	Jan. 29, 1811	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Constellation.
James M. Halsey	March 2, 1811	do	New York	New York	New York	Leave of absence.
Edward Fitzgerald	March 22, 1811	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	District of Columbia.	Navy yard, Gosport.
Alexander P. Darragh	May 6, 1811	do	Delaware	Delaware	Virginia	Macedonian.
William S. Rogers	Feb. 26, 1813	Feb. 26, 1813	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Boston station.
Samuel P. Todd	July 20, 1812	March 1, 1813	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	North Carolina 74.
George Beale	Jan. 8, 1812	July 24, 1813				Frigate United States.
James H. Clark	July 24, 1813	do	Connecticut	New York	New York	Navy yard, New York.
Joseph Wilson	do	do	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	New Hampshire	Navy yard, Boston.
Joseph B. Wilkinson	March 26, 1814	March 26, 1814	Kentucky	Mississippi	Louisiana	New Orleans.
William Sinclair	do	do	Massachusetts	Georgia	Georgia	Charleston, South Carolina, station.
John N. Todd	March 1, 1815	March 1, 1815	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Sloop Lexington.
Timothy Winn*	June 29, 1799	May 17, 1815	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	District of Columbia.	Navy yard, Washington.
William M. Sands	May 20, 1815	May 20, 1815	New York	New York	New York	Sloop, Vincennes.
Joseph H. Terry	June 6, 1815	June 6, 1815	do	do	do	Cyane.
Thomas Breese	July 8, 1815	July 8, 1815,	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Waiting orders.
Gardner Thomas	July 12, 1815	July 12, 1815	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	New York	Waiting orders.
John De Bree	Dec. 29, 1817	Dec. 29, 1817	New Jersey	Pennsylvania	Virginia	Receiving ship at Norfolk.
Charles O. Handy	do	do	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Waiting orders.
Silas Butler*	July 3, 1799	do	Connecticut	Connecticut	New York	Receiving ship, New York.

* Left out by an act of Congress of March 30, 1812.

Naval register for 1827—PURSERS—Continued.

Names.	Original entry into the service.	Date of present commission.	Where born.	State from which appointed.	State of which a citizen.	Duty or station.
Edward N. Cox*	April 6, 1799	March 28, 1820	Maryland	New York	New York	Brandywine.
Nathaniel H. Perry	March 28, 1820	do	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Mediterranean.
John N. Hambleton	Oct. 26, 1819	May 26, 1824	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	John Adams.
Joseph Watson	Sept. 11, 1821	do	Massachusetts	New York	New York	Sloop Boston.
William M'Murtrie	Nov. 14, 1823	do	Pennsylvania	New Jersey	New Jersey	Sloop Ontario.
Garret R. Barry	Jan. 15, 1824	March 3, 1825	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Leave of absence.
William P. Zantzinger	July 24, 1813	do	do	do	do	West Indies.
Daniel M'F. Thornton	Dec. 30, 1824	do	Virginia	Kentucky	Virginia	Leave of absence.
Josiah Colston	May 28, 1825	May 28, 1825	Maryland	District of Columbia.	District of Columbia.	Leave of absence.
Robert Pottenger	Jan. 9, 1809	July 16, 1825	do	Maryland	Maryland	Sloop Hornet.
Dudley Walker, midshipman	March 4, 1819	Aug. 21, 1826	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Sloop Peacock.
M'Kean Buchanan	Aug. 21, 1826	do	Maryland	District of Columbia.	Pennsylvania	Dolphin.
Henry Etting, midshipman	Jan. 1, 1818	Nov. 7, 1826	do	Pennsylvania	do	Shark.
Pursers—43.
CHAPLAINS.
John Cook	May 19, 1812	May 19, 1812	England	District of Columbia.	New York	Not on duty.
James Brooks	Dec. 28, 1818	Dec. 28, 1818	Virginia	New York	Virginia	Navy yard, New York.
James Everett	do	do	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Navy yard, Boston.
Addison Searle	April 27, 1820	April 27, 1820	New Hampshire	New Hampshire	New York	Leave of absence.
Burgess Allison	March 3, 1823	March 3, 1823	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	Navy yard, Washington.
Cave Jones	June 3, 1823	May 26, 1824	New York	New York	New York	Navy school, New York.
John W. Grier	Oct. 18, 1824	March 3, 1825	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Waiting orders.
John Addison	March 3, 1825	do	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Waiting orders.
Edward M'Laughlin	April 19, 1826	April 19, 1826	New York	New York	New York	Norfolk.
Chaplains—9.
MIDSHIPMEN.
A.
George Adams	Jan. 1, 1818	Jan. 1, 1818				Grampus.
Henry J. Auchmuty	May 10, 1820	May 10, 1820	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Cyane.
Robert W. Alden	May 1, 1822	May 1, 1822	New Hampshire	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Grampus.
Joseph Arnold	March 4, 1823	March 4, 1823	Georgia	Georgia	Georgia	Dolphin.
Chas. M. Armstrong	do	do	New York	New Jersey	New Jersey	Constitution.
Gurden C. Ashton	Dec. 9, 1823	Dec. 9, 1823	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Constellation.
Mark T. Anderson	Jan. 1, 1825	Jan. 1, 1825				Pensacola.
William H. Alexander	March 1, 1825	March 1, 1825	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Constellation.
Henry Amelung	Feb. 1, 1826	Feb. 1, 1826	Louisiana	Louisiana	Louisiana	West India squadron.

* Entered the service as a midshipman, April 6, 1799.

Naval register for 1827—MIDSHIPMEN—Continued

Names.	Original entry into the service.	Date of present warrant.	Where born.	State from which appointed.	State of which a citizen.	Duty or station.
B.
Samuel Barron	Jan. 1, 1812	Jan. 1, 1812	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Sloop Lexington.
Timothy G. Benham	Nov. 30, 1814	Nov. 30, 1814	Connecticut	Connecticut	Connecticut	Furlough.
Oscar Bullus	Jan. 1, 1817	Jan. 1, 1817	District of Columbia	New York	New York	Waiting orders.
Abra'm J. Bennett	July 4, 1817	July 4, 1817	Delaware	Delaware	Pennsylvania	Surveying.
George S. Blake	Jan. 1, 1818	Jan. 1, 1818	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Furlough.
Theodorus Bailey, jr.	do	do	New York	New York	New York	Leave of absence.
Joseph R. Blake	do	do	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	Sloop Peacock.
T. M'K. Buchanan	Nov. 3, 1818	Nov. 3, 1818	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Leave of absence.
Edward B. Boutwell	March 3, 1819	March 3, 1819	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Sloop Ontario.
Joseph R. Brown	July 10, 1819	July 10, 1819	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Navy yard, New York.
John Q. A. Boyd	Dec. 13, 1819	Dec. 13, 1819	District of Columbia	Virginia	District of Columbia	Leave of absence.
John E. Bispham	do	do	.....	.....	.....	United States.
S. M. Breckenridge	Dec. 15, 1819	Dec. 15, 1819	.....	.....	.....	Furlough.
Edward O. Blanchard	May 10, 1820	May 10, 1820	Virginia	Mississippi	Louisiana	North Carolina 74.
John C. Bunner	May 1, 1822	May 1, 1822	New York	New York	New York	Brandywine.
Patrick F. Bradlee	Sept. 1, 1822	Sept. 1, 1822	.....	.....	.....	Frigate United States.
John L. Ball	Dec. 4, 1822	Dec. 4, 1822	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	North Carolina 74.
George Briard	March 4, 1823	March 4, 1823	New Hampshire	New Hampshire	New Hampshire	Leave of absence.
Robert L. Browning	do	do	Kentucky	Kentucky	Kentucky	John Adams.
Henry H. Bell	Aug. 4, 1823	Aug. 4, 1823	North Carolina	North Carolina	North Carolina	Mediterranean.
Edward Boyd	Aug. 19, 1823	Aug. 19, 1823	New York	New York	New York	Leave of absence.
Junius I. Boyle	Aug. 27, 1823	Aug. 27, 1823	Maryland	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	Peacock.
John R. Bryan	Oct. 4, 1823	Oct. 4, 1823	.....	.....	.....	Peacock.
Owen Burns	Dec. 1, 1824	Dec. 1, 1824	North Carolina	North Carolina	North Carolina	Constellation.
George M. Bache	Jan. 1, 1825	Jan. 1, 1825	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Constitution.
Joshua J. Boyd	do	do	District of Columbia	Michigan	Michigan	Navy yard, New York.
Solomon D. Betton	do	do	Virginia	Georgia	Georgia	Navy yard, New York.
Francis Bartlett	March 1, 1825	March 1, 1825	Massachusetts	Vermont	Massachusetts	Sloop Vincennes.
Simon B. Bissell	do	do	Vermont	New Hampshire	New Hampshire	Sloop Vincennes.
John M. Berrien	do	do	Georgia	Georgia	New Jersey	Constellation.
Thomas W. Brent	do	do	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	Constitution.
Francis G. Beatty	do	do	do	do	do	Surveying.
James Bradford	June 16, 1825	June 16, 1825	Louisiana	Louisiana	Louisiana	Leave of absence.
Lorenzo T. Bennett	Dec. 7, 1825	Dec. 7, 1825	New York	Connecticut	Connecticut	Sloop Lexington.
William H. Browne	April 1, 1826	April 1, 1826	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Receiving ship, Norfolk.
Henry Booraem	Nov. 1, 1826	Nov. 1, 1826	New Jersey	New York	New York
Agenor Bosque	do	do	.....	.....	.....
Charles S. Boggs	do	do	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey
Philip M. Box	do	do	.....	.....	.....

Naval register for 1827—Midshipmen—Continued.

Names.	Original entry into service.	Date of present warrant.	Where born.	State from which appointed.	State of which a citizen.	Duty or station.
C.
Joseph S. Cornwell	Jan. 1, 1812	Jan. 1, 1812				Boston.
Joseph S. Cannon	Feb. 26, 1814	Feb. 26, 1814	Delaware	Delaware	Delaware	Receiving ship, Baltimore.
Charles B. Childs	Jan. 28, 1815	Jan. 28, 1815	New York	New York	New York	Furlough.
Samuel B. Cocke	Jan. 1, 1818	Jan. 1, 1818	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Leave of absence.
John Cassin	May 10, 1820	May 10, 1820	Pennsylvania	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	Leave of absence.
John Calhoun	Jan. 25, 1821	Jan. 25, 1821				Frigate United States.
Thomas T. Craven	May 1, 1822	May 1, 1822				Peacock.
C. W. Chauncey	do	do	New York	New York	New York	North Carolina 74.
W. C. G. Carrington	Feb. 6, 1823	Feb. 6, 1823	North Carolina	North Carolina	North Carolina	Receiving ship, Norfolk.
Horatio N. Cady	March 4, 1823	March 4, 1823	New Hampshire	New Hampshire	New Hampshire	Leave of absence.
Philander F. Canedy	do	do	Massachusetts	Vermont	Vermont	Cyane.
Walter C. Cutts	do	do				Frigate United States.
Jerome Callan	do	do	Pennsylvania	Indiana	Pennsylvania	Cyane.
Frederick Chatard	Nov. 16, 1824	Nov. 16, 1824	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	North Carolina 74.
Charles Crillon	Dec. 1, 1824	Dec. 1, 1824	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania
John B. Cutting, jr.	Jan. 1, 1825	Jan. 1, 1825	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Brandywine.
John C. Carter	do	do	do	Kentucky	Kentucky	Sloop Lexington.
Richard S. Coxe	March 1, 1825	March 1, 1825	New York	New Jersey	New Jersey	Porpoise.
John W. Cox, jr.	do	do	Louisiana	Ohio	Ohio	Sloop Lexington.
Daniel Cameron	Jan. 1, 1826	Jan. 1, 1826	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Brandywine.
Joseph Cohen	Feb. 1, 1826	Feb. 1, 1826	South Carolina	South Carolina	South Carolina	Sloop Vincennes.
James W. Crenshaw	April 1, 1826	April 1, 1826	Virginia	Alabama	Alabama	Sloop Vincennes.
Daniel Carter	Aug. 1, 1826	Aug. 1, 1826	Ohio	Ohio	Ohio	Navy yard, Philadelphia.
William Chandler	do	do	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	Brandywine.
Robert A. Cassin	Nov. 1, 1826	Nov. 1, 1826	Pennsylvania	Louisiana	do
William C. Chaplin	do	do	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania
D.
Albert E. Downes	Jan. 1, 1818	Jan. 1, 1818				Frigate United States.
Fitz Allen Deas	July 4, 1821	July 4, 1821	New York	South Carolina	South Carolina	Macedonian.
Nathaniel W. Duke	May 1, 1822	May 1, 1822	Kentucky	Kentucky	Kentucky	Leave of absence.
Thomas Dimmock	March 4, 1823	March 4, 1823	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Furlough.
John A. Davis	do	do	North Carolina	Tennessee	Louisiana	New York station.
Charles H. Davis	Aug. 12, 1823	Aug. 12, 1823				Frigate United States.
Charles H. Duryee	Aug. 19, 1823	Aug. 19, 1823	New York	New York	New York	Mediterranean.
Ezra T. Doughty	May 3, 1824	May 3, 1824	do	do	do	Constitution.
Joseph O. Devezin	Oct. 16, 1824	Oct. 16, 1824	Louisiana	Louisiana	Louisiana	Constellation.
James F. Duncan	Nov. 12, 1825	Nov. 12, 1825	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Cyane.
John C. Davidson	Nov. 22, 1825	Nov. 22, 1825	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	Cyane.

Naval register for 1827—MIDSHIPMEN—Continued.

Names.	Original entry into the service.	Date of present warrant.	Where born.	State from which appointed.	State of which a citizen.	Duty or station.
John A. Dahlgren	Feb. 1, 1826....	Feb. 1, 1826....	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Macedonian.
Henry D'Arcantal	April 1, 1826....	April 1, 1826....	Louisiana	Louisiana	Louisiana	West India squadron.
Benjamin M. Dove	Dec. 1, 1826....	Dec. 1, 1826....	Virginia	Virginia	District of Columbia.	Sloop Warren.
E.
Henry Eagle, jr.	Jan. 1, 1818....	Jan. 1, 1818....	New York.....	New York.....	New York.....	Waiting orders.
Francis B. Ellison	May 28, 1819....	May 28, 1819....	do	do	do	Porpoise.
William B. Everett	Feb. 1, 1823....	Feb. 1, 1823....	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Leave of absence.
Alexander H. Edwards	March 4, 1823....	March 4, 1823....	Indiana.....	Michigan	Michigan	Constitution.
Thomas O. L. Elwyn	Sept. 19, 1825....	Sept. 19, 1825....	New Hampshire	New Hampshire	New Hampshire	Macedonian.
F.
Lewis C. F. Fatio	March 8, 1822....	March 8, 1822....	Pennsylvania	Florida	Florida	Leave of absence.
Andrew H. Foot	Dec. 4, 1822....	Dec. 4, 1822....	.....	.....	.....	Peacock.
Ebenezer Farrand	March 4, 1823....	March 4, 1823....	New York.....	New Jersey	New Jersey	Leave of absence.
Archibald B. Fairfax	August 4, 1823....	Aug. 4, 1823....	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Norfolk. Sick.
Robert Fitzhugh	Jan. 1, 1824....	Jan. 1, 1825....	Maryland	New York.....	New York.....	Cyane.
Timothy B. Field	March 1, 1825....	March 1, 1825....	Connecticut	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Sloop Warren.
William C. Farrar	April 1, 1826....	April 1, 1826....	Missouri	Missouri	Missouri	Receiving ship, Philadelphia.
James N. Forsyth	Nov. 1, 1826....	Nov. 1, 1826....	North Carolina	North Carolina	North Carolina	Receiving ship, New York.
John Fisher	do	do	Delaware	Delaware	Delaware	Sloop Hornet.
G.
William Green	Jan. 1, 1818....	Jan. 1, 1818....	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	John Adams.
Alexander G. Gordon	do	do	District of Columbia.	District of Columbia.	do	Waiting orders.
William M. Glendy	do	do	Virginia	Maryland	do	Sloop Boston.
Charles W. Gay	Oct. 27, 1818....	Oct. 27, 1818....	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Leave of absence.
John Graham	Feb. 27, 1819....	Feb. 27, 1819....	Kentucky.....	Kentucky	Kentucky.....	North Carolina 74.
Sylvanus Godon	March 4, 1819....	March 4, 1819....	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Macedonian.
Farnifold Green	May 1, 1822....	May 1, 1822....	North Carolina	North Carolina	North Carolina	Sloop Warren.
Alexander Gibson	July 4, 1822....	July 4, 1822....	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Constellation.
John J. Glasson	Feb. 1, 1823....	Feb. 1, 1823....	New York.....	New York.....	New York.....	North Carolina 74.
Guert Gansevoort	March 4, 1823....	March 4, 1823....	do	do	do	Constitution.
Israel S. Griffin	do	do	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	North Carolina 74.
William F. Grymes	do	do	Virginia.	Virginia	Virginia	Sloop Boston.
Helmuth J. Gaedicke	Aug. 19, 1823....	Aug. 19, 1823....	West Indies.....	New Jersey	New Jersey	Porpoise.
James B. Glentworth	do	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	do	Brandywine.
J. R. Goldsborough	Nov. 16, 1824....	Nov. 16, 1824....	District of Columbia.	District of Columbia.	District of Columbia.	North Carolina 74.
John Graham	Jan. 1, 1825....	Jan. 1, 1825....	Connecticut	Connecticut	Connecticut	Leave of absence.
Archibald M. Green	March 1, 1825....	March 1, 1825....	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Leave of absence.
John P. Gillis	Dec. 12, 1825....	Dec. 12, 1825....	Delaware	Illinois	Illinois	Brandywine.
Spencer C. Gist	May 1, 1826....	May 1, 1826....	Tennessee.....	Tennessee.....	Tennessee.....	Shark.

Naval register for 1827—MIDSHIPMEN—Continued.

Names.	Original entry into the service.	Date of present warrant.	Where born.	State from which appointed.	State of which a citizen.	Duty or station.
Charles Green	May 1, 1826	May 1, 1826	Connecticut	Connecticut	Connecticut	Receiving ship at Boston.
John M. Gardner	June 1, 1826	June 1, 1826	Pennsylvania	Maryland	Pennsylvania	Shark.
Oliver S. Glisson	Nov. 1, 1826	Nov. 1, 1826	Ohio	Indiana	Indiana	West India squadron.
Theodore P. Green	do	do	Vermont	Vermont	Vermont	Navy yard, Boston.
George R. Gray	do	do
Alberto Griffith	do	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Receiving ship, Baltimore.
Edwin L. Greenwood	Dec. 1, 1826	Dec. 1, 1826
Samuel T. Gillet	do	do
H.
Levi M. Harby	June 18, 1812	June 18, 1812	South Carolina	South Carolina	South Carolina	Navy yard, Gosport.
Stern Humphreys	Jan. 1, 1818	Jan. 1, 1818	New York	New York	New York	Waiting orders.
Andrew A. Harwood	do	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Constitution.
John Hamilton	July 4, 1818	July 4, 1818	New York	New York	New York	Sloop Boston.
James T. Homans	Dec. 3, 1819	Dec. 3, 1819	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Macedonian.
Cary H. Hansford	May 10, 1820	May 10, 1820	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Brandywine.
Paul H. Hayne	do	do	South Carolina	South Carolina	South Carolina	Constitution.
Thomas J. Harris	May 1, 1822	May 1, 1822				Peacock.
William W. Hunter	do	do	Pennsylvania	Louisiana	Louisiana	North Carolina 74.
John W. Hunt, jr	do	do	Kentucky	Kentucky	Kentucky	Leave of absence.
Samuel F. Hazard	Jan. 1, 1823	Jan. 1, 1823				Frigate United States.
Edward Hoban	Feb. 1, 1823	Feb. 1, 1823	District of Columbia.	District of Columbia.	District of Columbia.	Brandywine.
Neil M'C. Howison	do	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Peacock.
Edward H. Hubbard	March 4, 1823	March 4, 1823	Maine	Maine	Maine	Navy yard, Pensacola.
John E. Holt, jr	do	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Leave of absence.
William C. Homes	Aug. 25, 1823	Aug. 25, 1823				Frigate United States.
William E. Hunt	Oct. 28, 1823	Oct. 28, 1823	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	Sloop Hornet.
Henry Hoff	do	do	Pennsylvania	South Carolina	South Carolina	Constitution.
Horatio M. Houston	May 12, 1824	May 12, 1824	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	North Carolina 74.
George M. Hooe	Oct. 21, 1824	Oct. 21, 1824	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	North Carolina 74.
Charles G. Hunter	Nov. 16, 1824	Nov. 16, 1824	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	North Carolina 74.
William A. Howard	Jan. 1, 1825	Jan. 1, 1825	Maine	Maine	Maine	Navy yard, Boston.
John S. Hart	do	do	Kentucky	Kentucky	Kentucky	Sloop Boston.
Robert B. Hitchcock	do	do	Connecticut	Connecticut	Connecticut	Shark.
George Hurst	do	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Cyane.
Mark Hale	March 1, 1825	March 1, 1825	Vermont	Vermont	Vermont	Navy yard, Boston.
Timothy A. Huntt	do	do	Connecticut	Connecticut	Connecticut	Sloop Vincennes.
William F. Hooe	August 1, 1825	Aug. 1, 1825	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Sloop Warren.
Robert M. Harrison	Nov. 9, 1825	Nov. 9, 1825	Sweden	do	do	Porpoise.
Robert Handy	Feb. 1, 1826	Feb. 1, 1826	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	John Adams.

Naval register for 1827—MIDSHIPMEN—Continued.

Names.	Original entry into the service.	Date of present warrant.	Where born.	State from which appointed.	State of which a citizen.	Duty or station.
John Harker	March 1, 1826....	March 1, 1826....	North Carolina.	North Carolina	North Carolina	Dolphin.
George N. Hawkins	do	do	Kentucky	Kentucky	Kentucky.....	Dolphin.
Crawford W. Hall	June 1, 1826....	June 1, 1826....	do	do	do	West India squadron.
Francis Huger	do	do	South Carolina	South Carolina	South Carolina
Edward L. Handy	do	do	Maryland.....	Maryland.....	Maryland	Navy yard, Philadelphia.
Lewis P. Higbee	Nov. 1, 1826....	Nov. 1, 1826....	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey.....	Hornet.
Charles Heywood	do	do	Maine.....	Maine.....	Maine.....	Receiving ship, New York.
I.
George Izard, jr.	Jan. 1, 1818....	Jan. 1, 1818....	Pennsylvania.....	Pennsylvania.....	Pennsylvania	Navy yard, Philadelphia.
Jonathan Ingersoll	March 4, 1823....	March 4, 1823....	Connecticut	Connecticut	Connecticut	Constitution.
Harry Ingersoll	Feb. 28, 1824....	Feb. 28, 1824....	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania.....	Pennsylvania.....	Brandywine.
William F. Irving	Jan. 1, 1825....	Jan. 1, 1825....	New York.....	New York	New York	Brandywine.
Andrew M. Irwin	March 1, 1825....	March 1, 1825....	Pennsylvania.....	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania.....	Brandywine.
Edgar Irving	Nov. 1, 1826....	Nov. 1, 1826....	New York.....	New York	New York.....
J.
Joshua H. Justin	Nov. 30, 1814....	Nov. 30. 1814....	Rhode Island.....	Rhode Island.....	Rhode Island	Sloop Warren.
Robert W. Jones	Jan. 1, 1818....	Jan. 1, 1818....	New York.....	New York.....	New York.....	New York station.
Zachariah F. Johnston	do	do	Maryland	Maryland.....	Maryland	Waiting orders.
Charles H. Jackson	March 4, 1818....	March 4, 1818....	Georgia.....	Georgia.....	Georgia.....	Surveying.
Kinsey Johns	Jan. 1, 1823....	Jan. 1, 1823....	Maryland	Maryland.....	Maryland	Brandywine.
Robert Jones	March 4, 1823....	March 4, 1823....	Louisiana	Louisiana.....	Louisiana	Sloop Ontario.
John T. Jenkins	do	do	New York.....	New York.....	New York.....	Constitution.
Stephen Johnston	June 28, 1823....	June 28, 1823....	Indiana.....	Ohio	Ohio..	Constellation.
Joseph W. Jarvis	Jan. 1, 1825....	Jan. 1, 1825....	Connecticut	North Carolina	North Carolina	Sloop Hornet.
William J. Jenkins	March 1, 1825....	March 1, 1825....	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania.....	Pennsylvania	Cyane.
James W. M. Jenkins	August 1, 1826....	August 1, 1826....	Georgia.....	Georgia.....	Georgia.....	Receiving ship, Norfolk.
Joseph Johnson	Nov. 1, 1826....	Nov. 1, 1826....	.....	.....	.....
K.
William H. Kennon	Jan. 1, 1817....	Jan. 1, 1817....	.....	.....	.....	Frigate United States.
C. H. A. H. Kennedy	Feb. 10, 1819....	Feb. 10, 1819....	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	North Carolina 74.
Augustus H. Kilty	July 4, 1821....	July 4, 1821....	.....	.....	.....	Constellation.
Francis S. Key	May 15, 1823....	May 15, 1823....	District Columbia...	District of Columbia.	District of Columbia.	Sloop Warren.
Lewis G. Keith	July 1, 1825....	July 1, 1825....	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Porpoise.
L.
Arthur Lewis	Jan. 1, 1817....	Jan. 1, 1817....	.....	.....	.....	Peacock.
Andrew K. Long	Jan. 1, 1818....	Jan. 1, 1818....	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Waiting orders.
John H. Little	do	do	do	do	do	Brandywine.
William F. Lynch	Jan. 26, 1819....	Jan. 26, 1819....	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Sloop Warren.
James L. Lardner	May 10, 1820....	May 10, 1820....	Pennsylvania.....	Pennsylvania.....	Pennsylvania.....	Brandywine.

Naval register for 1827—MIDSHIPMEN—Continued.

Names.	Original entry into the service.	Date of present warrant.	Where born.	State from which appointed.	State of which a citizen.	Duty or station.
Samuel Lockwood	July 12, 1820	July 12, 1820	Connecticut	New York	New York	Sloop Warren.
Sidney Smith Lee	Dec. 30, 1820	Dec. 30, 1820	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	North Carolina 74.
N. C. Lawrence	May 1, 1822	May 1, 1822				Frigate United States.
James B. Lardner	Dec. 4, 1822	Dec. 4, 1822	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Constellation.
William B. Line	March 4, 1823	March 4, 1823	North Carolina	North Carolina	North Carolina	Constellation.
Robert J. Livingston	April 15, 1824	April 15, 1824	New York	New York	New York	Sloop Warren.
Joshua W. Larkin	Dec. 1, 1824	Dec. 1, 1824	New Hampshire	New Hampshire	New Hampshire	Sloop Vincennes.
Joseph Lanman	Jan. 1, 1825	Jan. 1, 1825	Connecticut	Connecticut	Connecticut	Macedonian.
Wm. P. Livingston	March 1, 1825	March 1, 1825	New York	New York	New York	Macedonian.
Samuel Phillips Lee	Nov. 22, 1825	Nov. 22, 1825	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia
Cranstoun Laurie	Nov. 1, 1825	Nov. 1, 1825	District of Columbia	Tennessee	District of Columbia	Surveying.
M.
H. A. H. Morris	Jan. 1, 1817	Jan. 1, 1817	England	New York	New York	Cyane.
John Marshall	Jan. 1, 1818	Jan. 1, 1818	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Waiting orders.
Alexander M. Mull	do	do	Ireland	Maryland	Maryland	Waiting orders.
Charles V. Morris	do	do	New York	New York	New York	Leave of absence.
Henry W. Morris	Aug. 21, 1819	Aug. 21, 1819	do	do	do	Leave of absence.
John Manning	May 10, 1820	May 10, 1820				Frigate United States.
Richard D. Millen	do	do	Georgia	Georgia	Georgia	Leave of absence.
Richard R. M'Mullin	do	do	New York	New York	New York	West India squadron.
John W. Mooers	do	do	do	do	do	Cyane.
Richard H. Morris	do	do	Vermont	Vermont	Vermont	Leave of absence.
John H. Marshall	do	do	Virginia	Louisiana	Louisiana	Constitution.
Charles H. M'Blair	March 4, 1823	March 4, 1823				Frigate United States.
William M. A. Moore	Aug. 19, 1823	Aug. 19, 1823				Frigate United States.
Samuel Evans Munn	Aug. 27, 1823	Aug. 27, 1823	Maryland	New York	Maryland	Sloop Ontario.
Albert M'Daniel	do	do				Frigate United States.
Murray Mason	Nov. 14, 1823	Nov. 14, 1823	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	Sloop Ontario.
John H. Maulsby	April 21, 1824	April 21, 1824	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Grampus.
John S. Missroon	June 27, 1824	June 27, 1824	South Carolina	South Carolina	South Carolina	Constellation.
Alexander H. Marbury	July 14, 1824	July 14, 1824	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	Constellation.
William M'Blair	Nov. 16, 1824	Nov. 16, 1824	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	North Carolina 74.
Augustus Marrast	Jan. 1, 1825	Jan. 1, 1825	Virginia	Alabama	Alabama	John Adams.
Edwin W. Moore	do	do	District of Columbia	Virginia	Virginia	Hornet.
Matthew F. Maury	Feb. 1, 1825	Feb. 1, 1825	Virginia	Tennessee	do	Brandywine.
John K. Mitchell	do	do	North Carolina	Florida	Florida	Constellation.
Henry Moor	March 1, 1825	March 1, 1825	Maine	Maine	Maine	Sloop Boston.
Henry Kip Mower	do	do	New York	New York	New York	Constitution.
Horatio G. Myers	Nov. 25, 1825	Nov. 25, 1825	South Carolina	South Carolina	South Carolina	Brandywine.

Naval register for 1827—MIDSHIPMEN—Continued.

Names.	Original entry into the service.	Date of present warrant.	Where born.	State from which appointed.	State of which a citizen.	Duty or station.
Ezekiel Mulford	Feb. 1, 1826	Feb. 1, 1826	New York	New York	New York	Navy yard, Portsmouth.
Alexander C. Maury	do	do	Tennessee	Tennessee	Tennessee	Macedonian.
Thomas W. Melvill	do	do	France	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Dolphin.
James P. M'Kinstry	do	do	New York	Michigan	Michigan	Navy yard, Boston.
James T. M'Donough	April 1, 1826	April 1, 1826	Delaware	Connecticut	Delaware	Sloop Lexington.
Richard W. Meade	do	do	Spain	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Brandywine.
James F. Miller	Nov. 1, 1826	Nov. 1, 1826	New Hampshire	Massachusetts	New Hampshire	Navy yard, Portsmouth.
N.
Robert H. Nicholls	Sept. 1, 1811	Sept. 1, 1811	New York	New York	New York	Receiving ship at New York.
Frederick A. Neville	May 18, 1820	May 10, 1820	Virginia	Ohio	Ohio	Porpoise.
Lloyd B. Newell	May 10, 1820	do	Georgia	Georgia	Georgia	Surveying.
William H. Noland	Dec. 13, 1823	Dec. 13, 1823	Virginia	Virginia	Arkansas	Sloop Ontario.
James Noble	May 27, 1824	May 27, 1824	Kentucky	Indiana	Indiana	Leave of absence.
Jefferson Nailor	Jan. 1, 1825	Jan. 1, 1825				John Adams.
O.
William S. Ogden	July 26, 1820	July 26, 1820	New York	New York	New York	Mediterranean.
Gabriel A. O'Brien	Jan. 1, 1825	Jan. 1, 1825	Algiers	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Cyane.
Lewis Ogden	March 1, 1825	March 1, 1825	New York	New York	New York	Brandywine.
P.
John W. Palmer	Nov. 30, 1814	Nov. 30, 1814	Connecticut	Connecticut	Connecticut	Leave of absence.
Reuben R. Pinkham	Jan. 1, 1818	Jan. 1, 1818	Massachusetts	Ohio	Ohio	Waiting orders.
Hugh Y. Purviance	Nov. 3, 1818	Nov. 3, 1818	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	North Carolina 74.
Henry Pinkney	do	do	do	do	do	Frigate United States.
Alexander F. Porter	March 19, 1819	March 19, 1819	Delaware	Delaware	Delaware	Shark.
James M. Prevost	Nov. 12, 1819	Nov. 12, 1819	New York	New York	New York	Sloop Vincennes.
Amasa Paine, jr.	May 1, 1822	May 1, 1822	Vermont	Vermont	Vermont	Constitution.
C. W. Pickering	do	do	New Hampshire	New Hampshire	New Hampshire	Furlough.
Law. Pennington	Nov. 22, 1822	Nov. 22, 1822	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania,	Frigate United States.
William D. Porter	Jan. 1, 1823	Jan. 1, 1823	Louisiana	Massachusetts	District Columbia	Constitution.
James S. Palmer	Jan. 1, 1825	Jan. 1, 1825	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	Sloop Lexington.
Charles H. Poor	March 1, 1825	March 1, 1825	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	District Columbia	John Adams.
George A. Prentiss	do	do	New Hampshire	New Hampshire	New Hampshire	Sloop Lexington.
Richard L. Page	do	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Mediterranean.
William H. Peter	April 12, 1825	April 12, 1825	District of Columbia	Maryland	Maryland	Frigate United States.
Cicero Price	Feb. 1, 1826	Feb. 1, 1826	Kentucky	Kentucky	Kentucky	Macedonian.
Samuel Penhallow	Nov. 1, 1826	Nov. 1, 1826	New Hampshire	New Hampshire	New Hampshire	Navy yard, Boston.
R.
Edmund M. Russell	June 18, 1812	June 18, 1812	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Frigate United States.
John G. Rodgers	July 4, 1817	July 4, 1817	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Constellation.

Naval register for 1827—MIDSHIPMEN—Continued.

Names.	Original entry into the service.	Date of present warrant.	Where born.	State from which appointed.	State of which a citizen.	Duty or station.
John M. Rinker	Jan. 1, 1818	Jan. 1, 1818	Pennsylvania	Louisiana	Pennsylvania	Boston station.
Cadw. Ringgold	March 4, 1819	March 4, 1819	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Leave of absence.
Hillary H. Rhodes	May 10, 1820	May 10, 1820	District Columbia	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	Sloop Lexington.
Robert G. Robb	Sept. 6, 1821	Sept. 6, 1821	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Constitution.
Daniel L. Randolph	May 1, 1822	May 1, 1822	do	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	North Carolina 74.
Quinton Ratcliffe	Feb. 1, 1823	Feb. 1, 1823	do	Virginia	Virginia	Peacock.
Frederick Rodgers	March 4, 1823	March 4, 1823	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	North Carolina 74.
William Rowan	do	do	Pennsylvania	Ohio	Ohio	Macedonian.
H. E. V. Robinson	do	do				Leave of absence.
James H. Rowan	Aug. 19, 1823	Aug. 19, 1823	New York	New York	New York	Cyane.
Charles S. Renshaw	Jan. 1, 1825	Jan. 1, 1825	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Sloop Vincennes.
John A. Russ	March 1, 1825	March 1, 1825	Maine	Maine	Maine	Not on duty.
William Radford	do	do	Virginia	Missouri	Missouri	Mediterranean.
Charles K. Ruffin	Oct. 24, 1825	Oct. 24, 1825	Ohio	Ohio	Ohio	Dolphin.
Stephen C. Rowan	Feb. 1, 1826	Feb. 1, 1826	Ireland	do	do	Sloop Vincennes.
Robert James Ross	Aug. 1, 1826	Aug. 1, 1826	District Columbia	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	Brandywine.
Charles S. Ridgely	Nov. 1, 1826	Nov. 1, 1826	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	West India squadron.
William Russell	do	do	North Carolina	North Carolina	North Carolina	Navy yard, Gosport.
S.
Thomas O. Selfridge	Jan. 1, 1818	Jan. 1, 1818	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Leave of absence.
Albert G. Slaughter	Nov. 3, 1818	Nov. 3, 1818	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Waiting orders.
Isaac S. Sterett	March 24, 1819	March 24, 1819	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	North Carolina 74.
Thompson D. Shaw	May 10, 1820	May 10, 1820	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Macedonian.
Samuel Swartwout	do	do	New York	New York	New York	Macedonian.
Thomas Sands	do	do	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Furlough.
Joseph Stallings	do	do	do	do	do	Leave of absence.
Samuel W. Stockton	Dec. 1, 1821	Dec. 1, 1821	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	Frigate United States.
Sanford A. Street	March 4, 1822	March 4, 1822	New York	New York	New York	Leave of absence.
David M. Stokes	May 1, 1822	May 1, 1822	North Carolina	North Carolina	North Carolina	Sloop Vincennes.
Francis Stone	do	do	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	Grampus.
Edward Schermerhorn	do	do	New York	New York	New York	Frigate United States.
William J. Slidell	Jan. 1, 1823	Jan. 1, 1823	do	do	do	North Carolina 74.
Philip A. Stockton	Feb. 1, 1823	Feb. 1, 1823	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	Constitution.
Arthur Sinclair, jr.	March 4, 1823	March 4, 1823	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Macedonian.
William Smith	do	do	Kentucky	Kentucky	Kentucky	John Adams.
Grey Skipwith	do	do	Rhode Island	Tennessee	Tennessee	Sloop Vincennes.
Augustus R. Strong	June 20, 1823	June 20, 1823	Missouri	Ohio	Ohio	Frigate United States.
Lloyd L. Spilman	Aug. 19, 1823	Aug. 19, 1823	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Peacock.
Jonathan W. Swift	Aug. 25, 1823	Aug. 25, 1823	Massachusetts	North Carolina	New York	Brandywine.

Naval register for 1827—MIDSHIPMEN—Continued.

Names.	Original entry into the service.	Date of present warrant.	Where born.	State from which appointed.	State of which a citizen.	Duty or station.
Cary W. Seldon	Nov. 16, 1824	Nov. 16, 1824	Virginia	Virginia	District of Columbia	North Carolina 74.
James Southard	do	do	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	North Carolina 74.
James B. Sullivan	Dec. 1, 1824	Dec. 1, 1824	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	New York
John C. Sharp	Jan. 1, 1825	Jan. 1, 1825	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Cyane.
Benjamin S. Slye	March 1, 1825	March 1, 1825	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	Sloop Lexington.
N. G. C. Slaughter	do	do	Kentucky	Kentucky	Kentucky	Constellation.
James F. Schenck	do	do	Ohio	Ohio	Ohio	Sloop Hornet.
Barret Shepard	Feb. 1, 1826	Feb. 1, 1826	Connecticut	New York	New York	Sloop Lexington.
Melancthon Smith	March 1, 1826	March 1, 1826	New York	do	do	Dolphin.
Raphael Semmes, jr.	April 1, 1826	April 1, 1826	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Sloop Lexington.
Israel D. Smith	May 1, 1826	May 1, 1826	Vermont	Vermont	Vermont	Sloop Warren.
John L. Spencer	June 1, 1826	June 1, 1826	New York	New York	New York	Receiving ship, Boston.
Ferdinand Smith	July 1, 1826	July 1, 1826	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Hornet.
Henry A. Steele	Nov. 1, 1826	Nov. 1, 1826	Delaware	Delaware	Delaware
T.
John Leeds Thomas	Jan. 1, 1818	Jan. 1, 1818	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Sloop Ontario.
Elias C. Taylor	Jan. 1, 1819	Jan. 1, 1819	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	Waiting orders.
Robert D. Thorburn	March 30, 1820	March 30, 1820	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	North Carolina 74.
Charles C. Turner	May 10, 1820	May 10, 1820	do	do	do	Constitution.
Edward J. Tilton	May 1, 1822	May 1, 1822	Delaware	Delaware	Delaware	Sloop Lexington.
Henry K. Thatcher	March 4, 1823	March 4, 1823	Maine	Maine	Maine	Frigate United States.
Benjamin J. Totten	do	do	West Indies	New York	New York	Mediterranean.
John W. Turk	do	do	New York	do	do	Leave of absence.
Peter Turner	do	do	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Cyane.
Charles A. Thompson	Aug. 27, 1823	Aug. 27, 1823	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Frigate United States.
Bushrod W. Turner	Oct. 21, 1824	Oct. 21, 1824	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	North Carolina 74.
Alfred Taylor	Jan. 1, 1825	Jan. 1, 1825	do	do	do	Brandywine.
Paul H. Trapier	do	do	South Carolina	South Carolina	South Carolina	Mediterranean.
Henry Tooley	do	do	Tennessee	Mississippi	Mississippi	John Adams.
George M. Thompson	Feb. 1, 1826	Feb. 1, 1826	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Brandywine.
Frederick A. Thompson	April 1, 1826	April 1, 1826	New York	New York	New York	Navy yard, New York.
John A. Turley	May 1, 1826	May 1, 1826	Tennessee	Tennessee	Tennessee	West India squadron.
John R. Tucker	June 1, 1826	June 1, 1826	District of Columbia	Indiana	District of Columbia
Edward R. Thompson	Dec. 1, 1826	Dec. 1, 1826
U.
George P. Upshur	April 23, 1818	April 23, 1818				Sloop Peacock.
V.
G. J. Van Brunt	Jan. 1, 1818	Jan. 1, 1818	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Jersey	Waiting orders.
H. H. Van Rensselaer	May 10, 1820	May 10, 1820	New York	New York	New York	Leave of absence.

Naval register for 1827—Midshipmen—Continued.

Names.	Original entry into the service.	Date of present warrant.	Where born.	State from which appointed.	State of which a citizen.	Duty or station.
Edward M. Vail	Dec. 1, 1821	Dec. 1, 1821	France	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	Sloop Boston.
Pedro C. Valdes	June 16, 1823	June 16, 1823	Chili	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Frigate United States.
W.
W. S. J. Washington	Feb. 5, 1812	Feb. 5, 1812	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	Receiving ship, Norfolk.
Wm. G. Woolsey	Jan. 1, 1817	Jan. 1, 1817	At sea	Maryland	Maryland	Frigate United States.
John W. West	Nov. 3, 1818	Nov. 3, 1818	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Waiting orders.
Wm. C. Whittle	May 10, 1820	May 10, 1820	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Sloop Hornet.
Hampton Westcott	do	do	District of Columbia	New Jersey	New Jersey	Leave of absence.
George J. Willard	May 1, 1822	May 1, 1822				West India squadron.
James M. Watson	Feb. 1, 1823	Feb. 1, 1823	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	Peacock.
James H. Ward	March 4, 1823	March 4, 1823	Connecticut	Connecticut	Connecticut	Constitution.
G. G. Williamson	June 2, 1824	June 2, 1824	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	North Carolina 74.
T. M. Washington	Oct. 21, 1824	Oct. 21, 1824	do	do	do	Leave of absence.
Charles E. Wadsworth	Dec. 1, 1824	Dec. 1, 1824	do	District of Columbia	do	Shark.
D. G. Woodbridge	Jan. 1, 1825	Jan. 1, 1825	Georgia	Massachusetts	Georgia	Sloop Boston.
William J. Wiswell	do	do	New York	New York	New York	Boston station.
Thomas S. Wayne	do	do
Edward Worthington	March 1, 1825	March 1, 1825	Kentucky	Kentucky	Kentucky	Constellation.
John T. Wallace	do	do	Ohio	Indiana	do	Surveying.
George E. Wingerd	do	do	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	Receiving ship at New York.
John Weems	do	do	do	do	Maryland	Grampus.
Harry P. T. Wood	do	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Dolphin.
John William Willis	May 1, 1825	May 1, 1825	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Brandywine.
John C. Winans	July 1, 1825	July 1, 1825	Ohio	Ohio	Ohio	Porpoise.
Alexander W. Wilson	Nov. 22, 1825	Nov. 22, 1825	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Porpoise.
Wm. W. Whetcroft			Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Sloop Vincennes.
William Ward	Feb. 1, 1826	Feb. 1, 1826	New York	New York	New York	New York station.
Zeb. P. Wardell	March 1, 1826	March 1, 1826	Indiana	Indiana	Indiana	Receiving ship, Philadelphia.
William A. Wurts	April 1, 1826	April 1, 1826	New Jersey	Kentucky	Kentucky	Brandywine.
Henry H. Watters	June 1, 1826	June 1, 1826	North Carolina	North Carolina	North Carolina	Shark.
John J. White	July 1, 1826	July 1, 1826	Georgia	Georgia	Georgia	Brandywine.
S. A. Washington	Nov. 1, 1826	Nov. 4, 1826	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia
Y.
Thomas H. Yeatman	May 1, 1822	May 1, 1822	Ohio	Ohio	Ohio	Not on duty.
John Young	March 4, 1823	March 4, 1823	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Navy yard, New York.
Alex. K. Yancey	April 1, 1825	April 1, 1825	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	John Adams.

Midshipmen—374.

Naval register for 1827—Continued.

SAILINGMASTERS.

Names.	Original entry into the service.	Date of present warrant.	Where born.	State from which appointed.	State of which a citizen.	Duty or station.
William Knight	Oct. 2, 1799	Oct. 2, 1799	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Navy yard, Philadelphia.
Edward Barry	Feb. 28, 1809	Feb. 28, 1809	Ireland	do	do	Navy yard, Washington.
Jonathan D. Ferris	do	do	New York	New York	Louisiana	Navy yard, Pensacola.
Salvadore Catelano	Aug. 9, 1809	Aug. 9, 1809	Sicily	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	Navy yard, Washington.
Augustus Ford	March 28, 1810	March 28, 1810	Rhode Island	New York	New York	Sacketts Harbor.
Biscoe S. Doxey	June 24, 1812	June 24, 1812	Maryland	District of Columbia	Maryland	Baltimore station.
A. B. Bloodgood	June 25, 1812	June 25, 1812	New York	New York	New York	New York station.
Robert Knox	July 20, 1812	July 20, 1812	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Navy yard, Boston.
James B. Potts	July 24, 1812	July 24, 1812	England	District of Columbia	Virginia	Navy yard, Gosport.
William Vaughan	Aug. 22, 1812	Aug. 22, 1812	Pennsylvania	New York	New York	Leave of absence.
Marmaduke Dove	Aug. 29, 1812	Aug. 29, 1812	Maryland	Maryland	District of Columbia	Sloop Warren.
Cornelius Bennett	Dec. 9, 1812	Dec. 9, 1812	Massachusetts	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Waiting orders.
Charles F. Waldo	March 10, 1813	March 10, 1813	do	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Navy yard, Boston.
John Clough	July 3, 1813	July 3, 1813	do	New York	New York	Receiving ship, New York.
F. H. Ellison	do	do	England	do	do	Navy yard, New York.
Francis Mallaby	do	do	New York	do	do	Brandywine.
Nathaniel Stoodly	Aug. 14, 1813	Aug. 14, 1813	New Hampshire	New Hampshire	New Hampshire	Navy yard, Portsmouth, N. H.
William T. Malbone	Aug. 4, 1814	Aug. 4, 1814	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Sloop Vincennes.
Samuel C. Hixon	April 30, 1814	April 30, 1814	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Macedonian.
D. Stellwagen	May 14, 1814	May 14, 1814	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Philadelphia station.
James Ferguson	May 27, 1814	May 27, 1814	New York	New York	Massachusetts	Cyane.
Robert S. Tatem	July 21, 1814	July 21, 1814	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Sloop Boston.
Philip S. Meyer	Nov. 18, 1814	Nov. 18, 1814	New York	New York	New York	Furlough.
Joseph Williston, midshipman	June 3, 1799	Nov. 26, 1814	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Leave of absence.
William Miller	Jan. 28, 1815	Jan. 28, 1815	Scotland	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Navy yard, Philadelphia.
Nahum Warren	Feb. 6, 1815	Feb. 6, 1815	New Hampshire	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	Navy yard, Pensacola.
Henry Worthington	May 2, 1815	May 2, 1815	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Furlough.
John Carlton	July 4, 1815	July 4, 1815	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Frigate United States.
A. Cunningham	Nov. 15, 1815	Nov. 15, 1815	South Carolina	Virginia	Virginia	Receiving ship at Norfolk.
John Robinson	Nov. 27, 1815	Nov. 27, 1815	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Navy yard, Boston.
James Tewksbury	Dec. 14, 1815	Dec. 14, 1815	do	do	Pennsylvania	Receiving ship, Philadelphia.
Peter Carson	Nov. 1, 1816	Nov. 1, 1816				Philadelphia station.
John Quin	do	do	Pennsylvania	Louisiana	Ohio	Waiting orders.
S. J. Dusenberry, midshipman	July 16, 1819	June 2, 1821	New York	New York	New York	New York station.
N. A. Prentiss, midshipman	June 18, 1812	Jan. 22, 1823	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Navy yard, Portsmouth.
Jacob Mull	Feb. 13, 1809	Aug. 5, 1825	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Constellation.

Sailingmasters—36.

Naval register for 1827—Continued.

BOATSWAINS.

Names.	Original entry into the service.	Date of present warrant.	Where born.	State from which appointed.	State of which a citizen.	Duty or station.
Edward Linscott	March 29, 1809	March 29, 1809	Massachusetts	District of Columbia	Virginia	Navy yard, Gosport.
David Eaton	August 8, 1811	August 8, 1811	Pennsylvania	do	Pennsylvania	Navy yard, Washington.
Thomas R. Smith	Nov. 5, 1814	Nov. 5, 1814	New Jersey	Massachusetts	New York	New York station.
John Woods	July 8, 1815	July 8, 1815	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Leave of absence.
James Banks	July 21, 1817	July 21, 1817	New York	New York	New York	Macedonian.
Eli Dill	June 25, 1818	June 25, 1818	.....	.....	.....	Leave of absence.
James Evans	Jan. 1, 1819	Jan. 1, 1819	Wales	New York	New York	Frigate United States.
William Smith	do	do	....	.....	.....	Cyane.
Simon Jordan	October 9, 1819	Oct. 9, 1819	Maine	New York	North Carolina	Furlough.
John Smith	Dec. 7, 1819	Dec. 7, 1819	Maryland	do	New York	Leave of absence.
James Thayer	April 1, 1822	April 1, 1822	Massachusetts	do	do	Constellation.
David Wesley	June 8, 1822	June 8, 1822	Connecticut	Virginia	Connecticut	John Adams.
John Ball	Oct. 14, 1824	Oct. 14, 1824	New York	New York	Maine	Constitution.
Richard A. Munroe	July 25, 1826	July 25, 1826	do	do	New York	Brandywine.
Edward Ingraham	Nov. 1, 1826	Nov. 1, 1826	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Hornet.

Boatswains—15.

GUNNERS.

George Marshall	July 15, 1809	July 15, 1809	Greece	District of Columbia	District of Columbia	North Carolina 74.
George Jackson	Feb. 2, 1810	Feb. 2, 1810	.....	.....	.....	Constellation.
Stephen Jones	May 6, 1813	May 6, 1813	New York	New York	New York	Gosport ordinary.
John Lord	June 17, 1817	June 17, 1817	Massachusetts	Maryland	Massachusetts	Constitution.
John Blight	May 3, 1821	May 3, 1821	New York	New York	New York	Navy yard, New York.
Samuel Hebberd	Jan. 23, 1822	Jan. 23, 1822	Connecticut	Virginia	Virginia	Leave of absence.
Walter Cochran	Jan. 8, 1822	Jan. 8, 1822	.....	.....	.....	Brandywine.
Thomas Stanley	Aug. 16, 1823	Aug. 16, 1823	England	New York	New York	John Adams.
Joseph Andrews	Nov. 24, 1823	Nov. 24, 1823	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	do	Cyane.
Asa Curtis	March 1, 1825	March 1, 1825	do	do	Massachusetts	Navy yard, Boston.
William B. Brown	Dec. 9, 1825	Dec. 9, 1825	Germany	do	do	Sloop Boston.
Daniel Kelly	May 17, 1826	May 17, 1826	New York	Virginia	New York	Macedonian.
John Burns	Nov. 1, 1826	Nov. 1, 1826	Ireland	do	Virginia	Sloop Hornet.
John R. Covington	Acting, ...	.....	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Sloop Lexington.

Gunners—14.

CARPENTERS.

Richard Thomas	Jan. 22, 1814	Jan. 22, 1814	Maryland	Virginia	Maryland	Constitution.
Zaccheus R. Fuller	April 12, 1815	April 12, 1815	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Boston. Sick.
John Snider	Jan. 1, 1818	Jan. 1, 1818	.....	.....	.....	Navy yard, Pensacola.
Nehemiah Parker	Jan. 27, 1820	Jan. 27, 1820	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Navy yard, Boston.

Naval register for 1827—CARPENTERS—Continued.

Names.	Original entry into the service.	Date of present warrant.	Where born.	State from which appointed.	State of which a citizen.	Duty or station.
Samuel Phillips	May 24, 1821	May 24, 1821	New Jersey	New York	New York	Leave of absence.
Thomas Armstrong	June 17, 1822	June 17, 1822	Pennsylvania	District of Columbia.	Virginia	North Carolina 74.
John Fisher	March 20, 1822	March 20, 1823				Leave of absence.
Joseph White	Nov. 29, 1825	Nov. 29, 1825	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Constellation.
John A. Dickason	Dec. 13, 1825	Dec. 13, 1825	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Sloop Boston.
Caleb Nash	May 1, 1826	May 1, 1826	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Macedonian.
John Southwick, acting	Dec. 21, 1826	Dec. 21, 1826				Sloop Warren.
Carpenters—11.

SAILMAKERS.

Henry Van Voorhees	Aug. 11, 1819	Aug. 11, 1819				Peacock.
Benj. B. Burchstead	April 5, 1821	April 5, 1821	Massachusetts	New York	Massachusetts	Waiting orders.
Isaac Hall	April 1, 1822	April 1, 1822	Maryland	Virginia	Maryland	North Carolina 74.
James R. Childs	June 8, 1822	June 8, 1822	do	Maryland	do	Sloop Hornet.
Nathaniel B. Peed	Oct. 22, 1823	Oct. 22, 1823	Virginia	New York	New York	Frigate United States.
Amos Lewis	Jan. 3, 1825	Jan. 3, 1825				Constellation.
Benjamin Crow	May 5, 1826	May 5, 1826	Virginia.	Virginia	Virginia	Macedonian.
Samuel B. Banister	June 24, 1817	July 17, 1826	Massachusetts	New York	Massachusetts	Brandywine.
Christian Nelson, acting	Dec. 21, 1826	Dec. 21, 1826				Sloop Warren.
Sailmakers—9.

MARINE CORPS.

Archibald Henderson, lieut. colonel commandant	June 4, 1806	Oct. 17, 1820	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Head-quarters.

CAPTAINS.

Names.	Original entry into the service.	Date of lineal rank.	Date of brevet rank.	Where born.	Appointed.	Citizen.	Duty or station.
R. Smith, brevet lieutenant colonel	July 28, 1806	March 13, 1812	March 3, 1825.	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Commanding at New York.
R. D. Wainwright, major by brevet (midshipman)	May 9, 1800	Sept. 29, 1812	do	South Carolina	South Carolina	South Carolina	Commanding at Boston.
Wm. Anderson, major by brevet	Feb. 17, 1807	June 18, 1814	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Commanding at Gosport.
Samuel Miller, major by brevet	June 1, 1808	do	Aug. 24, 1814.	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Commanding at Philadelphia.
John M. Gamble, major by brevet (midshipman)	Jan. 16, 1809	do	April 19, 1816.	New Jersey	New Jersey	New Hampshire.	Commanding at Portsmouth.
Samuel E. Watson	July 4, 1812	March 28, 1820		Virginia	Kentucky	Virginia	Navy yard, Washington.
William H. Freeman	July 24, 1813	July 17, 1821		Connecticut	Connecticut	Connecticut	New York.
J. L. Kuhn, paymaster	do	June 28, 1823		Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Head-quarters.
Charles R. Broom	do	March 7, 1824		Delaware	Delaware	Delaware	North Carolina 74.
Captains—9.

LIEUTENANTS.

Levi Twiggs, captain by brevet	Nov. 10, 1813	June 18, 1814	March 3, 1825.	Georgia	Georgia	Georgia	Constellation.
John Harris, captain by brevet	April 23, 1814	do	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Philadelphia.
Thomas A. Linton	Feb. 28, 1815	April 18, 1817					Macedonian.
Richard T. Auchmuty	do	do	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	Charlestown, Massachusetts.

Naval register for 1827—LIEUTENANTS—Continued.

Names.	Original entry into the service.	Date of present commission.	Where born.	State from which appointed.	State of which a citizen.	Duty or station.
James Edelin	March 1, 1815	April 18, 1817	Maryland	Marylaad	Maryland	Frigate United States.
P. G. Howle, adjutant and inspector	do	do	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Head-quarters.
E. J. Weed, quartermaster	Jan. 16, 1817	March 3, 1819	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Head-quarters.
Joseph C. Hall	June 10, 1817	do	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Head-quarters.
William W. Dulany	do	June 19, 1819	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Constitution.
Thomas S. English	do	Aug. 11, 1819	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	New Hampshire	Portsmouth, New Hampshire.
Thomas B. Barton	do	Oct. 17, 1820	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Navy yard, Washington.
George W. Walker	do	March 3, 1821	District of Columbia.	District of Columbia	District of Columbia.	Receiving ship, New York.
Charles Grymes	March 3, 1819	July 20, 1821	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Gosport, Virginia.
George D. Brewerton	do	Sept. 17, 1821	New York	New York	New York	Brandywine.
Ward Marston	do	Oct. 30, 1821	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Charlestown, Massachusetts.
Charles C. Tupper	do	Jan. 21, 1822	New York	New York	New York	Sloop Vincennes.
A. A. Nicholson	March 28, 1820	May 27, 1822	South Carolina	South Carolina	South Carolina	North Carolina 74.
James M'Cawley	do	Oct. 6, 1822	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Philadelphia.
Benjamin Macomber	do	April 2, 1823	.....	.....	.....	New York.
A. N. Breevoorte	do	Sept. 26, 1823	New York	New York	New York	North Carolina 74.
Andrew Ross	March 3, 1821	Oct. 1, 1824	do	Louisiana	do	John Adams.
Wm. A. Bloodgood	do	Dec. 1, 1824	do	New York	do	New York.
Richard Douglas	May 7, 1822	April 26, 1825	Pennsylvania	New Jersey	do	Barrancas.
Job G. Williams	do	Dec. 27, 1825	Massachusetts	New York	Pennsylvania	Cyane.
Lieutenants—24.
SECOND LIEUTENANTS.
Charles F. Spering	May 7, 1822	May 7, 1822	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Sloop Ontario.
Alvin Edson	do	do	Vermont	Vermont	Vermont	New York.
Horatio N. Crabb	do	do	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Philadelphia.
Henry B. Tyler	March 3, 1823	March 3, 1823	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Mediterranean.
Joseph L. C. Hardy	do	do	.....	.....	.....	Sloop Boston.
George F. Lindsay	April 1, 1823	April 1, 1823	Virginia	Mississippi	Mississippi	New York.
Wm. A. Randolph	July 30, 1823	July 30, 1823	South Carolina	South Carolina	South Carolina	Gosport, Virginia.
Landon N. Carter	May 26, 1824	May 26, 1824	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Portsmouth, New Hampshire.
John G. Reynolds	do	do	New Jersey	New York	New York	Sloop Lexington.
Henry W. Fowler	do	do	New York	Louisiana	Louisiana	Charlestown, Massachusetts.
Francis C. Hall	July 5, 1825	July 5, 1825	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Philadelphia.
Constantine Smith	Aug. 27, 1825	Aug. 27, 1825	Ireland	New York	New York	New York.
Francis S. Neville	May 22, 1826	May 22, 1826	Pennsylvania	Ohio	Ohio
Thomas L. C. Watkins	do	do	Maryland	District of Columbia.	District of Columbia	Charlestown, Massachusetts.
Thomas Lee	Nov. 4, 1826	Nov. 4, 1826	do	Maryland	Maryland
F. N. Armistead	Nov. 13, 1826	Nov. 13, 1826	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia.
Second lieutenants—16.

Naval register for 1827—Continued.

NAVY AGENTS.

Names.	Original entry into the service.	Date of present commission.	Where born.	State from which appointed.	State of which a citizen.	Duty or station.
Enoch G. Parrott	April 21, 1821	April 21, 1821	New Hampshire	New Hampshire	New Hampshire	Portsmouth, N. H.
James K. Paulding	Jan. 8, 1824	Jan. 8, 1824	New York	New York	New York	New York.
George Harrison	Nov. 21, 1799	Nov. 21, 1799	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Philadelphia.
James Riddle	July 14, 1812	July 14, 1812	Delaware	Delaware	Delaware	New Castle, Delaware.
James Beatty	May 7, 1810	May 7, 1810	Maryland	Maryland	Maryland	Baltimore.
Miles King	March 27, 1816	March 27, 1816	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Norfolk.
William Sinclair	Acting		Massachusetts	Georgia	Georgia	Charleston, S. C.
John P. Henry	March 3, 1819	March 3, 1819	Georgia	do	do	Savannah, Geo.
Nathaniel Cox	Jan. 3, 1825	Jan. 3, 1825	Pennsylvania	Louisiana	Louisiana	New Orleans.
Samuel R. Overton	May 26, 1825	May 26, 1825	Virginia	Florida	Florida	Pensacola.
Richard D. Harris	May 6, 1826	May 6, 1826	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Boston.
Michael Hogan			Ireland	New York	New York	Valparaiso.
Richard M'Call			Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Gibraltar.
Baring, Brothers & Co.						London.

Navy agents—14.

NAVAL STOREKEEPERS.

							Salary.
John P. Decatur	Feb. 20, 1818	Feb. 20, 1818	Pennsylvania	New York	Pennsylvania	Portsmouth, N. H	$1,500
George Bates	Dec. 1, 1818	Dec. 1, 1818	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Charlestown, Mass	1,700
Tunis Craven	March 15, 1813	March 15, 1813	New Jersey	New Hampshire	New York	New York	1,700
Robert Kennedy			Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Philadelphia	1,200
Gabriel Galt	Nov. 14, 1822	Nov. 14, 1822	Virginia	Virginia	Virginia	Norfolk	1,700
Samuel T. Anderson	Feb. 10, 1818	Feb. 10, 1818	Maryland	District of Columbia.	Florida	Pensacola	1,700
Cary Seldon	May 30, 1826	May 30, 1826	Virginia	do	District of Columbia.	Washington	1,700

Naval storekeepers—7.

NAVAL CONSTRCTORS.

							Salary.
Samuel Humphreys, chief naval constructor		Nov. 25, 1826	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Pennsylvania	Washington city	$3,000
John Floyd			Massachusetts	New York	Maine	Portsmouth, N. H	2,000
Josiah Barker			do	Massachusetts	Massachusetts	Charlestown, Mass	2,000
Samuel Hartt			do	do	do	New York	2,000
William Doughty			Pennsylvania	District of Columbia.	District of Columbia.	Washington	2,300
Francis Grice	May 7, 1817	May 7, 1817	New Jersey	Virginia	Virginia	Norfolk	2,000
Charles D. Brodie	Jan. 13, 1826	Jan. 13, 1826	Virginia	do	do	Pensacola	2,000
James Keen	Dec. 12, 1826	Dec. 12, 1826				Philadelphia	2,000

Naval constructors—8.

Naval register for 1827—Continued.

VESSELS OF WAR OF THE UNITED STATES NAVY.

Name.	Rate.	Where built.	When built.	Where employed.
Ships of the line—7.	Guns.
Independence	74	Boston	1814...	In ordinary, at Boston.
Franklin	74	Philadelphia	1815...	In ordinary, at New York.
Washington	74	Portsmouth, N. H.	1816...	In ordinary, at New York.
Columbus	74	Washington	1819...	In ordinary, at Boston.
Ohio	74	New York	1820...	In ordinary, at New York.
North Carolina	74	Philadelphia	1820...	In the Mediterranean.
Delaware	74	Gosport, Va.	1820...	In ordinary, at Gosport, Virginia.
Frigates, 1st class—6.
United States	44	Philadelphia	1797...	In the Pacific.
Constitution	44	Boston	1797...	In the Mediterranean.
Guerriere	44	Philadelphia	1814...	In ordinary, at Norfolk.
Java	44	Baltimore	1814...	In ordinary, at Boston.
Potomac	44	Washington	1821...	In ordinary, at Washington.
Brandywine	44	Washington	1825...	In the Pacific.
Frigates, 2d class—4.
Congress	36	Portsmouth, N. H.	1799...	Repairing at Washington.
Constellation	36	Baltimore	1797...	In the West Indies, &c.
Macedonian	36	Captured	1812...	On the coast of Brazil.
Fulton, steam	30	New York	1815...	Used as a receiving ship at New York.
Corvettes—2.
John Adams	24	Charleston, S. C.	1799...	In the West Indies, &c.
Cyane	24	Captured	1815...	On the coast of Brazil.
Sloops-of-war—8.
Hornet	18	Baltimore	1803...	In the West Indies, &c.
Erie	18	Baltimore	1813...	In ordinary, at New York.
Ontario	18	Baltimore	1813...	In the Mediterranean.
Peacock	18	New York	1813...	In the Pacific.
Boston	18	Boston	1825...	On the coast of Brazil.
Lexington	18	New York	1825...
Vincennes	18	New York	1826...	In the Pacific.
Warren	18	Boston	1826...	In the Mediterranean.
Schooners, &c.—7.
Dolphin	12	Philadelphia	1821...	In the Pacific.
Grampus	12	Washington	1821...	In the West Indies, &c.
Porpoise	12	Portsmouth, N. H.	1820...	In the Mediterranean.
Shark	12	Washington	1821...	In the West Indies, &c.
Fox	3	Purchased	1823...	Used as a receiving ship at Baltimore.
Alert, store ship		Captured	1812...	Used as a receiving ship at Norfolk.
Sea Gull, galliot		Purchased	1823...	Used as a receiving ship at Philadelphia.

VESSELS OF THE UNITED STATES NAVY.

	In commission.	In ordinary.	Building at—	Ships of the line.	Frigates.	Sloops-of-war.
Ships of the line	1	6	Portsmouth, N. H.	1	1	1
Frigates, 1st class	3	3	Charlestown, Mass	2		1
Frigates, 2d class	2	2	Brooklyn, N. Y.		2	1
Corvettes	2		Philadelphia	1	1	1
Sloops-of-war	7		Washington		1	1
Schooners, &c.	4	3	Gosport	1		1
	19	14		5	5	6

Recapitulation.

Rank.	Number in service.	Pay per month.	Rations pr day.
Captains	31	$100	8
Captains of vessels above twenty and under thirty-two guns	.....	75	6
Masters commandant	29	60	5
Lieutenants commanding	.....	50	4
Lieutenants	228	40	3
Surgeons	40	50	2
Surgeons' mates	40	30	2
Pursers	43	40	2
Chaplains	9	40	2
Midshipmen	374	19	1
Sailingmasters	36	40	2
Boatswains	15	20	2
Gunners	14	20	2
Carpenters	11	20	2
Sailmakers	9	20	2
Schoolmasters	.....	25	2
Captains' clerks	.....	25	1
Masters' mates	.....	20	1
Boatswains' mates	.....	19	1
Carpenters' mates	.....	19	1
Coxswains	.....	18	1
Quartergunners	.....	18	1
Quartermasters	.....	18	1
Masters-at-arms	.....	18	1
Armorers	.....	18	1
Stewards	.....	18	1
Coopers	.....	18	1
Cooks	.....	18	1
Marine corps:
Lieutenant colonels commandant	1	75	6
Captains	9	40	3
First lieutenants	24	30	3
Second lieutenants	16	25	2

NOTE.—Whenever any officer shall be employed in the command of a squadron on separate service, the allowance of rations shall be double during the continuance of such command, and no longer.

The commandant of the marine corps receives, in addition to his pay, for the forage of three horses, eight dollars per month each. The adjutant, quartermaster, and paymaster, thirty dollars per month extra.

Supplement.

Since the register was put to press, the following midshipmen have been examined and found qualified for promotion, viz:

Theodorus Bailey, jr., Samuel Barron, George S. Blake, Thomas M'K. Buchanan, Samuel B. Cooke, Henry Eagle, jr., Alexander G. Gordon, Stern Humphreys, George Izard, jr., Zach. F. Johnston, Robert W. Jones, Andrew K. Long, John Marshall, A. M. Mull, R. R. Pinkham, T. O. Selfridge, A. G. Slaughter, G. J. Van Brunt, John W. West.

NOTE.—There are several midshipmen of the same date of warrant as the above-named, whose absence from the United States has deprived them of the opportunity of examination at this time.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 323. [2D SESSION.

ON THE EXPEDIENCY OF AN ANNUAL APPROPRIATION FOR THE GRADUAL INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 5, 1827.

Mr. STORRS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, who were instructed by a resolution of the House, on the 19th day of December last, to inquire into the expediency of passing an act to appropriate annually the sum of 500,000 dollars to the gradual increase of the navy, from and after the first day of January, 1827, reported:

That they have considered the subject referred to them by the said resolution, and that it is, in their opinion, expedient to continue the appropriation of that sum annually for the period of six years, for the purpose of completing the ships already authorized to be built, and for providing timber and other materials for the use of the navy, and they have directed a bill for that purpose to be reported to the House.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 324. [2D SESSION.

ON PAYMENT OF PRIZE MONEY TO THOMAS DOUTY, WHO WAS AN ARTILLERYMAN ON BOARD THE FRIGATE MACEDONIAN IN 1815.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 9, 1827.

Mr. STORRS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred, by a resolution of the House of the 27th of December last, the expediency of directing the Secretary of the Navy to pay unto Thomas Douty the sum of $19.91, for his share of prize money while engaged as an artilleryman on board the frigate Macedonian, in the year 1815, reported:

That by the papers accompanying the report it appears that the amount of $19.91 is due to the said Thomas Douty for such prize money, and therefore direct a bill for paying the same to be reported to the House.

19TH CONGRESS.] No. 325. [2D SESSION.

EXAMINATION OF SITES FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A DRY DOCK FOR THE NAVY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 10, 1827.

WASHINGTON, January 10, 1827.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

I transmit to both Houses of Congress a report from the Secretary of the Navy, together with that of the engineer by whom, conformably to a joint resolution of the two Houses, of the twenty-second of May last, an examination and survey have been made of a site for a dry dock at the Navy yard at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, Charlestown, Massachusetts, Brooklyn, New York, and Gosport, Virginia.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, January 10, 1827.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit two copies of the report of Loammi Baldwin, Esq., made in compliance with the joint resolution of the Senate and House of Representatives, of the 22d May last, "that the President of the United States cause an examination and accurate survey to be made, by a skillful engineer, of a site for a dry dock at the Navy yard at Portsmouth, N. H., Charlestown, Mass., Brooklyn, N. Y., and Gosport, Va., and that such engineer be required to state the dimensions necessary for such docks, the advantages of each of the above-named places for such establishment, the objections that apply to either, with a detailed estimate of the expense of a suitable site, and of constructing a dock at each of said places."

Mr. Baldwin was appointed to execute this work; and it is believed his report will amply justify the selection which was made, and will afford the information, sought by the resolution, in a very satisfactory manner.

It establishes the practicability of building a dock at each of the places named; and at so small a difference in the expense, as to leave the question of location free to be decided by other and more general considerations.

Mr. Baldwin has confined his inquiries and report, as it was probably intended that he should, to the "advantages of" and "objections which apply to" the several places, so far as the practical building of the dock is concerned, without considering the causes and arguments which prove the necessity of having docks at the navy yard, or the propriety of placing them at one naval station in preference to another.

With a view to supply this omission, I beg leave to refer to the reports of the several boards of naval officers and engineers who were appointed to examine the coasts, &c., in the years 1817 and 1818; also, to two reports from this Department; one made on the 3d March, 1825, in answer to a resolution of the Senate, of the 25th May, 1824, the other on the 30th March, 1826, in answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 18th March, 1826.

It is believed that these documents sufficiently establish the economy and necessity of docks; and also that the best position for one is at Charlestown, if it be determined that only one shall be built. If more than one be authorized, then that they should be placed in the following order: Charlestown, Gosport, Brooklyn, Portsmouth.

All these places have common and important advantages; the principal reason of preferring them, in the order stated, is, because they would rank in that way for convenience and usefulness in time of war.

It is, however, respectfully suggested, that as a dock at each of the places named can be progressing at the same time; as they will require several years to complete them; as it will be very expensive and inconvenient to remove all our vessels to any one; and as at least three will be indispensable hereafter, the best interests of the naval service require that number to be now commenced.

The appropriation for the three need not embrace the whole amount of their cost, as estimated by Mr. Baldwin. One hundred thousand dollars for each one authorized would be sufficient for the present; even that sum, it is probable, would not be all expended within the year, but when such works are commenced, it is absolutely necessary that they be prosecuted with great vigor until they are entirely completed. They are not like fortifications and other erections on land, which may sometimes be temporarily suspended without serious inconvenience; but being near to, and under the water, they are subject both to great expense in keeping them in a fit state to progress with the work, and to great risk and injury if suspended or neglected. The appropriation should therefore be to an amount which will insure against suspension or delay.

To accomplish this object, it is respectfully recommended that the sum of $100,000 be appropriated for each dock, with authority to build three.

The drawings made by Mr. Baldwin are sent to you, as they are necessary to a proper understanding of his report. It has been impossible to have them copied for each House, and it is therefore requested that they may be returned to the Department, after they shall have been used by Congress.

Respectfully submitted.

SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD.

The PRESIDENT of the United States.

BOSTON, December 28, 1826.

SIR: I have the honor of presenting the result of examinations and surveys made under your instructions, pursuant to a resolve of Congress, passed May 22d, 1826, which directs an examination and accurate survey to be made by an engineer "of a site for a dry dock, at the Navy yard at Portsmouth, N. H., Charlestown, Mass., Brooklyn, New York, and Gosport, Virginia; and that such engineer be required to state the dimensions necessary for such establishment, the objections that apply to either, with a detailed estimate of the expense of a suitable site, and of constructing a dock at each of said places."

Upon the receipt of your letter, of July 26th, I made the earliest possible arrangements for leaving Salem, to commence the services pointed out in the resolve, agreeably to your request; and, on the 18th of August last, I went to Portsmouth, to begin the surveys and examinations there. I next proceeded to New York, and, last, to Gosport, and have been constantly occupied, since August, on the duties assigned me under the resolve. I have made no new survey of the Charlestown Navy yard, principally for want of time, and for reasons which will be given hereafter. With this report you will receive the drawings and plans which have been prepared, as follows:

No. 1. Plan of the Navy yard at Portsmouth, N. H.
No. 2. Plan of the Navy yard at Brooklyn, N. Y.
No. 3. Plan of the Navy yard at Gosport, Virginia.
No. 4. Plan of part of the Navy yard at Charlestown, Mass.
No. 5. Plan of a dry dock.
No. 6. Plan of the gates for a dry dock.

With these plans before you, and the following observations and details, I hope to give a clear and intelligible view of the two principal objects which seem to have been contemplated by the resolve, viz: a proper site, in each yard, for a dry dock, and an estimate of the cost of building one. In order to this, I shall proceed to give a general topographical account of each yard, with the character of the soil; to point out what appears the most eligible site in each; and next, in reference to the expense and convenience, show the advantages of the one selected. It has appeared to me important, in planning and locating an expensive and permanent structure like a dock, and which must have a direct and powerful influence upon the economical arrangements of a navy yard, that the three different departments of building, of fitting out and arming, and of repairing ships, should be kept separate. Accordingly, it has been a leading motive to place the dock so as to secure the advantages of this arrangement, both to avoid confusion among the various branches of work and workmen, and, at the same time, to give, where it is admissible, a gradual extension of the yard. This has not been done, however, without due regard to the cost of a dock.

PORTSMOUTH YARD.

Upon the plan is represented the whole island on which the yard is established, with part of Jenkins' Island to the south, and the channel between them. All the houses, shops, and other buildings are represented on accurate scales, from careful surveys, together with the depth of water below ordinary high tide, along where the examinations were made. The whole island appears to be composed of a loose stratified rock, covered with a thin coat of soil, but of variable thickness. Most of the channel between the islands has a rock bottom, and it projects to the edge of the water, along the shore, from the blacksmith's shop round to the office. The whole channel was sounded from the end of the wharf, at the ship house, to the lower end, nearly in front of the marine barracks. The soundings were taken every thirty feet, at the crossing of the two sets of parallel lines, drawn at right angles. Some of these are marked on the plan in feet and inches, which, in this and all other cases, where not otherwise indicated, were taken from the level of ordinary high water. Similar soundings, at the crossings of lines at right angles with each other, every thirty feet, were obtained in the cove between the ship house No. 2 and the office. A few of these only are noted on the drawing, and the bottom, like the steep, high shore which surrounds it, is rock.

Four places were examined as sites for a dock. The first is shown on the plan at B, east of the ship house No. 1, and the foundation would be on rock, partly in the channel and partly in the upland towards the ship house. On one corner of the drawing is shown the result of soundings and borings on these lines, as marked on the plan. One line begins at the corner of the wharf, and extends up to the saw-pit shed, three hundred and fifty feet, and the borings were made at every fifty feet. Two other lines, parallel with this, and east of it, one at fifty, the other at one hundred feet distance, were laid off and sounded, like the first; the result of all which is on the profiles. A great difficulty in building here would be that of securing a coffer dam, where it must be established in very deep water, having soft, muddy bottom, or on rock where the water is more shallow. The expense of the excavation, too, would be great. But the principal objection is the remote and retired part of the yard. It would have the water of the channel on one side and the ship house on the other. The approach to the lower end would be inconvenient below the ship house, and, at the head, still more inconvenient, on account of the high, rocky land which rises fast from the point at A, unless great expense is incurred for removing the hill. Another unfavorable circumstance is the strong current round the wharf, where the entrance to the dock would be, and it would be increased, probably, rather than diminished, by the dock. The current here, and the current and eddies along this side of the island, would render the docking a ship, in any place, sometimes inconvenient, but, in this situation, the embarassment would, at times, be very great, unless at the moment of slack water. Trials were also made in the ship house No. 1, on two lines, fifty feet apart, each twenty-five feet from the keel of the ship. Here the surface of the ground rises pretty gradually, and nearly in the same slope as the keel, being, at the lower end of the house, about two feet, and at the upper thirteen, above high water. The soil is loam and loose sand, having a variable thickness of from four to eight feet, on the same kind of loose rock, or ledge, which is found in other parts of the island. It may, in some cases, be seen between the platform timbers under the keel. The average surface of the rock is about three or four feet above level, and would require an excavation for a dock of more than thirty feet depth. The loss of the ship house, the expense of the excavation, the clearing away and removing the rock and earth at the head of the dock, forbid the selection of this site.

At the cove, between the ship house No. 2 and the office, a dock might be built, but with difficulty. The distance from the point of the wharf, below the landing, crossing the mouth of the cove, to the point of rock by the shiphouse, is about three hundred and fifty feet. Soundings were from eleven to forty-seven feet on this base line, at three feet distance. Parallel with this line, and outside of it, two other lines of soundings, like the first, and at similar distances, gave depths from sixteen to fifty-seven feet. On the inside the whole was examined in like manner, and the bottom almost always rock, with a foot or two of mud or soft sand. From the first or base line to the head of the cove is about one hundred and fifty feet, where the rocky shore rises steep, so that, at one hundred feet further, the surface of the rock is twenty-five or thirty feet above high tide. It would be difficult to construct a coffer dam across this cove, as the bottom is rock, and for a distance of two hundred and fifty feet the average depth of water is thirty-four feet. The head of the dock must be pushed into rock, where great expense would be incurred for excavation, and a strong current would set across the mouth of the dock here.

The fourth place examined is that behind the office in the timber dock. This situation is marked on the plan at A, and the depth of water given, not only where the borings were made, but also at many points beyond the proposed site. All the figures denote depth of water only, where no character of soil is given. The office and timber shed both stand on a solid mass of the ledge, which seems more compact than elsewhere. It slopes off very steep behind the office, and dips into clay, which forms the bottom of the timber dock. Outside the dock fence, trials were made also, and the clay found in some places, though mud and sand were the prevailing substances brought up. Within the dock, and on one of the lines, the boring was 8, 10, and even more, through a stratum of compact, firm clay. But the rock would be found before reaching the necessary depth for the dock, and, of course, piling would be dispensed with.

As the bottom consists of soil favorable for the footing of a coffer dam, this circumstance renders it preferable to the other places. The ground to the eastward, in the direction of the commandant's house, and to the northeast, rises gradually from the shore of this shallow basin in a favorable manner for the erection of warehouses and other buildings connected with the repairing of ships, and will give an easy approach to the dock from that quarter. On the south side, the office may remain, the old lumber house adjoining be removed, and the rock leveled down, to render the passage to the dock convenient there. The position and character of this basin offer great facilities for constructing a good timber dock, parallel with and at a convenient distance from the dry dock. For this purpose the timber basin would be walled in, sunk to a sufficient depth to have two or three feet of water at low tide, and the entrance, which need not be wide, furnished with gates and counter gates, so as to retain or exclude the tide at pleasure. From this basin a communication should be opened to the dry dock by a culvert, so that the water of the latter, when full, may flow into the former when the tide has been excluded. The operation would be this: on the ebb tide, previous to the high water on which a ship is to be docked, the water should be allowed to flow out to level of low tide, the gates closed, and the flood excluded. The consequence would be, that, when the ship is docked at high water, the timber basin would be empty; and, as the tides rise from eight to ten feet, four or five feet of the water in the dry dock might be discharged in a few minutes into the timber basin, and the process of pumping and shoring greatly facilitated. Similar arrangements might be made at Charlestown, where the rise and fall of the tides is nearly the same as at Portsmouth, in both which places this plan would be highly useful to the public service; and, although I have made no particular examination of the ground, nor investigated the expense, the adoption of it, in relation to the general improvement of the navy yards, is worthy the attention of government. At New York and Gosport, where the range of tides is much smaller than here, being at the former about four and a half feet, and at Norfolk three feet, and the ground not so favorable for the work, perhaps the advantages would not balance the inconvenience and increased expense.

CHARLESTOWN NAVY YARD.

Having, in the fall of 1824, examined this yard, and communicated the result, together with a plan of part of it, I omitted to make any new surveys here, until I should have made those at New York and Gosport. This I did, because I was apprehensive that sufficient time would not be allowed for performing all the services pointed out in the resolve, in season for Congress, and, in case that should be the case, new surveys at Charlestown could better be dispensed with than at the other yards. I have been therefore obliged to make use of the indulgence given in your letter of July 26th,, wherein you left it discretionary with myself to judge whether new surveys were required; and, for want of time to make new surveys, &c., I now submit a copy of my former plan, on which is marked a modification only of the coffer dam formerly proposed.

The site for a dock is the same as that originally recommended, and, for a description of the soil, &c., I beg leave to refer to my former report. This position is near the warehouses, sufficiently distant from the old ship house, and has, on the north side, favorable ground for the foundation of a timber dock, and discharging basin, like that proposed at Portsmouth. The soil lies in irregular strata, consisting of sand, gravel, and clay. Some rocks were reached by the auger, and stopped it. They are probably insulated, and will be no injury to the work, and show the firm nature of the foundation. Sand is found at six feet depth in a trial pit dug near the battery, as represented on the plan of the yard. Gravel was dug through six feet, and the auger descended four feet in the sand, which fell in and choked it, so as to stop all further progress. The two old wells in the yard, shown on the plan, are thirteen feet deep, three or four feet towards the bottom being sand, and all above gravel. Water stands in the east well at five and a half feet depth, and in the west well three and a half feet deep. The bottoms of the wells are twenty-one feet above the floor of the dock, or about twenty-seven feet above the bottom of the necessary excavation. From the result of the other trials, there is no doubt this stratum of sand descends to low water mark, or a little lower, and that it would be passed in digging for the foundation. Although, in the place proposed, firm sand or gravel would probably be found for the floor to rest upon, yet, as it would undoubtedly be in irregular beds, piling must be used.

BROOKLYN NAVY YARD, NEW YORK.

On the plan of this yard are represented all the houses, shops, and other buildings: it embraces, also, all the land owned by government for the yard, and the farm at the east end of the bay, purchased for an hospital. The position and width of the channel, as well as the surrounding and intermediate flats, are laid down from careful surveys; and the ground owned by government, on this and all other plans, is shaded with a light tint of red. Near the north corner of the yard, between the brick warehouse and ship house No. 1, is represented the position first thought of for the site of a dock. Boring was attempted near the edge of the wharf, which is made ground, having been filled in from the adjoining hill, the steep bank of which, left by the removal of earth, now forms, for a great distance, the western boundary of the yard. With much difficulty the auger was sunk 25 feet through gravel and sand; the falling in of this loose substance, and the abundance of water, preventing going deeper. The whole ground here is gravel, loose stones, and sand, and it would be attended with great difficulty to gain a sufficient depth for a dock, on account of water. This circumstance, together with the inconvenience of crowding a dock into the narrow space left between the brick stores and ship house, the whole distance between the front lower corner of the store and the end of the launching slip being 93 feet, and between the upper front corner of the store and the line of the ship house 134 feet, were considered sufficient objections to the location here. This ground is marked off by dotted lines as prepared for sounding, and the distances of the lines from each other noted in feet.

The next place examined, and which is thought to be the most eligible site, is also shown in the plan as marked off upon the flats east of the yard, near the wharf, and nearly at right angles with the channel. At ebb tide, these flats are left bare, and consist of soft mud to the depth of 16 or 20 feet generally. Under this lies a stratum of sand, of variable thickness, from 5 to 9 feet; the lower part of which is composed of fine, compact sand, mixed with a portion of clay, and of such a texture as led to the belief it was impervious to water. Below this is a bed of loose, clean, dark colored sand; which, being loose, filled in and choked the auger to such a degree, that it descended only two or three feet into it. As the borings were necessarily performed through the tide water on the flats, the character of the strata, either for the passage or stoppage of water through them, could not be ascertained. In order to get at a knowledge of these parts, a log, 30 feet long, was bored with a 4-inch bit, so that the ground auger might pass through it. It was shod with a conical hoop on the lower end, and driven as far as possible with a pile engine, at the point m on the plan, and descended about 27 feet below high water, and nearly through the compact, clayey sand before mentioned. After taking out the mud with the auger, most of the water being also brought up with it, the boring descended with the compact sand and clay, without any water ascending from the end of the log through the remainder of the stratum. But when, by continuing the boring, this was passed, and the auger entered the lower bed of clean, dark colored sand, fresh water instantly rose, and filled the log to within two or three feet of high water. A copper tube, about three inches diameter and four or five feet long, with a wire bail handle at the top and a valve at the bottom, was made use of to draw the water from the log, and, after two or three men had worked fast, by turns, for about twenty minutes, the water in the log had settled only eight inches. The next morning, however, the water being nearly clear, and quite fresh, was taken out, by the same process, in a few minutes, the water rising very slowly after the bailing ceased.

This stratum of sand, which furnishes such a copious supply of fresh water, is probably the same from which the different wells are filled. There are six wells in the yard, as indicated on the plan. That at the commandant's house is fifty-three feet deep, and has four feet of water, and all of them, though of different depths from the surface of the ground, have the water nearly level with high tide. Their relative depths, from the ground, depths of water, &c., are exhibited on the plan. From these facts, and the experiments made on the log, it is natural to conclude that this stratum of sand, or other layer which supplies the wells with water, dips, on advancing from the high ground, or what was formerly high ground, towards the flats, and there furnishes, at the depth of thirty feet below level, the fresh water we discovered. Notwithstanding the unfavorable nature of the bottom on which the dock must be founded, it is best in the yard; and probably will be attended with no greater difficulties than are to be encountered at Charlestown or Norfolk. This position will give an extension to the yard; and the filling of the flats, beyond that which will be obtained by the excavation, may be effected at a cheap rate from the hills in Brooklyn, immediately adjoining the yard. Placing the dock here, will leave the wharf free for ships to haul to, for refitting, repairing, &c., and prevent all interference with the operation of building at the ship houses.

GOSPORT NAVY YARD, VIRGINIA.

The most eligible site for a dry dock in this yard is at the south end, near the commandant's house. On the plan are represented the points and lines of examination; the depths of boring and the kinds of soils being given on the profiles. This spot was selected on account of its being the most southerly part of the yard, where deep water is found on a line with the present wharf; and because, at any other point, either between the ship houses or north of them, much inconvenience would result to the operations of the yard. Should the government make purchases outside of the north boundary, it would be advisable to continue the line of wharf or quay wall straight, where a convenient and suitable place would be thus afforded for hauling ships to, for fitting out, or for such repairs as do not require the use of a dock. An inspection of the plan, guided by the scale on which it is made, will show that no room between the ship houses is attainable, without exposure, in case of fire, and a very crowded and narrow space around the dock; the distance between the old ship house and the one now building being one hundred and ninety feet. On the north of the old house, it is two hundred and thirty-five feet to the north line. Here would be room for a dock; but, if the yard comes to be extended further north, the position of the dock there will always be an inconvenient obstruction to a free passage along the yard.

There does not appear to be any difference in the nature of the soil along the shore of the river, nor even in the neighborhood. It is all alluvial. Towards the north the shore is steep, and deep water is found at the foot of the sandy banks. At the proposed site, and south of it, the flats are extensive, composed of deep, soft mud; and the deposit here has probably been occasioned by the mouth of the creek behind the commandant's house opening into a wide cove, which originally extended from the natural bank of the river, now occupied by the yard, to the point of land at the abutment of the bridge near the hospital. The upland soil, however, is the same everywhere; and there is no doubt that the same strata of clay, sand, &c, would be found at nearly the same depths below low water, whether on the flats or plains above. The whole upper stratum of sand composing the soil in the vicinity appears to be saturated with water; and on boring in the front yard of the commandant's house, and on the east side of it, fresh water filled the holes to within four or five feet of the surface, or a little above high water mark. Upon leveling and sounding the wells in the yard, the water seems to stand nearly on the same level: four of them having the surface of water from four and a half to six feet above high tide; the well at the commandant's house being only about six inches above the tide. The depths and relative heights of water in the wells, compared with the tide, may be seen in one corner of the plan.

At all the yards, after selecting the ground for the proposed dock, a line nearly in the direction of its axis, extending nearly three or four hundred feet, was marked off by stakes fifty feet apart, and a line marked in the same manner was laid out at a distance of fifty feet on each side, parallel with the first. The depth of water below, or the height of ground above level of high water, was taken at all those points. It was also intended, at each point, by sounding with rods, and by using the auger, to ascertain the number and nature of the different strata to the required depth of the excavation. But the rod proved ineffectual to any considerable depth below the mud, and the auger could not, by the falling in of the sand and other substances, be carried so deep as was desired. The difficulty was also much increased by the water through which the boring was carried on. The process of boring was very slow in most cases, and to have accomplished it, as at first intended, would have required much longer time than circumstances allowed. On each, therefore, the borings and soundings were attempted at every hundred feet; but so that those on the middle line should be opposite the middle point, between the trials on the side lines. It was soon found necessary to curtail this labor, and the principal trials were made, in some cases, on one line only, as may be understood by the profiles, where the strata are represented as ascertained by the boring. Enough, however, was effected to determine the nature of the bottom. Thus, at the proposed site at Portsmouth, the upper stratum is principally clay; under this, sand, to a thin bed of gravel, which lies immediately upon the rock, wherever the last was reached by the auger. At some points this gravel stopped the boring, and, as it had the same character as that which was passed on reaching the rock, it was concluded that rock was just below it; and upon this supposition the rock is so represented on the profiles. The trials here were mostly confined to the middle line. Rock was found, either by digging, boring, or sounding with the rod, at the points of examination east of the ship house No 1, as given on the profile, except three or four places in the channels, where the rod did not pass the clay.

At Charlestown the excavation will be wholly in sand or gravel, with some clay. At Brooklyn the borings were made as pointed out before, and there is no indication in any of them that other substances than those brought up in the auger will be found; and these were soft mud, sand mixed with clay, and pure sand. The examinations were made in the same manner at Gosport. On the flats, where the water was three feet deep at high tide, the mud was twelve feet deep, to sand; thence the boring was sunk to 39 feet below level, the last nine feet being clay, and the intermediate stratum either yellow sand, or sand mixed with clay. Near the channel, under 10 feet depth of water, the auger was easily pushed 38 feet through mud; and by boring four or five feet through clay, and into a mixture of sand and clay, the sounding reached a depth of 52 feet.

In the yard of the commmandant's house, and at the other point outside of the fence, the borings were sunk, but with great difficulty, to 40 and 42 feet depth below the ground. In the first, sand and clay were found, and the lowest stratum was dark sand. Similar kinds of earth were also brought up, and the boring ended in clay outside the yard. In the last two holes fresh water was soon met with, and it generally stood within four or five feet of the surface of the ground, and a little above high water mark. At Portsmouth the rock is found in irregular masses, loose or full of fissures, through which spring water passes copiously, in excavating a few feet below the surface. There are some springs issuing at the shore, a little above high water, and the wells are sunk in the rock. Upon descending to a depth sufficient to found a dock, it may be expected that water will flow in abundantly. At the other yards this embarrassment will probably be greater.

The general result, therefore, of all the examinations is: First, that at Portsmouth, the work will be founded on rock, without piling; at Charleston, the foundation will rest on sand, gravel or clay; at Brooklyn and Gosport, on sand; and that foundation piles must be used at the three last yards. Second, that clay, sand and rock will constitute the excavation at Portsmouth; at Charleston, sand and gravel, with clay; and Brooklyn and Gosport, soft mud, sand of various kinds, with some clay, either pure or mixed with sand. Third, that ample provision must be made for draining the works, as the water will come in from the land springs in great abundance, besides that which may be expected from an imperfect defence against the tide.

DESCRIPTION OF THE DOCK.

Drawings Nos. 5 and 6 represent the plan, sections, gates, &c., of the dock, from which the mode of building and dimensions of the rock will be understood, and, with the following general description, is all that will be necessary previous to the estimate. The whole length of the dock floor, or foundation, will be as follows:

	Feet.	Feet.
From the sea to beginning of curved walls of entrance	6
Thence, to the shoulders for floating gates	13
Thence, to beginning of recesses for turning gates	8
Thence, to point of mitre sill	23
Thence, to line of heel posts of turning gate	15
		38
The bottom and side walls being curved to gutter	18
Thence, to the face of return walls, at foot of dock	4
Thence, to centre of semicircular head of dock	206
Thence, to head of dock within the coping, being the radius of the head	43
Thence, to extreme end of bushing, at head	5
Total length of floor		341

The breadth is 100 feet, and 341×100=34,100 square feet, for the whole area of the floor, which is to rest on a piled foundation, for Charleston, Gosport and Brooklyn. Across the floor are to be driven rows of piles, parallel with each other, and three feet apart between their centres; the piles in each row to be also three feet from centre to centre; an additional row of piles, in the direction of the axis of the dock, and under the keel, is also to be driven, for the distance of 200 feet, so that the middle of this line will be 18 inches from the centre line of the row on each side. Additional cross rows will be driven under the gates. The piles to be, on an average, 20 feet long, and 10 or 12 inches diameter at one-third from the large end.

Cross-timbers, or mud-sills, one foot square, to be placed on the piles, and under the middle of the dock; the heads of the piles to be connected with the sills by dovetailed mortises and tenons; the whole of the space under the sills, round the piles, and between the sills, to be filled, level with their upper surfaces, with broken stones, well rammed, to an average depth of one foot nine inches under the whole floor. Over this course of sills is to be laid a firm, tight floor, of well-jointed three inch plank, closely secured with spikes or tree-nails. Another course of floor timbers is next to be laid on this planking, directly over the sills, one foot thick, and one foot four inches high. Strong tree-nails or copper bolts, to be driven, through this course of timbers and the lower planking, into the sills, and the intermediate spaces of two feet wide to be filled in with stone masonry or brick work, laid in cement, so that the upper surface shall be flush with the tops of the floor timbers. This course of timbers to be covered with well-jointed three inch plank, like the first, and spiked or tree-nailed, and upon this floor the masonry of the dock to be commenced.

Round the whole exterior boundary of the floor runs a line of four-inch sheet piling, fifteen feet long on an average, to prevent, as far as possible, the passage of water under the floor; and to stop its admission between the two courses of floor plank, under the gates and crossing the dock, are to be similar lines of sheet piles, connected with the side sheeting, and well secured to the additional cross sills and timbers, as represented on the sections.

The general interior structure of the dock will be this: The stone floor to be 30 feet wide between the first altars, and at the lower end at the discharging gutter; the whole masonry to be 4½ feet deep on the floor. From this end, the ascent to the centre circular head is 1 foot 3 inches in a distance of 206 feet, and in the middle of the floor, and under the blocks, runs a gutter 1 foot wide, for leading the water to the discharging gutter. From the bottom of the dock rises, on each side, a flight of steps or altars, as follows: The first altar is 1 foot 3 inches high at the foot, and, being horizontal, its upper surface comes level with the floor at the head, having a breadth of 3 feet. The second also rises 1 foot 3 inches, with 2 feet width; the 3d and 4th have a rise of 1 foot each, and are 2 feet wide. The 5th rises 1 foot, and is 4 feet wide, forming the first broad altar or gangway, and is 5 feet 6 inches above the floor. The 6th, 7th and 8th altars have each a rise of 3 feet; the 6th and 7th, a width of 2 feet 6 inches, and the 8th is 4 feet wide, making the second gangway. From this second broad altar the rise is 12 feet, by 3 steps of 4 feet rise and 2 feet breadth each; from the last of which, the rise is 4 feet to the top of the coping, thus giving 30 feet 6 inches depth, from the coping to the floor of the dock, and 86 feet interior width at top, between the faces of the coping. The semicircular head, except where interrupted by the stairs and slips, is formed with altars, having rises and breadths corresponding with those above described. At the head of the dock, and descending on a line with its axis, is a set of slips 6 feet wide, for passing down timber, plank or other materials, to either of the gangways or to the bottom. Parallel with these, and on each side, there is a double set of slips, one descending to the upper gangway, and on the same line with it, and the other for the lower gangway, and on the same line; the horizontal distance between them, equal to the breadth of the two intermediate altars, is occupied by a flight of stairs, five feet wide each, which affords an easy descent to either gangway, and by a return from the lower gangway, at the foot of these stairs, another short flight leads to the floor. On the middle of each side, and behind the coping, is a flight of stairs 5 feet wide, which conducts to a platform or landing 9 feet below the coping; and by a return from this landing, a convenient descent is obtained by stairs to the upper gangway. A similar flight of stairs at the foot, on each side of the dock, leads to the same gangway, from which stairs continue to the bottom.

The side walls and bottom of that part of the entrance between the foot of the dock and the turning gate posts, have a curvilenear form, the first formed to a course of 60 feet radius, with the centre at the top of the coping on the opposite wall; and both these curves of the side walls end at 22 feet below the upper horizontal line of the coping. Between these points, the bottom has a curvature of 48 feet radius. From the heel posts to the end of the gate recesses, 38 feet, the walls have a horizontal curvature conformable to the curve of the gates, with perpendicular faces. In this space, the mitre sill, and floor over which the gates swing, are horizontal, the former being 1 foot 6 inches above the latter. The side walls of that of the entrance, extending 8 feet from the recesses to the shoulder which is to support the floating gate, are curved from a radius of 60 feet, like those before described; but the curves are continued lower, so as to terminate at 29 feet below the horizontal line of the coping, and the floor here is level between the feet of the interior faces of the side walls. The shoulder of the recess for the floating gate is 1 foot 3 inches wide at the sides and bottom, both of which, for the distance of 13 feet, are formed in the same manner as the former, but the radius of the side walls, from the same centre, is 61 feet 3 inches. The discharging gutter at the foot of the dock is continued, through the masonry of the return walls, in arched culverts 2 feet wide and 4 feet high, on each side, extending 40 feet from the axis of the dock. Here the water will be discharged into side circular culverts, each 5 feet interior diameter, and extending 244 feet to a reservoir constructed in the masonry, under the head of the dock. The axes of these culverts are parallel with and 40 feet from the middle line of the dock, and they will have a descent of 1 foot to the reservoir. The reservoir is 85 feet long; under and across the head to be 9 feet wide, with a semicircular arch, and side walls 7 feet high to the springing of the arch. Into this reservoir the water will be drained by the gutters and side culverts, to be afterwards lifted by pumps. Along the basking masonry of the side walls of the entrance are to be constructed 2 filling culverts, one on each side, 40 feet from the middle line, 3 feet in diameter, with their axes ten feet above the wooden floor. They will open from the tide water in the exterior face of the wing walls, and extend 84 feet to square well rooms, constructed at the beginning of the discharging culverts.

All the faces of the interior masonry of the floor and altars, the faces of the entrance and wing walls, and bottom of the entrance, to be of hammered stone work, laid in cement. The bottom courses of masonry over the whole floor, about 1½ feet in depth, as well as 1½ feet thickness, round the whole exterior basking of the dock and entrance, to be laid in cement also.

Materials for the foundation, floor, and masonry.

Number of piles lengthwise of the dock and entrance, with additional piles at the cross sheet piling, in each row	120
Number of piles in each cross row	34
120×34=	4,080
For additional row under the keel	70
	4,150
Add for waste and loss, 10 per cent. =	415
Total of foundation piles for dock and entrance	4,565

	Cubic feet.	Tons.	Tons.
Mud sills, 120, and 100 feet long, 1 foot square, =	12,000	= 300
Waste and loss, 10 per cent.	1,200	= 30	= 330
Upper floor timbers, 120 and 100 feet long, 1 foot by 1.33 — 120×100×1.33=	16,000	= 400
Waste and loss, 10 per cent. =	1,600	= 40	= 440
Total of sills and floor timbers =	30,800	=	770

Lower floor plank, in square feet, board measure	341×100×3=102,300
Upper floor, the same	102,300
	204,600
Waste and loss, 20 per cent.	40,920
Total of 3 inch floor plank, in board measure =	245,520

Plank for sheet piling, 4 inches thick, and average length 15 feet, 1,082×15×4= square feet, board measure	64,920
Waste 20 per cent.	12,984
Total of sheet piling	77,904

	Perches.	Cub. yds
Stone filling under the floor.—This will be equal to the area of the floor, and an average depth of 1 foot 9 inches (341×100×1.75)÷24,75 = amount of dry stone work	2,411	2,210
Masonry of floor in cement.—The spaces between the upper floor timbers to be filled with masonry to be laid in cement, each space 2 feet wide, 100 long, 1.33 deep, and 113 spaces, (100×2×1.33×113)÷24.75=	1,214	1,113

Piles and floor for wing walls.

The wing walls are proposed to extend 100 feet from the entrance, each way, or 80 feet from the side of the dock floor; to rise 29 feet; 10 feet wide at bottom, 6 at top, under the coping, with the back perpendicular, and to batter 4 feet on the face; counter-posts 5 by 4, to rise perpendicular, and at 16 feet central distance.

Foundation piles, similar to dock piles		355
Waste, 10 per cent.		35
Total number of piles		390
Floor timbers, 1 foot square on the piles, =	1,600 cubic feet.
Waste, 10 per cent.	160 cubic feet.
Total of floor timbers	1,760 square feet, 44 tons.
Floor plank, for covering the timbers, 4 inches thick, equal, in board measure		7,680
Waste, 20 per cent.		1,536
Total floor plank		9,216

Filling with stones, rammed, under plank floor, averaging depth of two feet = 3,840 cubic feet = 155 perches.

Bricks.—The reservoir, with the discharging and filling, will be laid the thickness of two bricks in length, and will require for the reservoir	99,025
For two discharging culverts	325,725
For two filling culverts	76,750
Total number of bricks	501,500

Amount of stone masonry when laid.

	Cubic feet.	Perches.	Cubic yards.
Whole amount of masonry in dock, over returns, at the foot	381,911	15,432	14,145
In walls and bottom of entrance	114,806	4,638	4,252
In wing walls, 80 feet long each	43,769	1,768	1,621
For coping on wing walls, returns at the foot of the dock, at the stairs, slips, &c.	3,600	145	133
	544,086	21,983	20,151
Deduct space occupied by the reservoir and culverts	37,353	1,510	1,383
Total of hammered and rough masonry	506,733	20,473	18,768

Account of hammered stone masonry in cubic feet, with hammered surface in square feet.

	Cubic feet.	Square ft.
Bottom, or floor of dock	20,410	44,040
Altars	44,533	91,528
Coping of dock above returns at foot	2,520	5,460
Slips	784	1,726
Stairs, and additional platforms	1,198	3,438
Face of curved walls and curved bottom, within turning gates	5,001	10,494
Mitre sill	1,566	3,570
Floor and walls in front of turning gates	10,052	21,330
Bottom and side walls, inside of floating gates	4,070	5,636
Bottom and side walls, outside of floating gates	3,877	6,120
Coping on wing walls, returns at foot of dock, at stairs, slips, &c.	3,600	12,500
Wing walls	12,000	18,096
Floor of reservoir	957	1,850
Total of hammered masonry	110,568	225,788

Of the above masonry, the following is to be laid in cement:

	Cubic feet.	Perches.	Cubic yards.
All the hammered masonry	110,568	4,467	4,095
Foundation courses, 1½ feet thick, over the whole floor	51,150	2,066	1,894
Backing outside, 1½ feet thick, round both sides of dock and entrance, and head of dock	20,460	827	758
Total masonry in cement	182,178	7,360	6,747
Total rough in common lime	324,555	13,113	12,021
Total of stone masonry	506,733	20,473	18,768

Prices of labor, materials, &c., at the yards.—While engaged in the surveys of the different yards, I made many inquiries relating to the wages generally paid for carpenters, blacksmiths, masons, and common laborers, as well as for the kinds of lumber wanted for the work, either piles, plank, or square pine timber. The result is exhibited in the following table, where you will perceive that little or no difference exists in the day wages of workmen therein named. The common kinds of timber and plank will probably be supplied at so nearly the same prices, in all the yards, that little difference, on this account, or the price of labor, will be made in the estimates hereafter stated. Lime, cement, bricks, and probably sand, will also require no other discrimination than what arises from the difference of freight on the two first. As to bricks, the whole cost is small, and as those which would be called good in one place, would not be considered so in another, and as they would cost about the same at all the yards, if burnt hard for this work, no notice of the variation in prices need be taken; and upon the whole, there does not appear any reason for estimating upon different values at the yards, excepting in lime, cement, and the stone.

In the vicinity of Portsmouth, on the Piscataqua river and its branches, are found abundant masses of granite or gniess, which would afford a sufficient supply of good stones for rough masonry, and many for the hammered work. At Durham, nine or ten miles above Portsmouth, there are several quarries, and one has recently been opened where suitable stone may be procured. I visited Durham to see the quarries, and consult Mr. Matthews, who, with his brother, has been occupied in procuring stone. They are well acquainted with the business, and upon describing the nature of the contemplated work, and the kind and dimensions of the stones that would be wanted, he informed me that, taking the hammered and rough stones together, they could be delivered for about three dollars a perch. Stones may also be procured from Sandy Bay and Cape Ann, as well as from the Quincy quarries; but it is doubtful whether stones of a magnitude and form for the hammered work could be so well obtained from any place as from Quincy.

Inquiries of the same kind have been made, as to the means of procuring proper stones for the work at Charlestown. At Quincy, Braintree and Weymouth, distant eight or ten miles, are immense masses of granite, or, more properly, sienite. Great quantities are brought to Boston for building stores, warehouses, and especially for cellar walls, &c. It abounds principally in Quincy, and hence this kind of stone, brought either from that town or those adjoining, is usually called Quincy granite. A company has recently been incorporated by the name of the "Quincy Granite Railway Company," for the purpose of furnishing, on an extensive scale, this excellent material for building. Within the last year they have constructed, and have now in successful operation, a railway three miles long, for bringing the stones from the quarry to a good landing pier, at tide water, and they have lately purchased a steamboat for transporting stones with certainty and dispatch to Boston and vicinity. The railway passes near the foot of almost perpendicular ledges of this rock, of more than one hundred feet in height, and extends up to the base of another hill still higher, composed of one entire mass, from either of which solid, homogeneous, rectangular blocks may be split, for columns of any magnitude, and of many tons weight, for other purposes.

I went to examine the railway and quarries, since my return from Norfolk, with Colonel T. H. Perkins, the principal owner, and president of the company, to ascertain the state of the ledges, the probable effect of the railway, and other works connected with the establishment, and to see what kind of stone for the dock could be procured there. From this view, and the information obligingly communicated by Colonel Perkins, I believe that no place in the United States offers so many facilities for procuring proper stone for great public works as the Quincy quarries, and none where they can be furnished at a cheaper rate than from this company's ledges. Colonel Perkins informs me that their company would probably agree to deliver all the stones, both for the hammered and rough masonry, at Charlestown, for three dollars twenty-five cents the perch, as it should measure when laid. But I have no doubt they can be procured at a lower rate.

During the last summer I had occasion to ascertain the price of the kind of stone for building ten sea sluices, twenty feet wide each, at the dam to be erected at Salem, for tide water mill power. All the fall stones for the piers and abutments were to be large, with hammered joints, and laid in cement. I found that stones, both for the hammered and rough work, taken together, could be delivered for $2.50 per perch; and upon this information, I received proposals from one of the best stonemasons in this State, for finding all the materials, and hammering and laying all the masonry of the sluices, at a certain sum for the whole. Hence, I think it safe to conclude that suitable stones for both kinds of masonry may be had at Charlestown for three dollars per perch.

No good stones for this work are found in the neighborhood of New York. Those used in building a wall at the poor-house, in Brooklyn, are carried from Haddam, on the Connecticut river, and cost about three dollars per perch of 24.75 cubic feet. They are irregular in form, very hard, and do not split easily in any direction, but would answer for the rough masonry. The same kind is employed in building Fort Lafayette. Freestone, or sandstone, such as is seen in the Battery wall, in the Castle at New York, and marble, of which the new Exchange is built, are all unsuitable for a dock. That in the Battery was brought from Chatham, on the Connecticut river; the Castle stone from Nyack, on the North river; and the marble from the quarries at Sing Sing. The last, if not too dear, would make good work for the hammered stones, except the altars and bottom of the dock; and the other kinds may be employed in the backing or rough masonry. The rough stones will cost about the same as at Charlestown, but all the hammered work I estimate from the Quincy quarries.

Good stones for rough masonry may be obtained at Gosport, at about three dollars the perch, when laid. Some of this kind are now delivered at the navy yard, for the foundation of the new ship house, on contract, from the Goldsborough quarry, on the Susquehanna, near Havre de Grace, at $3.12½ per perch. Many of the stones are large, and would make good hammered work; but they appear to come out of the quarry in layers of irregular thickness, like gniess; do not split well; are very hard to hammer; and could not be obtained and worked into blocks of sufficient size for the proposed dock. I visited the two locks at the north end of the Dismal Swamp canal, in company with Mr. Parks, who superintended the building of them. He informed me that the sandstone from Belleville, New Jersey, of which one of the locks is constructed, costs sixty cents the cubic foot for the coping and dimension stones, and thirty cents for the facing, both rough; and the Susquehanna stone three dollars per perch. The granite coping stone, fifty cents per cubic foot, dressed.

Before leaving Norfolk, I visited, also, the extensive fortifications now erecting at Old Point Comfort and the Rip Raps, to see the kind of stone, and ascertain the prices of the different materials. From the kind attention which Colonel Gratiot, the superintending engineer, paid to all my inquiries, I found that the Susquehanna granite, or gniess, is wholly used for the stone work, except the dressed coping quoins, &c., which are of freestone, from Acquaia and Potomac creeks. The coarse granite of the scarp settlement, and the piers of the casemates, are laid without hammering, and the stones delivered at $2.65 per perch, called twenty-five cubic feet, as it measures when piled off dry for that purpose; and that it loses about fifteen per cent. when laid and measured in the wall. It would, therefore, amount to three dollars per perch, nearly, in work. Some of it is delivered in large blocks, but angular, and very irregular in shape, and has not the appearance of coming from extensive beds, but of being taken out according to the natural fissures of the rock. The freestone is delivered for eight dollars a ton, called fifteen cubic feet, undressed, but is too soft, and wears and breaks too easily, for the hammered work of the dock. The whole stone masonry of the fort at Old Point Comfort, embracing the granite rough work and the dressed freestone, including mortar, labor, &c., costs about $6.50 per perch.

In the following estimates, timber is taken at forty cubic feet the ton; plank is cast, as board measure, by the one thousand square feet, and the perch of stone, or masonry, equal to 24.75 cubic feet.

A table of the wages of workmen and price of materials, at the dock yards in Portsmouth, Charlestown, Brooklyn, and Gosport.

	Portsmouth.	Charlestown.	Brooklyn.	Gosport.
Carpenters	$1 50	$1 58½	$1 75	$1 50	Per day, highest price; lowest price, $1.25, for Charlestown average price.
Blacksmith's foreman	1 50	1 34	1 75	1 50	Per day, highest price; lowest price, $1.25, for Charlestown average price.
Strikers	1 00	1 17	1 00	1 00	Per day.
Masons	1 75	2 00	1 75	1 75	Per day.
Splitters, hammerers, and laborers	1 00	1 25	90	87½	Per day.
Common laborers	80	96	82	75	Per day.
White oak timber, from 12 to 14 inches square, and 30 to 40 feet long	12 00	10 00	14 00	8 00	Per ton of 40 cubic feet.
Large white oak timber, 20 to 24 inches square, and 35 feet long	15 00	18 00	18 00	9 60	Per ton of 40 cubic feet.
White oak plank, 2 to 3 inches thick, 25 to 35 feet long	25 00	25 00	40 00	25 00	Per 1,000 ft., board measure.
Good sound hard or soft pine timber, 12 to 16 inches square, and 25 to 40 feet long	5 50	6 00	5 20	5 60	Per ton.
Good timber for piling foundation, round or square, equal to 1 foot square	6 00	6 00	5 00	4 00	Per ton.
Eastern spruce for piling foundation, round or square, equal to one foot square	5 00	4 00	4 00	.....
Pine piles for foundation, 10 to 12 inches in diameter at one-third from the butt, and 20 feet long, average	.....	.....	.....	4	Per running foot.
Spruce piles for foundation, 10 to 12 inches in diameter at one-third from the butt, and 20 feet long, average	.....	1 00	.....	.....	Per stick.
Merchantable pine plank or boards, 1 to 5 inches thick, 20 to 35 feet long	13 00	14 00	15 00	.....	Per 1,000, board measure.
Same, clear	20 00	20 00	18 00	.....	Per 1,000, board measure.
Merchantable poplar plank, clear	.....	.....	.....	20 00	Per 1,000, board measure.
Merchantable cypress plank, clear	.....	.....	.....	25 00	Per 1,000, board measure.
Clear pine plank, 4 to 5 inches thick, some 40 feet long, and some from 12 to 20, average	22 50	21 00	28 00	.....	Per 1,000, board measure.
Clear poplar plank	.....	.....	.....	20 00	Per 1,000, board measure.
Clear cypress plank	.....	.....	.....	25 00	Per 1,000, board measure.
Good hard bricks	4 75	5 75	6 00	6 50	Per 1,000.
Laying and mortar	4 75	4 75	4 50	4 00	Per 1,000.
New York or Pennsylvania cement	3 37½	3 37½	3 00	3 30	Per cask.
Thomastown lime	1 10	1 00	1 37½	1 37½	Per cask.

ESTIMATE FOR CHARLESTOWN.

Coffer dam.

It is proposed to vary the form and position of the coffer dam, from the plan presented in 1824, as follows: Instead of running it parallel with the dock on the east side, over the flats, to make a bank of earth as high as the coping of the dock, 10 feet wide on the top, 14 feet average height, with slopes of $1\frac{1}{2}$ feet base to one foot rise, on each side, producing an average thickness of 31 feet, to be placed at 100 feet from the east side of the dock; the whole length, 400 feet, extending from the old pier, near the battery, to the line of the coffer dam, crossing the mouth of the dock entrance. From the lower end of this embankment a coffer dam, extending about 400 feet, is to be formed with an angle towards the wharf, and uniting with it, as seen on the plan.

The dam to be formed of timber piles, 14 inches square and 37 feet long, grooved and tongued, and driven in parallel rows, so that the distance between the interior faces shall be 13 feet 8 inches, and 16 feet between the outsides. Three lines of ribbons to run the whole extent on the outside of each row, viz: one on the top, one as low as it can be placed at low water, and the third at an intermediate line between them. At the distance of five feet from centre to centre are to be timber caps, 14 inches square and 20 feet long, locked across the top of the dam and on the upper ribbons. Below these caps are to be iron tie-bolts, 10 feet apart, at each line of ribbons, running through the piles and ribbons, and secured by screws or keys on the outside. They are to be placed alternately in the ribbons, so that there shall be one tie-bolt under each cap. The whole of the coffer dam to be filled in with good earth, rammed, and covered with plank for a bridge.

1. Coffer dam embankment.

687 dove-tailed timber piles	1,742	tons,
Waste, 10 per cent	74$\frac{1}{5}$	tons,
	816$\frac{1}{5}$	tons, at $6 per ton,	$4,897	20
Pointing, grooving, driving, &c., each pile, at $5			3,435	00
6 ribbons	43	tons,
Waste, 10 per cent	4$\frac{30}{100}$	tons,
	47$\frac{30}{100}$	tons, at $4 per ton,	189	20
Dressing and pinning, per ton, $4			189	20
80 cap timbers	55	tons,
Waste, 10 per cent	5$\frac{1}{2}$	tons,
	60$\frac{1}{2}$	tons, at $6 per ton,	363	00
Fitting and placing 80 caps, each $1			80	00
80 iron tie-bolts, $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches square, 18.25 feet long = 10,835.7 lbs. at 8 cents per lb.			866	85
Placing tie-bolts at 1 cent per lb.			108	35
Filling dam, = 5,164 cubic yards, per yard 37$\frac{1}{2}$ cents			1,936	50
Covering of dam with 3 inch plank, 400×18×3=21,600 square feet.
Waste and fitting	2,160
	23,760 sq. feet, per M. 14 cents,		332	64
Bank on east side of flats 400 long, 14 average height and 31 feet mean width, (400×14×31)÷27=6,429.62 cubic yards, at 32$\frac{1}{2}$ cents per yard			2,089	62
				$14,487 56

2. Excavation.

Average depth 22 feet, mean width 120, and length 350 feet, (350×22×120)÷27=34,222 cubic yards, at 37$\frac{1}{2}$ cents per yard		12,833 25

3. Draining.

A steam engine of 40 horse power, with boilers, &c., erected and set up for work	$7,000
House, foundation, &c., temporary	1,000
Pumps, &c.	2,000
Engineer at $1.50 per day, 3 years of 312 days each	1,404
Fireman at 75 cents per day, 3 years of 312 days each	702
Repairs, packing, oil, tallow, &c., at $400 a year, 3 years	1,200
Fuel, at $10 per day, for 3 years of 312 days each	9,360
		22,666 00

4. Foundation of dock.

4,565 foundation piles, including waste, at $1.25 each	$5,726 25
Pointing, fitting, and driving, at $2.25 each	10,291 25
120 mud sills, 100 feet long, 1 foot square, including waste,=330 tons, at $6 per ton	1,980 00
Sawing off and leveling heads of piles and filling sills, at $4 per ton	1,320 00
120 floor timbers, 1.33 by 1 feet, including waste, 440 tons, at $6 per ton	2,640 00
Trimming, laying, tree-nailing, &c., at $3 per ton	1,320 00
122,760 feet of 3 inch plank, board measure, for lower floor.
122,760 feet of 3 inch plank, board measure, for upper floor.
245,520 square feet, including waste, at $20 per M.	4,910 40
Jointing, laying, and pinning both floors, at $10 per M.	2,455 20
77,012 square feet, board measure, of 4 inch plank, including waste, for sheet piling, at $20 per M.	1,540 00

Jointing, grooving, fitting tongues, and driving, at $20 per M.	$1,540 00
Filling, round and between piles, under floor with stones, 2,411 perches, including stones and laying, at $1.50 per perch	3,616 50
Stones for filling with masonry, laid in cement, between upper floor timber, 1,214 perches, at $3 per perch	3,642 00
For cement, 607 casks, at $3.37½ each	2,048 62
Laying same, at $2 per perch	2,428 00
		$45,458 22

5. Foundation of wing walls.

The wing walls to extend eastward 80 feet from the floor of entrance, and 20 feet west of the same.

244 piles, including waste, at $1.25 each	$305 00
Pointing, fitting, and driving, at $2.25 each	549 00
Floor timbers, 1 foot square, 28 tons, at $6 per ton	168 00
Sawing piles and fitting timbers, at $4 per ton	112 00
5,760 feet of 4 inch plank, at $14 per M	80 64
Trimming, laying, pinning same, at $14 per M	80 64
100 perches of broken stone, filling under floor, and laying same, at $1.50 per perch	150 00
Excavation 100 feet long, 7 deep and 14 wide, = 363 yards at 37½ cents per yard	136 87
		1,582 15

6. Masonry of dock, entrance, and wing walls.

14,957 perches for rough stone masonry, at $3.25 per perch	$48,610 25
3,880 perches for hammered stone masonry, at $3.25 per perch	12,610 00
857 perches rough for 100 feet of wing wall, at $3.25 per perch	2,785 25
248 perches hammered work for 100 feet of wing wall, at $3.25 per perch	806 00
176,928 square feet of hammered surface, in 3,880 perches in dock and entrance, at 15 cents per square foot	26,539 20
36,192 square feet in 100 feet wing wall, in 248 perches, at 15 cents per perch	5,428 80
Cement for 4,128 perches of hammered work, 5 perches to one cask, = 826 casks, at $3.37½ per cask	2,787 75
Sand for 826 casks, 1 load of sand of 25 cubic feet, to 4 casks of cement, = 207 loads, at 60 cents per load	124 20
Cement for 2,893 perches of rough masonry, on bottom and backing, 2 perches to a cask, 1,446 casks, at $3.37½ per cask	4,880 25
Sand for same, 361 loads, at 60 cents per load	216 60
Lime for 12,921 perches of rough masonry, 1 cask to 5 perches, 2,584 casks, at $1 per cask	2,584 00
Sand for same, 2,584 loads, at 60 cents per load	1,550 40
Laying 4,128 perches of hammered work, making mortar, &c., $2 per perch	8,256 00
Laying 15,814 perches of rough work, in lime or cement, &c., and making mortar, &c., at $1 per perch	15,814 00
		132,992 70

7. Bricks. Laying bricks.

501,500 bricks for reservoir and culverts, at $5.75 per 1,000	$2,883 62
501 casks of cement, at $3.37½ per cask	1,690 87
125 loads of sand, at 60 cents per load	75 00
Laying, making mortar, centers, &c., at $4 per 1,000	2,006 00
		6,655 49

8. Turning gates.

The turning and miter posts 1.75 feet square, and 30½ feet long; top and bottom rails 36 long, and 1.75 square, and 9 intermediate rails 36 long and 1.33 by 1.50 feet, for each gate:

4 posts	374 cubic feet.
2 top and 2 bottom rails	441 cubic feet.
18 rails	1,272 cubic feet.
	2,087 cubic feet.
Add 10 per cent for waste	208 cubic feet.
	2,295 cubic feet, = 57.37 tons, at $18 per ton,	$1,032 66
Labor in framing the gates, at $12 per ton		688 44
Oak plank for gates, 28 by 34, 2 inches thick,	2,808 square feet.
Waste, 25 per cent	952 square feet.
	4,760 sq. ft., board measure, at $25,	119 00
Labor of fitting, spiking, &c, at $30		142 80
Composition spikes, 5 inches long, 600 lbs., at 30 cents per lb.		180 00
Lining inside of gates with 1½ inch plank, and outside with ¾ inch plank		331 35
Cast iron circular rails, wheels, saddles, pivots, capstans, capstan heads, &c., 24,164 lbs., at 4 cents per lb.		966 56
Fitting same, at 1 cent per lb.		241 00
270 feet of ¾ inch chain, for opening gates, 1,468 lbs., at 15 cents per lb.		220 00

Copper and coppering both sides of gates to high water mark:
32 oz. copper	3,944.50 square feet.
Add for waste, 5 per cent	197.22 square feet.
	4,141.72 square feet, including nails, labor, &c., at 22 cents per square foot		$911 17
			$4,833 32

9. Floating gate.

14 horizontal trusses, containing	5,169.46 cubic feet.
3 posts, 14 inches square, 31½ feet long	340.25 cubic feet.
2 stems, 14 by 18 inches, 33 long	123.74 cubic feet.
Timber for boat	526.00 cubic feet.
	6,159.45 cubic feet.
Add for waste, 25 per cent	1,539.86 cubic feet.
	7,699.31 cubic ft., = 192.48 tons, at $18 per ton,	$3,464 64
Labor and workmanship, at $15 per ton		2,887 20
Plank, outside gate, 3 inches thick,	5,625 square feet.
Plank, inside gate, 2 inches thick,	3,648 square feet.
Plank, for boat, 3 inches thick	3,728 square feet.
Add for waste, 25 per cent	3,728 square feet.
	18,641 sq. ft., board measure, at $25 per M.	466 00
Labor of planking and tree-nailing, at $20 per M.		372 82
Copper, nails, and coppering, 5,500 square feet, at 22 cents per foot		1,210 00
Composition spikes, 7 inches long, 1,330 lbs., at 30 cents per lb.		399 00
Composition spikes 5 inches long, 400 lbs., at 30 cents per lb.		120 00
Copper bolts, 1¼ inches diameter, 1,200 feet,=5,010 lbs., at 30 cents per lb.		1,503 00
Boring and driving		36 00
			10,458 66

10. Banking up with earth.

Puddling round dock and entrance, 33 feet high, 3 feet thick, and 782 feet long, (782×33×3)÷27=2,867 cubic yards, at 50 cents per yard		$1,433 50
Banking up to top of coping, average depth 30 feet, mean width 15 and length 782 feet, (782×15×30)÷27=13,037 cubic yards, at 10 cents per yard		1,303 30
			2,736 89

11. Pier wharf, &c.

The pier wharf, 60 feet wide, will extend 150 feet from the face of the north wing wall, into the channel. It will serve for the delivery of materials in building the dock, and afterwards to be used in docking ships. It will be built on oak piles, at 6 feet distance between centres, in each row. Pine caps, covered with ranging, or small timber tree-nailed upon the caps, and at the lower end, and on both sides, two sticks of timber for cap sills; the top filling to be of earth, 2 feet deep.

300 oak piles, including waste, and additional piles at the corners, &c., 14 inches square, and average length 45 feet, $403\frac{6}{10}$ tons, at $10 per ton		$4,036 00
Pointing and driving 300 piles, $3 each		900 00
Cap timbers, including waste	$70\frac{8}{10}$ tons.
Timbers for cap sills round wharf	20 tons.
	$90\frac{8}{10}$ tons, at $6 per ton,	544 80
For covering floor of ranging or small timber, average thickness of 9 inches, equal in the whole to 11,550 feet in length, including waste, at 4 cents per foot		462 00
Dressing, laying, and pinning same, at 2 cents per foot		231 00
Covering the whole with earth, 150 feet long, 58 feet wide, and two feet deep, (150×58×2)÷27=644 cubic yards, at 32½ cents per yard		209 43
Labor in fitting cap timbers and cap sills, 90.8 tons, at $3 per ton		372 40
			6,655 63

12. Sheds, workshops, machines, &c.

Sheds and shops	$1,500
4 cranes, at $300 each	1,200
4 driving machines, with rams, at $250 each	1,000
4 scows, at $350 each	1,400
		5,100 00

13. Miscellanies.

327 cast iron dowels or glyphs, for securing the coping stones, each a cube of 3 inches, 2,207 lbs., at 5 cents per lb.	$110 35
Setting the same, at 30 cents each	98 10
Plank, scantling, and small timber, for wheeling scaffolds, bracing coffer dam, &c.	3,000 00
Copper or composition bolts and dowels for stones in mitre sill, 1½ inches diameter, 1,349 lbs., at 30 cents per lb.	404 70
Drilling and setting same, at 10 cents per lb	134 90

Clearing earth and the outside entrance, 100 long, 60 wide and average depth 5 feet, (100×60×5)÷27=1,111 cubic yards, at 50 cents per yard	$555 50
Removing coffer dam	2,000 00
For extra work in making pump well, reservoir, wells for capstans, gates, and fitting same at culverts	1,000 00
Extra filling between the embankment and old wharf, round the dock, down to wing walls,=22,536 cubic yards, at 32½ cents per yard	7,324 20
Addition to old wharf, south side of entrance, estimated at same rate of new wharf	4,228 53
		$18,856 28

14. Superintendence.

Engineer, superintendence, overseers, &c.	25,000 00
	$310,316 56
Contingencies, 15 per cent.	46,547 48
Total estimate for Charlestown	$356,864 04

ESTIMATE FOR PORTSMOUTH.

1. Coffer dam.

This will be built in the same manner as at Charlestown, with an embankment, 100 feet north of the dock. The wing wall to be 100 feet long from the entrance, on the north, or 80 from the side of the platform, and 140 on the south, or 120 from the side of the floor. Whole length of wall, 200 feet. The coffer dam to be connected with the angle of the wharf, below the office. It will be 300 feet long, 13 feet 8 inches wide, on the interior, and constructed, in every way, like the one before estimated for Charlestown, except the depth of filling, which is 21.71 feet, and the whole length 100 feet less than at Charlestown. The embankment will extend 550 feet from the shore, parallel with and 100 feet north of the dock, and be connected with the north end of the coffer dam. Its average height, 10.50 feet; slopes, 1.50 feet base to 1 foot rise, and mean width, 31.50 feet. The Charlestown coffer dam is estimated at 400 feet long, and averages, per running foot, without the filling, 26.15.

Coffer dam, 500 feet long, without the filling, per foot, $26.15	$7,845 00
Filling, (300×13.67×21.71)÷27=3,297.50 cubic yards, at 37½ cents per yard,	1,236 56
Embankment, (550×10.50×31.50)÷27=6,737.5 cubic yards, at 32½ cents per yard	2,189 68
		$11,271 24

2. Excavation.

Average depth of earth, 13.02 feet; length, 350 feet; mean width, 120 feet; (350×13.02×120)÷27=20,253 cubic yards of earth, at 37½ cents per yard,	$7,594 87
Average depth of rock, 11.61 feet; length, 341 feet; and width, 100 feet; (341×11.61×100)÷27=14,663 cubic yards rock, at $1.50 per yard	21,994 50
		29,589 37

3. Draining.

Same as for Charlestown	22,666 00

4. Foundation of dock.

This will be the same as proposed for Charlestown, except the piles and sheet piling. Total for Charlestown	$45,458 22
Deduct foundation piles	$5,726 25
Deduct pointing and driving	10,291 25
Deduct sheet piling	1,540 00
Deduct pointing and driving, &c.	1,540 00
	19,097 50
		26,360 72

5. Foundation of wing walls.

This will probably be rock, at about the same depth as at Charlestown, and the whole piling and timber platform will be omitted. The surface of the rock is very irregular, and will require to be leveled to receive the masonry, and this labor is estimated at	$300 00
Excavation, average depth, 5 feet; length, 200 feet; and width 14 feet; (200×5×14)÷27=518.5 cubic yards, at 37½ cents per yard	194 42
		494 42

6. Masonry of dock, entrance, and wing walls.

The prices will be the same as for Charlestown; the extent of wing walls, 200 feet; but only 100 feet are estimated in the former, the cost of which, in the walls, is, per running foot, $123.43½.
Total estimate for Charlestown, with wing walls, 100 feet	$132,992 70
Addition of wings, 100 feet, at $123 43½ per foot	12,343 50
		145,346 20

7. Bricks. Laying bricks.

501,500 bricks, for reservoir and culverts, at $4.75 per 1,000	$2,382 12
501 casks cement, at $3.37½ per cask	1,690 87
150 loads of sand, at 60 cents per load	90 00
Laying, making mortar, centres, &c.	2,006 00
		$6,168 99

8. Turning gates.

Same as for Charlestown	4,833 82

9. Floating gates.

Same as for Charlestown	10,458 66

10. Banking up with earth.

Same as for Charlestown	2,736 80

11. Pier wharf.

Same as for Charlestown	6,655 63
[This will be placed on the north side, and on a line with the entrance.]

12. Sheds, workshops, machines, &c.

Same as for Charlestown	5,100 00

13. Miscellanies.

Same as for Charlestown, except filling around dock, and addition to old wharf.		$18,856 28
Deduct extra filling	$7,324 20
Deduct addition to old wharf	4,228 53
		11,552 73
			7,303 55

14. Superintendence.

Engineers, superintendence, overseers, &c.	25,000 00
	$303,975 40
Contingencies, 15 per cent.	45,596 00
Total estimate for Portsmouth	$349,571 71

ESTIMATE FOR BROOKLYN.

1. Coffer dam.

This will be formed like that at Charlestown, with timber dove-tailed piles, 16 inchessquare, and 45 feet long; the dam 240 feet long.

361 piles with 10 per cent. waste, 789.83 tons, at $6 per ton		$4,738 98
Pointing, driving, &c., at $6 each		2,166 00
Two sets ribbands, one at top and one at level with low water, 960 feet, whole length, including waste, 18.15 tons, at $4 per ton		72 60
Dressing and pinning the same, at $4 per ton		72 69
48 caps, 21 feet long, 16 inches square, with waste, 49.5 tons, at $6 per ton		297 00
Fitting and placing, $1.25 per cap		60 00
48 iron tie bolts, 18½ feet long, 1½ inches square, 6,591 lbs., at 8 cents per lb		527 30
Placing tie bolts, 6,591 lbs., at 1 cent per lb		65 91
Filling dam, average height 28 feet, length 240 feet, and mean width 13.67 feet, (28×240×13.67)÷27=3,402,31 cubic yards, at 37½ cents per yard		1,275 86
Covering dam with 3 inch plank, 240×18×3	12,960 square feet.
Waste and fitting, 10 per cent	1,296
14,256 sq. ft. at 14 cents per foot		199 58
Embankment on flats, 300 feet long, 10 feet wide on top; average height above flats, 8 feet; add for settling 5 and 13 height; mean width 29.5 feet, (29.5×13×300)÷27=4,261 cubic yards, at 20 cents per yard		852 20
			$10,328 03

2. Excavation.

Average depth 30, mean width 120, and 350 long, (350×120×30)÷27=46,666 cubic yards, at 37½ cents per yard	17,499 75
		17,499 75

3. Draining.

Same as Charlestown	22,666 00

4. Foundation of dock.

Same as Charlestown	45,458 22

5. Foundation of wing wall.

This to be like that at Charlestown, but 20 feet longer.

Cost at Charlestown, without excavation	$1,445 28
Add one-fifth	289 05
Excavation, 15 feet deep, 120 long, and 14 feet wide, (15×120×14)÷27=933 cubic yards, at 37½ cents per yard	349 87
		$2,084 20

6. Masonry of dock, entrance, and wing walls.

14,957 perches for rough stone masonry, at $3.25 per perch	$48,610 25
3,880 perches hammered stone masonry, at $10.08 per perch	39,110 40
1,028 perches for rough stone masonry for 120 feet wing wall, at $3.25 per perch	3,341 00
298 perches hammered stone masonry, at $10.08 per perch	3,003 84
176,928 square feet hammered, in 3,880 perches, at 15 cents per square foot	26,539 20
43,430 square feet hammered, in 298 perches, in wings, at 15 cents per perch	6,514 50
Cement for 4,178 perches hammered work, 5 perches to one cask, 836 casks, at $3 per cask	2,508 00
Sand for 836 casks, at 4 casks to one load,=209 loads, at 60 cents per load	125 40
Cement for 2,893 perches of rough masonry, in bottom and backing, 2 perches to a cask,=1,446 casks, at $3 per cask	4,338 00
Sand for same, 361 loads, at 60 cents per load	216 60
Lime for 15,092 perches rough masonry, 1 cask to 5 perches,=2,618 casks, at $1.37½ per cask	3,599 75
Sand for same, 2,618 loads, at 60 cents per load	1,570 80
Laying 4,178 perches hammered masonry, at $2 per perch	8,356 00
Laying 15,985 perches rough, in lime or cement, at $1 per perch	15,985 00
		163,818 74

7. Bricks and laying.

501,500 bricks, for resorvoir and culverts, at $6 per 1,000	$3,009 00
501 casks cement, at $3 per cask	1,503 00
125 loads of sand, at 60 cents per load	75 00
Laying, making mortar, centres, &c., at $4 per 1,000	2,006 00
		6,593 00

8. Turning gates.

Same as for Charlestown	4,833 82

9. Floating gate.

Same as for Charlestown	10,458 66

10. Banking up with earth.

Same as for Charlestown	2,736 80

11. Pier wharf.

This will be 60 feet wide, and 150 feet long, like that for Charlestown	6,655 63

12. Sheds, workshops, machines, &c.

Same as for Charlestown	5,100 00

13. Miscellanies.

Same as for Portsmouth	7,303 55

14. Superintendence.

For engineers, superintendence, overseers, &c.	25,000 00
	$330,536 40
Contingencies, 15 per cent.	49,580 46
Total estimate for Brooklyn	$380,116 86

ESTIMATE FOR GOSPORT.

1. Coffer dam.

The coffer dam must be placed on the line g r z, as seen on the plan of the yard, at D, on account of the deep mud which constitutes the bank of the channel. In this place the piles will reach the bed of clay, and have a firm footing, which could not be obtained further from the shore. The piles to be 50 feet long, 16 inches square; the dam same width as for Brooklyn, and 233 feet long.

358 piles, 16 inches square, 50 feet long	792.07 tons.
Waste, 10 per cent.	79.20 tons.
	871.27 tons, at $7 per ton,	$6,098 89
Pointing, grooving, driving, &c., $7 each		2,506 00

2 sets ribbons, one at top and one level with low water, 922 feet whole length, with waste,=18.08 tons, at $4 per ton	$72 32
Dressing, pinning, &c., at $4 per ton	72 32
47 caps, 21 feet long, 16 inches square, with waste 48.04 tons, at $6 per ton	288 24
Fitting and placing, at $1.25 each	58 75
47 iron tie-bolts, as before, 6,353.98 lbs., at 8 cents per lb.	508 31
Placing same, at 1 cent per lb.	63 53
Filling the dam, allowing for the sinking of the mud, 15 feet deep, 233 long, and 13.67 feet wide, (13.67×233×15)÷27=1,769.5 cubic yards, at 37½ cents per yard	663 56
Covering the dam with 3 inch plank, 233×18×3=12,582 square feet.
Waste and fitting, 10 per cent. 1,258 square feet.
13,840 sq. ft., at 20 cts. pr ft.	276 80
Embankment on the flats, average length 250 feet; mean depth, allowing eight feet for settling, 14 feet; top width 10 feet, and mean width 31 feet, (250×14×31)÷27=4,018.52 cubic yards, at 37½ cents per yard	1,506 94
		$12,115 66

2. Excavation.

Mean depth 36.68 feet, length 350, mean width 120 feet, (36.68×350×120)÷27=57,057.77 cubic yards, at 37½ cents per yard		21,396 66

3. Draining.

Same as Charlestown		22,666 00

4. Foundation of dock.

Same as Charlestown		45,458 22

5. Foundation of wing wall.

This will be similar to Brooklyn, without excavation	$1,734 33
Excavation 28 feet deep, 120 long, width 14 feet, (120×28×14)÷27=1,742.22 cubic yards, at 37½ cents per yard	653 33
		2,387 66

6. Masonry of dock, entrance, and wing walls.

14,957 perches for rough stone masonry, at $3.25 per perch	$48,610 25
3,880 perches for hammered stone masonry, at $10.60 per perch	41,128 00
1,028 perches rough, for 120 feet of wing wall, at $3.25 per perch	3,341 00
298 perches for hammered stone masonry, at $10.60 per perch	3,158 80
176,928 square feet, hammered, in 3,880 perches, at 15 cents per square foot	26,539 20
43,430 square feet, hammered, in 298 perches, wings, at 15 cents per square foot	6,514 50
Cement for 4,178 perches, hammered work, 5 perches to 1 cask=836 casks, at $3.30 per cask	2,758 80
Sand for 836 casks cement, at 4 casks to a load, 209 loads, at 60 cents per load	125 40
Cement for 2,893 perches rough masonry, in bottom and backing, 2 perches to a cask, 1,446 casks, at $3.30 per cask	4,771 80
Sand for cement, 361 loads, at 60 cents per load	216 60
Lime for 13,092 perches rough masonry, 1 cask to 5 perches, 2,618 casks, at $1.37½ per cask	3,599 75
Sand for lime, 2,618 loads, at 60 cents per load	1,570 80
Laying 4,178 perches hammered masonry, at $2 per perch	8,356 00
Laying 15,985 perches rough, in lime and cement, at $1 per perch	15,985 00
		166,675 90

7. Brick, laying, &c.

501,500 bricks, for reservoir and culverts, at $6.50 per 1,000	$3,259 75
501 casks cement, at $3.50 per cask	1,653 30
125 loads sand, at 60 cents per load	75 00
Laying, making mortar, centres, &c., at $4 per 1,000	2,006 00
		6,994 05

8. Turning gates.

Same as Charlestown		4,833 82

9. Floating gate.

Same as Charlestown		10,458 66

10. Banking up with earth.

Same as for Charlestown		2,736 80

11. Pier wharf.

This, on account of the worms, must be temporary only; but, as there is so little room at this yard, it will be necessary for landing materials; and, therefore, it is put down the same as for Charlestown		6,655 63

12. Sheds, workshops, machines, &c.

Same as at the other yards		$5,100 00

13. Miscellanies.

Same as for Portsmouth	$7,303 55
Add loss of commandant's house	7,000 00
		14,305 55

14. Superintendence.

Engineer, superintendents, overseers, &c.	25,000 00
	$346,782 61
Contingencies, 15 per cent.	52,017 39
Total estimate for Gosport	$398,800 00

Recapitulation.

	Estimates at—
	Portsmouth.	Charlestown.	Brooklyn.	Gosport.
1. For Coffer dam	$11,271 24	$14,487 56	$10,328 03	$12,115 66
2. For excavation	29,589 37	12,833 25	17,499 75	21,396 66
3. For draining	22,666 00	22,666 00	22,666 00	22,666 00
4. For foundation of dock	26,360 72	45,458 22	45,458 22	45,458 22
5. For foundation of wing walls	494 42	1,582 15	2,084 20	2,387 66
6. For masonry of dock entrance, &c.	145,336 20	132,992 70	163,818 74	166,675 90
7. For bricks, laying bricks	6,168 99	6,655 49	6,593 00	6,994 05
8. Turning gates	4,833 82	4,833 82	4,833 82	4,833 82
9. Floating gate	10,458 66	10,458 66	10,458 66	10,458 66
10. Banking up, &c.	2,736 80	2,736 80	2,736 80	2,736 80
11. Pier wharf	6,655 63	6,655 63	6,655 63	6,655 63
12. Sheds, workshops, machines, &c.	5,100 00	5,100 00	5,100 00	5,100 00
13. Miscellanies	7,303 55	18,856 28	7,303 55	14,303 55
14. Superintendence	25,000 00	25,000 00	25,000 00	25,000 00
	$303,975 40	$310,316 56	$330,536 40	$346,782 61
Contingencies 15 per cent.	45,596 31	46,547 48	49,580 46	52,017 36
Total estimate for each yard	$349,571 71	$356,864 04	$380,116 86	$398,800 00

All the calculations for stones in the foregoing estimates are formed upon information obtained in the vicinity of the several dock yards, which seem to justify a belief that the amount cannot be exceeded. The lime and cement also are set down from safe data. The freight to Brooklyn of stones from Quincy, for the hammered work alone, will be about $1.25 per ton, taken at 14 cubic feet, and the stones will be delivered at the wharf for shipping, at 25 cents the cubic foot. The freight per ton to Norfolk will be $1.50; the cost, therefore, of stones for the hammered masonary, will be, at Brooklyn, $0.339 a cubic foot, or $8.40 nearly, per perch, in the rough state, and at Gosport, $0.3571 per foot, or $8.84 per perch. To these must be added, loss by hammering, taken at twenty per cent., which makes the cost of stones, as they would measure when laid, for Brooklyn, $10.08 per perch, and Gosport $10.60; and upon these sums I have estimated. On all the other stone masonary, the same price of $3.25 per perch, when measured in the work, is retained for all the yards.

I have assumed nearly the same data for the masonry and timber at Charlestown and Portsmouth. A great difference appears between the items of excavation and foundation of dock in the estimates; the amount of the former, at Portsmouth, being increased on account of rock, and of the latter being reduced by the omission of piling; the excess at Charlestown on those objects, taken together, being about $4,000. A small variation takes place in the calculation of brick work, on account of the different prices at which bricks may be obtained, in the respective yards. On the price of lumber, labor, iron, composition, metal, or copper, no distinction is made; in many items, the same amount is retained for all the yards, in a belief that the sum will be required, with some slight modifications peculiar to each situation. Thus the draining, foundation of dock, except at Portsmouth, gates, banking, pier wharf, sheds, &c., and miscellanies, excepting the commandant's house at Gosport, and in addition to the old wharf and filling at Charlestown, are all dut down alike at their respective amounts, in each estimate. The removal of the commandant's house at Gosport increases the amount of miscellanies, for that yard, $7,000.

The pier wharf at Portsmouth would be made with the south side, or a continuation of the north side of the dock entrance. The exact position of the dock, at this yard, is not fixed, but nearly so, by the dotted lines on the plan. It may be found advisable to turn the head of the dock more towards the north, in which position, as well as that on the plan, deep water will be found close to the entrance of the docks, by clearing out some sand or clay which lies too high. The cost of this removal is put down at Charlestown at $555.50, as an item under miscellanies, and also retained under the same head for Portsmouth and the other yards. The matter at Brooklyn and Gosport to be removed is soft mud, and although more in quantity than that at the Charlestown yard, will be moved much more easily.

The new wharf at Charlestown, as well as at Portsmouth and Brooklyn, would be permanent and useful structures. At the former place, it would be, as mentioned in the estimate, on the north side the entrance. Upon the south side, an extension of the old wharfing would be an important improvement of the yard, so as to bring its north line to near the south line of the dock entrance. This, upon the data taken for estimating the new pier wharf, will amount to $4,228.53, the area being to that of the new pier as 5,962 to 9,000. The whole filling between the embankment on the north, and the old wharf behind the ship house, and extending down to the wing walls, would be 54,758 cubic yards, and the excavation for the dock is 32,222 yards, which leaves a deficit of about 22,536 yards. The cost of this filling, $7,324.10, is added as an item in miscellanies. At Portsmouth, the excavation will be about equal to similar filling round the dock there. At Brooklyn and Gosport, the excavation will far exceed the necessary filling, in the manner proposed for Charlestown; the excess at the former being about 30,000, and, at the latter, nearly 50,000 cubic yards, which, in both cases, may be thrown out upon the flats, so as to add much to the extent of land. At Gosport, this circumstance is very important, on account of the present confined limits of the yard.

The plan of the dock is formed at the entrance for two gates, one consisting of two leaves, to turn in the usual manner, and one for a floating gate, the plans, elevations, or sections of both of which are given on drawing No. 6. I have given a design for a floating gate upon a new principle, similar to one now used and approved of in France, conformable to a plan furnished by Commodore Morris, who has recently seen such in operation at the docks in Brest. Instead of dropping into grooves or rebates in the side walls, as formerly practiced, this is brought in, broadside, against the shoulders of the entrance walls, sunk to its rest by admitting water into the side boats, and is kept firm against the shoulders of the masonry, by the external pressure of the water, when the dock is drained. The turning gates are made in the common form, and, with the floating gate, furnish a safe protection against the entrance of the tide. Two sets of gates or guards seem on many accounts indispensable. Should an accident happen to the gate, its machinery, or its bearings, if only one is used, great difficulties, expense, and delay must be incurred for repairs. If the masonry of the shoulders of the outer gate is faithfully executed, there is little chance of repairs being required, except the boat-gate itself, and when an accident happens to this, it may be taken into dock at any time, and repaired like a ship. The turning gates may require repairs, injury may occur to the mitre sill, the pivots, rollers, &c.; and without an outward defence against the tide, no repairs, in those parts, could be made. Each set of gates should be made strong enough to resist the whole pressure; but while they are in good order, the strain upon them may be relieved, by dividing the force of the whole head, so that the height of water on the inner gate shall be equal to the square root of half the square of the head upon the outer gate. Thus, if the water stands upon the outer floating gate at 27 feet depth, it should be a little over 19 feet on the turning gates, to produce equal pressures on both.

On my arrival at each yard, a tide board was put up, for the purpose of ascertaining the general range of the tides, and to fix a level from which to reckon the soundings. A register was kept of the high and low water of the day tides, by some officer designated by the commandant, and although the registers extend to a month, or a little more only, the general character of the tides may be observed as follows:

	Highest tide.	Lowest tide.	Average.
At Portsmouth, from September 4 to October 4.....	10ft. 11in.	4ft. 11in.	8ft. 4½in.
At Charlestown, from October 18 to December 5.....	14ft. 5in.	7ft. 4in.	10ft. 3½in.
At Brooklyn, from September 20 to October 17.....	6ft. 6in.	3ft. 0in.	4ft. 6 in.
At Gosport, from November 1 to November 30.....	4ft. 6in.	2ft. 3in.	3ft. 3 in.

The first column, in feet and inches, shows the highest tide that occurred at the place, and within the period mentioned; the second column, the lowest tide, in like manner; and the third is the mean height of all the tides registered during the time specified at the respective yards. At Charlestown, a pretty regular table, from November, 1824, to this time, has been kept, and is now continued. By this it appears that, from November, 1824, with the exception of May, November, and the five intermediate months of 1825, down to last July, the mean height of monthly averages was 10 feet 4 inches; the highest tide during which time was 17, and the lowest 7 feet. At the other years, no registers have been regularly kept, with the exception of those given above.

The depth of the dock, from the coping to the floor, is 30½ feet, the mitre sill being 1 foot 3 inches above the floor. If the dock be placed so as to have the coping 4 feet, as it should be at Charlestown and Portsmouth, above ordinary high water, there will be a depth over the sill of 25 feet 3 inches, sufficient for any common ship of the line. But for docking some of the largest vessels at full draft, they should go in on spring tides. For the 74's and frigates this depth is considered sufficient. At Brooklyn and Gosport, where there is much less elevation of spring tides, the ordinary high water line may be taken at 3 feet below the coping, and thus give one foot more, or 26 feet 3 inches depth over the sill.

The reservoir, and discharging culverts, as before described, are designed to facilitate the docking of ships; the admission of water from the tide, either into the dock or reservoir, or from the dock to the latter, being commanded by draw-gates or shutters. When a ship is to be put into dock, the filling culverts are closed, as well as the passages from the dock to the discharging culverts and reservoir, and the water pumped from the latter. The ship is then admitted and the great gates shut. In this situation, the discharging gates may be drawn, and the water allowed to flow at pleasure into the discharging culverts and reservoir, which have been previously emptied, and thus in a few minutes the water lowered several inches in the dock, to hasten the shoring and produce an immediate pressure on the gates, so as effectually to prevent the admission of water and fix them steadily. The reservoir and culverts would contain above 17,000 cubic feet of water; the water in the dock, &c., supposed level with the top of the upper altar, or 4 feet below the coping, at 1 foot in depth, will be a little more than 21,000 feet; and of this quantity, a ship of the line, admitted at full draft, would displace about 9,000 cubic feet; consequently, to reduce the water one foot when the ship is in dock, only 12,000 feet need be admitted to the reservoir and culverts, and the dock water may be lowered about 1 foot 5 inches to fill them. A complete command of the level, at the moment when a ship, especially a large one, is about to trust the blocks, and to require the placing of shores, seems very important; and this mode will give a more perfect control of the operation, for the first foot, than could be obtained by the best regulated pumps or machinery.

Under the head of contingencies, I have put down a larger amount than is usually done in such cases, but the difficult circumstances of the work required it. In every public undertaking of great magnitude, where much labor is to be performed within a small space, unavoidable interruptions and hindrances occur, which can never be estimated beforehand, but which inevitably swell to an unexpected amount the real expenditure. In constructing a dock, no experienced workmen can be found in our country; it is wholly new here, even to engineers. A great mass of materials of various kinds must be crowded together, near a deep excavation, surrounded with banks of earth; repeated removals and handlings of stone, timber, &c., the ruptures and defects of cautionary measures, to which hydraulic works are particularly exposed; the embarrassments and delays attendant on sinking so deep in porous earth near the tide; the loss of tools, machinery, &c., and a variety of accidents, are all circumstances tending to shake the confidence of the best calculator. There is no doubt, therefore, that the surplus of 15 per cent will be drawn upon largely, if not wholly required in executing the proposed dock. With that sum, in the amount of estimates, there seems no doubt the desired work may be accomplished.

Upon the whole, the construction of a dock, in either of the yards, is quite feasible, and nearly in the position indicated on the plan. The design has been to fix the sites, so that the wing wall on one side the entrance should be connected with the present wharf at each yard, as may be understood by inspection of the drawings. But the ground will admit of a variation from the one shown on the plan, as may be thought advisable hereafter; and, as the excess of excavation at Brooklyn and Gosport will furnish material for greatly enlarging the yard room, it may be best to place the dock, at the latter yard, further south, and that at the former, further east, so as to use the new embankment now making at G. H. instead of the one included in the estimate. The object of the new bank is to extend out to the channel, where it is intended to build a boat house, nearly on the spot represented by the dotted lines, where I propose erecting the pier wharf, in aid of the dock. As to the steam engine, I have only considered the cost of one, for draining the works while building the dock. It will be used afterwards as a permanent and useful appendage to the yard; and, as its location depends upon the works to which it may be applied, such as sawing, blowing the forges, moving tilt hammers, steaming, grinding tools, turning lathes, or other machinery, I have left the expenses incident to its permanent establishment to the ordinary appropriations for improvement of the yards, where the various branches of work carried on will keep it mostly employed. It would probably be placed near the dock, and its connection with the pumps easily effected.

Agreeably to your request, I had the honor of communicating, personally, with the Navy Commissioners, Commodores Bainbridge and Morris, on my way to and from Norfolk. To them I am indebted for much valuable information relative to docks, in various parts of Europe, which I have not seen. A plan of those at Brest, and of the new kind of floating gate, adopted there, were kindly furnished by Commodore Morris. The one I present, however, is different in form from the French docks, and I have endeavored to obviate the objections to which the side slips, in some of the English docks, are liable. I have placed them at the head, so as to afford an easy descent by them, and by the stairs, to either of two gangways, and to the bottom. I have made this modification of my former plan, and strove to render it such as to meet the views of the Navy Commissioners. If I have not succeeded, it is because I have not been able to recollect, fully, all their hints and wishes, rather than a fixed opinion that the one I propose is the best. At all the navy yards, I experienced from the commanding officers their prompt and constant solicitude to aid in the surveys and examinations. It was the desire of the Navy Board that I should confer with the respective commandants, relative to the ground, the proposed sites, and other circumstances connected with the inquiries. This I have done in all cases, and the intercourse has afforded me great pleasure, and testifies their intelligence and zeal in the public service.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

L. BALDWIN.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, Secretary of the Navy.

INDEX TO NAVAL AFFAIRS.

VOLUME II.

A.

Page.

Adams, Hon. J. Q., Minister at St. Petersburg.—Paper transmitted by him to the Navy Commissioners, on the culture of hemp in Russia 29

Adams, J. Q., Secretary of State.—Letters to J. M. Forbes and John B. Prevost, in relation to the blockade of ports in Chili 557

Adams, J. Q.—(See Secretary of State.)

Addington, H. U.—(See American brig Hiram.)

Adams, F.—Letters in relation to depredations by pirates 297

Africans liberated from on board slave vessels under the act of 3d March, 1819—Correspondence respecting the 748

Agents of the navy in 1826.—List of 457

Allen, Sylvanus, master of the American brig "Hiram."—Letter to Captain Lawrence in relation to injury done his vessel 674

Allowances to officers of the navy and marine corps.—Statement of 40, 46

Pay to officers of the navy.—Report Secretary of the Navy, with a statement of the 625

Alvarado, R.—(See courts-martial—Commodore Charles Stewart.)

Amelia harbor.—(See St. Mary's, Georgia.)

America.—Report of Secretary of the Navy on the expense and mode of employing a sloop-of-war to explore the northwest coast of 442

American canvas, cables, and cordage, in the navy.—Report in relation to the use of 27

Anduaya, Don Joaquin de.—Letter to Secretary of State in relation to the capture of the "Carmen," alias "Galliga Third" 369

Angus, Captain Samuel.—Report committee on application to be restored to his rank in the navy.. 460

Annapolis, Maryland.—Application for the establishment of a naval academy at 623

"Arab."—Letter of Commodore Stewart to the commander-in-chief of the Peruvian army, in relation to the capture of the ship 559

Argument and authority—In support of the objections taken by counsel of Commodore Porter to second charge against him in his trial before a general court-martial ..... 329 to 334

Armorers in the navy to be warrant officers.—Report committee on an application to make 463

Ashmun, J.—(See "Africans.")

Atkinson, James J.—Letter in relation to the capture of pirates in the West Indies.. 104, 107, 437, 439

Attorney General—Letter of, declining to give an opinion upon questions proposed by the court-martial in the case of Commodore Porter 378

B.

Bainbridge, Wm., L. Warrington and James Biddle, to the Secretary of the Navy, in relation to a site selected by them for a navy yard on the coast of Florida.—Letter of Captains 111

Balances, due from prize agents on March 1, 1823, amount refunded and amount accounted for.—Statement of 21

Baldwin Laommi.—Report of survey and examination of sites, for the establishment of dry docks for the navy 811

Baltimore, Maryland.—Memorial of mayor and council for a navy yard at the city of 624

Report of a committee on the expediency of a navy yard at 636

Letter president of chamber of commerce of, in relation to protection to commerce on coast of Brazil 640

Barancas.—(See Fort Barancas.)

Barney's flotilla.—Report of committee (Senate) on claim of a sailingmaster in the navy, for a horse lost at Bladendsburg, in the service of 623

Barron, Captain James.—(See Courts-martial—Captain David Porter.)

Barton, Lieutenant Thomas B.—Affidavit of, in relation to the proceedings of Commodore Porter at Foxardo, in the West Indies 145, 418

Testimony before court-martial, in the case of Commodore David Porter 315, 316

"Belgrano," Spanish brig.—(See Wm. Prunier.)

"Belisarius."—Letter of Daniel T. Patterson, in relation to the piracy of the brig 291

Bell, Lieutenant Charles H.—Testimony before the court-martial in the case of Commodore David Porter 160

Bennett, Thomas, chairman committee of citizens of Charleston.—Letter in relation to the expediency of establishing a navy yart at Charleston 473

Bergeest & Uhlhorn, in relation to robberies on the Island of St. Thomas.—Letter of.... 143, 385, 417

Bermudez, Francisco de Zea.—Letter in relation to indemnity to American citizens, for losses by piracies, &c 189

Bernard, Peter, "inspector general for Leinster, Munster and Connaught"—Extracts of a report by, on the production of hemp and flax in Holland and the Netherlands 32

Page.

Biddle, Captain James.—Letter to Secretary of the Navy, in relation to a site selected for a navy yard on the coast of Florida, by Captains Bainbridge, Warrington and..... 111
Letters to the Secretary of the Navy in relation to the suppression of piracy..... 191
Testimony before the court-martial for the trial of Commodore Stewart..... 512
Biddle, Nicholas, president Bank of the United States.—Letter in relation to the protection of trade between United States and Mexico..... 296
Bills drawn on the Navy Department, for supplies sent to vessels in the Pacific, &c.—Statement of... 12
Birch, Peter.—Testimony before the court-martial for the trial of Commodore Stewart..... 499
Bladensburg.—(See Barney's flotilla.)
Blight, John.—Testimony before the court-martial for the trial of Commodore Stewart..... 511
Boarman, Lieut. Charles.—Letter in relation to the assistance given by him to U. S. merchant vessels..... 268
Testimony before court-martial of Commodore David Porter..... 163
Boatswains in the navy in 1826.—List of..... 455
In 1827.—List of..... 804
"Boca del Inferno."—Letter in relation to the capture of pirates in the harbor of..... 104
Bostick, Nathaniel—Report of the committee on the claim of, for prize money, on the capture of a sloop-of-war of the British navy..... 482
Boughan, James H.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Boyle, John.—Testimony before the court-martial in the case of Commodore David Porter..... 319
Brazil and Buenos Ayres.—Letter Secretary of the Navy, in relation to protection to commerce with..... 638
Report of committee (House) on the same..... 644
Breakwater at the Capes of the Delaware.—Letter to the Secretary of the Navy on the utility of a... 642
Brooklyn Navy yard, New York.—Message President of the United States in relation to a survey for a site for a dry dock at the..... 813
Estimate for a dry dock at the..... 824
Brown, Alexander J. D.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Brown, George—Affidavit of, in relation to murders and atrocities by the pirates near the Island of Cuba..... 26
Brown, Samuel.—Exceptions by the judge advocate in the trial of Commodore Stewart, against the testimony of..... 514, 515
Exception by the President in relation to the exclusion of the testimony of..... 521
Argument of the judge advocate, in the trial of Commodore Stewart by a court-martial, against the reception of the evidence of..... 536
Brown, Thomas S.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Bruce, Henry—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Bubier, John—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Buchanan, Franklin—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Buenos Ayres and Brazil.—Letter of the Secretary of the Navy in relation to protection to the trade with..... 638
Report of committee (House) on the same..... 644
Byrne, Edmund—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25

C.

Cables and cordage.—(See hemp, flax.)
Cabot, Bailey & Co.—Letter in relation to depredations by inhabitants of Foxardo..... 426
(See court-martial of Commodore David Porter.)
Advertisement for goods stolen at St. Thomas..... 379
Cabot, Stephen, U. S. consul.—Letter to Commodore Porter in relation to robberies on the Island of St. Thomas..... 142, 417
"Cadmus."—(See William Furniss.)
"Canton."—Letter of Commodore Stewart in relation to the ship..... 567
Affidavit of H. N. Ward (supercargo) in relation to the cargo of the ship..... 578
Affidavit of Wm. January in relation to the same..... 579
Letters of W. Prunier in relation to the..... 579, 580, 581
Letters of Commodore Stewart in relation to the..... 579, 580
Letter of Le Roy, Bayard & Co. in relation to the..... 582
(See courts-martial—Commodore Stewart.)
Canvas, cables and cordage in the navy.—Message of the President in relation to the use of American..... 27
Report of the Secretary of the Navy in relation to the same..... 27
Report of Navy Commissioners in relation to the same..... 28
Report of the Secretary of the Navy in relation to an experiment in the use of cotton compared with flax, for cordage, &c..... 622
Capes of the Delaware.—Letter of the Secretary of the Navy on the utility of a breakwater at the.. 642
Captains in the navy in 1826.—List of..... 444
In 1827.—List of..... 781
Capture of slave vessels.—Report of committee on claim of Lieutenant Isaac McKeever for prize money, for the..... 704

Page

"Carmen" alias "Gallega Third."—Affidavit of Jacinto Correa and Ramon de Echevavria in relation to the capture of the Spanish schooner 366
Protest of master and crew against the capture of the 367, 368
Letter of Don Joaquin de Anduaga to the Secretary of State in relation to the capture of the 369
Carpender, G. W.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy 23
Nomination confirmed 25
Carpenters in the navy in 1826.—List of 456
In 1827.—List of 804
Carter, Lieutenant.—Expense of court-martial of 628
Cassin, Captain Stephen.—Testimony before the court-martial of Commodore David Porter 154
Letter in relation to the capture of the "Pilot" 240
"Catilini."—Letter of Lieutenant W. H. Watson in relation to the capture of the piratical vessel called the 275
"Cato."—Letter of U. S. consul at Alvarado in relation to the robbery of the brig 290
Chandler, Samuel.—Agreement with Commodore Stewart for the building of three schooners 565
Champlain.—(See Lake Champlain.)
Chaplains in the navy in 1826.—List of 449
In 1827.—List of 792
Charges and specifications—Against Commodore David Porter 372
Against Commodore Charles Stewart 489
Against Lieutenant Joshua R. Sands 605
Against Lieutenant Wm. M. Hunter 608
Charleston, South Carolina, and St. Mary's, Georgia—Report of Secretary of the Navy of an examination of the harbors of, for a navy yard 465
Report of committee on the expediency of establishing navy yards at 636
(See Navy yards.)
Charlestown, Mass.—Message of the President of the U. S. in relation to a survey for a site for a dry dock at 813
Estimate of cost of a dry dock at 820
Chauncey, Commodore I.—(See Courts-martial of Commodore David Porter.)
Chauncey, John S.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy 23
Nomination confirmed 25
"Cherub."—Correspondence on the subject of the loss of the sloop 232
Chesapeake—List of killed, wounded and prisoners on board the frigate, in an action with the British frigate Shannon 629
Muster roll of officers and crew carried prisoners to Halifax from the frigate 632
Chili.—Letter of J. Q. Adams in relation to the capture of the brig "Macedonian," and the claim of the owners upon the government of 553
Clapp, Ben.—Letter in relation to the capture of the ship "Seringapatam" by Lieutenant John M. Gamble, U. S. marines 97
Clay, Henry.—(See Secretary of State.)
Clothing, to the U. S. squadron on the Pacific ocean.—Manner of sending supplies of provisions and 9
For the ship Franklin.—Letter of Jno. Rodgers in relation to the shipment of the slop 10
Lost in the service of the U. S at Bladensburg 623
Cochrane, Lord.—(See "Macedonian.")
Commissioners of the Navy.—(See Navy Commissioners.)
Compensation, or prize money, for capturing an enemy's vessel in 1813.—Report of Committee on Naval Affairs, on memorial of John M. Gamble for 95
Congress—Of the gallant conduct of Lieutenant Duncan.—Report of committee in relation to the expression of the sense of 460
Connecticut—List of navy pensioners in State of, January 1, 1826 615
List of widow pensioners in State of, January 1, 1826 621
Report of a committee on the expediency of establishing a navy yard on the river Thames, in the State of 636
Conner, Commander David.—Testimony before the court-martial for the trial of Commodore Stewart 515
Letter to J. B. Prevost, special agent of the United States in Lima, in relation to the sailing of an expedition from the port of Lima 522
Conner, Lieutenant.—Expenses of courts-martial of 628
Constructors in 1826.—List of naval 458
"Coquette."—Affidavit of captain and crew in relation to an outrage upon the schooner 193
Cordage—Experiment in the use of cotton compared with flax for canvas and—Report of the Secretary of the Navy 622
Cornick, James.—(See Court-martial of Commodore Stewart.)
Correa, Jacinto.—(See "Carmen," alias "Gallega Third.")
Correspondence—On the course pursued by Commodore David Porter, in command of the squadron for the suppression of piracy in the West Indies 648
Cotton, compared with flax, for cordage and canvas.—Report of Secretary of the Navy in relation to an experiment in relation to 622
Courts-martial—in the navy and marine corps in 1821, 1822 and 1823.—Expenses of 46
Number ordered by the Secretary of the Navy from May 25, 1821, to May 25, 1824, the places where held, the names of the officers composing them, &c 50
Number in the marine corps from 1st November, 1821, to 1st November, 1824, the stations where held, the officers who composed them, &c 53
Sentences for desertion from the marine corps from 1821 to 1824 79
Marines tried for other offences than desertion, from 1st Nov., 1821, to Oct. 31, 1824 .. 82

Page.

Courts-martial.—Sentences for offences other than desertion from the marine corps..... 84
Expenses of, from Jan., 1824, to Feb., 1826 627
For the trial of Commodore David Porter, for landing with a military force in the Island of Porto Rico.—
Letter of the Secretary of the Navy..... 132
Order for convening the court at Washington; the appointment of its members and judge advocate 132, 133, 166, 403, 404
Minutes of the proceedings of the court..... 133, 404
Testimony of Lieutenant Charles T. Platt..... 133, 135, 136, 139, 404, 405, 406
Statement of Captain Porter, in relation to the formation of the court..... 136
Opinion of the court in relation to the statement of Captain Porter..... 137
Testimony of Commander Alexander J. Dallas..... 137
Testimony of Lieutenant Horatio N. Crabb..... 138
Report of the court of the facts disclosed in the investigation 139
Letters of Commodore Porter to the Secretary of the Navy..... 142
Letter of Stephen Cabot, U. S. consul, in relation to piracies in the West Indies..... 142
Letter of Bergeest and Uhlhorn in relation to the same..... 143
Letter of Lieutenant Charles T. Platt to Commodore Porter in relation to piracies on the Island of St. Thomas..... 143
Letter of Smith Thompson, appointing Commodore Porter to the command of the squadron for the suppression of piracy in the West Indies and Gulf of Mexico.. 144, 145
Statement of Lieutenant Commanding John R. Miffin, U. S. marines, in relation to proceedings of Commodore Porter 145
Exceptions taken by Commodore Porter to the formation of the court..... 146, 412
Remarks to the court by Commodore Porter..... 146, 147
Letter of R. S. Coxe, judge advocate, with regard to exceptions to the organization of the court 147, 413
Reply of the Secretary of the Navy to the same..... 147, 148, 165, 411, 413, 414
Protest of Commodore Porter against the decision of the Secretary of the Navy, affirming the legality of the formation of the court..... 148, 149, 414, 416
Letter of the Secretary of the Navy, enclosing letters and depositions respecting transactions at Foxardo, &c..... 150
Letter of R. S. Coxe, with report of the court on conduct of Commodore Porter in landing on the Island of Porto Rico..... 150
To inquire into the conduct of Captain David Porter in transporting specie, &c., while in command of the West India squadron—
Minutes of the courts..... 150 to 172
Testimony of Thomas Randall, Esq..... 150, 151
Testimony of Master Commandant W. B. Finch..... 152, 154, 155, 158
Testimony of Master Commandant A. J. Dallas..... 152, 153
Testimony of Captain Stephen Cassin..... 154, 155
Testimony of Lieutenant Francis H. Gregory..... 156, 157
Testimony of Master Commandant Thomas H. Stevens..... 157, 158
Testimony of Lieutenant Charles W. Skinner..... 158, 159
Testimony of Lieutenant Charles H. Bell..... 160
Testimony of Lieutenant John P. Zantzinger..... 160, 161
Testimony of Lieutenant D. G. Farragut..... 161
Testimony of Lieutenant Ralph Voorhees..... 162
Testimony of Lieutenant John H. Lee..... 162
Testimony of Lieutenant J. T. Ritchie..... 162, 163
Testimony of Lieutenant Charles Boarman..... 163
Testimony of Lieutenant Charles T. Platt..... 163, 164
Testimony of John Mountain, Esq..... 164
Report of the court, to the Secretary of the Navy, upon the result of the investigation..... 166 to 172
Extract of the message of the President, of December 3, 1822, in relation to the suppression of piracy in the West Indies..... 172
Extract from the Journal of the House of Representatives in relation to the same..... 173
Extracts from the Senate Journal in relation to the same..... 173, 174
Act authorizing an additional naval force for the suppression of piracy..... 174
Letter of the Secretary of the Navy to the President in relation to health of the squadron in the West Indies..... 174, 175
Orders and instructions to Commodore Rodgers to proceed to Thompson's Island (West Indies) and investigate the origin and progress of the sickness (yellow fever) on the island and in the squadron..... 175
Report of Commodore Rodgers on the same..... 176
Report of Surgeons Thomas Harris, B. Washington, and Richard K. Hoffman, on the same..... 176
Letter of the Secretary of the Navy on the administration of his Department for 1823. 178
Letter of the Secretary of the Navy on the administration of his Department for 1824. 180
List of vessels in commission in 1825..... 182
Letter of the Secretary of the Navy to the Committee on Naval Affairs, of the House of Representatives, in relation to the suppression of piracy..... 183
Extracts of a letter to Hon. James Lloyd, chairman Committee on Naval Affairs (Senate) on same subject..... 184
Report Committee on Foreign Relations (Senate) in relation to piracy..... 184
Report of the Secretary of the Navy in relation to piracies..... 185
Message President United States in relation to piracies..... 185

Page.

Courts-martial.—Report of Committee on Naval Affairs (House) in relation to the expediency of providing an additional force for the suppression of piracy..... 186
Report Committee on Foreign Relations (House) on piracy and outrage on American commerce by Spanish privateers..... 187
Answer of the Spanish government to correspondence in relation to piracies..... 189
List of piratical vessels captured, &c..... 189
List of vessels of United States in service and being built..... 190
Copies and extracts of letters and reports exhibiting a general view of the correspondence between commanders of cruising vessels in the West Indies and the Spanish authorities..... 191 to 203
List of names and force of privateers fitted out from ports of the Island of Porto Rico. 203
Letter of appointment of Commodore Porter to command the squadron for suppressing piracy in the West Indies..... 203, 381
Laws of the United States to prohibit the carrying on of the slave trade from the United States to any foreign place..... 204 to 211
Instructions for officers commanding cruising vessels in relation to pirates, and the execution of laws in relation to the slave trade..... 211, 212
Letters of the Secretary of the Navy to Commodore Porter..... 213 to 221
Letter of Thomas Randall in relation to trial of Commodore Porter..... 221
Letters from Commodore Porter to the Navy Department..... 221 to 235, 415, 416
List of vessels attached to the squadron under the command of Commodore Porter.... 222
Instructions of Commodore Porter to the officers of his squadron, in relation to the suppression of piracy and the slave trade..... 235 to 238
General orders of Commodore Porter to officers of the squadron, in relation to the same..... 238, 239
Special orders of Commodore Porter to same..... 240 to 278
Reports of the officers of the squadron to Commodore Porter..... 240 to 278
Letters of Commodore Porter to the authorities of the West India Islands, in relation to the same..... 278, 280, 281, 282
Letters of the Captain General of Puerto Rico to Commodore Porter, in relation to the same..... 278, 280
Letters of Commodore Porter to the Captain General of Cuba on the same subject.. 283, 285
Letters from the Captain General of Cuba to Commodore Porter on the same subject..... 283, 284, 285
Letters of Commodore Porter to the Alcalde of Foxardo on the same subject..... 285
Letter of Commodore Porter to the Governor of the Bahamas on the same subject.. 285, 286
Official communications to and from British officers in the West Indies on the same subject..... 286 to 290
Correspondence in relation to piracy and convoy, &c..... 290 to 304
For the trial of Commodore David Porter, for insubordination, &c.—
Minutes of the proceedings of the court..... 304 to 309, 404 to 411
Testimony of A. J. Dallas, master commandant..... 305, 306, 409
Testimony of Lieutenant Charles T. Platt..... 307, 312, 316, 410
Testimony of Lieutenant Robert Ritchie..... 312, 313, 314, 315
Testimony of Lieutenant Horatio N. Crabb..... 314, 315, 410
Testimony of Lieutenant Thomas B. Barton..... 315
Testimony of Surgeon Elnathan Judson..... 316
Testimony of John Boyle, clerk in the Navy Department..... 319
Testimony of William W. Seaton..... 320, 323
Testimony of Peter Force..... 320
Testimony of John Simpson..... 321
Testimony of Lieutenant John T. Ritchie..... 322
Testimony of Martin King..... 322
Testimony of Gustavus Harrison..... 324
Opinion and sentence of the court on the charges preferred..... 327, 328
Notes of argument and authority, in support of the objections taken by counsel of Commodore Porter to second charge and specification..... 329 to 334
Answer of the judge advocate thereto..... 334 to 341
Defence of Commodore Porter..... 342 to 363
Extracts from and references to messages of the President, referred to in the defence of Commodore Porter..... 363 to 366
Letter from the Secretary of the Navy to Commodore Porter, enclosing letters from the Spanish minister, complaining of the conduct of Captain S. Cassin, commander of the Peacock..... 366, 367, 370
Declaration of the captain and mate of "The Carmen," captured by the United States ship Peacock..... 366, 367
Protest of the captain, officers and crew of the schooner "Carmen," alias "Gallega the Third"..... 367, 368, 369
Letter of Don Joaquim de Anduaga to the Secretary of State..... 369
Order for the convening of a court for the trial of Commodore Porter..... 370
Exceptions of Commodore Porter to judge advocate..... 370, 407, 408
Charges and specifications against Commodore Porter..... 372
Address of Commodore Porter to the court..... 374
General instructions, by Commodore Porter, to the officers of the squadron, in relation to the repression of piracy and the slave trade..... 375 to 377
Objections of counsel of Commodore Porter to the second charge against him..... 377
Letter of the Attorney General, in relation to certain questions propounded by the court..... 378

Page.

Courts-martial.—Remarks of Commodore Porter on the objections taken, by his counsel, to the second charge 378
Letter of the Secretary of the Navy, in relation to the defence of Commodore Porter .. 379
Advertisement of Cabot, Bailey & Co., for apprehension of certain goods which were stolen 379
Letter of William Furniss, in relation to the papers of the "Mary Ann," of Baltimore. 380
Letter of Lieutenant Charles T. Platt, in relation to mutinies on board American vessels 380
Letter of Commodore Porter to the President of the United States, in relation to the affair at Foxardo 382
Letters of Commodore Porter to the Secretary of the Navy, on the same subject 382, 383, 418
Letter of Lieutenant Charles T. Platt, in relation to robberies on the Island of St. Thomas 384
Letters of Commodore Porter to the Secretary of the Navy 384, 385, 386, 387, 388, 391, 399 400, 401, 402
Letter of S. Cabot, U. S. consular agent, in relation to piracies on the Island of St. Thomas 384, 417
Letter of Bergeest & Wheborn, on the same subject 385, 417
Interrogatories proposed by Commodore Porter to Mr. Monroe, President United States 387
Letter of Commodore Porter to Peter Force, Esq., in relation to an anonymous publication 387
Letters of the Secretary of the Navy to Commodore Porter 387, 391, 396, 397, 398, 399, 400 401, 402, 403
"Variances" between the report of the court and a pamphlet published by Commodore Porter 388
Statement of facts agreed to by counsel 389
Letters of Secretary of the Navy to Gales & Seaton 390
Letter of Gales & Seaton to the Secretary of the Navy 390
Letter of R. S. Coxe to Commodore Porter 391
Paper handed to Commodore Porter by the judge advocate 392
Letter of W. W. Seaton to R. S. Coxe 392
Letter of James Monroe to R. S. Coxe, communicating answers to certain interrogatories 392
Interrogatories propounded to James Monroe, President United States, by R. S. Coxe, judge advocate, and by Commodore Porter 392, 393
Answers of Hon. James Monroe 393, 394, 395
Letters of Hon. James Monroe to Commodore Porter 396
Letter of Commodore Porter to Hon. James Monroe 396
Letter of Lieutenant J. R. Mifflin, in relation to the affair at Foxardo 418
Act for the protection of commerce, and to punish the crime of piracy 419
Defence of Commodore Porter, in relation to his transactions at Foxardo ..... 419 to 426
Letter of Cabot, Bailey & Co., in relation to piracies at Foxardo 426
Letters of W. Furniss, in relation to the same 427
Letters of Captain J. D. Sloat, in relation to the same ..... 431 to 433, 437, 438, 439
Letters of Commodore Porter, in relation to the same 433
Report of the committee (Senate) on the subject of the court-martial of Commodore Porter 486
For the trial of Commodore Charles Stewart, for disobedience of orders, neglect of duty, cruelty, &c.—
Letters of Secretary of the Navy to Commodore Charles Stewart 487, 488, 539, 540, 597
Letters of Commodore Charles Stewart to the Secretary of the Navy 487, 488, 540, 566, 567 568, 578, 597
Members of the court 488
Charges and specifications against Commodore Stewart 489
Minutes and proceedings of the court ..... 491 to 521
Testimony of Lieut. Wm. H. Hunter 492
Testimony of Lieut. Henry Henry 494, 496
Testimony of Peter Birch 499
Testimony of Lieut. Thomas S. Hammersley 499
Testimony of Samuel R. Bannister 501
Testimony of Lieut. Ebenezer Ridgeway 502
Testimony of Lieut. Henry W. Ogden 502, 506
Testimony of Lieut. Isaac Mayo 504, 506, 507
Testimony of Captain Chas. G. Ridgeley 505
Testimony of Captain Jno. Downes 507
Testimony of Lieut. Joshua R. Sands 508, 509
Testimony of Lieut. L. M. Goldsborough 509
Testimony of A. H Hopkinson 500
Testimony of John Redman Coxe 511
Testimony of Charles Wilkes, jr 511
Testimony of Purser Edward Fitzgerald 512, 513
Testimony of Captain Jas. Biddle 512
Testimony of David Conner 515
Testimony of Lieut. Chas. S. McCauley 516
Testimony of Lieut. W. F. Hunter 516
Testimony of William Harner 516
Testimony of E. Smith 517
Opinion of the court ..... 519 to 521
Letters and orders of Commodore Stewart to officers of the Pacific squadron 521 to 525, 528 530, 531, 533 to 535, 557 to 561

Page.

Courts-martial—Defence of Com. Stewart against the charges preferred against him 540
Letter of Hon. J. Q. Adams, Secretary State, in relation to the claim of the owners of the brig "Macedonian" 553
Memorial of the owners of the brig "Macedonian," captured by Lord Cochrane..... 554
Extract of a letter from Mr. Adams to Jno. M. Forbes 557
Extract of a letter from Mr. Adams to John B. Prevost, Lima 557
Letters of Commodore Stewart to J. B. Prevost, U. S. agent at Santiago de Chili, 562, 563, 564
Letters of J. B. Prevost to Com. Stewart..... 562, 563, 565
Agreement between Com. Stewart and Sam'l Chandler for materials for three schooners 565
Letter of W. Hunter and Thos. S. Hammersley, in relation to the brig "Pearl"..... 565
Letter of the Countess of Valle Ermosa to Mrs. Stewart 566
Letter of Commodore Stewart in relation to the admission of a person named Madrid on board the ship Franklin, at Callao 565
Letters of Commander Stewart to the commander of the forces of Peru..... 568, 570
Letters of Juan Ramirez to Com. Stewart..... 569, 570, 571
Letter to the minister of state, of Peru..... 572, 573
Letters of Com. Stewart to the commander of the forces, Callao..... 573, 574, 575
Letter of Commodore Stewart to the Viceroy of Peru, in relation to the piratical brig "Quintanilla" 577
Affidavit of H. G. Ward and Jno. O'Sullivan, in relation to the cargo of the ship "Canton," 578
Affidavit of Wm. January, in relation to the same..... 579
Letters of Wm. Prunier to Com. Stewart 579, 580, 581
Letters of Com. Stewart to W. Prunier 579, 580
Letter of Le Roy, Bayard & Co., in relation to the ship "Canton"..... 582
Letter of citizens of the United States at Quilca, South America, to Com. Stewart.... 583
Letter of citizens of the United States at Lima to Com. Stewart..... 583
Letter of Commodore Stewart to citizens of the United States at Lima, South America.. 584
Address of Commodore Stewart to the court..... 584
Decree of San Martin in relation to neutral vessels..... 598
Letters of Juan Ramirez to Com. Stewart..... 598
Letters of Francisco Valdivie to Com. Stewart..... 599
Letter of R. Alvarado to Com. Stewart 600
Letter of A. De Sucre to Com. Stewart 600
Letter of Geronimo Valdes to Com. Stewart 601
Letter of Jose de la Verna to Com. Stewart 602
Letter of Rafael Pero to Com. Stewart..... 602
For the trial of Lieutenant Joshua R. Sands for disobedience of orders of his commanding officer, and absenting himself without leave—
Members of the court 603
Charges and specifications against 605
Minutes of the proceedings ..... 603 to 610
Testimony of Robt. W. Jones 603
Testimony of Wm. H. Hunter 604
Opinion of the court 604, 607
Letter of Lieut. John Harris to Lieut. Sands 605
Address of Lieut. Sands to the court 605
Defence of Lieut. Sands against the charges preferred against him 606
Letter of the Secretary of the Navy approving the sentence of the court on the second charge, and disapproving the sentence on the first charge 607
For the trial of Lieutenant Wm. A. Weaver—members of the court..... 604
For the trial of Lieutenant William M. Hunter, for neglect of duty..... 607, 608
Charge and specifications against..... 608
Opinion of the court..... 608
Interrogatories and answers of Mrs. Delia T. Stewart, in relation to the Spaniard, Madrid 609
Defence against the charge and specification..... 610
For the trial of Lieutenant Whitlock. (See Court-martial of Lieut. Wm. M. Hunter.)
Coxe, John Redman.—Testimony before the court-martial of Commodore Stewart..... 511
Coxe, Richard S., judge advocate.—(See Court-martial of Commodore David Porter.)
Crabbe, Lieutenant Horatio N.—Testimony before the court-martial of Commodore David Porter 138, 314, 315, 410
Crowninshield, Secretary of the Navy.—Rules and regulations for the government of the recruiting service of the navy, by B. W..... 46
Chairman Committee of Naval Affairs (House of Representatives), in relation to the suppression of piracy.—Letter to..... 183
Crowninshield, Jacob—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed 25
Cuba.—Application of merchants and citizens of New York, for protection against piracy in the trade with 22
Affidavit of George Brown, of murders and atrocities by pirates, near the Island of.... 26
In relation to piracies.—Correspondence with Captain General of..... 192, 282 to 286
Cumberland harbor.—(See St. Mary's, Georgia.)
Cunningham, Robert B.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy 23
Nomination confirmed 25
Cutts, Augustus—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Cutts, jr., Joseph—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed 25

D.

Page.

Dallas, Alexander J.—Testimony before the court-martial in the case of Commodore David Porter..... 137, 152, 305, 409
Deaths in the navy since January 1, 1825.—List of..... 115
Since December 2, 1826..... 761
Decatur, Commodore Stephen.—(See Susan Decatur.)
Decatur, Susan—Report committee on claim for prize money, for the capture, by her husband, of the frigate Philadelphia..... 483
Memorial of..... 484
Decks and sides of vessels.—Report committee on a claim for remuneration for a method for securing 623
Decree—Of San Martin, in relation to foreigners and neutral vessels visiting Peru..... 598
Defence—Of Commodore David Porter, against the charges preferred against him, and tried in a general court-martial..... 342 to 363
Against the charges preferred in relation to the transactions of Commodore Porter at Foxardo..... 419
Of Commodore Charles Stewart, against charges preferred against him, and tried by a court-martial..... 540, 584
Of Lieutenant Joshua R. Sands, against charges preferred against him, and tried by a court-martial..... 606
Of Lieutenant William M. Hunter, against the charge preferred against him, and tried by a court-martial..... 610
Delaware—List of navy pensions in State of, January 1, 1826..... 618
Delaware river.—Letter of the Secretary of the Navy on the utility of a breakwater at the Capes of the 642
Delinquencies, and statements of prize agents.—Amount of..... 20
Deserters from the marine corps—from November 1, 1821, to November 1, 1824.—Names of..... 59
Sentences of courts-martial for trial of..... 79
Desertion.—Form of certificate of commanding officer in cases of..... 48
Report of committee on claim of James P. Durand for pay withheld for alleged..... 722
De Sucre, A.—(See Courts-martial—Com. Charles Stewart.)
District of Columbia.—List of navy pensions in 1826, in the..... 619
List of widow pensions in, January 1, 1826..... 621
Docks, for the preservation and repair of vessels.—Report of the Secretary of the Navy on the construction of..... 700
Report of committee on the same..... 726
Message, President's, in relation to sites for the establ shment of dry..... 810
Documents relating to the conduct of officers of the navy on the Pacific ocean.—Message of the President, giving his reasons for declining to furnish the House of Representatives with... 26
Dornin, Thomas—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 27
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Douty, Thomas—Report of committee on claim of, for prize money..... 810
Downes, Captain John.—Testimony before the court-martial for the trial of Commodore Stewart.. 507
Dry docks.—(See Docks.)
Dulany, Hugh—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Dulany, Michael.—Replies to questions in relation to the Charleston bar..... 470
Duncan—Report of committee in relation to the gallant conduct of Lieut. Silas, in the engagement on Lake Champlain in 1814..... 460
Durand, James P.—Report of committee on claim for pay withheld for alleged desertion..... 722

E.

Echevavria, Ramon De.—(See Carmen, alias Gallega Third.)
Edgerton, Arthur—Statement of, in relation to the capture of the brig "General Andrew Jackson," by the Spanish privateer "Pereira"..... 195
Elery, Charles—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Ellery, John S. and others.—(See "Macedonian.")
Encouragement of vaccination in the navy.—Letter of the Secretary of the Navy on the..... 640
Engle, Frederick—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Ermosa, The Countess of Valle.—Letter to Mrs. Commodore Stewart, in relation to the "passage" of a person on board the ship "Franklin"..... 566
Estimates—For the support of the navy for the year 1826..... 115, 117
For provisions required for the navy for the year 1826..... 122
For improvements and repairs of navy yards for the year 1826..... 122
For the support of the office of the Navy Commissioners for the year 1826..... 123
For pay and subsistence of the marine corps for the year 1826..... 130
For the support of the office of the Secretary of the Navy..... 131
Of pay and subsistence of persons attached to a frigate of the first and second class, and a sloop-of-war, for one year..... 645
For the naval service for the year 1827..... 762
For provisions required for the navy for the year 1827..... 772
For the improvement and repairs of navy yards for the year 1827..... 772
For the support of the office of the Navy Commissioners..... 773
For the marine corps for 1827..... 774
For the construction of dry docks at the navy yards at Charlestown, Massachusetts; Brooklyn, New York; Gosport, Virginia, and Portsmouth, Virginia..... 816

Page.

Exceptions—Taken by Commodore Porter to the formation, &c., of the court convened for his trial, &c..... 146
Of Commodore David Porter to the judge advocate appointed to conduct the trial of charges against him..... 370
Expenses—Of courts martial and courts of inquiry from January 1, 1824, to February, 1826—message of President..... 627
Of sickness contracted in the service of the United States.—Report of the committee on claim of E. L. Young for..... 628
Expenditures—For the navy in 1825..... 115, 116
For the marine corps for 1826.—Estimate of..... 130, 131
Exploration of the northwest coast of America.—Letter of Secretary of the Navy on the expense and mode of the..... 442

F.

Farragut, David G.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Testimony before the court-martial in the case of Commodore David Porter..... 161
Fajardo.—(See Foxardo.)
"Ferret."—Letter of Commodore L. Warrington in relation to the loss of the schooner..... 103
Finch, Wm. B., Commandant.—Testimony before the court-martial of Commodore David Porter... 152, 154, 158
Letter in relation to protection to American merchants in Matanzas..... 300, 301, 302
Letter in relation to the health of Thompson's Island, and in relation to the suppression of piracy, &c..... 687
Fisheries on the coast.—Correspondence in relation to the cruise of the "Lexington," for the protection of the..... 745
Fitzgerald, Edward.—Testimony before the court-martial for the trial of Commodore Stewart.. 512, 513
Letter to Commodore Stewart in relation to the arrest of Lieutenant Sands..... 526
Flax.—Report of the Navy Commissioners in relation to the manufacture of canvas, cables, and cordage, of American flax, for the use of the navy..... 28
Extract of a letter from Naman Goodsell, in relation to experiments made by him in water-rotting..... 31
Extract of a report by Peter Bernard, "inspector general for Leinster, Munster, and Connaught, to the trustees of the Linen Board, London," on the cultivation and preparation of hemp and flax in Holland and the Netherlands..... 32
Extract of a letter from Mr. ——, of France, respecting the causes of the different appearance of Irish and Dutch..... 36
(See Hemp.)
Florida.—Appointment of a commission to select a site for the establishment of a Navy yard at Pensacola..... 110
Report of Captains Bainbridge, Warrington, and Biddle, on a site for a Navy yard at Pensacola..... 111
Letter of the Secretary of the Navy communicating the report to the President, and his approval of the same..... 111
Flotilla.—(See Barney's flotilla.)
Force, Peter.—Testimony before the court-martial of Commodore David Porter..... 320
Fort Barancas—Letter of the Secretary of War, transferring possession of, to the Navy Department 110
Foxardo.—(See Court-martial and Commodore David Porter.)
Franklin.—Letter of Fourth Auditor in relation to freight on slop clothing sent to the ship..... 20
Freelons, Lieut. Thos. W.—Letter in relation to the suppression of piracy in the Island of Cuba.. 303
Freight.—Letter of the Fourth Auditor in relation to the freight on slop clothing sent to the ship Franklin..... 20
Furniss, William.—Letter in relation to mutiny on board two American vessels in the West India seas..... 380
Letters in relation to depredations by pirates of Foxardo..... 427

G.

Gales & Seaton.—Letters to the Secretary of the Navy in relation to the publication of a correspondence between the Secretary of the Navy and Commodore Porter..... 390
Gallagher, Lieut. John.—Letter in relation to convoy and the suppression of piracy..... 248
Gamble, Frances, widow of Lieut. Francis B. Gamble—Report of committee on the claim of, for a pension..... 706
Gamble, Lieut. Francis B.—(See Frances Gamble.)
Gamble, John M.—A captain of marines, for compensation, or prize money, for capturing enemy's vessel in 1813.—Report of Committee on Naval Affairs on memorial of..... 95

ACCOMPANYING PAPERS.

Extracts from Commodore Porter's journal..... 95, 96
Letters from Commodore Porter..... 96, 97
Letter from Alexander M. Montgomery..... 96
Letter from Ben. Clapp..... 97
Letter from Richard K. Hoffman..... 97
Letter from Alexander Montgomery..... 98
Gardner, William H.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Garrett, Frederick—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23

Page.

Garrett, Frederick—Nomination confirmed 25
"Gazelle."—Letter of Mr. Adams in relation to a breach of a blockade of the ports of Peru by the 557
Gedney, Thomas R.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy 23
Nomination confirmed 25
"General Andrew Jackson."—Capture by Spanish privateer of the brig 195–200
Georgia—List of navy pensioners in State of, January 1, 1826 619
List of widow pensioners in State of, January 1, 1826 622
Navy yard at St. Mary's. (See Navy yards.)
Gerry, Thomas R.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy 23
Nomination confirmed 25
Glynn, James—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy 23
Nomination confirmed 25
Goldsborough, Lieut. Louis M.—Testimony before the court-martial for the trial of Commodore Stewart 509
Letter to Commodore Stewart 527
Goodsell, Naman—Extract of a letter from, on the culture and rotting of hemp and flax 31
Gosport Navy yard, Virginia.—Message of the President of the United States in relation to a survey for a dry dock at the 814
Estimate for a dry dock at 825
Grawning, Tate S.—Letter in relation to protection to American merchants in the Island of Cuba .. 290
Gregory—Report of Lieutenant Francis H., in relation to the capture of the "Pancheta" 192, 193
Testimony before the court-martial of Commodore David Porter 156
Extract of report in relation to the Palmyra, alias "Pancheta," a Spanish privateer 192, 193
Letter to first lieutenant of the British ship-of-war Eden, in relation to the abuse of the captain of the American brig "Hiram," (Challenge) 674
Letter to the Secretary of the Navy in relation to an insult to the captain of the American brig "Hiram" 677
Grimke, Benjamin S.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy 23
Nomination confirmed 25
Grymes, Charles.—(See Court-martial of Commodore Stewart.)
Gunners in the navy in 1826.—List of 456
In 1827.—List of 804

H.

Halifax.—Muster roll of officers and crew of the frigate Chesapeake, carried as prisoners to 632
Hall, J. B.—(See Court-martial of Commodore Stewart.)
Hammersley, Lieutenant Thomas S.—Testimony before the court-martial for the trial of Commodore Stewart 499
Letter to Commodore Stewart in relation to the arrest of Lieutenant Joshua R. Sands. 532
"Harriet and Lucy."—Letter of D. T. Patterson in relation to the capture of the 292
Harris, John.—Letter to Lieutenant J. R. Sands in relation to his arrest on board the ship Franklin 605
(See Court-martial of Commodore Stewart.)
Harris, William S.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy 23
Nomination confirmed 25
Hayne, Francis.—Report of committee on claim for an increase of pension 705
Hemp—The growth of the United States.—Message of the President in relation to the use in the navy of canvas, cables, and cordage, made of 27
Letter of the Secretary of the navy in relation thereto 27
Report of the Navy Commissioners thereon 28, 29
Manner of raising hemp and preparing it for market—report of Navy Commissioners in relation thereto 28, 29
Paper on the culture and preparation of hemp in Russia, transmitted by Hon. J. Q. Adams, minister at St. Petersburg 29
Observations relative to hemp 30
Extract of a letter of Mr. Naman Goodsell, in relation to water-rotting hemp 31
Extracts of a report by Peter Bernard, Esq., inspector general for Leinster, Munster, and Connaught, in relation to the production of, in Holland and the Netherlands .. 32
Extract of a letter from manufacturers in New York, respecting the cultivation and manufacture of 36
Extract of a letter from a manufacturer of canvas, at Patterson, N. J., respecting the growth and manufacture of flax and 37
Extract of a letter from a manufacturer on the cultivation of 39
Extract of a letter from a manufacturer, at Norfolk, Va., on the same 39
Memorandum of an experiment made by a manufacturer to test the relative strength of American and foreign hemp rope 40
Henderson, Colonel Archibald.—Letter transmitting details of courts-martial in the marine corps .. 52
Return of desertions and trials in the marine corps 90
In relation to the reorganization and increase of the marine corps 90, 91, 92
Letter in relation to the pay and emoluments of the paymaster and quartermaster of the marine corps 699
Henry, Lieutenant Henry.—Testimony before the court-martial for the trial of Commodore Charles Stewart 494, 496
"Hiram"—Letters, &c., in relation to an injury in the harbor of Havana to, and abuse of the master of the American brig 673, 675, 676, 677, 678, 679, 680
Certificate of Lieutenant James W. H. Ray in relation to the same 678
Hobbs, H. H.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy 23
Nomination confirmed 25

Page.

Hoffman, A. K.—(See Court-martial of Commodore Stewart.)
Hoffman, Richard K.—Letter in relation to the capture of the ship "Seringapatam" by Lieutenant John M. Gamble, United States marines..... 97, 98
Letter in relation to the sickness on Thompson's Island..... 176, 177
Hogan, Michael.—Account of provisions, stores, &c., furnished United States ships "Franklin" and "Constellation"..... 560, 561, 562
Homer, William H.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Hopkinson, Alexander Hamilton.—Testimony before the court-martial for the trial of Commodore Stewart..... 510
Horner, William.—Testimony before the court-martial for the trial of Commodore Stewart..... 516
Horse, killed in the battle of Bladensburg.—Report of committee on indemnity to John A. Webster for a..... 623
Hall—Letters from Captain Isaac, relative to protection to American commerce on the coast of Chili and Peru..... 113, 114, 735, 743
Hall, jr., J. P.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Hunter, William F.—Testimony before the court-martial for the trial of Commodore Stewart..... 516
Hunter, Lieut. William M.—Testimony before the court-martial for the trial of Commodore Charles Stewart..... 492
Letter to Commodore Stewart..... 526
Testimony before the court-martial for the trial of Lieutenant Joshua R. Sands..... 604
Opinion of the court-martial in relation to the charge preferred against him..... 608
Charge and specification against..... 608
Defence against the charge and specification preferred against him..... 610
Expense of court-martial of..... 628
(See Court-martial of Commodore Stewart.)

I.

Improvements in ship building.—Report of committee on claims for compensation for use of the patented..... 721
Increase of the navy.—Statement of the progress made under the law for the gradual..... 124
Exhibit of expenditures for labor and materials on ships built under the law for the gradual..... 125
Of the marine corps.—Report of committee on the expediency of reorganization and .. 722
Report of committee on the expediency of an annual increase of the navy..... 810
Indemnity, by Spain for losses by American citizens by piracies, &c.—Letter of Francisco de Zea Bermudez in relation to..... 189
Ingraham, Duncan N.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Inquiry, courts of—(See Courts-martial.)
Instructions—To officers commanding cruising vessels in relation to piracy and the suppression of the slave trade..... 211, 235
For the encouragement of vaccination in the navy..... 640
Interrogatories—Proposed by Commodore David Porter to Hon. James Monroe..... 387, 392
Answer by Hon. James Monroe to..... 393, 394, 395
"Intrepid"—In the attack on the frigate Philadelphia, at Tripoli, in 1804.—Report of the Secretary of the Navy of the names of officers and seamen of the ketch..... 776

J.

January, Wm.—Affidavit of, in relation to the cargo of the ship Canton..... 579
Jarrett, Frederick.—(See Frederick Garrett.)
"John," of Newport, R. I.—Letter in relation to outrages committed, near Matanzas, on the captain and crew of the brig..... 219
Johnson, Edward S.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the United States navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Johnson, Joseph and John Stoney.—Letter in relation to suitable sites for a Navy yard at Charleston 475
Letter in relation to the price of labor at Charleston..... 479
Jones, Robert W.—Testimony before court-martial for the trial of Joshua R. Sands..... 603
Judge advocates—Amount paid for services of, in 1821, 1822 and 1823..... 46
Judson, Elnathan, surgeon in the navy.—Testimony before the court-martial, in the case of Commodore David Porter..... 316
Expense of court-martial of..... 628
Appointment as acting surgeon, for the purpose of vaccination in the navy..... 640
Letter to, in relation to vaccination in the navy..... 641, 642

K.

Kearney, Commandant Lawrence.—Report of the cruise of the "Grayhound," and outrages committed on the American vessels "Reuben and Eliza," and "Mechanic"..... 246
Report of survey and examination of Charleston and St. Mary's Bar, with a view to establish a navy yard..... 465 to 468
Kelly, John—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25

Page.

Kennon, Lieutenant.—Expense of court-martial of..... 628
Letter of Commodore Porter in relation to the sentence of the court-martial in the case of Lieutenant 672
Kentucky—List of widow pensioners in the State of, Jan. 1, 1826 622
Key West.—Letter to Secretary of the Navy in relation to the survey of..... 658, 659
Killed, wounded and prisoners—Of the officers and men of the frigate "Chesapeake," in the action with the British frigate "Shannon," in the war of 1812.—List of..... 629
Kinderlan, Sebastian, Captain General of Cuba.—(See Cuba.)
King, Martin—Testimony before court-martial in the case of Commodore David Porter..... 322, 323
Knight, James D.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy 23
Nomination confirmed 25

L.

Lake Champlain.—Report of committee in relation to the gallant conduct of Lieut. Duncan, of the navy, in an engagement in 1814, on..... 460
La Serna, Jose de.—Letter in relation to the Spanish privateer "Quintanilla" 602
Lawrence, Captain John—Of the British ship "Eden." (See report of Secretary of the Navy in relation to the proceedings of Commodore Porter in the West Indies.)
Laws—Of the United States, prohibiting the slave trade..... 205 to 211
"Leader."—Letter of U. S. consul at Alverado, in relation to protection to the schooner..... 290
Lee, Lieut. John H.—Testimony before the court-martial in the case of Commodore David Porter.. 190
Letter in relation to the suppression of piracy in the West Indies..... 269
Le Roy, Bayard & Co.—Letter in relation to evidence before the court-martial of Commodore Stewart; and also, in relation to the ship "Canton"..... 582
"Liberator."—Papers, estimates, &c., in relation to the ship 746
Lieutenants in the navy for 1826.—List of..... 444
In 1827.—List of..... 783
Lima, South America—Letter of citizens of the United States at, to Commodore Stewart, in relation to their protection 583
Letter of Commodore Stewart to citizens of the United States, residing at..... 584
Linarez, Fr. Gonzalez de, Governor of Porto Rico.—(See Porto Rico.)
Live oak timber.—Report of the Secretary of the Navy on the probable cost of certain lots of..... 624
Logan, Dr. George.—Letter in relation to the health of the several positions in the harbor of Charleston, proposed as a suitable site for a navy yard..... 477
Loomis, Erastus.—Report of committee on claim of, for a naval pension to..... 698
Lorman, W., president of the Baltimore chamber of commerce.—Letter in relation to protection to commerce on the coast of Brazil, &c..... 640, 648
Louisiana—List of navy pensioners in State of, Jan. 1, 1826 619
Lowndes, Charles—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed 25

M.

Macedonian.—Letter of J. Q. Adams in relation to the claim upon the government of Chili for the capture of the brig..... 553
Memorial of the owners of brig..... 554
Letter of Daniel Brent to Com. Stewart..... 557
Letter of J. B. Prevost to Com. Porter, in relation to the brig..... 563
Letters of Francisco Valdivie in relation to the brig..... 599
Mackey, D. H.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Madrid.—Letter of Commodore Stewart to the Secretary of the Navy in relation to a person secreted on board the ship Franklin, at Callao, named..... 565
Letter of the Countess of Valle Ermosa to Mrs. Stewart in relation to..... 565
Interrogatories and answers of Mrs. Delia F. Stewart in relation to the Spaniard..... 609
Mahy, Nicholas—Captain General of Cuba; correspondence in relation to piracy..... 192
Mantanzas—Letter of American merchants of, in relation to piratical depredations..... 395, 296
Marines.—Tried by a court-martial for other offences than desertion, from 1st Nov., 1821, to 31st Oct., 1824.—Names of 82
Sentences of the courts-martial..... 84
Marine corps.—Opinion of the Secretary of the Navy in relation to the reorganization of the navy and the..... 40
Statement showing the traveling expenses, and other allowances, received by officers of, and expenses of courts-martial, &c., for 1821, 1822 and 1823..... 46
Number of courts-martial in the marine corps from 1821 to 1824, the stations where held, the officers who composed them, &c..... 53
Register of names of deserters from the marine corps from Nov. 1, 1821, to Oct. 31, 1824, the number taken, and the number tried, and the sentence of the court..... 59
Register of marines tried by a court-martial for other offences than desertion, from 1st Nov., 1821, to 31st Oct., 1824, and sentence of the court..... 82
Letters of Lieutenant Colonel A. Henderson on the reorganization and increase of the.. 90
Memorial of officers of, that the corps may be reorganized, with the double character of marine infantry and marine artillery..... 93
Estimate of pay and subsistence for the year 1826..... 130
Estimate of the expenditures of, for the year 1826.....130, 131
List of the officers of, for the year 1826..... ... 456
List of officers of, for the year 1827..... 805

Page.

Marine corps.—Message of the President in relation to the pay and emoluments of the paymaster and quartermaster of the..... 698
Report of committee on the reorganization and increase of the..... 722
Estimate of pay and subsistence for the year 1827..... 774
Marsh, James.—Letter offering his wharf as a suitable site for a Navy yard, at Charleston, South Carolina..... 476
Letter in relation to the naval facilities of Charleston..... 480
Marston, jr., John—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed.....
"Mary Ann," of Baltimore.—Letters in relation to a mutiny on board the..... 380
Maryland—For the establishment of a Naval academy at Annapolis.—Application by legislature of 623
Report of a committee on memorial of mayor and council, for a Navy yard at Baltimore, in the State of..... 636
List of navy pensioners, Jan. 1, 1826, in the State of..... 618
List of widow pensioners in State of, Jan. 1, 1826..... 621
Massachusetts—List of navy pensioners in State of, Jan. 1, 1826..... 613
List of widow pensioners in State of, Jan. 1, 1826..... 620
Masters commandant in the navy, for 1826.—List of..... 444
In 1827.—List of..... 782
Mattison, Joseph—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
May, Charles G.—Letter offering his wharf as a site for a Navy yard at Charleston..... 476
Mayo, Lieutenant Isaac.—Testimony before court-martial for the trial of Commodore Stewart.. 504, 506
McCauley, Lieut. Chas. S.—Testimony before the court-martial for the trial of Commodore Stewart 516
McCluney, Lieut. W. J.—(See Court-martial of Commodore Stewart.)
McElroy, Archibald.—Report committee on claim for repayment of expenses as prize agent..... 706
McIntosh, Lieut. Jas. M.—Letter in relation to piratical depredations on the coast of Yucatan, &c. 270
McKean, William W.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
McKeever, Captain I.—Letter in relation to the capture of pirates..... 108
Report of committee on claim for prize money for the capture of two slave vessels..... 704
"Mechanic."—Report, of Commander L. Kearney, of outrages committed on the American vessel.. 246
Mellers, William.—Report on claim to remuneration for a method of securing the decks and sides of vessels..... 623
"Mercator"—Letters in relation to the capture of the..... 219, 223, 234
Mercer, Samuel.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Midshipmen—To be lieutenants in the navy and the reason therefor.—Message of the President, nominating passed..... 23
Nominations confirmed..... 25
In the navy in 1826.—List of..... 449
In the navy in 1827.—List of..... 792
Minutes—Of the proceedings of a general court-martial in the case of Commodore David Porter 133 to 150, 304 to 329, 404 to 411
In the case of Commodore Chas. Stewart..... 491 to 521
In the case of Lieutenant Joshua R. Sands..... 603 to 610
Monroe, James.—Interrogatories proposed by Commodore David Porter to..... 387, 392
Answer to the interrogatories..... 393, 394, 395
Letter of, to Commodore David Porter..... 395, 396
(See President of the U. S.)
Montgomery, Alexander M.—Letters to Lieutenant John M. Gamble in relation to the captain of the ship "Seringapatam"..... 96, 98
Moorhead, Joseph—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Mountain, John.—Testimony before court-martial in the case of Commodore David Porter..... 164
Mull, Sailingmaster.—Expense of court-martial of..... 628
Mullings, John.—Replies to questions in relation to the Charleston bar..... 471
Muster roll—Of officers and crew carried as prisoners to Halifax from the frigate "Chesapeake".. 632
Myers, Joseph—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25

N.

Narraganset Bay, Rhode Island.—Report of a committee in relation to establishing a Navy yard on 636
Naval academy at Annapolis.—Resolutions of the legislature at Maryland for a..... 623
Naval constructors in 1826.—List of..... 458
In 1827—List of..... 807
Naval storekeepers in 1826.—List of..... 457
In 1827.—List of..... 807
Navy agents in 1826.—List of..... 457
In 1827.—List of..... 807
Navy Commissioners, reports and letters from—In relation to the quantity and kind of stores shipped from the United States for the use of the squadron in the Pacific..... 9
In relation to the shipment of slop clothing, &c., for the ship "Franklin"..... 10
On the use of cables, canvas and cordage manufactured of American hemp, &c..... 28
Estimate of appropriations for the navy for 1826..... 115
Estimate for the support of the office of, for the year 1826..... 123
Names, stations and salaries of persons employed in the office of the..... 123

Page.

Navy Commissioners, reports and letters from—In relation to the use of cotton, compared with flax, for cordage and canvas, and their relative price 622
On the cost of live oak timber and the cost of preserving the same 624
In relation to a breakwater at the Capes of the Delaware 643
In relation to the construction of docks for the preservation of vessels 702
List of names of the Board of, for 1827 780
Navy, increase of the—Report of committee on the annual 810
Navy pensioners—List of, in 1825 613
Navy pension fund—Statement of, for 1825 611
Navy—Register of officers of, for 1826 443
For 1827 780
Navy, Secretary of the, reports and letters from—In relation to provisions and stores furnished the squadron in the Pacific 9
Recommending the promotion of D. H. Mackey and sixty-six other passed midshipmen to the rank of lieutenant 24
In relation to the use of canvas, cables and cordage, made of hemp the growth of the U. S. 27
Opinion as to alterations in the organization of the navy 40

ACCOMPANYING PAPERS:

Letter of Fourth Auditor, with statements of traveling expenses paid to officers of the navy and marine corps 45, 46
Rules and regulations for the government of the recruiting service of the navy .. 46
Form of receipt for money for recruiting service 47, 48
Form of certificate for disbursements in recruiting service 48
Form of certificate in relation to deserters 48
Form of certificate of entry of seamen 48
Form of certificate of examination of seamen unfit for service 48
Form of surgeon's certificate for sound and healthy seamen 49
Form of circular to recruiting officers, in relation to the enlistment of seamen 49
Extract of a letter to Captain Isaac Hull, authorizing the carrying of specie, &c., belonging to American citizens, on board the national vessels 49
Exhibit showing the number of naval courts-martial ordered from May, 1821, to May, 1824, the places where held, the officers who composed them, &c 50
Statement of number of courts-martial in the marine corps, from November, 1821, to November, 1824, the stations where held, the officers who composed them, &c. 53
Register of desertions from the marine corps, from November, 1821, to October, 1824, the number taken, the number tried, and the sentence of the court, &c.. 59
Marines tried by court-martial for other offences than desertion, from 1st November, 1821, to 31st October, 1824, and sentence of the court 82
Copy of a general order, dated March 5, 1824, in relation to the arrest of officers within the United States 89
Letters of Lieut. Colonel Henderson, on the reorganization and increase of the marine corps 90, 91, 92
Memorial of officers of the marine corps, that the corps may be reorganized with the double character of marine infantry and marine artillery 93
Annual report, showing the condition of the navy in 1825 98

ACCOMPANYING PAPERS:

List of vessels in commission, and their stations 103
Letter of Commodore L. Warrington, in relation to the loss of the U. S. schooner Ferret, on the coast of Cuba 103
Letters of Commodore L. Warrington, in relation to piracies, and the distribution of the squadron in the Gulf of Mexico 103, 107, 109
Letters of Lieut. Commandant John D. Sloat, in relation to the capture of pirates in the harbor of Boca del Inferno 104, 105, 106
Letters of Jas. T. Atkinson, in relation to the same 104, 107
Letter of Miguel de la Torres, Captain General of the Island of Porto Rico, in relation to the same 105, 106
Letter of P. Scholten, in relation to the same 106
Letter of Lieutenant Commandant J. M'Keever, in relation to the same 107, 108
Extract of a letter from Commodore L. Warrington to the Secretary of the Navy, in relation to the same 109
Letter of the Secretary of the Navy to Commodore L. Warrington, removing the naval forces from Thompson's Island 109
Letter and order of the Secretary of War for the delivery of the fort of Barancas, near Pensacola, to the Navy Department 110
Letter of Secretary of the Navy to Captains W. Bainbridge, L. Warrington, and James Biddle, appointing them to select a site for a naval establishment at Pensacola 110
Report of Captains Bainbridge, Warrington and Biddle, on a site selected by them for a Navy yard at Pensacola 111
Letter of the Secretary of the Navy to the President, enclosing report in relation to a site for a Navy yard at Pensacola 111
Letters from Commodore John Rodgers in relation to the Mediterranean squadron 112
Letter from Commodore John Rodgers in relation to piracies in the Mediterranean sea, and relations with the Barbary powers 112

Page.

Navy, Secretary of the.—Reports, &c.—Accompanying papers.—Continued.
Letter of Captain Hull in relation to his operations on the coast of Chili and Peru, in the protection of American commerce against Spanish vessels-of-war.. 113, 114
List of deaths and resignations in the navy since January 1, 1825..... 115
Statement of expenditures for the support of the navy from January 1 to 30th September, 1825..... 115
Estimates for the support of the navy for 1826..... 117 to 122
Estimate of sum required for support of office of Navy Commissioners for 1826.... 123
Statement showing names, stations, &c., of pursers, in the office of Navy Commissioners..... 123
Statement of the progress made under the law for the gradual increase of the navy..... 124, 125
Statement showing the progress made under the law for building ten sloops-of-war. 125
Exhibit showing the names and force of the vessels of the United States, when and where built, &c..... 126
Statement of progress made, under the instructions of the Secretary of the Navy, in the sale of public vessels, stores, &c., on Lakes Erie, Ontario, and Champlain..... 127 to 130
Estimates of pay and subsistence of marine corps for 1826..... 130
Estimate of expenditures, in Quartermaster's department, of marine corps for 1826 130
Letter of the Secretary of the Navy in relation to the completion of sloops-of-war. 131
Report communicating proceedings and judgment of the courts-martial and of inquiry in relation to the employment of the squadron under Commodore Porter, for the suppression of piracy in the West Indies, &c..... 132
(See Porter, David, and Courts-martial.)
In relation to the mode and expense of employing a sloop-of-war in the exploration of the northwest coast of America..... 442
Transmitting copies of the register of officers of the navy for 1826..... 443
In relation to an examination of the harbors of Charleston, South Carolina, and St. Mary's, Georgia, with a view of establishing a Navy yard..... 465

ACCOMPANYING PAPERS:

Report of Master Commandant Lawrence Kearney, of survey of Charleston bar... 465
Extract from a report of James Ramage, United States navy, on the survey of the coast of Florida..... 469
Replies of M. Dulaney in relation to Charleston bar..... 470
Replies of John Mullings in relation to the same..... 471
Report of Jno. Robertson, navy agent at Charleston, in relation to the same..... 471
Letter of Thomas Bennett, chairman committee of citizens of Charleston, in relation to the same..... 473
Letter of Joseph Johnson and John Stoney in relation to the same..... 475
Letter of Charles P. May, offering his wharf as a suitable place for a Navy yard... 476
Letter of James Marsh in relation to the same..... 476
Report of Dr. George Lyon in relation to the health of the several positions in the harbor of Charleston, proposed as suitable sites for a Navy yard..... 477
Answers of J. Strohecker, in relation to the bar of Charleston..... 477
Letter of Joseph Johnson in relation to the price of labor at Charleston..... 479
Letter of James Marsh in relation to the naval facilities of Charleston..... 480
Letter of Thomas G. Priosleau in relation to the health of Charleston..... 481
Letter of William Roach in relation to the price of beef in Charleston..... 481
Paper in relation to the practical facilities of Charleston for naval purposes..... 481
Transmitting statements in relation to the navy pension fund in 1825..... 610

ACCOMPANYING PAPERS:

Statement of stocks on the books of the Treasury, to the credit of the navy pension fund, with the interest..... 611
Statement of bank stocks belonging to the navy pension fund.. 611
Statement of warrants drawn on account of the navy pension fund..... 612
List of navy pensions, January 1, 1826..... 613
List of widow pensioners, January 1, 1826..... 620
In relation to an experiment in the use of cotton, compared with flax, for cordage and canvas, and their relative price..... 622

ACCOMPANYING PAPER:

Report of Navy Commissioners on the subject..... 622
In relation to the probable cost of certain live oak timber, and the cost of preserving the same..... 624

ACCOMPANYING PAPER:

Letter of Navy Commissioners on the subject..... 624
With statement of pay and allowances of officers of the navy..... 626
With statement of expenses of courts-martial, from January, 1824, to February, 1826.. 627
Return of killed and wounded, and prisoners on board the frigate "Chesapeake," in an action with the British frigate "Shannon"..... 629
On additional naval force for the protection of commerce with Brazil and Buenos Ayres 638

ACCOMPANYING PAPERS:

Estimate of annual expense of a frigate of the first and second class, and a sloop-of-war..... 638, 645, 646

Page.

Navy, Secretary of the.—Reports, &c.—Accompanying papers—Continued.
Letter of John Reed and others in relation to the war between the governments of Brazil and La Plata 638, 647
Letter of T. H. Perkins, in relation to the same 639, 647
Letter of Robert Ralston, president chamber of commerce of Philadelphia, in relation to same 639, 647
Letter of W. Lorman, president chamber of commerce of Baltimore, in relation to the same 640, 648
Letters of Secretary of the Navy to H. R. Storrs 645
With instructions for the encouragement of vaccination in the navy 640

ACCOMPANYING PAPERS:

Letter of appointment to Dr. E. Judson 640, 641
Letters to Dr. E. Judson 641, 642
Instructions to captains and commanding officers of the navy 641
On the utility of a breakwater at the Capes of the Delaware to vessels of the navy ... 642

ACCOMPANYING PAPER:

Letter of Navy Commissioners on the subject 643
Transmitting correspondence on the course pursued by Commodore David Porter, in command of the squadron for the suppression of piracy in the West Indies 648

ACCCOMPANYING PAPERS:

Letters of Commodore Porter to the President 648
Letter of Secretary of the Navy to the President 649
Letters of Secretary of the Navy to Commodore Porter 652, 654, 655, 676
Letter in relation to private armed vessels of France and Spain entering ports of the United States 653
Letters of Don Hilario de y Salmon to the Secretary of State 664, 668
Letter of Miguel de la Torre to the Spanish consul 665
Letters of Secretary of the Navy to Commodore Porter 652, 663, 670
Letter of Commodore Porter to Secretary of the Navy in relation to the sentence of the court-martial in the case of Lieut. Kennon 672
Letter of the Secretary of State to the Secretary of the Navy in relation to an injury done to the brig "Hiram" by the ship "Eden," of the British navy, &c. 673, 680
Letter of H. U. Addington to the Secretary of State in relation to the same 673
Letter of Captain Lawrence to Commodore Owen in relation to the same 673
Letter of Sylvester Allen, master of the brig "Hiram," to Captain Lawrence ... 674
Letter of Captain Lawrence to Sylvanus Allen 674
Letter of Lieut. Gregory to the first lieutenant of the British ship-of-war "Eden," (a challenge) 647
Letter of Captain Lawrence to Commodore Porter, in relation to the same 675
Letter of Commodore Porter to Captain Lawrence 675
Letter of Captain Owen to Commodore Porter 676
Letter of the Secretary of the Navy to Lieut. F. H. Gregory 677
Letter of Lieut. F. H. Gregory to the Secretary of the Navy 677
Affidavit of Lieut. J. W. H. Ray, in relation to the injury done to the brig "Hiram" 678
Letter of Commodore Porter to the Secretary of the Navy in relation to the conduct of Lieut. Gregory, &c. 679, 681
Letter of Commodore Porter to Commodore E. W. R. C. Owen, of the British navy 679
Letter of the President of the United States to the Secretary of the Navy in relation to the conduct of Lieut. Gregory 680
Return of officers attached to the expedition under Commodore Porter for the suppression of piracy 680
List of officers who held acting appointments in the West Indies during the years 1823 and 1824 683
Miscellaneous letters of Commodore Porter to the Secretary of the Navy 684, 687, 689 690, 693, 694, 696, 997, 698
Letter of Captain Finch in relation to the health of Thompson's Island 688
List of vessels of the West India squadron, their commanders, &c 689
Letters of Lieut. Jas. M. McIntosh, with list of the sick at Thompson's Island, West Indies 692, 693, 695
In relation to the pay and emoluments of the paymaster and quartermaster of the marine corps 699
On the construction of docks for the preservation and repair of United States vessels .. 700

ACCOMPANYING PAPER:

Letter of W. Bainbridge, Navy Commissioner 702
In relation to the tenure by which the site of the Navy yard at Philadelphia is held, and the amount of taxes paid thereon 707

ACCOMPANYING PAPERS:

Letters of George Harrison to the Secretary of the Navy 707, 708, 710, 718, 719
Letter and statements of A. J. Dallas, district attorney 707, 708
Petition of freeholders of Southwark 708
Abstract sum paid by navy agent at Philadelphia, for taxes on navy yard property 709
Letter of Thomas Turner to Richard Rush 710
Letter of Richard Rush to Thomas Turner 710

Page.

Navy, Secretary of the.—Reports, &c.—Accompanying papers—Continued.
Letter of A. J. Dallas, district attorney, to Secretary of the Navy..... 710
Letter of Samuel Humphreys..... 711
Letter of W. Jones, Secretary of the Navy, to A. J. Dallas..... 711
Letter of A. J. Dallas to W. Jones, Secretary of the Navy..... 711
Representation of A. J. Dallas to Governor of Pennsylvania..... 712
An act to suspend the opening of streets, lanes and alleys, in the district of Southwark, Philadelphia..... 713
Extract of a letter of the Secretary of the Navy to Geo. Harrison..... 713
Miscellaneous letters..... 714
Letters of Secretary of the Navy to George Harrison..... 718, 720
Annual report showing the condition of the navy in 1826..... 726

ACCOMPANYING PAPERS:

List of vessels in commission, their commanders, and stations..... 729
Correspondence relative to the removal of the remains of Commodore Oliver H. Perry..... 730
Copies and extracts from the correspondence of Commodore Jno. Rodgers, in relation to piracies..... 732
Copies and extracts from the correspondence of Commodore Isaac Hull; same.... 735
List of merchant vessels boarded by Commodore I. Hull, from March 30, 1824, to Dec., 1825..... 737
Letters of Commodore I. Hull to the Secretary of the Navy..... 743
Letter of Commodore Warrington to the Secretary of the Navy..... 745
Correspondence in relation to the cruise of the sloop-of-war "Lexington," for the protection of the fisheries..... 745
Papers in relation to the Greek ship "Liberator"..... 746
Papers in relation to the agency for liberated Africans..... 748
List of deaths in the navy since Dec. 2, 1825..... 761
List of resignations in the navy since Dec. 2, 1825..... 761
Estimates for the naval service, for the year 1827..... 762
Statement of pay and rations, and other allowances, to officers and others, at the navy yards and hospitals..... 765
Statement of number, pay, &c., of officers for five receiving vessels..... 771
Statement of pay, &c., of officers attached to recruiting stations, &c..... 771
Exhibit of officers waiting orders and furlough..... 771
Estimate of provisions required for the navy yards for 1827..... 772
Estimate for the improvement of navy yards..... 772
Exhibit of force of the vessels of the United States, and the vessels building under the law for the gradual increase of the navy..... 772
Estimates for Navy Commissioners' office..... 773
Estimates for the marine corps..... 774
With the names of the officers and seamen of the ketch "Intrepid," in the attack on the frigate Philadelphia, at Tripoli, in 1804..... 776

ACCOMPANYING PAPERS:

Letter of the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury..... 776
List of officers and seamen who volunteered to destroy the frigate Philadelphia.. 776
List of officers on board the "Intrepid," living Dec., 1826..... 778
List of officers on board the "Intrepid," who had died since 16th February, 1804, with the names of the widows and the number of children..... 778
Miscellaneous letters on the same subject..... 778
Transmitting copies of the Register of officers of the navy for 1827..... 780
Transmitting report of L. Baldwin of examinations and surveys of sites for the establishment of dry docks..... 810
Navy yard at Baltimore, Maryland.—Report of committee on the expediency of establishing a 636
Memorial of mayor and council of Baltimore for a..... 624
Report of a committee on the expediency of a..... 636
Navy yard at Charleston, in the State of South Carolina—Letter Secretary of the Navy 465
Report of Commander L. Kearney of his survey of Charleston bar..... 465
Replies of M. Dulaney in relation to Charleston bar..... 470
Replies of John Mullings in relation to the same..... 471
Report of J. Robertson, navy agent, in relation to the same..... 471
Letter of Thos. Bennett, chairman committee of citizens of Charleston, in relation to the same..... 473
Letters of Jos. Johnson and Jno. Stoney in relation to the same..... 475
Letter of Chas. G. May, offering his wharf for a navy yard..... 476
Letter of Jas. Marsh—same..... 476, 781
Letter of Dr. George Logan in relation to the health of the several positions offered for a navy yard..... 477
Answers of Jno. Strohecker in relation to the Charleston bar..... 477, 478, 479
Letter of Jos. Johnson with statement of the prices of labor at Charleston..... 479
Letter of Thos. G. Priosleau in relation to the health of Charleston..... 481
Letter of W. Roach, in relation to the price of beef at Charleston..... 481
Paper upon the practical facilities of Charleston for naval purposes..... 481
Report of committee (Senate) on the expediency of establishing..... 636
Navy yard on Narraganset bay, in the State of Rhode Island.—Report of a committee on the expediency of establishing a..... 637

Page.

Navy yard at Pensacola, in the State of Florida.—Appointment of Captains Bainbridge, Warrington and Biddle to select a site for the establishment of a..... 110
Report of commissioners on a site for a..... 111
Report of commissioners communicated to the President, and his approval..... 111
Navy yard at St. Mary's, in the State of Georgia.—Letter Secretary of the Navy in relation to a.... 465
Report of Commander L. Kearney of his survey of St. Mary's bar..... 465, 468
Extract of a report of Jas. Ramage of the survey of the coast of Florida..... 469
Remarks relative to the defence of St. Mary's..... 469
Navy yard on the river Thames, in the State of Connecticut.—Report of committee on the expediency of establishing a..... 637
Navy yard at Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania.—Report of the Secretary of the Navy on the tenure by which the site is held, the amount of taxes paid thereon, &c..... 707
Newell, Lieut. Thomas M.—Letter in relation to the capture of pirates in the West Indies..... 265
New Hampshire—List of navy pensioners in State of, January 1, 1826..... 614
List of widow pensioners in State of, January 1, 1826..... 621
New Jersey—List of navy pensioners in State of, January 1, 1826..... 617
Newman, William D.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
New York—Application of merchants and citizens of, for protection to the trade with Cuba against pirates..... 22
Extract of a letter of manufacturers of, respecting the cultivation and manufacture of hemp..... 36
List of navy pensioners in State of, January 1, 1826..... 615
List of widow pensioners in State of, January 1, 1826..... 620
Nicholson, William B.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
North Carolina—List of navy pensioners in State of, January 1, 1826..... 619
List of widow pensioners in State of, January 1, 1826..... 622
Northwest coast of America.—Report of the Secretary of the Navy in relation to the mode and expense of exploring the..... 442

O.

Objections—Of the counsel of Commodore Porter to the second charge against him, tried by a court-martial..... 377
Officers of the navy on the Pacific ocean.—Message of the President declining to furnish documents in relation to the..... 26
Statement of traveling and other allowances to..... 40
Not to be arrested within the United States without the sanction of the Navy Department..... 89
Officers—Of the West India squadron.—Letter of Commodore Porter in relation to charge against the..... 440
Of the marine corps, in 1826..... 456
Of the marine corps, in 1827..... 805
Of the navy, in 1826.—Register of..... 443
Of the navy, in 1827.—Register of..... 780
Of the navy.—Statement of pay and allowances to the.—Report of the Secretary of the Navy..... 625
Attached to the expedition under Commodore David Porter, for the suppression of piracy..... 681
Who held active appointments in the West India squadron in 1823 and 1824..... 683
Ogden, Lieutenant Henry W.—Testimony before court-martial for the trial of Commodore Stewart. 502, 506, 507
(See Court-Martial of Commodore Stewart.)
Ohio—List of navy pensioners in State of, January 1, 1826..... 619
Opinion—Of the Secretary of the Navy as to the alterations in the organization of the navy, &c. 40
Of the court-martial in the case of Commodore David Porter..... 327
Of the court-martial in the case of Commodore Charles Stewart..... 519
Of the court-martial in the case of Lieutenant Joshua R. Sands..... 604, 607
Of the court-martial in the case of Lieutenant Wm. M. Hunter..... 608
Organization of the navy.—Opinion of the Secretary of the Navy in relation to alterations in the.. 40
O'Sullivan, John.—Letter to Commodore Stewart, asking protection for his vessel on the coast of Chili and Peru..... 565
Affidavit of, in relation to the cargo of the ship "Canton"..... 578

P.

Pacific ocean.—Message of the President, declining to furnish documents in relation to the conduct of the officers of the navy on the..... 26
Paillet, Captain—(See "Harriet & Lucy.")
"Palmyra."—(See "Pancheta.")
"Pancheta."—Reports in relation to the capture of the Spanish privateer..... 192, 195, 198
Passed midshipmen—To be lieutenants in the navy and reasons therefor.—Message of the President nominating certain..... 23
List of passed midshipmen, with the years in which they passed, from 1820 to 1822, and the order in which they are proposed to be promoted, &c..... 24

Page.

Passed midshipmen.—Resolutions of the Senate confirming the nomination of D. H. Mackey and sixty-six others, passed midshipmen, to be lieutenants in the navy..... 25
In the navy in 1826.—List of..... 449
Patented improvements in ship building.—Report committee on a claim of J. T. & J. L. Sullivan for compensation for the use of..... 721
Patterson, Daniel T.—Letters in relation to piracy committed on the American brig "Belisarius".. 291
Letters in relation to the capture of the American brig "Harriet and Lucy"..... 292
Pay and allowances of officers of the navy.—Statement of..... 625
And emoluments of the paymaster and quartermaster of the marine corps in 1824-25.—Message of the President in relation to..... 698
Paymaster in the marine corps.—Message of the President of the United States in relation to the pay and emoluments of the..... 698
Payne, Jott S.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Peaco—Principal agent of the United States for liberated Africans under the act of 1819.—Letters from Dr. John W..... 748
"Pearl," brig.—(See J. P. Prevost and Commodore Chas. Stewart.)
Pearson, George F.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Peck, E.—(See Court-martial of Commodore Stewart.)
Pennsylvania—List of navy pensioners in State of, January 1, 1826..... 617
List of widow pensioners in State of, January 1, 1826..... 620
Pensacola.—Appointment of a commission to select a site for a naval establishment at..... 110
Report of Captains Bainbridge, Warrington, and Biddle, on a site selected by them for a naval station at..... 111
Report communicated to the President and his approval..... 111
Letter to Commodore Porter in relation to the survey of Tampa Bay, Key West, Dry Tortugas, and..... 658, 559
Pension—To Erastus Loomis.—Report of committee on claim for a..... 698
To Seth Townsend.—Report of committee on claim for an increase of..... 705
To Francis Hayne.—Report of committee on claim for an increase of..... 705
To Frances Gamble, widow of Lieut. Francis R. Gamble.—Report of committee on claim for a..... 706
To William Thompson.—Report of committee on the claim for a..... 780
Pensioners of the navy for 1825.—List of..... 613
Pension fund in 1825.—Statement of..... 611
Perkins, T. H.—Letter in relation to protection of commerce on the coast of Brazil..... 639, 647
Pero, Rafael.—Letter to Commodore Stewart in relation to the Spanish privateer "Quintanilla".. 602
Perry, Captain Oliver H.—Report of committee on the propriety of removing the remains of, to the United States..... 721
Report of the Secretary of the Navy, with correspondence respecting the removal of the remains of..... 730
Peru—Letter of Commodore Stewart to the commander-in-chief of the army of, in relation to the seizure of the ship "Arab"..... 559
Letter of Commodore Stewart in relation to the piratical brig "Quintanilla," addressed to the Viceroy of..... 576, 577
Decree in relation to foreigners and neutral vessels visiting..... 598
Pettigru, Thomas.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Phelps, Samuel B.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Philadelphia, chamber of commerce of.—Letter of president in relation to the protection to commerce on the coast of Brazil..... 639, 647
Report of the Secretary of the Navy on the tenure by which the site of the Navy yard is held, and the amount of taxes paid thereon to the city and county of..... 707
Philadelphia, frigate.—Report of the Secretary of the Navy, with names of officers and seamen of the ketch "Intrepid," in the attack at Tripoli on the..... 776
(See Susan Decatur.)
Phillips, Captain Isaac.—Report of committee, on application to be restored to his rank in the navy 464
"Pilot."—Letters in relation to the capture of the pirate..... 213, 223, 240
Pinkham, A. B.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Pinkham, Acting Lieutenant Alexander B.—Letter in relation to the convoy of American vessels in the West India seas, and the death of Lieutenant N. L. Montgomery..... 274
Pinkney, R. S.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Piracy.—Application of merchants and citizens of New York, for protection to the trade with Cuba against..... 22
Affidavit of George Brown, of murders and atrocities by pirates near the Island of Cuba..... 26
Letters of Lieutenant Commanding Sloat in relation to the capture of pirates in the harbor of "Boca del Inferno" and the West Indies..... 104, 105, 106
Letter from Commodore L. Warrington, in relation to the same..... 107, 109
Letter of Lieutenant Commanding I. M'Keever, in relation to the same..... 108
Act authorizing an additional naval force for the suppression of piracy..... 174
Letter of the Secretary of the Navy to Hon. B. W. Crowinshield, in relation to the suppression of..... 183

Page.

Piracy.—Report of the Committee on Foreign Relations in relation to..... 184, 185
Letter of Secretary of the Navy to the President, in relation to..... 185
Report of Committee on Naval Affairs (House) on the same..... 186
Report of the Committee of Foreign Relations (House) on the same..... 187, 188
Correspondence with Spanish authorities in relation to..... 191, 192
Instructions to Commodore David Porter for the suppression of 203, 235, 236, 237, 238, 381
General instructions of Navy Department in relation to the same..... 211
Letters in relation to the capture of the pirate "Pilot," and brig "Two Brothers," by pirates 213
Letters of Secretary of the Navy to Commodore Porter, in relation to carrying specie, and 215, 216, 217
List of schooners purchased by Commodore Porter for the suppression of..... 222
Letters of Commodore Porter to the Secretary of the Navy in relation to..... 222 to 235
Report of proceedings of squadron in West Indies for the suppression of..... 228, 229
Orders and instructions of Commodore Porter to the officers of the squadron for the suppression of ..... 238 to 278, 300, 374 to 377
Reports of officers of the squadron to Commodore Porter..... 238 to 278, 301, 302
Correspondence between Commodore Porter and the authorities of the West India islands in relation to ..... 278 to 282
Correspondence between Commodore Porter and the Captain General of Cuba in relation to..... 282 to 286
Correspondence between Commodore Porter and British officers in the West Indies in relation to ..... 286 to 290
Correspondence between Commodore Porter and various persons..... 290, 299, 300
Extracts from and references to messages of the President, and reports of the Secretary of the Navy, in relation to transactions of the squadron in the West Indies.. 363 to 366
Act to punish the crime of..... 419
Report of committee (Senate) in relation to the correspondence of Commodore Porter on the subject of..... 486
Letters of Commodore Stewart to Viceroy of Peru, in relation to the piratical brig "Quintanilla"..... 577
Correspondence on the course of Commodore David Porter, in command of the squadron for the suppression of..... 648
Officers attached to the expedition under Commodore David Porter for the suppression of 681
Extracts from the correspondence of Commodore Jno. Rodgers in relation to..... 732
Extract of a letter of Commodore Warrington in relation to..... 745

Pirates.—(See Piracy.)

Piratical vessels—Captured by vessels of the U. S..... 189

Platt, Lieutenant Charles T.—Testimony before the court-martial in the case of Commodore David Porter.. 133, 134, 135, 139, 163, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 316, 404, 405, 406, 407, 410
Letters in relation to piracies in the West Indies..... 143, 380, 383

Porto Rico, Governor of.—Letters in relation to the fitting out of privateers by Spanish authority, and the capture of American vessels..... 200, 201, 203
Privateers fitted out from ports of..... 203
Correspondence between Commodore Porter and the Captain General of, in relation to the suppression of piracy..... 278 to 282
Letter of Governor of, to Commander Sloat in relation to pirates in the "Boco del Inferno"..... 105, 106, 438, 439
Letter to the Spanish consul in the U. S. in relation to Commodore Porter's conduct at Foxardo..... 665

Portsmouth, New Hampshire.—Message of President of the U. S. of an examination of a site for a dry dock for the use of the navy at..... 811
Estimated cost of a dry dock..... 823

Porter, Commodore.—Extract of journal of, in relation to the capture of the "Seringapatam" in the South seas..... 95, 96
Letter to Lieutenant Gamble, U. S. marines, in relation to the capture of the "Seringapatam"..... 96
Letter recommending Lieutenant Gamble, of the United States marines, to the Navy Department for his bravery in the capture of the ship "Seringapatam"..... 96
Exceptions to the formation of the court..... 146, 412
Argument and authority in support of the objections taken by counsel of Commodore Porter to second charge against him in his trial before a general court-martial..... 329 to 334
Answer of the judge advocate..... 334 to 341
Defence against charges preferred against him and tried in the court-martial.... 342 to 363
Exceptions to the judge advocate appointed to conduct his trial befort a court-martial.. 370
Charges and specifications against..... 372, 373
Address of Commodore Porter to the court-martial..... 146, 374, 378, 408, 412, 414, 415
Letters in relation to the affair at Foxardo..... 418, 434, 435, 436
Defence against charges against him in his transactions at Foxardo..... 419
Report of committee (Senate) on the court-martial of, and correspondence in relation to the suppression of piracy..... 486
Letter from, relative to charges against officers of the West India squadron..... 440
Answer of Thomas Randall to same..... 441
Expense of court-martial of..... 628
Correspondence on the course of, in the suppression of piracy in the West Indies.... 648
Letter to the President in relation to the conduct of the Secretary of the Navy..... 648
Letter of the Secretary of the Navy to the President, in answer to letter of Commodore Porter..... 649

Page.

Porter, Commodore David.—Letter of Secretary of the Navy to Commodore Porter in relation to the suppression of piracy in the West Indies..... 652 to 663
Letter to the Secretary of the Navy in relation to the sentence of the court-martial in the case of Lieut. Kennon..... 672
(See Courts-martial.)
Prentiss, John E.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
President of the United States—Messages from, on the manner of sending supplies of provisions, &c., to the squadron in the Pacific ocean..... 9

ACCOMPANYING PAPERS:

Letter of Secretary of the Navy..... 9
Letter of Navy Commissioners..... 9, 10
Exhibit showing kind and quantity of supplies shipped, &c..... 10
Letter of the Fourth Auditor in relation to bills drawn on the Navy Department by navy agents and officers in South America, &c..... 11, 12, 13, 20
Statement of provisions, stores, &c., shipped from the United States to ports in South America..... 14, 15
Statement of provisions, stores, &c., purchased in South America for vessels of the U. S., in the Pacific..... 16
Relative to amounts of settlements and delinquincies of prize agents..... 20

ACCOMPANYING PAPERS:

Letter of the Secretary of the Navy..... 20
Letter of the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury..... 20
Abstract of balances due from prize agents, March 1, 1823, &c..... 21
Nominating D. H. Mackey and sixty-six others, passed midshipmen, to be lieutenants in the navy..... 23

ACCOMPANYING PAPERS:

Letter of Secretary of the Navy in relation to the promotion of D. H. Mackey and others to the rank of lieutenant..... 23
List of passed midshipmen, with the years in which they passed, the order in which they are proposed to be promoted, &c..... 24, 25
Communicating to the House of Representatives his reasons for declining to furnish the House with documents relating to the conduct of officers of the navy in the Pacific ocean..... 26
In relation to the use of American canvas, cables and cordage in the navy..... 27
In relation to piratical depredations..... 185
Communicating proceedings of courts-martial, correspondence, &c., relating to the conduct of Commodore Charles Stewart, and that of Lieutenants Joshua R. Sands and Wm. M. Hunter..... 487
(See Courts-martial.)
In relation to the expenses of courts-martial from 1824 to 1826..... 627
In relation to the pay and emoluments of the paymaster and quartermaster of the marine corps..... 698

ACCOMPANYING PAPERS;

Letter of the Secretary of the Navy to the President..... 699
Letter of the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury..... 699
Letter of Lieutenant Colonel A. Henderson 699
Letter of the paymaster of the marine corps..... 700
Statement of number of officers, &c., of the marine corps in 1825..... 700
Statement of pay and emoluments of the paymaster and the quartermaster of the marine corps 700
On an examination of sites for the establishment of dry docks for the navy..... 810

ACCOMPANYING PAPERS:

Letter of the Secretary of the Navy to the President..... 810
Report of L. Baldwin of an examination and survey of sites for the establishment of dry docks for the navy..... 811
Prevost, J. B.—Letter to Lieutenant Henry in relation to the sailing of neutral vessels from the port of Lima, South America..... 522
Letter to Commodore Charles Stewart in relation to the blockade of Arica, and the seizure of American vessels in Chili, &c..... 562, 563, 564
Priosleau, Thomas G.—Letter in relation to the health of Charleston, South Carolina..... 481
Prisoners—Of the frigate "Chesapeake" in an action with the "Shannon."—List of the killed, wounded and..... 629
Privateers—Fitted out by Spanish authorities from the Island of Porto Rico.—Letters in relation to the..... 103, 194
Capture of American vessels by..... 193, 195
List of American vessels captured by..... 197
Letters to the Governor of the Island of Porto Rico in relation to the fitting out and equipment of, by Spanish authorities..... 195
List of names and force of privateers fitted out from ports of the Island of Porto Rico.. 203
Prize agents.—Amount of settlements and delinquencies of..... 20
Abstract of balances due from and amount refunded on March 1, 1823, by..... 21
Report of committee on a claim for repayment of expenses incurred as..... 706

Page.

Prize money—For capturing an enemy's vessel.—Report of Committee on Naval Affairs on memorial of John M. Gamble for compensation, or 95
Report of Committee on Naval Affairs on claims of Nathaniel Bostick for 482
Report of Committee on Naval Affairs on claim of Mrs. Susan Decatur, widow of Commodore Stephen Decatur, for 483
Memorial of Mrs. Susan Decatur for 484
Report of committee on claim of the administrator of Lieutenant Thomas G. Tillinghast for 629
Report of committee on claim of Lieutenant J. McKeever for 704
Report of committee on claim of Thomas Douty for 810
Protection to commerce with Brazil and Buenos Ayres.—Letter of the Secretary of the Navy in relation to 638
Report of committee 644
Provisions and clothing—To the United States squadron on the Pacific ocean.—Manner of sending 9
Report of the Fourth Auditor, with statement of bills drawn on the Navy Department for 11, 12
Statement of provisions, stores and supplies shipped to ports in South America for vessels-of-war of the United States in the Pacific 14
Statement of provisions and stores, &c., purchased in South America for the use of the United States vessels in the Pacific 16
Prunier, William—Letters in relation to the ship "Canton" 579, 580, 581
Pursers in the navy in 1826.—List of 448
In 1827.—List of 791

Q.

Quartermaster in the marine corps.—Message of the President in relation to the pay and emoluments of the 698
Quilca, South America.—Letter of citizens of the United States to Commodore Stewart in relation to protection, &c 583
"Quintanilla."—Letter of Commodore Stewart to the Viceroy of Peru in relation to the piratical brig 577
Letters of G. Valdes, Jose de la Serna and Rafael Pero in relation to the 601

R.

Ralston, Robert, president of the Philadelphia chamber of commerce.—Lettter in relation to protection to commerce on the coast of Brazil, &c 639, 647
Ramage, Lieut. James.—Extract of a letter in relation to Spanish privateers 193, 194
Extract from a report of his survey of the coast of Florida 469
Expense of court-martial of 628
Ramirez, Juan.—(See Courts-martial—Commodore Stewart.)
Randall, Thomas.—Testimony before the court-martial for the trial of Commodore David Porter 150, 151
Letter in relation to the trial of Commodore Porter 221
Letter relative to a communication to the Senate, from Commodore Porter, in relation to charges against the officers of the West India squadron 441
Report of committee on the same 486
Randolph, Victor M.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy 23
Nomination confirmed 25
Rank in the navy.—Report of committee on application of Captain Samuel Angus, to be restored to his 460
Report of committee on application of Captain Isaac Phillips to be restored to his 464
Ray, Lieut. Jas. W. H.—Certificate in relation to the injury done to the American brig Hiram, in the harbor of Havana 678
Recruiting service of the navy.—Rules and regulations for the government of the 46, 49
Form of return of money received for 47, 48
Form of certificate of purser, for advances made to the officer engaged in the 48
Circular to officers engaged in the recruiting service, in relation to the enlistment of improper persons 49
Reed, John, and others.—In relation to protection to commerce on the coast of Brazil 638, 647
Register.—Of officers of the navy for 1826 443
For 1827 780
Of officers of the marine corps, for 1826 456
For 1827 805
Remarks—Of Commodore David Porter, before a court-martial 146, 147, 374, 378, 408, 412, 414, 415
Of Commodore Charles Stewart, before a court-martial 584
Remuneration for a method of securing decks and sides of vessels.—Report of committee on 623
Reorganization of the marine corps.—Letters of Lieut. Colonel Henderson on the subject of .. 90, 91, 92
Memorial of officers of the marine corps on same 93
And increase of the marine corps.—Report of committee on the 722
Resignations in the navy—Since 1st January, 1825.—List of 115
Since December 2, 1826 761
"Reuben and Eliza."—Report of Commandant L. Kearney, of outrages committed on the American vessel 246
Rhode Island.—Report of committee on the expediency of establishing a naval station on Narragansett Bay 636
List of navy pensioners in State of, January 1, 1826 615

Page.

Ridgeley, Captain Charles G.—Testimony before the court-martial for the trial of Commodore Stewart 505
Ridgeway, Lieut. Ebenezer.—Testimony before court-martial for the trial of Commodore Stewart.. 502
Letter to Commodore Stewart..... 527
Testimony before the court-martial in the case of Commodore David Porter... 162, 322
Letter in relation to the suppression of piracy..... 267
Ritchie, Robert—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Ritchie, Lieutenant Robert.—Testimony before the court-martial in the case of Commodore David Porter 312
Roach, William.—Letter in relation to the price of beef in Charleston, South Carolina 481
Robertson, John, navy agent at Charleston, South Carolina.—Replies to questions in relation to the Charleston bar..... 471
Rodgers, John.—(See Navy Commissioners.)
Rodgers, Commodore John.—Letters in relation to the operations of the Mediterranean squadron, and the relations between the United States and the Barbary powers..... 112
Letter in relation to the health of the West India squadron, &c..... 176, 178
Copies and extracts from correspondence, in relation to piracies in the eastern Archipelago, under the Greek flag..... 732
Rodgers, William T.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy 23
Nomination confirmed 25
Rudd, John—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy 23
Nomination confirmed 25
Rules and regulations—For the government of the recruiting service of the navy..... 46
Rutledge, Edward C.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed 25

S.

Sailingmasters in the navy in 1827.—List of..... 803
Sailmakers in the navy in 1826.—List of..... 456
In 1827.—List of 805
Salmon, Don Hilario y.—Letter to the Secretary of State, in relation to the conduct of Commodore Porter at Foxardo..... 664
Sanderson, Francis—Nominated to be a lieutenant of the navy 23
Nomination confirmed 25
San Martin, in relation to neutral vessels and foreigners visiting South American ports.—Decree of 598
Sands, Lieutenant Joshua R.—Testimony before court-martial for the trial of Commodore Stewart 508, 508
Letters to Commodore Stewart in relation to his confinement on board the frigate Franklin, &c... 532
Letter of Commodore Stewart, for the arrest of 559
Opinion of the court for the trial of 604, 607
Charges and specifications against 605
Address to the court-martial..... 605
Defence against charges preferred against him..... 606
Letter Secretary of the Navy in relation to the opinion of the court-martial on the charges against him..... 607
Expense of court-martial of..... 628
(See Courts-martial.)
Saunders, J. L.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed 25
Sawyer, Lieutenant.—Expense of court-martial of 628
Scott, Merritt S.—Nominated to be a lieutenant of the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed 25
Seaton, William W.—Testimony of, before the court-martial in the case of Commodore Porter. 320, 323
Secretary of the Navy.—(See Navy.)
"Seringapatam."—(See John M. Gamble.)
Settlements and delinquencies of prize agents.—Amounts of..... 20
Shannon, frigate.—(See Chesapeake.)
Ship building.—Report committee on claim for compensation for use of patented improvements in 721
Shubrick, Irvine—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy 23
Nomination confirmed 25
Simpson, John.—Testimony before the court-martial in the case of Commodore David Porter 321
Sites for the establishment of dry docks.—Message of the President United States, on an examination of 810
Skinner, Lieutenant Charles W.—Testimony before the court-martial in the case of Commodore David Porter..... 158, 159
Letter in relation to the capture of pirates in the West Indies..... 255
Slave trade—Suppression of.—(See Piracy.)
Letter of Commodore Rodgers in relation to the suppression of the..... 177, 178
Laws of the United States prohibiting the carrying on of the..... 204 to 211
Instructions for officers commanding cruising vessels, in relation to the 211, 235, 236, 237 238
General instructions of Commodore Porter, to the squadron, for the suppression of 374 to 377
Correspondence in relation to Africans liberated, under the act of 1819, from on board vessels engaged in the..... 748

Page.

Slave vessels.—Report of committee on claim of Lieutenant McKeever, for prize money for capturing. 704
Slidell, Alexander—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy 23
Nomination confirmed 25
Sloat, Lieutenant Commandant.—Letters in relation to the capture of pirates in the harbor of "Boca del Inferno," &c. 104, 105, 106, 252
Letters in relation to depredations by pirates of Foxardo, &c. .... 431 to 433, 437, 438, 439
Sloops-of-war.—Statement showing progress made under the law for building 125
Letter of the Secretary of the Navy in relation to the completion of certain 131
Slop clothing for the ship Franklin.—Letter of John Rodgers in relation to the shipment of the.... 10
Letter of the Fourth Auditor in relation to the freight on the 20
Small stores lost by the capture of the sloop-of-war Wasp.—Report of committee on claim for purser's 132
Smith, Captain.—Expense of court-martial of 628
Smith, Eliphalet.—Testimony before the court-martial for the trial of Commodore Charles Stewart. 517, 518, 519
Smith, Jesse—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy 23
Nomination confirmed 25
Smith, John H.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy 24
Nomination confirmed 25
Southard, Samuel L.—(See Navy, Secretary of.)
South Carolina.—List of navy pensions in State of, January 1, 1826 619
List of widow pensioners in State of, January 1, 1826..... 622
South Carolina—Navy yard at Charleston. (See Navy Yards.)
Spanish privateers.—(See Privateers.)
Specie and other articles permitted to be carried on board public vessels.—Extract of a letter to Captain Isaac Hull..... 49
Specie in vessels-of-war of the United States.—Letters in relation to the transportation of 214, 215, 216, 227, 229, 230
Spence, Captain R. T.—Letters in relation to the capture of the Spanish privateer "Panchita," and the fitting out of privateers by Spanish authority..... 195, 197
Squadron on the Pacific ocean.—Manner of sending supplies of provisions and clothing to the..... 9
Report of the Fourth Auditor, showing the bills drawn on the Navy Department for provisions and clothing sent to the..... 11
Statement of provisions, stores, &c., shipped from the United States to the..... 14
Statement of provisions, stores, &c., purchased in South America for the vessels of the United States in the..... 16
State, Secretary of.—Letter enclosing paper in relation to the suppression of piracy. (See Francisco de Zea Bermuda.)..... 189
Letter to Secretary of the Navy, and to Don Hilario de Rivas y Salmon, in relation to the conduct of Commodore Porter at Foxardo..... 664
Letter in relation to the injury done to the American brig "Hiram" by the British ship "Eden" in the harbor of Havana, &c. 673, 680
Letter to Mr. Addington on the same subject..... 676
Stevens, Commandant Thomas H.—Testimony before the court-martial of Commodore David Porter 157
St. Mary's, Georgia, and Charleston, South Carolina, for a navy yard.—Report of Secretary of the Navy of an examination of the harbors of..... 465, 469
Report of committee on the expediency of establishing navy yards at 636
(See Navy yards.)
Stewart, Commodore Charles.—(See Courts-martial.)
Letters to the Secretary of the Navy 487, 488, 540, 566, 567, 568, 578
Charges and specifications against 489
Letter to the ward room officers of the ship "Franklin," 528
Letter of appointment to command of the ship "Franklin," &c..... 538
Defence of Commodore Stewart against ch rges upon which he was tried by court-martial 540
Letters and orders to officers of the navy..... 557, 558, 559, 560
Letter for the arrest of Lieutenant J. R. Sands..... 559
Letter to J. B. Prevost, in relation to the seizure of vessels of the United States by the government of Chili..... 562, 563, 564
Letter in relation to the admission of "Madrid" on board the ship "Franklin," by Mrs. Stewart..... 565
Address to the court-martial..... 584
Expense of court-martial of..... 628
Letters to the Supreme Director of Chili..... 569
Letters to Juan Ramirez, commander-in-chief of the Chilian navy..... 570, 571
Letters to the minister of state of Peru..... 572, 573
Letters to the commanders of the army of Chili and Peru 873, 874, 875
Stewart, David R.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy 23
Nomination confirmed 25
Stewart, Mrs. Delia T.—(See Courts-martial—Commodore Stewart.)
Letter of the Countess of Valle Ermosa to 566
Interrogatories and answers in relation to the Spaniard, Madrid..... 609
Stewart, Robert R.—Letter in relation to depredations on American commerce by pirates..... 298
Stoney, John, and Joseph. Johnson.—Letters in relation to suitable sites for Navy yard at Charleston, South Carolina 475
Storekeepers in 1826.—List of naval 457
Stores—Shipped from the United States for vessels in the Pacific, &c.—Statement of kind and quantity of..... 10
Report of Fourth Auditor, with statement of bills drawn on Navy Department for ... 11, 12

Page.

Stores.—Statement of provisions and supplies shipped to ports in South America 14
Statement of provisions, &c., purchased in South America for the use of vessels of the United States..... 16
Progress made in executing the instructions of the Secretary of the Navy, for the sale of public vessels and stores on Lakes Erie, Ontario, and Champlain..... 127 to 130
Strohecker, John.—Answers to questions in relation to the bar at Charleston, South Carolina..... 477
Sullivan, John, Thomas, and John L.—Report of committee on claim for compensation for the use of improvements in ship building..... 721
Supplies—Of provisions and clothing to United States squadron on the Pacific ocean.—Manner of sending..... 9
Shipped from the United States for the use of vessels-of-war in the Pacific.—Statement of kind and quantity of..... 10
Of provisions, clothing, &c., for vessels in the Pacific.—Report of the Fourth Auditor, showing the bills drawn on the Navy Department for..... 11, 12
Statement of articles shipped from the United States to ports in South America, for the vessels in the Pacific 14
Statement of provisions, stores, &c., purchased in South America for the use of the United States vessels in the Pacific..... 16
Surgeons in the navy in 1826.—List of..... 447
In 1827.—List of..... 789
Surgeons' mates in the navy in 1826.—List of..... 448
In 1827 —List of 790
Survey of the coast.—Report of committee on claim of E. L. Young, for expenses of sickness contracted in the..... 628

T.

Tallmadge, Benjamin—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Tampa Bay.—Letter of the Secretary of the Navy in relation to the survey of..... 658, 659
Taylor, William, U. S. consul.—Letter in relation to the robbery of the brig "Cato" and the schooner "Leader"..... 290
Thames.—Report of a committee on the expediency of establishing a Navy yard on the river 636
Thompson's Island.—See report of the Secretary of the Navy, with correspondence in relation to Commodore D. Porter..... 648
Thompson, Smith.—(See Secretary of the Navy.)
Thompson, William—Report of committee on claim of, for a pension 780
Tillinghast, Daniel H.—Report of committee on claim of, for prize money..... 629
Tillinghast, Lieut. Thomas G.—(See Daniel H. Tillinghast.)
Timber.—Report of the Secretary of the Navy in relation to the probable cost of live oak..... 624
Torre, Miguel de la, Governor of Porto Rico.—(See Porto Rico.)
Tortugas.—Letters of the Secretary of the Navy in relation to the survey of the Dry..... 658, 659
Townsend, Seth.—Report of the committee on claim for an increase of pension..... 705
Traveling expenses—Of the officers of the navy and marine corps in 1821, 1822 and 1823.—Statement of..... 46
Trinidad de Cuba.—Letter of American merchants and shipmasters in relation to depredations by pirates 298
Tripoli.—(See "Intrepid.")
Tuttle, John P.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
"Two Brothers."—Letter in relation to piracy committed on the brig..... 213

U.

Ulloa.—Letter of U. S. consul at Veru Cruz in relation to the bombardment of Vera Cruz by the Governor of St. Juan de..... 290

V.

Vaccination in the navy.—Letter of the Secretary of the Navy, with instruction for the encouragement of 640
Valdes Geronimo.—Letter to Commodore Stewart in relation to the schooner "Quintanilla"..... 601
Valdivie, Francisco.—(See Macedonian.)
Van Dyke.—Expenses of court-martial of Midshipman 628
Vera Cruz.—Letter of T. Riley, United States consul, in relation to bombardment of 290
Vessels of the United States—In commission in 1825 182
In commission in 1826..... 103
Names and force of, where built, &c. 126
The progress made in the sale of stores and vessels of the United States on Lakes Erie, Ontario and Champlain ..... 127 to 130
Built, and building, under the law for the increase of the navy 191
Purchased by Commodore Porter to aid in the suppression of piracy and the slave trade 222
In 1826 458
Of the West India squadron in 1824.—List of 689
Report of committee on a claim for remuneration for a method of securing the decks and sides of..... 623
Report of the Secretary of the Navy on the construction of docks for the preservation of the 700

Page.

Vessels of the United States.—Report of a committee on the same 726
In commission, their commanders, stations, &c., in 1826..... 729
In 1827.—Names of..... 808
Virginia—List of navy pensioners in State of, January 1, 1826 619
List of widow pensioners in State of, Jan. 1, 1826..... 622
Vives, Francisco Dionisio, Captain General of Cuba.—(See Cuba.)
Voorhees, Lieut. Ralph.—Testimony before the court-martial in the case of Commodore David Porter 162

W.

Walker, William S.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
War, Secretary of.—Letter and orders transferring Fort Barancas, near Pensacola, to the Navy Department 110
Ward, Horatio G.—Affidavit in relation to the cargo of the ship "Canton."..... 578
Warner, Lieutenant.—Expense of court-martial of..... 628
Warrington, Commodore L.—Letter in relation to the loss of the schooner "Ferret."..... 103
Letter in relation to the distribution, &c., of the squadron in the West Indies..... 103
Letter in relation to the capture of pirates in the harbor of "Boca del Inferno" and the West Indies 107, 109
Letter in relation to the selection of a site for a navy yard on the coast of Florida.... 111
Extract of a letter in relation to piracies in the West Indies..... 745
Wasp—Report committee on claim for purser's small stores, lost by the capture of the sloop-of-war 132
Report committee on claim of an officer for prize money..... 629
Water-tight plugging.—Report of committee on a claim for remuneration for a method of securing decks and sides of vessels, called..... 623
Watson J.—(See Court-martial of Commodore Stewart.).
Watson, Lieutenant W. H.—Letter in relation to the capture of the piratical vessel "Catiline."..... 275
Weaver, Lieutenant William A.—(See Courts-martial.)
Expense of court-martial of..... 628
Webster, John A.—Report of committee on claim for the value of a horse killed in the battle of Bladensburg, and for clothing lost in service..... 623
West Indies.—Letter from Commodore L. Warrington in relation to the distribution of the squadron in the..... 103
Letter from the Secretary of the Navy for the removal of the squadron and stores from Thompson's Island, in the..... 109
Letter from Commodore Porter in relation to charges against the officers of the squadron in the..... 440
Letter of Thomas Randall in answer to Commodore Porter's letters in relation to the officers of the squadron in the..... 441
Report of committee on the subject of the court-martial of Commodore Porter, and the correspondence in relation to the suppresssion of piracy in the..... 486
Correspondence in relation to the course pursued by Commodore Porter in the suppression of piracy in the..... 648
List of vessels in the squadron in the..... 689
(See Piracy.)
Wetmore, William C.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed 25
Whitlock, Lieutenant.—Expense of court-martial of..... 628
Widows, who were pensioners in the several States, January 1, 1826.—List of..... 620
Wilkes, jr., Charles.—Testimony before the court-martial for the trial of Commodore Stewart..... 511
Wilkinson, Captain J.—Letter in relation to the suppression of piracy 244
Wilson, Stephen B.—Nominated to be a lieutenant in the navy..... 23
Nomination confirmed..... 25
Wirt, William.—(See Attorney General.)
Wise, Catherine.—(See George S. Wise.)
Wise, George S.—Report of committee on claim of widow of, for credit by the accounting officers of the Treasury for small stores lost in the capture of the sloop-of-war Wasp..... 132
Wolbert, Lieutenant.—Expense of court-martial of 628
Wounded, and prisoners of the frigate Chesapeake.—List of the killed..... 629

Y.

Yellow fever—in the West India squadron and on Thompson's Island.—Letter of Secretary of the Navy to the President in relation to the..... 174, 175
Letter of the Secretary of the Navy to Commodore Rodgers..... 175
Report of Commodore Rodgers 176, 177, 178, 227, 228
Report of Surgeons Harris, Washington and Hoffman..... 176, 177
In Charleston, South Carolina, from 1808 to 1814.—Letter of Thos. G. Priosleau in relation to the..... 481
Young, Ed. L.—Report committee on claim for expenses of sickness contracted in service of the United States 628

Z.

Zantzinger, Lieutenant John P.—Testimony before the court-martial in the case of Commodore David Porter..... 160